"Alioquin unus est solis calor, et secundum essentias subjacentes, alia liquefacit, alia indurat, alia solvit, alia constringit. Liquatur enim cera, et induratur lutum: et tamen caloris non est diversa natura. Sic et bonitas et clementia Dei vasa iræ quæ apta sunt in interitum, id est, populum Israel, indurat: vasa autem misericordiæ quæ præparavit in gloriam, quæ vocavit, hoc est, nos, qui non solim ex Judæis sumus, sed etiam ex Gentibus, non salvat irrationabiliter, et absque judicii veritate: sed caussis præcedentibus, quia alii non susceperunt Filium Dei, alii autem recipere sua sponte voluerunt.

"Hæc autem vasa misericordiæ non solum populus Gentium est; sed etiam hi qui ex Judæis credere voluerunt, et unus credentium effectus est populus. Ex quo ostenditur, non Gentes eligi, sed hominum voluntates; atque ita factum est, ut impleretur illud quod dictum est in Osee: Vocabo non plebem meam, plebem meam, hoc est, populum gentium; et quibus prius dice-batur, non plebs mea vos, nunc vocentur filii Dei vivi.

"Quod ne solùm de Gentibus dicere videretur, etiam eos qui ex Israelitica multitudine crediderunt vasa misericordiæ et electionis appellat. Clamat enim Esaias pro Israel: si fuerit numerus filiorum Israel quasi arena maris, reliquiæ salvæ fient, hoc est, etiam si multitudo non crediderit, tamen pauci

"Quumque testimonia proposuisset, quibus duplex vocatio prædicitur, et Gentium et populi Judæorum, transit ad co-hærentem disputationem; et idcirco dicit Gentes quæ non sectahærentem disputationem; et iderred diett Gentes quæ non sectabantur justitiam, apprehendisse justitiam, quia non superbierint, sed in Christum crediderint: Israelis autem magnam partem ideo corruisse, quia offenderit in lapidem offensionis et petram scandali, et ignoraverit justitiam Dei, quæ Christus est."

15. Ἑλεήσω] I will have mercy. He does not say, I will reject whom I will reject, but I will extend My mercy; though thou mayest wish to restrain it. Compare the Parable of the Labourers in the Vineyard (Matt. xx. 15), and of the Prodigal Son (Luke xy. 20).

(Luke xv. 20).
St. Paul reminds the Jews, that even at the delivery of the Law, God intimated to Moses that His mercy would be enlarged to others than the Jews. (Exod. xxxiii. 19.) Vol. II.—Part III.

Let it not, however, be imagined that God's Foreknowledge of Esau caused Esau's sin. "God's Prescience extends to all things, but causes nothing" (Hooker, ii. p. 539). It foresees from eternity every individual who will either thankfully receive, or stubbornly refuse, God's gracious offers to all in Christ. But this Infinite Prescience does not cross God's Almighty Will, which willed from everlasting that man's will should be free. It does not compel any man to receive, nor restrain any man from receiving, those gracious offers which God, before the foundation of the control o dation of the world, willed to make to all in Christ. (Eph. i. 4. 9; iii. 11. 1 Pet. i. 20.)

16. οὐ τοῦ θέλοντος οὐδὲ τοῦ τρέχοντος] It is not of him that willeth, as Abraham was willing that the blessing should descend to Ishmael (Gen. xvii. 18), and as Isaac was willing to give the blessing to Esau (Gen. xvii. 4), nor is it of him that runneth, as Esau ran for the venison (Gen. xxvii. 5), but it is of God, Who had mercy on the world, and willed to convey His free gift by Isaac and Jacob.

Human Will and Works are not a cause of man's acceptance with God. The only cause is God's Will; but this Will is ever moved by Love (Ps. cxlv. 9. 1 John iv. 8), guided by Wisdom (Eph. i. 11), and regulated by Justice, and executed by Power

Nor does God's Will overrule or constrain the freedom of man's Will. God gives grace freely, in order that man may use his free-will rightly. Hence we find many appeals made to man in Scripture for the exercise, and right exercise, of his Will.

As Augustine says (the most earnest assertor of the power of divine Grace),—In order that God may be willing to give, you must lend your Will to receive. How can you expect that Grace will fall upon you, unless you open the lap of your Will ("sinum voluntatis") to receive it? God gives not His Righteousness without your will. Righteousness is only His. And volition is only yours. God's Righteousness exists independently, without your will, but it cannot exist in you, against your will. Unless our will is in our own power, it is not will. Augustine (Serm. 165, 169, and de Liber. Arbit. iii.).

The cause why all men are not drawn, or not so drawn as to come to God, is the corrupt will of men, not the absolute will of God. Bp. Andrewes (on the Lambeth Articles, p. 120).
17. Φαραώ] Pharaoh, the oppressor of Israel, the representative of Satan himself, from whom the true Israel are delivered by Baptism into Christ, as the literal Israelites were delivered from Pharaoh by being baptized in the Red Sea, even Pharaoh, the type of Antichrist, is here set forth as a warning to the Jews of what they themselves may become by hardening their hearts against God's warnings and miracles, and by rejecting Christ.

 εἰs αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἐξήγειρά σε] for this very cause raised
 I thee up, in order that I might show in thee My Power, and that My Name may be published abroad in all the earth.

God exalted Pharaoh to his royal throne in order that He might show His Power by means of Pharaoh.

God does not say, that He raised Pharaoh up in order that Pharaoh might resist Him; but He says that He raised up Pharaoh, in order that His own Power might be magnified by means of Pharaoh, whether Pharaoh obeyed Him or not.

God raises up all the Kings of this world, in order that His own Power may be glorified in them. His revealed Will is, that they should use their power in His service, and for His glory, and that thus He may be magnified in them and by them.

But, even although they rebel against Him, He is not frustrated in His design.

Indeed, it may be said, that the more they rebel against Him, the more is He magnified through their means.

For, His Power is manifested by crushing their rebellion, and by making it ministerial to the display of His Sovereignty.

The fierceness of man turns to His praise (Ps. lxxvi. 10). His victorious Omnipotence appears most glorious in the sub-jugation of proud and haughty Princes who rise up against Him. And thus He is glorified not only by means of good Kings, who obey Him, but also by means of the Pharaohs, Sennacheribs, and Neros, who rise up in insurrection against Him.

'Εξήγειρά σε is τριτρώ, "stare te feci:" I made thee to stand. I not only raised thee up, but gave thee power to continue on thy throne. Hence the LNX have διετηρήθηs, thou hast been maintained on thy throne.

όπως ενδείξωμαι εν σοι την δύναμίν μου, και όπως διαγγελή τὸ ονομά μου έν πάση τη γη.

18 "Αρα οὖν ὃν θέλει ἐλεεῖ, ὃν δὲ θέλει σκληρύνει.

q Jer. 49. 19. r 2 Chron. 20. 6. Dan. 4. 35.

8 Isa. 45. 9. & 64 8. Jer 18. 2-10. Wisd. 15 7. t 2 Tim. 2. 20. Jer. 18. 6.

u ch. 2. 4. 1 Thess. 5. 9.

19 τ' Ερείς μοι οὖν, Τί οὖν ἔτι μέμφεται; ττῷ γὰρ βουλήματι αὐτοῦ τίς ανθέστηκε;

20 ° Μενοῦνγε, ὦ ἄνθρωπε, σὺ τίς εἶ ὁ ἀνταποκρινόμενος τῷ Θεῷ ; μὴ ἐρεῖ τὸ πλάσμα τῶ πλάσαντι, Τί μὲ ἐποίησας οὕτως; <sup>21 t*</sup>Η οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν ὁ κεραμεὺς τοῦ πηλοῦ, ἐκ τοῦ αὐτοῦ φυράματος ποιῆσαι ὁ μὲν εἰς τιμὴν σκεῦος, ὁ δὲ είς ἀτιμίαν;

22 "Εί δὲ θέλων ὁ Θεὸς ἐνδείξασθαι τὴν ὀργὴν, καὶ γνωρίσαι τὸ δυνατὸν αὐτοῦ, ἦνεγκεν ἐν πολλη μακροθυμία σκεύη ὀργης κατηρτισμένα εἰς ἀπώλειαν, Pharach's power was from God (as St. Paul teaches in this But his abuse of it was from himself. God's Epistle, xiii. 1, 2). But his abuse of it was from himself. God's will and word to Pharaoh were, that He should let His people Israel go to serve Him (Exod. v. 1; viii. 1). And it was God's design and desire to be thus glorified by means of Pharaoh, who would then have used his power, derived from God, according to God's will and word, and would have been blessed thereby.

But if, after reiterated commands, threats, and plagues, Pharaoh refuses to use his power for God's glory, and his own welfare, temporal and eternal, God's Will is not to be defeated by the abuse of the power which Pharaoh had from Him. No, rather, after that Pharaoh had hardened his heart (Exod. viii. 15. 32), and had exalted himself against God (ix. 17), God declares that Pharaoh's exaltation is from Him, that his continuance in life, and on his throne, is from Him, in order that, whether willingly or unwillingly, he may be a vassal of God, and subserve the manifestation of His glory. God will be magnified through Pharaoh the King of Egypt, though a rebel against Him; and God's Power and Majesty will be made manifest by the rout and ruin of the King and his host, and by a miraculous deliverance, made more signal by Pharaoh's resistance; and executed over and by the Elements themselves, which are shown to be His Ministers, and made the executioners of His vengeance on the rebel, and of His Mercy to His People, that so it may be known and acknowledged by the world that God is all-powerful and just. See above, Introduction, p. 195.

Some Divines have said that Pharaoh is an example, and the only example in Scripture, "of total spiritual dereliction before And the reason of this is set down (Rom. ix. 17). God keeps him alive, after the time due to his excision, that He might show in him His power. And such singular examples ought no further to be taken into consideration by us than to warn us that we keep as far as possible from the like provocation." Hammond (in Bp. Sanderson's Works, v. 346).

18. σκληρύνει] He hardens. For the exposition of this text, it is to be remembered,-

(1) That the Freedom of the Human Will is a necessary consequence of the doctrine of Future Rewards and Punishments. Neither Reward nor Punishment can justly be awarded to one who is good or bad by necessity, and not by choice. Tertullian (c. Marcion. ii. 6).

(2) "Deus non est auctor eorum quorum est ultor." Fulgentius.

It abhorreth from the nature of God to be outwardly a sharp prohibitor, and underhand an Author, of Sin. Hooker (App. book v. p. 567).

(3) God is not wanting to the world in any necessary thing for the attainment of Eternal Life (Ibid. pp. 571, 573), and He longeth for nothing more than that all men may be saved.

Why then does St. Paul say—whom He wills He hardeneth? This is to be explained from the history just cited of Pharaoh. God hardened Pharaoh's heart (Exod. vii. 13; ix. 12; x. 1. 20. 27; xi. 10). Yes. But first, Pharaoh hardened his own heart, he and his servants (Exod. viii. 15. 32; ix. 34, 35). own heart, he and his servants (Exod. viii. 15. 32; ix. 34, 35). And God punished Pharaoh by means of his sin. Because he rejected God's counsel (Luke vii. 30), God gave him over to a reprobate mind (Rom. i. 28), and chastened him by the consequence of his own wickedness (Jer. ii. 19), that the world might know that men are tormented by their own abominations (Wisdom xii. 23). Wherewithal a man sinneth, by the same also shall he be punished. See Wisdom xi. 11, where is an excellent comment on the History of Pharaoh, and a happy illustration has a lawish writer of this argument of St. Paul with the tration, by a Jewish writer, of this argument of St. Paul with the Jews. And St. Paul has explained himself already (Rom. ii. 5). Thou according to thy own hardness, κατά την σκληρότητά σου, and impenitent heart, storest up to thyself wrath, θησαυρίζεις σεαυτώ δργήν.

God hardens no man's heart who does not first harden his own heart. He does every thing to soften man's heart, as He did to Pharaoh. And when this softening process is resisted by man's sin, then God, Who desired to show His love by the former, proceeds to display His power by the latter: and so He is glorified in all, even by those who resist Him. Cp. Bp. Andrewes (ii. 68; v. 447).

The following remarks may be cited as showing the judgment of Christian Antiquity on this subject;

God hardened Pharaoh's heart; but then he had deserved ruin to be prepared for him, because he had denied God, and rejected His ambassadors. And God, by desiring that man should be restored to life, shows that He never appointed him to death; for He would rather have the repentance of a sinner than his death. Tertullian (c. Marcion. ii. 14). See also c. Marcion. iii. 6. Blunt on the Early Fathers, p. 622.

Origen (de Princip. iii. 1-8) refers to this ninth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans for the support of the doctrines of Human Free-Will, and of Universal Redemption. And he says, "Let us begin with what is said in Holy Scripture concerning the hardening of Pharaoh's heart, and together with this we will inquire into what is said by the Apostle, 'whom God wills He pities, and whom He wills he hardens.

"These texts are used by certain heterodox persons, who almost destroy Free-Will by introducing the doctrine of natures incapable of salvation, and of others incapable of being lost."

On the whole we may conclude in the words of Bp. Pearson (Minor Works, i. p. 251), "This Ninth Chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, which now appears to be the groundwork of the whole doctrine of Predestination and Reprobation, was never so interpreted by the Fathers of near four centuries as to have any direct reference to that doctrine."

Cp. Blunt, Early Fathers, p. 630.

19. τω γαρ βουλήματι αὐτοῦ τίς ἀνθέστηκε;] for who resisteth His Will?

True, no one can resist God's Will. But it must be remembered that God's Will is regulated by God's Wisdom, Equity, and Love. He doeth every thing "by the counsel of His Will" (Eph. i. 11, where see note); and He wills that all men should have free-will, and He offers grace to all, and sets before them life and death, and commands them to choose life (Deut. xxx. 19). And Christ came into the world to do His Will (Heb. x. 7), and to save the world; and God willeth all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of His truth. (1 Tim. ii. 4.)

Observe also that St. Paul does not say θελήματι here, but βουλήματι.

Doth St. Paul here mean God's revealed will? Surely not. Thousands have resisted and daily do resist that will, the will and commandments of God. But he meaneth it of His secret will, the will of His everlasting counsel and purposes; and that too of an effectual resistance, such as shall hinder the accomplishment of that Will. All resistance is vain as to that end. (Ps. cxviii. 6; cxxxv. 6. Isa. viii. 9, 10.) Bp. Sanderson (iii. p. 340). See also Bp. Andrewes (v. 398, 399).

But although no one can resist God's secret will, yet it is not to be imagined that God can will any thing that is unjust, or not to be imagined that God can will any thing that is unjust, or against those very rules whereby He hath taught us to judge what Equity requires. Hooker (App. book v. p. 563).

20. Μενοῦνγε] Nay, but. Cp. Rom. x. 18.

21—23. *Η οὐκ ἔχει ἐξουσίαν] Is it so, that the Potter hath not authority (ἔξουσίαν, lordship, dominion, not δύναμιν, mero physical force) over the clay to make from the same lump one was the honour and another to dishere. vessel to honour, and another to dishonour?

23 καὶ ἵνα γνωρίση τὸν πλοῦτον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ σκεύη ἐλέους, ἃ προητοίμασεν είς δόξαν, 24 οθς καὶ ἐκάλεσεν ἡμᾶς, οὐ μόνον ἐξ Ἰουδαίων, ἀλλὰ καὶ ểξ ἐθνῶν,  $^{25}$  τώς καὶ ἐν τῷ ἹΩσηὲ λέγει, Καλέσω τὸν οὐ λαόν μου λαόν  $^{\mathrm{v}}_{1}$   $^{\mathrm{Hos.}}$   $^{23}_{1}$  μου, καὶ τὴν οὐκ ἠγαπημένην ἠγαπημένην.  $^{26}$   $^{\mathrm{x}}$  Καὶ ἔσται ἐν τῷ  $^{\mathrm{x}}$   $^{\mathrm{Hos.}}$   $^{1}$

But if (el de, not pressing this comparison) God, in the Exercise of His Will  $(\theta \ell \lambda \omega \nu)$  to manifest (by examples) His Wrath, and to make known His Power, endured with much long-suffering vessels of wrath fitted for destruction (by themselves), and in order that He might make known the riches of His glory on vessels of mercy, which He Himself before prepared unto glory.

Observe the words σκεῦος, vessel, σκεύη ὀργῆς, σκεύη ἐλέους, and compare the phrase  $\sigma\kappa\epsilon\tilde{v}$ os  $\epsilon\kappa\lambda o\gamma\tilde{\eta}$ s applied to St. Paul himself, Acts ix. 15, where see note.  $\Sigma\kappa\epsilon v\eta$   $\delta\rho\gamma\tilde{\eta}$ s are objects of God's wrath; σκεύη ἐλέους, persons receiving mercy.

The metaphor is from a vessel,

(1) receiving into itself either what is bitter or sweet;
(2) beautiful, or the reverse;

(3) to be broken in pieces, or to be stored up. See Vorst.

de Heb. c. ii. p. 34.

(1) St. Paul does not say that God endured the vessels of wrath as if they were a certain fixed definite number, but he says "vessels of wrath," without the article. And σκεύη ὀργης, vessels of wrath, are said to be κατηρτισμένα είς ἀπώλειαν, made fit for destruction, a remarkable oxymoron, intimating that destruction is the very opposite of the design for which they were made; that it is a perversion of their constitution. Compare the similar oxymoron in 1 Cor. viii. 10, he shall be edified to eat meats offered to idols, to his own destruction.

These Vessels have not thus been fitted for destruction, thus made to be unmade, by their Divine Maker; but by their own sin abusing the Free-Will and Grace which He has given them.

(2) And observe, in speaking of σκεύη έλέους, vessels of mercy, St. Paul changes his language, and says that God prepared them for glory.

(3) St. Paul does not say that God makes vessels like clay, destitute of free-will, and for destruction. He asks whether the Potter has not power to make some vessels to honour and some to dishonour? But he does not even put the case of a Potter making any vessel for destruction. God has absolute sovereignty over all. But it is a part of the Will of the Divine and Almighty Artificer (Jer. xviii. 6. Isa. xiv. 7; xlv. 9) that the human Vessels which He makes from the clay of the earth should have free-will. He has breathed into that clay a living sout (Gen. ii. 7); He has made it in His own Image (Gen. i. 27; I Cor. xi. 7), not destroyed after the Fall nor after the flood. (Gen. ix. 6.) He has made that rational divinely-inspired vessel to be a casket of divine Grace. (2 Cor. iv. 7.) He has united it to the Godhead by the Incarnation of Christ. He has made it to be a shrine of the Holy Ghost. (1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16.) He has made every vessel a vessel of honour, and has made no vessel to be a vessel of wrath. He has, indeed, given each vessel free-will to choose evil as well as good (Exod. viii. 32); but He exhorts and commands them to choose good, and does every thing short of compulsion in order that they may choose it, and be saved.

St. Paul sufficiently explains himself by saying that God, with much long-suffering, endures (not makes) vessels of wrath. And he declares in another place, that whosever shall cleanse himself from evil, shall be a vessel to honour, sanctified and fit for the Master's use, and prepared for every good work (2 Tim.

Cp. the excellent remarks of Origen here in Catenâ, pp. 340-346.

God does not make, but find, vessels of wrath. He does not find, but make, vessels of grace. And He wills no one to be a vessel of wrath, but every one to be a vessel of grace. Therefore all murmuring is excluded on the one hand, and all boasting on the other. They who are rejected, are rejected for their sins;

they who are elected, are chosen by God's mercy in Christ.

The Apostle completes his argument by saying to those whom he is addressing, those even whom he is censuring and confuting, and whom he desires to comfort as well as censure and confute, that even they, as well as the Gentiles, are called to be vessels of mercy, and in God's will and desire are inheritors of Glory. See

No man's heart was created stony by God, but becomes so by sin (Origen, de Princip. iii. c. 1); who ascribes to the Valentinian heretics those doctrines which have been propagated in modern times by the adherents of Calvin.

Origen's words are, "Some say that certain persons are created ψυχικοί (animal), and that others are created πνευματικοί (spiritual). The followers of Valentinus say this. But what is this to us, who belong to the Church, and who censure those who introduce (the doctrine of) natures constituted for salvation, and others constituted for perdition? Φύσεις ἐκ κατασκευῆς σωζομένας, ή ἐκ κατασκευῆς ἀπολλυμένας."

On this important subject, and the controversies emerging from it, the student may be referred to Hooker's Papers menfrom it, the student may be referred to Hooker's Papers mentioned above, p. 240; Bp. Andrewes on the Lambeth Articles, in Minor Works, pp. 294—300, and printed separately in English, Lond. 1700; Bp. Sanderson's Papers and Correspondence with Hammond, v. 254—354; Dr. Hammond's Χάρις καὶ Εἰρήνη, vol. i. p. 546 of his Works; Playfere's Appello Evangelium, Lond. 1651; Barrow on Universal Redemption, iii. pp. 315—425; Sarrows on Instifute Faith and in 100. Sermons on Justifying Faith, vol. iv. p. 105; Professor Browne on the XVIIth Article; Archdeacon Winchester and Waterland on the case of Arian Subscription, vol. ii. pp. 375-386 (ed. Van Mildert); and to some other authorities cited in the present Editor's Occasional Sermons, No. iii. p. 78, and vi. p. 148.

23. à προητοίμασεν είς δόξαν] whom He prepared before unto glory. The προετοιμασία of God, as far as it respects individuals. is (as our XVIIth Article expresses it) a counsel secret to us. God foreknows from Eternity every one, who will stand on the right hand, and who will stand on the left hand, at the Great Day. But He has not divulged this secret to any man, even to His greatest Saints (1 Cor. ix. 27), except perhaps by special revelation on the eve of death for His sake. (2 Tim. iv. 8.)

Man cannot foreknow his own eternal state or the future Man cannot foreknow his own eternal state or the future state of any one. Therefore the Apostles designate all members of the Visible Church as Elect. (1 Pet. i. 2. Col. iii. 12. 1 Thess. i. 4. 2 John i. 2. 13. Rom. viii. 33.) So S. Ignatius calls the Church of Ephesus elect (Eph. i.), and the Church of Tralles  $\ell\kappa\lambda\kappa\kappa\tau\eta$  (c. 1); and the  $\ell\kappa\lambda\kappa\kappa\tau\sigma$ 0 are opposed to heathens. (Martyr. Polyc. c. 6.) The whole Church Visible is elect, in the eye of man.

Therefore it is a desperate doctrine to say, "If I shall be saved, I shall be saved;" and it is rightly so called by Bp. Bancroft (Hampton Court Conf. 1604, pp. 178. 180, ed. Cardwell). We ought (he says) to reason ascendendo thus: I live in obedience to God, and in love with my neighbour, therefore I trust that God hath elected me to salvation. And not thus to reason descendendo, God hath predestinated me to Life, therefore, though I sin never so grievously, I shall not be damned, for whom He once loveth, He loveth to the end.

This, indeed, as our XVIIth Article teaches, "is a most dangerous downfall."

Hereupon follow these duties-

(1) We are not curiously to inquire and to search out God's secret Will touching personal Election or Reprobation, but to adore it.

(2) His Revealed Will doth especially concern us. And this Will is expressed in His Commandments and in the Promises contained in His Holy Word. And our study must be to form our lives according to that Will and Word. And the revealed Will of God is, that every one who seeth the Son and "believeth on Him, should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John

(3) We are to avail ourselves thankfully of all those means of "Grace, whereby God inviteth the whole world to receive wisdom, and hath opened the gates of His visible Church unto all, testifying His Will and Purpose to have all saved, if the let were not in themselves." Hooker, ii. p. 588. Bp. Andrewes, 25-33. ωs και εν τφ 'Ωσηέ] as also in Hosea. He continues his effort to convince the Jews from their own prophetical Scriptures, that what he is endeavouring to prove, is no new doctrine, but had been already clearly revealed to them by God in the sacred books which they have in their hands, viz.

(1) That the Gentiles should be called (Hos. ii. 23);

(2) That the Jews, however prosperous and numerous, should be reduced to a small remnant of faithful men;

(3) That this was due to their own act in stumbling on the elect precious Stone of Sion, as it had been foretold they would do. (Îsa. viii. 14; xxviii. 16.)

y Isa. 10. 20–23. Θεοῦ ζῶντος.  $^{27}$  'Ησαΐας δὲ κράζει ὑπὲρ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ, Ἐὰν  $\mathring{\eta}$  ὁ ἀριθμὸς ch. 11. 4–6. τῶν νίῶν Ἰσραὴλ ὡς ἡ ἄμμος τῆς θαλάσσης, τὸ κατάλειμμα σωθήσεται 28 λόγον γάρ συντελών καὶ συντέμνων έν δικαιοσύνη, ότι z Gen. 19. 24, 25. λόγον συντετμημένον ποιήσει Κύριος ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς.  $^{29}$  ε Καὶ καθώς Isa. 1. 9. & 13. 19. Jer. 50. 40. Lam. 3. 22. & 4. 6. Ezek. 16. 46.

a ch. 9. 1—3. Exod. 32. 10—13. I Sam. 12. 23. & 15. 11. 35.

ch. 9. 31. Gal. I. 14. cch. 9. 31. Phil. 3. 9. d Matt. 5. 17.

Acts 13, 38. 2 Cor. 3. 13. Gal. 3. 24. προείρηκεν 'Ησαΐας, Εἰ μὴ Κύριος Σαβαωθ έγκατέλιπεν ἡμιν σπέρμα, ώς Σόδομα αν έγενήθημεν, καὶ ώς Γόμορρα αν ώμοιώθημεν.

30 Τί οὖν ἐροῦμεν; Θτι ἔθνη τὰ μὴ διώκοντα δικαιοσύνην κατέλαβε δικαιοσύνην, δικαιοσύνην δὲ τὴν ἐκ πίστεως, 31 ° Ισραὴλ δὲ διώκων νόμον δικαιοσύνης & 11. 7. & 11. 7. b 1 Cor. 1. 23. ch. 4. 16. c Isa. 8. 14. & 28. 16. Ps. 118. 22. είς νόμον οὐκ ἔφθασε. 32 1 Διατί; ὅτι οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως, ἀλλ' ὡς ἐξ ἔργων προσέκοψαν γὰρ τῷ λίθω τοῦ προσκόμματος, 33 ° καθώς γέγραπται, 'Ιδοὺ τίθημι ἐν Σιων λίθον προσκόμματος, καὶ πέτραν σκανδάλου καὶ ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' αὐτῷ οὐ καταισχυνθήσεται. 1 Pet. 2. 7.

Χ. 1 3 Αδελφοί, ή μεν εὐδοκία της έμης καρδίας, καὶ ή δέησις πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν ύπερ αὐτῶν εἰς σωτηρίαν. 2 κ Μαρτυρῶ γὰρ αὐτοῖς ὅτι ζῆλον Θεοῦ ἔγουσιν. άλλ' οὐ κατ' ἐπίγνωσιν. 3 ° ἀγνοοῦντες γὰρ τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνην, καὶ τὴν ίδιαν ζητούντες στήσαι, τή δικαιοσύνη του Θεού ούχ υπετάγησαν 4 τέλος γάρ νόμου Χριστὸς εἰς δικαιοσύνην παντὶ τῷ πιστεύοντι.

5 ° Μωϋσης γαρ γράφει την δικαιοσύνην την έκ τοῦ νόμου, "Οτι ὁ ποιήσας αὐτὰ ἄνθρωπος ζήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς.

27. ἐπἐρ τοῦ Ἰσραήλ] concerning Israel. (2 Cor. viii. 23.)
— τὸ κατάλειμμα] the remnant, i. e. only the small number of those who believe in Christ. Cp. Chrys., Cyril, Theodoret. A, B have ὑπόλειμμα, and so Lach., Tisch., Alf.

The prophetical reference was principally to the small residue of the Captivity who would return to Palestine. This is applied by the Apostle, in a secondary sense, to the faithful remnant of

28. λόγον γὰρ συντελών καὶ συντέμνων εν δικαιοσύνη] for God will be consummating and cutting short His account, or reckoning, in righteousness. These words are from the LXX Version of Isaiah x. 23, where the Original has קַלִיוֹן חָרוץ שֹבֵּק צָּדָבָת, a consummation is decided, or cut short, abounding in righteousness: because the Lord of Hosts will make a consummation, and that a decided one, one cut short, in the midst of all the earth.

There seems to be here, in the mind of the Prophet, a contrast between the paucity of the numbers to which the Israelites are to be reduced, and the abundance of righteousness vouchsafed to them. The quantity will be small, but the quality will be good. See the note of Drusius here.

The Seventy interpreters give a paraphrase (not a literal translation) which embodies this sense, and which is adopted by the Apostle. See the note of Vitringa on Isa. x. 22, 23.

The word λόγοs, as used by them, appears to signify an account or reckoning, and, derivatively, a sum or catalogue of people.

The sense therefore is; "Summing up and cutting short the

The census of the Israelites will be cut short to a small number, but the smallness of number will be amply compensated by the righteousness with which God will endue it by virtue of its Faith in Christ.

Therefore the Prophet Isaiah proceeds to comfort Israel in this its diminution and decay. See x. 24 and xi. 1-10, where he speaks of Christ having righteousness as the girdle of His loins.

This interpretation harmonizes well with the tenor of St. l'aul's argument, who is administering comfort to the Jews, at the same time that he is showing them that very many of their nation would reject God's offer of Justification through Faith in Jesus 30, 31. The οδν ερούμεν; ] What then shall we say? That Gentiles, they which follow not after righteousness (as you Jews understand the word, that of the Law), attained to Righteousness (not such Righteousness as you follow after, but [be] the Righteousness which is of Faith); but that Israel, following after the Law of Righteousness, did not reach the standard of the Law, which has only been attained by the perfect obedience of Christ, which is imputed to us through Faith.

Elz. has δικαιοσύνης after νόμον, but this is not in A, B, D, E, F, G.

Also in v. 32 Elz. adds νόμου after έργων, but it is not in A, B, F, G.

V. 33; Elz. inserts πâs before πιστεύων against the authority of the best MSS.

Here the Apostle returns to his main proposition, which is, that the Gentiles (that is, all of every nation under heaven), who believe in Christ, and are incorporated in Him, are the true Israel, the Elect People of God, whom He foreknew from Eternity. See CH. X. 1. 'Αδελφοί] Brethren; a conciliatory address introducing an affectionate expostulation with the Jews.

- ή εὐδοκία] the good will of my heart, and my prayer to God on their behalf, is for their salvation.

Εὐδοκία is beneplacitum, in which I should acquiesce with joy, as a blessed consummation. Probably he uses this word, rather than έλπls or ἐπιθυμία, because he wishes to represent the salvation of the Jews as a thing so consonant to God's wishes and counsel, that as far as He is concerned it is as good as done; and the Apostle delights in looking back, in imagination, upon that blessed result, the salvation of Israel, as already accomplished.

Besides, this word εὐδοκία appropriately connects their salvation with the Song of the Angels which proclaimed the glad tidings of Salvation to the variety (Lapis Lapis).

tidings of Salvation to the world. (Luke ii. 14.)

The reading of this verse is revised according to the best MSS. Elz. has ή πρός του Θεον ύπερ του Ίσραήλ έστιν κ.τ.λ.

— εis σωτηρίαν] for their salvation. He assumes, therefore, that, although now rejected by God for their rejection of Christ, they may (if they will return to Him) be saved.

3. ἀγνοοῦντες τὴν τοῦ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνην] they not knowing, not considering, the Righteousness of God, Who alone is Righteous, and Who alone can communicate Righteousness, and Who has given it to us in Christ, "the Lord Our Righteousness" (see above on i. 17; iii. 21; chap. v. 21), and desiring to build up the crazy superstructure of their own Righteousness on the sandy foundation of Works done by themselves.

Contrast with this St. Paul's declaration concerning himself; "I count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Christ and be found in Him, not having mine own righteousness, which is from the Law, but that which is through Faith in Christ, the righteousness from God bestowed upon Faith" (Phil. iii. 7—9).

4. τέλος γὰρ νόμου Χριστός] for Christ is the end of the Law for Righteousness to every one that believeth. For through His Incarnation and perfect Obedience in our Nature, and by our Incorporation and In-dwelling in Him, we are regarded by God as ighteous in Him Who is our Righteousness. See Gal. iii. 24, nd above, Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 185. 198.

5. την δικαιοσύνην την έκ τοῦ νόμου] the rightcousness which

6 f H δε έκ πίστεως δικαιοσύνη οὖτω λέγει, Μη εἴπης έν τη καρδία σου, ι Deut. 50. 11. 12 Τίς ἀναβήσεται είς τὸν οὐρανόν; τοῦτ' ἔστι Χριστὸν καταγαγείν 7 ή, Τίς καταβήσεται είς την άβυσσον; τοῦτ' έστι Χριστὸν έκ νεκρών άναγαγείν. 8 ε' Αλλά τί λέγει; Έγγύς σου τὸ ρημά έστιν, έν τῷ στόματί g Deut. 30. 11σου, καὶ ἐν τῆ καρδία σου τοῦτ ἔστι τὸ ρῆμα τῆς πίστεως ὁ κηρύσ- Ριον. 30.4. σομεν. <sup>9 h</sup> "Οτι ἐὰν ὁμολογήσης ἐν τῷ στόματί σου Κύριον Ἰησοῦν, καὶ πιστεύ- h Matt. 10. 32, 23. σης ἐν τῆ καρδία σου ὅτι ὁ Θεὸς αὐτὸν ἦγειρεν ἐκ νεκρῶν, σωθήση. 10 καρδία John 3.2.11. γαρ πιστεύεται είς δικαιοσύνην, στόματι δε όμολογείται είς σωτηρίαν.

 $^{11}$   $^{1}$  Λέγει γὰρ ἡ γραφή, Πᾶς ὁ πιστεύων ἐπ' αὐτ $\hat{\omega}$  οὐ καταισχυν $\theta$ ή-  $^{1}$   $^{1}$  Isa. 49. 23. σεται· 12 j οὐ γάρ ἐστι διαστολὴ Ἰουδαίου τε καὶ Ἑλληνος· ὁ γὰρ αὐτὸς j Acts 10. 34, 35. Κύριος πάντων πλουτῶν εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἐπικαλουμένους αὐτόν:  $^{13 \text{ k}}$  Πᾶς γὰρ $^{\text{& 15. 9.2}}_{\text{ch. 3. 22, 29.5}}$

έὰν μὴ ἀποσταλῶσι; καθὼς γέγραπται, 'Ως ὡραῖοι οἱ πόδες τῶν εὐαγγελιζομένων εἰρήνην, τῶν εὐαγγελιζομένων ἀγαθά.

16 η 'Αλλ' οὐ πάντες ὑπήκουσαν τῷ εὐαγγελίω.

Ήσαΐας γὰρ λέγει, Κύριε, τίς ἐπίστευσε τῆ ἀκοῆ ἡμῶν; 17 *Αρα ἡ ch. 3. 3. πίστις έξ ἀκοῆς, ή δὲ ἀκοὴ διὰ ῥήματος Θεοῦ.

proceeds from the Law, as distinguished from that righteousness which is from Faith. (ix. 30. Phil. iii. 9.)

— δ ποιήσαs] he that did. See on Gal. iii. 10—13. 24.

6-9. Mη είπης—Τίς ἀναβήσεται—σωθήση) Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? The Holy Spirit, speaking by the Apostle, gives here a divine Exposition of the words of God, by the Apostle, gives here a divine Exposition of the words of Gos, spoken by Moses (Deut. xxx. 11. 14); and declares that the Levitical Law was a preparation for the Gospel; and, that however complex the system of the Law might appear to be, how much soever it might deal with external observances, and however different that the control of the contr soever it might deal with external observances, and however difficult it might seem to perform it, yet that it was, in its sum and substance, simple, spiritual, and easy; a truth which was fully realized in Christ, Who is the End of the Law.

"The Righteousness that is of Faith" is introduced here as speaking. It is, as it were, personified. For Christ is our Righteousness. (See Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16.) He is made to us Righteousness. (1 Cor. i. 30.) He offers Himself to us. He obeys for us, and in us. He is our Emmanuel, God with us, and in us. He is not peart. Christ liveth in us. Gody for us, and in us. He is our Emmanuel, God with us, and in us. He is in our mouth and our heart. Christ liveth in us. (Gal. ii. 20.) By Him, and in Him alone, we think, speak, and do what is pleasing to God. Thou art not required to do any great thing to save thyself. Christ has come down to thee; He has taken thy nature, He has raised Himself, and in raising Himself He has raised thee. He has fulfilled the Law for thee, and thus brought it home to thee, and clothed thee with His Righteousness. Believe in what He has done for thee. Put thy trust in Him as God every where present (Ps. cxxxix. 7, and ep. Origen here), and yet Incarnate as Man. Rise with Him from the grave of sin, and thou shalt rise to the life of glory, and be for ever with the Lord. Cp. Aug. Serm. 143, and see on John xx. 17, and on 2 Cor. v. 16.

9. Kbpiov 'Ingoov'] the Lord Jesus. Jesus as Jehovah. He is referring to Jer. xxiii. 6, and to what he is about to cite in v. 13,

Our Saviour in the New Testament is called Lord, as that name is the interpretation of Jehovah. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 238. See above on ix. 5, and below, v. 12.

10. δμολογείται εἰς σωτηρίαν] confession is made unto salvation. We may not think that we glorify God sufficiently, if with the heart we believe in Him, unless with the mouth also we be ready to confess Him. Bp. Sanderson, i. 344.

In the heart Faith is seated, with the tongue confession is made; between these two salvation is completed. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. i. p. 23, where see more, on the necessity of a public confession of the Faith, which necessity (says Bp. Pearson) the Church hath thought a sufficient ground to command the recitation of the Creed at the first initiation into the Church by Baptism, and a particular repetition of it publicly as often as the Sacrament of the Eucharist is administered, and a constant inculcation of the same by the Clergy to the People.

12. δ γὰρ αὐτὸς Κύριως πάντων] for the same is Lord of all, being abundant in riches of mercy unto all them that call upon Him. Cp. v. 9, where Jesus is called Lord; and here He is presented as an object of divine worship.

14, 15. ἐπικαλέσωνται—πιστεύσωσιν—ἀκούσωσι—κηρύξωσιν] Elz. has the future indicative here. But B and other Uncials

Elz. has the future indicative here. But B and other Uncials have the conjunctive aorist, which appears to be preferable, and is adopted by Lachmann and Alf. See above on vi. 1.

14. Hôs oôv êmikalêowrai How then can they call on Him in whom they have not believed? The desire of God, as expressed in the foregoing verse, is, that all men should call upon Him and be saved. And God who desires that end, must be supposed to desire also the recovery and the same and the sam posed to desire also the means necessary for the attainment of that end. He who desires that all should be saved, desires that the Gospel of salvation should be preached to all.

For, how can they call upon Him on Whom they have not believed, and how believe in Him of Whom they have not heard, and how can any one hear without a Preacher, and how can any one preach except he be sent of God?

Here then, says St. Paul, am I, sent to preach to you and to the world; and the other Apostles and Evangelists are sent for this end. Therefore be not ye exasperated against me, the Apostle of the Gentiles. Do not say, with your brethren at Jerusalem, when I announced my mission to them, "Away with him, it is not fit that he should live" (Acts xxii. 21, 22). My mission is from God, He has willed that all, both Jews and Gentiles. should receive the Gospel; and He who wills that all should hear and believe and call upon Him, also wills that we should preach to all. He has sent us, the Apostles of Christ, to you and to them. And accordingly, our Hebrew Prophets, so far from envying the Gentiles the glad tidings of the Gospel, rejoiced in spirit to behold the Apostolic Heralds going forth to preach it to all Nations, and blessed the feet of them who carry it throughout the world. (Isa. lii. 7.) Imitate your own prophet Isaiah; receive them whom he rejoiced to see.

16. 'Αλλ' οὐ πάντες] Howbeit all did not hearken to the

He thus states another objection of the adversary.

You may say to me, If what you preach concerning Christ is from God, would it not be universally received?

No. The same Prophet, who hails the messengers of the Gospel, goes on to predict that all will not believe the message (Isa. liii. 1), "Who hath believed our report (ἀκοῆs)?" So asks your prophet, Isaiah, when he is about to deliver that celebrated prophecy, concerning Christ's humility, and sufferings, and the conintry sagrifice offered, and the vicanious and plenary and the expiatory sacrifice offered, and the vicarious and plenary satisfaction made by His death for the sins of the world, and their justification thence ensuing (v. 11). Thus your unbelief is even a proof of the truth of the Gospel. Observe, also, Isaiah calls the Gospel our report. He appropriates it as his own message, as the message of himself and your other Hebrew Prophets, as well as of us, Christ's Apostles.

He calls it a report (ἀκοή). Therefore belief comes by report, and report (ἀκοή, Matt. iv. 24) by the word of God.

o Ps. 19. 6. Col. 1. 6, 23. Acrs 2. 5-11. & 26. 20. & 28. 23.

p Deut. 32, 21, ch. 11, 11.

q Isa. 58, 1. & 65 1, 2. ch. 9, 30. Matt. 20 18. & 22, 9, 10. r Isa, 65, 2-5.

a Jer. 31. 37. 1 Sam. 12. 22. 2 Cor. 11. 22. Phil. 3. 5. b ch. 8. 29.  $^{18}$  ° 'Αλλὰ λέγω, Μὴ οὐκ ἤκουσαν; Μενοῦν γε εἰς πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν ἐξῆλ-θεν ὁ φθόγγος αὐτῶν, καὶ εἰς τὰ πέρατα τῆς οἰκουμένης τὰ ῥήματα αὐτῶν.

19 p 'Αλλὰ λέγω, Μὴ 'Ισραὴλ οὐκ ἔγνω; Πρῶτος Μωϋσῆς λέγει, 'Εγὰ παραζηλώσω ὑμᾶς ἐπ' οὐκ ἔθνει, ἐπὶ ἔθνει ἀσυνέτῳ παροργιῶ ὑμᾶς. 20 q 'Ησαΐας δὲ ἀποτολμᾶ καὶ λέγει, Εὑρέθην τοῖς ἐμὲ μὴ ζητοῦσιν, ἐμφανὴς ἐγενόμην τοῖς ἐμὲ μὴ ἐπερωτῶσι. 21 Πρὸς δὲ τὸν 'Ισραὴλ λέγει, "Ολην τὴν ἡμέραν ἐξεπέτασα τὰς χεῖράς μου πρὸς λαὸν ἀπειθοῦντα καὶ ἀντιλέγοντα.

ΧΙ. 1 ε Λέγω οὖν, Μὴ ἀπώσατο ὁ Θεὸς τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ;

Mη γένοιτο· καὶ γὰρ έγὼ Ἰσραηλίτης εἰμὶ, ἐκ σπέρματος ᾿Αβραὰμ, φυλης Bενϊαμίν.  $^2$  Οὐκ ἀπώσατο ὁ Θεὸς τὸν λαὸν αὐτοῦ  $^{\rm b}$  ὃν προέγνω.

'Aκοή is ΥρΨ (shema), what comes by hearing, and therefore requires oral communication, preaching. Hence in the New Testament ἀκοή "significat concionem, prædicationem." Vorst. de Hebr. N. T. p. 64.

Testament ἀκοὴ "significat concionem, prædicationem." Vorst. de Hebr. N. T. p. 64.

18. Μενοῦν γε] Yea, verily; in God's will and desire, as our Hebrew King and Psalmist has prophesied, the Gospel is preached every where; the world of Grace is commensurate with the world of Nature. The Church of God is not limited to Judæa, or to the Jewish nation (as you Jews would confine it), but as David himself, the Jewish Prophet and King, declares, comparing it with the elements of the Natural Universe, it is coextensive with the world. The light of Christ is like that of the Sun. Christ is the Sun of Righteousness. His Voice is universal, like that of the Elements themselves. (Ps. xix. 5—8.)

Jerusalem itself had seen a glimpse of the future fulfilment of this prophecy, when, on the Day of Pentecost, the Jews, who were dispersed in every climate under heaven, and had come up to Jerusalem for the Feast, saw the outpouring of the Holy Ghost, and heard the Gospel preached by the Apostles who were sent and ordained by God to evangelize the world, and when they all heard in their own tongues the wonderful works of God. (Acts ii. 5-11).

— δ φθόγγος] Heb. τζ (cav), measuring line, extending to 19. M' 'Ισραλλ οὖκ ἔγνω; ] Did not Israel know? Was it not pre-announced to the Jews that the covenant of God would be enlarged to the whole world? Yes—your own Lawgiver prepared you for this universal extension, πρῶτος Μωϋσῆς λέγει (Deut. xxxii. 21), first Moses, then the Prophets, last of all we the Apostles, preach one and the same salvation, freely offered to all Nations in Christ; and we all concur in declaring the reception of it by the Gentiles, whom ye despise as foolish and profane; and their consequent promotion to the privileges forfeited by you.

20. ἀποτολμᾶ καl λέγει] Casting away all fear of the Jews, and discarding all national prepossessions and prejudices, Isaiah boldly declares the preference given to the Gentiles. (Isa. lxv.

21. Δντιλέγοντα] gainsaying. The very word used by the Jews at Rome to describe the treatment received by the Gospel from themselves (Acts xxviii. 22). See there vv. 22-29, in illustration of this chapter. Cp. Luke. ii. 34.

Cn. XI. 1. Mh ἀπώσατο δ Θεδε τον λαον αυτοῦ; ] Did God cast off His own people? Observe the acrist. When God accepted an Universal Church, from all Nations, in Christ, did He, by so doing, cast off His own People, the Jews?

St. Paul thus introduces an answer to the Jewish objection, that his doctrine of the divine foreknowledge and election of a Church Universal in Christ (see on viii. 29), and of Universal Redemption by Him, and of the filial adoption of the Gentiles by God, exposed God Himself to the charge of fickleness, and of injustice to the Jews.

The question between the Apostle and the Jews, as discussed in this chapter, has been very well stated as follows by Hooker;

Thus it stood with the Jewish nation—that all those spiritual

Thus it stood with the Jewish nation—that all those spiritual favours of grace which God had bestowed upon them were voluntary; that His choice of the Jews before others was free, and on their part without desert; that He in His promise made to their fathers remained stedfast; but the true construction thereof they did not conceive, because they were obstinate, and would not understand; finally, that whereas the light, which their fathers would have greatly rejoiced to see, had presented itself to them, and was rejected; if God did now depart from them, being thus expelled, and were content to be found of the Gentiles, who sought not Him, but He them, as the one had no cause to grudge, so neither had the other any to boast.

All this the Apostle proveth in the Ninth, the Tenth, and Eleventh to the Romans. At the length, in consideration that the Jews sometimes were a people whom God so wonderfully did affect; a people to whom He had given so many privileges, honours, pre-eminences, above the rest of the whole world; a people, with whose forefathers He had made so many covenants and leagues of mercy; a people for whose advancement so mighty nations had been quelled; a people, for whose defence the Angels had taken arms, the Sun and Moon had been stayed in their course; a people that had filled heaven with so many Patriarchs, Prophets, Saints, Martyrs; a people that had been the well-spring of life to all nations; a people, the top of whose kindred sitteth at the right hand of God, and is the Author of Salvation unto all the world; these things, considered in such sort as we may think an Apostolic spirit did consider them, after long discourse against them, the question is moved, Hath God then cast off His people? (xi. l.) Is there no hope, that the very Nation itself shall recover what it now hath lost? Have they stumbled that they might fall? God forbid. Nay their fall hath occasioned salvation to arise unto the Gentiles; and the Gentiles not unlikely to be a mean of restoring salvation unto them again; that as now they are losers to our gain, so in time our gain may be their abundance. Hooker (App. bk. v.).

— έγω 'Ισραηλ[της] For I also am an Israelite by birth, a Hebrew of Hebrews, of the tribe of Benjamin, the son of Israel by his beloved wife Rachel, not by Leah, or by one of their handmaids. Cp. Acts xxii. 3. 2 Cor. xi. 22. Phil. iii. 5. God did not cast off the Jewish nation, when He admitted all Nations to His Church; for I who address you in the Name of Christ am a Jew.

He says this not only to the Jews, but also to the Gentiles (see v. 13), lest they should imagine that God had rejected the Jews for their sakes, and so be elated with pride, and fall by presumption, and look on the Jews with disdain.

There is, therefore, a remarkable propriety in this reference to himself. He is not speaking of himself, as an individual, but as an Apostle of Christ, as the Apostle of the Gentiles (xi. 13). Do not imagine (he says to the Jews) that God cast off His ancient People when He admitted the Gentiles to the Church. No, I who am his chosen instrument for admitting them (cp. Acts ix. 15; xxii. 21; xxvi. 17), am a Jew. They to whom I am sent, owe their admission, under God, to one of your nation. They are spiritual children of a Jew. God admits them by me. He has not therefore cast off you, whose fellow-countryman I am.

On the other side, he reminds the Gentiles of what they owe to the Jews, who are used by God as His chosen instruments to bring them to Christ.

2. δν προέγνω] whom He foreknew, and chose, with this divine foreknowledge, not for any merit of their own, but because He foresaw and foreknew them obeying the Law of that Nature which was His own work, and not marring that image of Himself in which He created them, and not rebelling against the Law of that Nature, by enslaving themselves to the debasing corruptions of that Nature, and to the evil dominion of Satan, and because He foreknew them, not trusting in themselves, or in any supposed righteousness of their own, but as building themselves in God's truth, and as relying on His promises in Christ, and as dwelling by Faith in Him, as Abraham did. (John viii. 56. Rom, iv. 3. 9.) See above on viii. 29.

*Η οὐκ οἴδατε ἐν Ἡλία τί λέγει ἡ γραφὴ, ὡς ἐντυγχάνει τῷ Θεῷ κατὰ τοῦ Ισραήλ: <sup>3 °</sup> Κύριε, τοὺς προφήτας σου ἀπέκτειναν, τὰ θυσιαστήριά οι Kings 10.10. σου κατέσκαψαν, κάγω ύπελείφθην μόνος, καὶ ζητοῦσι τὴν ψυχήν μου. 4 d' Αλλά τί λέγει αὐτῷ ὁ χρηματισμός; Κατέλιπον ἐμαυτῷ ἐπτα- d 1 Kings 19. 18. κισχιλίους ἄνδρας, οἴτινες οὐκ ἔκαμψαν γόνυ τῆ Βάαλ.

5 ° Οὔτως οὖν καὶ ἐν τῷ νῦν καιρῷ λεῖμμα κατ' ἐκλογὴν χάριτος γέγονεν.

 $^{6}$   $^{f}$   $^{E}$   $^{i}$  δὲ χάριτι, οὐκ ἔτι ἐξ ἔργων, ἐπεὶ ἡ χάρις οὐκ ἔτι γίνεται χάρις εἰ δὲ ἐξ  $^{f}$  Deut.  $^{9.4-6.}$ έργων, οὐκ ἔτι ἔστι χάρις, ἐπεὶ τὸ ἔργον οὐκ ἔτι ἐστὶν ἔργον.

 $^{7}$   $^{8}$   $^{7}$   $^{6}$   $^{1}$   $^{6}$   $^{1}$   $^{7}$   $^{8}$   $^{1}$  πνεῦμα κατανύξεως, ὀφθαλμοὺς τοῦ μὴ βλέπειν, καὶ ὧτα τοῦ μὴ  $\frac{\text{Ezek. 12. 2.}}{\text{Matt. 13. 14}}$ ἀκούειν, ἔως τῆς σήμερον ἡμέρας. 9 ι καὶ Δαυΐδ λέγει, Γενηθήτω ἡ τράπεζα Mark 4.11. αὐτῶν εἰς παγίδα καὶ εἰς θήραν, καὶ εἰς σκάνδαλον καὶ εἰς ἀνταπόδομα i Ps. 69. 22, 23.

- ἐν 'Hλία] in the history of Elijah (1 Kings xix. 10. 18). Cp. Mark xii. 26.

- ωs έντυγχάνει τῷ Θεῷ] how he expostulates with God, and appeals against Israel, as if they had all fallen from the right

The sense is, If even Elijah was deceived in his estimate of the number of God's faithful servants, how much more may you reckon them amiss.

This passage affords no countenance to the notion, which has been deduced from it by some, that the Church of God ever ceases to be Visible. See Rom. viii. 29. Hooker, iii. 1. 8. After Ἰσραὴλ Elz. adds λέγων, which is not in the best MSS.

3. τὰ θυσιαστήρια] Elz. prefixes καl, not in the best MSS.
4. δ χρηματισμός] the response of God (cp. Matt. ii. 12. 22), Who alone can read the heart, and Who now sees a faithful remnant in Israel, as He did even in the worst times of its

- τη Βάαλ] to Baal. Observe the feminine article, τη. Hebrew בעל (Baal) is masculine, but in the Septuagint, both in the Canonical Books and in the Apocrypha, Βάαλ has sometimes the masculine, sometimes the feminine, article. Cp. Num. xxii. 41. 1 Kings xvi. 31, with 1 Sam. vii. 4. Hos. ii. 8. Tobit i. 5. Meyer

(p. 232), Fritz. (ii. p. 440.)

The reason why the Septuagint sometimes used the feminine, and why St. Paul adopts it here, appears to be, because not only a heathen god, but a goddess also (Astarté), was worshipped under the name of Baal, and because by this variety of gender the reader is reminded that there was no principle of unity in this heathen worship; and thus the vanity of the worship itself is declared.

 ϵὶ δὲ ἐξ ἔργων—ἔργον] Not in A, C, D, E, F, G, nor in Vulg., Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, and Armenian Versions. But it is found in B (omitting the first ἐστὶ after ἔτι, and having χάρις instead of the second έργον), J, and the Greek Fathers, and in the Syriac and Arabic Versions, and in almost all the Cursive MSS. Cp. iv. 5. Eph. ii. 8, 9.

The probabilities against interpolations, especially of so many words, in so ancient and numerous authorities, seem to be greater than for omission, especially as the clause in question might be regarded by some copyists as tautologous. The clause is therefore retained in the text, with a change in the accentuation of  $\epsilon \sigma \tau i$ , so that the sense may be—there is no longer any place for the existence of Grace. Cp. a somewhat similar omis-

The sense of the whole seems to be as follows. But if the election is not by man's merit, but by God's free Grace, it is no more of works; for, if this were so, Grace thus becomes no longer Grace, but would be like wages paid as due for a work done. If the election is of human works, that is, if the remnant chosen by God, is chosen on the ground of its own human merit, there is no longer such a thing as Divine Grace; for, if there were, then the work would not be work entitled to vages as a due, but it would receive that which it receives, only as a boon.

 7. τοῦτο] So the best MSS. Elz. τούτου.
 - ἡ ἐκλογή] the Election. The faithful remnant which has profited by the free grace given to it by God. Ἐκλογὴ is the abstract for the concrete ἐκλεκτοὶ, elect, as περιτομὴ, for the Jews, and ἀκροβιστία, for the Gentiles (ii. 26; iii. 30; iv. 9).

— oi δε λοινοί] the rest, those Jews who were left, when the others (the ἐκλογη) were chosen.

- ἐπωρώθησαν] were hardened. πώρωσις is a medical term applied to the induration of the flesh, or bones, so as to become like porous stone, -πῶρος, Hesych.

Observe the aorists here, ἐπέτυχεν and ἐπωρώθησαν. The same event, the Crucifixion of Christ, brought with it Righteousness to the one party, and Obduration to the rest. He was there set on the Cross, for the fall, and also for the uprising of many in Israel. (Luke ii. 34.) He was a stone of stumbling to the one, but the Rock of Salvation to the other. (1 Pet. ii. 6. 8.)

8. πνεῦμα κατανύξεως] a spirit of slupor. κατάνυξις is the word used by the LXX here (Isa. xxix. 10), for the Hebrew הַרְדֵּכְה (tardemah), torpor, numbness, slumber, insensibility, from root or in Niphal, to be insensible.

It is supposed by some (e. g. Grotius, Rosenm.) that the word κατάνυξιs, as used here by the LXX, is not formed from κατα-νύσσω, depungo, but from κατα-νύω, an unknown root, equivalent to κατανεύω, whence κατανυστάζω, to nod in slumber.

But this would seem to be a forced deduction.

The true meaning of κατάνυξις, as used by the LXX here and in Ps. lx. 3, is what the word κατανύσσω properly imports, namely,

(1) de-figo, to nail down, to rivet, so as to make insensible, whether by lethargy, fear, consternation, sorrow, pain, or any strong passion. Hence Lev. x. 3,  $\kappa \alpha \tau \epsilon \nu \dot{\nu} \chi \theta \eta$  'Aapa'v, and 1 Kings xxi. 27,  $\kappa \alpha \tau \epsilon \nu \dot{\nu} \gamma \eta$  'Axaà\(\theta\), he was struck dumb with sorrow, and so remained, as it were, nailed to the ground. So the Latin "defixus metu, mærore." Cp. Bentley's note on the use of affigo, as applied to the mind. Horat. Serm. ii. 2. 79. So προσηλοῦν, προσπερονῶν τὴν ψυχὴν τῆ γῆ. Cp. Kuinoel on Acts ii. 37, κατενύγησαν τῆ καρδία, and the word is therefore rightly explained by Chrysostom here, by ἐμπαγῆναι, καὶ προσ-

(2) What is transfixed becomes insensible, even by pain, and so S. Cyprian, quoted by A Lapide, seems to have understood the word (Epist. lib. i. 3), "Judæi, transpunctione mentis alienatione dementis, Dei præcepta contemnunt, medelam vulneris

(3) And they were thus more obstinately riveted in their own prejudices. See Chrys., Theoph., Œcum.

On the sense of the prophecy, see the next note.

9.  $\Delta avt\delta$ .] See Ps. lxix. 22; a Psalm spoken in the person of the Messiah on the Cross, and there pronouncing, as from a prophetic seat, and from a judicial throne, a prediction and a verdict on the Jews, for their scorn, rejection, and crucifixion of Himself. See v. 22. That Psalm is therefore used by the Church on Good Friday.

This consideration may serve to remove the objections that have been made against the Psalmist, as if these were words of human passion and vindictive retribution. He who there speaks is Christ, the Divine Prophet, the Righteous Judge of all. the judgment which He pronounces is more awful because pronounced by Him in His humiliation.

This reflection also may explain the cause of the rejection of those Jews who were cast off by God. He sent them a spirit of He made their table to be a snare. The tables of God's Word, the tables of the Decalogue, the tables of the Shewbread, the table of the Paschal Lamb itself, became snares to them. He cursed their blessings (Mal. ii. 2) because they rejected the Blessed αὐτοῖς 10 σκοτισθήτωσαν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ αὐτῶν τοῦ μὴ βλέπειν, καὶ τον νῶτον αὐτῶν διαπαντὸς σύγκαμψον.

One Who came from Heaven to save them.

k Acts 13, 46. ch. 10. 19.

11 κ Λέγω οὖν, μὴ ἔπταισαν ἴνα πέσωσι;

Μὴ γένοιτο ἀλλὰ τῷ αὐτῶν παραπτώματι ἡ σωτηρία τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, εἰς τὸ παραζηλώσαι αὐτούς. 12 Εἰ δὲ τὸ παράπτωμα αὐτῶν πλοῦτος κόσμου, καὶ τὸ ήττημα αὐτῶν πλοῦτος ἐθνῶν, πόσω μᾶλλον τὸ πλήρωμα αὐτῶν.

13 1 Υμίν γὰρ λέγω τοῖς ἔθνεσιν, ἐφ' ὄσον μὲν οὖν εἰμι ἐγὼ ἐθνῶν ἀπόστολος την διακονίαν μου δοξάζω, 14 m εἴ πως παραζηλώσω μοῦ την σάρκα, καὶ σώσω τινας έξ αὐτῶν 15 n εἰ γαρ ή ἀποβολη αὐτῶν καταλλαγη κόσμου, τίς ή πρόσληψις, εί μη ζωη έκ νεκρων; 16 ° εί δὲ ή ἀπαρχη άγία, καὶ τὸ φύραμα καὶ εί ή ρίζα άγία, καὶ οἱ κλάδοι.

17 Εί δε τινες των κλάδων εξεκλάσθησαν, σύ δε άγριελαιος ών ενεκεντρίσθης έν αὐτοῖς, καὶ συγκοινωνὸς τῆς ρίζης καὶ τῆς πιότητος τῆς ἐλαίας ἐγένου, 18 q μὴ κατακαυχώ των κλάδων εί δε κατακαυχάσαι, οὐ σὺ τὴν ρίζαν βαστάζεις, άλλ' ή ρίζα σέ.

19 Έρεις οὖν, Ἐξεκλάσθησαν κλάδοι ἵνα ἐγὼ ἐγκεντρισθῶ.

20 Γ Καλώς τη ἀπιστία ἐξεκλάσθησαν, σὸ δὲ τη πίστει ἔστηκας μη ύψηλοφρόνει, άλλα φοβοῦ. 21 Εἰ γαρ ὁ Θεὸς τῶν κατα φύσιν κλάδων οὐκ ἐφείσατο, μή πως οὐδὲ σοῦ φείσεται.

22 s*Ιδε οὖν χρηστότητα, καὶ ἀποτομίαν Θεοῦ· ἐπὶ μὲν τοὺς πεσόντας ἀποτομίαν έπὶ δὲ σὲ χρηστότητα, ἐὰν ἐπιμείνης τῆ χρηστότητι ἐπεὶ καὶ σὰ ἐκκο-s John 15. 2. 1 Cor. 15. 2. Heb. 3. 6, 14. & 10. 23, 38.

& 3. 6. q 1 Cor. 10. 12. r Prov. 28. 14. Jsa. 66. 2. ch. 12. 16. Phil. 2. 12.

10. τον νῶτον] masculine in LXX. See Lobeck, Phryn. p. 290.

11. μη ἔπταισαν] did they stumble in order that they should fall? fall utterly, as it were, down a precipice, so as to be irrecoverably lost? Was this God's purpose in allowing them to stumble, and in punishing them by their own stumbling?

Some of them, it is true, fell, έπεσον (v. 22), they who stubbornly resisted God's grace, and died in unrepented sin. But taken as a whole, the Jewish Nation has not fallen. Their condition is not described as a  $\pi\tau\tilde{\omega}\mu\alpha$ , but a  $\pi\alpha\rho\tilde{\alpha}\pi\tau\omega\mu\alpha$ . They have swerved aside from the right path, but they have not fallen down utterly, so as never again to arise.

 $-\tau\hat{\omega}$  αὐτῶν παραπτώματι ἡ σωτηρία τοῖς ἔθνεσιν-12. πλοῦτος μου] We are not so to understand these expressions (see v. 15) as if it was necessary for the Jews to stumble, in order that the Gentiles might rise.

The offer of the Gospel to all Nations, on equal terms with the Jews, and without submission to the Levitical Law, was, through the envy of the Jews, and through their sin, the occasion of their own fall, and was the cause of salvation to the Gentiles.

The reception of the younger brother, in the Gospel, was the occasion of eliciting the sullen anger and the proud selfrighteousness, and unfraternal censoriousness and unfilial murmuring of the elder brother (Luke xv. 28-30), and of his going out of his father's house into the field, and of his refusal to come in, and of his being himself an outcast and an exile. But it was not the cause. He himself was the cause of his banishment. If his heart had been right toward God, he would have been among the first to welcome his father's son into his father's house. (Luke xv. 31, 32.) O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself. (Hos. xiii. 9.)

- παραπτώματι] by their falling aside. They have not utterly fallen down a precipice, but they have fallen aside, παρά, so that the Gentiles, at their side, may excito them to rise (παρα-(ηλωσιν).

els το παραζηλώσαι αὐτούς] in order to provoke them to jealousy. God's adoption of an elect people from the whole world was ordered by Him in mercy, to provoke the Jews to jealousy, so that they might be more eager to receive the Gospel when they saw others enjoying its privileges.

12. ήττημα αὐτῶν] their lessening and worsening in regard to God's favour and spiritual wealth and dignity, as well as numerical strength. See I Cor. vi. 7.

13. ἐφ' ὕσον μὲν οὖν] in so far, therefore, as I am the Apostle of the Gentiles, I glorify mine office. I am not magnifying myself, but I am doing honour to my ministry to you Gentiles by endeavouring to make it subservient, through your means, to the glorious consummation of the recovery of the Jews.

15. ζωή ἐκ νεκρῶν] life from the dead. The restoration of the Jews to God's favour will be like the revival of the dry bones of the valley of Ezekiel (xxxvii. 1-11).

St. Paul seems also to be referring to our Lord's parable as recorded in St. Luke's Gospel,-the Gospel of St. Paul, the Gospel of the Gentile world,—which displays, in a beautiful picture, the subject now before him. (Luke xv. 31.)

Remember, you Gentiles, that you are the younger Brother; you were once dead, and you were received by your Father as alive from the dead. Of you it was once said by your loving Father, "It was meet that we should make merry and be glad, for this thy brother was dead and is alive again." (Luke xv. 32.)
Your elder Brother is now dead, but he also will revive. This indeed will be life from the dead, and it is your part to hasten that

16.  $\frac{\partial \pi a \rho \chi \dot{\eta}}{\partial t}$  first-fruits. The  $\frac{\partial \pi a \rho \chi \dot{\eta}}{\partial t}$  differs from the  $\frac{\partial \dot{\zeta}_a}{\partial t}$ . The  $\frac{\partial \pi a \rho \chi \dot{\eta}}{\partial t}$  is the first-fruits of a harvest; the corn which is ground into flour, and kneaded; and so represents the Apostles and first Jewish Christians, particularly those converted on the Day of Pentecost; the earnest and pledge of the world's  $\phi \dot{\phi}$ ραμα (properly lump or batch) leavened by the Gospel. (Matt.

Hence φύραμα is explained by σπέρμα, or seed, in Hesych., Gloss. Alberti, p. 107. And this sense corresponds with the use of the word φύραμα in other places (Gal. v. 9. 1 Cor. v. 6), where it signifies a whole.

The δίζα, or root, is Abraham and the Patriarchs. (Jer. xi. 16.) Theodoret.

17. ἀγριέλαιος ων ἐνεκεντρίσθης] being a wild olive, thow wast grafted in. Observe the emphatic ἀγριέλαιος made more clear by παρὰ φύσιν (v. 24). Quis inseret oleastrum in olivâ? Oliva solet in oleastro, oleastrum in olivâ nunquam vidimus. Quisquis fecerit, non inveniet baccas nisi oleastri. Hoc ostendens Apostolus, ad Omnipotentiam Dei revocans, Si tu, &c. contra naturam. Augustine (in Ps. lxxii.).

- πιότητος] fatness. See Judges ix. 9.

18. μη κατακαυχω] boast not thou against the branches; but and if thou boastest against them, remember, it is not thou that bearest the root, but it is the root that beareth thee.

19. κλάδοι] branches, not 'the branches.' Elz. prefixes oi, but it is not in A, B (see Mai), C, F, G, J.

21. φείσεται] Α, C, D, F, G. Elz. φείσηται.

22. τους πεσόντας] those who fell. Some did fall, but not all; see v. 11.

πήση· 23 t κάκεινοι δε, εαν μη επιμείνωσι τη άπιστία, εγκεντρισθήσονται, 12 Cor. 3.16. δυνατός γάρ έστιν ὁ Θεὸς πάλιν έγκεντρίσαι αὐτούς.

24 Εί γὰρ σὺ ἐκ τῆς κατὰ φύσιν ἐξεκόπης ἀγριελαίου, καὶ παρὰ φύσιν ἐνεκεντρίσθης είς καλλιέλαιον, πόσφ μαλλον οθτοι οί κατά φύσιν έγκεντρισθήσονται τη ίδία έλαία;

25 " Οὐ γὰρ θέλω ὑμᾶς ἀγνοεῖν, ἀδελφοὶ, τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο, ἴνα μὴ ἦτε παρ' " ver. 7, 8. έαυτοις φρόνιμοι, ότι πώρωσις ἀπὸ μέρους τῷ Ἰσραὴλ γέγονεν, ἄχρις οῦ τὸ 2 Cor. 3. 14-16. πλήρωμα τῶν ἐθνῶν εἰσέλθη·  $^{26}$  καὶ οὕτω πᾶς Ἰσραὴλ σωθήσεται, καθὼς  $^{\text{P8. 14. 7.}}_{\& 106. 47.}$ γέγραπται, "Ηξει έκ Σιων ο ρυόμενος, αποστρέψει ασεβείας από 1sa. 45. 25. Ἰακώβ,  $^{27}$  καὶ αὖτη αὐτοῖς ἡ παρ' ἐμοῦ διαθήκη, ὅταν ἀφέλωμαι  $^{\text{Y S. 14. 7.}}_{\text{Isa. 27. 9.}}$  τὰς ἁμαρτίας αὐτῶν.  $^{28}$  Κατὰ μὲν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἐχθροὶ δι' ὑμᾶς, κατὰ δὲ  $^{\text{Jer. 31. 31. &cc.}}_{\text{Z Cor. 3. 16.}}$ τὴν ἐκλογὴν ἀγαπητοὶ διὰ τοὺς πατέρας.  $^{29}$  γ' Αμεταμέλητα γὰρ τὰ χαρίσματα  $^{\text{Heb. 8.8.}}_{\text{y Num. 23. 19.}}$ καὶ ή κλησις τοῦ Θεοῦ.

 $^{30}$   $^{2}$   $^{\circ}\Omega\sigma\pi\epsilon ho$   $\gamma\grave{a}
ho$   $\mathring{v}\mu\epsilon\^{i}$ s  $\pi$ οτὲ ἠ $\pi\epsilon\iota\theta$ ή $\sigma$ ατε τ $\hat{arphi}$  Θε $\hat{arphi}$ ,  $\nu\^{v}\nu$  δὲ ἠλεή $\theta$ ητε τ $\hat{\eta}$  τούτων  $^{2}$  Eph.  $^{2}$ .  $^{2}$ .  $^{2}$ .  $^{2}$ . ἀπειθεία,  $^{31}$  οὕτω καὶ οῧτοι νῦν ἠπείθησαν τῷ ὑμετέρῳ ἐλέει, ἴνα καὶ αὐτοὶ ἐλεη $^{-\frac{\text{Col. 5.3.}}{1}}$   $^{3}$   $^{-7}$  ver.  $^{31}$   $^{1}$  Cor.  $^{2}$  .  $^{2}$  Cor. 4. 1.  $^{2}$  Cor. 4. 1.  $^{2}$  Cor. 4. 1.

32 a Συνέκλεισε γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς τοὺς πάντας εἰς ἀπείθειαν ἴνα τοὺς πάντας ἐλεήση. a ch. 8, 9, Gal. 3, 22,  $^{33}$   $^{b}$   $^{g}$   $^{g}$ καὶ ἀνταποδοθήσεται αὐτ $\hat{\omega}$ ;  $^{36}$  ° ὅτι ἐξ αὐτοῦ καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ  $^{6}_{e}$   $^{10}_{rov}$ .  $^{16.4}_{e}$   $^{10}_{rov}$ .  $^{10}_{e}$   $^{10}_{$ πάντα αὐτῷ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας, ἀμήν.

XII.  $^{1}$   $^{a}$   $^{a}$   $^{a}$   $^{a}$   $^{b}$   $^{a}$   $^{b}$   $^{a}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{b}$   $^{a}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{c}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^$

25. ἀπὸ μέρους] in part; not totally; for example, I, the Apostle of the Gentiles, am a Jew  $(v.\ 1)$ .

— ἄχρις οὖ τὸ πλήρωμα τῶν ἐθνῶν εἰσέλθη] until the fulness of the Gentiles shall have come in. Πλήρωμα is a word specially applied to ships. The full complement of the Gentile world shall enter the sacred vessel of the Church, the Ark of Salvation. Another parallelism with (if not a reference to) St. Luke's Gospel,  $\chi_{\rho is}$  od  $\pi \lambda \eta \rho \omega \theta \hat{\omega} \sigma \iota$  raipol  $\xi \theta \nu \hat{\omega} \nu$ . (Luke xxi. 24.)

26. και ούτω πας 'Ισραήλ σωθήσεται and so all Israel,whether literally from the seed of Abraham, or from the Gentile world, children of Abraham's Faith, all true Israelites will be saved. (Theodoret, Augustine, S. Jerome in Isa. xi.) Then the number of the elect will be complete (Rev. vii. 3. 9), and the Harvest of the World will come. (Rev. xiv. 16.)

- δ δυόμενος] The siz (Goel), the Redeemer. (Isa. xliv.

28. Κατὰ μὲν τὸ εὐαγγέλιον] According to the Gospel, and in relation to it. If they are regarded in this respect, they are enemies of God, and of you also. But this enmity has been occasioned by the extension of God's favour to you (see on v. 11); and so they are  $e\chi\theta\rho ol$   $\delta i'$   $\delta\mu\hat{a}s$ , enemies through you, and therefore have a claim to your pity; and if they be regarded a parte ante, they are beloved of God on account of their fathers, particularly Abraham, whose children by faith you are, and therefore you are their brethren. Origen.

29. 'Αμεταμέλητα] Not to be repented of; not of such a kind as ever to be revoked by Him. "God is not a man that He should lie, or the son of man that He should repent" of his promises and gifts. (Numb. xxiii. 19. See Rom. iii. 3; ix. 6.)
God chose a People to Himself, and God hath not repented of His own choice; He did not cast off His people (xi. 1, 2).

30. γάρ] Elz. adds καλ, not in the best MSS.

— ἡπειθήσατε] ye disobeyed.

31. ὑμετέρφ ἐλέει] mercy toward you. So τὴν ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν.
(Luke xxii. 19. 1 Cor. xi. 24. Cp. Rom. xv. 4. 1 Cor. xv. 31.)

32. Συνέκλεισε—τ. π. εἰς ἀπείθειαν] He shut up the whole (race of mankind, τοὺς πάντας, see iii. 9) into Disobedience, in order that He might have mercy upon all. (Luke v. 6. Cp. Gal. iii. 22.) Because they sinned against Him, God punished them by means of their sin. He gave them over to themselves and their own devices (see i. 28). Their Disobedience was like a Prison in which they were held captives. "Peccati poena Peccatum," "Blindness of heart (says Augustine c. Julian. Pelagian.

VOL. II.-PART III.

v. 3) is not only a sin, but it is a punishment, by which the proud heart of man is chastised with a fit retribution." But God did this with a merciful intent, in order that He might have compassion on all.

33. κρίματα — δδυί] Κρίματα are God's decrees, = στερτο (mishpatim); and סול (derachim) are His ways of bringing them to pass.

Malorum est malè uti etiam bonis, Dei est benè uti etiam malis. Dei consilium, sicut homo, explicare non possum. Novi cum Paulo Apostolo expavescere, quod etiam ille, cum consideraret, expavit, et expavescens exclamavit, O altitudo ! Nobis consideratio, admiratio, tremor, exclamatio, quia nulla penetratio. Ipsi autem quid? Gloria in sæcula sæculorum. Alios coronat, alios damnat, nusquam errat, alios probat, de aliis probat, omnes ordinat. Aug. (Serm. 15.)

35. τίς προέδωκεν αὐτῷ] Who first gave to Him? Quis prior dedit Illi, quasi suorum gratiâ meritorum? Quis prævenit gratiam, quæ gratis datur? In Ipso sunt omnia. Quæ utique? nisi omnia bona que ab Illo accepimus; et accepimus ut boni simus? Aug. (Serm. 26); and cp. de Lib. Arb. iii. 16, Deus nulli debet aliquid, qui omnia gratuita præstat; and Bp. Sanderson,

36. ξξ αὐτοῦ καὶ δι αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτόν] All our store, as it issued from the fountain of God's grace, so should it issue into the ocean of His glory. For to Him and through Him are all things. Bp. Sanderson (i. 334).

CH. XII. 1. Παρακαλώ οὖν ὑμᾶς I exhort you therefore. Observe the conjunction odv, therefore, introducing the result of the whole; and see how he builds all on man's freewill.

After the great argument of the preceding portion of the Epistle on some of the most abstruse questions of Christian Doctrine, St. Paul sums up all with plain rules of Christian

Duty:

He thus teaches, that "Love is the fulfilling of the Law"

Love is the fulfilling of the Law" (xiii. 10); that Justification is of no avail without Sanctification; and that all speculations concerning the nature of Faith ought to lead onward to the performance of Good Works. (Tit. iii. 8.)

On the practice of St. Paul in his Epistles, "after he hath discussed some main points of doctrine or discipline, to propose several good advices and rules, in the observance of which the life of Christian practice doth consist, and from which might well be compiled a Body of Ethics," see the remarks of Dr. Barrow Serm. vi. vol. i. p. 107. LL

b Eph. 4. 23. & 5. 10, 17. 1
Thess 4. 3. Col. 3. 10. 1
John 2. 15. 1
Cor. 12. 7, 11. Eph. 4. 7. c
PS. 31. 8. Eph. 5. 10, 17. 1
Pet. 2. 3. Col. 4. 12. 1
Thess. 4. 3. d
ch. 1. 5. 1
Cor. 3. 10. Prov. 25. 27. c
Ph. 1. 23. & 4. 16, 25. g
Pc. 12. 12. 4, &c. &c. & 12. 10. 1
Pet. 4. 10. h

στήσαι τὰ σώματα ὑμῶν θυσίαν ζῶσαν, ἀγίαν, εὐάρεστον τῷ Θεῷ, τὴν λογικὴν λατρείαν ὑμῶν, <sup>2 ὑ</sup> καὶ μὴ συσχηματίζεσθε τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, ἀλλὰ μεταμορφοῦσθε τἢ ἀνακαινώσει τοῦ νοὸς, <sup>c</sup> εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν ὑμᾶς τί τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ τὸ ἀγαθὸν καὶ εὐάρεστον καὶ τέλειον.

 $^{6 \text{ g}}$  Έχοντες δὲ χαρίσματα κατὰ τὴν χάριν τὴν δοθεῖσαν ἡμῖν διάφορα, εἴτε προφητείαν, κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως,  $^{7 \text{ h}}$  εἴτε διακονίαν, ἐν τῆ διακονία,

- τὴν λογικὴν λατρείαν ὑμῶν] the rational service of you. Remark ὑμῶν, of you, more emphatic than ὑμετέραν, yours. You have a nobler service to perform than even the Levitical λατρεία, τηὶμχ (abodah), of the Temple (in which the Jews so much gloried; see ix. 4); which consisted, in great degree, of manual service and in bloody sacrifices, and has been succeeded in the Christian Church by the sacrifice of body, soul, and spirit, a sacrifice living, not slain,—and λογικὴ, rational, not ὀργανικὴ, or mechanical (Heb. xiii. 15). "Hujus hostiæ altare est cor," the Altar of this victim is the heart. Gregor. (Hom. 22 in Ezek.); and cp. Waterland's Charge on Distinctions of Sacrifice, 1740, pp. 58–60.

It is not for nothing that the great Apostle calleth Religion our reasonable service of God. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, p. 253, where see his remarks on the uses of Reason in matters of Religion; and Barrow's excellent observations on this subject, Serm. xiii. vol. iv. p. 303, "On the Truth and Divinity of the Christian Religion."

2.  $\mu\eta$  συσχηματίζεσθε τ $\hat{\varphi}$  αἰῶνι τοὐτ $\hat{\psi}$ ] and be ye not conformed, or configured, to this world. For at your Baptism you renounced it.

A, B**, D, E, F, G have the infinitive συσχηματίζεσθαι and μεταμορφοῦσθαι here, and so Lachmann, Alf. But the imperative seems to be preferable. It is in B*, J, and Vulg., Syriac, Æthiopic, and Arabic Versions, and in those of Cod. Aug. and Boerner. And this transition from the Infinitive to the Imperative ("be not ye conformed") gives life, spirit, and beauty to the address, and is quite in the manner of St. Paul. See I Cor. x. I. 7; and compare the note below, I Pct. ii. II. The confusion in the MSS. between āī and ē is so common (from identity of sound in the ancient pronunciation), that the choice between them must be determined by internal considerations.

- μεταμορφοῦσθε] be ye transfigured in your minds; as Christ, in His human body, was transfigured (μετεμορφώθη) on the Mount. (Matt. xvii. 2.)

— είs τὸ δοκιμά(ειν—τέλειον] in order that you may not follow your own will, but may examine and appreciate what, and how wise and holy, the will of God is; that will, which alone (and not man's will) is the good, and acceptable, and perfect will. See Eph. v. 10, the best comment on this text.

Δοκιμάζειν is not merely to discern, nor to try, but to assay the value of. See 1 Thess. v. 21. 1 Cor. iii. 13. 1 Pet. i. 7.

Only the regenerate man, who is renewed in the spirit of his mind by the Holy Ghost, can ascertain and assay God's will, and form a just estimate of what it is.

Let no one therefore among you be staggered by the objections of unregenerate persons, whether Jews or Heathens, arguing upon the defective and erroneous grounds of unsanctified Reason, against what I, who am the Apostle of Christ, and am inspired by the Holy Ghost, and speak in their Name, "according to the grace given me," declare to be God's will. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned (1 Cor. ii. 14); and the more you grow in grace, the more you will be able to understand and admire the operations of God's will, and the more will your will be conformed to it.

3. μη ὑπερφρονεῖν] not to be minded above what he ought to be minded, but to be minded so as to be sober-minded.

On the paronomasia here, see above on 2 Thess. iii. 11, and on Philem. 10. 20, and Winer, p. 560.

 $-i\kappa k\sigma\tau \psi$  is  $\delta$  Θε $\delta$ s— $i\kappa\sigma\tau \omega s$ ] according as God dealt out to each man his measure of Faith. The measure of Faith which God has allotted to each man (and not the amount of mere unregenerate Reason, or of pride and confidence which he has in his own intelligence) is to be the Rule according to which he is "to be minded."

From the word  $\mu\epsilon\rho l\zeta\omega$ , to allot, to apportion (cp. 1 Cor. vii. 17. Heb. ii. 4), St. Paul is led to speak of each Christian in his proper character as a member  $(\mu\epsilon\lambda\sigma s)$  of the mystical body of Christ, and thence to prescribe rules of mutual love, for the edification of the several members, and of the whole Church.

He begins with the higher gift of  $\pi\rho o\phi\eta \tau \epsilon la$ , and then descends to  $\delta\iota a\kappa o\nu la$ : he then returns to two branches of  $\pi\rho o\phi\eta \tau \epsilon la$ , namely,  $\delta\iota \delta a\sigma \kappa a\lambda la$ , and  $\pi a\rho a\kappa \lambda \eta \sigma \iota s$ , and then speaks of the duty of the  $\pi\iota \sigma \tau ol$ , or faithful Laity; he then re-ascends to the official functions of the  $\pi\rho o\iota \sigma \tau d\mu \epsilon \nu o\iota$ , or Clergy; and finally extends himself to the duties of all.

5. of πολλοί] we the many (of πολλοί) are one body in Christ. Here it is plain, that in this construction, in this opposition to one, "the many" denote the whole multitude, the complex and aggregate body of Christians. Bentley. See above on v. 15; and so of πολλοί is equivalent to all.

— τὸ δέ] So A, B, D, D*, F, G.—Elz. has ὁ δέ. The sense is: But as individuals, members one of another.

 $-\kappa a\theta^$  ε[s] severally. By our Christian calling we are knit together into one mystical body,  $\sigma \dot{\nu} \sigma \sigma \omega \mu o \iota$ . And thus we are individually one another's members, as all of us collectively are members of Christ. Cp. Bp. Sanderson, i. 212; ii. 277. For similar instances of  $\kappa a\theta^$  ε[s see Mark xiv. 19. John viii. 9. Winer, p. 223.

As to the use of 70 see xii. 18.

6. προφητείαν] Not here so much prophesying in the sense of foretelling the future; as (1) Preaching: (2) Expounding or Interpretation of Scripture. See this use of προφητεία in 1 Thess. v. 20, προφητεύω 1 Cor. xi. 4; xiv. 3, 4. 39.

St. Paul distinguishes προφητεία from διακονία. The first is peculiarly the office of Bishops and of Presbyters; the second of Deacons in the Church. Rosenm.

Indeed the Diaconate was instituted in order that they, whose special office it is to teach, might have more leisure to give themselves to Prayer and the Ministry of the Word. Acts vi. 2-4.

— κατά την ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεως] according to the proportion of the Faith.

The word  $\pi l \sigma \tau \iota s$  is used here as in Eph. iv. 5, "There is one Lord, one Faith:" i. e. there is one and the same body of Christian Doctrine to be believed and professed by all.

And this is the sense in which the word  $\pi i\sigma\tau is$  is used by St. Jude, where he says that it is the duty of all to contend earnestly for "the Faith, once for all delivered to the Saints." (Jude 3.)

In like manner, the word έλπίς, hope, is used by St. Paul to designate the object which is hoped for. See above, viii. 24, έλπὶς βλεπομένη. Col. i. 5, έλπίδα ἀποκειμένην. Eph. i. 18.

It is to be regretted, that the sense of this important declaration of St. Paul has been obscured, and its force weakened, by some who understand the words  $\tau \eta \nu$  aradoglav  $\tau \eta s$  mistress to signify merely according to the proportion of your faith: i. e. the faith by which ye believe.

The true meaning of the word πίστις, or Faith, as here used, has been long since declared by Irenæus, i. 2: "The Church, although diffused throughout the world, has received the Faith from the Apostles and their disciples; and (c. 3) this Faith she carefully guards, as if she dwelt in one house, though she is dispersed throughout the world; and she uniformly preaches and delivers the same things, as if she had but one mouth . . . . since there is but one and the same Faith for all," μιᾶς καl τῆς αὐτῆς πίστως ούσης.

Cp. Hooker's observations (III. i. 5), and the remarks of Anselm, Estius, Beza, and others here. See also some excellent εἴτε ὁ διδάσκων, ἐν τῆ διδασκαλία,  $^{8+}$ εἴτε ὁ παρακαλῶν, ἐν τῆ παρακλήσει, ὁ  $^{1}$  Deut. 15. 7.  $^{1}$  Matt. 6.  $^{1-3}$ . μεταδιδούς, έν άπλότητι, ὁ προϊστάμενος, έν σπουδή, ὁ έλεων, έν ίλαρότητι.

 $^{9}$  'Η ἀγάπη ἀνυπόκριτος, ἀποστυγοῦντες τὸ πονηρὸν, κολλώμενοι τῷ ἀγαθῷ.  $^{10}$  κ  $T\hat{\eta}$  φιλαδελφία εἰς ἀλλήλους φιλόστοργοι, τ $\hat{\eta}$  τιμ $\hat{\eta}$  ἀλλήλους προηγούμενοι.  $^{11}$  Per. 1.10.  $^{10}$  κ  $^{10}$  κ  $^{10}$  φιλαδελφία εἰς ἀλλήλους φιλόστοργοι, τ $\hat{\eta}$  τιμ $\hat{\eta}$  ἀλλήλους προηγούμενοι.  $^{11}$  Per. 1.10.  $^{10}$  κ  $^{10}$  γ  $^{10}$  γ  $^{10}$  κ  $^{10}$  γ  $^{10}$  γ  $^{10}$  κ  $^{10}$  γ  $^{1$ k Heb. 13. 1. Phil. 2. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 22. & 2. 17. 2 Pet. 1. 7.

11 Τη σπουδη μη όκνηροὶ, τῷ πνεύματι ζέοντες, τῷ Κυρίῳ δουλεύοντες.

observations on this sense of the word \( \pi \lor{\text{to}} \tau \text{to}_1 \), in Fritz. i. 5, | them to interpret each several portion of Scripture "according to

p. 17.
'Aναλογία is Proportion: e. g.
As the Head is to the Body, so is Christ to the Church.

As one member in the natural Body is to another member in the same natural body, and to the whole body, so is one Christian to another Christian, and to the whole Church, or mystical Body of Christ.

All things are to be done in the Church with a constant regard to this law of 'Avadoyla, or Proportion.

And the special purport of the Apostle's precept here is to declare, that Preaching is to be exercised, and that Scripture is to be expounded,

(1) Not according to men's private notions;

(2) Nor, from one or two texts or chapters taken singly and

(3) But according to the proportion of the Faith; that is, according to the general symmetry and harmony of the whole body of Christian Doctrine, and according to the relation or proportion (ἀναλογία) of each special doctrine preached, or text expounded, to that entire body of doctrine.

Hence Tertullian says, "Adversus regulam fidei nihil scire, est omnia scire" (Præscr. Hæret. c. 14; cp. 13, and Iren. i. 19); and Augustine (in Joann. Tract. 18, and elsewhere) insists on the necessity of Preaching and interpreting Scripture "secundum sanam fidei regulam."

On the other hand, it has always been the characteristic of heretics to interpret the words of Scripture μονόκωλα, i. e. piecemeal, without due regard to the general tenour of the whole. See S. Hippol. c. Noet. 2, vol. ii. p. 7, ed. Fabric. Their will is, that the sense of the whole Bible should give way to (their interpretation of) two or three sections of it. This is the characteristic of Heresy. Tertullian (c. Praxeam, 20).

Private notions on particular texts are to be conformed to the Regula Fidei, and not the Regula Fidei to be made (like a Lesbian rule) to bend to private notions on particular texts.

This Regula Fidei is the Canonical Scripture, and every exposition is to be so framed as to be in unison with the general scope and tenour of Holy Scripture. And the true sense of And this true sense is propounded by the Scripture is Scripture. Church Catholic, the divinely appointed Interpreter of Scripture, in her public symbols of Faith.

Hence Archbp. Cranmer and our Reformers (in Reformatio Legum, i. 13) commanded all Preachers and Expositors to have always before their eyes the Creeds, "ne quid contra Symbola aliquando interpretemur." And Bp. Andrewes, in his admirable Sermon "on the Worshipping of Imaginations," v. 57 (a Sermon worthy of being placed by the side of Tertullian's Præscriptiones Hæreticorum), justly censures those Preachers, who arbitrarily and presumptuously domineer over the Faith of their Flocks, by delivering as God's Word their own private misconstructions of It, instead of reforming their own private misconstructions by that Word as interpreted by the consentient voice and public practice of Christ's Church from the beginning. "This," says he, "is the disease of our age." See also Waterland's Essay on the Use and Value of Ecol. Antiquity Works vol. vn. 265.—275 Value of Eccl. Antiquity, Works, vol. v. pp. 265-275.

This Rule of Scripture-Interpretation is of great value; and perhaps it is nowhere more so, than in expounding this Epistle to the Romans, in which the rule is delivered. If it had been carefully attended to, the world would have been saved from many of the pernicious and exclusive notions (concerning partial Redemption and other matters) which have been erroneously deduced by some from one or two texts of this Epistle taken singly, in contravention of the plain sense of the whole.

Compare St. Peter's warning on this subject, 2 Pet. iii. 16.

Heretical teachers lay hold of a few sentences of this Epistle, and endeavour to overturn thereby the whole sense of Holy Scripture, which proclaims that man has received Freedom of Will as a gift from God. Origen.

It is therefore a happy characteristic of the Church of England, that she reads the whole of the New Testament, and a great part of the Old, publicly to her Congregations, and thus endeavours to protect her Clergy and her People against the danger of dwelling exclusively on particular texts, and directs the Proportion of the Faith" as displayed in the whole Bible.

The above explanation of the words κατὰ τὴν ἀναλογίαν τῆς πίστεωs has been recently well illustrated by Philippi, p. 513, and has been adopted by Bengel, Flatt, Klee, Glöckler, Schräder, Köllner, and others.

3. δ μεταδιδούs, ἐν ἀπλότητι] he that giveth time or substance in works of piety and charity, let him do it with disinterestedness and with honest openness and guilelessness of heart, and with a single eye (ἀπλοῦς ὀφθαλμὸς, Matt. vi. 22) to God's glory; and not looking askance with oblique glances at himself, or for the praise of men (Theodoret), so as to worship the creature with the Creator; but with one sole desire in his heart, one thought in his mind, one aim in all his actions-Soli Deo Gloria !

Compare the notes above on 2 Cor. viii. 2, and on ix. 13, concerning the sense of the word andorns.

9. Ἡ ἀγάπη ἀνυπόκριτος, ἀποστυγοῦντες] Literally,—Charity without pretence; ye hating what is evil. On this remarkable structure see Heb. xiii. 5; and cp. the Anacolutha in Eph. iv. 2. Col. iii. 16. 2 Cor. ix. 10-12. Winer, § 63, p. 505.

There is a proverbial brevity in this series of Christian maxims (vv. 9. 11), and the verb substantive seems designedly to be suppressed, in order that they may serve the double purpose of Christian precepts, and Christian axioms. See below on Heb. xiii. 4.

11.  $\tau \hat{\eta} \ \sigma \pi \sigma \sigma \delta \hat{\eta}$ ] in your haste be not idle. In your busi-ness be not lazy. Observe the order of the words, and the word σπουδή, from σπεύδω, to hasten, Engl. speed.

There is a happy paradox, or oxymoron (a favourite figure of speech with the Apostle), see the note on 1 Thess. iv. 11, and see on 2 Thess. iii. 11. We may compare Horace's "Strenua nos exercet inertia, navibus atque Quadrigis petimus benè vivere" (1 Epist. xi. 28); and the lines of Phædrus (ii. 5), describing a class of persons at Rome living in busy sloth and bustling indolence, "Est ardelionum quædam Romæ natio, Trepidè concursans, occupata in otio; Gratis anhelans, multa agendo nihil agens."

There may be, and often is, much idleness in our work; much unprofitable vanity in our restless hurrying to and fro. There may be laziness in haste. Mary was more busy in her quietness than Martha in her bustle. Therefore the Apostle says τῆ σπουδῆ μὴ ὀκνηροί, be not "in strenuitate inertes," "nihil agentes operositate," et "operosi nihil agendo." Let all your haste bring you nearer and nearer to the goal of eternal life.

 τῷ Κυρίφ δουλεύοντες] serving the Lord. Some Authorities have here τῷ καιρῷ δουλεύοντες, serving the season.
 And it may seem probable, that if St. Paul had written such a plain precept as τῷ Κυρίφ δουλεύοντες (serving the Lord), which he inculcates elsewhere, Acts xx. 19. Rom. xiv. 18; xvi. 18. Eph. vi. 7. Col. iii. 24; and which, it is true, has high MSS. authority in its favour here (A, B, D***, E, I), and is received by Elz., Lachmann, Tischendorf, and others, and is therefore not to be lightly disturbed, the Copyists would hardly have substituted what at first sight is much less intelligible, viz. τῷ καιρῷ δου-λεύοντες (serving the season), and which yet is found in D*, F. G. F has καιρφ, and in its Latin Version it has both 'tempore' and 'Dno' (viz. 'Domino'). G has καιρφ and 'tempore'; and this reading is as old as S. Jerome's days (see Jerome ad Marcell. cp. 27), and even as Cyprian's, and is preferred by Luther, Erasmus, Colinæus, Mill, Semler, Griesbach, Olshausen, Meyer, and Fritz., whose note here deserves attention: "Lectio difficilior eligenda." Besides, this verse seems intentionally designed to be a string of Christian paradoxes. "Be not slothful in your haste," "Be fervent in spirit." "Know the season." (see xiii. 11). "Serve the present season." "Redeem the season," εξαγοράζεσθε τον καιρόν. See Eph. v. 16. 1 Cor. vii. 29. νῦν καιρός εὐπρόσ-δεκτος, 2 Cor. vi. 2, "be 'downright time-servers' in the evan-gelical sense (to use Bp. Sanderson's words, i. 315); as I am in the same sense a 'man-pleaser,' and have made myself the servant of all, and am all things to all men:" (1 Cor. ix. 19. 22.) So take Occasion by the forelock, and be ye slaves of Opportunity. St. Paul seems to have had his eye on the ancient proverbs, "Carpe diem," καιρὸν γνῶθι, καιρῷ λατρεύειν (Phocyl. fr. 112; cp. Wetstein), and to have intended to Christianize them. This "exquisitior sensus" is also in harmony with what follows. Cp. xiii. 11—13.

L L 2

Luke 18, 1, Eph. 6, 18. n 1 Ccr. 16, 1. Heb. 13, 2, 16, 1 Pet. 4, 9. o Matt. 5. 41. o Matt. 5. 44. Luke 6. 28 1 Cor. 4. 12. 1 Pet. 3. 9. p Ecclus. 7. 34. q 1 Cor. 1. 10. Phil. 2. 2. 1 Pet. 3. S. Ps. 131. 1. Prov. 3. 7. Ps. 151. 1. Prov. 3. 7. Isa. 5. 21. ch. 11. 25. r Prov. 20. 22. Matt. 5. 39. 1 Thess. 5, 15. 1 Pet. 3, 9,

2 Cor. 8, 21, 8 Mark 9, 50

 $12 \text{ m} T \hat{\eta}$  έλπίδι χαίροντες,  $\tau \hat{\eta}$  θλίψει ὑπομένοντες,  $\tau \hat{\eta}$  προσευχ $\hat{\eta}$  προσκαρτεροθυτες, 13 η ταις χρείαις των άγίων κοινωνοθυτες, την φιλοξενίαν διώκοντες.

14 ° Εὐλογεῖτε τοὺς διώκοντας ὑμᾶς, εὐλογεῖτε, καὶ μὴ καταρᾶσ $\theta$ ε.

15 γ Χαίρειν μετὰ χαιρόντων, κλαίειν μετὰ κλαιόντων.

16 το αυτό είς αλλήλους φρονούντες, μη τὰ ύψηλὰ φρονούντες, αλλά τοίς ταπεινοίς συναπαγόμενοι, μη γίνεσθε φρόνιμοι παρ' έαυτοίς· 17 τ μηδενὶ κακὸν αντὶ κακοῦ ἀποδιδόντες, προνοούμενοι καλὰ ἐνώπιον πάντων ἀνθρώπων. 18 · εἰ δυνατόν, τὸ ἐξ ὑμῶν, μετὰ πάντων ἀνθρώπων εἰρηνεύοντες. 19 t μὴ ἑαυτοὺς ἐκδικουντες, αγαπητοί, αλλά δότε τόπον τη όργη, γέγραπται γάρ, Έμοὶ ἐκδίκησις, έγω άνταποδώσω, λέγει Κύριος. 20 " έαν οὖν πεινά ὁ ἐχθρός σου, ψώμιζε αὐτόν, ἐὰν διψᾶ, πότιζε αὐτόν τοῦτο γὰρ ποιῶν ἄνθρακας πυρὸς σωρεύσεις ἐπὶ την κεφαλην αὐτοῦ.

Reput R. 19. 1. Heb 12. 14. t Lev. 19. 18. Deut. 32. 35. Ecclus. 28. 1. Matt. 5. 39. Luke 6. 29. Heb. 10. 30. & 26. 21. Prov. 25. 21. Matt. 5. 44. u Exod. 23, 4, 5, 1 Sam. 24, 16-19.

However, as the preponderance of authority is in favour of  $K\nu\rho l\omega$ , it is not removed from the text.

12. τη θλίψει ὑπομένοντες] exercising ὑπομονὴν, patient endurance, in affliction. See above, v. 3, 4.

13.  $\tau a \hat{s} x p \epsilon la s \tau \hat{\omega} v \hat{\alpha} \gamma (\omega v)$  to the necessities of the saints, which might well be in St. Paul's mind now that he had been collecting alms for the poor saints at Jerusalem. See xv. 25.

κοινωνουντες] communicating, contributing; μεταδιδόντες (Theod.). See above on Gal. vi. 6, and 2 Cor. viii. 4; ix. 13, and below, xv. 26, and Philem. 6. The word is here used actively. Cp. Eur. Med. 811. Fritz.
 13, 14. διώκοντες – διώκοντας] A happy play upon the words.

Cp. v. 3, ὑπερφρονεῖν-φρονεῖν-σωφρονεῖν.

It would seem as if the Apostle's mind, strained by the pressure of the argument with which it had been labouring, now gracefully and playfully relaxes itself into Christian cheerfulness. In his conciliatory courtesy he would show his readers, that what he had said severely concerning them in the former parts of his Epistle had been spoken in love. So he now says, in a tone of lively affection, Even we Christians, whom the world persecutes, ought to be persecutors; we ought to follow with our blessings and our prayers those who pursue us with rancour and disdain.

16. τοις ταπεινοίς συναπαγόμενοι] drawn away from high aspirations, by Christian condescension to, and sympathy with, those of mean condition and low estate. The word συναπαγόthose of mean condition and low estate. The word συναπαγό-μενοι means drawn away together with others (see Gal. ii. 13. 2 Pet. iii. 17); and here the others with whom they are to be drawn away are the lowly, of ταπεινοί. The word ταπεινοίs is here rendered by some learned Interpreters 'things that are lowly; but in the New Testament the word ταπεινδε is always applied to persons. See Matt. xi. 29. Luke i. 52. 2 Cor. vii. 6; x. 1. James i. 10; iv. 6. 1 Pet. v. 6. And so the Vulg., Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic Versions. Here is the Christian paradox. Let others be attracted and drawn away by men of worldly wealth, power, and eloquence; but be you carried away by the poor and

17. προνοούμενοι] providing. See 1 Thess. v. 22. Cp. Prov. iii. 4, LXX. See above, 2 Cor. viii. 21.

19. δότε τόπον] give place unto wrath. The meaning of this passage is questionable. It may have several meanings. It may signify. Do not aggravate your enemy's wrath by resistance, or by rendering evil for evil; but by gentleness give it room to spend itself, as a mariner does in a storm. See v. 20, which explains the precept. So in Virgit (An. iv. 433) Dido asks for room for her own rage to spend itself:

"Tempus inane peto, requiem spatiumque furori."

In a recent valuable contribution to the resources of the English reader in the study of this Epistle, this passage is rendered, "Give place unto the wrath of God." And there is high authority for this rendering;

But, perhaps, the former interpretation is preferable, and is confirmed by St. Paul's use of δίδοτε τόπον (Eph. iv. 27), and St. Luke's (xiv. 9).

Besides, it could hardly be prescribed as a Christian dutyto make room for the divine anger to work against an enemy. The endeavour of a Christian would rather be, to avert the divine wrath from him, and not to expose him to it.

Give place and room to your enemy's anger to spend itself and pass by, "pertranseundi et evanescendi locum," Origen: and see the ancient author in Catena, p. 455, who compares here our Lord's precepts, " Resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also (Matt. v. 39); and when they shall persecute you in one city flee to another (x. 23).

Overcome the wrath of your enemy by letting it spend itself upon you. Primasius; and so Gregor. Mag. in Evangel. xviii.

And so these words were understood by the Clergy of Egypt writing to the Emperor Leo, in Evagrii H. E. ii. 8. Fritz.

It has indeed been said, that the Apostle must mean, "Give room for the anger of God to work," because he says, Avenge not yourselves, and adds, For it is written, Vengeance is Mine, saith the Lord.

But this argument is not convincing. For those considerations are very cogent, as reasons for letting an enemy's anger pass, and for not encountering it by revenge, which is an invasion of the prerogative of God.

This passage suggests an important consideration with regard to Revisions of an Authorized Version of Scripture.

Our own Version has here, "Give place unto wrath."

This translation is a judicious one, not only in what it does say, but also in what it does not say.

One of the excellencies of a Translation, especially of an Authorized one, is not to say too much.

Our Translators knew that this passage admitted of a variety of exposition, and that it had been variously interpreted in ancient times by Expositors of high repute.

But they knew also, that it is not the office of Translators, especially of Translators who are framing a Version for public use in the Church, to take (in such a doubtful case as this) any one exposition, and to enforce that exposition on all, as the only sense of the passage.

They felt that it was their duty rather to practise a modest reserve, and to observe a discreet silence, and to leave it an open question for men's private inquiry and meditation; and thereby to suggest this important practical lesson, that for the profitable study of Holy Scripture, one of the most essential pre-requisites is Humility; and that there are many things in the Word of God on which it ill becomes any one to dogmatize; that there are passages in Holy Scripture which admit of various interpretations, all of them profitable, and none of them to be refused; and that to affix our own particular meaning to such passages. as the only sense they will bear, and to require a Church to receive it as such, is to restrain the plenitude of Scripture, and to enforce on men's consciences our word as the Word of God; and that such places of Scripture are designed for the exercise of that Faith which looks forward to the time when all doubts will be cleared away, and we shall no more see through a glass darkly, but shall see face to face, and shall know even as we are known-(1 Cor. xiii. 12.)

"I ever held it a kind of honest spiritual thrift" (says a wise Bishop of our Church) "where there are two senses given of one place (of Scripture), both agreeable to the analogy of faith (Rom. xii. 6) and manners; ... to make use of both. And so will we." Bp. Sanderson (ii. 49).

A good rule for Expositors, and still better for Translators, who would do well, in such cases, to exclude neither of the two senses by an imposition of the other.

20. άνθρακας πυρός] coals of fire. From Prov. xxv. 21.

The Holy Spirit by the hand of St. Paul, has indited here a chapter of Christian Proverbs. And he connects them with those of Solomon by adopting this Proverb from the Book of Proverbs. and so blends them together.

 $^{21}$   $^{\text{V}}$  Μὴ νικῶ ὑπὸ τοῦ κακοῦ, ἀλλὰ νίκα ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ τὸ κακόν.

21 ° Μὴ νικῶ ὑπὸ τοῦ κακοῦ, ἀλλὰ νίκα ἐν τῷ ἀγαθῷ τὸ κακόν.
 XIII. ¹ ª Πᾶσα ψυχὴ ἐξουσίαις ὑπερεχούσαις ὑποτασσέσθω οὐ γὰρ ἔστιν ¹ Pet. 3. 9. a Tht. 3. 1. èξουσία, εἰ μὴ ἀπὸ Θεοῦ αἱ δὲ οὖσαι ὑπὸ Θεοῦ τεταγμέναι εἰσίν.
 2 b Ωστε ὁ ¹ Pet. 2. 1. Pet. 3. 9. a Tht. 3. 1. 1 Pet. 2. 1. Prov. 8. 15. 16. Dan. 4. 32. Wisd. 6. 3.

But what are those coals of fire? To heap coals of fire on a man's head may seem at first a strange expression.

The Jews heaped ashes on their heads (2 Sam. xiii. 19) in mourning.

The Proverb does not teach to heap ashes, the sign of mourning, on our enemy's head, but live coals; that is, by conferring benefits upon him, to kindle, as it were, on his head a fire of burning shame and remorse and of love. Such coals of fire were heaped on Saul's head by David (see I Sam. xxvi. 7—21). And they burnt brightly for a time (v. 25), but were unhappily quenched at last. Such coals of fire the Son of David endeavoured to kindle on the head of Judas (John xiii. 26. Matt. xxvi. 50), but they were smothered by covetousness, and went out in smoke. Cp. Origen here, and Aug. in Ps. 79, and de Doct. Christ. vol. iii. p. 92, where the other interpretation—which attributes a desire of injury to the person obeying this proverb-is called "malitiosa," and Serm. 149, "Cum quisque benefecerit inimico, et non victus malo vicerit in bono malum, plerumque illum inimicitiarum suarum pænitebit, et irascetur sibi. ustio pœnitentia est, quæ, tanquam carbones ignis, inimicitias ejus consumit."

21. Μή νικώ-κακόν Be not thou overcome by the evil of others, but overcome their evil with thy good.

He who harbours malice against an enemy on account of the injuries he has received from him, is overcome by his evil; but he who turns injuries into occasions for prayer, overcomes evil with good. See Chrys. Injuries are the leaves and flowers, of which the heavenly crown of glory is to be woven.

CH. XIII. 1. Πᾶσα ψυχή] Every soul, ψυχή = τίτς (nephesh) (Acts ii. 41. 43; vii. 14; above, ii. 9. Vorst. Hebr. p. 117). Every one, spiritual and temporal, clerical and lay. Chrysostom.

Bp. Bilson on Christian Subjection, pp. 174-177.

Let every one submit to Authorities that are over him.

A precept made more remarkable by the time in which, and the persons to whom, it was written. Few of the Roman Emperors died a natural death, and the Jews seem to have taken a leading part in the public tumults. Sueton, Claud. 25. Acts viii. 2. And this tumultuous spirit of resistance and rebellion against the Heathen Power of Rome, as an outrage against their Theocracy, and a profane usurpation of the prerogatives of God, was eminently manifest at this time; and it led, in a few years after this Epistle was written, to the siege and destruction of Jerusalem.

The strong language, therefore, of the Apostle in this Epistle, specially designed for Jewish readers at Rome, on the duty of obedience and loyalty to Civil Rulers, is a proof of St. Paul's moral courage, and of his confidence in his own mission. Cp.

below on Titus i. 12.

How different would have been the history of the Roman Empire, if the Emperors, and Magistrates, and Citizens of that Empire had listened to the doctrine of the Apostles-whom they

'Εξουσία is Authority, distinguished from δύναμις, power, or force, which may exist where there is no authority, and even in opposition to it. Therefore (as Bp. Sanderson remarks, Prælect. v. 11) St. Paul mentions έξουσία, or lawful authority, four times in three verses here, but says not a word of δύναμις, or physical force. Compare note above on 1 Cor. xi. 10, a text which affords an excellent illustration of the present passage.

έξουσίαις ύπερεχούσαις] to Authorities above him, those which are set over him, whatever they are. In a Monarchy, the King is δ ὑπερέχων (1 Pet. ii. 13). St. Paul's rule is general, and applies to all forms of Government. Cp. Bp. Sanderson on Conscience, Lect. vii. §§ 6, 7.

Every man is bound to take care to discern, and acknowledge, the Authority which is set over him (ὑπερέχουσα), and to pay to it the honour which is its due, and not to deprive it of its rightful honour, by paying allegiance and subjection to some other Authority, which is not set over him. Here is warning to those who rob Rulers of their honour, by transferring it to the Bishop of Rome, who claims to be  $\delta$   $\dot{\nu}\pi\epsilon\rho\dot{\epsilon}\chi\omega\nu$ ,—over every person, every where, and in every thing. See on 2 Thess. ii. 4.

-  $\dot{\nu}\pi\sigma\tau\alpha\sigma\sigma\dot{\epsilon}\sigma\theta\omega$ ] let it submit itself. Be thou subject to—

Ile does not say, that every one must always obey, but that he must submit. "Semper necesse est subjici (ἀνάγκη ὑποτάσσεσθαί), non semper necesse est obedire," says Bp. Sanderson (Prælect. vi. 3). See further on v. 5.

Obedience is active. And if any earthly Authority commands any thing that is contrary to the will of God, the Apostles have taught us to say, "We ought to obey God rather than man," and "Whether it be right in the sight of God, to hearken unto you rather than unto God, judge ye" (Acts v. 29; iv. 19). And St. Paul and St. Peter suffered death at Nero's hands, rather than burn incense to Jupiter at Nero's command.

If the Emperor command one thing, and God command an other, what is to be done? In such a case you must not fear the one. And why? Because you fear the Other. Who is it that here forbids your obedience? A higher Authority. Therefore in such a case you will say to the Emperor, Excuse me; you threaten me with a prison for disobedience, but He threatens me with Hell. Augustine (Serm. 68).

Sometimes the Powers that be, are good, and serve God, sometimes they fear Him not. Julian was an unbelieving Emperor, an apostate and idolater. Yet Christian soldiers served obedience to Christ, they acknowledged Him alone Who is King of Kings. When, for instance, the Emperor commanded to worship idols, or to offer incense, they obeyed God rather than man. But when the Emperor said, Draw out the line of battle, March against this or that nation, they obeyed. They distinguished the King Eternal from the King temporal, and obeyed the King temporal for the sake of the King Eternal. Augustine (in Ps. 124).

But still the precept is general, to submit, and not to rebel (v. 2), not to take up arms against the Authority set over us.
We see no countenance given by the Apostles, or by any of the ancient Christians, to insurrection against Rulers—even though they were Neros or Julians. "Vincit qui patitur." Prayers and Tears were the arms of the Church.

St. Paul teaches-

(1) To obey God always.
(2) To obey the Higher Powers, as His Ministers, in all things agreeable to His Will, and for His sake.

(3) To submit to them in all cases, - and not to rebel against the Higher Powers in any case. See below on v. 5.

- ου γάρ ἔστιν έξουσ(α, εί μη ἀπο Θεου] for no Authority exists, except from God. Observe ἔστιν emphatic, perhaps with some reference to the etymology of the word 'Eξουσία, which deserves careful attention. See above on 1 Cor. xi. 10. No Authority exists but from God. All lawful Authority, such as that of Kings, Parents, Husbands, is an emanation, or effluence, from one only fountain and well-spring, the Godhead of Him Who is δ °Ων, the Self-Existent, Everlasting, and Almighty Jehovah.

Why then does St. Peter speak of Authority as an Ordinance of Man? (1 Pet. ii. 13.)

Because the People may have much influence in designating the person, or persons, by whom Power is to be exercised; therefore St. Peter calls the Magistrate a  $\kappa\tau l\sigma is$  àνθρωπίνη, or creation of man. But the People, which is sometimes the medium of conveying Power to a particular person, as in a popular election of a civil Magistrate, or King, is not the source of the Power so conveyed, any more than a pipe, through which a stream flows, is the origin of the water which flows through it. And therefore when St. Peter has said, Submit yourself to the human magistrate, he adds the reason for submission—namely, "for the Lord's sake," from Whom alone all Authority comes.

The substance of the power of every magistrate is the ordinance of God; but the specification of the circumstances thereto belonging, in regard of place, person, title, &c., is, as St. Peter terms it, a human ordinance, introduced by custom or positive See Bp. Sanderson (ii. 198), and Bp. Andrewes, Private Devotions, p. 48, ed. 1830, and Hooker, viii. 11. 6.

The People are often God's instruments in conveying Authority  $(\partial \xi o v \sigma(a))$ , and in designating the persons by whom it is to be exercised. But as they are not the source of Power, so it does not follow, that because they can convey power, or designate the Person who is to use it, they therefore are able to revoke (as is erroneously imagined by some) what they have been the means of conveying. The People elect Members of the Legislature, but the Members of the Legislature do not derive their power from, but through, those who elect them; and they, who have elected them, cannot revoke what has not been given from, but through, themselves, and comes from the Constitution of the Realm, or rather, as St. Paul teaches, from the one only Source of all Power, namely, from Almighty God.

And all who hold power, however it may be derived to them, are bound to use their power as Ministers of Him from Whom c ver. 5. Matt. 23. 14. Mark 12. 40. Luke 20. 47. James 3, 1, d Deut. 25, 1. Prov. 14. 35. & 20. 2. Eccl. 10. 4—6. Eecl. 10. 4−6.
Jer. 22. 15−18.
Jer. 22. 13, 14.
& 3. 13, 14.
e Wisd. 6. 4.
l Kings 10. 9.
2 Chron. 19. 6.
Ps. 82. 2−4.
Prov. 21. 23, 24.
& 31. 8, 9.
Eccles, 8. 2−5.

Isa. 1. 17.

αντιτασσόμενος τη έξουσία τη του Θεού διαταγή ανθέστηκεν, ' οι δε ανθεστηκότες έαυτοις κρίμα λήψονται.

3 ο Ο γαρ ἄρχοντες οὐκ εἰσὶ φόβος τῷ ἀγαθῷ ἔργῳ, ἀλλὰ τῷ κακῷ. Θέλεις δὲ μὴ φοβεῖσθαι τὴν ἐξουσίαν; τὸ ἀγαθὸν ποίει, καὶ ἔξεις ἔπαινον ἐξ αὐτῆς. 4 " Θεοῦ γὰρ διάκονός ἐστι σοὶ εἰς τὸ ἀγαθόν ἐὰν δὲ τὸ κακὸν ποιῆς, φοβοῦ οὐ γαρ εἰκῆ τὴν μάχαιραν φορεί Θεοῦ γαρ διάκονός ἐστιν, ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργὴν τῷ τὸ κακὸν πράσσοντι. 5 Διὸ ἀνάγκη ὑποτάσσεσθαι, οὐ μόνον διὰ τὴν ὀργὴν, άλλα και δια την συνείδησιν.

alone they derive their power, and to Whom they will have to render a strict account, how they have used it, at the Great Day.

This is necessary to be remembered, inasmuch as it has been argued by some, that because men may be instrumental in bestowing even regal power, they may therefore revoke that power at will, and dethrone a Monarch chosen by themselves.

But the truth is, that where a King is elected by the People, they only designate the Person who is to govern; but he derives the Authority, by which he governs, from God alone. Cp. Bp.

Sanderson (Prælect. viii.)

In saving that all Authority is from God, as its only source, we must be on our guard against supposing that God can be the cause of any of its abuses. Nero's Authority, as far as it was exercised not unlawfully, was from God: But all his abuses of it were from himself.

Yet, God uses well all human abuses. He often allows evil Kings to arise, in order to punish guilty nations (see Jerome in Dan. xi.). He uses evil governors to chastise evil subjects. He punishes the sins of the Shechems of this world by the tyranny of the Abimelechs (Judges ix. 20). He punished the vices of Rome by those of her Emperors; He also uses evil men as instruments for the trial and triumph of the good. He made Nero's sword, wielded by Nero's rage, to be an instrument for sending Peter and Paul to heaven, and for watering His Church by the Martyrs' blood. See above on ix. 17.

After οὖσαι Elz. inserts ἐξουσίαι, not in the best MSS.

- ύπὸ Θεοῦ τεταγμέναι] 'Υπὸ means-

 Either by, as âπb, or Under, i. e. subordinate to, and not co-ordinate with, and therefore not entitled to obedience in any command contrary to God. For then they are not ὑπὸ Θεοῦ, but set themselves ἀντί Θεοῦ and ὑπερ Θεοῦ, against God, and above Him; and God is to be obeyed rather than man. (Acts v. 29.) And no man can serve two masters. (Matt. vi. 24.)

2. δ ἀντιτασσόμενος - λήψονται] He that setteth himself against the power which is set over him, and under subjection to which he should set himself, resisteth the ordinance set over him by God. Observe the paronomasia in the words ὑπο-τασσέσθω, άντι-τασσόμενος, δια-ταγή and ύπο τοῦ Θεοῦ τεταγμέναι.

But it may be asked, Can the Apostles be said to have observed this rule of subjection, when they preached in opposition to the command of the ¿ξουσία that they should not preach? (Acts v. 28, 29.)

And if this was justifiable in their case, may not subjects take arms against a Power commanding unjustly?

To this it may be replied, that the Apostles in so doing did indeed then disobey a particular command of an Earthly Governor, but they did not disobey the ¿ξουσία, to which they were subject in that behalf.

Nor was that Governor, who gave that command, subordinate to God in that respect, or acting as His Minister. Indeed, that command "not to preach" was directly opposed to the command of God. (Acts v. 20.)

But the Apostles did not set themselves up in opposition to the Authority, or attempt to subvert it by insurrection, or by inciting others to rebellion. They submitted to it even unto chains and unto death. (Acts v. 18; xii. 2, 3.)

3. Ol yap apxoures oun elol pobsos For Rulers are not a terror. He is speaking of what is commonly the case, and may fairly be expected to be the case. And even the worst ¿ξουσία or Authority is better than mere δύναμις or force.

But suppose the Power to be evil, and to command what is sinful. Is it not then a terror to good works? No. For he that does good, hears Christ saying, "Fear not them that kill the body" (Matt. x. 28); and he hears the Apostle's words, "Who will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?" (1 Pet. iii. 13.) St. Paul wrote this with Nero's power before his eyes; but that power was not a terror to him, because he was ayaθοεργών. See the next note but one.

- τῷ ἀγαθῷ-κακῷ] So A, B, D*, F, G. Elz. has τῶν-κακῶν.

— ἔξεις ἔπαινον ἐξ αὐτῆς] thou shalt have praise from it.

For the most part. And the Apostle, in his Christian charity "which thinketh no evil," does not love exceptions. He charity the state of the charity tably presumes Rulers to be, what, being God's ministers, they ought to be.

But even suppose a Nero, and a Nero persecuting the rch. vet even then you may have praise therefrom. You Church, yet even then you may have praise therefrom. You may overcome his evil by your good; you may be more than conqueror, you may derive glory from it. For though he is unjust, and condemns you, yet God is just, and will reward you. He will crown you for acting justly, and for suffering unjustly. Therefore hold fast your justice, and whether the Power acquits or condemns you, you will reap praise from it. If you die for the Faith from its hand, you will reap glory from its fury. Augustine (Serm. xiii. 302).

4. οὐ γὰρ εἰκῆ τὴν μάχαιραν φορεῖ κ.τ.λ.] for he doth not wear the sword in vain, i. e. is not endued with the jus gladii, or power of life and death, to no purpose, but in order to execute justice and judgment in the name of God.

Mάχαιρα is not here a dagger (as some understand it), but gladius, ξίφος. See Grotius and Fritz. The Roman power is symbolized in the Apocalypse with a μάχαιρα μεγάλη. (Rev. vi. 4.)

Here is a divine refutation of the theory which would derive the original of Government from the People by means of a social contract. The jus yladii, the right and power of the sword, which is the emblem of Sovereign Power, is by the ordinance of God, not by the donation of the People. For the Sovereign Power beareth the sword, St. Paul telleth us, as God's Minister, from Whom he received it, and not as the People's Minister, who had no right to give it, because they never had it. Bp. Sanderson, v. 210.

Here also is a refutation of the notions of those who would utterly abolish Capital Punishments; thus venturing to wrest God's sword from the hands of His Deputy and Vicegerent the Civil Magistrate; that sword which God Himself, who committed it to him, commanded him to bear, and not to bear it in vain. Cp. Gen. ix. 6: φορεῖ is more than φέρει, it means invested with it.
5. ἀνάγκη ὑποτάσσεσθαι] it is necessary to submit. See above on r. 1.

The teaching of St. Paul and St. Peter on Civil Obedience may thus be summed up.

(1) All Laws enacted by Powers, having legitimate Authority, bind always to ὑποταγή, subjection, so that a subject may not resist with force and arms the Higher Power, whether he command justly or unjustly.

This was the constant sense and practice of the Primitive Church, as appears from the explicit doctrine of St. Paul and St. Peter. See 1 Pet. ii. 18. Servants, be subject (ὑποτασσόμενοι, the same word as St. Paul uses here) to your masters with all fear, not only to the good and gentle, but even to the froward. And St. Paul (Rom. xiii.) inculcates the duty of subjection on all, and concedes not the liberty of rebellion on any pretext to any.

(2) The duty of submission is not satisfied, unless it be accompanied with obedience, wherever this can be rendered without

(3) But, wherever obedience cannot be rendered without sin, there the subject is not bound to obey; but he is bound not to obey. For there can be no obligation to sin. We are obliged not to do evil, by the law of God, Who is above all, and from Whom all Authority is derived. Cp. Bp. Sanderson (Præ-

Some writers in treating this subject, use the phrase Passive Obedience, and impute the doctrine of Passive Obedience to the Divines of the English Church.

But the words Passive Obedience imply a contradiction in terms. To be passive is not to act, but to be acted upon. But Obedience is essentially active.

The doctrine of the Church of England is, that we must obey

6 Διὰ τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ φόρους τελεῖτε λειτουργοὶ γὰρ Θεοῦ εἰσιν εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο προσκαρτεροῦντες.

7.1 Απόδοτε πασι τας οφειλάς, τω τον φόρον, τον φόρον, τω το τέλος, το ι Μαιι. 22. 21. τέλος, τῷ τὸν φόβον, τὸν φόβον, τῷ τὴν τιμὴν, τὴν τιμήν.

8 g Μηδενὶ μηδεν ὀφείλετε, εἰ μὴ τὸ ἀλλήλους ἀγαπῷν ὁ γὰρ ἀγαπῶν τὸν h Exod. 20. 14. έτερον νόμον πεπλήρωκε· 9 h τὸ γὰρ, Οὐ μοιχεύσεις, οὐ φονεύσεις, οὐ Matt. 19, 18, κλέψεις, οὐκ ἐπιθυμήσεις, καὶ εἴ τις ἐτέρα ἐντολὴ, ἐν τῷ λόγω τούτω Mark 10. 15. ἀνακεφαλαιοῦται, ἐν τῷ, ᾿Αγαπήσεις τὸν πλησίον σου ὡς ἑαυτόν. 10 i ε Η i Matt. 22. 40. άγάπη τῶ πλησίον κακὸν οὐκ ἐργάζεται πλήρωμα οὖν νόμου ἡ ἀγάπη.

 $^{11\ j}$  Καὶ τοῦτο, εἰδότες τὸν καιρὸν ὅτι ὤρα ἤδη ἡμᾶς ἐξ ὕπνου ἐγερθῆναι νῦν  $^{1\, \text{Im. 1.5.}}_{j\ 1\ \text{Cor. 15. 34.}}$  γὰρ ἐγγύτερον ἡμῶν ἡ σωτηρία, ἡ ὅτε ἐπιστεύσαμεν  $^{12\ k}$  ἡ νὺξ προέκοψεν, ἡ δὲ  $^{\text{Eph. 5. 14.}}_{k\ \text{Eph. 5. 11.}}$ ημέρα ήγγικεν ἀποθώμεθα οὖν τὰ ἔργα τοῦ σκότους, ἐνδυσώμεθα δὲ τὰ ὅπλα α 6.13, 14. τοῦ φωτός.  $^{13}$   $^{\circ}$  $\Omega$ ς ἐν ἡμέρα εὐσχημόνως περιπατήσωμεν, μὴ κώμοις καὶ  $^{\circ}$  $^{\circ}$  $^{\circ}$  $^{\circ}$  $^{\circ}$  $^{\circ}$  $^{\circ}$  $^{\circ}$  $^{\circ}$  $^{\circ}$ μέθαις, μὴ κοίταις καὶ ἀσελγείαις, μὴ ἔριδι καὶ ζήλ<math>ω 14 <sup>m</sup> ἀλλὰ ἐνδύσασθε τὸν  $\frac{Gal. 5. 2l.}{1 \text{ Thess. 4. 12.}}$ Κύριον Ίησοῦν Χριστὸν, καὶ τῆς σαρκὸς πρόνοιαν μὴ ποιεῖσθε εἰς ἐπιθυμίας.

XIV.  $^{1}$   $^{a}$   $^{a}$   $^{b}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^{c}$   $^{b}$   $^{c}$   $^$ διαλογισμών.

Rulers by one name, διάκονοι Θεοῦ, servants of God (v. 4), and now he calls them by another name, λειτουργοί, officers of and for the People (λήντον, λείτον); and thus he combines their twofold relation to God and men, and teaches that Civil Rulers are servants of God for the public good.

- els αὐτό τοῦτο προσκαρτεροῦντες] attending continually to this very thing; that is, on service to God and the public weal, and therefore entitled to reverence and support. Here is the true principle of Taxation. The Apostle teaches, that Taxes are paid by subjects to Rulers as Ministers of God, and that consequently frauds on the Revenue (such as smuggling, &c.) are sins against God, and that the promotion of God's glory, honour, and service, and the welfare of His people, is their proper end.

7. 'Aπόδοτε] Elz. adds οδν, not in A, B, D*, and cancelled by Lachm., Tisch., Fritz., Alf.

8. εἰ μὴ τὸ ἀ. ἀγαπậν] except to love one another. This verse is to be understood from the preceding. Render to all their dues; Pay all your debts, owe no man any thing, save one, namely, Love. Love is a debt ever to be paid, and yet ever due. For when Faith will be absorbed in sight, and Hope in fruition, yet Love will remain (1 Cor. xiii. 13), a debt to be paid in Eternity, and yet due for Eternity. "Semper debeo charitatem, quæ sola etiam reddita retinet debitorem." Augustine, Ep. 62, ap. A Lapide.

- τὸν ἔτερον] his neighbour. See ii. 1. 9. οὐ κλέψεις] Elz. adds οὐ ψευδομαρτυρήσεις, not in best MSS. 11. Kal τοῦτο] And this too —. An additional consideration is thus introduced. See I Cor. vi. 6. 8.

- ότε ἐπιστεύσαμεν] when we believed, i. e. when we first embraced Christianity, and made public profession of faith, and became members of the Church of Christ by our Baptism. See above, on Acts viii. 13.

CH. XIV. 1. Τον δε ἀσθενοῦντα τῆ πίστει προσλαμβάνεσθε] But him that is weak in faith, receive ye. He had just said (xiii. 14), Do not make provision for the flesh. He now applies this precept to a particular case. Do not indulge in gratification of your appetite, by eating of meats, irrespectively of all charitable But (δè) receive him who is weak in faith.

Observe the interesting and instructive connexion of this topic with the main subject of the Epistle.

St. Paul had shown to the Jews that their notions of personal merit in themselves, on account of which they imagined themselves to have been adopted by God as His elect People, as distinct from all other Nations, were vain and illusory, and that they had no ground for hope of acceptance with Him in their own fancied obedience to the Levitical Law, and that the only foundations of Justification are in God's Love, and in the meritorious Death of Christ, the benefits of which are freely offered in the Gospel to all Nations on equal terms.

He would not admit any compromise of these fundamental articles of Faith, although he well knew that they would be mortifying to their national pride.

But having stated these truths, he now proceeds to show man for the sake of God; but we may not disobey God for the sake of man. And whenever man commands us to do any thing that God forbids, or forbids us to do any thing that God com-mands, we cannot and must not obey; for, in such cases as these, in obeying man we should be disobeying God.

The examples of holy men represent to us our duty here. The King of Babylon commanded the Three Children to fall down and worship the golden image; but they chose rather to be cast into the fiery furnace, than worship any but God. (Dan. iii. 16-18.) Darius forbad all men to pray to any one but to himself, for a certain time; but Daniel preferred to be cast to the den of lions rather than to forego his prayers to God for a single day.

(Dan. vi. 16.)

The Sadducees forbad Peter and the Apostles to preach Christ; but they answered, "We ought to obey God rather than men." (Acts iv. 19; v. 29.) The Roman Emperor commanded St. Peter and St. Paul to worship heathen deities; but they chose martyrdom,-the one by the cross, the other by the sword,-rather than obey Nero in that command.

God in Holy Scripture never allows subjects to rise in rebellion, and to take up arms, against their Rulers; but He censures and condemns such acts of insurrection in stern and solemn language, as here (v. 2). And holy men, under the Law and the Gospel, cheerfully suffered death, rather than obey any commands of the Rulers of this world, when opposed to the Will of God; but they never imagined themselves to be authorized to rise in rebellion against Rulers,—even against a Tiberius or a Nero,—or permitted others to do so; but they committed their cause with humble prayer and earnest supplication to the supreme sentence and final judicature of the King of Kings.

 ου μόνον διὰ τὴν ὀργὴν, ἀλλὰ καὶ διὰ τὴν συνείδησιν] not only because of the wrath (v. 4), but also for your conscience sake.
 Submit, not only from a principle of fear, which may act when the sin of resistance cannot be committed with impunity, and when that sin will be chastised by the wrath of the Power resisted; and will not act when there is no prospect of such punishment. But submit also from a reverence to your own Conscience, which tells you that rebellion against lawful Authority is a sin against God, Whose Minister it is, and warns you that He is cognizant of it, and will punish it hereafter at the Great Day;

"Si genus humanum et mortalia temnitis arma, At sperate Deos memores fandi atque nefandi." Virgil (Æn. i. 543).

On the other hand, Loyalty and Obedience to Lawful Authority are confirmed and sanctified by the fact that they are duties rendered to God, Who is the source of all Authority, and Whose Deputy and Vicegerent it is. (Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 13.) When you serve man because God commands you to do so, you serve not man, but God. Augustine.

It is not the Civil Magistrate who obliges the Conscience to obey the Law which he enacts, but it is God Who obliges the Conscience to obey the Civil Magistrate. Bp. Sanderson (iv.

6. λειτουργοί] officers of the People. He had just called Civil

<sup>2 δο</sup>Ος μεν πιστεύει φαγείν πάντα, ὁ δε ἀσθενῶν λάχανα ἐσθίει. <sup>3 °</sup> Ο ἐσθίων h ver. 14. Tit. 1, 15. c Col. 2, 16, 17. τὸν μὴ ἐσθίοντα μὴ ἐξουθενείτω, καὶ ὁ μὴ ἐσθίων τὸν ἐσθίοντα μὴ κρινέτω, ὁ Arts 10. 31 Θεὸς γὰρ αὐτὸν προσελάβετο.

4 d Σὺ τίς εἶ ὁ κρίνων ἀλλότριον οἰκέτην; τῷ ἰδίῳ κυρίῳ στήκει, ἢ πίπτει σταθήσεται δέ δυνατεί γάρ 5 Θεός στήσαι αὐτόν.

e Gal. 4. 9, 10. 5 e Oς μεν κρίνει ἡμέραν παρ' ἡμέραν, ος δε κρίνει πασαν ἡμέραν. Εκαστος Col. 2, 16, 17 έν τω ίδιω νοί πληροφορείσθω.

f 1 Cor. 10, 30, 31, 1 Tim. 4, 3-5. 6 ' Ο φρονών την ημέραν Κυρίω φρονεί καὶ ὁ μη φρονών την ημέραν Κυρίω that he feels a tender regard for the scruples of the Jewish Christians.

He is ready to make personal sacrifices for their sake in all indifferent things. He condescended to their weaknesses in complying, under certain circumstances, with the ceremonial provisions of the Levitical Law. See Acts xvi. 3; xviii. 18; xxi. 26, and what he had said above, 1 Cor. ix. 19, 20; x. 24. 33.

Thus by his charitable allowance for them in such respects, he proved more clearly, that his unflinching, uncompromising declaration of the great doctrine of Justification by Faith in Christ alone, is grounded on a firm persuasion of its indispensable necessity to everlasting salvation.

In the present Chapter the convert to Christianity from Judaism, who for conscience sake still made a difference of meats and days, as distinguished by the Levitical Law, is called ἀσθενῶν τῷ πίστει (v. 1), weakly in his faith or persuasion. (See on v. 3 and v. 23.) The present participle ἀσθενῶν marks his present condition of infirmity, which may be succeeded by another state of stronger spiritual health, and of sounder persuasion, viz. that all Levitical distinctions are effaced by the Gospel.

By calling such a person ἀσθενοῦντα τ. π., weakly in his persuasion, St. Paul declares his own judgment that the Levitical difference of meats and days has now been abrogated (see above, Gal. iv. 10, and below, Col. ii. 16); and he therefore describes him, who made no such distinction, as strong. (xv. 1.)

But it is to be remembered, that, while the Church of Christ refused to enforce conformity to the Levitical Law, she did not as yet enforce non-conformity to it.

The Law which she did enforce, and always enforces on all her children, is the Law of Love.

On this text, see the Sermon of Bp. Sanderson (ii. 1-39), where he exposes the error of those who argue therefrom that every one ought to be left free to comply or not, as he thinks best, with the Rites and Ceremonies of the Church; and shows that such observances as are appointed and prescribed by Lawful Authority, are not to be confounded with the ordinances of which St. Paul speaks, which were now obsolete; and are not to be placed in the same category with the meats and days here mentioned, which had now become indifferent, and might be used or forborne according to the private conscience of each individual. See also

- προσλαμβάνεσθε] Do not reject him coldly and proudly, but receive him to yourselves (middle voice) tenderly and charitably as a brother. Receive him, for God Himself has received him (v. 3, and see xv. 7).

μη είς διακρίσεις διαλογισμῶν] but not to dijudications of diverse thoughts. The sense of this passage is much controverted.

The word διάκρισις, as used in the N. T. and other writings, signifies the discrimination between two different things, or the signifies the discrimination between two different things, of the pronunciation of judicial sentence between two contending parties. See Heb. v. 14. Xenophon, Cyrop. v. 2. 27. Fritz. p. 159.

Διαλογισμοί are divers cogitations (Matt. xv. 19. Mark vii. 21. Luke ii. 36; v. 22; vi. 8; ix. 47; xxiv. 38), generally involving some idea of altereation and dispute, marked by the preposition &d. See Luke ix. 46; above, i. 21, and 1 Cor. iii. 20; and below, Phil. ii. 14. 1 Tim. ii. 8. James ii. 4.

Remark also that St. Paul does not say διάκρισιν, but διακρίσειs, in the plural number. He supposes more than one judgment of conflicting thoughts or disputings.

The sense then, as illustrated by the context, appears to be

One man thinks one day better than another (v. 6); another man thinks all days alike. One man thinks that some meats are unclean; another thinks that he may partake indiscriminately of all. Each is ready to engage in a dispute on behalf of his own thoughts.

What then is your duty?

You, who are strong in faith, and who know and are fully persuaded in your own mind, that all such distinctions of days und meats are now abrogated in the Gospel, have a duty of charity to perform to him who is now weakly in faith. Receive him tenderly, but do not receive him to dijudications of differing thoughts, and disputes.

That is, do not receive him so that he may be encouraged to enter into a controversial discussion with you on the question of ceremonial observance of Days and Meats, and to engage in polemical litigation; but receive him on such terms, that there may be no pronunciations of judicial sentences, either on his side or on yours. Receive him kindly, but so that there may be no dijudications of differing thoughts and disputes; no determinations (on this side or on that) whether he is right in thinking one day better and one kind of meat more clean than another, or that you are right in thinking that all days and all meats are alike.

Let there be no censorious judgments on either side; but let each party be fully persuaded in his own mind, and act accordingly; and let him respect the persuasions of others, as he desires that his own persuasions may be respected by them.

Some learned Expositors and Translators suppose that διακρίσεις signifies merely judgment pronounced by the strong in faith; but then the plural number would not have been used, and such a limitation is also inconsistent with the precept to receive him; which is qualified, but not contradicted, by what

Receive him kindly, but not in such a way that he may be admitted to become a litigant with you, and you with him, on your respective opinions and practices.

2. πόντα-λάχανα] One man is persuaded that he may eat any thing; but he that is weak eateth herbs. Here are the two extremes. One is persuaded (πιστεύει) that he may without offence eat any thing, because all creatures are from God, and are all good, and therefore none to be refused. (1 Cor. x. 26. 1 Tim.

iv. 3, 4.)
The other limits himself to herbs,—lest, by eating flesh, he should unwittingly eat something interdicted by the Levitical Law, which made a distinction between meats, but not between herbs.

3. καὶ δ] A, B (see Mai's table of errata, p. 503), C, D* have δ δè, and so Lachm., Tisch., Alf.
 4. δυνατεῖ] So A, B, C, D*, F, G. Cp. 2 Cor. ix. 8; xiii. 3.

5. κρίνει] judgeth,—decideth in favour of one day in comparison with another. Cp. Æschylus, Ag. 458. Soph. Phil. 57.

 $-\pi \lambda \eta \rho \rho \phi \rho \rho \epsilon (\sigma \theta \omega)$  let him be fully persuaded and carried on by conviction; and let him sail on quietly, as it were, with a fair wind of persuasion filling the sails of his own mind. On this sense of πληροφορία see above, Luke i. 1. Rom. iv. 21. 1 Thess. i. 5; below, Col. ii. 2, and Heb. x. 22, πληροφορία πίστεως, a prosperous gale of faith, carrying him before the breeze. On this precept see on 1 Cor. x. 15.

St. Paul teaches here the important truths,

(1) That every man is bound to obey his Conscience. (2) But that every man is also bound to take care that his (2) But that every man is also bother to take that this Conscience is rightly informed and regulated by God's Law.
 (3) There may be a πληροφορία,—a strong wind of persuasion, which will not waft a man to the harbour of Truth, but wreck him on the quicksands of error.

6. 'Ο φρονῶν τὴν ἡμέραν] He that esteemeth the day; e.g. the Jewish Sabbath, or the New Moon, or the great Day of Atonement. See above on Gal. iv. 10, and below, Col. ii. 16, where St. Paul condemns those who regard these observances as necessary to salvation, and who would enforce them on others as terms of Christian communion.

Here, they who observe them are called weakly in the faith: but they are not to be condemned for their observances, but tenderly dealt with, so long as they do not impose them, as necessary, on others.

On the peculiar condition of the Ceremonial Law at this juncture, as distinguished from earlier and later times, see above. note at the end of Galatians ii. p. 54.

- καὶ ὁ μὴ φρονῶν—οὐ φρονεί] Not in A, B*, C, D, E, F, G.

and cancelled by Lachm.

The omission probably arose from the recurrence of the

οὐ φρονεί καὶ ὁ ἐσθίων Κυρίω ἐσθίει, εὐχαριστεῖ γὰρ τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ ὁ μὴ ἐσθίων Κυρίω οὐκ ἐσθίει, καὶ εὐχαριστεῖ τῷ Θεῷ. <sup>7 g</sup> Οὐδεὶς γὰρ ἡμῶν ἑαυτῷ ζῆ, καὶ g cor. 5. 15. κυρί $\omega$  ουκ εσυτεί, και ευχαριστεί τ $\omega$  Θε $\omega$ .  $^{2}$  Ουσείς γαρ ημών εαυτ $\omega$   $_{Gal. 2. 19. 20.}^{10. 19. 20.}$  οὐδεὶς έαυτ $\widetilde{\omega}$  ἀποθνήσκει  $^{8}$  έάν τε γὰρ ζ $\widetilde{\omega}$ μεν, τ $\widetilde{\omega}$  Κυρί $\omega$  ζ $\widetilde{\omega}$ μεν έάν τε ἀπο-  $^{Phil. 1. 20. -24.}$   $_{1. Thess. 5. 10.}^{10. 19. 20.}$  $θνήσκωμεν, τῷ Κυρίῳ ἀποθνήσκομεν. Τέάν τε οὖν ζῶμεν, ἐάν τε ἀποθνήσκωμεν, <math>^{1 \text{ Pets. 4. 2.}}_{1 \text{ Pet. 4. 2.}}$  τοῦ Κυρίου ἐσμέν.  $^{9 \text{ i}}$  Εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ Χριστὸς ἀπέθανε καὶ ἔζησεν, ἴνα καὶ  $^{8 \text{ IS. 23.}}_{1 \text{ Thess. 4. 14-18.}}$  Rev. 14. 13. Rev. 14. 13. νεκρών καὶ ζώντων κυριεύση.

 $^{10}$  ς  $^{10}$  δ $\stackrel{\circ}{\epsilon}$  τί κρίνεις τὸν ἀδελφόν σου ;  $\mathring{\eta}$  καὶ σὺ τί έξου $\theta$ ενεῖς τὸν ἀδελφόν  $^{\circ}_{j}$  Matt. 25. 31.  $^{2}_{2}$  Cor. 5.  $^{10}$ σου ; πάντες γὰρ παραστησόμεθα τῷ βήματι τοῦ Θεοῦ·  $^{11}$   $^{k}$  γέγραπται γάρ,  $^{2}$  Cor. s.  $^{10}$   $^{2}$  Cor. s.  $^{10}$  Cor. s.  $^{10}$  Cor. s.  $^{10}$   $^{2}$  Cor. s.  $^{10}$  Cor. s έξομολογήσεται τ $\hat{\omega}$  Θε $\hat{\omega}$ .  $^{12}$   $^{12}$  Αρα οὖν έκαστος ήμ $\hat{\omega}$ ν περὶ έαυτοῦ λόγον  $^{1}$  Matt.  $^{12}$ .  $^{36}$ . δώσει τῶ Θεῶ.

13 m Μηκέτι οὖν ἀλλήλους κρίνωμεν, ἀλλὰ τοῦτο κρίνατε μᾶλλον, τὸ μὴ τιθέναι m 1 Cor. 10. 02. πρόσκομμα τῷ ἀδελφῷ ἡ σκάνδαλον.

 $^{14}$   $^{n}$  Oἶδα καὶ πέπεισμαι ἐν Κυρί $\omega$  'Ιησοῦ, ὅτι οὐδὲν κοινὸν δι' αὐτοῦ, εἰ μὴ τ $\hat{\omega}$   $^{n}$  Matt.  $^{15}$   $^{11}$  λογιζομέν $\omega$  τι κοινὸν εἶναι, ἐκείν $\omega$  κοινόν.  $^{15}$   $^{o}$  Eἰ γὰρ διὰ βρ $\hat{\omega}$ μα ὁ ἀδελφός  $^{o}$   $^{1}$  Cor.  $^{8}$   $^{11}$ .

word poorel. Rückert, Reiche, De Wette, Fritz., Philippi, Cp. above, xi. 6.

καl εὐχαριστεῖ] he also giveth thanks. Both parties, therefore, though differing in opinions and practice, may agree in thankfulness to God.

8. ἐάν τε γὰρ ζῶμεν] for whether we live, we live (not unto ourselves, but) unto the Lord.

St. Paul gives several reasons against judging our brother. He is not our servant, but God's; and, by judging him, we lord it over one who belongs not to us, but to God, v. 4.

We live not to ourselves, but to one another. We are brethren and fellow-members in Christ. Who art thou that condemnest thy brother? v. 10.

We are not our own, but the Lord's; we have been created by God for His-glory and service, and have been bought with a price (1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23), even the precious blood of His dear Son; we have no authority but from Him (xiii. 1). And so far is He from giving us authority to judge others, that He tells us that we shall all be judged, and shall have to give an account of ourselves to Him.

And by judging others, we usurp a power which belongs to Him alone, and which He will exercise over us, and over them whom we venture to condemn, but whom He has accepted (v. 3). And so, by judging others, we shall have condemned ourselves.

9.  $\hat{\alpha}\pi\ell\theta\alpha\nu\epsilon$ ] Elz. prefixes  $\kappa\alpha l$ , not in the best MSS. After  $\hat{\alpha}\pi\ell\theta\alpha\nu\epsilon$  Elz. has  $\kappa\alpha l$   $\hat{\alpha}\nu\ell\sigma\tau\eta$   $\kappa\alpha l$   $\hat{\alpha}\nu\ell\sigma\tau\eta$ . But the reading in the text is that of the best MSS.

So A, B, C*, D, E, F, G.-Elz. Χριστοῦ, as in 10. Θεοῦ]

12. ἐαυτοῦ] of himself—not of another.

13. τὸ μὴ τιθέναι πρόσκομμα τῷ ἀδελφῷ ἢ σκάνδαλον ] not to put a stumbling-block, or occasion of falling, in a brother's way. In such cases as these, where, according to the Law of Christian Liberty, it is left indifferent for a person to do, or not to do, a thing, then the Law of Christian Charity comes in.

And according to that Law, it may be expedient, that, in regard to it, and for the avoidance of causing a brother to stumble, a man should forego the use of his Christian Liberty, and abridge himself of the use of that, by using which he might cause his brother to offend. Here the rule is, " Do nothing that may reasonably be forborne, whereat scandal may be taken, and whereby a brother may be betrayed into sin."

This case is handled by St. Paul here, and xv. 1-3. 1 Cor. This case is nandeed by St. Faut here, and xv. 1-3. Cor. viii. 7-13; ix. 12. 15. 19-22; x. 23-33. See Bp. Sanderson, Case of a Liturgy, Works, v. p. 51; and the following remarks of Richard Hooker (IV. xii.), who demonstrates the essential difference between the case of those weak brethren, and that of those who take occasion from St. Paul's argument here, to withhold their obedience from Rites and Ceremonies constituted by lawful public Authority: as those which are established and ordered in the Church of England.

St. Paul's rule is, that in those things, from which we may lawfully abstain without hurt, we should frame the usage of our Liberty with regard to the imbecility of our brethren.

Wherefore unto them which stood upon their own defence, saying, "All things are lawful unto me," he replieth, "But all things are not expedient" (1 Cor. vi. 12) in regard of others. "All things are clean, all meats are lawful. But evil is unto that man that eateth offensively. If, for thy meat's sake, thy brother Vol. II.—PART III.

be grieved, thou walkest no longer according to charity. Destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died. Dissolve not for food's sake the work of God." (Rom. xiv. 15. 20.)
"We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves" (Rom. xv. 1), Hooker; who thus

It was a weakness in the Christian Jews, and a maim of judgment in them, that they thought the Gentiles polluted by the eating of those meats which themselves were afraid to touch, for fear of transgressing the Law of Moses; yea, hereat their hearts did so much rise, that the Apostle had just cause to fear, lest they would rather forsake Christianity, than endure any fellowship with such as made no conscience of that which was unto them abominable.

And for this cause mention is made of destroying the weak by meats, and of dissolving the work of God (Rom. xiv. 15. 20), which was His Church, a part of the living stones whereof were believing Jews.

Now our weak brethren (the Nonconformists) are said to be as the Jews were; and our Ceremonies (which have been abused in the Church of Rome) to be as the scandalous meats, from which the Gentiles are exhorted to abstain in the presence of Jews, for fear of averting them from Christian faith. as Charity did bind them to refrain from that for their brethren's sake which otherwise was lawful enough for them; so (it is alleged) it bindeth us, for our brethren's sake, likewise to abolish such Ceremonies, although we might lawfully else retain them.

But, between these two cases there are great odds. Their use of meats was not like unto ours of Ceremonies; that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did. But this is a public Constitution for the ordering of the Church: and we are not to look that the Church should change Her public laws and ordinances, made according to that which is judged ordinarily and commonly fittest for the whole, although it chance that for some particular men the same be found inconvenient. Hooker.

14. αὐτοῦ] So the best MSS.—E[z. ἐαυτοῦ. - τῷ λογιζομένῳ τι κοινὸν εἶναι, ἐκείνῳ κοινὸν] to him that accounteth a thing to be unclean, to him it is unclean. Kowdy is unclean. See Mark vii. 2. Acts x. 14, 15. 28.

Though an act be good, yet if the agent do it with a condemning or doubting Conscience, it is evil.

Things, not evil in themselves, become evil in three cases-(1) If done against the Conscience, or without persuasion that they are right (see v. 23).

(2) Or, if being left free to us to do or not to do, the doing of them causes others to offend (vv. 20, 21).

(3) Or, if, by doing them, we leave undone what is better to See Matt. ix. 13. Cp. Bp. Sander son, ii. 56.

But two cautions are here necessary;

We must take care

(1) That our Conscience be well informed. For, though it be always a sin to act against our Conscience, yet it is also a sin to neglect to regulate our Conscience by the Law which ought to govern it, viz. the will of God. And, if we have not done this, we may be misled by our Conscience, and it will not profit us to plead, that we have acted according to our Conscience, if we have not acted toward our Conscience as God commands us to do.

σου λυπειται, οὐκ ἔτι κατὰ ἀγάπην περιπατείς. Μὴ τῷ βρώματί σου εκείνου απόλλυε ύπερ οῦ Χριστός απέθανε.

p 1 Cor. 8, 8. Col. 2, 16, 17 Heb. 13, 9 q Isa, 45, 24, Jer. 23, 5, 6. Dan, 9, 24, r 2 Cor. 8, 21, Phil. 4, 18, 1 Tun. 2, 3, & 5, 4, s Matt. 15. 11. Acts 10. 15. Tit. 1. 15.

t 1 Cor. S. 13.

16 Μὴ βλασφημείσθω οὖν ὑμῶν τὸ ἀγαθόν <sup>17</sup> το ἀ γάρ ἐστιν ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ βρῶσις καὶ πόσις, <sup>q</sup> ἀλλὰ δικαιοσύνη καὶ εἰρήνη καὶ χαρὰ ἐν Πνεύματι ἀγίω <sup>18</sup> το γὰρ ἐν τούτω δουλεύων τῷ Χριστῷ εὐάρεστος τῷ Θεῷ, καὶ δόκιμος τοῖς ἀνθρώποις.

19 *Αρα οὖν τὰ τῆς εἰρήνης διώκωμεν, καὶ τὰ τῆς οἰκοδομῆς τῆς εἰς ἀλλήλους.

20 s Μη ενεκεν βρώματος κατάλυε τὸ έργον τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Πάντα μεν καθαρά· ἀλλὰ κακὸν τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ τῷ διὰ προσκόμματος ἐσθίοντι.

21 'Καλὸν τὸ μὴ φαγεῖν κρέα, μηδὲ πιεῖν οἶνον, μηδὲ ἐν ῷ ὁ ἀδελφός σου προσκόπτει, ἢ σκανδαλίζεται, ἢ ἀσθενεῖ.

(2) We may not forego a good action, if it is commanded us by the Authority to which we are subject (Rom. xiii. 1, 2), although others should take offence from that action done by us. For then "even the offence of the Cross would cease." Gal. v. 11. Cp. Hooker, IV. xii. 8. Sanderson, iii. 299.

15. Ei γὰρ (so the best MSS. for δὲ) διὰ βρῶμα ὁ ἀδελφός σου λυπεῖται] For if thy brother—who thinks that it is not lawful to cat such meats as were called unclean by the Levitical Law—is hurt (that is, incurs spiritual pain, not as a matter of feeling, but of suffering harm, in consequence of sin) by seeing thee eat them, and is either led thereby

(1) To make a schism in the Church by separating from thee, or

(2) To imitate thee, by eating such meats against his Conscience,—then take heed, do not so destroy him (by thy eating) for whom Christ died. 'It is indeed abstractedly lawful for thee to eat such meats, but it is not lawful for thee to destroy thy brother—for whom Christ died—by eating them.

— Μη—ἐκεῖνον ἀπόλλυε ὁπὲρ οὖ Χριστὸς ἀπέθανε] Do not destroy him for whom Christ died. St. Paul teaches here, that they for whom Christ died, may be lost; that is, he here affirms, that Christ died not only for those who shall finally persevere and be saved, but that He died also for those who will not persevere, and will not derive benefit from His death,—that is, He died for all. He teaches, that evil example acting upon the weakness of others, may be a cause of perdition to some, who in Christ's design and desire would be saved, and for whom He died in order that they might be saved.

A strong assertion of the doctrines of Universal Redemption and of Free-Will. See above, Introduction, pp. 197-201; on viii.

28-30, and below on 2 Pet. ii. 1.

16. Μη βλασφημείσθω οὖν ὕμῶν τὸ ἀγαθόν] Let not your good (i. e. your right persuasion that nothing in itself is unclean—your Christian Liberty) be evil spoken of, as either

(1) Causing a schism on the part of those who are not so persuaded, or

(2) Causing them to cat against their conscience what they deem to be unclean.

17.  $\beta \rho \hat{\omega} \sigma \iota s$ ] eating: to be distinguished from  $\beta \rho \hat{\omega} \mu \alpha$ , the thing eaten—meat (vv. 15. 20).

18. ἐν τούτω] in this. So the best MSS.—Elz. ἐν τούτωις. Origen explains τούτω as referring to the Holy Spirit. Cp. ii. 29; viii. 9; ix. 1; xv. 16. 19. Phil. iii. 3.

20. τὸ ἔργον τοῦ Θεοῦ] the work of God, Man—not thy creature, but God's. Acts xv. 18. In the assertion of thy liberty to eat all God's creatures, do not destroy God's principal creature, man.

— Πάντα μὲν καθαρά ἀλλὰ κ.τ.λ.] All things are pure, but there is evil (in them) to him who eats any thing with scandal, either given or taken.

Thus this precept is directed to the two parties;

(1) It is addressed to him, the strong in faith, who breaks through the consideration of the scandal which he gives to his weak brother by eating, and yet eats; and

(2) It is addressed to the weak in faith, who is induced by the example of the strong to break through (διά) the scandal which he himself gives to his own conscience by eating, and cats.

On this sense of  $\delta i a$ , indicating a barrier which might deter from the action done, and through which a passage is forced, in order that the action may be done, see above on ii. 27; iv. 11.

On the restrictions to be placed by us on the use of our Christian Liberty, from considerations of Christian Charity, see above on v. 13, and on 1 Cor. vi. 12; and Gal. v. 13, "by Love serve one another;" and on 1 Pct. ii. 16, "as free—and yet as servants of God."

On the assertion  $\pi\acute{a}\nu\tau \alpha$   $\kappa a\theta ap\grave{a}$ , all things are clean, see above on 1 Cor. iii. 22; vi. 12, and below, Titus i. 15.

21. Καλον το μη φαγείν κρέα, μηδέ πιείν οίνον] It is good, not to eat fiesh, nor to drink wine, nor to do any thing wherein thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is weak.

May it not, therefore, be our duty to take Vous of Total Abstinence from Wine, &c., in order that by so doing we may reclaim our brother from Intemperance?

This is no consequence of St. Paul's teaching. For, it is true that we are not to put a stumbling-block in our brother's way. But neither are we to put a stumbling-block in our own way. And this we should do by taking unnecessary vows which God and His Church do not prescribe, and which we may not be able to keep, and by breaking which we shall sin against our conscience, and involve ourselves in condemnation.

The meats, &c. from which the weak brother abstained, in the case here described, had been pronounced unclean by the Levitical Law. That Law was from Almighty God; and it was therefore an act of Christian Charity to abstain from such meats in regard to the scruples of those who had been trained from their infancy under that Law, and who abstained from those meats in reverence to God Who had given that Law.

But now the Gospel has been in the World for eighteen

But now the Gospel has been in the World for eighteen hundred years. In it the Holy Spirit declares that "every Creature of God is good and nothing to be refused" (1 Tim. iv. 4). Ile has there condemned as sinful the act of requiring abstinence from any particular food. (1 Tim. iv. 3.) He has made Wine to be a medium for communicating Sacramental grace to every Christian soul.

Therefore to abstain, as by necessity and by the solemn obligation of a Vow, from any of God's good creatures, or to require others to do so, is to make our brother to offend, by tempting him to imagine (as the Manichæans of old did) either that God is not the Creator of all; or that what He has created for man's use is not good; or that we are wiser than He; or that the Gospel has not done well in pronouncing all the creatures to be from Him, and to be sanctified by prayer and thanksgiving (1 Tim. iv. 4), and to be sanctined by prayer and thankestong and liwise God. It is and that the Gospel therefore is not from an all-wise God. It is to invert the order of things, and to Judaize Christianity. to do disparagement and outrage to the Cross of Christ, Who by His blood-shedding purchased for us Christians the free use of, and dominion over, all the creatures, which we had lost by the fall of Adam. (See above on 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23.) It is to run the risk of betraying our weak brother into the sin of Infidelity, instead of endeavouring to strengthen his weakness, and to reclaim the erring to the Truth.

St. Paul, in his charity, abstained-but did not make a Vow to abstain-at certain times and places, from certain meats which his weak brother thought to be unclean. But in the case of the Vow supposed, persons are called on to promise to abstain from wine, &c., not because others regard it as unclean, but because others abuse it, or indulye in it to excess. The cases therefore are not similar. And if the Principle of the Vow is allowed, there is nothing 80 good which may not be utterly proscribed under a Vow. Not Wine only, but every creature of God is often abused by men. Religion itself is abused; it has its excess in Superstition. Fasting is sometimes abused to excess. Prayer is abused. The Holy Scripture is abused by those who quote it amiss. was abused by Satan into a weapon against Christ. (Matt. iv. 6.) The Principle of the Vow, generally adopted, would rob us of God's best gifts, which Satan tempts men to abuse, and tempts them even to abuse more eagerly in proportion to their goodness. Christianity does not say, Make a vow to abstain from any of God's good gifts, but it says, Be temperate in all things. (1 Cor. ix. 25.) Cp. note above on 1 Cor. viii. 13.

 $^{22}$   $^{u}$  Σὶν πίστιν ἔχεις ; κατὰ σεαυτὸν ἔχε ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ.  $^{v}$  Μακάριος ὁ μὴ  $^{u}$   $^{u}$   $^{Gal.}$  6. 1. κρίνων ἑαυτὸν ἐν ῷ δοκιμάζει.  $^{23}$   $^{x}$   $^{o}$  Ο δὲ διακρινόμενος ἐὰν φάγῃ κατακέκριται,  $^{v}$   $^{ch.}$   $^{f.}$  15, 24. δει  $^{f.}$   $^{f.}$   $^{f.}$  1. 15. 16b. 11. 6.  $^{f.}$   $^{f.}$   $^{f.}$   $^{f.}$   $^{f.}$   $^{f.}$  1. 16b. 11. 6.  $^{f.}$   $^{f.}$

ἀγαθὸν πρὸς οἰκοδομήν. 3 ° Καὶ γὰρ ὁ Χριστὸς οὐχ ἑαυτῷ ἤρεσεν, ἀλλὰ καθὼς Νηλί. 2. 4, 5, γέγραπται, Οἱ ὀνειδισμοὶ τῶν ὀνειδιζόντων σε ἐπέπεσον ἐπ' ἐμέ.

τος την ήμετέραν διδασκαλίαν έγράφη, ενα διὰ τῆς Matt. 10, 25 John 15. 24. ύπομονης και δια της παρακλήσεως των γραφων την έλπίδα έχωμεν.

22, 23. Σὸ πίστιν έχεις; -Θεοῦ. Μακάριος - δοκιμάζει.] Thou art persuaded that thou mayest eat all kinds of meats (see above on v. 1) indifferently. It is a good persuasion; but let that persuasion suffice thee for the approving of thine own heart in the sight of God. Have that persuasion in thyself, and keep it to thyself, in the sight of God, Who created all things, and Who is and nothing to be refused." But do not apply thy persuasion in-discriminately in the presence and company of other men who are weak in faith. Trouble not the Church, offend not thy weak brother, cause him not to sin by a vain ostentation of this thy knowledge.

Blessed is he that condemneth not himself in that which he approveth.

This is a saying applicable to both parties;

(1) To him who rightly thinks that there is no difference between meats, as clean or unclean, but indiscriminately practises this opinion, i. e. eats all kinds of meats (when there is no necessity constraining him so to do), and so condemns himself in what he approveth. For he is guilty of wounding the conscience of a weak brother, and so is liable to condemnation.

(2) To him who wrongly thinks that there is such a difference between meats, and yet is drawn by the example or taunts of others (despising him for this opinion) to act against his judgment, or to act with a doubting conscience, and to eat of what he himself judges to be unclean, or is not persuaded to be clean. And so he is condemned by his own heart as a sinner, because he ventures to do what he does not believe to be lawful. For he that doubteth is condemned for eating, because he does not eat  $\epsilon \dot{\kappa}$ πίστεως, i. e. with assurance that he may eat.

Thus the Apostle proceeds ab hypothesi ad thesim, and adds a general rule of Christian practice as follows;

23. πῶν δὲ δ οὐκ ἐκ πίστεως ἀμαρτία ἐστίν] whatsoever is not of faith is sin; that is, whatever is not done with a full persuasion of the mind that it may lawfully be done, is sin.

St. Paul had above defined the sense in which he uses the word πίστις, faith, in this chapter. See v. 2, δs μèν πιστεύει φαγεῖν, one man is persuaded that he may eat. So v. 14, πέπεισμαι, I feel persuaded. Cp. Chrys., Theodoret, Theophyl., Ecum. here. Therefore St. Paul's meaning is, Whosoever shall venture to do any thing which he is not fully persuaded to be not unlawful, is guilty of sin.

"Benè præcipiunt, qui vetant agere, quod dubites æquum sit an iniquum." Cicero (de Offic. i. 30).

To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin (James iv. 17). How much more guilty is he, who knows the evil that he should not do, and yet does it! "Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that which he alloweth." Wretched is he that alloweth himself in the practice of that which in his judgment he condemns.

In applying the Apostolic Rule some cautions are necessary. (1) We may not hastily imagine things to be unlawful, but may reasonably believe those things to be lawful, which cannot be shown by Holy Scripture or right Reason to be unlawful. Cp. Bp. Sanderson (ii. 125, 126).

(2) If the Conscience is only in doubt, and in suspense, with no inclination on either side, and if lawful Authority has pronounced a judgment, and has determined the question in one way, then that way is to be followed by us. "In dubiis tutior pars eligenda." Cp. ibid. (p. 134.)

(3) If our own Conscience is not in doubt, but is persuaded in one way, and if Authority has pronounced in another way, we ought to review the matter, and to consider carefully the grounds of the difference between our own private opinions and the judgment of public Authority.

We ought to remember that we are prone to be swayed by self-love and self-will, that God loves an obedient spirit, and that Authority is His Minister (xiii. 1-3); and we ought to examine ourselves and our own motives of action, as in His sight, and with prayer for His grace; and to refer all things to the standard of His will; and to deliberate, whether it may not be our duty to reform our Consciences, and to conform them to the judgment and command of Authority.

The word mioris, faith, here used as equivalent to persuasion (see vv. 1, 2. 22), is carefully to be observed; and the more so, on account of the erroneous theories which have been grounded on this Apostolic precept, misunderstood by some-especially the Puritans in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries—as if it signified Faith, either as distinguished from Works, or as equivalent to that act and habit of the mind, by which it assents to the truth of the Gospel.

The pernicious effects, religious, social, and political, of that misunderstanding of the word, have been pointed out by Hooker (ii. 4), and by Bp. Sanderson (ii. pp. 111-119).

 — ἐστίν] After this word, A and many MSS. in cursive characters, and some Versions, add the 25th, 26th, and 27th verses of Chap. xvi., perhaps because they were sometimes read in the Church as a conclusion to this Lesson. Hence in some MSS. these verses occur both here and after xvi. 24, where see note.

The insertion of the Doxology here would make an inconvenient break in the argument, which is continued in Chap. xv.

CH. XV. 1. δυνατοι—ἀδυνάτων] we who are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak (see xiv. 1), and not to be self-

The design of the Apostle is to commend brotherly love, and to persuade the strong and the weak to dwell together in unity.

He therefore appropriately adduces the example of Christ enduring scorn for the salvation of men, and for the glory of God (v. 3), and cites the testimony of Holy Scripture that Jews and Gentiles should be united in Him. (v. 4-12.)

He also fitly refers to his own Apostolic Ministry, in offering the Gentiles as an oblation to God, and by preaching the Gospel from Jerusalem (whence the Gospel came forth) to Illyricum, and in now going up to Jerusalem with an offering of alms to the Jewish Christians from the Gentile Christians of Macedonia and Achaia; thus showing his own love both to Jews and Gentiles, and appealing to this Collection as exemplary to both parties at μὴ ἐαυτοῖς ἀρέσκειν] not to please ourselves; not to be self-pleasers. See 1 Cor. x. 24. 33.

 ἔκαστος] Elz. adds γὰρ, not in the best MSS.
 Οἱ ὁνειδισμοὶ - ἐπ² ἐμέ] the rebukes of them that rebuked thee fell upon Me. This is quoted from the Sixty-ninth Psalm, v. 9. And thus the Holy Spirit teaches by St. Paul that that prophetical Psalm is rightly applied to Christ suffering for us. See a like application of it by St. John, ii. 17.

It is the more requisite to observe this, because an endeavour has been made by some Critics in recent times, to alienate this, and other prophetical Psalms of like import, from Christ. (Cp. note on Acts viii. 32.) The Holy Ghost, in the New Testament, has provided the best safeguard for the true exposition of His Own Prophecies in the Old.

4. "Οσα γὰρ προεγράφη For whatsoever things were written before. Not only what I write now (see v. 15), as the Apostle of the Gentiles, according to the grace of the Holy Ghost given to me (vv. 15. 19), but whatsoever was written aforetime by the same Spirit in the Holy Scriptures, to which I now refer (see vv. 3. 9-12), was written for our learning, that we through the patience (i. e. mutual forbearance), which is taught by the Scriptures, and by bearing one another's burdens, and by the exhortation and by the comfort which the Holy Scriptures, and they only, can give, might have hope of Salvation.

By this reverential reference to the Ancient Scriptures, ho assures the Jews that he is not unmindful of their prerogative and dignity in being the Depositories and Guardians of the Old Testament (iii. 2); and he assures them that his own Doctrine is in harmony with those Scriptures, and is grounded upon them. He e ch. 12, 16, 1 Cor. 1, 10, Phil, 2, 2, Phil. 2. 2. & 3. 15, 16. & 4. 2. 1 Pet. 3. 8. f Eph. 5. 2. Phil. 2. 4, 5. g ch. 14. 1, 3. h Matt. 15. 24. Acts 3, 25, 26, ch. 9, 4, i 2 Sam. 22, 50, Ps. 18, 49.

j Deut. 32, 13.

k Ps. 117. I.

' Isa. 11. 1, 10 Rev. 5. 5. & 22. 16. 1 Cor. 3, 10, & 15, 10, Gal. 1, 15, 16 & 2, 9, Lph. 3, 7, 8, 1 Tim. 1, 11=14, p Acts 9, 15, & 13, 2, ch. 11, 13, Gal. 2, 7, 8 Gal, 2, 7, 8, 1 Tim. 2, 7, 2 Tim. 1, 11. 2 Tim. 1. 11. & 4. 6. Phil. 2. 17. q ch. 1. 5. & 16. 26. r Acts 19. 11.

2 Cor. 12. 12

5 " Ο δε Θεός της ύπομονης και της παρακλήσεως δώη ύμιν το αὐτο φρονείν έν ἀλλήλοις κατὰ Χριστον Ἰησοῦν, 6 ἴνα ὁμοθυμαδον ἐν ἐνὶ στόματι δοξάζητε τὸν Θεὸν καὶ Πατέρα τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. 7 ε Διὸ προσλαμβάνεσθε ἀλλήλους, καθώς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς προσελάβετο ὑμᾶς εἰς δόξαν Θεοῦ.

8 η Λέγω γὰρ Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν διάκονον γεγενησθαι περιτομης ὑπὲρ ἀληθείας Θεοῦ εἰς τὸ βεβαιῶσαι τὰς ἐπαγγελίας τῶν πατέρων, 9 ἱ τὰ δὲ ἔθνη ὑπὲρ ἐλέους δοξάσαι τὸν Θεὸν, καθὼς γέγραπται, Διὰ τοῦτο ἐξομολογήσομαί σοι ἐν έθνεσι, καὶ τῷ ὀνόματί σου ψαλῶ· 10 j καὶ πάλιν λέγει, Εὐφράνθητε ἔθνη μετὰ τοῦ λαοῦ αὐτοῦ. 11 k καὶ πάλιν, Αἰνεῖτε τὸν Κύριον πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, καὶ ἐπαινέσατε αὐτὸν πάντες οἱ λαοί· 121 καὶ πάλιν Ἡσαΐας λέγει, *Εσται ή ρίζα τοῦ Ἰεσσαὶ, καὶ ὁ ἀνιστάμενος ἄρχειν ἐθνῶν, ἐπ' αὐτῶ ἔθνη ἐλπιοῦσιν.

13 m Ο δε Θεός της έλπίδος πληρώσαι ύμας πάσης χαρας καὶ εἰρήνης έν τῷ πιστεύειν, είς το περισσεύειν ύμας έν τη έλπίδι έν δυνάμει Πνεύματος άγίου.

14 η Πέπεισμαι δε, άδελφοί μου, καὶ αὐτὸς έγὼ περὶ ὑμῶν, ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ μεστοί έστε ἀγαθωσύνης, πεπληρωμένοι πάσης γνώσεως, δυνάμενοι καὶ ἀλλήλους νουθετείν. 15 ο Τολμηρότερον δε έγραψα ύμιν, άδελφοί, από μέρους, ώς έπαναμιμνήσκων ύμας, δια την χάριν την δοθείσαν μοι ύπο του Θεου, 16 P είς το είναι με λειτουργον Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ εἰς τὰ ἔθνη, ἱερουργοῦντα τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ϊνα γένηται ή προσφορά των έθνων εὐπρόσδεκτος, ήγιασμένη έν Πνεύματι άγίω.

17 Εχω οὖν τὴν καύχησιν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεόν 18 ٩ οὐ γὰρ τολμήσω τὶ λαλείν ὧν οὐ κατειργάσατο Χριστὸς δι' ἐμοῦ εἰς ὑπακοὴν ἐθνῶν λόγω καὶ ἔργω, 19 τ ἐν δυνάμει σημείων καὶ τεράτων, ἐν δυνάμει Πνεύματος άγίου, ὤστε με ἀπὸ Ἱερουσαλημ, καὶ κύκλω μέχρι τοῦ Ἰλλυρικοῦ, πεπληρωalso commends those Ancient Scriptures to the study of the Gentile Christians as the work of the Holy Ghost, and thus delivers a prophetic protest against such Heresies as the Marcionite and Manichæan, which disparaged the Old Testament in comparison with the New, and endeavoured to set them at variance, the one against the other. Cp. above, i. 2; below, xvi. 26.

— εγράφη So B, C, D, E, F, G. E/z. has προεγράφη.
7. προσλαμβάνεσθε] charitably receive ye. See xiv. 1.

— ὑμᾶs] So A, C, D**, E, F, G. E/z. ἡμᾶs.

— εἰs δόξαν Θεοῦ] to partake in the glory of God. (Chrys.)

 εis δόξαν Θεον] to partake in the glory of God. (Chrys.) Therefore, à fortiori, you ought to receive others.
 8. Λέγω γάρ] So the best MSS. Elz. δέ.
 διάκουον—περιτομῆς] a Minister of the Circumcision, i. e. of the Jewish Nation. Ye Gentile Christians, who are strong, ought not to despise the Jewish Christians your brethren. Christ your Saviour was their Minister. He was born under the Law, and came first to the lost sheep of the House of Israel, to have truth of God and confirm the premises made to their show the truth of God, and confirm the promises made to their Forefathers. Cp. above, Gal. iv. 4. 9.  $\tau \dot{\alpha} \delta \dot{\epsilon} \dot{\epsilon} \theta \nu \eta \dot{\nu} \dot{\alpha} \dot{\rho} \dot{\epsilon} \delta \dot{\epsilon} \delta \nu \eta \dot{\delta} \dot{\alpha} \dot{\alpha} \dot{\alpha}$  and to the intent that the Gentiles should glorify God for His Mercy.  $\Delta o \dot{\xi} \dot{\alpha} \sigma \alpha_i$  is the agrist infinitive, as  $\beta \epsilon \beta \alpha_i \dot{\omega} \sigma \alpha_i$ , after  $\epsilon \dot{i} s \tau \dot{\delta}$ . Christ was born under the Law, in order to show the Truth of God's promises to the Fathers of the Jews, and in order that the Gentiles should praise God for His Mercy (more gracious than Truth), because, by His obedience to the Law, He took away the Curse and Rigour of the Law, and fulfilled all the typical Ceremonies of the Law, and has enabled us to fulfil the commands of the Law, and has opened to all Nations the Kingdom of Heaven without subjection to the yoke of the Law. Therefore do not despise others, nor be clated in yourselves; for, whatsoever you are, you are only by the mercy of God. See above on Gal. iii. 13.

— καθώς γέγραπται] as it is written. He cites Prophecies of Scripture, which show that God's design in the Law and the Prophets was, that Jews (δ λαὸς, οἱ λαοί) and Gentiles (ἔθνη) should be all united as one man in praising and glorifying Him for His love to the world in Christ. See Eph. i. 10; ii. 15.

13.] B, F, G have πληροφορήσαι υμας (εν, B) πάση χαρά και είρηνη.

15. Τολμηρότερον δε έγραψα] but I write to you more confidently in part because I am reminding you in addition to what you already know. I have more confidence of your acceptance of what I write because it is not new to you, but is already anticipated by your own conviction; and also because this admonition is not from myself personally, but from the grace of the Holy Ghost, Who inspires me to write. See v. 18, where he uses the word τολμήσω.

'Aπο μέρους, in part, intimates that there were also other reasons why he might write boldly to them, especially the importance of the subject on which he writes, and his own love for the Jewish Nation, and desire for their Salvation. For examples of this phrase, see xi. 25; xv. 24; above, 2 Cor. i. 14,

16. ίερουργοῦντα] ministering, as a Priest, the Gospel. Cp. 4 Macc. vii. 8, τοὺς ίερουργοῦντας τὸν νόμον. Let not the Jewish Christians among you imagine that there is no longer any Temple, or Priesthood, or Sacrifice in the World. There is an Evangelical Hierurgy in the Church Universal, which is God's Temple. Levitical Priests in the Temple, who offered up sacrifices which "were shadows of the good things to come" (Col. ii. 17. Hcb. x. 1), only pre-announced the Gospel by those types and figures; but I minister the substance, of which they ministered the shadow. I am God's lερουργόs: the sacrifices which I offer are not holocausts of Animals, but Oblations of Whole Nations, sanctified by the Holy Ghost, and now presented as an acceptable Sacrifice to God in Christ.

Compare Phil. ii. 17, where the Apostle represents himself, in his approaching martyrdom, as a Christian Drink-Offering poured out on the meat-offering of the Faith of the Gentile World. The change of metaphor is very appropriate to the alteration of circumstance under which that later Epistle was written. The consummation of the whole may be seen in the last Epistle of all, 2 Tim. iv. 6.

Episte of all, 2 Tim. IV. 0.

17.  $\tau h \nu$ ] Not in Elz, but in B, C, D, E, F, G. My boasting is in Christ, not in any thing done by myself.

18.  $ab \gamma a\rho \tau \delta \lambda \mu h \sigma \omega \tau l \lambda a\lambda \epsilon l \nu$ ] for I will not venture to speak of any thing that I myself have done, or of any thing which Christ wrought, not by my means, for the Obedience of the Gentiles. (See i. 5.) My glorying is not in myself, but only in Christ Jesus. (v. 17.) I myself am nothing. There is nothing done by me which Christ did not work. To Him be all the glory. (Cp. 1 Cor. xv. 10.) Of that I will boast, because the praise is His.

He uses the word τολμήσω here, following up the sentiment expressed by τολμηρότερον in v. 15.—Elz. has λαλεῖν τι, but the best MSS. have 71 λαλείν κέναι τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τοῦ Χριστοῦ, 20 ° οὕτω δὲ φιλοτιμούμενον εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, $2 Cor. 10. 15, 13. ούχ ὅπου ἀνομάσθη Χριστὸς, ἵνα μὴ ἐπ' ἀλλότριον θεμέλιον οἰκοδομῶ, 21 ι ἀλλὰ, 1141. 52. 15. καθώς γέγραπται, Οίς οὐκ ἀνηγγέλη περὶ αὐτοῦ, ὄψονται, καὶ οἱ οὐκ άκηκόασι, συνήσουσι.

19. άγίου] So A, C, D, E, F, G, Elz. Θεού.

ακηκοασι, συνησουσι.

22 α Διὸ καὶ ἐνεκοπτόμην τὰ πολλὰ τοῦ ἐλθεῖν πρὸς ὑμᾶς.

1 Thess. 2. 18. Λοτ 19. 21.  $^{23}$   $^{7}$  Νυνὶ δὲ μηκέτι τόπον ἔχων ἐν τοῖς κλίμασι τούτοις, ἐπιποθίαν δὲ ἔχων τοῦ  $^{8}$   $^{5}$  15. 32.  $^{1}$  Thess. 3. 10.  $^{24}$   $^{8}$   $^{1}$

- ἀπδ 'Ιερουσαλήμ] from Jerusalem. He reminds the Gentiles that the Gospel came forth from Sion. See xi. 26. Micah — καὶ κύκλφ] and in a circle. He might well use this comparison, for his Missionary Tours had been like an ever-widening spiral, growing gradually, and enlarging itself further and further westward from its focus in Jerusalem; and so this missionary spiral continued to expand, till it embraced Rome, and probably Spain, and perhaps even Britain itself. See v. 23, and the facts as presented in the Chronological Table prefixed to these Epistles.

— μεχρὶ τοῦ Ἰλλυρικοῦ] as far as Illyricum. Probably on his second visit to Macedonia. See Acts xx. 2, and Paley's H. P.

πεπληρωκέναι] have filled up the Gospel. That is, have not only traced the first outline, but have filled it up.

20. φιλοτιμούμενον] being ambitious of danger and difficulty.
Cp. above, 1 Thess. iv. 11. 2 Cor. v. 9.
21.] Compare what is said by St. Paul's Contemporary and fellow-labourer, S. Clement, Bishop of Rome (see on Phil. iv. 3), concerning St. Paul's preaching, travels, and sufferings. Παῦλος είς του άγιου τόπου έπορεύθη, ύπομονής γενόμενος μέγιστος ύπο-γραμμός. Clem. Rom. i. 15. That is;—" Paul received the prize of patient endurance, having borne chains seven times, having been banished, stoned, and having become the herald (of God) in the East and in the West, received the noble glory of his faith, and having come to the limit of the west, and having borne witness to Christ before the Rulers, he thus was released from this world, and set forth on his journey to the holy place (of departed saints), having become the greatest pattern of patient endurance.

22. Did For which cause, also for the most part, I was being hindered from coming to you, who have already received the Gospel from others.

Other things also hindered me, but this was my principal impediment, because my first design and desire was to preach where the Gospel had not been preached.

23. Novl δὲ μηκέτι τόπον ἔχων ἐν τοῖς κλίμασι τούτοις] But now because I have no longer place in these parts, i. e. in Achaia, whence the Epistle was written. See vv. 25, 26, and xvi. 1. 23. He had no further  $\tau \delta \pi o s$  or opportunity of preaching there on new ground. He therefore was now at liberty to come to Rome, which was not indeed new ground, but lay on the road to new ground. See note on v. 24, and observe the subjective μηκέτι, implying the reason; not οὐκέτι, which would only have asserted the fact.

ἐπιποθίαν δὲ ἔχων] but having a vehement desire; which was fulfilled not long afterwards, after his visit and arrest at

Jerusalem, and two years' imprisonment at Cæsarea. (Acts xxi. 30; xxiv. 27; xxviii. 16.)

24. ħν-Σπανίαν] So the best MSS. Elz. ἐάν. Vulg. renders it rightly "cùm in Hispaniam proficisci cœpero." The sense is, -I have had a desire of coming to you, for many years, whenso-ever I shall set out for Spain, which is new ground.

My special mission being to preach the Gospel where Christ has not been named (v. 20), I could not rightly regard even you (who have already received the Gospel, see i. 8) as the end of my missionary journey, but I hope to take you in my way (cp. v. 28), when I shall have set out for Spain, "where Christ has not been

That St. Paul did go into Spain after his liberation from his two years' imprisonment at Rome, is asserted in various passages of the Fathers, quoted by Baronius, A.D. 61. Jacobson on Clem. Rom. i. 5, cited above on v. 21.

The following remarks are from the late Professor Blunt (History of the Christian Church, chap. iii. page 54), speaking of St. Paul's movements after his two years' imprisonment

He is at Rome, and at liberty, the world once more before him. What more probable than that he should profit by the occasion now afforded him of completing his plan—his tendency still westward from the very beginning of his ministry, and go forwards to Spain?

Clemens Romanus, his contemporary (see above on v. 21), and a writer who appears to have been in possession of knowledge of St. Paul, derived to him from opportunities of his own, expressly affirms that his travels extended to the limits of the West, a phrase by no means applicable to Rome, particularly when used by one who was dwelling at Rome at the moment, but quite applicable to Spain, the like being expressly found in several authors in direct relation to that country (Pearson, Minor Theolog, Works, ii. 361), and both Chrysostom and Theodoret asserting, without any hesitation, in so many words, that to Spain the Apostle went after his imprisonment at Rome (Ibid. i. 392). Certain it is that Spain was amongst the nations which received the Gospel the earliest. It had its Churches, and what is more, it had long had its Churches in the time of Irenœus, for he not only refers to them, but refers to them as channels of the primitive ecclesiastical tradition, which proved the doctrine of the Church to be opposed to that which the heretics, against whom he was disputing, claimed for orthodox (Irenæus, i. c. 10, § 2). All this is very consistent with St. Paul's visit to that country. (Blunt.)

Besides,- the ancient Canon Muratorianus, written in the second century, mentions the "journey of Paul setting forth from the city (of Rome) for Spain." See also Neander, Geschichte u. Pflanzung, p. 265. Guerike, Handbuch, p. 52. Hug, Einleitung, and Olshausen, Studien, 1838, p. 957, quoted by Jacobson in Clem. R. p. 23, and the note below on Hebrews xiii. 24.

After  $\Xi \pi \omega i \alpha \nu \ Blz$ . and Tisch. add  $\epsilon \lambda \epsilon \dot{\nu} \sigma o \mu \alpha \iota \ \pi \rho \delta s \dot{\nu} \mu \hat{a} s$ , which is not in A, B, C, D, E, F, G.

The clause  $\epsilon \lambda \pi i \langle \omega - \dot{\epsilon} \mu \pi \lambda \eta \sigma \theta \hat{\omega}$  is inserted parenthetically; and the thread of the sentence is taken up again after  $\hat{\epsilon}\mu\pi\lambda\eta\sigma\theta\hat{\omega}$ , at  $\nu\nu\nu$  de  $\hat{\kappa}$  sortional eds Teronoaldm, and the sense is,—I hope one day to set out (πορεύεσθαι) for Spain, and then to see you in my way thither, but now I am setting out in an opposite direction, namely, to Jerusalem.

 - ὑψ ὑμῶν] B, D, E, F, G have ἀφ' ὑμῶν.
 - ἀπὸ μέρους] in part; for such is my love, and vehement desire, felt for many years (v. 23), of seeing you, that I cannot fully satisfy it, by a visit "in transitu." This desire also was fulfilled, for he remained at Rome two years. (Acts xxviii. 30.)

25. Novl δέ πορεύομαι είς Ίερουσαλήμ] But now I am setting out for Jerusalem. At the end of his second visit to Achaia, from which he went by way of Macedonia to Miletus, and so to Cæsarea and Jerusalem. See Acts xx. 2-17; xxi. 1-17; xxiv. 17-19. 1 Cor. xvi. 1-4. 2 Cor. viii. 1-4.

From these words it appears that both the Epistles to the Corinthians were written before that to the Romans. Origen.

Cp. Paley, H. P. pp. 8-12.

The Apostle mentions this circumstance of the collection of alms made in Macedonia and Achaia for the poor Jewish Christians, in order to show that he practised what he preached.

He had been exhorting the Gentile Christians to manifest their love for the Jewish Christians; he was himself going with alms from Gentile Christians to the poor Jewish Christians at Jerusalem. He was going διακονεῖν αὐτοῖς, to minister unto them as a servant. (See also v. 31, διακονία.) He, the Apostle of the Gentile World, would do the work of a servant to them.

The incident here mentioned, that he was now on the point of setting out for Jerusalem, confirms the opinion that this Epistle was written at the close of his stay in Achaia, and a ch. 11, 17, 1 Cor. 9, 11, Gal. 6, 6.

γὰρ Μακεδονία καὶ 'Αγαΐα κοινωνίαν τινὰ ποιήσασθαι εἰς τοὺς πτωχοὺς τῶν άγίων των έν Ἱερουσαλήμ. 27 ° εὐδόκησαν γὰρ, καὶ ὀφειλέται εἰσὶν αὐτων, εἰ γὰρ τοις πνευματικοίς αὐτῶν ἐκοινώνησαν τὰ ἔθνη, ὀφείλουσι καὶ ἐν τοις σαρκικοις λειτουργήσαι αὐτοῖς.

b Phil. 4, 17,

c ch. 1. 11, 12. Ps. 16, 14.

d 2 Cor. 1. 11. Phil. 2. 1. Col. 4. 12.

e 2 Thess. 3. 2.

f Acts 18. 21. ch. 1. 10. James 4. 15.

g ch. 16, 20, 2 Cor. 13, 11, Phil, 4, 9, 1 Thess, 5, 23, Heb. 13, 20, a 3 John 6, b Acts 10, 26, & 18, 2, 26, 2 1im, 4, 19,

28 ο Τοῦτο οὖν ἐπιτελέσας, καὶ σφραγισάμενος αὐτοῖς τὸν καρπὸν τοῦτον, απελεύσομαι δι' ύμων είς την Σπανίαν. 29 ° Οίδα δὲ ὅτι ἐρχόμενος πρὸς ύμας έν πληρώματι εὐλογίας Χριστοῦ ἐλεύσομαι.

20 α Παρακαλῶ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ διὰ τῆς ἀγάπης τοῦ Πνεύματος, συναγωνίσασθαί μοι ἐν ταῖς προσευχαῖς ὑπὲρ έμου πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, <sup>31 °</sup> ἴνα ρυσθῶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπειθούντων ἐν τῆ Ἰουδαία, καὶ ἴνα ή διακονία μου ή εἰς Ἱερουσαλημ εὐπρόσδεκτος γένηται τοῖς άγίοις. 32 ' ἴνα ἐν χαρά έλθω πρὸς ύμας διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, καὶ συναναπαύσωμαι ύμιν.

33 ε Ο δε Θεὸς της εἰρήνης μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν, ἀμήν.

ΧVI. 1 Συνίστημι δε ύμιν Φοίβην την άδελφην ήμων, οδσαν διάκονον της έκκλησίας της έν Κεγχρεαίς, <sup>2 α</sup>ίνα αὐτην προσδέξησθε έν Κυρίω άξίως των άγίων, καὶ παραστήτε αὐτή ἐν ῷ ἀν ὑμῶν χρήζη πράγματι καὶ γὰρ αὐτή προστάτις πολλων έγενήθη, καὶ αὐτοῦ έμοῦ.

3 6 'Ασπάσασθε Πρίσκαν καὶ 'Ακύλαν τοὺς συνεργούς μου ἐν Χριστῷ 'Ιησοῦ, probably at Cenchrea, the eastern harbour at Corinth. See |

26. κοινωνίαν] contribution. κοινωνία, ή έλεημοσύνη, Phavorin. See above, Gal. vi. 6. Rom. xii. 13, ταῖς χρείαις τῶν άγίων κοινωνοῦντες. Phil. i. 5; iv. 15. 27. ὀφειλέται] Macedonia and Achaia, Gentile Countries, are debtors to Jerusalem, for they have been admitted to partake in her spiritual privileges, and they owe in return a communion of their own carnal things.

A tacit exhortation to the Gentile Christians at Rome.

 "Dum Corinthios laudat, hortatur Romanos." Origen.
 28. σφραγισάμενος τ. καρπόν] Fruits, such as olives and grapes, when the vintage was come, and the work of their collection was finished, and the process of their manufacture into oil and wine was completed, were consigned to amphoræ, &c., which were

The sense therefore is—When I have gathered in, and stored, and secured, and sealed up for them this fruit—this harvest or vintage of Christian Charity.

29. εὐλογίας] Elz. inserts τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ – not in the best MSS.

30. συναγωνίσασθαι] to strive together with me in your prayers. For he who prays, fights. Moses praying on the hill, and Joshua fighting in the plain, were fellow-combatants against the Amalekites, and the prayer of Moses was a more powerful weapon than the sword of Joshua. (Exod. xvii. 11.)

31. Ίνα ρυσθώ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀπειθούντων ἐν τῆ 'Ιουδαία] in order that I may be delivered from the disobedient in Judaa. Spoken prophetically; he was arrested by them, even when he was engaged in this charitable work, of "bringing alms to his nation" (Acts xxiv. 17), but he was delivered by the heathen power of Rome out of their hands. (Acts xxi. 27-34.)

— Γνα ή διακονία μου—εὐπρόσδεκτος γένηται] that my service may be graciously accepted by them. Was it not certain that it would be so? No. St. Paul, the uncompromising assertor of Christian liberty, and of the non-obligation of the Levitical Law, even in opposition to St. Peter and St. Barnabas (Gal. ii. 11-15), might well presage that some of the Jewish Christians at Jerusalem would be prejudiced against him and his overtures of

CH. XVI. 1. Συνίστημι—Φοίβην – διάκονον – Κεγχρεαΐς] I commend to you Phæbe, a deaconess of the Church at Cenchreæ; who is described in the Subscription to the Epistle, also in the Syr. and Lat. Versions, as the bearer of the Epistle. Cp. Origen, Chrys.

On the office of Deaconesses, see Acts xviii. 18. 1 Cor. i. 11. 1 Tim. iii. 11, and the words of Pliny in his Epistle to Trajan, x. 9, where he speaks of the "ancillae quæ ministræ vocabantur," in the Christian congregations; and the authorities in Basnage i. p. 451, Bingham II. xxii., and the special treatise of Ziegler, de Diaconis et Diaconissis, Witteberg, 1678.

It is a significant circumstance, that this great Epistle, in which the Apostle of the Gentiles proclaims the doctrine of the Universality of the Redemption made by Christ,-who is the promised Seed of the woman, and in Whom there is no difference between male and female (Gal. iii. 28), was (as it seems, and as has generally been supposed) conveyed by the hands of a Woman, Phoebe, from the harbour of the great city of Corinth,—in which especially, above almost all cities in the heathen world, Woman was debased into a wretched instrument for the gratification of man's carnal lusts, - to the capital of the World-Rome.

How great and glorious a Reformation was wrought in this respect by the Gospel of Christ preached by St. Paul!

- Kεγχρεαῖs] Cenchreæ: κώμη καὶ λιμήν (Strabo viii. p. 380). The Eastern harbour of Corinth, 70 stadia from that city. Seo Col. Leake's Morea, iii. 232—237.

Perhaps the Epistle was written at this port of Corinth, Cenchreæ, when St. Paul was about to set out from Achaia to Northern Greece.

He wrote the Epistle when he was about to leave Achaia (see xv. 23. 25), and Phoebe, a deaconess of Cenchreæ, seems to have been the bearer of the Epistle. See on v. l. Had he written it from the city of Corinth itself, probably he would have sent it by some one of that great commercial city, where he had many friends.

In Acts xviii. 18, we see him at Cenchreæ, showing his charity for the Jewish Christians, when he was about to leave Achaia, after his first visit to Corinth, and was going to Jerusalem; and now, perhaps, after his second visit to it, when on the eve of quitting Achaia, on his way toward Jerusalem, he performs another act of Apostolic charity to the Jewish and Gentile Christians, by writing this Epistle at Cenchreæ.

2. καὶ γὰρ αὐτή] for she herself also (not αὕτη), a reason for her friendly reception.

3.  ${}^{1}A\sigma m d\sigma a\sigma \theta \epsilon {}^{1}Salute\ ye$ . No less than thirty persons are saluted by name here  $(vv.\ 3-13)$ . It is remarkable that St. Paul should have had so many friends in a city which he had never visited (i. 13), and should send so many greetings in this Epistle.

This fact is to be explained partly, by the character of the great City to which he is writing, and to which, as to a common centre, persons flocked from all parts of the world. Cp. Juvenal (iii. 61, 62), calling Rome " Gracam urbem."

Partly it is due to the character of the Apostle himself, who had now preached the Gospel through Syria, Asia Minor, Macedonia, and Achaia, and whose name had become familiar, by his preaching and by his Epistles, to a large part of the civilized world.

This proof of the connexion of the Apostle St. Paul with so many persons dwelling in a city which he had never visited, opens out to us a view of the silent workings of the Gospel, by which it gradually leavened the world. Not by any violent effort, or sudden eruption, but by an almost imperceptible growth, the mustard-seed of the Gospel put forth its leaves and branches. and became a great tree, and overshadowed the earth. (Matt. xiii. 31. Luke xiii. 19.)

- Πρίσκαν] Prisca. So the best MSS. Elz. Πρίσκιλλαν.

4 οίτινες ύπερ της ψυχης μου τον έαυτων τράχηλον ύπέθηκαν, οίς ούκ έγω μόνος εὐχαριστῶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ πᾶσαι αἱ ἐκκλησίαι τῶν ἐθνῶν,  $^5$  ° καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτῶν  $^{\rm c~1~Cor.~16.~15,~19}_{\rm Col.~4.~15.}$ έκκλησίαν. 'Ασπάσασθε 'Επαίνετον τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου, ὅς ἐστιν ἀπαρχὴ τῆς 'Ασίας είς Χριστόν' 6 ἀσπάσασθε Μαριὰμ, ήτις πολλὰ ἐκοπίασεν είς ἡμᾶς 7 ἀσπάσασθε 'Ανδρόνικον καὶ 'Ιουνίαν, τοὺς συγγενεῖς μου καὶ συναιγμαλώτους μου, οἴτινές εἰσιν ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις, οἱ καὶ πρὸ ἐμοῦ γεγόνασιν ἐν Χριστῶ· 8 ἀσπάσασθε 'Αμπλίαν τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου ἐν Κυρίω· 9 ἀσπάσασθε Οὐρβανὸν τὸν συνεργὸν ἡμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ, καὶ Στάχυν τὸν ἀγαπητόν μου 10 ἀσπάσασθε 'Απελλην τὸν δόκιμον ἐν Χριστῷ· ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς ἐκ τῶν 'Αριστοβούλου 11 ἀσπάσασθε Ἡρωδίωνα τὸν συγγενη μου ἀσπάσασθε τοὺς ἐκ τῶν Ναρκίσσου τοὺς ὄντας ἐν Κυρίω 12 ἀσπάσασθε Τρύφαιναν καὶ Τρυφῶσαν τὰς κοπιώσας ἐν Κυρίω ἀσπάσασθε Περσίδα τὴν ἀγαπητὴν, ήτις πολλὰ ἐκοπίασεν έν Κυρίω. 13 d ασπάσασθε 'Ροῦφον τὸν ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κυρίω, καὶ τὴν d Mark 15. 21. μητέρα αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐμοῦ 14 ἀσπάσασθε ᾿Ασύγκριτον, Φλέγοντα, Ἑρμῆν, Πατρόβαν, Έρμαν, καὶ τοὺς σὺν αὐτοῖς ἀδελφούς 15 ἀσπάσασθε Φιλόλογον καὶ

- καὶ 'Ακύλαν ] and Aquila. He begins with salutations to | Jewish Christians

At the same time, he puts Priscilla's name before her husband's, showing to them of the Circumcision that in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female (Gal. iii. 28). See also above on Acts xviii. 18.

Aquila and Priscilla had been driven from Rome, with the Jews, by the edict of the Emperor Claudius (Acts xviii. 2), but now had been allowed to return, "edicti cessante sævitiâ" (Origen). The names of Aquila and Priscilla were most likely to suggest themselves to the Apostle, writing from Achaia (see Acts xviii. 2), where he had laboured together with them. They had accompanied him to Ephesus; and it is probable that in the tumult there, as well as previously at Corinth, they had "laid down their necks for his sake." See Acts xviii. 16. 18; xix. 24—30. 1 Cor. xvi. 19. Origen. Paley, H. P. pp. 16, 17. 252, with the additions of Mr. Birks.

As Paley has observed (p. 17), Aquila and Priscilla were Jews by birth, but had boldly taken part with St. Paul and the Gentile Christians, and were specially entitled to the love of all the Gentile Churches.

5. την κατ' οίκον αὐτῶν ἐκκλησίαν] the Church which assembles for worship at their house. See v. 5, and note below on

 - 'Επαίνετον-'Aσίαs] Epænetus, the first-fruits of Asia.
 - 'Aσίαs] of Asia. So the best MSS., not 'Αχαίαs. Cp.
 1' Cor. xvi. 15, where Stephanas is called the ἀπαρχὴ 'Αχαίαs. The name of Epanetus, the first-fruits of Asia, is naturally combined with that of Aquila and Priscilla, who had laboured with the

On the accentuation of Emalveros, see above on Acts xx. 4. 7. συναιχμαλώτους μου] my fellow-captives; in some of his imprisonments, not recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, but referred to 2 Cor. xi. 23, ἐν φυλακαῖς περισσοτέρως: Clement of Rome (ad Corinth. 5) says that St. Paul was imprisoned seven — ἐπίσημοι ἐν τοῖς ἀποστόλοις] of good reputation among the Apostles, that is, "coram eis et apud eos." See Fritz., Meyer, De Wette, Philippi, and Ellicott on Gal. i. 1. Cp. ἡπίσημος ἐν βροτοῖς, Eurip. Hippol. 103.

The persons here mentioned as of good repute, were not Apostles (see on I Cor. xv. 7. 2 Cor. viii. 23). But St. Paul specifies this circumstance in order to show the Jewish Chrisfellow-prisoners were distinguished as persons of mark by the other Apostles, e. g. Peter, James, and John; and he thus indirectly declares the Christian communion and harmony of faith and love which subsisted between the other Apostles and himself, the last of their body,-the Benjamin of the Apostolic company, born in Christ not only after them, but after some of his own kinsmen who were not Apostles. See I Cor. xv. 8.

8, 9. 'Αμπλίαν—Οὐρβανόν] Amplias and Urbanus, two of the few Latin names among these members of the Church of Rome. The only other such names are Priscilla, Aquila (v. 3), Junia (v. 7), Rufus (v. 13), and Julia (v. 15). The rest of the names are of Greek origin, and probably, for the most part, of a lower class, such as freedmen and slaves.

ἐν Χριστῷ] So v. 2, προσδέξησθε ἐν Κυρίφ: v. 8, ἀγαπη-τόν μου ἐν Κυρίφ: v. 9, συνεργὸν ἐν Χριστῷ: v. 10, δόκιμον ἐν

Χριστ $\hat{\varphi}$ : v. 11, τοὺς ὄντας ἐν Κυρί $\psi$ : v. 12, τὰς κοπιώσας ἐν Κυρί $\psi$ — ἐκοπίασεν ἐν Κυρί $\psi$ : v. 13, τὸν ἐκλεκτὸν ἐν Κυρί $\psi$ . This frequent reiteration of these words, " in the Lord," applied to different persons and acts, brings out with force the doc-

(1) That all Christians, whether men or women, are members of one body in Christ.

(2) That all that is done and suffered by them, is to be done and suffered in the Lord: that is, for His glory, according to His will, and in reliance on His grace. See below, v. 22.

(3) That St. Paul, and the Ministers of Christ who are followers of St. Paul, do not labour for themselves, but for the Lord: do not preach themselves, but Christ.

(4) That He is Head over all things to His Church.
(5) The non-occurrence of the name of St. Peter in this Epistle to the Church of Rome, and particularly its absence from this part of it, seems to be conclusive against the fundamental assertion of the present Church of Rome, that in order to be in Christ and in the Lord, it is necessary to be united to those who call themselves successors of St. Peter; and that all the grace, which flows from Christ, is derived through St. Peter, and through those who claim to be his successors, the Bishops of Rome, as Supreme, Visible, Heads and Lords of the Church, and Vicars of Christ upon earth.

10. 'Απελλῆν] Apella. Cp. Hor. Serm. I. v. 100, "credat Judæus Apella," a name used by Horace, for an obvious reason, in ridicule, but here ennobled by St. Paul, who adds, τον δόκιμον  $\ell \nu$  Χριστ $\hat{\varphi}$ , the approved in Christ, who has given to him, who bears it, the true circumcision of the Spirit.

Bentley's important remark (Epist. ad Mill. p. 517, ed. Lips.) that the final -\hat{a}s and -\hat{g}s of Greek names was Latinized into -a in the case of slaves and others of humbler life, but was maintained in -as and -es in the case of nobler persons, is applicable here. Probably, as the early Christians were generally from the lower classes, the rendering Apella, and perhaps Dama, might be more correct than Apelles, Demas.

11. Νάρκισσον] Narcissus. Not the freedman of the Emperor Claudius (Suet. Claud. 28), for he had been put to death by Nero, A.D. 54, i. e. before the date of this letter; but perhaps a 12. Τρύφαιναν] Tryphana. On this and other names in this list, see Lightfoot, Journal of Class. Phil. x. 57, and Merivale, Rom. Hist. vi. p. 260, and note on Phil. iv. 22.

13. τον εκλεκτον έν Κυρίφ] the elect in the Lord. Another proof that St. Paul does not use the word elect to designate a person who can be known by men, as one who will finally persevere, and certainly be saved.

Almighty God knows who will persevere and be saved; but Almighty God knows who will persevere and be saved; but men have not this foreknowledge concerning themselves or others; and Christian Charity, which "hopeth all things," will suppose every one to be elect in the Lord, whom the Lord has graciously called into His Church, and has plentifully supplied with the means of everlasting salvation, and who is adorning the Christian profession of a sound faith with the good fruits of a holy life. See above on viii. 30.

14. 'Epµ\(\hat{n}\)v—'Epµ\(\hat{a}\)v] This is the order in the best MSS. Elz. puts 'Epµ\(\hat{a}\)v—'Ep\(\hat{a}\)v, v. 1 \(\delta\)offpy, v. 15 N\(\eta\)e\(\hat{e}\)a. Hence it would appear that the Gentile Christians at Rome did not scruple to retain names, though derived from heathen deities (Ph\(\hat{w}\)be, Nerves, tain names, though derived from heathen deities (Phabe, Nereus, Ιουλίαν, Νηρέα και την άδελφην αὐτοῦ, και 'Ολυμπαν, και τοὺς σὺν αὐτοις πάντας άγίους.

e 1 Cor. 16, 20, 2 Cor. 13, 12, 1 Thess. 5, 26, 1 Pet. 5, 11.

f 2 Thess. 3 6, 14. 1 Tim. 6. 3. 2 Tim. 3 2, 5, 6. Tit. 3. 10. 2 John 10. g Phil. 3. 18, 19

16 e 'Ασπάσασθε άλλήλους εν φιλήματι άγίω. 'Ασπάζονται ύμας αί εκκλησίαι πᾶσαι τοῦ Χριστοῦ. 17 Παρακαλώ δὲ ύμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, σκοπεῖν τοὺς τὰς διχοστασίας καὶ τὰ σκάν-

δαλα παρὰ τὴν διδαχὴν ῆν ὑμεῖς ἐμάθετε ποιοῦντας, καὶ ἐκκλίνατε ἀπ' αὐτῶν 18 ε οί γὰρ τοιοῦτοι τῷ Κυρίω ἡμῶν Χριστῷ οὐ δουλεύουσιν, ἀλλὰ τῆ ἐαυτῶν κοιλία, καὶ διὰ τῆς χρηστολογίας καὶ εὐλογίας έξαπατῶσι τὰς καρδίας τῶν ἀκάκων 19 h ή γὰρ ὑμῶν ὑπακοὴ εἰς πάντας ἀφίκετο ἐφ' ὑμῖν οὖν χαίρω, θέλω δὲ ὑμᾶς σοφοὺς μὲν εἶναι εἰς τὸ ἀγαθὸν, ἀκεραίους δὲ εἰς τὸ κακόν.

h Matt. 10, 16. ch. 1. 8. 1 Cor. 14. 20. 1 Gen. 3. 15.

20 1 Ο δε Θεός της εἰρήνης συντρίψει τον Σαταναν ύπο τους πόδας ύμων έν τάχει.

k Acts 13, 1.

1 Tim. 1. 2. 1 Acts 19. 22. 1 Cor. 1. 15. 2 Tim. 4. 20.

Ή χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μεθ' ὑμῶν. 21 κ' Ασπάζεται ύμᾶς Τιμόθεος ὁ συνεργός μου, καὶ Λούκιος, καὶ Ἰάσων, καὶ Σωσίπατρος, οί συγγενείς μου 22 ἀσπάζομαι ύμας έγω Τέρτιος ὁ γράψας την έπιστολην έν Κυρίω. 23 1 ἀσπάζεται ύμας Γάιος ὁ ξένος μου καὶ της έκκλησίας Hermes). And one of these names (Hermas) was retained by the writer of the Ecclesiastical book entitled the Ποιμήν, or 'Shepherd,' still extant-whom Origen and others suppose to be the Hermas here mentioned by St. Paul. But this is not probable, for the Author of that book was brother of Pius, Bishop of Rome, A.D. 150 (Canon Muratorian.).

Every thing was to be appropriated and consecrated by Christianity. Heathen Temples and Basilicas were to become Christian Churches. A Phoebe (the name of Diana) is a Deaconess of the Church, and a bearer of the Epistle of St. Paul to the Christians at Rome. The names Nereus and Hermes are christianized. The ship called Castor and Pollux brings the Apostle to Rome. See on Acts xxviii. 11. How striking is the contrast between Tryphana and Tryphosa, with their sensuous meaning and voluptuous sound, and the sterner words that follow, τας κοπιώσας εν Κυρίφ, labouring in the Lord!

This is a consideration which may serve to remove the scruples of those who cannot prevail on themselves to conform to the common use of the names of the Months of the Year or Days of the Week, because they are derived from Heathen deities or Rather, these names, like the appellations in this chapter, have their appropriate uses, as mementos of the sin and misery from which the World has now been delivered, and of the privileges it enjoys under the blessed influence of the Gospel.

16. ἐν φιλήματι ἀγίφ] with a holy kiss; especially given in the Church at the Holy Eucharist. See Origen here, and Justin, Apol. ii. p. 97. Athenag. Legat. p. 36. Aug. c. lit. Petil. ii. 22. Cyril. Catech. 5. Cp. Bingham, XV. iii., and note on 1 Thess.

A very suitable direction, after the exhortations to the Gentile and Jewish Christians in this Epistle, to Christian love, to be sealed with a kiss of peace at the Lord's Table, after hearing this Epistle read in the Church.

The precept is repeated twice by St. Paul to the Corinthians (1 Cor. xvi. 20. 2 Cor. xiii. 12), for whom the epithet  $ay_{10}$  was specially needful. In the latter place, S. Chrysostom has some excellent remarks on the sanctification of the lips by the reception of the Holy Eucharist, and on the consequent duty to keep the lips pure from all taint of evil.

αὶ ἐκκλησίαι πᾶσαι] πᾶσαι is omitted by Elz., but found in St. Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, speaks in the best MSS. the name of all the Churches-having the care of them all.

(2 Cor. xi. 28.)

17. σκοπείν] mark them -- have your eye upon them -- as a helmsman has his eye upon a rock; and steer aside from them.

Cp. on Jude 17.

On the duty of shunning those who impugn the fundamentals of the Gospel, see Waterland on the Trinity (c. 4), who quotes 1 Cor. v. 5. Gal. i. 8, 9, and Gal. v. 12, in that sense, and I Tim. vi. 2-5, 2 Tim. ii. 16-18. Tit. iii. 10, 2 John 10, 11.

18. Χριστφ] Elz. prefixes 'Ιησοῦ, not in Λ, Β, C. — κοιλία—καρδίαs] they are slaves of their own bellies, and deceive the hearts of others.

20. ourrfiles to Zatarar will bruise Satan under your feet quickly. Satan now rules at Rome, but the Seed of the woman has bruised the Serpent's head, according to the first prophecy in Holy Scripture. (Gen. iii. 15.)

After the recent perversion of that prophecy, in the Papal Decree on the Immaculate Conception (Rome, Dec. 8, 1854), wherein this act of bruising the Serpent's head is applied to the Virgin Mary, as her special prerogative, it is not irrelevant to cite the following testimony to the truth, from the pen of the learned Romanist Commentator, Cornelius A Lapide, in his note here (Rom. xvi. 20): "Alludit Apostolus ad Genes. iii. 15, ut directè habent Hebraica אוו Hic, id est Ipsum Semen, sive Proles mulieris, putà Christus, conteret caput tuum."

And so the ancient Bishop of Rome, Leo I. (Serm. de Nativ. ii.), and S. Jerome in his Version of Gen. iii. 15. See his Quæst. Hebr. in Gen. iii. 15; and the masculine "IPSE" was there before Popes Sixtus V. and Clement VIII. How is the Church of Rome changed since St. Paul wrote this Epistle to it! (i. 8.) How is the gold become dim, and the fine gold changed!

(Lam. iv. 1.)

— 'Η χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου] The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ

— 'Η χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου] where subscription, written with his own be with you. St. Paul's own subscription, written with his own hand in all his Epistles. See on 1 Thess. v. 28. Heb. xiii. 25. It is repeated in v. 24, where however A, B, C omit it. 21. 'Aσπάζεται'] So A, B, C, D*, F, G. Etz. ἀσπι — Τιμόθεος—Σωσίπατρος] Timothy, and Sosipater, or Sopater, of Beroea, were with St. Paul at Corinth when he wrote this Epistle, and accompanied him from it as far as Asia. (Acts

This Epistle to the Romans is almost the only letter of St. Paul, at the writing of which Timothy is known to have been present, and in which he is not joined with St. Paul in the opening address.

St. Paul had not been at Rome, but he was the Apostlo of the Gentiles, and so had a divine commission to address the metropolis of the Gentile world; which Timothy had not.

Timothy was afterwards with him at Rome in his first imprisonment, and is associated with him in his Epistles written from Rome to the Colossians, Philemon, and the Philippians. See also Heb. xiii. 23; and he was probably also at Rome with him at his second imprisonment and martyrdom. (2 Tim. iv. 9. v. 21.)

— Λούκιοs] Perhaps St. Luke the Evangelist (Origen), who was with St. Paul at this time (Acts xx. 5; cp. on 2 Cor. viii. 18), and accompanied him afterwards to Rome (Acts xxviii. 16) in his first imprisonment there (Col. iv. 14. Philemon 24); and also in his second imprisonment just before his death. (2 Tim. iv. 11.)

On the double form of proper names in the New Testament, see above on Acts xv. 22, and Winer, p. 93.

- 'ldσων' Cp. Acts xvii. 5.
22. Τέρτιος Tertius. St. Paul employs a secretary, bearing a Roman name, to write to the Romans.

The words ἐν Κυρίφ are to be connected with what immediately precedes. (Origen.) The work of an amanuensis, as well as of an Apostle, may be done, and ought to be done ev Kuplo-it is as a labour of love " in the Lord." See above on v. 9, " Tertius ad gloriam Dei scribit, et ideò in Domino scribit." Origen.

On St. Paul's habit of writing his Epistles by secretaries, see above on 1 Thess. v. 28. 2 Thess. iii. 17. Gal. vi. 11.

23. \( \text{Galos} \) \( Caius. \) See on 1 Cor. i. 14. According to some,

the first Bishop of Thessalonica. Cp. Tillemont, i. 103.

όλης ἀσπάζεται ύμας Εραστος ὁ οἰκονόμος της πόλεως, καὶ Κούαρτος ὁ άδελφός.

24 'Η χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν ἀμήν. m ch. 1.5.  $^{25}$   $^{\rm m}$   $T\hat{\omega}$  δὲ δυναμέν $\omega$  ύμ $\hat{a}$ ς στηρίξαι κατ $\hat{a}$  τὸ εὐαγγέλιόν μου καὶ τὸ κήρυγμα  $\hat{s}$  Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν μυστηρίου χρόνοις αἰωνίοις σεσιγημένου,  $\frac{2}{2}$  Tim. 1. 10.  $\frac{1}{1}$  Tit. 1. 20.  $\frac{2}{2}$  φανερωθέντος δὲ νῦν, διά τε γραφῶν προφητικῶν, κατ ἐπιταγὴν τοῦ αἰωνίου  $\frac{1}{2}$  Inde 24. Θεοῦ, εἰς ὑπακοὴν πίστεως εἰς πάντα τὰ ἔθνη γνωρισθέντος,  $^{27}$   $^{\circ}$  μόνω σοφ $\hat{\omega}$   $^{\text{n I John I. 1.}}$   $^{\text{I Tim. 1. 17.}}$ Θεώ, διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ὧ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰωνας ἀμήν.

— Έραστος ὁ οἰκονόμος τῆς πόλεως] Erastus the Quæstor of the City, probably Corinth,—in which City St. Paul was,—or at its harbour Cenchreæ (v. 1), when he wrote this Epistle.

(2 Tim. iv. 20.)

Erastus, having a financial office at Corinth, was a fit person to be employed by St. Paul in collecting alms in Greece. He appears to have been sent by St. Paul from Ephesus to Macedonia for that purpose (cp. Acts xix. 21, 22), but having an official position, he was not, it seems, able to leave Greece to go with St. Paul to Asia and Jerusalem, with some who are here mentioned, e. g. Timotheus and Sopater. See Acts xx. 4. Cp. Birks, p. 255.

Κούαρτος] Quartus, a Roman name: δ άδελφδς, your brother.

24. 'Η χάρις—ἀμήν] See above on v. 20.

25. δυναμένω—ἀμήν] This 25-27. Τῷ δὲ δυναμένφ-ἀμήν] This Doxology is placed here in B, C, D, E, and also in N, and some Cursive MSS., and in Vulg., Copt., Æthiop., and other Versions, and Latin Fathers.

But it is inserted at the end of Chapter xiv., in the great majority of Cursive MSS., and in the Greek Lectionaries and

It is found both there and here, in A, and a few Cursives. It is omitted by D**, F, G, and was rejected by Marcion.

(Origen vii. p. 453.)

The Editors are divided as to its position. Among those who maintain its claim to stand here, are Erasmus, Stephens, Beza, Benyel, Koppe, Knapp, Rinck, Lachm., Scholz, De Wette, Tischendorf, Philippi, Meyer, Alford.
Some few Editors and Commentators, Mill,

Griesbach, Matthiæ, Eichhorn, would remove it to the end of Chapter xiv.; and two or three deny its genuineness.

The genuineness of this Doxology is substantiated by external and internal evidence. Even the involved structure of the sentence, which is such as an interpolator would scarcely have hazarded, is an argument in its favour. It was probably transposed, or rejected, in the first instance, by some who thought that the words in v. 24 marked the close of this Epistle, as of others from St. Paul's hands.

Now to Him who is able to establish you according to my Gospel, and the doctrine preached of Jesus Christ, according to the Revelation of the Mystery, which had been kept secret in all past ages (see Tit. i. 2. 2 Tim. i. 9. Matt. xxv. 46), but hath been now made manifest (in the Gospel), and through the Scriptures of the Prophets made known unto all Nations, according to the commandment of the Eternal God, for their obedience to the See i. 5.

This concluding sentence contains the kernel of the doctrine of the whole Epistle (see on i. 3, and Introduction, pp. 197-201), namely, that God had decreed-even before the (and therefore long antecedently to the Call of Abraham, and to the giving of the Levitical Law) to unite all Nations in one Church Universal by Faith in Christ; and that this Divine Decree was kept secret from former ages, though the way had been prepared for its manifestation by the Prophetical Scriptures of the Old Testament, and is now, at length, in the fulness of time, revealed to all in the Gospel. See below, Eph. iii. 3—9. Col. i.

26. 2 Tim. i. 9, 10.

The way for this Evangelical Revelation had been quietly prepared by the Prophetical Scriptures. According to Bengel's comparison, there was in the Old Testament the silent movement of the hands of the Clock; but it sounded forth the Hour with an audible voice in the Gospel.

 $-\phi$ ] i.e. μόν $\varphi$  σοφ $\hat{\varphi}$  Θε $\hat{\varphi}$ , To the only wise God, agreeing with  $\tau\hat{\varphi}$  δυναμέν $\varphi$ , at the beginning of the sentence, which is resumed by  $\delta$ , to whom through Jesus Christ be glory for ever. Amen. On this anacoluthon, see Winer, p. 501. Gal. ever. Amen. On this anacoluthon, see Winer, p. 501. Gal. ii. 6. In a less impassioned strain he would have written αὐτῷ. See xi. 36, and particularly Eph. iii. 20, 21, which is the best exposition of this passage, and may have given occasion to the transfer.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

I. On the Design and Contents of the Epistle to the Ephesians.

Ir has been observed by ancient Authors', that the Epistle to the Ephesians stands pre-eminent among St. Paul's Epistles in the sublimity of its revelations of supernatural truths, which could never have been discovered by any efforts of human Intelligence.

I. This peculiar characteristic of the Epistle to the Ephesians may be ascribed to several causes—

(1) St. Paul had already resided for about three years at Ephesus, and had fully preached the Gospel there, so that "all that dwelt in Asia" (that is, the region of which the capital was Ephesus) "heard the word of the Lord Jesus" (Acts xix. 8-10; xx. 31).

In no city, as far as we know, had the Apostle resided and taught continuously for so long a time as Ephesus.

The Ephesians, therefore, had been well prepared by previous discipline to receive the full and systematic instruction in the Mysteries of the Gospel, which is embodied in this Epistle. They were specially qualified to do so.

(2) Besides, the City of Ephesus occupied a prominent place among the Cities of the World, as having special needs and claims on the Apostle of the Gentiles for such instruction from him.

Ephesus was the stronghold of Satan in many forms of spiritual iniquity. It was like a Court and Camp of the Evil One. Thither he had attracted the inhabitants of "Asia and the World" by the mysterious traditions of an ancient superstition, and by the alluring fascinations of religious pomp and pageantry 3, and by the no less powerful operations of selfish interests and secular advantages, represented in the combination of Demetrius and his craftsmen ', deriving their wealth from trading and trafficking in the workshop of Idolatry; and there he reigned supreme in the magnificent Temple of the Ephesian Artemis.

At Ephesus also he deluded mankind by sorcery and witcheraft. There he beguiled them into converse with himself, and allured them to hold familiar intercourse and communion with the powers of darkness, in order to attain a knowledge of the hidden secrets of the invisible world, and to penetrate into the mysteries of futurity.

The immense amount of the price of the Magical Books committed to the flames at Ephesus in consequence of St. Paul's teaching there, is specified by his friend and companion St. Luke 5, in

1 Chrys. in Proœm. ad Ephes., έστι νοημάτων μεστή ή Έπιστολή ύψηλων και δογμάτων. And he explains this circumstance from the fact that the Ephesians had been already well instructed in the Articles of the Christian Faith: λέγεται δὲ καὶ τὰ βαθύτερα των νοημάτων αὐτοῖς ἐμπιστεῦσαι ἄτε δἡ κατηχη-

A very just observation, and affording a sufficient answer to those who have argued, from the absence of salutations and personal notices in the Epistle to the Ephesians, that either the Epistle is not correctly inscribed to the Ephesians in our present editions of it, or could not have been written by St. Paul, who had personally resided and preached at Ephesus for about three years. (Acts xix. 8-10; xx. 31.)

On the contrary, this Epistle evidently assumes (as Chrysostom remarks) that they to whom it was addressed had been already well schooled in the doctrines of Christianity. The great Gentile Church of Ephesus had been planted and watered by the Apostle of the Gentiles, St. Paul, as is evident from the Acts of Apostle of the Gentlies, St. Paul, as is evident from the Acts of the Apostles, xviii. 19; xix. 8—10; xx. 31.

In like manner S. Jerome says, "In hanc potissimam Epistolam ignota sæculis sacramenta congessit." And on Eph. iii., "Nulla Epistola Pauli tanta habet mysteria tam reconcitis sensibus involuta." And on chap. iv., "Inter onnes Pauli Epistolas hæc vel maximè et verbis et sensibus involuta." Jerome (in Præf. in Epist. ad Ephes.).

2 Acts viv. 27.

2 Acts xix. 27.

3 See on Acts xix. 31. 4 Acts xix. 25-27.

5 Acts xix. 19.

order to give some notion of the powerful dominion exercised by Satan over the minds of that populous, wealthy, commercial, intellectual City, by means of Magical Arts',

(3) Hence it was requisite, that in an Epistle to such a City as Ephesus the Apostle of the Gentiles should reveal the true character of the Spiritual Powers of Darkness, under whose thraldom the Heathen World was enslaved, and should lead men to recognize the dignity and blessedness of that intellectual, moral, and spiritual Emancipation which had been achieved for them by Jesus Christ.

The Apostle, therefore, having his spiritual eye illumined by heavenly light, uplifts the veil which separates the Visible World from the Invisible; and enables mankind to contemplate the workings of the two antagonistic Powers, of the Kingdom of Light on the one side, and of the Empire of Darkness on the other. (v. 8.)

This is a part of his design in this Epistle; and on the groundwork of the supernatural truths, here communicated as objects of Faith, he builds up a superstructure of moral duties, as subjects of Practice. He executes this great task in a manner adequate to its dignity, grandeur, and importance.

His diction in this Epistle bespeaks the transcendent sublimity of the Doctrines which he here reveals. Especially in the dogmatic portion of it, occupying the greater part of the first four Chapters, his style breathes the poetic raptures of an impassioned effusion of Sacred Poetry, like a Divine Dithyramb. It burns with an impassioned fervour kindled by the Holy Spirit, Who descended in tongues of fire on the day of Pentecost. It grows and spreads itself with irresistible power in a spiritual conflagration. Or, to use another figure, its sentences flow on, as it were, in the full strong tide, wave after wave, of an immense and impetuous sea, swayed by a powerful wind and brightened and sparkling with the golden rays of a rising Sun 3.

It is worthy of observation, that although the subject of this Epistle is of so sublime and mysterious a character, and though the language is characterized by a majestic grandeur, and by a poetic and even lyrical tone, yet the whole management of the argument is methodical and systematic, such as might have been looked for in a philosophical Essay on Christian Faith and Practice.

Indeed, the Divine Apostle, while revealing in this Epistle the most mysterious supernatural truths, displays in a signal manner a marvellous combination of calm Judgment, temperate Reason, comprehensive Intelligence, tender Affections, and fervid Imagination.

II. Let us now consider the plan of the Epistle.

The Apostle has his eye fixed on the Great Author of all things, the Fountain of being and blessedness, the Everlasting Father of all 4. He reveals Him existing before the world, and he reveals to us ourselves existing in the Divine mind and counsel, and as chosen by the Divine love in the unspeakable riches of His Grace, and appointed by the pleasure of His Will for adoption into sonship in Christ 5.

He proclaims the Divine purpose to sum up all things in Christ, the Son of God, the King and Lord of Angels; in Christ, God of God, becoming Man, and so, by His Incarnation, uniting Angels and Men under one Head, in One universal Church in Heaven and Earth.

He teaches us to behold God in Christ taking human flesh, and dying in that flesh on the Cross; and thus reconciling God to Man by the offering of Himself a willing Victim for the World, and so destroying the enmity between God and men, and making peace 6.

He displays Christ on the same Cross reconciling man to man, by fulfilling and taking away the Law of Levitical Ordinances, which separated the Jews from Gentiles, who were aliens from the life of God, and without God in the world', and joining together all, as One New Man, in Himself's; and thus fully revealing the Mystery, which even the Angels themselves had not known, that

&lt;sup>1</sup> A sufficient proof, it may be observed, if proof be necessary, that human intelligence affords no adequate protection against the impostures of the Evil One.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Eph. ii. 2; vi. 12. <sup>3</sup> St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Church of Ephesus, the capital of Asia Minor, and in that to the Colossians, appears to have deof Asia Minor, and in that to the Colossians, appears to have signedly adopted the Asiatic style of writing, which was distinguished by splendour of imagery and exuberance of diction; in these respects these Epistles bear some resemblance to those which were afterwards written by the Asiatic Bishop and Martyr N N 2

S. Ignatius, especially the earlier portion of his Epistle to the Ephesians.

<sup>4</sup> i. 3; iii. 14. 5 i. 3-5. 12. On the connexion of this preamble with the subject of the Epistle immediately preceding this to the Ephesians (viz. the Epistle to the Romans), see above, p. 198.

&lt;sup>6</sup> ii. 16. <sup>7</sup> ii. 12. 8 ii. 15.

the Gentiles would be made fellow-heirs of the promise, and be united together in the Body of

He raises our eyes to Christ dying for us all, and redeeming us from the power, and guilt, and punishment of sin by the ransom there paid, and from the bondage of Satan; and also purchasing for us an eternal and heavenly inheritance by the infinite value of His precious Blood poured out for

He leads us to contemplate ourselves in Christ, by reason of His Incarnation. He shows us ourselves delivered, by virtue of His Death, from the debasing dominion of the Powers of the Air and of the Satanic Spirits of Darkness, and made children of light in the Lord, as members of His Church, formed from His most precious side pierced on the Cross for us.

He unfolds the glory and blessedness of the Church, taken from that side, as Eve was taken from Adam when he slept, and being no other than bone of His bone, and flesh of His flesh,—the Spouse of Christ 1. He represents us, as members of Him, Who, as God consubstantial with the Father, fills all things by His Godhead, and Who, as God-Man, by reason of His Birth, His Death, Burial, Descent into Hell, and Ascension into Heaven, fills all things, and has made us whose Nature He has taken, and whose Nature He wears, to be partakers of His own fulness<sup>2</sup>, and has united us in Himself to God, and Who, as our Head, has quickened us His members by His own free Grace, who before were dead in trespasses and sins, and has raised us from the Dead, and has carried us up with Himself into Heaven, and has made us to sit with Himself in heavenly places, and has given us access in Himself by one Spirit to the Father '.

He declares to us also the instrumental means by which these blessings of mystical incorporation in Christ are conveyed to us and to the whole race of Mankind. He declares that Christ has instituted a Visible Society, His Church Universal, which is to continue for ever in the World; that this Society is One Body, animated by One Spirit, and to be known by the worship of One Lord, by the profession of One Faith, and by the administration of One Baptism 5; that Christ "loved the Church and gave Himself for her, that He might sanctify and cleanse her with the washing of water by the Word ";" and that after His Ascension into Heaven, He gave spiritual gifts to men, and that He gave certain offices, the highest of which is that of Apostles, "for the perfecting of the Saints, and the building up of the body of Christ, till we all attain to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to a perfect man," that is, to the ripeness of spiritual manhood, "to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ ?."

He refers, therefore, to the practice of the Holy Apostles; and He teaches us that in the instrumental means employed by them for the maintenance of the Life and Unity, and for the expansion of the growth and stature, of the Church, and for the full development of her organization, we may see an exhibition of the mind of Christ Himself in the dispensation of those gifts and graces which He bestows by the operation of the Holy Ghost for that purpose, even to the end of time.

Thus, then, we may recognize in the Epistle to the Ephesians a divinely-inspired System of Instruction concerning the Origin, and Institution, and purposes of the Universal Church of Christ.

This is the dogmatic design of the Epistle.

III. In the second, or ethical, portion of it's, the Apostle proceeds to show that this spiritual Teaching, revealing the transcendental doctrines and sublimest Mysteries of our Faith concerning the Eternal Love, and Prescience, and Purpose of God the Father toward Man in the Incarnation of His Dear Son, and in delivering Him up to die for the sins of the whole World, and in summing up all things in Him, and in reconciling all things to Himself in Him dying on the Cross, descending into Hell, ascending into Heaven, and sitting on His own Right Hand in Glory, and sending the Gift of the Holy Ghost from heaven, and in uniting all men as fellow-members and as sons of God by adoption in Christ, in an Universal Church foreknown and predestined from Eternity, is not a mere scholastic thesis of speculative Philosophy, but is the very root and mainspring of all true Christian Practice.

He reminds us, that by reason of our Baptismal incorporation in the mystical Body of Christ, which is His Church, and by our fellowship with one another in Him, we are bound to abstain from lying, and to speak the truth, for "we are members one of another"."

&lt;sup>1</sup> See v. 30, 31, and note. <sup>2</sup> i. 23; iii. 19; iv. 13.

<sup>3</sup> i. 20; ii. 6.

<sup>4</sup> ji. 18.

<sup>5</sup> iv. 4 - 6. 6 v. 26.

<sup>7</sup> iv. 11-13. 8 Beginning at the seventeenth verse of the fourth chapter.

He admonishes us, that for the same reason we are bound to keep our hands from stealing, and to work honestly therewith, in order that we may be able to give to our fellow-members in need; and

That we are bound to keep our lips from evil words, in order that we may not grieve the Holy Ghost, by whom we were sealed, and that we may edify one another in love.

He shows that we are bound to abstain from all uncleanness, for by it we should violate our primary obligations as members of Christ's Body, and be joining ourselves in communion with those Powers of Evil and Spirits of Darkness whom we have renounced, and from whom we have been delivered by Christ. (v. 4—11.)

He shows that Marriage, which is the Mother of all household Charities and Virtues, has its foundation in the Doctrine of Christ's Incarnation, and of the Marriage-Union between Him and the Church, an Union consummated by His Death; and of our own spiritual espousals to Him, and our own communion with Him in His Blessed Body and Blood, (v. 30.)

Hence, therefore, he warns us, that sins against Marriage, such as Fornication and Adultery, are descerations of a great Mystery, that they are sins of sacrilege against Christ.

He solves the moral problem which perplexed—and still perplexes—Political Economists, and embarrasses Legislators, and distracts Nations, endeavouring to deal with it on other than Christian principles,—the problem of Slavery. The doctrine of the Incarnation, as preached by St. Paul in this Epistle, is the only method that ever has been, or ever will be, devised, for reconciling the rights of the Slave with those of the Master. It teaches them to regard one another as fellow-members in the body of Christ, and to love one another as brethren in Him; "Slaves, be obedient unto your Masters—as unto Christ, not with eyeservice as menpleasers, but as the Slaves of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart, with good will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men. And ye Masters, do the same things unto them; knowing that their Master and yours is in heaven, and there is no respect of persons with Him<sup>2</sup>."

IV. Thus the Apostle shows in this Epistle, that virtuous practice grows like ripe fruitage on the branches of the Spiritual Vine, by virtue of our union with Him Who said, "I am the Vine, yo are the branches," and by the efficacious supply of life and spiritual Grace which we drink in, by means of that mystical union in Him.

He affirms that we have been created anew in Christ Jesus, in order that we may tread in the appointed path "of good works which God hath prepared for us to walk in." (ii. 10.)

He shows the necessity of maintaining stedfastly this truth, and of teaching the Doctrine of the Unity of Christ's Church as the groundwork of Christian Ethics.

This is a proposition, of which men greatly need to be reminded, especially in times of division, when sound Teaching on this subject is idly disparaged as merely theoretical, and is sometimes even denounced as exclusive and illiberal, and when some persons appear to rejoice and exult in the miserable multitude of their religious divisions, as if they were proofs of a generous Liberty, and the luxuriant produce of a vigorous intellectual Energy.

But the divine Apostle denounces these things as indications of moral feebleness and spiritual sterility, and even of infantine silliness ; and declares that we shall be only like puny and stunted children, unless we attain to the Unity of the Faith (iv. 3), by which alone we can reach the ripe manhood and full stature of moral, intellectual, and spiritual growth.

Thus, then, it appears that Teaching concerning the constitution, offices, privileges, and duties of the Christian Church is a practical thing. It is, indeed, a practical thing, if the growth of man's moral, intellectual, and spiritual being ought to be his chief care; it is indeed a practical thing, if love of God, Whose goodness to men in Christ it reveals, is the mainspring of virtuous practice; it is a practical thing, if love of our fellow-men, whose nature Christ has taken, and joined for ever in Himself to the nature of God, and if love of our fellow-members in Christ are strong motives to the right discharge of social duties. It is a practical thing, if speaking the truth is a practical thing. It is a practical thing, if honest labour and abstinence from fraud are practical things, and are even the safeguards of society. It is a practical thing, if wrong notions concerning Slavery are destructive of domestic and national peace. It is a practical thing, if abstinence from pollutions of flesh and spirit, if purity and chastity, temperance and sobriety, are practical things. It is a practical thing, if violations of the Marriage Vow are sinful and shameful, and fraught with wretchedness to body

iv. 28.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Eph. vi. 5—9. On this subject see further below, Introduction to the Epistle to Philemon.

<sup>6</sup> John xv. 5.

<sup>6</sup> Cp. 1 Cor. iii. 1.

and soul, in time and eternity; and if the maintenance of the sanctity of Marriage, as symbolizing the mystical Union between Christ and His Church, is the source and well-spring of domestic peace and joy. It is a practical thing, if by the neglect of these duties men forfeit the hope of a blessed inheritance in the Kingdom of Christ, and if they thus make themselves partners with and companions for ever of the spirits of darkness 1. It is a practical thing, if by the exercise of these moral duties we walk as children of the light2, and are made meet for the glorious inheritance of the Saints in Light 3. It is indeed a practical thing, since we must all appear before the Judgment Seat of Christ to give an account of our own works; and since the fires of Hell will never be quenched, and the joys of Heaven will never vanish away.

Therefore we may reckon the Epistle of St. Paul to the Ephesians as among the most precious treasures of dogmatic Theology, Church Polity, and Christian Ethics, that the Divine Author of Truth has vouchsafed to the world.

V. Lastly, we may regard the Apostle Sr. PAUL as here associated with the beloved Disciple, Apostle, and Evangelist, St. John. One and the same Spirit worked and preached by both. And the great heathen City of Asia, Erhesus, famous for its idolatry and magical arts, was the scene of the conquests of the Gospel, which were achieved by His Divine Power, acting by these two holy Apostles. In that City, which worshipped the prolific powers of Nature, personified in the Ephesian Artemis', St. Paul proclaimed the regenerating virtue of Divine Grace shed upon all in Christ, "God manifested in the flesh." In that City, which adored the "image that fell down from Jupiter'," the Father of the heathen Pantheon, he preached Christ, the Image of God, the Father of Lights, Him who was sent from heaven to save the world. In that City, which fabricated silver shrines for Artemis, he taught that all who believe in Christ's Name are made temples of the Holy Ghost.

Thus St. Paul, preaching at Ephesus, and giving a solemn charge to the Ephesian Presbyters "to feed the Church of God, which He purchased with His own Blood "," and writing this Epistle to the Ephesians, and afterwards, at the close of his career, settling his beloved son Timothy as Bishop at Ephesus, and writing his two Epistles to Timothy as Chief Ruler of that Church, prepared the way for the Apostle St. John, who passed the latter part of his life at Ephesus, governing the Ephesian Church and the Churches of Asia dependent on it. And we may recognize in the Epistles of St. Paul to the Ephesians, and to Timothy the Bishop of Ephesus, a declaration of those Doctrines of the true Faith, particularly concerning the Divinity and Incarnation of the Son of God, the Eternal Word, which afterwards were displayed in all their fulness to the World by the Holy GHOST, in the Gospel, Epistles, and Apocalypse of the beloved Disciple, the Apostle and Evangelist who dwelt and died at Ephesus,-St. John 7.

II. On the date of the Epistles to the Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon.

An interval of about three years elapsed between the date of the preceding Epistle, to the Romans, and that of the three following Epistles, to the Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon.

(1) These three last-named Epistles were written by St. Paul when he was a prisoner (δέσμιος, Eph. iii. 1; iv. 1. Col. iv. 18. Philemon 1, 9, 10, 13).

(2) They were therefore written either at Casarca, or at Rome.

(3) They seem to have been written about the same time. For Tychicus is the bearer of the Epistles to the Ephesians (vi. 21), and to the Colossians (iv. 7); and Onesimus is associated with him in bearing the Epistles to Colossæ and to Philemon (Col. iv. 9. Philemon 10).

Besides, the same persons s are mentioned as present with the Apostle when he wrote the Epistles to the Colossians and Philemon; and their greetings are sent by him, together with his own salutations to those whom he addressed.

(4) The place, at which they were written, was most probably Rome.

<sup>1</sup> v. 5. 7. 11.

&lt;sup>2</sup> v. 8. <sup>3</sup> Cp. i. 18.

<sup>4</sup> The Greek name rendered Diana see note on Acts xix. 24. 5 Acts xix. 35.

&lt;sup>7</sup> See above, the Introduction to St. John's Gospel; and below, the Introduction to St. John's First Epistle.

<sup>6</sup> These are Aristarchus, Mark, Epaphras, Luke, Demas. Cp. Col. iv. 10—14, and Philemon 23, 24.

This is the opinion of ancient Expositors', and of the majority of modern Interpreters and Critics 3.

The following considerations seem to be conclusive against the recent supposition of some 3, that these Epistles were written at Casarca during St. Paul's two years' confinement there, before he was sent to Rome (Acts xxiv. 27); and they seem to be decisive in favour of the opinion that they were written at Rome during his first imprisonment in that city.

In his Epistle to the Romans St. Paul had expressed an earnest desire and intention to see Rome, after he had been to Jerusalem with the collection of alms for the poor Christians there's

It is evident that a visit to Rome was then the first object in his thoughts; and (as soon as he had executed his mission at Jerusalem) he would not form any plan of going to any other places before he had been to Rome.

Further, soon after he had written his Epistle to the Romans, he declared at Ephesus, "After I have been at Jerusalem, I must also see Rome" (Acts xix. 21).

Besides, when he had arrived at Jerusalem, he received a special commission from the Lord Jesus, to go to Rome. "Be of good cheer, Paul, for as thou hast testified of Me in Jerusalem, so must thou bear witness also at Rome" (Acts xxiii. 11). Accordingly he appealed unto Casar 5.

When these things are duly considered, it will not appear credible, that the Apostle should publicly declare his intention of going to other places, in a different direction, before he had been at

Now, if we refer to the Epistle to Philemon, written at the same time as that to the Colossians. and probably also as that to the Ephesians, we find that the writer hoped and designed to pay a visit, soon after its date, to Colossæ in Phrygia. "Prepare me a lodging, for I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you" (Philemon 22).

Such language as this could hardly be used by St. Paul at Casarea, where he was in bonds. having appealed to Cæsar, and having announced his desire and design to go to Rome, and having received a divine mandate to go thither. When he was at Casarea, all his thoughts would be directed westward to Rome; and he would not have announced an intention or a desire of going, in a contrary direction, into Phrygia.

Therefore these Epistles were not written at Casarea.

But, when his desire of visiting Rome had been accomplished, and when in obedience to the divine command, he had a near prospect of standing before Casar, and of bearing witness to Christ, then he might use such language as that; then he might cherish the hope of declaring to his friends in Colossæ, and to the Christian Churches of Asia, the blessings he had received of divine guidance, protection, and deliverance, in his manifold dangers at Jerusalem, Casarea, and at Rome; and he might reasonably desire to confirm their faith by declaring to them how the machinations of his enemies against him had been overruled by God for good, and how all "the things that had happened unto him had fallen out unto the furtherance of the Gospel" (Phil. i. 12).

Hence it appears most probable, that these Epistles were written at Rome, during the Apostle's first imprisonment in that city, A.D. 61-63.

III. On the Persons to whom the Epistle inscribed "to the Ephesians" was written.

The accuracy of this title has been controverted by some 6.

I. The external evidence adduced in behalf of the allegation that this Epistle is not rightly inscribed "to the Ephesians," is as follows:

(1) A passage in S. Basil (c. Eunom. ii. 19), where he says that St. Paul, writing an Epistle to the Ephesians, "as truly united by knowledge to the Existing One (τῷ ὄντι), denominated them in a singular manner (ιδιαζόντως), as existing (ὄντας), speaking to them thus, 'To the Saints who exist (τοις οὖσιν), and faithful in Christ Jesus.' For so those persons who are before us have delivered to us; and so we have found it written in the ancient copies of this Epistle." Eph. i. 1.

It thence appears that the words "in Ephesus" (ἐν Ἐφέσφ) were not found in some ancient Copies seen by S. Basil.

1 Chrys. Procem. ad Epist. ad Ephes. Jerome on Eph. iii. 1; having no more place in these parts, and having a great desire these many years to come unto you," &c.

2 See Davidson's Introduction, ii. p. 362, compared with Meyer's

5 See note above on Acts xxv. 10.

Einleitung über den Brief an der Epheser, pp. 15-19. Alford, See Rom. i. 10—13. and Rom. xv. 23, where he says, "Now

See Meyer's Einleitung, p. 9.

The allegations of others (e. g. De Wette and Baur) that the Epistle is not a genuine work of St. Paul, have been fully examined and refuted by Meyer, Davidson, and Alford, and do not require further notice.

Indeed, it could not be said, that St. Paul had addressed the Ephesans in a singular manner, peculiar to them (idiazórros) if he had written  $\tau o i s$  o  $i \sigma \iota v \dot{\epsilon} v \dot{\epsilon} v \dot{\epsilon} \phi \dot{\epsilon} \sigma \phi$ , inasmuch as he uses a similar mode of address to the Romans and to the Philippians.

The observation of S. Basil was probably derived from Origen, whose comment on this point was first published not long ago in Dr. Cramer's Catena<sup>2</sup>. Origen there says, "We found this expression, 'to the Saints that exist' (τοῖς άγίοις τοῖς οὖσιν), used only in the case of the Ephesians, and we inquire what its meaning is. Consider then, whether, as He who revealed Himself to Moses in Exodus describes His Name as the I AM (Exod. iii. 14), so they who partake in the Existing One become ὄντες, being called out of non-existence into existence, as St. Paul says, God chose the things that are not, in order to destroy those things which are." (1 Cor. i. 28.)

So Origin. It is true that S. Jerome here (who had Origen's Commentary before him, as he tells us in his Preface) speaks of this observation as too subtle'; and he affirms that other Expositors are of opinion that the true reading here is not "to those who are," but "to those who are holy and faithful at Ephesus."

It appears then-

(a) That the words "at Ephesus" were not found here in some ancient Copies.

(b) But that those persons who did not find those words here, did not entertain any doubt that the Epistle was rightly inscribed to the Ephesians.

Origen, who, as far as we know, was the first person who made the remark above cited, recognizes the Epistle as addressed to the Ephesians even when he is making the remark, and comments upon it as such.

The same may be said of S. Basil.

(2) The second argument in behalf of the allegation that the Epistle was not addressed to the Ephesians, is deduced from the assertion of Tertullian, that Marcion, the heretic, desired (gestiit) to alter it, so as to be inscribed "to the Laodiceans'."

But this testimony of Tertullian implies that such an inscription would have been an alteration, and it is accompanied with the assertion <sup>5</sup> that, "according to the verity of the Church, we have this Epistle addressed to the Ephesians, and not to the Laodiceans."

All then that can be admitted here is, that Marcion might perhaps have found in some copies of this Epistle the inscription, "to the Laodiccans;" and that this might have suggested to him the desire of which Tertullian speaks.

(3) The words "at Ephesus" ( $\hat{\epsilon}\nu$ 'E $\phi\hat{\epsilon}\sigma\varphi$ ) are not found in the text of the Vatican Manuscript (Cod. B), but have been added in the margin of that Manuscript by a later hand. The words  $\hat{\epsilon}\nu$  'E $\phi\hat{\epsilon}\sigma\varphi$ , at Ephesus, have been added in the Codex Sinaiticus,  $\aleph$ . These words are also erased from one Cursive MS. (Cod. 67.)

Hence it has been supposed by some, that this Epistle was either not addressed to the Ephesians, or that it was an encyclic or circular letter addressed to other Churches of Asia: and that a blank space was left in some copies after τοῦς οὖσιν, in order to be filled up with the name of such other Churches.

II. But on the other hand it is to be observed-

(1) That no copies now in existence have any other name than that of Ephesus; and all the extant Manuscripts, including the Vatican Manuscript, which have any title prefixed to the Epistle, exhibit the words "to the Ephesians"  $(\pi\rho\delta)$  'E $\phi$ e $\sigma$ iovs).

(2) That all the extant Manuscripts, except those just mentioned, have the words "at Ephesus" (ἐν Ἐφέσω) in verse 1.

(3) That the ancient Church universally received this Epistle as addressed to the Ephesians.

Here we may refer particularly to the testimony of the Apostolic Father and Martyr, S. Ignatius, who was the scholar of St. John, who lived and died at Ephesus. Ignatius was Bishop of a great Asiatic Church, Antioch, and he also wrote an Epistle to the Church of Ephesus; and in that Epistle 7, alluding to the Mysteries revealed by St. Paul in this Epistle 8, he congratulates them on their high dignity, as being συμμύσται Παύλου τοῦ ἡγιασμένου, initiated &lt;sup>1</sup> Rom. i. 7. Phil. i. 1. <sup>2</sup> Ed. Oxon. p. 102.

<sup>3 &</sup>quot;Quidam curiosius quam necesse est putant ex eo quod Moysi dictum est," &c., and he then recites the remark above quoted from Origen.

Ad Laodicenos, Tertullian c. Marcion. v. 11.

<sup>5</sup> Adv. Marcion. v. 11.

&lt;sup>6</sup> See the authorities in Meyer's Einleitung, p. 12.

<sup>7</sup> Ignat. ad Ephes. cap. 12.

Where the word Μυστήριον occurs six times, i. 9; iii. 3. 9; v. 32; vi. 19.

together with Paul the sanctified, into the mysteries of the Gospel; and adds that St. Paul makes mention of them in the whole ' of his Epistle, as in Christ Jesus, that is, as incorporated in Him: a very fit description of the character of this Epistle, which dilates specially on their mystical union and spiritual indwelling in Christ.

Another ancient witness to the same effect, also from Asia, is S. Irenaus, a scholar of S. Polycarp, Bishop of another neighbouring Asiatic Church, Smyrna, and also a disciple of St. John.

He quotes this Epistle about thirty times<sup>2</sup>, and wherever he mentions the persons to whom it was addressed, he speaks of them as the Ephesians 3.

Let us pass now to arguments from internal evidence.

It is alleged on behalf of the opinion that this Epistle was not addressed to the Ephesians—

That it does not contain any salutations, or any personal notices of any individuals residing in the place to which it is sent.

This, it is argued, is inconsistent with the supposition that it was addressed to Ephesus, where St. Paul had actually resided and preached for no less a space of time than three years. (Acts xix. 8-10; xx. 31.)

This remark deserves attention.

It may be observed with regard to it-

That the absence of personal notices and salutations may have arisen from the large number of persons with whom the writer was acquainted. An Apostle who had preached three years in a city could not specify all his friends there, and he might not wish to make invidious distinctions among them.

In the two Epistles to the Church of Corinth, where St. Paul had spent a longer time than in any other Gentile city except Ephesus (Acts xviii. 1. 11), there are no salutations.

There are no salutations in the Epistle to the Galatians, among whom St. Paul had laboured personally for some time.

On the other hand, there are more personal greetings in St. Paul's Epistle to the Church of Rome, where he had never been, than in all his other Epistles put together.

Again; he despatched this Epistle by the hands of an Asiatic friend and fellow-labourer. Tychicus, who was charged with messages to the recipients, concerning the affairs of St. Paul, in whose personal condition they are supposed to feel an affectionate interest. (Eph. vi. 21.) Tychicus could supply by word of mouth all that was wanting of personal and private greetings on the part of the Apostle.

Besides, as has been elsewhere observed ', the Epistle to the Ephesians proceeds on the assumption that the persons to whom it was addressed had been already well trained in the doctrines of Christianity; and that they were prepared and qualified to receive the full revelation of those sublime Mysterics which distinguishes this Epistle among the writings of St. Paul.

Who was so likely to have imparted this preparatory teaching to this great Gentile Church at Ephesus as the great Apostle of the Gentiles himself?

May we not therefore say, that in the ripe fruit of Christian Doctrine, brought forth in perfection in this Epistle, we see the genuine produce of the previous culture of the three years' residence and preaching of the Apostle at Ephesus 5, who, as he himself says, had kept "back nothing from them," but had "declared to them the whole counsel of God "?"

On the whole, then, there is nothing in the allegations which have been specified of sufficient weight to invalidate the testimony from ancient Manuscripts, Fathers, and Versions, and from the general tradition and consent of the Universal Church, that this Epistle was addressed by St. Paul to the Ephesians.

But it may be inquired—

May there not have been some real foundation for the discrepancy, however slight, which has been already noticed in the reading of the first verse of the Epistle, and for the omission

 $<sup>^1</sup>$  πάση = whole, as St. Paul uses the word in this Epistle, Eph. ii. 21.

&lt;sup>2</sup> The principal passages in which he cites it will be referred to in the following notes.

<sup>3</sup> See for instance, v. 2, and v. 14.

See p. 274 and note. Vol. II.—Part III.

&lt;sup>5</sup> The allegation from the other side from είγε ἡκούσατε, in iii. 2, has been considered in the note on that passage. See also

i. 15.

6 See his speech to the elders of Ephesus, Acts xx. 20-27, a speech which has many points of coincidence with this Epistle; e. g. cp. xx. 28 with i. 7. 14, and xx. 27 with i. 11.

of the word Ephesus, and for the observations already recited of Origen and S. Busil upon that reading?

May not some circumstances in the transmission of this Epistle have furnished Marcion with a plausible reason for his desire to alter the title of this Epistle, and to call it an Epistle to the Laodiceans?

In answer to these inquiries it may be observed-

(1) That all St. Paul's Epistles were designed for general circulation 1.

- (2) That Ephesus, being the City to which this Epistle was addressed, and being a great commercial City near the coast of Asia, would be the first Asiatic City in which this Epistle would be received and read.
- (3) That it would thence be disseminated by Copies among all the Churches of inner Asia, and would thus be brought to Laodicea, and through it to Colossæ, east of Laodicea.

(4) That it would probably pass through Colossæ and Laodicea in its way to Pontus, the country of Marcion.

- (5) That St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Colossians, commands them to read the Epistle from Landicea (Col. iv. 16), in the following words: "And when this Epistle (i. e. that to the Colossians) is read among you, cause that it be read also in the Church of the Landiceans; and that ye likewise read the Epistle from Landicea."
- (6) That this mandate of the Apostle in a Canonical Epistle,—that to the Colossians, which was to be publicly read by them in the Church, and which requires them to transmit that Epistle to Laodicea, and also to receive another Epistle from Laodicea and to read it in like manner,—affords a presumption that the other Epistle (viz. that from Laodicea) was one of his own Epistles, and was also a Canonical Epistle.

(7) That there is no evidence that any Canonical Epistle was ever addressed directly by him, or by any other Apostle, to the Laodiceans.

(8) That therefore there is good reason for the opinion of Bp. Pearson 2, Dr. Whitby, and others, that the Epistle which the Colossians were to receive from Laodicea, and which they were required to read, was no other than St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, which would come in a natural geographical order from Ephesus to Laodicea, and through Laodicea to Colossæ.

(9) Similarly that Epistle may have passed into Pontus by the same route; and thus Marcion may have taken occasion to designate the Epistle to the Ephesians as an Epistle to the Laodiceans.

(10) On the whole, it seems probable, that as the Colossians were expressly commanded by St. Paul to pass on their Epistle to the Laodiceans, so the Ephesians also received a similar instruction from St. Paul, perhaps by means of Tychicus, the bearer of their Epistle, to forward their Epistle to Laodicea.

The following pertinent observations on this subject are from Professor Blunt's Lectures on the Early Fathers, A.D. 1857, p. 438:-

"It is well known that a question has been agitated relating to one of the Epistles of St. Paul, viz. whether the Epistle to the Ephesians is properly so entitled? whether the Epistle which we call that to the Ephesians is not in fact an Epistle to the Laodiceans, the same to which allusion is made in Col. iv. 16, 'Cause . . . . that ye likewise read the Epistle from Laodicea?' as if St. Paul had said, 'Cause that ye read the epistle which I sent to Laodicea with directions that it should be forwarded to Colossæ.'

"But it is plain that Irenœus has no such understanding of the passage, but only knows of an Epistle to the Ephesians; whilst his quotations from it plainly identify it with our own of the same title.

"Still less does he afford any ground for the notion that a distinct Epistle to the Laodiceans ever existed, which has since disappeared.

"For, copious as are the extracts in Irenaus from the various writings of St. Paul (his very plan leading him to overlook none of them), there is not one that is not to be found in our present copies of them.

"And in another of the Fathers, Tertullian, we have more than negative evidence upon this question; for in his treatise against Marcion, in the fifth book of it (adv. Marcionem, v. 11), in which he is refuting that heretic out of the Epistles of St. Paul, on arriving at the Epistle to the Ephesians, he observes, 'We now come to yet another Epistle, which we entitle the Epistle to the Ephesians, but the heretics entitled it to the Laodiceans.' And he afterwards adds, that it was Marcion's pleasure to change the title of this Epistle (c. xvii.), as a proof of his own profound investigation of the subject.

"With respect to the text, therefore, in the Epistle to the Colossians, which gave occasion to the doubt we are now discussing, we may be disposed to conclude, with Bp. Middleton (on the Greek Article, note on Eph. i. 1), that nothing is more probable than Macknight's conjecture, viz. that the Apostle sent the Ephesians word by Tychicus, who carried their letter, to send a copy of it to the Laodiceans, with an order to them to communicate it to the Colossians."

ΠΡΟΣ ΕΦΕΣΙΟΥΣ.

Ι. 1 α ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, τοῖς ἁγίοις a Rom. 1. 1, 7. 1 Cor. 1. 1. Gal. 1. 1. b Acts 19. & 20. c 2 Cor. 1. 2. τοις οὖσιν ἐν Ἐφέσω καὶ ὁ πιστοις ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, ² ο χάρις ὑμίν καὶ εἰρήνη άπὸ Θεοῦ πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

Gal. 1. 3. Tit. 1. 4. 1 Pet. 1. 2. d 2 Cor. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 3. Rev. 4. 9—11. 3 d Εὐλογητὸς ὁ Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὁ εὐλογήσας ήμας έν πάση εὐλογία πνευματική έν τοις έπουρανίοις έν Χριστώ,  $^{
m Rev.~4.~9-11.}_{ m e~Rom.~8.~29,~80.}$   $^4$   $^{\circ}$  καθως έξελέξατο ήμας έν αὐτῷ πρὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου, εἶναι ήμας άγίους καὶ  $^{ m c.h.}$ 5. 27. Col. 1. 22. 2 Thess. 2. 13. 2 Tim. 1. 9. 1 Pet. 1. 1, 2.

Πρός 'Εφεσίους ] So A, B, D, E, F, G.

CH. I. 1. διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ] by the will of God. An important example of the use of the preposition διά, for the vindication of the true meaning of such texts as John i. 3, πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ ἐγένετο, said of Christ, and erroneously supposed by some to denote ministerial inferiority in the divine Λόγος. See Origen ', Jerome, and Theodoret here.

— τοῖς ἀγίοις τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Ἐφέσφ καὶ πιστοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ 'Inoou ] to the saints who are at Ephesus, and to the faithful who are in Christ Jesus. For proofs of the genuineness of these words, and for an examination of the argument derived from the omission of the words εν Εφέσω by B (supplied in the margin by B**, and by the hand of a corrector in &, Cod. Sinait.), and from the remarks of S. Basil (ad Eurom. ii. 19), and Tertullian (c. Marcion. iv. 1; v. 11. 17. 21), and Origen and Jerome, in loc., see above in the Introduction to the Epistle, p. 279.

After the words rois aylors a corrector has added maouv in &, and magiv is found in A and some Versions.

On the word ayioi, saints, as applied to Christians generally, see on Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 2.

On the ancient history and geography of Ephesus, see Dr. Smith's Dict. pp. 833-7, and above on Acts xx. 27-35; and Howson, ii. 80-103.

- Χριστφ 'Ιησού] So Ignatius l. c. and B. D. E.-Elz. has 'Ιησοῦ Χριστῷ.

The words  $\pi_i \sigma \tau \sigma \hat{i}$ ? X $\rho_i \sigma \tau \hat{\varphi}$  'I. are not to be rendered 'believers in Christ Jesus;' but  $\hat{\epsilon} \nu$  X $\rho_i \sigma \tau \hat{\varphi}$  'I $\rho \sigma \hat{o}$  denotes union in Him, Who is the X $\rho_i \sigma \tau \hat{o}$ s, or Anointed One, and is also 'In $\sigma \sigma \hat{v}$ s, or Saviour of His Body (Eph. v. 23), and through Whom all unction, and saving grace, and power flow down upon His Members incorporated in Him, and dwelling by faith and holiness in Him.

3. Εὐλογητός] בְּרַהְ Blessed: applied only to God. See above, Rom. ix. 5. 2 Cor. i. 3. 1 Pet. i. 3.

— εὐλογήσας] Observe the agrist. God blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places (cp. v. 20; ii. 6; iii. 10; vi. 12) in Christ Jesus, when He raised Him from the dead, and exalted Him to His own right hand; and thus by the exaltation of our Head made us also His Members to sit in heavenly places in Him (see i. 20), and poured out upon us the blessings of the Holy Ghost, consequent on Christ's exaltation and session at God's right hand. See iv. 8.

These blessings in heavenly places are tacitly compared by the Apostle with those earthly blessings which were promised to God's ancient people; and thus the superiority of the privileges of the Christian Church is intimated. Jerome.

Those blessings are properly spiritual blessings, which are wrought in the soul by the Spirit of God, and by the same Spirit are cherished and preserved in the heart of the receiver, and are proper and peculiar to those who are born of the Spirit. Bp. Sanderson, iii. p. 70.

After Kuplov N inserts καl Σωτηρος.

4. καθώς] according as. The Apostle thus intimates that our Exaltation in Christ is a sequel to our Election in Christ, and is in accordance with it and in pursuance of it. Cp. the use of καθώs in John xvii. 2. 1 Cor. i. 6; v. 7. 2 Cor. iv. 1; and see Meyer here and Ellicott.

4, 5. έξελέξατο ήμῶς κ.τ.λ.] He chose us for Himself in Him (Christ) before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blemish before Him in love, having predestined us to the adoption of sons through Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of His will.

'Eν ἀγάπη is construed by Chrys., Syriac and Arabic Versions, as expressive of the love of God in the act of predestina-tion; and so many modern Interpreters. The Vulg., Cod. Aug., and Ethiopic and Gothic Versions, join the words with those immediately preceding; and this on the whole seems the more natural combination. Ex  $\dot{\alpha}\gamma\dot{\alpha}\pi\eta$  seems to express a necessary fruit of our incorporation and indwelling  $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$   $\tau\dot{\varphi}$   $\dot{\eta}\gamma\alpha\pi\eta\mu\dot{\epsilon}\nu\dot{\varphi}$ , Almighty God, Who foresaw that we should fall in the first Adam, created rightcous, predestinated our Redemption in the Second Adam, even before the foundation of the world. Athanas. (Orat. ii. c. Arianos, p. 430), who compares 2 Tim. i. 9, where St. Paul says that God called us according to His own purpose and grace given us in Christ before the world began.

As to the Election of which St. Paul speaks in v. 4, and the Predestination specified in the next verse in the word προορίσας, the most satisfactory mode of ascertaining his sense is to examine how his words were understood in primitive times.

One of the best comments on this passage at the beginning of this Epistle to the Ephesians, is supplied by the introductory address of S. Ignatius, the disciple of St. John, in his Epistle to the same Church. That apostolic Father had St. Paul's words in his mind when he thus wrote,—'Ιγνάτιος ὁ καὶ Θεοφόρος τῆ εὐλογημένη εν μεγέθει Θεού Πατρός και πληρώματι, τη προωρισμένη προ αιώνων είναι δια παντός είς δόξαν παράμονον, άτρεπτου, ήνωμένηυ, καὶ εκλελεγμένην ἐν πάθει άληθυς ἐν θελήματι τοῦ Πατρός καὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν, τῆ έκκλησία τη δειομακαρίστφ, τη ούση έν Εφέσφ: that is, "Ignatius, also called Theophorus, to the Church in Ephesus of Asia, which is blessed in the greatness and fulness of God the Father, and which was predestinated before all ages to be for

<sup>1</sup> The citations of Origen in this and the following Epistles, when not otherwise stated, are from the Catena published by Dr. Cramer, Oxon, 1842, αμώμους κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ ἐν ἀγάπη, <sup>5 f</sup> προορίσας ήμας εἰς νίοθεσίαν διὰ f Rom. 8. 15, 29, Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς αὐτὸν, κατὰ τὴν εὐδοκίαν τοῦ  $\theta$ ελήματος αὐτοῦ,  $^6$ ς εἰς  $^{631}_{g}$  Matt.  $^{3.17}_{g}$ . ἔπαινον δόξης τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, ἐν ἢ ἐχαρίτωσεν ἡμᾶς ἐν τῷ ἡγαπημένῳ,  $^7$  ἡ ἐν  $^{617}_{col. 1.13}$ . ῷ ἔχομεν τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν διὰ τοῦ αἴματος αὐτοῦ, τὴν ἄφεσιν τῶν παραπτω- h Acts 20. 28. μάτων, κατὰ τὸ πλοῦτος τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ, <sup>8</sup> ῆς ἐπερίσσευσεν εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐν πάση <sup>ch. 2. 7.</sup> ever to enduring and unchangeable glory, and to be united and elect in the true passion of Christ, by the will of God the Father, and of Jesus Christ our God."

Col. 1. 14. Phil. 4. 19. 1 Pet. 1. 18, 19. Heb. 9, 12.

It is evident that S. Ignatius here applies the words Election and Predestination—and that he supposed St. Paul to apply them—to the whole visible Church of God at Ephesus; to all those who were joined together in the body of Christ by the apostolic symbol of "one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism." (Eph.

St. Paul himself has fully declared his own meaning in this respect in other passages of his Epistles, especially in Rom. viii. 29, 30 (where see note), which happily illustrates the present text, and is clearly illustrated by it.

Compare above, Introduction to Romans, pp. 195. 198. St. Peter also (1 Pet. i. 1, 2) applies the words ἐκλεκτοί κατὰ πρόγνωσιν Θεοῦ, 'Elect according to the foreknowledge of God,' to whole Societies of Christians; and he applies the word συνεκλεκτή, 'co-elect,' to a Church. (1 Pet. v. 13.)

This observation might have preserved this text from becoming a subject of contentious controversy concerning the election and final reprobation of individuals; which is known only to God, and cannot be predicated by man, either of himself or of

S. Chrysostom well observes, that in the word election applied to the Universal Church of Christ, which is a chosen generation (1 Pet. ii. 9), a reference is made by the Apostle to the choice made of old by God of the seed of Abraham, the Jewish nation, to be His peculiar people. The Jews were God's elect people. He has now chosen all the faithful in Christ. See above, pp. 192

- είναι ήμας άγίους The purpose of our election was, that we should be holy. God did not elect us because we were holy, or because He foreknew that we should be holy (the Arminian theory), but in order that we might be holy. Cp. Eph. ii. 10; and see above, pp. 197, 198, and Chrys. and Jerome here.

— ἀμώμουs] without blemish. Tittmann, Synon. p. 29. Meyer.

Cp. v. 27.

- κατενώπιον αὐτοῦ] in the sight of Him Who seeth all things.

5. είς νίοθεσίαν] to adoption. This word shows that we are not, as Christ is, sons of God by nature, but were predestinated to be made sons of God by adoption in Christ, Who is the only begotten Son of God (Origen), and Who took our nature in order to make us sons of God. Compare the Collect for Christmas Day.

— εἰς αὐτόν] unto Himself; so that by virtue of our adoption in Christ (Who is "God with us," "God manifest in our flesh") we might become "partakers of the Divine Nature."

κατά την εὐδοκίαν τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ] according to the good pleasure ('bene-placitum,' the free grace and bounty) of His Will.

But we are not therefore to imagine that God acts arbitrarily or capriciously in this or in any thing.

"They err, who think that of the will of God to do this or that, there is no reason but His will." Hooker (I. ii. 3). And St. Paul seems to have guarded against this notion in v. 11, where he says that God did what He did in our election, according to the counsel of His will. God acts freely according to the good pleasure of His will, but this good pleasure is regulated by the counsel of His will.

Many times there is no reason known to us of God's acting; but, that there is no reason thereof, I judge it most unreasonable to imagine, inasmuch as He worketh all things according to the counsel of His will (v. 11), and whatever is done with counsel, hath of necessity some reason why it should be done. Nor is the freedom of the will of God a whit abated by means of this, because the imposition of this law on Himself is His own free act.

6.  $\ell \nu \tilde{\gamma}$ ] in which. So Elz. with the majority of MSS.; and so Scholz, Tisch., Bloomf., Harless, Ellicott. A, B, and a few Cursives, have  $\tilde{\gamma}_5$ , which has been received by Lachmann, Meyer, Alf. See also Winer, G. G. § 24, p. 148, who compares Eph. iv. 1. 2 Cor. i. 4.

- ἐχαρίτωσεν] 'gratificavit.' (Vulg.) The Syriac, Arabic, and Æthiopic Versions, understand the word as intimating an effusion and collation of grace on us, and so Jerome.

Chrysostom interprets the word as meaning not only that He bestowed grace and favour upon us, but that He made us to become gracious, and pleasing in His sight, inasmuch as He views us as incorporated in Christ, in whom He is well pleased (Matt. iii. 17; xii. 18; xvii. 5); and Chrys. compares Ps. xlv. 12, where the king has pleasure in the beauty of the Church. And so Theodoret, Theophyl., Ecumen. Cp. Sirach xviii. 17, άνηρ κεχαριτωμένος.

Both senses seem to be justified by the analogy of language and of doctrine, and therefore the word may be rendered, 'He graced us in the Beloved One.' But neither of these meanings would authorize us to render κεχαριτωμένη (in Luke i. 28) as equivalent to a source of grace to others.

- ἐν τῷ ἠγαπημένω] in the Beloved One, in Whom we have redemption, by His Blood - Christ.

A refutation of the Socinian theory, that it was inconsistent with God's Love to give up His own Son to suffer death,-the Innocent for the guilty. It was God's εὐδοκία, or Good-Pleasure, to redeem us in Christ; and He evocation, or book-reased, to redeem us in Christ; and He evocation, was well pleased in Christ His well-beloved Son. (Matt. iii. 17; xii. 18; xvii. 5.) And never was He more well-pleased, than when Christ offered Himself a willing Victim to redeem the world. See note above on Matt. xvii. 5.

7. την ἀπολύτρωσιν] the redemption, by the price (τιμή) of His blood paid as our ransom (λύτρον) from death; and also as the purchase-money by which He acquired us to Himself, and to everlasting life in Himself. Cp. 1 Pct. i. 18; and Grotius, de Satisfactione Christi, pp. 4. 28; and see notes above on Rom. iii. 25, and below on 1 John iv. 10.

That man is properly said to be redeemed, who is rescued from an enemy's hand, by whom he has been despoiled of liberty. We were in captivity, enslaved by the powers of this world, and could not lift up our hands from our chains, or so much as raise our eyes, unless some one had come to redeem us. he so great, as to be able to redeem the whole world by a ransom paid for it?—Jesus Christ, the Son of God. He gave His own blood, and rescued us from slavery and made us free. Jerome.

In Him we are created anew, and recover the image of God. Cp. Theodoret, and see below, v. 14.

- την άφεσιν των παραπτωμάτων] the forgiveness of sins. He had spoken of the redeeming worth and efficacy of Christ's blood; he now speaks of its expiatory and propitiatory virtue, of which St. John says: "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and He is the propitiation for world." (1 John ii. 1, 2). Cp. Rom. iii. 25, δν προέθετο δ Θεδε ίλαστήριον διὰ τῆς πίστεως ἐν τῷ αὐτοῦ αἴματι.

What is properly contained in this expression, forgiveness of sins?

(1) As sin is called a debt by Christ Himself, and is combined with the verb ἀφιέναι, to release (Matt. vi. 12; cp. Matt. xviii. 27, and Luke xvii. 3), we may say that ἄφεσις ἄμαρτιῶν means remission of sins considered as debts incurred by us, and by which we stand obnoxious to God.

But this is not the whole matter:

(2) The word àφιέναι in reference to sin is used by the LXX for next, to expiate and reconcile; and also for wing, to carry and take away; and also for הַלָּה, to pardon. Hence the term άφεσις άμαρτιῶν contains the notion of an expiation and of a reconciliation, and also of bearing and taking away sin, and of consequent pardon for sin. And since it is so ordered by God, that without shedding of blood there is no aφεσιs, or remission (Heb. ix. 22)—there must be a victim slain; and in order to take away the sins of the whole world, that victim must be of infinite worth. And supposing such a victim to be provided and to suffer in our Nature, then we have an assurance that a sufficient propitiation for our sins, and a satisfaction to God's injured holiness and justice, has been provided, and that our sins have been remitted, and that we are reconciled to Him.

And that this has been done by Christ dying for us is testified by Holy Scripture, Heb. ix. 26; x. 12. Rom. iv. 25. 1 John ii. 1, 2; iv. 10. Cp. Bp. Pearson, Art. x. p. 675.

— τὸ πλοῦτος] So A, B, D*, F, G, and so ℵ. Elz. τὸν

i Rom. 16, 25, ch. 3, 9, Col. 1, 26, 2 Tim. 1, 9, Tit. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 20. j Gen. 49. 10. Dan. 9. 24. Gal. 4. 4. Col. 1. 19, 20. σοφία καὶ φρονήσει, 9 ι γνωρίσας ήμιν τὸ μυστήριον τοῦ θελήματος αὐτοῦ κατά τὴν εὐδοκίαν αὐτοῦ, ἡν προέθετο ἐν αὐτῷ 10 j εἰς οἰκονομίαν τοῦ πληρώματος τῶν καιρῶν, ἀνακεφαλαιώσασθαι τὰ πάντα ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς  $^k$  ἐν αὐτῷ,  $^{11}$  ἐν ῷ καὶ ἐκληρώθημεν προορισθέντες κατὰ  $^k$  Αcts 26. 18. Rom. 8. 17. Col. 1. 12.

πλοῦτον. Cp. ii. 7; iii. 8. 16. Phil. iv. 19. Col. ii. 2. Winer, επερίσσευσεν] which he made to superabound. Cp.

§ 9, p. 61. η
 Cor. iv. 15; ix. 8. I Thess. iii. 12, where περισσεύω is used in an active sense; and so it is explained by Theodoret and Theophyl., and in the Æthiopic and Gothic Versions, and by Winer (p. 148), and Meyer, and Afford.

He made the well-spring of His mercy and love to gush forth, and to refresh and cleanse us with its streams. Theodoret.

- ἐν πάση σοφία και φρονήσει] in all wisdom and prudencebestowed upon us by the superabundance of His grace. Has is every, that is, every kind, that is needful for us. Cp. Winer, § 18, p. 101. Σοφία and φρόνησις are expressly described as gifts of the Spirit by Isa. xi. 2.

The Heathen Philosophers imagined themselves to be the only wise and prudent, but their wisdom is folly, and generates vanity and madness (Rom. i. 22. 1 Cor. i. 20), but the Christian who is filled with grace from the Spirit of Wisdom and Understanding, though he may be despised as a fool by this world, yet he is, and will be one day acknowledged to be, the only wise and prudent man. Cp. Wisdom v. 4. The difference between σοφία and φρόνησις, as used by the Hellenistic writers, seems to have been correctly stated by the ancient Expositors, namely, that σοφία expresses wisdom, properly so called, and φρόνησις is that faculty which applies the principles of wisdom, and is, in a word, wisdom in action. Cp. the use of the word φρόνιμος in Matt. x. 16; xxv. 2, and φρονίμως ἐποίησεν Luke xvi. 8. Thus God, Who is the Only Wise, is said to stretch out the heavens φρονήσει (Jer. x. 12. Prov. iii. 19), and φρόνησιs is said to be a fruit of σοφία (Prov. viii. 1). And Solomon is said to have received σοφίαν και φρόνησιν from the Lord (1 Kings iv. 29), the latter as a sequel to the former; and he says that the άφρων does evil with laughter, but σοφία generates φρόνησιν (Prov. x. 23). Hence there is truth in S. Jerome's remark that σοφία relates both to visible and invisible things, but φρόνησις to what is

9. γνωρίσας ήμῦν τὸ μυστήριοι] having made known to us the Mystery of His will. If He had not made it known to us, we should never have known it; and that is the reason why it is called a Mystery. Bp. Sanderson (i. 233). The plan of Redemption is a Mystery of the Divine Will in that it proceeds entirely therefrom (cp. v. 11), and not from any human act or

10. εἰς οἰκονομίαν τοῦ πληρώματος τῶν καιρῶν] for the dispensation of the fulness of the seasons, which, observes Theodoret, is thus expressed by St. Paul in Gal. iv. 4. When the fulness (πλήρωμα) of the time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the Law, to redeem them that were under the Law, that we might receive the adoption of Sons. Cp. Mark 15, πεπλήρωται δκαιρός.
 The dispensation of the fulness of the seasons, signifies that dispensation of God to man, the Incarnation, which waited for its manifestation till the seasons predetermined by God had been fulfilled. For examples of this use of the genitive, see Jude 6, κρίσις μεγάλης ἡμέρας. Winer, § 30, p. 169.

As to the word οἰκονομία, used in this sense, see below, iii. 9, and 1 Tim. i. 4; and this sense has been well expressed by S. Ignatius in his Epistle to the Ephesians, c. 18, δ Θεδς ήμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ἐκυοφορήθη ὑπὸ Μαρίας κατ' οἰκονομίαν

It seems that the early Christian writers derived their use of the word οἰκονομία from this passage of St. Paul, and applied it to the Incarnation. See Euseb. H. E. i. 1; i. 2, and passim, and Routh, R. S. ii. 239. 263, and Suicer in voce.

άνακεφαλαιώσασθαι τὰ πάντα κ.τ.λ.] to sum up all things for Himself in Christ, both the things in heaven and the things and how was it effected?

In what does this ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, or recapitulation, consist?

The sense is well expressed by Chrysostom, thus: We call a thing an avakepalalwois, or recapitulation, when the subject is concisely brought into a small compass. God in Christ gave One Head to all, angels and men; the Word, Who is God, to angels, and the same Word made flesh, to men.

The word κεφαλαιώσαι signifies συντόμως συναγαγείν (Hesych.), to gather up into a small compass, to sum up; see the 1190 of the word κεφάλαιον Heb. viii. 1. And ἀνακεφαλαιοῦν is to recapitulate, as a speaker does when in his peroration he draws together his arguments into a small compass, and brings them, as it were, to a head, and lays them before the audience in a concise

The word κεφάλαιον being derived from κεφαλή, head, there is a peculiar fitness, as the ancient Interpreters observe, in the application of this word to Christ.

(1) Christ's work of Recapitulation consists in bringing all things, which before were separated and disjointed, under one Head, Himself. Chrys., Ecum., Bengel, De Wette.

Heaven and earth were at variance, and heavenly Beings were separated from earthly, they had not one Head (Chrys.); and earthly things were at strife among themselves.

But the Son of God, God of God, Creator of the World, the Lord of Angels, became Man; and by becoming Man He united the Human Nature to the Divine in His own Person; and joined all men together in Himself, by taking the Nature of all, and thus He brought Angels and Men, Heaven and Earth, under one and the same Head. Chrys.

There is one Christ Jesus, our Lord, Who came by an universal dispensation, "omnia in semet Ipsum recapitulans."

He Who was Invisible became Visible; He Who is Incomprehensible became Comprehensible; He Who is impassible became passible; He Who is the Word became Man, in order that as He is Lord of heavenly and invisible things, in that He is the Word of God, so also He might have Lordship over earthly and visible things, by making Himself the Head to the Church, and so concentrate all things in Himself. Irenæus (iii. 16. 6).

Omnis dispositio in Eum desinit per Quem cœpta est, per SERMONEM schicet Dei, Qui et caro factus est. Tertullian (de Monog. 5).

Monog. 5).
(2) Tertullian rightly supposes that an act of restoration, a "reductio ad initium" (c. Marcion. v. 17), is intimated by the word ἀνακεφαλαίωσις, or recapitulatio, and so the ancient Versions in Cod. Augiensis et Boernerian. In fact, the Son of God by becoming Man, reconciled God to Man, and made peace between Earth and Heaven; and by being the Second Adam, the Esther of the New Creation or reconcepts race, brought to the Father of the New Creation, or regenerate race, brought together the scattered tribes of the Earth, and joined them to the Church of Heaven.

This is what St. Paul predicates of Christ when he says that "it pleased the Father that in Christ all fulness should dwell, and having made peace through the blood of the cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself,—by Him, whether they be things on earth or things in heaven" (Col. i. 19). Severian.

So Augustine (Enchiridion, 62) speaks of the Incarnation as a work of instauration, as supplying to angels from men what had been lost to angels by the fall of the apostate angels; and also as an instauration to men by raising them up to what they lost by the fall of Adam: and Peace, he says, was restored to the world by the harmony thus effected between all intellectual creatures, and between them and their Creator.

The Invisible Angelic Powers, we may well believe, groaned over our degeneracy and ungodliness; for if they rejoice in the recovery of one sinner, how much more in the restoration of the World! And this was effected by the Incarnation, and Passion, and Resurrection of Christ. Thus Human Nature arose, and was freed from corruption, and was arrayed with Immortality.

The Prophecies of the Old Testament were accomplished, and the figurative Ritual of the Ceremonial Law, which was made after the pattern in the heavens (Heb. viii. 5; ix. 23), was fulfilled in Christ. "In cruce et passione Domini recapitulata sunt omnia Universa Mysteria. Omnis dispensatio vetustatis, non solùm quæ in terris, sed etiam quæ in cælis gesta est, in Christi passione completur." Jerome.

Besides, the whole Creation waits and yearns for a Restoration in the Second Adam from the Curse, to which it was made subject in the first Adam. As it sympathized with man in his unhappy fall in Adam, so it yearned and groaned with him for the Incarnation, so it will triumph with him in his glorious Resur-rection in Christ. See on Rom. viii. 19—22, and Theodoret here.

For an exposition of this text, see also Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, i. 265.

11. ἐκληρώθημεν] we were made His κλῆρος, or heritage.
We become in Christ His λαὸς ἔγκληρος (Deut. iv. 20). There seems to be a reference to God's choice of the Jews of old as His πρόθεσιν τοῦ τὰ πάντα ἐνεργοῦντος κατὰ τὴν βουλὴν τοῦ θελήματος αὖτοῦ,  $^{1 \text{Rom. 8. 15, 16.}}_{k 10, 14-17, 12}$  εἰς τὸ εἶναι ἡμᾶς εἰς ἔπαινον δόξης αὐτοῦ τοὺς προηλπικότας ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ,  $^{2 \text{Cor. 1. 12.}}_{k 10, 14-17, 22}$  $^{13}$   $^{1}$   $^{2}$   $^{1}$   $^{2}$   $^{1}$   $^{2}$   $^{1}$   $^{2}$ περιποιήσεως, είς ἔπαινον τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ.

 $^{15}$   $^{n}$   $\Delta$ ià τοῦτο κἀγὼ ἀκούσας τὴν καθ' ὑμᾶς πίστιν ἐν τῷ Κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ  $^{00}$   $^{00}$   $^{00}$   $^{10}$ κλήρος among the Nations (cp. Exod. xix. 5, 6), and to His choice of the Levites to be His special κλήρος among the Jews.

(Deut. x. 9; xviii. 1, 2.)

So, under the Gospel, Christians are become "a holy priest-hood, a peculiar people" (1 Pet. ii. 5. 9), and Churches are κλήροι Θεοῦ. Cp. 1 Pet. v. 3. Hence Theodoret (in Ps. xxiii.) says, Formerly the Jews were called a peculiar people, the inheritance of God; but now God's people and inheritance are they who are chosen from the Gentiles, and have been illumined by the beams of the true faith.

The word κληροῦν, κληροῦσθαι, rare in the LXX (see l Sam. xiv. 41, and Isa. xvii. 11), and found only in this passage of the New Testament, is common in ancient Christian writers, and signifies to be enrolled in the Clerus or Clergy of the Church.

See the authorities in Suicer, ii. p. 113, by which the interpretation above given of the word is confirmed.

(2) Some learned Interpreters render it "we were chosen by lot"—but this seems less appropriate here, and less consistent with the counsel of God's Will, of which the Apostle speaks.

(3) Others suppose that ἐκληρώθημεν means, "we were made partakers of the lot or inheritance of the Saints." See Acts xxvi. 18. Col. i. 12. So Meyer.
 — προορισθέντεs] See v. 5.

- κατὰ τὴν βουλὴν τ. θ.] according to the counsel of His will. The word βουλὴ implies deliberate design. Cp. Luke xxiii. 51. Acts xxvii. 12. Cp. v. 5. God does nothing with caprice, but "worketh all things with counsel." Origen.

12. τους προηλπικότας] us who before had hoped. The participle with the article indicates the cause; and is equivalent to the Latin "quippe qui speraverimus." Winer, § 20, p. 121.

Meyer, p. 447.

The preposition πρδ is explained by καl δμεῖs, which follows. We of the natural Israel were led by our Prophets to preconceive hopes in Christ. You Gentiles received the word of truth, and embraced the Gospel.

13. ἐσφραγίσθητε] ye were sealed. The literal Israel received the seal of Circumcision (Rom. iv. 11), and were thus shown to themselves and to others to be God's peculiar people. Ye were sealed with the true Circumcision, that of the Spirit in your baptism (Rom. ii. 28, 29). Cp. 2 Cor. i. 21, 22. Eph. iv. 30, and — τῷ Πνεύματι τῆς ἐπαγγελίας] by the Spirit of Promise.

Of what Promise? That made by God speaking by Joel, ii. 28 (Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 17), and by Christ, Who said, Behold I send the promise of My Father upon you. (Luke xxiv. 49.

Acts i. 4.)

14. ἀρραβών] earnest, arrha, part payment (see on 2 Cor.i. 22; v. 5), and a pledge of the whole. The earnest of the Spirit is "pars ejus honoris, qui nobis à Deo promissus est." Irenæus, v. 8. "Hoc enim complebitur unde arrha data est." Aug. Serm. v. 8. "Hoc enim complebitur unde arrha data est." Aug. Serm. 23. "Si autem arrhabo tantus, quanta erit possessio!" Jerome.

- εἰς ἀπολύτρωσιν τῆς περιποιήσεως] for the redemption of the purchasing, i. e. with a view to that Redemption whose end and purpose was to purchase for you the inheritance in heaven, of which St. Paul had just been speaking. On the force of  $\pi\epsilon\rho l$  in this composite word, see Titus ii. 14.

In order to understand this expression, it is to be ob-

(1) That the genitive case, της περιποιήσεως, is here used, as often in the New Testament, where, in classical Greek, a verb, adjective, or participle, might be used, namely, to define the chaadjective, or participle, might be used, namely, to define the characteristic quality or design of the preceding substantive. See note on Matt. xxii. 11; xxiv. 15, τὸ βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως. Winer, § 34, p. 210. Cp. note below on iv. 16, ἄφὴ τῆς ἐπιχορηγίας, 'joint for the supply.'

The Redemption of the purchasing is a phrase equivalent to 'the Redemption,' whose end was to acquire something by purchases.

(2) That the word περιποίησις is used in the sense of acquisition as here, 1 Thess. v. 9. 1 Pet. ii. 9, where it is active, and it is well rendered acquisitio here by Vulg. and Cod. Augien., and Arabic, and conservatio by Gothic, and adoptio by Cod.

(3) That the Redemption (ἀπολύτρωσις) wrought by Christ's death, and the price paid by His blood, is to be considered as availing to us in two respects,

(1) For our deliverance from sin and death;

This is what is specially to be predicated of His Sacrifice, as satisfactory.

(2) For the purchase of our title to an everlasting reward and heavenly inheritance.

And this is what is to be predicated of His Obedience as meritorious. See above; v. 7.

(4) St. Paul unites both these characteristics of Christ's death. It is an ἀπολύτρωσις, in that it is our deliverance from shame and woe; and it is an ἀπολύτρωσις τῆς περιποιήσεως, in that it is the purchasing to us of an Inheritance in glory and bliss. Hence in the Epistle to the Hebrews (ix. 15) he speaks of Christ's death for the redemption of transgressions that they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance.

The force of els is well expressed by Jerome, as signifying with a view to. We are qualified by the Spirit to partake of the benefits of the redemption which is the purchase of our heavenly inheritance. Spiritus repromissionis idcirco nunc sanctis datur, ut redimantur et copulentur Deo, in laudem gloriæ Ipsius.

(5) There is also another acceptation of the word περιποίησις, in an active sense, which may probably have been in the mind of the Apostle;

Christ, our Redeemer, purchased us to Himself (περιεποιήσατο), as St. Paul had said to the Ephesian Presbyters at Miletus (Acts xx. 28). Christ, our Redeemer, purchased the Church with His own blood, and he therefore says, Ye were bought with a price (1 Cor. vi. 20). And St. Peter (2 Pet. ii. 1) speaks of false teachers denying the Lord that bought them.

Thus the act of Redemption was an act of περιποίησις, by which the Redeemer acquired the redeemed as a possession to Himself. And they are therefore called by St. Peter (1 Pet. ii. 9) a  $\lambda abs$   $\epsilon is$   $\pi \epsilon \rho \iota \pi o i \eta \sigma \iota \nu$ , and by Christ Himself (in Isaiah xliii. 21) a  $\lambda abs$   $\mu o \nu$ ,  $\delta \nu$   $\pi \epsilon \rho \iota \epsilon \pi o \iota \eta \sigma \delta \mu \eta \nu$ . Cp. Malachi iii. 17. And this is the sense assigned to the word here by Chrysostom, Severian, and others.

This sense may well accord, and be combined with the former. For it is by virtue of our acquisition by Christ, as His People, and by our adoption into, and union with Him, that we have a title to the heavenly inheritance which He has purchased for us. It is by following our Divine Joshua that we enter the heavenly Canaan which He has conquered for us. It is as a people purchased by the blood of the Lamb out of every kindred under heaven, that we are made Kings and Priests unto God for evermore. (Rev. v. 9, 10.)

Some learned Interpreters understand περιποίησιs in a passive sense, i. e. as the thing purchased,-the Church. But this seems contrary to analogy.

15. κὰγὼ ἀκούσαs] I also having heard; having heard probably in his detention at Rome, where he now writes. See above, Introduction, p. 278.

No argument can reasonably be hence deduced (as is supposed by some) against the opinion that St. Paul had been personally concerned with those to whom this Epistle is addressed. What he now heard, was the good news of their perseverance. See Theodoret, who rightly observes, that "as St. Paul was grieved when he heard of schisms at Corinth (1 Cor. i. 11), where he had preached for a year and a half, so he now rejoices when he hears of the faith and love which prevailed at Ephesus," where he had preached for nearly three years.

16. ὑμῶν] of you. The second ὑμῶν is not in A, B, D, and in some Cursives and Versions, and is expunged by Lachm., Rück., and Meyer; but is retained by Tisch., Ellicott, and Alf.

p Col. 1. 9—15. & 2. 3. Pames 3. 17, 18. q Col. 1. 29. q Col. 1, 29, 2, 12, sqq, 1 Thess, 1, 5, 2 Thess, 1, 11, James 1, 18, r Ps, 110, 1, Acts 2, 24, 1 Cor. 15. 25. Col. 3. 1. Heb. 1. 3. Heb. 1. 3. & 10. 12. 1 Pet. 3. 22. s Phil. 2. 9. t Ps. 8. 6. 8. Col. 1. 19. -18. Matt. 28. 18. 1 Cor. 15. 27. Heb. 2. 8. Rom. 12. 5. 1 Cor. 12. 6. 27. ch. 4. 12. 15. 16. ch. 4. 12, 15, 16 & 5. 23, 30. Col. 1. 18. & 3. 11.

μνείαν ύμων ποιούμενος έπὶ των προσευχών μου, <sup>17 ρ</sup> ίνα ὁ Θεὸς τοῦ Κυρίου ήμων Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὁ πατηρ της δόξης, δώη ὑμῖν πνεῦμα σοφίας καὶ ἀποκαλύψεως εν επιγνώσει αὐτοῦ, 18 πεφωτισμένους τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς τῆς καρδίας ύμων, είς τὸ εἰδέναι ύμας τίς έστιν ἡ έλπὶς τῆς κλήσεως αὐτοῦ, καὶ τίς ὁ πλοῦτος της δόξης της κληρονομίας αὐτοῦ ἐν τοῖς ἁγίοις, 19 ٩ καὶ τί τὸ ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος της δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ εἰς ήμᾶς τοὺς πιστεύοντας, κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ κράτους της ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ, 20 την ἐνήργησεν ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ ἐγείρας αὐτὸν ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, καὶ ἐκάθισεν ἐν δεξιὰ αὐτοῦ ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις, 21 ° ὑπεράνω πάσης άρχης καὶ έξουσίας, καὶ δυνάμεως καὶ κυριότητος, καὶ παντὸς ὀνόματος ὀνομαζομένου οὐ μόνον ἐν τῶ αἰῶνι τούτω, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐν τῷ μέλλοντι, <sup>22 t</sup> καὶ τὰ πάντα ύπέταξεν ύπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ, καὶ αὐτὸν ἔδωκε κεφαλὴν ὑπὲρ πάντα τῆ ἐκκλησία, 23 ήτις έστι τὸ σώμα αὐτοῦ, τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ τὰ πάντα έν πᾶσι πληρουμένου.

17.  $\delta$  πατηρ της δόξης] the Father of Glory. Cp. Ps. xxiv. 7,  $\delta$  βασιλεύς της δόξης. Acts vii. 2,  $\delta$  Θεός της δόξης, and 1 Cor. ii. 8; and as to the use of  $\pi\alpha\tau\eta\rho$ , cp. 2 Cor. i. 3,  $\pi\alpha\tau\eta\rho$   $\tau\hat{\omega}\nu$ οἰκτιρμῶν. James i. 17. See Chrys., and Vorst. de Hebraism. 247. "Pater gloriæ Ille est, cujus Christus Rex gloriæ ascendens canitur in Psalmo" (Ps. xxiv. 10). Tertullian, adv. Marcion. v. 17. God is the Father of Glory in an absolute sense, in His own glorious essence and attributes.

And, in a relative sense, He is the Father of Glory to us. And in this character He is represented to us in this Epistle.

See i. 2, 3; iii. 14.  $-\delta \phi \eta$ ] The optative mood after  $\pi po\sigma \epsilon \nu \chi \hat{\omega} \nu - l \nu \alpha$ ; indicates that  $l \nu \alpha$  does not here mean in order that. St. Paul does not mean that the gift is dependent on his own prayer, but that it is the subject of it. Cp. Harless, Rückert, and Olshausen. Winer, § 41, p. 260, and below, iii. 14—16.

On the form δώη for δοίη, see Lobeck, Phryn. p. 346, who cites examples of it from Josephus, Eusebius, and others. Cp.

18. πεφωτισμένους] having been, and being, enlightened in the yes of your heart. On this transition from the dative to the eyes of your heart. accusative case, see Acts xv. 22.

It was necessary that they should be enlightened as to the eyes of their mind, in order that they might have the ἐπίγνωσις of God, and know the hope of His calling. This illumination was His gift.

καρδίαs] of the heart. So the best MSS. and Editions.

Elz. has διανοίας.

So St. Paul's contemporary, Clemens R. (i. 36), speaking of a similar spiritual knowledge and illumination in Christ, says, διὰ τούτου ἡνεψχθησαν ἡμῶν οἱ ὀφθαλμοὶ τῆς καρδίας, διὰ τούτου hθέλησεν δ δεσπότης της δθανάτου γνώσεως ημῶς γεύσασθαι.

— h έλπίς] the hope of the calling. The object proposed in the calling. See on Rom. xii. 6.

the calling. See on Rom. xii. 6.
19.  $\tau$ l  $\tau$ δ ὑπερβάλλον μέγεθος] what is the exceeding greatness. This word μέγεθος is illustrated by S. Ignatius in his opening address to the Ephesians, Ἰγνάτιος  $\tau$  $\hat{\eta}$  εὐλογημένη ἐν μεγέθει Θεοῦ πατρὸς καὶ πληρώματι. The Epistle of Ignatius to the Ephesians does not often directly quote that of St. Paul, but it is imbued with its spirit, and abounds with allusions to it.

— κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ κράτους τῆς ἰσχύος] according to the working of the power of His might. κράτος is ἰσχὺς in action. Ἐνέργεια is the working of the κράτος. Cp. below,

22. και τ. πάντα ὑπέταξε κ.τ.λ.] and He put all things in subjection under His feet.

You will ask, it may be (says Dr. Waterland), what is the meaning of those texts? How was all power given Him, according to Matt. xxviii. 18? Or how were all things put under His feet, according to Eph. i. 22?

Nothing is more easy than to answer this.

The Λόγος, or Word, was from the beginning Lord over all; but the God incarnate, the Θεάνθρωπος, or God-man, was not so till after the Resurrection. Then He received in that capacity what He had ever enjoyed in another. Then did He receive that full power in both natures which He had heretofore possessed in one only. This is very well represented by Hermas, in his fifth Similitude, where the Son of God is introduced under a double capacity, as a son and as a servant, in respect of His two natures, divine and human.

From hence you may perceive, how easy it is to account for our Lord's having all power given Him after His resurrection; given Him in respect of His human nature, which was never so high exalted, nor assumed into such power and privilege, till that time; having before been under a state of affliction and humilia-

There is a notable fragment of Hippolytus (vol. ii. p. 29, ed. Fabric.; and see a parallel place in Origen, Com. in Ioh. p. 413), which is so full to our purpose, that I cannot forbear adding it. Speaking of that famous passage in the Epistle to the Philippians (chap. ii.), and particularly upon these words, "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him" (v. 9), he comments upon it thus; "He is said to be exalted, as having wanted it before; but in respect only of His humanity; and He has a name given Him, as it were a matter of favour, which is above every name, as the blessed Apostle Paul expresses it. But in truth and reality, this was not the giving Him any thing which He naturally had not from the beginning: so far from it, that we are rather to esteem it His returning to what He had in the beginning, essentially and unalterably: on which account it is, that He having condescended, οἰκονομικῶς, to put on the humble garb of humanity, said, 'Father, glorify me with the glory which I had' (John xvii. 5). For He was always invested with divine glory, having been coexistent with His Father before all ages, and before all time, and the foundation of the world." Waterland (Defence of some Queries, i. p. 69).

 ξδωκε] He gave, See iv. 11.
 κεφαλην ύ. π. τ. ἐκκλησία] Head above all things to the Church. See on v. 10. Wonderful mystery! He placed the Church on the same throne with Himself; for where the Head is, πληρουμένου is not the passive, but the middle voice. See Theodoret, and the Syriac, Æthiopic, and Gothic Versions, and Winer, § 38, p. 231, and it is to be distinguished from the active πληροῦντος, as indicating action done by and for Himself.

Universe with His grace.

How, it may be asked, is the Church the fulness of Christ? As the Body is of the Head; and as the Head is of the Body.

Chrysostom.

And in order that we may not imagine that the Church has any intrinsic fulness of her own, St. Paul uses the middle voice, and says that Christ fills up every thing in all things for Himself. In fact, He enables the Church, which is His Body, to be the fulness of Himself, the Head. And therefore St. John says that of llis fulness have we all received. (John i. 16.)

Christ fills the Church with all grace here, and will fill her with all glory hereafter. Cp. Theodoret.

Christ is the Sun of Righteousness; and the Moon, which derives her light from the Sun, is an emblem of the Church, which is illumined and filled up by the light of Christ. (Matt. xxiv. 29. Luke xxi. 25.) The Moon may be called the fulness of the Sun, as its orb is filled up by the Sun's light.

The Church here spoken of, is the Church Universal on Earth, the whole company of faithful people, of every age and country, and also of all Angels and Saints, who are summed up together into One full lunar Orb of Glory by Christ, God and Man, Who, by His Divinity, fills all things and rules all creatures in Heaven and Earth; and by the union of the Human to the Π. 1 α Καὶ ύμᾶς ὄντας νεκρούς τοῖς παραπτώμασι καὶ ταῖς άμαρτίαις, 2 b έν α col. 1 21. αίς ποτε επεριεπατήσατε κατά τον αίωνα του κόσμου τούτου, κατά τον ἄρχοντα δάξιο. τέκνα φύσει ὀργῆς, ὡς καὶ οἱ λοιποί·  $^4$  ° ὁ δè Θεὸς, πλούσιος ὢν ἐν ἐλέει, διὰ τὴν  $^2_{\text{col. 3.1.4}}$ . Tit. 3. 3. Wisd. 13 1.

Divine in His One Person, has gathered together all Men and Angels into One Body under One Head, and enlighteneth every one that cometh into the world. (John i. 9.)

Hence St. Paul says that by our adoption into Christ's Body we have come to Mount Sion, the City of God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of Angels, to the General Assembly and Church of the First-born, and to the Spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling which speaketh better things than that of Abd. (Lieb vii 24) better things than that of Abel. (Heb. xii. 24.)

CH. II. 1 παραπτώμασι καὶ ταῖς άμαρτίαις] in transgressions and sins. Παράπτωμα (from παραπίπτω, to fall or swerve aside from the right path) is distinguished from παράβασις, and from αμαρτία, in being sometimes the consequence only of ignorance, inadvertence, or negligence,—whereas παράβασιs, transgression,—a deliberate going aside and across the marked line of law and duty,—and  $\delta \mu a \rho \tau (a, sin, have more of wilfulness and presumption in them. The difference is well marked in Ps. xix. 12, <math>\pi a \rho a$ πτώματα τίς συνήσει: .... 13, καθαρισθήσομαι από άμαρτίας μεγάλης. Cp. Tittmann, Syn. N. T. p. 47, and Bp. Sanderson, i. 82; iii. 224.

2. κατά τον αίωνα τ. κ. τ.] according to the course of this present world, its duration, its fashion, its pleasures, and its cares. Cp. 2 Tim. iv. 10, ἀγαπήσας τὸν νῦν αἰῶνα, as distinguished from, and opposed to, the αἰὼν ὁ μέλλων. Cp. Luke xvi. 8; xx. 34, οἱ νἱοὶ τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου. 2 Cor. iv. 4, ὁ Θεὸς τοῦ αίωνος τούτου. Gal. i. 4.

— κατά τὸν ἄρχοντα τῆς έξουσίας τοῦ ἀέρος] according to the Prince of the Dominion of the Air, the Ruler of all the Forces of the Air, the Sovereign of its Empire. Matt. xii. 24, ἄρχων των δαιμονίων. Cp. Eph. vi. 12, τους κοσμοκράτορας του σκό-

Satan and his Angels, being cast down from heaven (2 Pet. ii. 4. Jude 6), but not being yet consigned to hell, have their empire in this lower air (ἀηρ, not αἰθηρ), and are therefore called powers of the air, and of darkness.

On the present power and operation of evil Spirits, and on their future destiny, see notes above on Matt. viii. 29, πρδ καιρού, and Luke viii. 31.

Since their fall, the Evil Angels, being dispersed some in the air, some on the earth, some in the water, some in the minerals, dens, and caves, that are under the earth, have by all means laboured to effect an universal rebellion against the laws of God. These wicked spirits the heathen honoured instead of gods; particularly some as dii inferi, some in oracles, some in idols: in a word, no foul or wicked spirit was not, one way or other, honoured of men as God, till such time as Light came and dissolved the works of the devil. Hooker (I. iv. 3).

Therefore, in an Epistle to the Ephesians, whose city was a stronghold of idolatrous worship (Acts xix. 27), and of magic arts (Acts xix. 19), St. Paul fitly reminds them, that the powers to which they had paid homage, and which a great part of the world yet worshipped, were Evil Spirits, Powers of Darkness, leagued together against God, under the Ruler of the Air, the Spirit working in the children of disobedience.

— τοῦ πνεύματος] of the spirit which now worketh in the children of disobedience. The words τοῦ πνεύματος are to be taken in apposition with ἀέρος, and are to be explained by reference to the opposite spirit which worketh in the children

The Spirit who worketh in us breathes upon us from above, from the glowing  $\alpha i\theta \eta \rho$ , the pure and lofty empyrean of the heaven of heavens. But the Spirit which worketh in the children nearen of neavens. But the spirit which workern in the children of disobedience is in the low and murky air  $(\hat{\alpha}\eta\rho)$  in which the Powers of Evil dwell. This is their inspiration. By a similar figure the Apostle says, v. 8, "Ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord." The Rulers of the darkness of this world, the spiritual powers of wickedness (vi. 12), do not abide where the stars shine and the holy angels dwell, but in the gloomy region of this nether air. In this part of the heaven those foul spirits reside, against whom we contend and wrestle, in order that, having vanquished those evil Angels, we may gain our reward, and be united together in an incorruptible immortality Vol. II.—Part III.

with the Holy Angels. Having been severed from the darkness of evil angels by the light of the Gospel, and having been redeemed from their power by the precious blood of Christ, watch ye and pray, that ye may not enter into temptation. Augustine (Serm. 222). See also Augustine, Epist. 217, where he enlarges on this subject.

- ἐν τ. νίοις τ. ἀπειθείας] in the children of disobedience:
 'in filius incredulitatis.' Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 17); 'filius diffidentiæ.' (Vulg.) But it is something more than unbelief; it is unbelief in action, disobedience. Cp. Heb. iv. 6.
 This phrase, "worketh in the children of disobedience," is a comfortable assurance to us, that the Devil has no power against the children of obedience. Theodoret.

The phrase of viol τ. ἀπειθείαs is adopted by the imitator of Ignatius (ad Philipp. 4), where he says that "the Prince of this world knows that the confession of the Cross of Christ is his own destruction; and that before the Cross of Christ was, he worked in the children of disobedience, and that now he works in men to tempt them to disobedience, and to deny the Cross, which is the origin of his own perdition. He works to this end in Jews, Heathens, and Heretics." See also the same writer ad Smyrn. 7, where he speaks of those who are ashamed of the Cross, and mock at the Passion and Resurrection of Christ, as the children of that Evil Spirit who tempted Adam, and slew Abel, and endeavoured to supplant Job, and excited the Jews against Jesus, and now worketh in the children of disobedience.

3. ημεν (Β ημεθα, and so κ) τέκνα φύσει ὀργῆς] we were by nature children of wrath. So the Vulgate, Syriac, Gothic, Arabic, and Æthiopic Versions. We were by nature children liable to God's wrath; we were objects of His δργη rather than His στοργή, on account of His holiness and hatred of sin (cp. 2 Pet. ii. 14, κατάρας τέκνα, and above on John xvii. 12, νίδς ἀπωλείαs), and by reason of our hereditary taint derived from our first Parents, in whom we all sinned and fell. See Rom. v. 12.

The sense which the Church of England assigns to this passage is evident from the use she makes of it in her Catechism. See also the beginning of her "Office for Baptism of Infants, and cp. Ps. li. 5. John iii. 6. On the position of the substantive  $\delta \rho \gamma \hat{\eta} s$  see Rom. ix. 21. Phil. ii. 10. 1 Tim. iii. 6; and Winer,

§ 30, p. 172.

The word φύσει, 'by nature,' at first seems to create a difficulty. For, Is not Human Nature the work of God? Certainly it is, when it is understood as a whole; but not in its abuses. Hence St. Paul speaks of Gentiles doing by Nature the works of the Law (Rom. ii. 14, where see note), and men violating the Laws of Nature by evil lusts (Rom. i. 26); and he appeals to Nature, when he is reasoning on a question of order and decency in the Church. (1 Cor. xi. 14.)

Can we then be said to be subject to God's wrath, by reason of that Nature which is His work

This question presented itself to primitive Writers in commenting on this passage; and has been answered by Tertullian in his treatise on the Human Soul, which contains the germ of the argument, afterwards developed by Bp. Butler in his Sermons on "Human Nature:" "Quùm dicit Apostolus 'fuimus aliquando naturá filii irae,' irrationale indignativum suggillat," (this is a doubtful exposition,) "quod non fit ex eâ naturâ quæ à Deo est, sed ex illà quam diabolus induxit, dominus et ipse dictus sui ordinis, 'Non potestis duobus dominis servire' (Matt. vi. 24), pater et ipse cognominatus, 'Vos ex diabolo patre estis' (Joan. viii. 44), ne timeas illi proprietatem naturæ alterius ascribere posterioris et adulteræ, quem legis avenarum superseminatorem, et frumentariæ segetis nocturnum interpolatorem." (Matt. xiii. 23–25.) Tertullian (de Animà, c. 16).

Later theological Writers were driven to the use of erroneous language on this subject by an excess of reaction against the heresy of Pelagius; and because he claimed more for Human Nature than was due, they were tempted to condemn it altogether, and thus exposed themselves to the charge of disparaging Him Who is its Author. See for instance Augustine (de Libero Arbitrio, iii. 54, in Joann. Tract. 14, ad finem; c. Julian. Pelagian.

lib. vi.).

The meaning of the word φύσις, or Nature, must be determined by the context in which it stands.

& 6. 4, 5, 8. & 8. 11. Col. 2. 12, 13. & 3. 1, 3. Acts 15, 11. Tit. 3, 5. g Matt, 16, 17, Rom. 3, 21, r Rom. 5. 6, 8, 10. πολλην ἀγάπην αὐτοῦ, ην ἡγάπησεν ἡμᾶς, 5 f καὶ ὄντας ἡμᾶς νεκροὺς τοῖς παραπτώμασι συνεζωοποίησε τῷ Χριστῷ, χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι, 6 καὶ συνήγειρε, καὶ συνεκάθισεν ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. Τ ἴνα ἐνδείξηται ἐν τοῖς αίωσι τοις ἐπερχομένοις τὸ ὑπερβάλλον πλοῦτος τῆς χάριτος αὐτοῦ ἐν χρηστότητι έφ' ήμας έν Χριστώ 'Ιησού. 8 ε τη γαρ χάριτί έστε σεσωσμένοι δια της Τητ εφ ημας εν Αριστφ 1ησου τη γαρ χαριτι εστε σεσωσμενοι δια της  $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$

Here, evidently, it is used by St. Paul to signify Nature,not as created by God, but as depraved by man, not listening to the Voice of God speaking to him by Reason and Conscience, and not submitting to and obeying the Will and Word of God, and not seeking for light and strength in the Grace of God, but making an abuse of Nature to become his Nature, by listening to the Voice of the Evil One, and giving himself up to the indulgence of the violent and vicious passions of his Nature, and surrendering himself a miserable slave to the Enemy of God, the Prince of the Power of the air, and joining himself to the children of disobedience. See Bp. Butter, Sermon ii. on Human Nature, where he considers the word Nature as used in this text by St. Paul, and distinguishes its various significations; and cp. note below on iv. 26, and Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans,

6. και συνήγειρε, και συνεκάθισε] and He raised us together with Christ, and made us sit together with Him in the Heavenly places, at God's Right Hand. By virtue of Christ's Incarnation, Resurrection, and Ascension, and Session at God's Right Hand, and by reason of our Incorporation into that Body, of which, as the Apostle has already stated, we all are Members under Him our Head (i. 10. 23; cp. v. 30), we are already risen, and are seated, in hope and expectation, in heavenly places.

In collestibus Christus jam sedet, nondum autem nos. Sed quia spe certa quod futurum est jam tenemus, simul sedere nos in cælestibus dicit Apostolus nos, nondum in nobis, sed jam in Illo."
Augustine (c. Faust. xi. 8).

Because the Body of Christ—that is, the Church—will be at God's Right Hand in bliss; therefore the Apostle says that God has made us to sit together with Christ in heavenly places. though we are not yet there in person, we are there already in hope. Augustine (de Agone Christiano, 28).

The Head being already seated there, the Body sits with it; therefore the Apostle adds, that we sit there together in Christ.

Even now the Saints of God have their conversation in heaven (Phil. iii. 20); their home is there, and their heart is there. And so, even now they sit together in heavenly places in Christ. Origen, Jerome.

Bp. Pearson (Art. vi. p. 513) thence takes occasion to dwell on the consequent duties of faith, trust, and hope, in Christ our Head, who has risen, and ascended, and sitteth at God's Right Hand, and has thus raised us and exalted us His Members, even to the immediate neighbourhood of the Throne of God. (Rev. iii. 21.) Hence also follows the duty of personal holiness. While we look upon Him at God's Right Hand, we see ourselves in we fook upon film at God's light fland, we see ourselves in Heaven. "How should we rejoice, yea, how should we fear and tremble at so great an honour!" "Bo ye holy, for I, the Lord your God, am Holy." (Lev. xix. 2; xxi. 8.)

7. Ινα ἐνδείξηται ἐν τοῖς αἰῶσι τοῖς ἐπερχομένοις] that He might show forth, in the ages that are succeeding, the exceeding riches of His grace. "Ut ostendat sæculis supervenientibus inenarrabiles divitias benignitatis suæ, Qui à Lege et Prophetis annunciatus est, Quem Christus Suum Patrem confessus est."

Irenœus (iv. 5).

- τὸ ὑπερβάλλον πλοῦτος] So Λ, Β, D*, F, G.—Elz. has the masculine form. See above, i. 7.

— χάριτος - ἐν χρηστότητι— ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰη. 8.τῆ γὰρ χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι] Cp. v. 5. There is an observable alliteration in the words χάρις, χρηστότης, Χριστός, in these verses, 5—10. And it may not be irrelevant to remark, that the first radical letters of these words, XP, constitute a perfect septenary and sabbatical number, 700, -a number expressive of Fulness and of Rest (see on Matt. xxviii. 1), and formed the Christian symbol of the Church and Empire of Rome. See on Rev. xiii. 17, 18.

8, 9. χάριτί ἐστε σεσωσμένοι—οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων] by grace ye have been saved, not of works. Quoted by S. Polycarp ad Philip. i., who adds θελήματι Θεοῦ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

On the doctrine of the passage cp. Gal. ii. 16, and the Remarks "on the Doctrine of Justification" prefixed to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 193—204; and cp. Tit. iii. 5, where salvation is spoken of as a thing already effected, as here; and see above, Rom. viii. 28—30.

8. Θεοῦ τὸ δῶρον κ.τ.λ.] God's is the gift; ye are saved by Grace through faith; and this very thing that you are saved through faith, does not originate and proceed out of yourselves (εξ ύμων). Of God is the gift, for a gift it is. Faith is from God. He called you, that you might believe. (Theodoret.) Your salvation does not proceed out of your works, lest any one should boast; for we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good for we are His workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God prepared before for us to walk in.

We are not only God's ποίημα, or handiwork, but we have also been created anew in Christ. The word κπισθέντες is said of our Regeneration. (Theodoret, Theophyt.) See v. 15, and Gal. vi. 15, and 2 Cor. v. 17. The word ποίημα, though not to be limited to our original creation, yet surely does not exclude it. And we were created anew for good works. God therefore has a double claim on we first so our reache next as our reaches in double claim on us, -first, as our ποιητής, next as our κτιστής in Hence it follows, that the power we have of working does not spring out of ourselves, but from God, and cannot therefore have any intrinsic merit in it, for which we can claim salvation as We are mere creatures, and works of God; all our faculties are of Him. To Him be all the praise. We were created anew in Christ Jesus, and were admitted into a state of salvation, not because we had done good works and merited salvation thereby; but we were admitted into that state by God's free grace, in order that we might do good works which God before prepared for us as our appointed path to lead us into heaven (cp. Chrys.), as we formerly walked in transgressions and sins which led to destruction. See v. 1.

Hence Augustine says (in Ps. cxlii.), "Opera bona non habemus? Habemus plane; sed vide quid sequitur, Ipsius fig-mentum sumus." Do not therefore imagine that thou canst do any thing of thyself that is good. No. Turn thine eyes away any thing of thyself that is good. No. Turn thine eyes away from thine own work, and look up to the work of Him Who made thee. He has made thee. He re-makes in thee what He had made and thou hast un-made. He made thee to be; and if thou art good, He made thee to be so; and therefore work thy work with fear and trembling. (Phil. ii. 12, 13.) Why with fear and trembling? Because it is God Who worketh in thee to will and to do of this good alterance. Therefore the with fear and and to do of His good pleasure. Therefore work with fear and trembling, in order that our Creator may have good pleasure to work in the low valley of our working. O God, there can be no good in us, unless it be done by Thee Who hast made us!

11. τὰ ἔθνη ἐν σαρκί] Gentiles in the flesh; that is, not circumcised, not having in your flesh the seal of God's covenant with — οἱ λεγόμενοι ἀκροβυστία κ.τ.λ.] ye who are called the Uncircumcision by those who call themselves the Circumcision. But do not heed these names. For, if ye have the Circumcision of the Spirit, ye, though uncircumcised in the flesh, have the true Circumcision (Rom. ii. 29. Phil. iii. 3), whereas if they are un-circumcised in heart and ears (Acts vii. 51), their Circumcision becomes Uncircumcision. (Rom. ii. 25.) Cp. Jerome here, who adds, "Circumcidamur et sabbatizemus in Spiritu, spirituales victimas offerentes . . . nos Deo offeramus, et accincti lumbos et expediti pascha comedamus."

12. καιρώ] season, only temporary. - χωρίς Χριστού] separate from Christ. ξένοι των διαθηκών της ἐπαγγελίας, ἐλπίδα μὴ ἔχοντες, καὶ ἄθεοι ἐν τω κόσμω.

13 1 Νυνὶ δὲ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ὑμεῖς οἱ ποτὲ ὄντες μακρὰν ἐγγὺς ἐγενήθητε ἐν John 10, 16.  $τ\hat{\psi}$  αἴματι τοῦ Xριστοῦ.  $^{14}$   $^{\rm m}$  Αὐτὸς γάρ ἐστιν ἡ εἰρήνη ἡμῶν, ὁ ποιήσας τὰ  $^{{\rm Acts \, 10.\, 36.}}_{{\rm Acts \, 10.\, 36.}}$ αμφότερα εν, καὶ τὸ μεσότοιχον τοῦ φραγμοῦ λύσας,  $^{15}$  η τὴν ἔχθραν ἐν τῇ σαρκὶ  $^{\text{Rom. 5. 1.}}_{\text{Gal. 3. 28.}}$  αὐτοῦ, τὸν νόμον τῶν ἐντολῶν ἐν δόγμασι, καταργήσας, ἴνα τοὺς δύο κτίσῃ ἐν  $^{\text{n. 2 Cor. 5. 17.}}_{\text{Gal. 6. 15.}}$  έαυτῷ εἰς ἔνα καινὸν ἄνθρωπον ποιῶν εἰρήνην,  $^{16}$  καὶ ἀποκαταλλάξῃ τοὺς ἀμ $^{\text{Col. 2. 14.}}_{\text{OROm. 6. 6.}}$ φοτέρους ἐν ἑνὶ σώματι τῷ Θεῷ διὰ τοῦ σταυροῦ, ἀποκτείνας τὴν ἔχθραν ἐν  $\overset{\& 8.5}{col.}$  1.20. αὐτῷ·  $^{17}$   $^{p}$  καὶ ἐλθὼν εὐηγγελίσατο εἰρήνην ὑμῖν τοῖς μακρὰν, καὶ εἰρήνην τοῖς  $\overset{\& 2.14}{p}$  .148. 14.

— ξένοι τῶν διαθηκῶν] aliens from the covenant: on the genitive, see Winer, § 30, p. 175. The preposition  $\xi\xi$  is involved in its derivative ¿évoi.

- ἄθεοι] without God-ye had a multitude of gods, and yet ye were without God (Jerome), and this in God's own world, and although ye yourselves were His creatures, created in His Image. Strange solitude!

13. έγγν ε έγενήθητε έν τῷ αἴματι τοῦ Χριστοῦ] ye who were formerly far off were brought near by the blood of Christ. How was this done?

(1) By the Incarnation of Christ.

Forasmuch as all the children are partakers of one flesh and blood (see Acts xvii. 26), He also Himself likewise took part of the same (Heb. ii. 14); and being God manifest in the flesh (1 Tim. iii. 16), He united us to God.

(2) By the propitiatory and expiatory shedding of His Blood on the Cross, by which He redeemed us from death, the penalty of sin (Heb. ii. 14, 15. 1 John ii. 2; iv. 10), and by which also He atoned and reconciled us to God (2 Cor. v. 18, 19. Col. i. 20, 21), and has purchased for us an everlasting inheritance.

Christ (says the Apostle) reconciled us by His Body and by His Flesh. That flesh, which in Him was spotless, reconciled the flesh, which in us was sullied by sin, and brought it into amity with God. (Cp. Rom. viii. 3.) Hence we see the necessity of confessing the reality of Christ's human flesh, and its constitution with tractility with any flesh. Otherwise the Reproviletion has substantiality with our flesh. Otherwise the Reconciliation between us and God would never have taken place. But now Christ, by His communication of Nature with us, has reconciled man to God. He has reconciled us by the body of His flesh, and has redeemed us by His blood. In every Epistle the Apostle clearly testifies that we are saved by the flesh of our Lord and by His blood. Irenæus (v. 14). 14.  $\dot{\eta}$  elp $\dot{\eta}\eta\mu\hat{\omega}\nu$ ] our Peace. Christ is our Peace, in reconciling men to God, and in reconciling all nations to each other

- δ ποιήσας τὰ ἀμφότερα εν] He Who made both to be one. "Qui fecit duo unum, Judaicum scilicet populum et Gentilem."

Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 17).

— τὸ μεσότοιχον τοῦ φραγμοῦ λόσας] having broken down the intervening wall which hedged off the Jew from the Gentile, and having united all men as one family in Himself, the Second Adam, one new man, in Whom there is neither Jew nor Greek . . . for ye are all one in Christ Jesus (Gal. iii. 28). See Acts xv. 9. So Tertullian, l. c., and Severian here, and S. Jerome.

Bp. Fell, Hammond, Wetstein, and others, suppose an allusion here to the Court of the Gentiles fenced off from the rest of the Temple (Ezek. xliv. 7. Acts xxi. 28), which was indeed a practical evidence of that separation.

But the word φραγμός, or hedge, leads the mind rather to the metaphor of the Vineyard, in which the favoured people of God were planted, and in which they were fenced off by a hedge from all other Nations. See Isa. v. 7, "The Vineyard of the Lord of Hosts is the house of Israel." And v. 2, "He made a wall about it," where the LiXX has  $\phi\rho\alpha\gamma\mu\delta\nu$ , hedge, as St. Paul here,  $\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\epsilon\theta\eta\kappa\alpha$ . And see our Lord's own words, Matt. xxi. 33. Mark xii. 1.

15. την έχθραν έν τῆ σαρκί κ.τ.λ.] having by His flesh abolished the enmity, namely, the Law of the Commandments, in positive precepts. Such seems to be the order and construction positive precepts. Such seems to be the order and construction of the words. The meaning is, that Christ by His Flesh, which was the Flesh common to all, and by His Obedience, which was meritorious for all men, without any distinction of race, abrogated and annulled the enmity (Rom. viii. 3) which separated Jew from Gentile, namely, the Law of Ritual Ordinances, but not the Commandments enjoining moral duties, which are perpetual and ob-ligatory on all, and which our Lord declared to be binding on all when He said, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the command-ments" (Matt. xix. 17).

But He abrogated such ordinances as consisted in δόγματα.

positive edicts and decrees, such as Circumcision. He not only took away the curse of the Law, and mitigated the rigour of the Moral Law, but He repealed the ordinances of the Ceremonial

The word δόγμα is never applied in Scripture to any commandment of Natural Law, but only to occasional and positive Edicts promulgated by Authority, and such as had no force before promulgation. (See Luke ii. 1. Acts xvi. 4; xvii. 7.)

That this is the meaning of δόγματα is evident from Col. ii. 14. 20, which affords the best explanation of the word as used here, and of the sense of this passage.

Christ effected this "in and by His Flesh."

(1) By taking that flesh which had been defiled by lusts of the flesh (see v. 3), and by sanctifying it, and uniting it to God in Himself. See on Rom. vii. 6.

(2) By taking that flesh which formerly had been made by Circumcision a note of difference and occasion of separation between Jew and Gentile (see v. 11), and by taking away that cause of difference and separation by abolishing the Ceremonial

(3) By perfect obedience to that Law, and by fulfilling all righteousness (Matt. iii. 15) in the flesh common to us all.

(4) By His Death in that Flesh; by which He fulfilled, consummated, and exhausted all the Sacrificial Types and Ceremonies of the Levitical Law. And thus by removing that Legal Fence which severed Jew from Gentile, He joined them together in Himself, the Second Adam, the One New Man.

16. καὶ ἀποκαταλλάξη] and that He might reconcile them both in One Body (His own mystical Body, see iv. 4. 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13. Rom. xii. 4, 5) to God by the Cross. He proceeds to speak of another Reconciliation effected by Christ; and of another έχθρα, or Enmity, dissolved by Him, viz. that between God and Christ effected this Reconciliation by His Flesh; and He destroyed this Enmity also by His Cross. "Reconciliat in uno corpore ambos, et Judaicum et Gentilem populum, Deo, quem utrumque genus offenderat." Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 47).

— ἀποκτείνας τὴν ἔχθραν ἐν αὐτῷ] having slain the enmity by it, i.e. by the Cross.

the Enemy to the Cross, destroyed thereby the Enmity which Satan had made, and nailed Satan himself to it, and triumphed over him by it (Col. ii. 15, where see note), and vanquished him with his own weapons; and by His Death destroyed him that had the power of it, even the Devil. (Heb. ii. 14.)

17. εἰρήνην] peace. The second εἰρήνην, omitted by Elz., is found in A, B, D, E, F, G, and has been adopted by Lach., Tisch., Rückert, Meyer, Ellicott, Alford.

The εἰρήνη, or Peace, here mentioned, is contrasted with the  $\xi\chi\theta\rho\alpha$  above mentioned; and the word  $\epsilon l\rho\eta\nu\eta$  is happily repeated, just as the word ἔχθρα had been repeated (vv. 15, 16), because Christ, Who is our Peace (v. 14), has now brought both parties (i. e. Jew and Gentile), who were before at Ennity with one another and with God, to a state of Peace between themselves and with Him, and has given access to both, by one Spirit, to the

He Who is our Peace came and preached Peace to all. Hence after His Death, by which He made Peace, the first words He uttered, and He uttered them twice to His assembled disciples, were "Peace be unto you" (John xx. 19. 21). And He showed also, that it is by the One Spirit that we have access showed also, that it is by the One Spirit that we have access through Him to our Father, now at peace with us, by breathing on them and saying, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost:" and He gave them the Ministry of Peace and of Reconciliation to God, "Whose soever sins ye remit," &c. (John xx. 22, 23.)

— εὐηγγελίσατο—ἐγγύς] He preached peace—. A quotation from Isa. Ivii. 19.

In writing to Gentile Churches, recently converted to Chris-P F 2

q John 10, 9, & 14, 6, Rom. 5, 2, .
Rom. 5, 2, .
R. 3, 12, Heb. 4, 16, & 10, 19, 20, r Gal. 6, 10, Phil. 3, 20, Heb. 12, 22, 23, 8 PS, 118, 22, Isa, 28, 16, Matt. 16, 18 Isa. 28, 16, Matt. 16, 18, 1 Cor. 3, 9, 10, 1 Pet. 2, 4, 5, Rev. 21, 14, t 1 Cor. 3, 17, & 6, 19, 2 Cor. 6, 16, ch. 4, 16.

έγγὺς, 18 9 ὅτι δι' αὐτοῦ ἔχομεν τὴν προσαγωγὴν οἱ ἀμφότεροι ἐν ἑνὶ Πνεύματι πρός τὸν Πατέρα.

19 τ Αρα οὖν οὐκέτι ἐστὲ ξένοι καὶ πάροικοι, ἀλλὰ συμπολίται τῶν ἁγίων, καὶ οἰκείοι τοῦ Θεοῦ, 20 s ἐποικοδομηθέντες ἐπὶ τῷ θεμελίω τῶν ἀποστόλων καὶ προφητών, όντος ἀκρογωνιαίου αὐτοῦ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, 21 εν ῷ πᾶσα οἰκοδομὴ συναρμολογουμένη αὔξει εἰς ναὸν ἄγιον ἐν Κυρίω, 22 εν ὧ καὶ ὑμεῖς συνοικοδομείσθε είς κατοικητήριον τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Πνεύματι.

ΙΙΙ. 1 - Τούτου χάριν έγὼ Παῦλος ὁ δέσμιος τοῦ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν a Acts 21. 33. ch. 4. 1. Phil. 1. 7, 13, 14, 16. Col. 1. 21, 24. & 4. 3. 2 Tim. 1. 8. & 2. 10. u 1 Pet. 2. 5.

tianity, St. Paul rarely quotes the Old Testament. See note above on 1 Thess. i. 9.

The Ephesian Church was a Gentile Church. See ii. 11;

iv. 17.

But in this Epistle St. Paul often cites the Old Testament. See in iv. 8, a quotation from Ps. lxvii. 18; in iv. 25, from Zech. viii. 16; in iv. 26, from Ps. iv. 4; in v. 14, from Isa. lx. 1; in v. 31, from Gen. ii. 24; in vi. 2, 3, from Exod. xx. 12. Deut.

This characteristic of the present Epistle harmonizes with the peculiar circumstances of the Ephesian Church, which had been instructed by the Apostle personally during no less a period than three years. (Acts xx. 31.)

18. τὴν προσαγωγήν] the access, the only access, to God.
19. οὐκέτι ἐ. ξένοι καὶ πάροικοι] no longer strangers and sojourners. Πάροικοι = 'inquilini,' persons dwelling in a city, but not having the rights of citizens.

In a Christian sense, Ye are no longer strangers and so-

In a Christian sense, i.e are no longer strangers and so-journers in regard to the heavenly City, but ye are strangers and sojourners on earth. Augustine (in Ps. 118). 20. ἀποστόλων καl προφητών] of Apostles and Prophets, ye are built on them. This expression, Ye are built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, is not to be understood (as it has been recently by some) to signify, Ye are built on the foundation on which they are built, but it means, Ye are built upon them. The expression may be illustrated by the considerations stated above on Matt. iii. 9; x. 2; xvi. 18. John i. 42. And comp. Rev. xxi. 14, where the Apostles are called the θεμέλιοι, foundation-stones, of the heavenly Jerusalem.

He puts Apostles before Prophets. We are built on Apostles first, and then on Prophets.

A very important doctrinal truth is declared by this order of The Apostles are placed before the Prophets. Christ comes before Moses, the Gospel comes before the Law; the Creed comes before the Decalogue.

The Christian Church in the "Te Deum" places the "glorious company of the Apostles" before the "goodly fellowship of the Prophets" in the universal Doxology to God.

The Apostles had a fuller revelation of what Prophets desired to see, Luke x. 24 (Theodoret). Besides, the Ephesians, as Gentiles, were brought by the Apostles to a knowledge of the Prophets. Cp. above on 1 Thess. ii. 18.

He joins Apostles with Prophets, and thus shows that the Prophets, as well as Apostles, appertain to the Gentiles as well as to the Jews. Chrys.

Thus he refutes by anticipation the Marcionites and Manicheans, who endeavoured to separate the Old Testament from the Tertullian, referring to this text, says that Marcion, to fortify his own heresy, expunged the words and Prophets: "Oblitus Dominum posuisse in Ecclesiâ, sicut Apostolos, et Prophetas; timuit scilicet ne et super veterum Prophetarum fundamento ædificatio nostra constaret in Christo, cum ipse Apostolus ubique nos de Prophetis exstruere non cesset" (c. Marcion. v. 17).

For the argument of the Church against the Manichæans, see Augustine (c. Faustum, lib. xviii. xix.).

It is to be regretted that the force and beauty of this text, and of the Apostle's argument here, have been marred in recent Expositions of it, limiting the word "Prophets" to the New Testament dispensation, and excluding all reference to the Old Testament. Such is the interpretation of Pelagius, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Flatt, Harless, Olshausen, De Wette, Meyer, and others. But it is opposed to the general sense of Christian Antiquity. The absence of the article before προφητών is no argument against this ancient interpretation, as Meyer allows; and see Bp. Middleton (chap. iii. p. 89).
The sense of the Ancient Church in this matter is well expressed by an Apostolic Father. "Christ alone is the Door to the Father. Through Him (i.e. Christ), Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and the Prophets, and the Apostles, and the Church enter in. All these enter in by Christ to the Unity of God. But the Gospel has a peculiar prerogative, in that it declares the Advent of Christ, His Passion and His Resurrection. The beloved Prophets prophesied of Him, but the Gospel is the consummation of Incorruption (ἀφθαρσίας, see on vi. 24)." Ignatius (ad Phil. 9).

This interpretation, which is adopted by Bp. Pearson (on the Creed, Art. i. p. 19), is in full harmony with St. Paul's argument in this Chapter.

He had shown that both Jews and Gentiles are reconciled The had shown that both Jews and Gentiles are reconciled and united in Christ. (vv. 11—17.) He shows now that this reconcilitation and union is in perfect harmony with the Divine Plan in both Testaments. The Prophets in the Old Testament prophesied of Christ to come. The Apostles in the New preach Christ already come. Both speak of Him, and meet in Him. And the Church, in which Jews and Gentiles are united in Christ, is built on the foundation of the Academy of the A is built on the foundation of the Apostles of the New Testament and of the Prophets of the Old. The Gentiles are not without the Old Testament, nor are the Jews without the New. Both are built on both, and both Walls meet together in the One Corner-Stone, which is Christ.

Observe also, that in this description of the foundation of the Church, St. Paul sags nothing of St. Peter singly, as distinguished from the other Apostles, or of his so-called Successor, the Bishop of Rome, as the Rock of the Church; and thus he refutes also, by anticipation, the Papal Heresy. See on Matt.

xvi. 18.

- ὅντος ἀκρογωνιαίου] being the chief corner-stone. The Lord is called the Chief Corner-Stone (Ps. cxviii. 22. Matt. xxi. 42), not the highest Stone, but the principal and corner-Stone (see A Lapide), because in Him the two Walls (the one coming from the Gentile, the other from the Jewish, World) meet, and are united in one. Theodoret. Augustine, Serm. iv. Christ is the "Lapis Angularis," as "omnia sustinens, et in unam fidem Abrahæ colligens eos qui ex utroque Testamento apti sunt ædi-ficio Dei." Irenæus (iv. 25). The chief corner-stone binds together not only the walls, but the foundation stones also. So Christ unites Prophets and Apostles, as well as Jews and Gentiles. Chrys.

There is an ellipse of  $\lambda l\theta ov$  here, as there is of  $\lambda l\theta ov$  in Rev.

xxi. 14. 19.

The Codex Sinaiticus has here à prima manu ἀκρογωνιαίου τοῦ Χριστοῦ, which has been altered by a corrector to the reading

21. πᾶσα οἰκοδομή] all the building; the whole building. This is the reading of B, D, E, F, G, I, K, and many Cursives and Fathers. And so Lachm., Tisch., Ellicott, Alf. Elz. has  $\pi \hat{a} \sigma a \hat{\eta}$  with A, C. See also Winer, § 18, p. 101, and so Harless, Olshausen, De Wette.

Though  $\pi \hat{a}s$ , without the article following it, rarely signifies the whole, yet it sometimes has that meaning, and so the Apostolic Father, S. Ignatius, uses the word in his Epistle to the Ephesians, c. 12, where see Dr. Jacobson's note. So omnis in Latin, e. g. "Non omnis moriar" for totus, and see the remarks of Bp. Pearson (Vind. Ign. ii. 10).

The force of the Apostle's argument would be much impaired by the adoption of the rendering of those Interpreters, who, proceeding on the principles of classical usage, affirm that these words mean "every congregation that is built in."

That interpretation may serve as a specimen, among others that might be cited (if the task were not invidious), how Criticism may become uncritical, by an over-strained application of the rigid rules of Attic philology to the Text of the New Testament.

22. συνοικοδομεῖσθε] ye are being builded together. Observe the present tense. The work of building is ever going on in the Christian soul, during its sojourn on earth; and in the Christian Church, until the Coming of Christ.

CII. III. 1. Τούτου χάριν] for this cause: i. e. since ye, who were once Gentiles, aliens from God, are now brought near to Him in Christ (ii. 12, 13), and are being builded together into a τῶν ἐθνῶν,  $\frac{2}{}$   $^{\text{b}}$  εἶγε ἠκούσατε τὴν οἰκονομίαν τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ τῆς δοθείσης  $\frac{\text{b}}{8}$   $\frac{\text{Acts 9. 15.}}{13. 2.}$ μοι εἰς ὑμᾶς, ³ ο ὅτι κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν ἐγνωρίσθη μοι τὸ μυστήριον, καθώς προ- Ι τοπ. 4. 1. 6. (Gal. 1. 16. Gal. 1. 16. Gal. 1. 16. μοι εις ύμας,  $^{-}$  ότι κατα αποκακυψιν εγνωριστή μοι το μυστηρίων, καυως προ-  $^{1}$  Cor. 4. 1. έγραψα ἐν ὀλίγῳ,  $^{4}$  πρὸς δ δύνασθε ἀναγινώσκοντες νοῆσαι τὴν σύνεσίν μου ἐν νετ. 8. τῷ μυστηρίῳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ,  $^{5}$  δ ἑτέραις γενεαῖς οὐκ ἐγνωρίσθη τοῖς υἱοῖς τῶν  $^{8}$   $^{28}$  28. 16, 17. λυθρώπων, ὡς νῦν ἀπεκαλύφθη τοῖς ἀγίοις ἀποστόλοις αὐτοῦ καὶ προφήταις ἐν  $^{61}$  1. 11, 12.  $^{12}$   $^{12}$   $^{13}$   $^{14}$   $^{15}$   $^{16}$   $^{15}$  εἶναι τὰ ἔθνη συγκληρονόμα καὶ σύσσωμα καὶ συμμέτοχα τῆς d λείς 10, 28. ἐπαγγελίας αὐτοῦ ἐν τῷ Χριστῷ, διὰ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου,  $^{7}$  Γ οῦ ἐγενήθην διάκονος  $^{6}$  63. 14. κατὰ τὴν δωρεὰν τῆς χάριτος τοῦ Θεοῦ, τὴν δοθεῖσάν μοι κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν  $^{6}$  κοι. 1. 5. Col. 2. 12.  $^{12}$   $^{15}$   $^{15}$   $^{15}$   $^{15}$   $^{15}$   $^{15}$   $^{15}$   $^{15}$   $^{15}$ καια την οωρέων της χαρίτος του Θέου, την οοσείσαν μοι κατα την ένεργειαν  $^{[Rom. 1. 5.]}_{0.2.12}$  της δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ  $^{8}$   $^{8}$  έμοὶ τῷ έλαχιστοτέρῳ πάντων ἁγίων ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις  $^{g. Acts. 9. 15.2.}_{13.2.}$   $^{20}_{13.2.}$ 9 " καὶ φωτίσαι πάντας, τίς ἡ οἰκονομία τοῦ μυστηρίου τοῦ ἀποκεκρυμμένου & 2.8. 1 Tim. 1. 13, 15. ἀπὸ τῶν αἰώνων ἐν τῷ Θεῷ, τῷ τὰ πάντα κτίσαντι,  $^{10}$  ἱνα γνωρισθη νῦν ταῖς  $^{2}$

Temple of God, ... for this cause, I, the prisoner of Christ, who am your Apostle and Confessor, ... He then, according to his custom, runs on rapidly as if transported with this glorious thought, so full of joy to himself, who had once been a persecutor, and after a parenthetical episode, returns in vv. 13, 14, διδτούτου χάριν.

— δ δέσμιος τ. Χριστοῦ] the prisoner of Christ. Cp. iv. 1. Col. iv. 18, μνημονεύετε μοῦ τῶν δεσμῶν. Phil. i. 7. 13, 14. 16.

Heb. x. 34. Philem. 9, 10. 13. St. Paul was now in custody, as described in the Acts of the Apostles (xxviii. 16), bound to the soldier who guarded him. He regards his chains as from the hand of Christ (cp. Winer, § 30, p. 170, on the use of the genitive), and therefore as consecrated to him; as S. Ignatius, in his Epistle to the Ephesians, c. 11, calls his own chains πνευματικούς μαργαρίτας, spiritual bracelets of pearls. And compare Tertullian's beautiful address, "ad Martyres," on the disposition and feelings with which a prison and bonds for Christ are to be regarded by the Christian

"Hoc præstat carcer Christiano, quod eremus Prophetis . . . Nihil crus sentit in nervo, cum animus in cœlo est (c. 2). Carcerem nobis palæstram interpretamur . . . Bonum agonem subituri estis, in quo Agonothetes Deus vivus est, Xystarches Spiritus Sanctus,

The Ago Agoin attentians: brabium politia in cælis, gloria in sæcula sæculorum." (c, 3.)

— δπὲρ ὑμῶν τῶν ἐθνῶν] in behalf of you Gentiles. "Vinctum Jesu Christi Paulum esse pro Gentibus potest intelligi, quod Romæ in vincula conjectus hanc Epistolam miserit eo tempore quo ad Philemonem et ad Colossenses et ad Philippenses scriptas esse monstravimus." S. Jerome.

His preaching of the Universality of the Redemption accomplished by Christ for Gentiles no less than Jews, had been the occasion of his arrest by the Jews at Jerusalem, and of his consequent imprisonment, and it was made more glorious and efficacious by that imprisonment. See Acts xxi. 28; xxii. 21, 22, grace to be the Confessor, as well as the Apostle, of the Gentile World.

2. είγε ἡκούσατε τὴν οἰκονομίαν τ. χ.] if (as I suppose) ye heard the dispensation of the grace given unto me. See the use of είγε, iv. 21, είγε αὐτὸν ἡκούσατε. Cp. 2 Cor. v. 3. Col. i. 23. The word ἡκούσατε, with the accusative, signifies more than 'ye heard of' as a mere fact; it means, 'if ye attended to,' and understood it. See iv. 21, and on Acts ix. 7.

- eis ὑμᾶs] to you-ward.

3. κατὰ ἀποκάλυψιν] by revelation. See Gal. i. 12.

· ἐγνωρίσθη] was made known. So the majority of the best MSS. Είz. ἐγνώρισε.

- τὸ μυστήριον] the mystery of the free admission of you Gentiles into the Church on equal terms with the Jews. See above, Rom. xvi. 25, 26.

— καθώς προέγραψα ἐν ὀλίγφ] according as I wrote above in this Epistle in few words. Ἐν ὀλίγφ signifies brevi, in small space or time, summatim, strictim, raptim. See note above on Acts xxvi. 29.

The meaning is, that he had only just touched on that great subject, which would require a large space and much time for its due consideration, and would not even then be exhausted, so high and profound is its Mystery. Cp. Wetstein here.

 4. πρὸς δ] at which, or by reference to what has been already written by me (short and summary as it is), ye are enabled, while ye read it, to apprehend my insight into the Mystery of your own privileges in the Body of Christ.
5. ἐτέραις] Elz. prefixes ἐν, which is not in the best MSS. and Edd. The sense is, it was not made known to other ages. And then he qualifies this, and explains it by the epexegesis rois vioîs τῶν ἀνθρώπων, i. e. to the sons of men, that is to say, to unregenerate Reason, not enlightened by the Holy Spirit, the Giver of all knowledge of the hidden things of God.

He does not mean to say, that this Mystery was wholly concealed from all in past ages; for (as S. Jerome and others observe here) it was foretold by the Prophets in the Old Testament, and was confirmed by the Apostles by an appeal to the previous testimony of the Prophets. See the argument of St. James in the Council of Jerusalem (Acts xv. 16, 17), and of St. Paul at Antioch in Pisidia (xiii. 47), and to the Romans (i. 2-5; ix. 24; x. 19; xvi. 26). But what he means is, that it was not revealed to the sons of men, to the whole human race, nor was it revealed so fully as it is now. See Chrysost. and Theodoret here, and particularly the full exposition of S. Jerome.

6. εἶναι τὰ ἔθνη] that the Gentiles are (εἶναι) fellow-heirs. This is not to be rendered "that the Gentiles should be." The Apostle is stating a fact, which is.

7. εγενήθην] I was made: 'factus sum' (Vulg.). I became so by God's grace. Cp. above, 1 Thess. i. 5, 6; ii. 5. 7. This is the reading of A, B, D*, F, G, and is preferable to that of Elz.

8. έμοι τῷ ἐλαχιστοτέρφ] to me that am less than the least. On this form of double comparison, expressive here of deep humility, cp. 3 John 4, μειζότερος. Winer, § 11, p. 65. Lobeck, Phryn. p. 135.

As to St. Paul's estimate of himself, apart from what he was by divine grace as the Apostle of Christ, see above on 1 Cor. xv. 8, ωσπερεί τῷ ἐκτρώματι ώφθη κάμοι, and on 2 Cor. xi. 33.

He represents his own littleness and lowness of estate as a fit reason why he should have been specially chosen by God's grace to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles, who were regarded by the Jews as outcasts from God.

Humility is the path to honour. "Omnibus infimior Paulus; idcirco major." Jerome.

- τὸ - πλοῦτος] See i. 7. - τὸ ἀνεξιχνίαστον πλοῦτος] the unsearchable riches of Christ-the riches which could not be tracked and discovered by any process of human investigation, and could not be travelled through by any powers of human adventure; unsearchable, and immeasurable. Cp. iii. 18. "Divitias autė investigabiles, nunc apertas." Jerome. "Thy way is in the sea, and Thy paths in the great waters, and Thy footsteps ("\(\chi_\chi\nu\nu\nu\)) are not known." (Ps. lxxvii. 19.) 9. οἰκονομία] dispensation. So the majority of the best MSS. and Editions. Etz. has κοινωνία. Cp. i. 10.

 τῷ τὰ πάντα κτίσαντι] to Him Who created all things.
 The Apostle uses these words lest it should be imagined that, because the Mystery was hidden in God, and was not revealed by Him to the world in past ages, it was not His own dispensation. Its existence in His own Mind, its concealment from the World,

Its existence in His own Mind, its concealment from the World, its Revelation, were all ordered by Him.

The words διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, which are added here in D***, E, I, K, and by many of the Fathers and by Elz., but are not in A, B, C, D*, F, G, nor in the Latin Fathers generally, were used as an argument by the Arians to prove an inferiority in Christ. And it may be relevant therefore to add the remarks. of Dr. Waterland upon them (i. p. 130, Defence of some Queries.

Qu. xi.):

l ch. 5. 1. Phil. 1. 11.

άργαις και ταις έξουσίαις έν τοις έπουρανίοις δια της έκκλησίας ή πολυποίκιλος σοφία τοῦ Θεοῦ, 11 κατὰ πρόθεσιν τῶν αἰώνων, ἢν ἐποίησεν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν,  $^{12 \text{ k}}$  ἐν ῷ ἔχομεν τὴν παρρησίαν, καὶ τὴν προσαγωγὴν ἐν πεποιk John 10, 9, & 14, 6, Rom. 5, 2, ch. 2, 18, Heb. 4, 14-16, & 10, 19-22, θήσει διὰ τῆς πίστεως αὐτοῦ.

13 1 Διὸ αἰτοῦμαι μὴ ἐγκακεῖν ἐν ταῖς θλίψεσί μου ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν, ἥτις ἐστὶ δόξα

14 Τούτου χάριν κάμπτω τὰ γόνατά μου πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα, 15 έξ οὖ πᾶσα

"The Son of God," you say, "is manifestly the Father's Agent in the Creation of the Universe," referring to Eph. iii. 9, and to Heb. i. 2, from whence you infer that He is "subordinate in nature and in power to Him." You insist much upon the distinction δι' αὐτοῦ and ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, explaining the former of an instrumental, and the latter of an efficient cause. As to the Son's being agent with, or assistant to the Father, in the work of Creation, we readily admit it, and even contend for it. The Father is primarily, and the Son secondarily or immediately, Author of the world; which is so far from proving that He is inferior, in nature or powers, to the Father, that it is rather a convincing argument that He is equal in both. A subordination of order, but none of nature, is thereby intimated.

As to the distinction between δι' αὐτοῦ and ὑπ' αὐτοῦ, per quem and ex quo, or the like, it can be of very little service to your cause. The preposition διὰ, with a genitive after it, is frequently used, as well in Scripture, as in ecclesiastical writers, to express the efficient cause, as much as  $\delta\pi\delta$ , or  $\epsilon\kappa$ , or  $\pi\rho\delta s$ , or any other. So that the argument drawn from the use of the prepositions, is very poor and trifling, as was long since observed by Basil the Great, who exposes its author and inventor, Actius, for Please but to account clearly for one text out of many (Rom. xi. 36), "Of Ilim, and through Him (δι αὐτοῦ), and to Him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever." If you understand this of the Father, then, by your argument from the phrase δι' αὐτοῦ, you make Him also no more than an instrumental cause; if you understand it of more persons, here is an illustrious proof of a Trinity in Unity.

10. Ίνα γνωρισθη κ.τ.λ.] in order that the manifold wisdom of God might now be made manifest to the Powers and Authorities in the heavenly places, by means of the Church.

Therefore the Cross of Christ was not only a blessing to us, but even to the Angels themselves; and it revealed to them a Mystery which they did not know before (cp. 1 Pet. i. 12).

Compare what St. Paul declares to the Bishop of Ephesus, viz. that by His Incarnation on Earth the Son of God was "seen of Angels." (1 Tim. iii. 16.)

Let us not imagine then that the Church is only the depository of Faith; she is also a treasury of Knowledge and Wisdom for others. Jerome.

Thou, O Paul, enlightenest Angels and Archangels. the Mystery had been hidden in God; but it is now revealed by the ministry of the Church. Chrys.

Hence S. Ignatius does not hesitate to say (ad Smyrn. 6), Let no man deceive himself. Even the heavenly Powers themselves, and the Glory of Angels, and the Rulers, both visible and invisible, will be condemned, unless they believe in the blood of Christ.

Mysterious and marvellous privilege of the Church to be as a speculum to minister Light to Angels! How exalted is the are the Luminaries of the Church (Ps. cxix. 105). She is the golden Candlestick. But God's Word is the Light which is poured into her, and streams forth through her to the World. See below on Rev. i. 12; xi. 4.

Hence, as the Ark, which enshrined the Law, was the Throne of God, sitting between the Cherubim in the Holy of Holies, so the Triune God is revealed as enthrough in the Heavenly Church on the Fourfold Gospel, the Evangelic Cherubim (revealing in their several faces the Fourfold character of Christ Himself); and as worshipped by them, leading the Chorus of Universal Praise to the Ever-Blessed Trinity. See on Rev. iv. 6-9.
The word πολυποίκιλος is used by Euripides (Iph. Taur.

1149) as an epithet of embroidered garments, and by Eubulus (Athen. xv. p. 679, D) to signify the many variegated hues of a rich chaplet of flowers; hence it is rendered many coloured by the Arabic Version here.

So is God's wisdom, infinite in variety, richness, and beauty, and adapting itself to all the needs of man, in every age, and of every creature in the world.

For a specimen of its variety, see the instance noted by Our Blessed Lord, Matt. xi. 18, 19.

This remarkable statement of the Apostle, that the Angels themselves are indebted to the Church of Christ for illumination in the Mysteries of the Gospel, would be a very profitable one to the Colossians, and other Christians of Asia, who had been be-guiled by false Teachers into worship of Angels (Col. ii. 18). This and other truths contained in this Epistle to the Ephesians, and especially its clear language on the unapproachable Majesty of Christ, "God manifest in the flesh," would render this Epistle to the Ephesians very salutary and seasonable for the use of the Colossians. See below, Col. iv. 16, and Introduction to that Epistle.

11. ἐποίησεν] He made effectual.

12. διὰ τ. πίστεως αὐτοῦ] through the faith of which He is the author and finisher (Heb. xii. 2), the source and the end.

13. Διδ αἰτοῦμαι μη ἐγκακεῖν] Wherefore I beseech you not to faint in my tribulations. Do not suppose that I faint in my afflictions. I, a prisoner at Rome, exhort you Ephesians not to faint in them. But, why, it may be asked, should be fear that they might faint in his trials? Because seeing him, who was Christ's chosen champion, and one who professed to be endued with supernatural powers, afflicted and outraged by the World for preaching the Gospel, they might be tempted to imagine that his professions were untrue, and that the World was stronger than Christ. Thus they might be offended, and perplexed, and falter in the faith. Hence St. Paul praises the Galatians for not despising his infirmity in the flesh. (Gal. iv. 14.)

"Non itaque mirum est, si pluribus Paulo angustiis coarctato, Ephesii tentabantur, et habebant necessarium orationum ejus auxilium, ne deficerent in pressuris suis , . . quas propterea patiebatur quia Evangelium prædicabat." S. Jerome. Cp. note on Acts xiv. 22.

He therefore beseeches them not to faint in his tribulations. and he prays God to give them strength to endure unto the end (vv. 14-16). By the former prayer he shows the freedom of their will, and by the latter prayer he shows their need of divine grace. Augustine (Serm. 163).

On ἐγκακεῖν, see Gal. vi. 9.

14. Τούτου χάριν] For this cause. He resumes the argument, from which he had made a digression. See v. l.

— κάμπτω τὰ γόνατα] I bow my knees. A remarkable expression. He speaks of the "bending of the knee" as a synonym for prayer. A posture commended by Christ's example in prayer (Luke xxii. 41), St. Stephen's (Acts vii. 60), St. Peter's (Acts ix. 40), St. Paul's and his company, on the sea-shore (Acts xxi. 5), and prescribed by God Himself (Rom. xiv. 11). As to its use in the early Church, see the passages in Suicer's Thes. v.

γονυκλισία. On the sense of κάμπτω τὰ γόνατα—Ίνα δώη, see i. 17, and Philemon 6.

— πρὸς τὸν Πατέρα] to the Father. Elz. adds τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. Not in A, B, C, nor in some Fathers and Versions, and expunged by Lachm., Tisch., Rückert, Harless, Meyer, Ellicott, Alf., but found in D, E, F, G, I, K, and Chrys., August., Theodoret.

The internal as well as external evidence seems to preponderate against the addition; and even if it be genuine, the et où would refer rather to πατέρα, as δώη, which follows, undoubtedly docs. And see Jerome's note here, who says, "simpliciter ad Patrem legendum, non ut in Latinis Codicibus additum est, ad Patrem Domini Nostri Jesu Christi."

Indeed, the whole tenour of this Epistle is so ordered as to display God the FATHER as the Beginning and Origin, the Author and Giver of all things, and as having a Paternal Relation to all things in heaven and earth, and so giving a Name to all things: which is a proper act of Paternity.

The act of Adam, the Father of the Human Family, as recorded in the Book of Genesis (ii. 19), giving a Name to all creatures, in his character of the Common Parent of Mankind, and Lord of all Creatures, and so constituted by God, the Universal Father, as His Vicegerent upon earth, was like an earthly reflexion of God's own paternal attributes and sovereign prerogatives.

As to the phrase itself, where marho is put absolutely withπατριὰ ἐν οὐρανοῖς καὶ ἐπὶ γῆς ὀνομάζεται, 16 m ἴνα δώη ὑμῖν κατὰ τὸ πλοῦτος m Rom 2.29. της δόξης αὐτοῦ δυνάμει κραταιωθηναι διὰ τοῦ Πνεύματος αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸν ἔσω  $\frac{2 \text{ Cor. 4. 16.}}{2 \text{ Cor. 6. 10.}}$ ανθρωπον, 17 n κατοικήσαι τὸν Χριστὸν διὰ τῆς πίστεως ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν, 1 Pet. 3. 4. 18 έν ἀγάπη ἐρριζωμένοι καὶ τεθεμελιωμένοι, ἵνα ἐξισχύσητε καταλαβέσθαι σὺν πασι τοις άγίοις, τί τὸ πλάτος καὶ μῆκος καὶ βάθος καὶ ὕψος, 19 γνωναί τε τὴν ύπερβάλλουσαν της γνώσεως ἀγάπην τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἴνα πληρωθητε εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ.

 $^{20}$  °  $T\hat{\omega}$  δὲ δυναμέν $\omega$  ὑπὲρ πάντα ποιῆσαι ὑπερεκπερισσοῦ ὧν αἰτούμεθα ἢ  $^{0}_{\text{p ch. 16. 26.}}$  νοοῦμεν, κατὰ τὴν δύναμιν τὴν ἐνεργουμένην ἐν ἡμῖν,  $^{21}$   $^{\text{p}}$  αὐτ $\hat{\omega}$  ἡ δόξα ἐν τ $\hat{\eta}$   $^{1}_{\text{Ps. 29. 1, 2.}}$  ἐκκλησία ἐν Χριστ $\hat{\omega}$  Ἰησοῦ, εἰς πάσας τὰς γενεὰς τοῦ αἰῶνος τῶν αἰώνων  $^{\infty}_{\text{p. 15. 1.}}$   $^{\infty}_{\text{18. 6. 3.}}$

άμήν.

out a genitive, cp. 1 Cor. viii. 6, είς Θεδς δ πατήρ, έξ οδ τὰ πάντα καὶ ἡμῶν εἰς αὐτὸν, and Eph. v. 20, τῷ Θεῷ καὶ πατρί. Phil. ii. 11. Col. i. 12.

15. ἐξ οὖ] from Whom-as the original Source of all being and grace. See on 2 Cor. xiii. 13.

— πᾶσα πατριά] every family. πατριά = Heb. πρεψη (mischyachah), and used for it by LXX in Exod. vi. 15. 17. 19. Lev. xxv. 10. Deut. xxix. 18. Ps. xxi. 30. See Luke ii. 4. Acts iii. 25, πᾶσαι αί πατριαί τῆς γῆς. "Cognatio vel familia."

Jerome. Cp. Winer, § 18, p. 101.

All πατριαl are from the Almighty Πατήρ. All the Families of heaven and earth derive their name from Him; that is, they all proceed from Him, and are subject to Him, Who is the Uni-

To impose a name was a mark of property in, and lordship over, the thing named, and was the special prerogative of fatherhood. Cp. Gen. ii. 19. Isa. lxiii. 19. Jer. vii. 10; xiv. 9. Dan. ix. 18. Luke i. 13. 62.

Abraham, the Father of many Nations (Gen. xvii. 5), was (as well as Adam, the Father of the whole Human Family) an carthly Representative of the Almighty Father of all, particularly in giving up his son; and as being the Patriarch in whose seed "all families of the earth should be blessed" (Gen. xii. 3; xxviii. 14), which, by Faith in Christ, should call Abraham their father (Rom. iv. 12. 16), and be called children of Faithful Abraham. (Gal.

As all families of the faithful are named from Abraham their Father, and as all the families of Mankind, according to the flesh, are named from Adam their Father, so all the families in heaven and earth are named from God their Father, from Whom they all come, and in Whose Son they all are blessed.

Since God is the Universal Father of Angels and Men, St. Paul prays to Him to strengthen the Gentiles now incorporated in one Body under Christ, Who is Lord of Angels and of Men.

16.  $\delta \phi \eta$ ] Lachmann and Rückert have admitted  $\delta \hat{\varphi}$ , from A, B, C, F, G, and so Meyer. Cp. i. 17. But (as Ellieott observes) it seems hardly probable that  $\delta \hat{\varphi}$  would have been altered into the rarer form δψη.

The the rate form  $\phi \phi$ .

— δυνάμει κραπαιωθηναί] to be made mighty with power; to be invigorated with ability infused into you by the Holy Ghost (cp. v. 20). Hence follows, v. 17, Γνα εξισχύσητε, that ye may have full force to comprehend. Κράτος is mightiness, δύναμις is ability; εξισχύω (from  $i\sigma \chi \delta s$ , του  $i\sigma \chi \omega$ , εχω) represents sufficiency of force to do any given act. Cp. i. 19.

18. ἐρριζωμένοι και τεθεμελιωμένοι] rooted as a plant, and therefore alive and always growing—and grounded as a building, and therefore firmly established—in Love. And so he says to the Corinthians, "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building" (1 Cor. iii. 9, and cp. Col. ii. 7). Origen.

— τί τὸ πλάτος κ.τ.λ.] what is the breadth and length and depth and height. The Everlasting Word extended Himself in every direction: in height by Creation, in depth by His Incarnation, and in His descent into Hell, and in breadth by filling the World with His Light and Glory. Athanas. (de Incarn. § 16.)

The Expositor of this text in the present age, even at the risk of being charged by some with indulging in fanciful speculations, can hardly afford to forget that the ancient Church loved to contemplate the Cross of Christ, dying for the sins of the whole world, as expressing by its quadriform dimensions the Universality of those attributes here ascribed by the Apostle to God's love in Christ.

The Cross of Christ has all the dimensions of which the Apostle speaks. By it He ascended up on high and led captivity captive (Eph. iv. 8); by it He descended to the lowest parts of the earth, and by it He extendeth Himself to the length and breadth of the whole world. Origen.

In the elevation of the Cross we see an emblem of His divine power; in its depression we recognize His human condescension; in its extension we see an image of the diffusion of the Gospel throughout the world, and of the union of all men in Him.

The Apostle, writing to the Ephesians, pourtrays, in the form and figure of the Cross, Christ's Power extending to all things and uniting all things. Gregory Nyssen (c. Eunom. Orat. iv. p. 582). And S. Jerome says, "Hæc universa de Cruce Domini p. 582). And S. Jerome says, "Ha Nostri Jesu Christi intelligi queunt."

See also Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iv. p. 385, note.

S. Augustine often applies the dimensions of the Cross to illustrate the true character of the spiritual life of those who are crucified to the world in Christ. The firmness and stability, the the constancy, and faith, and hope, and expansive charity of the Christian. See his book de Doctrina Christiana ii. 62, "hoc signo crucis omnis actio Christiana describatur;" Epist. 140, c. 64, in Joann. Tract. 118, § 5, in Ps. ciii. § 14.

He who is crucified with Christ, and extends himself as it were together with Christ upon the Cross, comprehends (καταλαμβάνει) what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height. Origen. And so Jerome here. Compare the words of the Church in the Baptismal Office, " Stedfast in faith, joyful through hope, and rooted in charity.

19. γνώναι - ύπερβάλλουσαν τῆς γνώσεως] to know the love which surpasses the knowledge. So Homer, Il. xxiii. 847, ἀγῶνος ύπέρβαλε. This hyperbole describes the work of the Spirit.

Although the love of Christ surpasseth all human knowledge, yet ye shall know it, if ye have Christ dwelling in you; and not only so, but ye shall be filled up to all the fulness of God. Chrys.

— Γυα πληρωθητε εἰς πῶν τὸ πλήρωμα τοῦ Θεοῦ] in order that by virtue of your mystical incorporation and indwelling in Christ, Who is God as well as Man, and in Whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily (Col. ii. 9), and of Whose fulness ye all received (John i. 16), ye His members may have your life hid with Christ in God (Col. iii. 3), and may increase with the in-crease of God (Col. ii. 19), and may be filled up to the fulness of

On πληρωθητε els see Winer, p. 194.

20. Τῷ δὲ δυναμένω] Now to him that is able —. Compare the Doxology, Rom. xvi. 25.

21. ἐν τῷ ἐκκλησία] A, B, C, add καl, and so some Versions, and Lachmann, Rückert, and D*, F, G, have ἐν Χ. Ἰ. καl τῷ ἐκκλησία. Probably this variation arose from the position of the FRKA/ησίζι. Trobably this variation alose from the position of the word Έκκλησίζι in the original before Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

The reading in the text is supported by D**, I, K, most Cursive MSS., and the Greek Fathers, and is adopted by almost all the Editors except those above named.

As to the sense, Christ is medium unionis, the Corner-Stone (ii. 20), wherein both sides of the building unite, or like the ladder whereon Jacob saw angels ascending and descending. (Gen. xxviii. 12; cp. John i. 51.) All intercourse betwixt heaven and earth, God and man, is through Him. If any grace come from God to us, it is by Christ. If any glory come from us to God, it is by us, it is by Christ. It any glory come from us to God, it is by Christ too. Unto Him be glory in the Church by Christ Jesus. (Eph. iii. 21.) Bp. Sanderson (i. 343).

— els πάσας τὰς γενεὰς κ.τ.λ.] to all generations of the Age of Ages (i. e. of Eternity). The antiquity of this form of ascription of Glory is testified even by its perversion on the part of the Valentinian Heretics, of whom it is recorded, that "Paulum manifestissimè dicunt Eonas nominare sæpissimè, adhuc etiam et evidinem in universas generationes.

ordinem ipsorum servare sic dicentem, in universas generationes sæculi sæculorum." (Eph. iii. 21.) Irenæus (i. 3).

a ch. 3. 1. Phil. 1. 27. Col. 1. 10. 1 Thess, 2. 12. b Col. 1. 11.

c Rom. 12. 5, 10. 1 Cor. 12. 4, 11. ch. 2. 16. d 1 Cor. 8. 4, 6. & 12. 5. e Mal. 2. 10. 1 Cor. 12. 6. f Rom. 12. 3, 6. 1 Cor. 12. 11.

ΙΥ. 1 α Παρακαλώ οὖν ὑμᾶς ἐγὼ ὁ δέσμιος ἐν Κυρίω ἀξίως περιπατῆσαι τῆς κλήσεως ης εκλήθητε, 2 μετα πάσης ταπεινοφροσύνης και πραότητος, μετα μακροθυμίας ανεχόμενοι αλλήλων εν αγάπη, 3 σπουδάζοντες τηρείν την ενότητα τοῦ Πνεύματος έν τῷ συνδέσμῳ τῆς εἰρήνης.

4 ° Εν σῶμα, καὶ εν Πνεῦμα, καθὼς καὶ ἐκλήθητε ἐν μιᾳ ἐλπίδι τῆς κλήσεως ύμων, 5 d εἶς Κύριος, μία πίστις, εν βάπτισμα, 6 e εἶς Θεὸς καὶ Πατὴρ πάντων, ό ἐπὶ πάντων καὶ διὰ πάντων καὶ ἐν πᾶσιν ἡμίν.

7 'Ενὶ δὲ ἐκάστω ἡμῶν ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις κατὰ τὸ μέτρον τῆς δωρεᾶς τοῦ

And yet in this expression of the Apostle himself, some have found traces of Gnosticism! as Baur, Paulus, p. 433. See the note in Professor Ellicott's excellent edition of this Epistle, p. 63.

The words δ αίων των αίωνων mean the "Age of Ages, namely, Eternity; and the πασαι αί γεγεαὶ are all its generations; and the ascription of Glory to God is "for all the Generations of Eternity," for ever and ever, world without end. Amen.

CH. IV. 1. Παρακαλῶ $-\epsilon$ κλήθητ $\epsilon$ ] I exhort therefore —. The Apostle now proceeds to apply to Christian practice, the great principles of Christian doctrine, which he has been laying down in the first three chapters of this Epistle. See above, Introduction.

On the attraction in ης ἐκλήθητε see i. 6. 2 Cor. i. 4.

Winer, § 24, p. 148.

2. πάσης ταπεινοφροσύνης] all lowliness of mind. A phrase used by St. Paul in his address to the Ephesian Presbyters, Acts xx. 19.

— ἀνεχόμενοι] forbearing. On the transition to the nominative after ὁμᾶs cp. i. 18. Winer, § 63, p. 505.

3. σπουδάζοντες] earnestly desiring and endeavouring; 'stu-A strong word, as Archbp. Laud has observed in his Sermon on this text (Serm. vi. Works, i. pp. 155-182), where he says, " Keep then the Unity of the Spirit; but know withal (and it follows in the text, Eph. iv. 3), that if you will keep it, you must endeavour to keep it. For it is not so easy a thing to keep Unity in great bodies as it is thought; there goes much labour and endeavour to it. The word is σπουδάζοντες, study, be careful to keep it. And the word implies such an endeavour as makes haste to keep; and indeed no time is to be lost at this work."

A salutary and seasonable admonition for some in the present age, who have little regard for Unity in the Church of Christ, and appear almost as eager to break it, as they ought to be earnest to keep it.

την ένότητα τοῦ Πνεύματος κ.τ.λ.] the Unity of the Spirit grounded in internal affection, is to be shown by the bond of Peace, manifested in external profession and action.

The one is the unity of faith, the other of practice; the one of doctrine, the other of discipline and polity. Both are necessary. Hence S. Ignatius (ad Magn. 13) speaks of the duty of Church-Communion, ύποτάγητε τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ καὶ ἀλλήλοις ἵνα ἔνωσις ἢ σαρκική τε καὶ πνευματική.

Like-mindedness is that which joineth all; and in the welljoining of all, consists the strength of the Structure. Cp. Col. iii.

Phil. i. 27. Bp. Sanderson, i. p. 349.
 St. Paul dwells here on ἐνότης, unity, and repeats the word ε̄s, one, no less than seven times in the two following verses.

Such is the stress laid by him on Unity.

S. Ignatius, in addressing the Ephesian Church (c. 1), speaks of it as προωρισμένην πρὸ αἰώνων εἶναι ἡνωμένην. Cp. Ignat. ad Magnes. 7, where he seems to have had in his mind these and the following words of St. Paul.

4—6. Ev  $\sigma \omega_{\mu} \alpha$ ] One Body, and One Spirit, . . . One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism, One God and Father of all. In this and other like Christian maxims, the verb substantive " $\delta \sigma \tau^{\dagger} \nu$ , there is," is not expressed in the original, and had better not be inserted in a translation. The sentence is more forcible without it: cp. on Heb. xiii. 4.

One Body. All the faithful every where who ever have been, or are, or will be. Chrys. Charity binds together those who are united by the Spirit, and knits them into the one Body of Christ.

Origen.

Hence it is justly argued, that the Church upon Earth is a Visible Society, distinguished by certain sensible tokens.

As those everlasting promises of love, mercy, and blessedness, belong to the mystical (i. e. invisible) Church, even so, on the other side, when we read of any duty which the Church of God is bound unto, the Church whom this doth concern is a sensibly known Company. And this visible Church in like sort is but one, continued from the first beginning of the world to the last end. Which Company being divided into two moieties, the one before, the other since, the coming of Christ; that part which since the coming of Christ partly hath embraced, and partly shall hereafter embrace, the Christian Religion, we term, as by a more proper name, the Church of Christ. And therefore, the Apostle affirmeth plainly of all men Christian, that be they Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, they are all incorporated into one Company, they all make but one body. The unity of which visible body and Church of Christ consisteth in that uniformity which all several persons thereunto belonging have, by reason of that one Lord whose servants they all profess themselves, that one Faith which they all acknowledge, that one Baptism wherewith they are all initiated. Hooker (III. i.).

The practical inferences from this may be thus expressed; St. Paul exhorting the Ephesians, his disciples, to the maintenance of charity and peace among themselves, doth for inducement to that practice represent the unity and community of those things which jointly did appertain to them as Christians; the unity of that Body whereof they were members; of that Spirit which did animate and act them; of that Hope to which they were called; of that Lord Whom they all did worship and serve; of that Faith which they did profess; of that Baptism whereby they were admitted into the same state of duties, of rights, of they were damitted into the same state of duties, of rights, of privileges; of that one God and universal Father, to Whom they had all the same relations. He beginneth with the unity of the Body; that is, of the Christian Church. Dr. Barrow (vi. p. 495, on the Unity of the Church).

— εν Πνεθμα] one Spirit. Compare the words of one of St. Paul's fellow-labourers: Ίνατί ἔρεις καὶ σχίσματα ἐν ὑμῖν;

η οὐχὶ ἔνα Θεδυ ἔχομεν, καὶ ἔνα Χριστδυ, καὶ ἔν Πνεῦμα τῆς χάριτος τὸ ἐκχυθὲν ἐφ' ἡμᾶς, καὶ μα κλῆσις ἐν Χριστῷ.

The Apostle teaches us that there is "one Body;" but this Body lives, does it not? Yes. Whence? From the one Spirit. What our soul is to our bodies, that the Spirit is to the members of Christ, to the Body of Christ, the Church. Augustine (Serm.

5. εîs Κύριος] one Lord,—whence the Church has derived her name, Κυριακή, the Lord's House.

- μία πίστις] one faith. See on Rom. xii. 6. - ἐν βάπτωμα] one Baptism. "Unus omnino baptismus est nobis . . . ex Apostolicis literis. Quoniam unus Dominus, et unum Baptisma, et una Ecclesia." Tertullian (de Bapt. 15). Hence he argued against iteration of Baptism: "Semel ergo lavacrum inimus, semel delicta diluuntur; felix aqua quòd semel δ ἐπὶ πάντων] who is over all, and through all, and in all. Observe the three prepositions: the first  $(\ell\pi i)$  marking God's supremacy over all His creatures; the second  $(\delta i\alpha)$ , His omnipresence pervading and working through them; the third (èv), His continual indwelling in them. Cp. Winer, § 50, p. 372.

This continual interests of them. Cp. When, g > 0, p. 372.

—  $\pi \tilde{\alpha} \sigma v$ ] Elz, adds  $\delta \mu \tilde{\nu} \nu$ , which is not found in A, B, C. And D, E, F, G, I, K, and many Cursives, have  $\tilde{\eta} \mu \tilde{\nu} \nu$ ,—and so  $Iren \tilde{\alpha} u s$ , ii. 2, "Unus Deus Pater, Qui super omnes et per omnia et in omnibus nobis;" and so again, iv. 20, and v. 18; and omnia et in ofinious πους, this seems to be the true reading.

7. 'Ενὶ δὲ ἐκάστφ ἡμῶν ἐδόθη ἡ χάρις] But to each one of us was given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. There is one Spirit; and all have spiritual blessings in common, without respect of persons, sufficient for their salvation. But (5t) to us, to every one severally was the grace of God given, distributed, according to measure. Grace is from God; and His gifts are proportioned, not according to the measure of the recipient-for God's grace can make men capable of receiving what otherwise they could not receive-but they are distributed according to the measure of God's free bounty; they are to be regarded as such, "lest any man should boast" (Eph. ii. 9), as if he himself were in some respect the cause of the graces which he receives from God. See above, 1 Cor. vii. 17. Rom. xii. 3.

There is therefore unity in diversity. There are diversities of gifts; but it is the same Spirit, Who bestows them as He wills, and they are all given for one end,-the edification of the Χριστοῦ.  $^{8}$   $^{g}$  Διὸ λέγει,  $^{'}$ Αναβὰς εἰς ὕψος  $\mathring{\eta}$ χμαλώτευσεν αἰχμαλωσίαν,  $^{g}$   $^{p}$  $^{g}$ .  $^{68}$ .  $^{15}$ . έδωκε δόματα τοις ἀνθρώποις. 9 h Τὸ δὲ, ἀνέβη, τί ἐστιν, εἰ μὴ ὅτι καὶ h John 3. 13. κατέβη είς τὰ κατώτερα τῆς γῆς; 10 1 ο καταβάς αὐτός ἐστι καὶ ο ἀναβὰς i Acts 2. 33. ύπεράνω πάντων των οὐρανων, ίνα πληρώση τὰ πάντα. 11 k Καὶ αὐτὸς ἔδωκε τοὺς μὲν ἀποστόλους, τοὺς δὲ προφήτας, τοὺς δὲ εὐαγγε- 2 Tim. 4. 5.

One Body of Christ; and they are to be exercised for that end in a spirit of unity, humility, and love. See 1 Cor. xii. 4—31,—the best exposition of this passage.

8. Διὸ λέγει] Wherefore He (God) says. Ps. lxviii. 18. On the ellipse, see Gal. iii. 16. 1 Cor. vi. 16. Heb. viii. 5. Ellicott.

— ἢχμαλώτευσεν αἰχμαλωσίαν] He led captivity captive. In His triumph He led captive a captivity, i. e., a great troop of notable captives, to grace His victory. These captives were no other than Satan, and Sin, and Death. Chrys. On the word αἰχμαλωσία see below, Rev. xiii. 10.

— ἔδωκε δόματα] He gave gifts to men. See Justin M. c. Tryphon. §§ 39. 87, where he adopts St. Paul's argument, and applies that Prophecy to Christ sending the gifts of the Holy Spirit from heaven after His Ascension; and so Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 2, who, as well as Justin, applies the prophecy of Joel ii. 28 to the same effusion and bestowal of supernatural gifts (cp. Acts ii. 17, 18), and thus shows the Harmony of the New Testament with the Old. So also S. Irenæus, ii. 20.

It is evident, therefore, that the primitive Christian writers were convinced of the propriety of St. Paul's application of the language of the Psalmist to the Ascension of Christ and its

The original words of the Psalmist are לְקְהַהָּ מְהָנוֹת נַאָרֵם thou hast received gifts in the man. Thou (Who hast gone up on high and hast led captivity captive) hast received gifts in the human race collectively.

It may therefore be said, is there not a discrepancy here?
The Psalmist says, "Thou hast received," but the Apostle says, "He gave."

Let it however be observed, that the Psalmist adds, " even for the rebellious, that the Lord God might dwell with them."

Here is plainly involved the act of giving.

Hence, since the Apostle was speaking of God's gifts by Christ (v. 7), it was quite competent to him, for brevity's sake, to speak of Christ's giving those gifts, which at His Ascension He received, in order to give. Cp. Surenhus. p. 585. And this is a common use of the Hebrew verb וליבי (perhaps connected with the Greek λαγχάνω, λάχος), which often signifies to fetch, i.e. for the use of another. See Gen. xviii. 5; xxvii. 13; i. e. for the use of another. See Gen. xviii. 5; xxvii. 13; xxxviii. 6; xlii. 16. Exod. xxv. 2. 1 Kings xvii. 10. 2 Kings

As to the word চামৰু (ba Adam), its literal signification is, "in the Adam, or man."

And it was in His character as "the Man," "the Second Adam," the Representative and Head of Regenerate and Redeemed Humanity, that Christ ascended into Heaven, and carried our Nature to the Right Hand of God. It was in His exalted Humanity that our second Adam acquired gifts in Himself, and gave gifts to the whole human family; it was in His nature as Man that our Head received and gave gifts to all His Members.

The reception of those Gifts in Him and by Him, in His Humanity, as our second Adam, virtually implied the donation of those gifts to us, who are mystically united as one body in Him, just as the reception of the priestly unction by Aaron, the type of Christ, on his head, was followed by the effusion of it on his beard and on the skirts of his clothing. (Ps. cxxxiii. 2.)

It is not necessary to say that the a in Daya marks a "dativus commodi," and means "for men," in the original, though doubtless this signification is implied, because whatever is received by Christ in our Nature, is received for the benefit of our

9. To  $\delta \hat{\epsilon}$ ,  $\delta \hat{r} \hat{\epsilon} \beta \eta$ ] Now the assertion, "He ascended," what is it,—what does it imply,—but that He also descended? On this citatory use of the article  $\tau \delta$ , see Heb. xii. 27. It is similarly prefixed to sentences, Mark ix. 23. Acts iv. 21; xxii. 30. Rom.

viii. 26; xiii. 9. 1 Thess. iv. 1.

—  $\kappa \alpha l \kappa \alpha \tau \epsilon \beta \eta$ ] Elz. adds  $\pi \rho \hat{\omega} \tau \sigma \nu$ , not in the best MSS.

and Edd.

— εἰs τὰ κατώτερα] into the lower parts. A, B, C, I, K add μέρη, parts, but it is not in D, E, F, G, nor in the most ancient Fathers, and it is rejected by Tisch., Meyer, Ellicott, Alford.
 What is the region meant here by "the lower parts of the

(1) Some understand it simply as the Earth, to which Christ came down at His Incarnation. See Bp. Pearson, Art. v. p. 429. VOL. II.—PART III.

Cp. John iii. 13, where our Lord says, "No man ascended up to heaven but He that came down from heaven." And so Dr. South.

But this interpretation seems hardly consistent with the comparative partitive words κατώτερα της γης, the lower parts of the

And therefore we are led to understand these words-

(2) as signifying that lower region to which Christ descended at His Death.

This interpretation is that which was generally accepted by the ancient Church.

Thus S. Irenæus says, v. 31, "Tribus diebus conversatus est ubi erant mortui." And then he quotes our Lord's words concerning Himself, as being three days and three nights in the heart of the earth, and he cites the present text.

So Tertullian (de Animâ, 55), "Formâ humanæ mortis apud inferos functus nec antè ascendit in sublimiora cœlorum, quam descendit in inferiora terrarum, ut illic Prophetas et Pa-triarchas compotes Sui faceret."

So also c, Praxeam, 30, and cp. S. Cyril Hieros. (Catech. iv. 12, p. 47), with the Benedictine Editor's note, who refers to Greg. Nazian. (Orat. xlii.), Augustine (de Genesi ad lit. xii. 33). See also S. Athanas. (c. Arian. i. 44, 45, pp. 353, 354), who compares St. Peter's words (Acts ii. 22—24); and see on Phil. ii. 3. And so Origen in Matt. Hom. 35, S. Chrysostom here, and S. Jerome, and Theodoret, and Theophylact (who observe that this text is a refutation of Nestorianism), and S. Hilary in Ps. lxvii. ĝ 19, and S. Augustine (de Trinitate, x. § 65). Theodoret well illustrates St. Paul's words, τὰ κατώτατα τῆς γῆς, by those of the Psalmist, which were spoken of Christ's death, and which were probably in the Apostle's mind, Ps. lxxxvii. 7, ἔθεντό με ἐν λάκκφ κατωτάτφ, they laid me in the lowest pit. And again, Ps. cxxxix. 15, said first of formation in the darkness of the womb, and next of Resurrection from the tomb in the earth, ή δπόστασίς μου ἐν τοῖς κατωτάτοις τῆς γῆς.

The meaning therefore appears to be, that at His Death Christ descended into the lower parts of the Earth; His Human Body being laid in the Grave: and that His Human Soul, separated from His Body by death, went into the place appointed for departed and disembodied souls. See on Luke xxiii. 43, and below, on 1 Pet. iii. 19.

This sense also seems to be most in harmony with what follows concerning Christ filling all things.

10. δ καταβάς αὐτός ἐστι] He that descended, He it is that also ascended up above all heavens, that He might fill all things. See on John iii, 13.

11. αὐτός] 'ipse, nemo alius.' See above, ii. 14; v. 23. 27.

- ἔδωκε He gave. Their office and qualifications as Apostles were not from themselves, but all that they had, or did, or were, was His gift to them and to the Church. See on v. 7.

God the Father gave (ξδωκε) Christ as Head to the Church (see above, i. 21), and put all things under His feet; and Christ, the Son of God, our Head, being seated in glory at God's right hand, gave (ξδωκε) the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and gave Apostles.

Thus all gifts in the Church flow to us by the Holy Spirit, through the Son, from the Father.

Thus also Christ, seated in glory at the Right Hand of God, is proclaimed the Author and Doer of all that was effected by the Apostles. He gave Apostles, and He gave all that was given by them. This is the clue to the right understanding of the design of the Book written by St. Paul's companion, St. Luke. "The Acts of the Apostles;" and these words of St. Paul might well be prefixed as a Motto to that Divine Book. See above, Introduction to "the Acts of the Apostles," pp. 3—7.
— ἀποστόλουs] Apostles. The English reader is to be reminded that "some" does not mean "to some." Observe, St.

Paul says that Christ gave some Apostles; he does not say that He gave one Apostle to be chief over all.

If, as the Church of Rome affirms, the doctrine of the Supremacy of the Pope as the Visible Head of the Church, is the "res summa Christianitatis," the main groundwork of Christianity (to use the words of Cardinal Bellarmine, de Pontifice), it is incredible that St. Paul, in describing here the fundamentals of the Church, should have made no mention of that doctrine.

! Rom, 12. 5. ! Cor. 12. 27. ch. 1. 23. & 5. 23. Col. 1. 24.

m Isa, 28, 9, Matt. 11, 7, & 18, 3, 4, 1 Cor. 3, 1, 2, & 14, 20, Heb. 13, 9, n ch. 1. 22 & 5. 23. Col. 1. 18 o Rom. 12. 5. 1 Cor. 12. 27. Col. 2. 19.

p Rom. 1. 9, 18, 1 Pet. 4, 3, q ch. 2, 12, Rom. 8, 7. 1 Thess. 4. 5. James 4. 4. r Rom. 1. 24, 26.

s Rom. 6. 6. ch. 2. 2, 3. Col. 2. 11. & 3. 9, sq.

λιστάς, τους δε ποιμένας και διδασκάλους, 12 1 προς τον καταρτισμον των άγίων, είς έργον διακονίας, είς οἰκοδομήν τοῦ σώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ, 13 μέχρι καταντήσωμεν οι πάντες είς την ένότητα της πίστεως και της έπιγνώσεως του Υίου του Θεοῦ, εἰς ἄνδρα τέλειον, εἰς μέτρον ἡλικίας τοῦ πληρώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ· 14 " ίνα μηκέτι ωμεν νήπιοι, κλυδωνιζόμενοι καὶ περιφερόμενοι παντὶ ἀνέμω τῆς διδασκαλίας, εν τη κυβεία των ανθρώπων, εν πανουργία προς την μεθοδείαν της πλάνης· 15 n άληθεύοντες δε εν άγάπη αὐξήσωμεν είς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα, ος εστιν ή κεφαλή, Χριστὸς, 16 ° έξ οῦ πᾶν τὸ σῶμα συναρμολογούμενον καὶ συμβιβαζόμενον διὰ πάσης άφης της έπιχορηγίας κατ' ένέργειαν έν μέτρω ένος έκάστου μέρους την αυξησιν του σώματος ποιείται είς οἰκοδομην έαυτου εν αγάπη.

17 Τοῦτο οὖν λέγω καὶ μαρτύρομαι ἐν Κυρίω, μηκέτι ὑμᾶς περιπατεῖν, καθὼς καὶ τὰ λοιπὰ ἔθνη περιπατεῖ ἐν ματαιότητι τοῦ νοὸς αὐτῶν, 18 q ἐσκοτισμένοι τῆ διανοία ὄντες, ἀπηλλοτριωμένοι τῆς ζωῆς τοῦ Θεοῦ, διὰ τὴν ἄγνοιαν τὴν οὖσαν έν αὐτοῖς διὰ τὴν πώρωσιν τῆς καρδίας αὐτῶν, 19 τ οἴτινες ἀπηλγηκότες έαυτοὺς παρέδωκαν τη ἀσελγεία εἰς ἐργασίαν ἀκαθαρσίας πάσης ἐν πλεονεξία.

20 Τμεῖς δὲ οὐχ οὕτως ἐμάθετε τὸν Χριστόν 21 εἴγε αὐτὸν ἡκούσατε, καὶ ἐν αὐτῶ ἐδιδάχθητε, καθώς ἐστιν ἀλήθεια ἐν τῷ Ἰησοῦ, 22 ° ἀποθέσθαι ὑμᾶς, κατὰ την προτέραν αναστροφην, τον παλαιον ανθρωπον τον φθειρόμενον κατά τάς

- τους δε προφήτας] and some Prophets. On these offices in the Church, see notes above on 1 Cor. xii. 28.

Pastors and Teachers are not names of separate orders or degrees in the Church, but St. Paul intended to indicate thereby several gifts and functions which might appertain to the same person; see note above, on 1 Cor. xii. 28. S. Augustine (Ep. 149). Chrys. and Jerome here, and Bp. Andrewes, vol. v. p. 65.

 πρὸς - διακονίας] for the perfecting of the saints to the work of ministering. Each has a διακονία. Cp. 2 Tim. iii. 17.
 μέχρι-εἰς την ἐνότητα τῆς πιστεως] till we all arrive at the oneness of Faith. Therefore Unity in the Faith is represented by St. Paul not only as something attainable, but as the very end and purpose of the Christian life, and as the ripeness and maturity of the life of the Church, and therefore is proposed as the proper aim for every Christian.

Unless we arrive at that ripeness, we are described by St. Paul as mere babes (v. 14; cp. 1 Cor. iii. 1), or as ships without ballast, tossed about with every wind of doctrine, and never coming to the harbour; or as silly dupes and victims of the trickery (κυβεία, properly dicing) of spiritual gamesters.

A solemn warning and stern reproof to the vain-glorious self-conceit of Schism. They who make divisions in the Christian Church may imagine themselves to be wise, and may vaunt their own superior intelligence; but the holy Apostles describes them as mere babes. Cp. Introduction above, pp. 276, 277.

- εἰς μέτρον ἡλικίας τοῦ πληρώματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ] unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. See iii. 19. The spiritual life is here represented as one of continual growth (αθξησις, v. 15) in faith and knowledge, cherished in us, and (attended to the communion with the whole Body of Christ, and circulates, as it were, like blood in every part of it, and partakes in its fulness, as every drop of water in the Sea partakes of the saltness and movement of the whole.

14. νήπιοι] babes. See I Cor. iii. I.

- ἐν πανουργία πρὸς τὴν μεθοδείαν τῆς πλάνης] in imposture devised for the machination of deceit. Μεθοδεία πλάνης indicates a certain systematic plan of delusion on the part of those who use μεθόδους πλάνης καθ' ήμων. Caten. p. 172. Cp. vi. 11, and Zonaras, who interprets the word by ἐπιβουλαί.

15. ἀληθεύοντες] being true: "following the truth," as in the "Veritatem facientes" (Vulg.). See on Gal. iv. 16.

— Χριστός] Christ. Elz. prefixes the article, which is not in A, B, C, and is rejected by Lachm., Rückert, Tisch., Ellicott, Alf. 16.  $\xi \xi$  of out of Whom—on the force of the preposition  $\xi \kappa$ , see below, v. 30; and cp. Col. ii. 19.

— συναρμολογούμενον κ. συμβιβαζόμενον διὰ πάσης ἀφῆς τῆς ἐπιχορηγίας] being fitly framed together and compacted by means of every joint of the spiritual supply. Observe the present tenses of the participles here and in Col. ii. 19, describing the work of the fitting together which is always going on in the mystical Body of Christ.

The words are rendered "Conglutinatum per omnem juncturam subministrationis" (Vulg. and Irenaus, iv. 32, who has 'connexum' and 'compactum'), compacted by means of every joint of the subsidiary supply. The Genitive της ἐπιχορηγίας (as Ellicott well observes) defines the purpose and use of the ἀφή. Cp. Heb. ix. 21, σκεύη τῆς λειτουργίας, 'vessels for the service.'
And cp. above, i. 14, ἀπολύτρωσις τῆς περιποιήσεως, 'redemption for the purchasing."

- ποιείται] maketh for itself: middle voice, as πληρουμένου,

18, 19. πώρωσιν] callousness, ἀναλγησία (Theodoret). See above, Rom. xi. 7. 25. And it is so explained by what follows, where they are said to be past feeling, ἀπηλγηκότες, which word is rendered by ἀναισθησία, insensibility, by Origen, who describes it as the state of the heart, when the conscience is hardened by sin, and "seared as it were with a hot iron" (1 Tim. iv. 2).

St. Paul takes care to protest here, that the sin and blindness of the Gentile world were the natural results of their own sin, in hardening their own hearts, and stifling the voice of Reason and Conscience, and giving themselves up to work all uncleanness with greediness; and was therefore a judicial retribution upon them from God for their misuse of His Gifts. Cp. Rom. i. 18-

 He thus explains his use of the word φύσιs above in ii. 3.
 έν πλεονεξία] in greediness. It is observed by Origen and Jerome here, that this word is often coupled by St. Paul with words of lust, fornication, and adultery. See v. 3, and particularly 1 Thess. iv. 6 and note there. And so it is observable that our Lord passes on from speaking of Covetousness to speak of Adultery.

Luke xvi. 18, where see note.

The reason is obvious. We are all members one of another in Christ. St. Paul dwells particularly in this Epistle on the moral duties consequent on this fellow-membership. Each member ought to edify the other members; and whenever one member encroaches on, and usurps what belongs to, another member, he is guilty of the sin of πλεον-εξία. And in nothing is this sin more shown than in Harlotry and Adultery assuming to themselves the sacred name of Love.

21. είγε αὐτὸν ἡκούσατε] if at least (as I suppose) ye heard Him, i. e. hearkened to Him. See above, iii. 2.

22. ἀποθέσθαι ύμας-τον παλαιον άνθρωπον] to put off the old He is speaking of the instruction which they had already received antecedently to their Baptism, and by which they had been taught what they were bound to do in and after Baptism. See on Gal. iii. 27, where he says that all we who have been baptized have put on Christ. He reminds them now that they must wear the robe of Christ's rightcousness which they had then

This must be observed, because it seems to be imagined by some, that St. Paul is now calling on the Ephesians to put on Christ for the first time. He might, indeed, use this expression if he were speaking of putting on the armour of Christ, and of doing the works of Christ, as in Rom. xiii. 14.

But he is here speaking of putting on a new nature; he is reminding them of what they have already been taught, and have ἐπιθυμίας τῆς ἀπάτης, 23 t ἀνανεοῦσθαι δὲ τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν, 24 καὶ t Rom. 6. 4.  $\frac{\&12.2}{\epsilon}$ νδύσασθαι τὸν καινὸν ἄνθρωπον, τὸν κατὰ Θεὸν κτισθέντα ἐν δικαιοσύνη καὶ  $\frac{\&12.2}{2 \text{ Cor}}$ . όσιότητι της άληθείας.

 $^{25}$  μ Διὸ ἀποθέμενοι τὸ ψεῦδος λαλεῖτε ἀλήθειαν ἕκαστος μετὰ το $\hat{v}$   $^{\mathrm{uZech.~8.16.}}_{\mathrm{x.Ps.~4.4.}}$ πλησίον αὐτοῦ, ὅτι ἐσμὲν ἀλλήλων μέλη.  $26 \times Oργίζεσθε$  καὶ μὴ άμαρ-  $20 \times Oργίζεσθε$ already done, in their Baptism, and urges them to live according to that baptismal teaching, and according to their own baptismal profession.

Hence he says, Since ye have been taught to put off, as concerns your former habits, the old man, whose very life tended to corruption, and to be renewed in the Spirit of your mind, and to put on the new man . . . therefore having put away (ἐκονθέμενοι) Lying, speak the Truth each with his neighbour, for (by your baptismal incorporation into Christ's body) ye are members one of another.

Compare the similar argument to the Colossians, iii. 9, 10 (the best commentary on this passage), where he says, "Since ye have put off the old man with his deeds, and have put on the new man . . . lie not one to another, but put on bowels of kindness," &c.

Accordingly he uses the aorist ἀποθέσθαι to describe the act of putting off; but the present tense ἀνανεοῦσθαι to describe a continued habit of spiritual renewal; see the next note: and ep.

He proceeds here to evolve other moral duties in like manner from the spiritual germ of their baptismal engrafting into the Body of Christ.

23. ἀνανεοῦσθαι δὲ τῷ πνεύματι τοῦ νοὸς ὑμῶν] but to be renewed in the spirit of your mind.

This appears to be the true meaning. They could not be said to have been taught to be renewed by the Holy Spirit; and the "Holy Spirit of their mind" would seem to be a harsh ex-

Therefore, notwithstanding the high authorities that might be adduced in behalf of that sense, the true signification appears to be that which has been thus expressed by S. Augustine (de Genesi ad lifer. vi. 26), "Renovamur secundum id quod amisit Adam, id est secundum spiritum mentis nostræ; secundum autem corpus quod seminatur animale, et resurget spirituale, in melius renovabimur." See 1 Cor. xv. 51.

The first new birth, that of our spirit, takes place in this life, and is called the first Resurrection (see on John v. 25); and this first Resurrection must precede, in order that we may be partakers of the second Resurrection, viz. in order that we may be renewed in our bodies, glorified at the General Resurrection in the last We must be born anew in the spirit of our mind now, in order that we may be raised in the flesh glorified hereafter.

The πνεθμα, or spirit, is the higher and nobler element of the inner man, and is contrasted with the  $\sigma \grave{\alpha} \rho \xi$ , or flesh, and  $\psi \nu \chi \grave{\eta}$ , or animal principle. See above on 1 Thess. v. 23.

And the renovation of the spirit will lead to the blessed result of the glorification of those other elements of the human constitution hereafter, with which it is associated here.

St. Paul first uses the word ἀνανεοῦσθαι, and he adds, ἐνδύσασθαι τὸν καινὸν ἄνθρωπον.

What then is the difference between véos and καινός?

The word καινδs refers rather to the operation of an external Agent, and so is properly applied to works made by power operating upon material prepared for it. But véos describes rather the inner growth or change of a natural object. Thus in the proverb, "new wine is to be put into new bottles," the bottles are kauvol, but the wine is véos. (Matt. ix. 17. Mark ii. 22. Luke Néos is a person or thing in a new or youthful condition, as contrasted with the same person or thing in a state of old age or decay. Kaivos is a person or thing in a new state, as distinguished from another thing or person in an old condition.

In spiritual matters the work of ἀνακαίνωσιs is performed by the external operation of the Holy Ghost on the inner life; and therefore the καινδε άνθρωπος is said to be κτισθελε, and the νέος άνθρωπος is said to be άνακαινούμενος. (Col. iii. 10.) And here avaveovo at is described as a duty we ourselves owe to our own moral and spiritual being, and ενδύσασθαι καινόν άνθρωπον is to put on, as it were, the vesture of the new nature which is made for us by God, and given to us by Him in Christ. The kairbs ἄνθρωπος is καινή κτίσις. (Gal. vi. 15.) The new Διαθήκη which God makes with man is καινή (Mark xiv. 24. 2 Cor. iii. 6. Heb. viii. 8), although, being the same dispensation spiritualized, it may also be called νέα. (Heb. xii. 24.) The heavens, which will be made new, are καινοί (2 Pet. iii. 13); and Christ, by His Incarnation, Sacrifice, and Glorification, and by his Mediatorial Power and Grace, makes all things new, καινά. (Rev. xxi. 5.)

26. 'Οργίζεσθε και μή ἁμαρτάνετε] Be ye angry and sin not. A quotation from the LXX (Ps. iv. 4). 'Οργίζεσθε represents the Hebrew τρις (righzu), Be ye troubled, Be ye stirred with the emotions of feeling.

The Hebrew word my (raghaz) is applied to any agitation of mind exciting to action, as fear and rage. Cp. Gen. xlv. 24. So

2 Kings xix. 27, 28. Isa. xxxvii. 28, 29.

On the quotations from the Old Testament in this Epistle,

These words are quoted as Scripture by S. Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, ad Phil. 12.

This is a very important text. St. Paul had been describing the Gentile world as sunk into a spiritual insensibility (avopynola), as having their conscience hardened and rendered callous by sin, and as having no just feeling of shame, and hatred and indignation against it as an outrage against God, and a debasement of Human Nature, which is God's Work.

The habit of ἀναλγησία, or insensibility, was even encouraged by the two great schools of Moral Philosophy then dominant in

The "wise man" of the Stoic System was schooled never to allow the mind to be ruffled by passion, and it was their principle of ethical discipline, not to temper or control the affections, but to extinguish and eradicate them, or to brand and cauterize them. See Lactant, vi. 15.

The disciples of the Epicurean School were taught to look down with serene indifference and apathetic contempt on all the errors of a restless and miserable world. Cp. Lucret. i. 1-10.

On these accounts, the Apostle might well say 'Oργίζεσθε, Be ye angry. That is, do not imagine that the feeling of Anger, which is natural to man when he sees an act of cruelty, injustice, and wrong, -an act of outrage against God and man, -is an unrighteous feeling. No; it is a feeling implanted in Human Nature, which is the work of Almighty God. It is "connected with a sense of virtue and vice, of moral good and moral evil," and it is "one of the bonds by which Human Society is held together."
And it is implanted in Human Nature for good purposes, in order that Vice may not go unpunished, but may be held in the detestation and abhorrence that it deserves, which is necessary for the preservation of Human Society, which is also God's work; and in order that Vice may receive that chastisement which is also necessary for that end, and which it would not receive, if it is practised with desperate recklessness, as it is by the Heathen, who "are past feeling," and "have given themselves up to work all uncleanness with greediness," or is regarded with Stoical Apathy or Epicurean Indifference.

Therefore  $\partial \rho \gamma i (\varepsilon \sigma \theta \varepsilon, be \ ye \ angry.$  Do not blunt your  $\partial \rho \gamma \eta$ , which is necessary (as its etymology indicates) to set you upon your  $\varepsilon \rho \gamma \rho \nu$ , or work, and makes you energize; and without which you may be άργδς, or even πανουργος.

On this subject the student may be referred to Bp. Butler's Sermon on Resentment (Serm. viii.), and to his three Sermons on Human Nature and his Preface to them. Bp. Butler gives a somewhat different construction to St. Paul's words; but this does not affect the general drift of his argument. Cp. Winer,

The germ of the moral system by which Bishop Butler has vindicated the divine Author of our nature from the cavils of those who "charge God foolishly," by ascribing to Him, or to the Nature He has given us, those evils which are owing to our abuse of that Nature, may be seen in the remarks of another Bishop, of the Ancient Christian Church, who thus speaks:

We have Anger implanted within us, - not in order that we may insult our neighbours, but that we may reclaim the sinner, and in order that we may not be insensible. Anger is like a stimulus applied to us in order that we may gnash our teeth against the Devil, and in order that we may be vehement against him; not in order that we may fight one another. We have arms given us, not that we may war against each other, but that we may use them as a panoply against our Enemy. Art thou passionate? Be so against thine own sins, rebuke thine own soul, lash thine own conscience, be a vehement and severe censor of thine own faults.

Q q 2

a Matt. 12: 34—3 ch. 5. 3, 4. Rom. 3 13, 14. Col. 4. 6. Ecclus. 20. 16. b Isa. 7. 13. & 63. 10. & 63. 10. 2 Cor. 1. 22. & 5. 5. ch. 1. 13, 14.

τάνετε, ὁ ἥλιος μὴ ἐπιδυέτω ἐπὶ τῷ παροργισμῷ ὑμῶν· <sup>27 γ</sup> μηδὲ δίδοτε τόπον y James 4. 7. τανετε, ὁ ηλιος μὴ ἐπιδυέτω ἐπὶ τῷ παροργισμῷ ὑμῶν·  $^{27}$  μηδὲ δίδοτε τόπον  $^{1}$  Pet. 5. 9.  $^{2}$  Αcts 20. 34.  $^{34}$  αλακι, 12. 34-37. τῷ Διαβόλῳ.  $^{28}$   $^{2}$  Ο κλέπτων μηκέτι κληπτέτω, μᾶλλον δὲ κοπιάτω ἐργαζόμενος almatt, 12. 34-37. ταις ίδίαις χερσὶν τὸ ἀγαθὸν, ἴνα ἔχη μεταδιδόναι τῷ χρείαν ἔχοντι. 29 α Πας λόγος σαπρος έκ του στόματος ύμων μη έκπορευέσθω, άλλ' εἴ τις άγαθος προς οἰκοδομὴν τῆς χρείας, ἴνα δῷ χάριν τοῖς ἀκούουσι 30 καὶ μὴ λυπεῖτε τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἄγιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἐν ὧ ἐσφραγίσθητε εἰς ἡμέραν ἀπολυτρώσεως.

This is the use of Anger. For this purpose it was implanted in us by God. S. Chrysostom (on cap. i. p. 772).

To which may be added the following, from another eloquent and learned writer of the ancient Church:

"Arbitror hoc de illà Ira nunc dictum, qua naturalibus stimulis concitamur, et nobis quasi hominibus esse concessum, ut ad indignæ alicujus rei facinus moveamur, tranquillitatemque mentis velut levis quædam aura conturbet, nequaquam tamen in tumentes gurgites furoris impetu sublevemur. Firmianus noster (Lactantius), Librum De Irâ Dei, docto pariter et eloquente sermone conscripsit, quem qui legerit puto ei ad Iræ intellectum satis abundèque posse sufficere." S. Jerome.

Thus the writers of ancient Christendom have anticipated

(and by so doing have confirmed) the teaching of our great English Moralist, Bishop Butler, who thus speaks:

Notwithstanding all the abuses (of Anger), is not just indignation against cruelty and wrong one of the instruments of death which the Author of our nature hath provided? Are not cruelty, injustice, and wrong, the natural objects of that indignation? Surely then it may, one way or other, be innocently employed

True. Since therefore it is necessary for the very subsistence of the world, that injury, injustice, and cruelty should be punished; and since compassion, which is so natural to mankind, would render that execution of justice exceedingly difficult and uneasy; indignation against vice and wickedness is, and may be allowed to be, a balance to that weakness of pity, and also to any thing else which would prevent the necessary methods of severity. . . . The account now given of the passion of Resentment, as distinct from all the abuses of it, may suggest to our thoughts the following reflections:

First. That vice is indeed of ill desert, and must finally be punished. Why should men dispute concerning the reality of virtue, and whether it be founded in the nature of things, which yet surely is not matter of question; but why should this, I say, be disputed, when every man carries about him this passion, which affords him demonstration, that the rules of justice and equity are to be the guide of his actions? For every man naturally feels an indignation upon seeing instances of villainy and baseness, and therefore cannot commit the same without being self-condemned.

Secondly. That we should learn to be cautious, lest we charge God foolishly, by ascribing that to Him, or to the Nature He has given us, which is owing wholly to our own abuse of it. Men may speak of the degeneracy and corruption of the world according to the experience they have had of it; but human Nature, considered as the divine workmanship, should, methinks, be treated as sacred; "for in the image of God made He

That passion, from whence men take occasion to run into the dreadful vices of malice and revenge; even that passion, as implanted in our nature by God, is not only innocent, but a generous movement of mind. It is in itself, and in its original, no more than indignation against injury and wickedness; that which is the only deformity in the creation, and the only reasonable object of abhorrence and dislike. How manifold evidence have we of the divine wisdom and goodness, when even pain in the natural world, and the passion we have been now considering in the moral, come out instances of it! Bp. Butler (Sermon on Resentment, p. 76).

Indeed, the true view on this important matter had already been opened by St. Paul himself, 2 Cor. vii. 11. And the Holy Spirit had suggested as much in the Gospel, by saying that He Who was "meek and lowly of heart" "looked round about Him with anger, grieved for the hardness of their hearts." (Mark

— καl μη αμαρτάνετε] and sin not. He does not forbid Anger, but even commands it on fit occasions (see last note), and when it is directed to right ends, and moderated and regulated by proper restraints; but he forbids all abuses of it, and all excess

Here is evidently a distinction made between anger and sin; between the natural passion and sinful Anger. Bp. Butter.

- δ ήλιος-παροργισμώ] let not the sun go down on your provocation. Παροργισμός is exacerbation, exasperation or irritation. He does not say ὀργῆ, but παροργισμῷ. Παροργισμὸς is not simply anger, but rather an abuse and perversion of it; wherein the feeling, provoked by some external exciting cause, is made to swerve aside (παρά) from the right rule by which the affection of δργή ought to be regulated. See vi. 4, μή παροργίζετε τὰ τέκνα, do not provoke, irritate, exasperate your children; and cp. Dean Trench's excellent volume on the Synonyms of

N. T.  $\S$  xxxvii. p. 155. 27.  $\mu\eta\delta\dot{\epsilon}$   $\kappa.\tau.\lambda$ .] So the best MSS. and Edd. Nor yet, much more, give place to the Devil. See on John xiii. 27, the case of more, give place to the Devil. See on John xiii. 27, the case of Judas. Satan (says Jerome) first threw a fiery dart into his heart (cp. St. John's words, xiii. 2,  $\tau$ οῦ διαβόλου ἤδη  $\beta$ ε $\beta$ ληκότος εἰς τὴν καρδίαν), and if Judas had not cherished it within him, Satan would never have been able to enter there, as he did, after Judas had received the sop. If Judas had stood firm against Satan, Satan would have found no place in him. Origen.

Shut the door against Satan, and you will obey the Apostle's precept, Give no place to the Devil; by which precept the Apostle shows, that if the Devil enters and takes possession in us, it is because we have admitted him. Augustine (Serm. 32).

On the phrase διδόναι τόπον, see Rom. xii. 19. 28. Ο κλέπτων] He that stealeth; he that is in the habit of

The that stealing. See examples of this use of the present participle, Matt. iv. 3, δ πειράζων. Gal. i. 23. Winer, § 45, p. 316.

— ἐργαζόμενος ταῖς ἰδίαις χερσίν τὸ ἀγαθόν] working with his own hands that which is good. So A, D*, E, F, G, and Lachm., Rückert, Ellicott. There are some slight variations in the MSS. here.

- Ίνα έχη μεταδιδόναι] in order that he may have—not to keep, but—to give a part away. Another practical application of the great doctrine of Unity in the Body of Christ. He had said, Lie not, because we are members one of another. He now says, Steal not, do not use your hands to rob others of the fruit of the labour of their hands, but work with your own hands, in order that you may have wherewithal to give to your fellowmember in need.

He proceeds to say, Utter no corrupt language, but what is good for the use of edifying to others. So all moral duties flow from the same divine source,—the Incarnation of Christ.

St. Paul himself, as we learn from his speech to the Ephesian Presbyters, had set an example of this practice in his own person at Ephesus. "Ye yourselves know that these hands ministered to my necessities and to those who were with me. I showed you an example in all things, that so labouring ye ought Jesus, how He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts xx. 33—35). There is the same spirit in the Speech as in the Epistle; and the one happily illustrates the other.

29. πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν τῆς χρείας] for edifying of the need. Χρεία is the need, urgency, or exigency of some emergent and pressing occasion, and is so used in the preceding verse, which explains its use here. Cp. Acts vi. 3; xx. 34. Rom. xii. 13. Phil. iv. 16. Tit. iii. 14.

This precept is to be obeyed in two ways;

(1) The Christian who has learnt to be not overcome of evil, but to overcome evil by good (Rom. xii, 21), converts every need of his own into an opportunity for good.

Every stone that is thrown at him by an enemy, is picked up by him, and used by him for the purpose of οἰκοδομή, or edificaby him, and used by him for the purpose of through, or early tion; i.e. to be built into the structure of his own spiritual life, and of that of the Church. Thus, in the Poet's words, he "turns his necessity to glorious gain." His conversation is ordered for the improvement and building up of the need. The need is made an occasion of spiritual wealth.

The Vulg. approaches near the meaning by its translation, "ad ædificationem opportunitatis;" only "opportunitas" is too favourable a word; it should be rather "necessitas."

A similar precept is given in v. 16, where St. Paul speaks of "redeeming the opportunity" because the days are evil.

(2) There is also another mode in which this precept may be applied. The χρεία (or need of which the Λpostle speaks) is not only our own need, but our neighbour's need also.

We are bound so to temper our conversation and to regulate 31 · Πᾶσα πικρία καὶ θυμὸς καὶ ὀργὴ καὶ κραυγὴ καὶ βλάσφημία ἀρθήτω ἀφ' · col. 3. 8, 13. ύμῶν, σὺν πάση κακία. 32 d γίνεσθε δὲ εἰς ἀλλήλους χρηστοὶ, εὕσπλαγχνοι, d Matt. 6. 14. χαριζόμενοι έαυτοις, καθώς και ὁ Θεὸς ἐν Χριστῷ ἐχαρίσατο ὑμίν.

<sup>3</sup>  $^{\rm c}$  Πορνεία δὲ καὶ πᾶσα ἀκαθαρσία, ἡ πλεονεξία, μηδὲ ὀνομαζέσθω ἐν ὑμῖν, Lev. 1.9. καθὼς πρέπει ἀγίοις, <sup>4</sup>  $^{\rm d}$  καὶ αἰσχρότης, καὶ μωρολογία, ἡ εὐτραπελία, τὰ οὐκ  $^{\rm cal. 5.19.}_{\rm col. 3.5.}$ άνήκοντα άλλα μαλλον ευχαριστία.

Prov. 12. 23. & 15. 2. Eccl. 10. 13. Matt. 12. 34—37.

our own discourse, that it may serve to edify him in his need; that is to say, our words are to be so accommodated, as to suit the special wants of the particular persons with whom we associate and converse. We are not to apply the same remedies to all cases indiscriminately, but to study the diversities of constitutions and temperaments of individuals, to sympathize with them in their peculiar difficulties and necessities, and to order our conversation so as to be wholesome and seasonable to each for their growth in the faith.

This is a special duty of the Christian Pastor-the Physician of souls.

This view of the Apostolic precept seems to have been in the mind of the framers of several ancient Versions, where the words are rendered, or rather paraphrased, "for the edification of faith." Cp. Trench (Syn. N. T. p. 121).

30. μħ λυπεῖτε] grieve not ye the Holy Spirit—a plain evidence of His Personality. Cp. Acts xiii. 2. Rom. viii. 5. John xiv. 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7, 8. 13; and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. viii.

p. 578.

These words are imitated by the Apostolic writer Hermas, —  $\epsilon \nu$   $\tilde{\phi}$   $\epsilon \sigma \phi$  aγίσθητε] by Whom ye were sealed. Observe the acrist,—by Whom ye were sealed (see i. 13) at a particular time, i. e. at your Baptism, called ή σφραγίs, or the seal, by the ancient Church. See Clem. Alexandr. (in Euseb. iii. 23), relating the story of the young man committed by St. John the Evangelist to a certain Presbyter, who (says Clemens), having instructed him, at length baptized him (ἐφώτισε), and then remitted structed him, at length baptized him (ἐφώτισε), and then remitted some of his care, as having set upon him the guardian seal (σφραγίδα) of the Lord. See also in Suicer, Thes. v. σφραγίδι.

The seal of the Holy Ghost is upon thee. Let that seal be upon thy mouth. Break it not. The mouth of him who is sealed by the Spirit, will never utter what is unworthy of the grace he has received from the Holy Ghost. Chrys.

— εἰς ἡμέραν ἀπολυτρώσεως] for the day of Redemption (cp. Luke xxi. 28), the Great Day, the Day of the general Resurrection; the great Day of Redemption, for which the whole Creation than grays (see on Rom viii 23), when the hody will rise from now groans (see on Rom. viii. 23); when the body will rise from the dust, and from the burden and bondage of corruption, and be glorified like the body of Christ; and when the soul will be reunited to the body, and you will rise in body and soul to a full fruition of the blissful inheritance purchased for you by the blood of the Redeemer, of Whom the Patriarch said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that He shall stand at the latter Day (the great Day of Redemption) upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." (Job xix. 25.)

It is observable, that the seal of the Holy Spirit here is connected with the future glory of the Resurrection. And with good reason. For we rise by a first Resurrection in Baptism from the death of sin to newness of life on earth; and its end and consummation is, that we may rise by the second Resurrection of the great Day of Redemption to newness of life in heaven, even to a glorious Immortality.

On this text op. Bp. Andrewes (Sermons, iii. 201).

31.  $\Pi \hat{a} \sigma \alpha \pi \kappa \kappa \rho [a \kappa . \tau . \lambda .]$  The language of this and the following precepts is imitated by Hermas, Pastor. lib. ii. Mand. ii. viii.

- θυμδς καὶ δργή] wrath and anger: i. e. not only passionate rage, but the inner feeling of anger. See on Rom. ii. 8.
32. γίνεσθε δέ] but become ye. See v. l.
- έχαρ[σατο] forgave you; bestowed upon you forgiveness as an act of grace, a free gift, in Christ dying for you; and applied that gift to you actually and personally, on your profession of Repentance and Faith in Him at your Baptism. (Acts ii. 38; xxii. 16.)

CH. V. 1. Γίνεσθε οδν] Become ye therefore followers-imitators-of God. This verse is to be connected with the foregoing and the following. Since God forgave you in Christ, therefore do you, who are children of God and members of Christ, become followers of God, as dear children, and walk in love, as Christ loved us.

2. προσφορὰν καὶ θυσίαν] an offering and sacrifice. 'Oblationem et hostiam' (Vulg.). The difference between these words appears to be, that a θυσία requires the intervention of a Priest, and that, as used here, it refers to the office of Christ, as the Great High Priest of the Church, offering Himself as a Victim, slain for the sins of the world, and entering into the true Holy of Holies, Heaven itself, with His own blood, where He ever liveth to plead the meritorious and saving efficacy of that Great Sacrifice, and by virtue thereof to make intercession for us. (Heb. vii. 25; ix. 24; x. 20.)

S. Ignatius adopts these words in his Epistle to the Ephesians, in which he expresses his wish for Martyrdom, and that he may be a true disciple of Christ, τοῦ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν ἐαυτὸν ἀνενεγ-κόντος Θεφ προσφοράν και θυσίαν, c. l.

— εἰς ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας] for an odour of a sweet smell, acceptable to God. As to the genitive, expressing the characteristic of the preceding substantive, cp. 2 Pet. ii. 1, αίρέσεις ἀπωλείας, Winer, 5 34, p. 211, and note above on Matt. xxiv. 15, and the examples in St. Luke xvi. 8; xviii. 6.

St. Paul seems to refer to the sacrifice offered by the Patriarch Noah after the flood, where the Septuagint says (Gen. viii. 21), Noan after the hood, where the septiagint says (cell vin 21), δισφράνθη Κύριος ό Θεδις δισμήν εὐωδίας, and where the original signifies an odour of comfort and rest (perhaps with some re-ference to the name of the Patriarch Noah—rest, comfort—who offered it), one in which God is well pleased.

Hence the term δσμη εὐωδίαs is of frequent occurrence as descriptive of the burnt-offerings of the Levitical Law. See Levit. i. 9. 13. 17, and about twelve other passages, and about eighteen places of the book of Numbers.

The Sacrifice of Christ, Who delivers us from God's wrath (see Gen. viii. 21), and from His curse, and Who is the true Passover, is an odour of rest, קידור, זיי, in which the Father εὐδοκεῖ, acquiescit, is well pleased. See above on i. 6, and on Matt. xvii. 5.

4. alσχρότηs] filthiness; 'immunditia,' Tertullian (de Pudic.)

and Vulg.

 μωρολογία] fools' talk; 'vaniloquium' (Iren. iv. 37),
 'stultiloquium' (Vulg.). The word μωρὸς has a wider sense than the English word fool, as usually understood; and μωρολογία comprises the notion of wickedness and profanity, blurted out in loose and random talking or writing. See on Matt. v. 22. Ps. xiv. 1, "The fool hath said in his heart," &c. Cp. Trench, Synon. of N. T. p. 138.

— ἤ] or even.

— η or even. — εὐτραπελία] jesting, jocularity. Well described thus by S. Jerome, "Appetit quædam vel urbana verba . . . vel facela, quam nos jocularitatem alio verbo possumus appellare, ut risum moveat audientibus. Verùm et hæc à sanctis viris penitus propellenda, quibus magis convenit lugere." And he proceeds to mention a speech, ascribed by primitive writers to our Blessed Saviour, "Never be ye joyful, but when ye see your brother relicion in lean". walking in love."

The εὐτράπελος (from εδ and τρέπομαι) is properly a person who turns himself about with dexterous adroitness, and versatility, like an intellectual harlequin, and adapts himself with flexible pliancy to the humours of persons and to the circumstances of occasions, and is therefore defined as  $\delta$  mointage, and as stances of occasions, and is therefore defined as ο ποικίλος, and as δ άπαντοδαπὸs by Aristotle (Ethic. iv. 8), and as δ άστατος, δ εὔκολος, δ πάντα γινόμενος by Chrysostom, and is expressed by the Latin facetus in Horat. (1 Epist. vi. 55), "Ut cuique est ætas, ita quemque facetus adopta:" and is well described by Juvenal (iii. 74—104), and in the inimitable portraiture of Wit drawn by Dr. Barrow in his Sermon on this text (Serm. xiv. vol. i. p. 305), a portraiture doubtless drawn from the life, as e 1 Cor. 6, 10. Gal. 5, 21. Col. 3, 5. Rev. 22, 15. f Matt. 21. 4. 2 Thess. 2. 3. g Luke 16. 8. Col. 3. 7, 8. John 12. 36. h Gal. 5. 22.

i Rom. 12. 2. & Rom. 6. 21. & 13. 12. 2 Cor 6. 14. 2 Thess. 3. 14. 1 John 3. 20, 21. m Isa. 26. 19. & 60. 1. John 5. 25. Rom. 6. 4, 5. & 13. 11. 1 Thess. 5. 6.

5 ο Τοῦτο γὰρ ἴστε, γινώσκοντες ὅτι πᾶς πόρνος, ἡ ἀκάθαρτος, ἡ πλεονέκτης, ος έστιν είδωλολάτρης, οὐκ ἔχει κληρονομίαν ἐν τῆ βασιλεία τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ, 6 Μηδεὶς ὑμᾶς ἀπατάτω κενοῖς λόγοις διὰ ταῦτα γὰρ ἔρχεται ἡ ὀργὴ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐπὶ τοὺς υίοὺς τῆς ἀπειθείας.

7 Μη οὖν γίνεσθε συμμέτοχοι αὐτῶν 8 ε ήτε γάρ ποτε σκότος, νῦν δὲ φῶς ἐν Κυρίω ώς τέκνα φωτός περιπατείτε 9 h ό γαρ καρπός του φωτός έν πάση άγαθωσύνη καὶ δικαιοσύνη καὶ ἀληθεία. 10 ι δοκιμάζοντες τί ἐστιν εὐάρεστον τῷ Κυρίω. 11 καὶ μὴ συγκοινωνείτε τοις έργοις τοις ἀκάρποις του σκότους, μάλλον δὲ καὶ ἐλέγχετε· 12 τὰ γὰρ κρυφη γινόμενα ὑπ' αὐτῶν αἰσχρόν ἐστι καὶ λέγειν· 13 1 τὰ δὲ πάντα ἐλεγχόμενα ὑπὸ τοῦ φωτὸς φανεροῦται· πᾶν γὰρ τὸ φανερούμενον φως έστι. 14 m Διὸ λέγει, Έγειρε ὁ καθεύδων, καὶ ἀνάστα έκ των νεκρών, καὶ ἐπιφαύσει σοι ὁ Χριστός.

displayed in the manners of that age of εὐτραπελία. Cp. Trench's remarks on this word, Synon. N. T. pp. 139—141.

— τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκοντα] the things, which, in the matter before us, i. e. the use of the Tongue, "the best member which we have," are not convenient; indicating that there are other things to be done with the Tongue, which are convenient. And this is explained by the following word, εὐχαριστία, giving God thanks, glorifying Him with the Tongue; that is, τὸ ἀνῆκον. Cp. James iii. 9, where he contrasts the use and abuse of the Tongue.

As to the difference of the objective τὰ οὐκ ἀνήκοντα here, and the subjective τὰ μὴ καθήκοντα in Rom. i. 28, see Winer, love] ye are acquainted with -. So the majority of the best MSS. and Edd. Elz. εστε. The verb τστε refers to v. 3, and γινώσκοντες refers to what follows. Ye are already acquainted with the precept which I have just delivered, since ye know, &c.

§ 55, p. 431.

Cp. Winer, § 45, p. 318.

— πās—οὐ] See John iii. 16. 1 John ii. 23. Winer, § 26, p. 155. — πάς—ού) See John iii. 16, 1 John ii. 23. Winer, § 26, p. 150.
— τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ) of Him who is Christ and God.
See Bp. Middleton here, and the Catena of authorities, in behalf of this interpretation, from Jerome, Faustinus, Basil, Cyril Alexandrinus, Theodoret, quoted by the late Dr. Wordsworth (in the Second of his "Six Letters to Granville Sharp on the use of the Article in the Greek Text of the New Testament," 1802), which is summed up (p. 36) with the words, "All the Greek entherities which we have quoted which do speak at all are on authorities which we have quoted, which do speak at all, are on our side, and testify that He Who is here called Christ is also God." Cp. ibid. p. 132, and below on Titus ii. 13. 2 Pet. i. 1.

Therefore to adopt the words of S. Jerome here, "Cum therefore to adopt the words of S. Jerone here, "Cum dixerit 'in regno Christi et Dei,' Ipsum Deum et Christum intelligamus." Cp. also below, v. 20, τῷ Θεῷ καὶ πατρί.

7. συμμέτοχοι] partakers. He had spoken of the practical duties consequent on their communion with the mystical Body of Christ; and he argues from the nature of that mystical union in the Body of Christ, that they cannot have fellowship with works of darkness. Cp. 2 Cor. vi. 15, and συγκοινωνείτε here,

By the operation of the Holy Ghost in the Incarnation of Christ we have been "made partakers of the divine nature" (2 Pet, i. 4). He is our Emmanuel, "God made manifest in the flesh," "the Word made flesh." Thus we have been brought near to God. Christ has married our Nature. He has espoused Humanity, and made us to be His Body, and reconciled God to O altitudo, O divine wedlock, O profound mystery!

How greatly should we rejoice in this our exaltation! greatly also should we fear, when we think of the pure, spotless, holy, and awful Presence into which we have been brought! How vigilantly should we watch, and how fervently pray, that by the gracious operation of the same Holy Ghost, by Whom Christ became flesh, we may be enabled to "purify ourselves even as He is pure" (I John iii. 3), so that we, who have been made partakers of the Divine Nature in Him, may be partakers of the Divine Glory hereafter.

Here then we see further evidence of the practical results of this doctrine on Church Unity and Communion. See above, iv.

24—30; and below, v. 30—32; and Introduction, pp. 276, 277. On this text, cp. Augustine's Sermons, vol. v. pp. 537, 1263, 1407, 1415, 1417, 1545.

8. τέκνα φωτός] children of light (see I Thess. v. 5); made such by your Baptism. For our very Baptism entitleth us thereto, which is the Sacrament of our initiation, whereby we put on Christ (Gal. iii. 27), and are made members of Christ and children of God. Whence it is that in the Greek Fathers Baptism is usually called φωτισμός, that is, an Enlightening; and persons newly baptized were called  $\nu\epsilon o\phi \omega \tau \iota \sigma \tau o \tau$ ; and  $\delta \epsilon \pi i \phi \omega \tau \omega \tau$ , an officer in the Greek Church, to whom it belonged to hear the Confessions of the Catechumens, and, after they were approved, to present them for Baptism; with many other phrases borrowed from the same metaphor of light, and applied in like manner to aptism. Bp. Sanderson, i. p. 382. Cp. Heb. vi. 4.

9. φωτόs] of light. So the major part of the best MSS. and Elz. has πνεύματος.

10. δοκιμάζοντες] proving what is acceptable to the Lord; naking God's Will your rule, and His pleasure your touchstone; and inquiring in every thing, not, what is pleasing to men? nor what is pleasing to yourselves? but what is well pleasing to God? and acting accordingly. Cp. Rom. xii. 2; and below,

13. παν γ. το φανερούμενον φως έστι] For all that is being made manifest is light. "Omne quod manifestatur lumen est." (Iren. And the context shows that this is the true sense, which is adopted by Harless, Meyer, Winer (p. 231), Alford, Ellicott, who observes that φανερόω is used nearly fifty times in the New Testament, and never in a middle sense.

The sense of the whole passage appears to be as follows. Your lot in this world is cast with evil men; but you are not to partake of the evil, which they do. You are often associated with sinners; but you are not to associate with them as sinners. You are not to associate with them in their sins. You are wheat with the tares in the field; but you are not to be as tares.

Ye are light in the Lord, and ye may not have fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. Ye owe them the duty of reproof. Do not partake in these works of darkness, but re-Ye may not join with them in doing their works, for these works are shameful even to be spoken of; how much more are they shameful to be done. But ye owe to the doers the duty of reproof; and ye will have your reward in performing it. For those things which are reproved are illumined by the light. Cp. John iii. 20, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, and doth not come to the Light,"  $\ln \mu \approx \lambda \epsilon \gamma \chi \theta \hat{\eta}$  the  $\ell \approx 0$  for that which is being illumined, is Light. That is, the works of darkness, while they are being reproved by you (observe the present tense  $\ell \lambda \epsilon \gamma \chi \delta \mu \epsilon \nu a$ , and  $\ell \epsilon \nu a \epsilon \nu a$ ). Unless they are reproved they will remain dark;

are illumined. Unless they are reproved they will remain dark; and the doers of them will be cast into outer darkness. But if they are reproved, they will be changed into Light. This happy change is wrought by the very act of your reproof, and by the protest of your example leading them to love the light and to rejoice in it, and teaching them repentance and newness of life in Christ. Wherefore the Scripture says, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.'

Ye yourselves have passed through this blessed transformation. Ye were once Darkness, but now are ye Light in the Lord. Walk as children of Light, especially by enlightening the Darkness of others, and by changing that Darkness into Light by your

So Jerome, who says, "Lux arguit ea quæ erant tenebræ . . . ut ex eo quod corripiuntur (i. e. by being reproved) mutentur in melius, et mutata manifestentur, et sint lumen; quia omne quod manifestatur lux est."

While sin is hidden, it works with boldness, as in the dark; but when the sinner is brought forth from his hiding-place, and is reproved, and repents, and receives remission of sins, he be-

13 reproved, and repeats the comes Light. Chrys.

14. Διὸ λέγει, Έγειρε] Wherefore, saith he, Arise—. The following words are not found (as Origen, Jerome, and Severian have already observed) in any one text of the Old Testament, but the sense of several texts (particularly Isa. xxvi. 19; li. 17; lii. 1; εξαγοραζομενοί τον καιρού, ότι αι ημεραί πονηρώ του  $\frac{17 \text{ o}}{17 \text{ o}}$  Διὰ τοῦτο μὴ γίνεσθε ἄφρονες, ἀλλὰ συνιέντες τί τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Κυρίου  $\frac{17 \text{ hess, 4. 1-3.}}{18 \text{ p}}$  καὶ μὴ μεθύσκεσθε οἴνῳ, ἐν ῷ ἐστιν ἀσωτία, ἀλλὰ πληροῦσθε ἐν πνεύματι,  $\frac{1}{9}$  Prov. 20. 1.  $\frac{19 \text{ q}}{9}$  λαλοῦντες ἑαυτοῖς ψαλμοῖς καὶ ὕμνοις καὶ ῷδαῖς πνευματικαῖς, ἄδοντες καὶ  $\frac{23}{18 \text{ s. 3.}}$  1.  $\frac{12 \text{ c. 1.}}{18 \text{ wal}}$  ψάλλοντες ἐν τῆ καρδία ὑμῶν τῷ Κυρίῳ,  $\frac{20}{9}$  εὐχαριστοῦντες πάντοτε ὑπὲρ  $\frac{1}{9}$   $\frac{1}{9}$  Col. 3. 16, 17.  $\frac{1}{9}$  Τάντων, ἐν ὀνόματι τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ,  $\frac{1}{9}$  Acts 16. 25.  $\frac{1}{1}$  Col. 3. 17.  $\frac{1}{1}$  Press, 5. 18. 21 ε ύποτασσόμενοι άλλήλοις έν φόβω Χριστού.

15 η Βλέπετε εὖν πῶς ἀκριβῶς περιπατεῖτε, μὴ ὡς ἄσοφοι, ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοὶ, η cot. 1. 9.

<sup>16</sup> έξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρὸν, ὅτι αἱ ἡμέραι πονηραί εἰσι.

 $^{21}$   $^{\circ}$  ὑποτασσόμενοι ἀλλήλοις ἐν φόβ $\omega$  Χριστοῦ.  $^{17}$   $^{18}$   $^{19}$   $^{$

ούτω καὶ αἱ γυναῖκες τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀνδράσιν ἐν παντί.

 $^{25 \text{ x}}$  Οἱ ἄνδρες, ἀγαπᾶτε τὰς γυναῖκας ἑαυτῶν, καθὼς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἡγάπησε  $^{10}$  Cor. 11. 3–10. τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, καὶ ἑαυτὸν παρέδωκεν ὑπὲρ αὐτῆς,  $^{26 \text{ y}}$  ἵνα αὐτὴν ἁγιάση καθα-ch. 1. 22. 23.  $^{10}$  ρίσας τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ ὕδατος ἐν ῥήματι,  $^{27 \text{ z}}$  ἵνα παραστήση αὐτὸς ἑαυτῷ ἔνδοξον  $^{10}$  Col. 1. 18, 24. ch. 5. 2. Col. 3. 19. 1 Pet. 3. 7. y John 3. 5. & 15. 3. Tit. 3. 5. 1 Pet. 3. 21. z Cant. 4. 7. ch. 1 4. 2 Cor. 4. 14. & 11. 2.

ch. 5. 2. Col. 3. 19. 1 Pet. 3. 7. Col. 1. 22, 28. Jude 24.

lx, 1. Ezek. xxxvii. 13. Mal. iv. 2) is compressed by the Apostle into one, as is common in the N. T. See on Matt. ii. 23, and Surenhus. p. 588.

As to the form διδ λέγει, see iv. 8. Heb. iii. 7. James iv. 6.

On this text, see Augustine, Sermons 88. 98, vol. v. pp.

15. Βλέπετε οδυ πως ακριβως περιπατείτε] See to it, therefore, how ye fulfil the precept of walking accurately in the straight line of Christian duty. Cp. Winer, § 41, p. 269. On this text, see Augustine, Serm. 167, vol. v. p. 1160.

16. εξαγοραζόμενοι τον καιρόν] redeeming for yourselves the opportunity; delivering it out of its present bondage, because the days are evil. Observe the preposition &, and the middle voice in the word here used, εξαγοραζόμενοι.

The Days are evil; they are like Captives sold into bondage to a hard master, your ghostly Enemy; therefore it is your duty to redeem, as it were, by a ransom, the Opportunity out of his hands, and to liberate it from his thraldom, and to dedicate it to the free service of God.

Ye Ephesians, who have listened to the call of Christ, and have risen from sleep, and have been illumined by Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, do ye, who have set forth on the morning of your journey towards your heavenly home, as pilgrims of Christ, take heed, and walk warily on the road, and be not overcome by the evil of the Days, but overcome it by your good.

Be not changed by them into evil, but change them into good. They are like prisoners sold into slavery, but do you rescue them, redeem them, and make them your own and Christ's by using them well. Remember how Joseph's days were evil, and Job's days were evil; and remember also how they redeemed the opportunity, and made all their trials to be occasions of good. They changed their bad days into good days. Do you imitate them. See Jerome here, and cp. Col. iv. 5, and above on iv. 29.

St. Paul sets a good example of his own precept by his own practice. When he wrote this Epistle he was a prisoner, bound to a soldier. The days were evil for him; but he redeemed them. He made his prison to be a pulpit, from which he preached to the world. The Roman soldier's presence was a perpetual memento to him that he bimself was a soldier of Christ. Every part of the soldier's armour suggested to him a weapon of Christian warfare, to be wielded in the cause of Christ. See vi.

18. ἀσωτία] dissoluteness. Cp. Luke xv. 13.
19. ἐαυτοῖς] to one another (see iv. 32), perhaps antistrophically. See the next note, and the assertion of Socrates (vi. 8), on the early use of antiphonal singing even in the time of S. Ignatius. Cp. Bingham, xiv. 1.

ψαλμοῖς καὶ ὑμνοις καὶ ὑδαῖς] in psalms and hymns and songs that are spiritual,—not carnal, such as the heathens use.

Ψαλμός (from ψάω, rado, i. e. to sweep the strings) is properly with an instrumental accompaniment, as a harp; ψδή (from acίδω, cp. Theocritus, xv. 96. 99) is vocal melody; υμνος is a hymn of praise. The three words are combined as here by S. Hippolytus, ap. Euseb. v. 28, Ψαλμοί δὲ ὅσοι, καὶ ψ δαὶ ἀδελφῶν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς ὑπὸ πιστῶν γραφεῖσαι, τὸν Λόγον ὑμνοῦσι θεολογοῦντες. A passage happily illustrating the relation of Pliny the Younger to Trajan (Ep. x. 97), that the Christians met carly in the morning, in order "Carmen Christo quasi Deo dicere secum invicem," which exactly expresses St. Paul's λαλοῦντες δε αυτο 25. On the true aims of hymnology see Col. iii. 17.

 20. ὁπὲρ πάντων] for all things; even for afflictions.
 Acts v. 41. 2 Cor. vi. 10; xii. 10. Col. i. 24. Heb. x. 34.

21. ὑποτασσόμενοι] submitting yourselves to one another in the fear of Christ. On the word ὑποτάσσομαι, see Rom. xiii.

St. Paul is describing here the true constituents of that moral Harmony and Spiritual Music which ought to issue forth in sweet sounds from the Christian life and conversation. One of the Elements of this moral Melody is Thankfulness to God; another is mutual Submission. Wherever these coexist, the result is seen and heard in an harmonious concert of words and deeds in private households and in civil society, and in the symmetrical order and rhythmical movement of the whole. Observe, therefore, how naturally the following precepts arise from what he here says. Compare below, Col. iii. 17, 18. Χριστοῦ] So the majority of the best MSS, and Edd.

Elz. Θεοῦ.

22. ὑποτάσσεσθε τοις ίδίοις à.] to your own husbands-words suggested by the prevalence of adultery. Cp. v. 26, Col. iii. 8. 23.  $\dot{\alpha}\nu\eta\rho$ ] Elz. prefixes  $\dot{\phi}$ , which is not in A, D, E, F, G, I, K, and is rejected by almost all recent Editors. 'A $\nu\eta\rho$  is a husband, whoever he may be.

band, whoever he may be.

—  $a\dot{v}r\dot{o}s$ ] 'ipse, nemo alius.' Elz., with some MSS., inserts  $\kappa al$  before  $a\dot{v}r\dot{o}s$ , and  $\dot{\epsilon}\sigma rl$  after it; but these words are not found in the great majority of the ancient authorities, and are rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., Tisch., Meyer, Ellicott, Alf.

— σωτήρ τοῦ σώματος] Α paronomasia. Christ is the Σωτήρ τοῦ Σώματος, in which πάντες οἱ σωζόμενοι (Acts ii. 47) are incorporated  $\ln \alpha$  σωθῶσι. This is imitated by St. Paul's contemporary S. Clement, who had his eye on this passage when speaking of the Unity of the Church he says,  $\sigma\omega$  ζέσθω οὖν ὅλον τὸ σῶμα ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ καὶ ὑποτασσέσθω ἔκαστος τῷ πλησίον αὐτοῦ, c. 38.

Herein (says Chrys.) the Apostle grounds the duty of submission on the part of the Wife. Christ is the Head of the Church, and Saviour of His Body. Such is the relation of a husband to his own wife. He is her head, and therefore has the pre-eminence; his office is also one of protection and consertions of the best three forms. vation, and he has therefore a double claim to submission and affection on her side.

24. 'AAA'] But -. St. Paul had said to wives, Be subject to your own husbands as to the Lord.

He now puts the precept in a somewhat different form. If you think it too much for me to command you to be subject to your husband, to a frail man, as to the Lord, and Head, and Saviour of all, yet observe the relation of the Church to her Lord, and there learn your own duty to your husband. If you will not look up to your husband as to Christ, yet look to the Church, the Spouse of Christ, in her conjugal relation to Him.

25. ἐαυτὸν παρέδωκεν ὑ. a.] He gave Himself for her. On Christ's love for the Church, which He purchased with His own Blood, see St. Paul's speech to the Ephesian presbyters at Miletus. (Acts xx. 28.) They were prepared to receive the teaching of this Epistle.

On the sense of ὑπὲρ, see 1 Cor. i. 13. 1 Tim. ii. 6. 26. καθαρίσας τῷ λουτρῷ τοῦ ὕδατος | having cleansed her with τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, μὴ ἔχουσαν σπίλον ἢ ρυτίδα, ἤ τι τῶν τοιούτων, ἀλλ' ἴνα ἢ άγία

28 Ούτως καὶ οἱ ἄνδρες ὀφείλουσιν ἀγαπῶν τὰς ἐαυτῶν γυναῖκας, ὡς τὰ ἑαυτῶν σώματα. ΄Ο άγαπων την έαυτοῦ γυναϊκα έαυτον άγαπα. <sup>29</sup> οὐδεὶς γάρ ποτε την έαυτοῦ σάρκα ἐμίσησεν, ἀλλὰ ἐκτρέφει καὶ θάλπει αὐτην, καθώς καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν. 30 ° Ότι μέλη ἐσμὲν τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, ἐκ τῆς n Gen. 2, 23, Rom. 12, 5, 2 Cor. 6, 15, & 12, 27, the (well-known) laver of the (well-known) water, "the laver of Regeneration," as the Apostle calls it (Tit. iii. 5), the laver of Baptism. See note there.

The laver of the water, with which the Church is cleansed. is here appropriately mentioned by the Apostle in connexion with the Death of Christ, because the water of Baptism derives all its regenerating virtue and cleansing efficacy from that Death; as was symbolized by the water flowing from the side of Christ on the cross. See note on John xix. 34.

The reference to the lustral water of baptism here in connexion with the espousal of Christ and His Church, derives additional significance from the custom of the bridal bath, to which the Apostle is supposed to allude. Cp. Jahn, Archæol. Bibl. § 154.

— ἐν βήματι] in the Word. Some ancient expositors apply this to the Baptismal Words, "In the name of the Father." &c.; but it seems rather to mean by and with the instrumentality of the Word of God preached and received.

As to this sense of δημα, see vi. 17, and Heb. vi. 5. The article is not necessary after the preposition  $\epsilon \nu$ , especially with such an emphatic and special word (amounting to the dignity of an appellative) as  $\hat{p}\hat{\eta}\mu a$ , God's Word. See the examples in Winer, § 19, pp. 108—114. St. Paul guards the Ephesians from imagining that the Holy Sacrament of Baptism is to be confounded with any of those magical charms and incantations with which they were familiar, and for which their City was proverbial. See Acts xix. 19.

It is not the Water alone which works this wonderful change, but it is the Holy Spirit working in the Water, and in the Word of God preached and received with faith in the heart. See note above on 1 Cor. x. 3.

The preposition  $\ell \nu$ , in, expresses something more than the instrument with which the Spirit acts and cleanses. He is present in the Word. He comes in the Word to the heart, and works in it. See on Gal. i. 16. Heb. i. 1.

Hence St. Peter says that we "are born again by the Word of God" (1 Pet. i. 23); and St. James teaches that God of His own will begat us with the Word of Truth (James i. 18). Here the Word may mean Christ; but it is Christ preached. See on 1 Tim. iv. 5.

This truth was remarkably exemplified in the case of Cornelius. He was commanded to send for Peter, who would speak words, βήματα, to him (Acts xi. 14); and when Peter spoke those βήματα, the Holy Ghost descended on all that heard the

In that special case the Holy Ghost descended before Baptism, in order to authorize Peter to confer Baptism on the Gentiles (see note on Acts x. 47); but this visible descent was also designed to show what is ordinarily done when the door of the Church is opened by the key of the Word and of the Sacrament of Baptism.

St. Paul is here speaking specially of the case of Adults; but Infants also may be fitly said to be washed with the laver of the water with the Word, in that they make profession of belief in the Word, by the mouth of their Sureties, and are baptized in the faith of Christ preached by the Word.

27. αὐτόs] He Himself—. So the major part of the best MSS.

and Edd. Elz. has αὐτήν.

- Tva παραστήση κ.τ.λ.] that He Himself might present to Himself (His Bride) the Church glorious, not having any spot (of impurity) or wrinkle (of decay). Cp. the description of the Church glorified in the Apocalypse, xxi. 2. 9, and the Marriage of the Lamb and His Bride, xix. 7.
28. Οὔτως κ. οἱ τ. ὀφείλουσιν] Thus also ought husbands to ·love their own wires; that is, as Christ loveth the Church and died for her, in order that she might be pure and holy. Here is the measure and end of conjugal love. It ought to be a love of self-sacrifice; and it ought not to be sullied with carnal impurity, but ought to have for its aim the spiritual holiness and everlasting glory of the Wife. He says their own wives (and in v. 35) on account of the prevalence of adultery. Cp. v. 22.

— ωs τὰ ἐωτῶν σωματα] as being their own bodies: for "they twain are one flesh." See v. 31. Matt. xix. 5, 6. 1 Cor.

29. οὐδείs γάρ] He would not merely not be a Christian, therefore, if he did not love his wife, but he would not be even worthy of the name of a man; for  $(\gamma \partial \rho)$  no man ever yet hated his own flesh; and a man's wife is his own flesh.

—  $X\rho\iota\sigma\tau\delta s$ ] So A, B, D\*, F, G, and Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., Tisch., Meyer, Ellicott, Alford. Elz. has Kópios. See on Acts xx. 28.

S. Ignatius (ad Polycarp. c. 5), imitating this passage, tells S. Polycarp to charge husbands, in the name of Jesus Christ, to love their wives as the Lord loves the Church.

30. "Οτι μέλη ἐσμὲν τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὁστέων αὐτοῦ] For we are members of His body; formed out of (ἐκ) His flesh and of His bones. The words ἐκ τῆς σαρκὸς—αὐτοῦ are not in A, B, and have been rejected by Lachm., Tisch., but they are supported by the great majority of authorities, and are received by Meyer, Ellicott, Alf.

Observe the preposition  $i\kappa$  here, which is hardly expressed with sufficient clearness and force by the English of. It means out of: We derive our life from Christ, as a river flow from and out of its source; or as a tree springs up, and receives its growth out of and from its root. Cp. above, iv. 16, and Col. ii. 19.

 We are formed from out of (ἐκ) the flesh and bones of Christ by means of His Incarnation, and by incorporation into

The Church owes her life to the Death of the Son of Man. He suffered that death in His human flesh. And as Eve, "the mother of all living" (Gen. iii. 20), was formed out of the very side of the first Adam sleeping in Paradise, and was bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh (Gen. ii. 23), and she was called woman, Isha, because she was taken out of man, Ish (ii. 23), and thus we all by nature are taken out of the side of the first Adam, and are bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh, so the Church, the spiritual Eve, the mother of us all by Grace, was taken out of the side of the Second Adam sleeping in the sleep of death upon the cross; and we all, as members of Christ's Church, are taken out of the very flesh and bones of Christ dying as man upon the cross. See above on John xix. 34, and S. Jerome's and Theodoret's notes here, and the words of S. Ignatius (ad Trallian. c. 11): "They who are of the Father are like branches of Christ's Cross, and their fruit is incorruptible. Christ in His Passion calls us to Himself as His own Members. The Head cannot be born without Members, when God, Who is Christ Himself, promises union with Himself."

Hence it is said by Hooker (V. lvi. 7): The Church is in Christ, as Eve was in Adam. Yea, by grace we are every one of us in Christ and in His Church, as by nature we are in those our first Parents. God made Eve of the rib of Adam; and He frameth His Church out of the very flesh, the very wounded and bleeding side of the Son of Man. His body crucified, and His blood shed, for the life of the world, are the true elements of that heavenly being, which maketh us such as Himself is, of Whom we come. (1 Cor. xv. 48.) For which cause the words of Adam may be fitly the words of Christ concerning His Church, "flesh of My flesh, and bone of My bones," a true native extract out of Mine own Body. So that in Him, even according to His manhood, we according to His heavenly being are as branches in the root out of which they grow.

To all things He is life, and to men light (John i. 4-9), as the sons of God: to the Church both light and life,-life eternal (John vi. 57) by being made the Son of Man for us, and by being in us a Saviour, whether we respect Him as God or as Adam is in us an original cause of our nature, and of that corruption of nature which causeth death; CHRIST is the cause original of restoration to life. (Heb. v. 9.) The person of Adam is not in us, but his nature, and the corruption of his nature, derived unto all men by propagation. Christ, having Adam's nature, as we have, but incorrupt, deriveth not nature, but incorruption, and that immediately from His own person, unto all that belong unto Him.

As therefore we are really partakers of the body of sin and death received from Adam, so, except we be truly partakers of Christ, and are really possessed of His Spirit, all we speak of eternal life is but a dream.

That which quickeneth us is the Spirit of the Second Adam σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ καὶ ἐκ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ. <sup>31 b</sup> Αντὶ τούτου καταλείψει b Gen. 2. 24. ανθρωπος τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν μητέρα, καὶ προσκολλη $\theta$ ήσεται  $\frac{\text{Matt. 10.7.}}{\text{1. Ger 6.16}}$ πρὸς τὴν γυναϊκα αὐτοῦ καὶ ἔσονται οἱ δύο εἰς σάρκα μίαν. 32 Τὸ μυστήριον τοῦτο μέγα ἐστίν ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω εἰς Χριστὸν καὶ εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν.

33 ° Πλην καὶ ὑμεῖς οἱ καθ' ἔνα ἔκαστος την ἑαυτοῦ γυναῖκα οὕτως ἀγαπάτω ο τοὶ 3, 10. ώς έαυτόν ή δε γυνη ίνα φοβήται τον άνδρα.

(1 Cor. xv. 22. 45), and His flesh is that wherewith He quickeneth. That which in Him made our nature incorrupt, was the union of His Deity with our Nature. And in that respect the sentence of death and condemnation, which only taketh hold upon sinful flesh, could no way possibly extend unto Him.

This caused His voluntary death for others to prevail with and to have the force of an expiatory sacrifice. The blood God, and to have the force of an expiatory sacrifice. The blood of Christ (as the Apostle witnesseth) doth therefore take away sin (1 John i. 7), because, "through the eternal Spirit, He offered Himself unto God without spot" (Heb. ix. 14).

That which sanctifieth our nature in Christ, that which made it a sacrifice available to take away sin, is the same which quickeneth it, raised it out of the grave after death, and exalted it

Seeing therefore that Christ is in us as a quickening Spirit, the first degree of Communion with Christ must needs consist in the participation of His Spirit, which Cyprian in that respect termeth "germanissimam societatem," the highest and truest society between man and Him Who is both God and Man in one.

These things S. Cyril duly considering, reproveth their speeches which taught that only the Deity of Christ is the Vine whereupon we by faith do depend as branches, and that neither His flesh nor our bodies are comprised in this resemblance. For doth any man doubt that even from the flesh of Christ our very bodies do receive that life which shall make them glorious at the latter day, and for which they are already counted parts of His blessed body? Our corruptible bodies could never live the life they shall live, were it not that here they are joined with His body which is incorruptible, and that His is in ours as a cause of immortality,—a cause, by removing through the death and merit of His own flesh that which hindered the life of ours. Christ is, therefore, both as God and Man, the true Vine whereof we both spiritually and corporally are branches. The mixture of His bodly substance with ours is a thing which the Ancient Fathers disclaim. Yet the mixture of His Flesh with ours they speak of to signify what our very bodies, through mystical conjunction, receive from that vital efficacy which we know to be in His. And from bodily mixtures they borrow divers similitudes rather to declare the truth than the manner of coherence between His sacred body and the sanctified bodies of Saints. Hooker.

body and the sanctified bodies of Saints. Hooker.

This communion with Christ the Son of Man, and yet God of God, Very God of Very God, "the Word made Flesh" (John i. 14), God manifest in the Flesh (1 Tim. iii. 16), God Incarnate, "God with us," "Emmanuel" (Matt. i. 23), i. e. God in the human nature common to us all, is personally applied to us in an inscrutable and mysterious manner by means of the two Sacraments, Baptism and the Lord's Supper (cp. Irenœus, v. 2, 3), by which we are united to Christ, and in Christ to God. The blessings flowing to us through Christ's Humanity are thus conveyed to us, and make us partakers of the Divinity (2 Pet. i. 4); and if we are partakers of the Divinity, and dwell as living members in we are partakers of the Divinity, and dwell as living members in Christ's body, we have therein a visible pledge and assurance of a glorious Immortality,-the Immortality of God.

31. 'Αντί τούτου καταλείψει] For this cause a man shall leave his father and mother, even as Christ left His heavenly Father's house and married our Nature, espoused to Himself a Church on earth, and made her to be one flesh with Himself. Jerome, Theodoret.

— καὶ προσκολληθήσεται—μίαν] and shall cleave unto his wife, and they twain shall be united into one flesh. See above on

32. Τὸ μυστήριον τ. μ. έ.] This Mystery is great. What Mystery? That which Adam, the Father and Representative, the Patriarch and Prophet of the whole human family, was empowered of God to reveal (Chrys., Hierome, Theophyl.) concerning the oneness of man with his wife, for whom the man leaves his own nearest and dearest relations, and severs himself from his own flesh and blood, and joins himself to one who has no relationship to him, and unites himself to her indissolubly, so that they twain become one flesh. This appears to be the true sense of the words, and to be evinced by the pronoun rooro, this.

Observe that St. Paul in this Epistle to the Ephesian Church applies the same word, Mystery, to Marriage, as he does in his applies the same word, Mystery, to Marriage, as he does in his Epistle to the Bishop of Ephesus, to the Incarnation of the Son of God. Here he says, "This Mystery is Great." There he says, "Great is the Mystery of Godliness, God was manifested in the flesh" (1 Tim. iii. 16). A happy coincidence, teaching a divine truth; for Christ's Incarnation is the very Espousal and Marriage of man's Nature to the Nature of God.

VOL. II.-PART III.

The word Mystery, as used by St. Paul, signifies something kept secret and hidden (ἀποκεκρυμμένον, Col. i. 26; σεσιγημένον, Rom. xvi. 25), and generally something sacred and divine which cannot be discovered by Natural Reason, but is unfolded by Divine Revelation. As to the etymology of the word, see on Matt. xiii. 11. Cp. note below on Rev. xvii. 7.
St. Paul often uses the word Mystery in his Epistles to the Church and Bishop of Ephesus, famous for the practices of those who professed to hold intercourse with the spiritual and invisible world. See Eph. i. 9; iii. 3, 4. 9; vi. 19. 1 Tim. iii. 9. 16.

The mystery of the conjunction and oneness of Man and Wife might well be called a great and profound one at that time; for it was hidden from all the Nations of the world, even those which boasted most of their intellectual knowledge, social civilization, and religious illumination.

Polygamy was common in many parts of the world; and Divorce for the most trivial causes was practised without scruple in Italy and Greece, and even among the Jews. See on Matt. xix. 3. The declaration therefore of the oneness of man and wife. must have sounded as a strange announcement in the ears of the world at that time, and that oneness might well be called "a great mystery." Even now, when Christianity has revealed this doctrine for so many ages to mankind, yet, on account of the blindness of their hearts, many are unwilling to receive this divine Mystery; and how many, who once received it, have now rejected it, by creating new facilities for Divorce!

- ἐγὼ δὲ λέγω εἰς Χριστὸν καὶ εἰς τ. ἐκκλησίαν] but I am speaking with a view to Christ and the Church, whose union is represented by Holy Matrimony.

The Mystery therefore of Marriage is great, not only for the reasons mentioned above, but because it has a mystical relation to the Marriage of Christ and the Church, and is an image of it. Do not therefore be surprised that what I am declaring to you is confessedly a great Mystery. Do not reject it, because it is a great Mystery. For, the whole Economy of Christ's union with His Church, the whole Economy of the relation to us of "God manifest in the flesh," is indeed a great Mystery. See St. Paul's words to the Bishop of Ephesus, 1 Tim. iii. 16.

As it has been well expressed by an eloquent Bishop of our own nation; "This is a great Mystery; but it is the symbolical and sacramental representation of the greatest mysteries of our religion. Christ descended from His Father's bosom, and contracted His Divinity with flesh and blood, and married our nature, and we became a Church, the Spouse of the Bridegroom, which He cleansed with His blood, and gave her His Holy Spirit for a dowry, and Heaven for a jointure, begetting children unto God by the Gospel. This Spouse He hath joined to Himself by an excellent charity. He feeds her at His own table, and lodges her nigh His own heart; provides for all her necessities, relieves her sorrows, determines her doubts, guides her wanderings. He is become her Head, and she is a signet upon His right hand. Here is the eternal conjunction, the indissoluble knot, the exceeding love of Christ, the obedience of the Spouse, the communicating of goods, the uniting of interests, the fruit of marriage, a celestial generation, a new creature. Sacramentum hoc magnum est;' this is the Sacramental Mystery represented by the holy rite of Marriage." Bp. Taylor (Serm. xvii. "The Marriage Ring," vol. v. p. 254). Cp. Gregory Nazianz. (Orat.

xxxvii. § 7.)
33.  $\Pi \lambda \eta \nu$ ] But, waiving all farther considerations of this pro-So.  $M_{\lambda}\eta\nu_{\parallel}$  Dut, warring an intrinsic consideration of what I have already said, this plain practical lesson, as follows;—

On this use of  $\pi\lambda\dot{\eta}\nu$ , see I Cor. xi. 11. Phil. i. 18; iii. 16;

- lva] I command that (cp. John xiii. 29); or, let her see that. Cp. Winer, § 45. 5, p. 282.

2 Col. 3. 20. Prov. 20. 22. b Exod. 20 12. Deut. 5. 16. Matt. 15 4. Mark 7. 10 c Gen. 18. 19. Exod. 12. 26, 27. της γης. & 13. 14, 15. Deut. 6. 7, 20—24. & 11. 19—21. Ret. 8.7,12-1. Ret. 8.7,12-1. Ps. 78. 4-7. Prov. 19, 18. & 29. 17. Ecclus. 7. 23. Col. 3. 21. d Col. 3. 22. 1 Tim. 6. 1. Tit. 2. 9. e Rom. 2. 6-10. 2 Cor. 5. 10. Col. 3. 24. f Lev. 25. 43. Dut. 10. 17. 2 Chron. 19. 7. Job 34. 19. Wisd. 6. 7. Job 34, 19, Wisd, 6, 7, Col. 3, 24, 25, & 4, 1, g ch. 3, 16, h Wisd, 5, 17, Rom. 13, 12, 2 Cor. 6, 7, 1 Thess 5, 8, 1 Luke 22, 53, John 12, 31, & 14, 30, & 16, 11, Acts 28, 16, ch. 2, 2, 2, Col. 1, 13.

VI. 1 a Τὰ τέκνα, ὑπακούετε τοῖς γονεῦσιν ὑμῶν ἐν Κυρίω τοῦτο γάρ ἐστι δίκαιον, 2 τίμα τον πατέρα σου καὶ τὴν μητέρα, ήτις ἐστὶν ἐντολὴ πρώτη ἐν ἐπαγγελία, είνα εὖ σοι γένηται, καὶ ἔση μακροχρόνιος ἐπὶ παιδεία καὶ νουθεσία Κυρίου.

4 ° Καὶ οἱ πατέρες, μὴ παροργίζετε τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν, ἀλλὰ ἐκτρέφετε αὐτὰ ἐν

5 α Οί δοῦλοι, ὑπακούετε τοῖς κυρίοις κατὰ σάρκα μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου, ἐν άπλότητι της καρδίας ύμων, ως τω Χριστω. 6 μη κατ' όφθαλμοδουλείαν ως ἀνθρωπάρεσκοι, ἀλλ' ὡς δοῦλοι Χριστοῦ, ποιοῦντες τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐκ ψυχης <sup>7</sup> μετ' εὐνοίας δουλεύοντες ώς τῷ Κυρίφ καὶ οὐκ ἀνθρώποις, <sup>8</sup> εἰδότες ότι έκαστος δ εάν τι ποιήση άγαθὸν τοῦτο κομιεῖται παρὰ Κυρίου, εἶτε δοῦλος εἴτε ἐλεύθερος.

9 f Καὶ οἱ κύριοι τὰ αὐτὰ ποιείτε πρὸς αὐτοὺς, ἀνιέντες τὴν ἀπειλήν εἰδότες ότι καὶ αὐτῶν καὶ ὑμῶν ὁ Κύριός ἐστιν ἐν οὐρανοῖς, καὶ προσωποληψία οὐκ ἔστι παρ' αὐτῶ.

10 ε Τὸ λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοί μου, ἐνδυναμοῦσθε ἐν Κυρίω, καὶ ἐν τῷ κράτει τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ· 11 h ἐνδύσασθε τὴν πανοπλίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, πρὸς τὸ δύνασθαι ὑμᾶς στήναι πρὸς τὰς μεθοδείας τοῦ Διαβόλου, 12 ι ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἡμῖν ἡ πάλη πρὸς

CH. VI. 1. Τὰ τέκνα-2. ἐπαγγελία] Ye children, obey your parents, in the Lord. Quoted by Tertullian as an argument for the unity of the old and new dispensations, against Marcion, who expunged the words ήτις-έπαγγελία (c. Marcion. v. 18).

Children are commanded to obey their Parents in the Lord; that is, as always being in the Lord's sight, and therefore obeying their parents, whether their parents are present or absent; and as doing what they do to them, as unto the Lord, Who is the Judge of all; and therefore ever remembering, that if they are disobedient to their parents, they will be punished by the Lord; and if obedient, they will be rewarded by the Lord; and that the punishments and rewards, which the Lord adjudges, are not temporal, but eternal.

St. Paul says that this is the first commandment, not in order, but in respect of promise.

The first three commandments are prohibitory, the fourth is imperative and positive, but has no promise annexed to its performance; the fifth is the first in regard to God's promise of blessings for obedience. (Cp. Chrys. Winer, § 48, p. 349.)

Observe, that St. Paul, writing to the Ephesians (who had been taught by him for three years), enforces this precept with a quotation from the Old Testament (see on ii. 17), which he does not do in writing to the Colossians (iii. 20). Cp. Townson's Works, i. 102.

3. Tva ed σοι γένηται - γης] in order that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth. This is not to be limited to temporal life in this world. But the Apostle here gives an exposition of the true spiritual meaning and universal spring and universal application of the Fifth Commandment; as our Lord in His Sermon on the mount expounds the true significance of the whole Decalogue. See on Matt. v. 17. 21. 31. Cp. Matt. xxii. 37. 40. Compare specially our Lord's promise to the meek, that they should inherit the earth, Matt. v. 5, and note.

4. παιδεία και νουθεσία] with discipline, first of all, exacting strict obedience, and then with admonition,-the former applicable specially to the body, the latter to the mind.

S. Barnabas (Epist. 19) has a passage which bears on the same social and domestic duties in what is there called "the Way of Light," as opposed to "the Way of Darkness," - ου μή άργς την χειρά σου από του υίου σου, αλλά από νεότηι ος διδάξεις οθς το Πνευμα ήτοιμασεν. See below, v. 2.

5. Ol δούλοι] Slaves, bondmen, -not to be confounded in their condition with the household Servants of Christian Nations in later days, who have been raised by the Gospel from the condition of δούλοι, to that of freemen and brethren in Christ. See below,

Introduction to the Epistle to Philemon.

 κατὰ σάρκα] according to the flesh: earthly masters, as distinguished from the Heavenly. Be obedient, not only to God your heavenly Master, but to your earthly masters, as to Christ.

We may have masters according to the flesh upon earth, to whom we may and must give reverence upon earth; but of our souls, and spirits, and consciences, as we have no fathers upon earth, so we may have no Masters, but only our Father in Heaven

(Matt. xxiii. 9.) Bp. Sanderson (iii. 279).

— ἀπλότητι] with a single eye to what is good and right, not with sinister respects to our own interests. See above on Rom.

6. μη κατ' ὀφθαλμοδουλείαν] not with eye-service; "non ad oculum servientes." (Vulg.) Cp. Col. iii. 22, 23.
Many servants there are, who will work hard as long as their master's eye is upon them, but when his back is turned, can be content to go on softly. Such δφθαλμοδουλεία the Apostle condemns. Bp. Sanderson (iii. p. 32).

— ως δοῦλοι Χριστοῦ] as servants of Christ, Who is never absent from you, and Whose eye is ever upon you at your work, and Who will judge you according to your works at the Great ἐκ ψυχηs] from the heart. Some join these words with what follows; but this combination seems to impair the rhythm of the sentence and not to improve its sense. with what precedes in the Vulgate, Æthiopic, and Arabic Versions, and by Meyer and Ellicott.

8. ἔκαστος—ποιήση] So A, D, E, F, G.—Elz. has ἐάν τι ἔκαστος, and so the majority of recent Editors. But ἔκαστος is the emphatic word (each person, whether bond or free), and properly stands first. Whatsoever each person shall have done, that he shall receive again from God. A religious comfort to slaves, who when they "did well and suffered for it" (1 Pet. ii. 20) from their earthly masters, might thence take consolation in the reflection, that the more they did and suffered for God, the more they would receive hereafter from God; and so they might even rejoice in their sufferings on earth, as leading them on to an increase of heavenly glory. See Chrys. here.

— τοῦτο κομιεῖται] that he will receive back again,—as a deposit, or as seed sown. See 2 Cor. v. 10, and Gal. vi. 8. 2 Cor. ix. 6. A, B, D*, F, G have κομίσεται here, but in Col. iii. 25, A, C, D* have κομιεῖται, and D***, E, I, K have

9. καὶ αὐτῶν καὶ ὑμῶν the Master both of them and you. So A, B, D*, F, G, and most of the recent Editors .- Elz. has kal ὑμῶν αὐτῶν. Their Master will punish you for wrong to them. Observe την ἀπειλην, the common menace of masters to slaves.

11. μεθοδείαs] stratagems: μηχανήματα (Theodoret); 'machinationes,' Tertullian c. Marcion. v. 18. See above, iv. 14.

12.  $\dot{\eta} \pi d\lambda \eta$ ] our wrestling, our warfare, is not like that of the soldiers of this world, but far more perilous and glorious. He had been speaking of armour, and is going to speak of it more in detail. See below, v. 13. The Apostle was in custody, chained to a Roman soldier, when he wrote this Epistle; and he might well draw his spiritual imagery from the profession of arms. He addresses them as soldiers, and now reveals to them who and where their enemies are.

αίμα καὶ σάρκα, ἀλλὰ πρὸς τὰς ἀρχὰς, πρὸς τὰς ἐξουσίας, πρὸς τοὺς κοσμοκράτορας τοῦ σκότους, πρὸς τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας ἐν τοῖς ἐπουρανίοις.

13 k Διὰ τοῦτο ἀναλάβετε τὴν πανοπλίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἴνα δυνηθητε ἀντιστήναι k 2 Cor. 10, 4 έν τῆ ἡμέρα τῆ πονηρᾶ, καὶ ἄπαντα κατεργασάμενοι στῆναι. 14 Στῆτε οὖν Rev. 3. 10. περιζωσάμενοι τὴν ὀσφῦν ὑμῶν ἐν ἀληθεία, καὶ ἐνδυσάμενοι τὸν θώρακα τῆς  $\frac{11 \text{ Is a. II. 5.}}{8.59.17.}$ δικαιοσύνης, 15 m καὶ ὑποδησάμενοι τοὺς πόδας ἐν ἐτοιμασία τοῦ εὐαγγελίου Luke 12.35. της εἰρήνης 16 ἐπὶ πᾶσιν ἀναλαβόντες τὸν θυρεὸν της πίστεως, ἐν ῷ δυνήσεσθε Ι Phes. 1. 13. της ειρηνης.  $^{10}$  επι πασιν αναλαροντες τον συρευν της πιστεως, εν  $\omega$  συνησευ τι τε. 1. 1.5. πέντα τὰ  $\beta$ έλη τοῦ πονηροῦ τὰ πεπυρωμένα σ $\beta$ έσαι·  $^{17}$  π καὶ τὴν περικεφαλαίαν  $^{8}$  π Isa. 52. 1. τοῦ σωτηρίου δέξασθε, καὶ τὴν μάχαιραν τοῦ  $\Pi$ νεύματος, ὅ ἐστι ῥῆμα  $\Theta$ εοῦ·  $^{11}$  Thess. 5. 8. Heb. 4. 12.  $^{18}$  ο διὰ πάσης προσευχῆς καὶ δεήσεως προσευχόμενοι ἐν παντὶ καιρῷ ἐν πνεύ-  $^{18}$   $^{18}$  ο Ματι, καὶ εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο ἀγρυπνοῦντες ἐν πάση προσκαρτερήσει καὶ δεήσει Luke  $^{18}$   $^{1}$   $^{18}$  τοι τοι  $^{18}$ στόματός μου εν παρρησία γνωρίσαι το μυστήριον τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, 20 q ὑπερ οῦ g Acts 28, 20. πρεσβεύω εν άλύσει, ίνα εν αὐτῷ παρρησιάσωμαι, ώς δεῖ με λαλησαι.

 $^{21}$   $^{r}$   $^{r}$ ύμας είς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ἴνα γνῶτε τὰ περὶ ἡμῶν, καὶ παρακαλέση τὰς καρδίας <sup>ε 2 Tim. 4. 12.</sup>

ύμῶν.

23 Εἰρήνη τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς καὶ ἀγάπη μετὰ πίστεως ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ Κυρίου Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

έν αφθαρσία αμήν.

κοσμοκράτοραs] He calls them rulers of this world,—not because they have received any such rule from God, but because the world submits itself to their rule, and eagerly sells itself into slavery to them. Theodoret.

 τοῦ σκότους] of darkness. It is the opinion of all the doctors of the Church (says S. Jerome), that the intervening air between heaven and earth is full of adverse powers. See above on the same and the same powers.

ii. 2. Elz. adds τοῦ αἰῶνος τούτου, which is not in the majority of the best MSS., which have τούτου after σκότους.

— τὰ πνευματικὰ τῆς πονηρίας] the spiritual powers of wickedness; 'spiritualia nequitiæ' (Vulg.); i. e. whose essence it is to work wickedness. On this use of the neuter plural in a col-to work wickedness. On this use of the neuter plural in a collective sense (the spiritualty, or spiritualhood), and on the genitive, see Winer, § 34, pp. 212, 213.

13. πανοπλίαν τοῦ Θεεῦ] the panoply or whole armour of God. So Ignatius to Polycar, c. 6, "Let none of you be found a deserter; let your Baptism abide with you as your arms, Faith as your Helmet, Love as your Spear, Patience as your Panoply."

14. περιζωσάμενοι τὴν ὀσφῦν] having girt your loins about with truth. See 1 Pet. i. 13. Polycarp ad Philipp. 2.
15. ὑποδησάμενοι—ἐν ἐτοιμασία κ.τ.λ.] having shod your feet with the preparation of the Gospel of peace. An allusion to the attitude and attire of the Israelites eating the Passover in a state of preparation, or rather preparedness, to quit Egypt, and to march "harnessed" (Exod. xiii. 18) to Canaan. See Exod. xii. 11: "Thus shall ye eat it, with your loins girded, your shocs on your feet, ye shall eat it in haste."

It was a sign of haste to eat standing with their feet shod, in preparation for the journey, that, being strengthened with the Paschal food, they might pass through the vast and terrible wilderness in their way to the promised land.

So the Christian, when he sets forth from the Egypt of spiritual darkness, is fortified with the "true Passover" sacrificed for him (1 Cor. v. 7), and he goes forth "harnessed," and has his feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace, and so is equipped for the march through the wilderness of this world to his heavenly rest.

Let none therefore of the true Israelites look back and yearn for Egypt, but let all press onward toward the heavenly Canaan. See Origen, Chrys., and Jerome here.

16.  $\theta \nu \rho \epsilon \nu \rho \sigma$  the large oblong or oval shield,—properly like a  $\theta \nu \rho \sigma$ , or door; 'scutum' (Vuly.); differing from  $\lambda \sigma \pi \rho \sigma$  or 'clypeus;'  $\lambda \nu \rho \sigma \sigma$  and by which. Faith clothes and shields.

- τὰ πεπυρωμένα] that have been fired; although they have been set on fire from hell itself, you can quench them. The all anion is to darts tipt with some combustible material, which took fire in the projection, cp. Ps. vii. 14; cxx. 4, where the Psalmist speaks of arrows sharpened with coals of "Rethen;" and see Veget. de Re Mil. iv. 18. Winer, R. W. B. p. 190, Art. Bogen.

17. την περικεφαλαίαν] the helmet of salvation (σωτηρίου, cp. Isa. lix. 17, and 1 Thess. v. 8), as a helmet, the hope of salvation (σωτηρίας).

 $-\delta \dot{\xi} a \sigma \theta \epsilon$ ] receive ye—it is given by God. Observe the difference between this word ( $\delta \dot{\epsilon} \xi a \sigma \theta \dot{\epsilon}$ ) and the preceding verbs, descriptive of the Christian equipment. —  $\delta \hat{\eta} \mu \alpha \Theta \epsilon o \hat{v}$ ] The Word of God, wherewith the Captain of your salvation defeated the Evil One at the Temptation. See on Matt. iv. 4. 7. 10.

20. πρεσβεύω ἐν ἀλύσει] I am Ambassador in bonds. See Acts xxvi. 29. There is great oratoric δεινότης—power and weight—in these words. Ambassadors of kings are inviolable. But I, the ambassador of the King of Kings, deliver my message in bonds! Yet, the Gospel which I preach is not bound (2 Tim. ii. 9), nor can be: but it will bind Satan, and liberate the world.

21. και ὑμεῖs] ye also as well as others, perhaps the Colossians. See Col. iv. 16.

 τί πράσσω] how I fare.
 Τύχικος] Tychicus, of Asia. See on Acts xx. 4, where Trophimus is mentioned with him as an 'A σιανός. Trophimus was of Ephesus. (Acts xxi. 29.)

Tychicus was the bearer of this Epistle, probably to various Churches of Asia (see the Introduction to it, p. 278), and of that to the Colossians. (Col. iv. 7.) He seems to have been with St. Paul when he wrote the Epistle to Titus (iii. 12), and was sent again to Ephesus by St. Paul a little before his death. (2 Tim. iv. 12.)

22. ἔπεμψα] I send now with this Epistle. The Epistolary acrist. See Acts xxiii. 30. Phil. ii. 28. Philem. 11. 2 Cor. viii.

18. Winer, § 40, p. 249.

It was a blessed consolation for them to hear, that Paul at Rome, the metropolis of the Roman empire, was triumphing over his prison and his chains. And this was the consolatory intelli-gence which they would receive by Tychicus. Jerome.

23. τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς] to the brethren generally. As to the question why he sends no special greetings to any individuals in this Epistle, although he had spent three years at Ephesus (Acts xix. 10; xx. 31), see above, Introduction, p. 281.

On this text see Augustine, Serm. 168, vol. v. p. 1163; and Retract. lib. i. c. 23.

24. Ή χάρις μετὰ πάντων τῶν ἀγαπώντων τ. Κ. ἡ. Ί. Χ.] Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in incor-

The converse of the Anathema, Maranatha in 1 Cor. ruption.

xvi. 22.

- ἐν ἀφθαρσία] in incorruption, that is, who love Him with a love that is not corrupted by any evil admixtures and deleterious influences, or impaired by change of circumstances or lapse of time, but is pure and immarcescible, aulartos kal aud-

The Apostle had been speaking of conjugal union and love, and he had represented it as a figure of the spiritual marriage and love between Christ and His Church (v. 22. 32).

He now says, "Grace be with all that love the Lord Jesus Christ ἐν ἀφθαρσία:" that is, Grace be with every Christian soul that has been espoused to Christ in spiritual wedlock by baptism, and that loves her Lord Jesus Christ with a pure love, unadulterated with any admixtures of carnal affection for any worldly object (as the old man was corrupted, see iv. 22), and untainted by heretical pravity of unsound doctrine, or by schismatical pride of sectarian strife. Grace be to them who love Him alone with their whole heart purely and fervently.

Such a precept as this is especially appropriate in an Epistle to the Ephesian Church, in which many false Teachers soon afterwards arose, -as St. Paul had predicted (Acts xx. 29), -who corrupted the purity of the faith and love of Jesus Christ with unsound doctrine, and carnal sensuality; and against whom, the Evangelist St. John, living at Ephesus, and presiding over the Asiatic Church, afterwards delivered his Apostolic warning, and on whom he pronounced an Apostolic censure, in his Epistles. See below, Introduction to St. John's first Epistle.

This meaning of the Apostle may be illustrated by his words to the philosophical, carnally-minded, and schismatical members of the Corinthian Church, who did not love Christ εν ἀφθαρσία: "I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste Virgin to Christ. But I fear lest by any means, as the Serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted ( $\phi\theta a \rho \bar{\rho}$ ) from the simplicity (or singleness, oneness, and pureness) of love in Christ."

The word  $\phi\theta\alpha\rho\hat{\eta}$ , as there used, explains the sense of its op-The word φοαρη, as there used, explains the sense of its opposite ἀ-φθαρσία here; and this sense is approved by ancient Expositors (Chrys., Jerome, Theophyl.) and Versions, especially the Vulg., Syriac, Gothic, and Arabic, which thus paraphrases the word, "with a love free from blemish or corruption." Hence this word may well be supposed here to signify the incorruptibility of a spiritual and eternal love,-a love which flows forth from the pure well-spring of the inner man of the heart, in the incorruptible  $(\partial_{\phi}\theta \partial_{\phi}r_{\phi})$  element of the meek and quiet spirit described by St. Peter (1 Pet. iii. 4),—a love which knows no decay, and is not affected by time,—a love which is never blighted or withered, but is as undying and unfading as the crown of glory which it will one day wear.

This is the sense in which the words of St. Paul seem to have been understood by an Apostolic Father and Martyr, who says in his Epistle to the Ephesians; "Whosoever corrupts (8s av  $\phi\theta\epsilon(\rho\eta)$  the faith by evil teaching, will go into unquenchable fire. For this cause, Christ received the unction on His Head, in order that He might diffuse incorruption (à φθαρσίαν) to the Church. Be not ye therefore anointed with the noisome odours of the dogmas of the Ruler of this World." (S. Ignatius ad Eph. 16.) And to the Magnesians (c. 6) he says, "Let no one separate you into parties, but be united to your Bishop and the Presidents of the Church, for a type and discipline of Incorruption" (ἀφθαρσίας, i. e. of soundness and integrity in faith and practice). And he calls the Gospel of Christ the perfection of incorruption, and says that it contains every blessing, if we believe with love. (Philadelph. 9.) And in his Epistle to the Romans he says, "I have no pleasure in the food of corruption (φθοράs), nor in the pleasures of this world; but I hunger for the bread of God, which is the flesh of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, Who was born in the latter days from the seed of David and of Abraham, and I thirst for the drink of God, which is His blood, which is Love incorruptible (αγάπη ἄφθαρτος) and everlasting life." S. Ignatius ad Rom. c. 7.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

I. On the design and contents of the Epistle to the Colossians.

THE Epistle to the Colossians, like the other Epistles of St. Paul, holds its own peculiar place, and performs its own special work, in the system of Christian Teaching, which has been vouchsafed by the Holy Spirit, operating by the ministry of the Apostle.

This Epistle may best be considered in connexion with that to the neighbouring Church, and great City, of Ephesus.

Both these Epistles were written by St. Paul, at the same place, Rome, and about the same time; that is, in his first imprisonment in that City (A.D. 61—63), and appear to have been conveyed by the same person, Tychicus 1.

The Epistle to the Colossians, in its plan and substance, may be regarded as following, by a natural sequence, the Epistle to the Ephesians.

If the comparison may be allowed, the divine Apostle, bearing in his hand these two Epistles—that to the Ephesians, and that to the Colossians—may be likened to the builders of the literal City of God, of whom we read in the Book of Nehemiah, "Every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other held a weapon. The builders every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded 2."

So the Apostle here. He is both a builder and a soldier. He has his sword girded by his side, and so builds. He builds up the Truth in one Epistle; and he wars against Error in the other. He builds in the Epistle to the Ephesians; in the Epistle to the Church of Colossæ he has his sword girded at his side.

He has thus left a practical lesson to the Church, and to every Christian. The Church on earth is ever militant; and she has ever also her work of edification. She must build as well as fight; and she must fight as well as build. And every Christian is a soldier; but he must also be a builder. The soldiers of Nehemiah, with a trowel in their hand, and a sword girded at their side, and so building the City of God, and the Apostle St. Paul building up the Church with one Epistle, and at the same fighting against her enemies with another, are examples for every Christian in every age.

The similarity of thought and language between these two Epistles 3 proclaims the connexion of the Subject and the identity of the Author.

<sup>1</sup> Eph. vi. 22. Col. iv. 7. Compare Davidson's Introduction, ii. pp. 346—350, and Alford's Prolegomena, iii. pp. 18—23. Guerike, Einleitung, pp. 368—383. Kirchofer, Quellensammlung, pp. 208. 211.

<sup>2</sup> Neh. iv. 17, 18.

Ephesians.	COLOSSIANS.	EPHESIANS.	Colossians.	EPHESIANS.	Colossians.
<sup>3</sup> With i. 7	compare i. 14.	With ii. 16 compare	i. 20.	With iv. 15 compare
,, — 10	,, — 20.	,, iii. 1 ,,	— 24.	" — 22       "	iii. 9.
,, — 15—17	" — 3, 4.	,, - 2 ,,	25.	,, — 22 ,,	- 8.
,, — 18	,, — 27.	,, 3 - ,,	— 26.	" — 25 "	8.
" — 21	,, — 16.	,, - 7 ,,	— 23. 25.	" — 29 "	- 8.
" — 22	,, — 18.	" — 8 "	— 27.	" — 31	- 8.
,, ii. 1, 12	· ,, — 21.	", iv. I ",		" — 32 "	— 12.
" — 5	ii. 13.	" — 2 "	iii. 12.	,, v. 3 ,,	— 5.
,. — 15	,, — 14.	,, 3 ,,	 14.	., 4 ,,	— 8. [With

These two Epistles, written by the same Author, at the same place, and at the same time, shed a clear light upon a matter of great importance in the history of the writings of the New Testament, which has been much obscured by doubts and difficulties,—namely, the genuineness of the Second Epistle of St. Peter.

The First Epistle of St. Peter may be compared to the Epistle to the Ephesians; and the Second Epistle of St. Peter ranges with the Epistle to the Colossians. More will be said hereafter on this topic in the Introduction to St. Peter's Second Epistle.

The Epistle to the Ephesians, with its constructive character, and the Epistle to the Colossians, with its polemical protests, and denunciatory refutations, have each their respective office and use.

Both are grounded on the foundation of the same doctrines, especially that of the Divine Love in the Mystery of the Incarnation. Both were written at the same time by the same Apostolic hand, that of Paul the prisoner of Christ; they were both sent into Asia by the same messenger, the beloved Tychicus. The Ephesian Epistle was to be communicated to the Colossians, and the Colossian Epistle was to be communicated to the Ephesians; the Apostle himself (it would seem) gave a special direction to that effect. Each of the two Epistles would afford salutary instruction to the readers of the other, in that age, and in every succeeding generation; and in these two Epistles, written and sent simultaneously, the Church Universal would recognize a beautiful example of her own duty, to drive away dangerous errors, especially those which assail the doctrines of Christ's Incarnation and Atonement, while at the same time she builds up her people on the only solid foundation and immoveable Rock of Truth, Christ Jesus, confessed to be Very Man, and to be the Son of the Living God.

Let us consider, a little more at large, the evidence of these propositions.

In the Epistle to the Ephesians, as we have already seen, the holy Apostle, as a wise masterbuilder', had laid deep and strong the groundwork of the Christian Church upon Christ, acknowledged to be God, co-equal and co-eternal with the Father, the King and Lord of Angels, Creator and Ruler of the world; and upon the same Christ, condescending to become Man, and by His Incarnation uniting Human Nature in His own Person to the Divine Nature, and offering Himself on the Cross as a propitiatory sacrifice for the sins of the whole world, and reconciling God to man in Himself, and purchasing to Himself an Universal Church by His own Blood, and vanquishing the Principalities and Powers of this world by His Death, and abolishing the enmity between Angels and Men, and between Men and Men, knitting together both Jews and Gentiles as fellowmembers in His own Mystical Body, the Church, by the profession of One Lord, One Faith, One Baptism<sup>5</sup>; and thus harmonizing and restoring, consecrating and summing-up all in one; and proclaiming and establishing an Universal and Everlasting Peace, and blending every thing, and bringing all persons to dwell together in Unity, in Himself, God and Man, and through Himself, in the Father, the Sovereign Author of all, and the Fountain and Well-Spring of Love; and having ascended up on High, and given gifts to men, as a divine boon and royal largess to the World, on the glorious occasion of His Coronation and Inauguration, as Man, in Heaven, and of His Session as our King and Head at the Right Hand of God; and by these Gifts of the Holy Ghost the Comforter, providing for the organization and consolidation, as also for the continual increase and enlargement of the living fabric of His Church, till it expands to its full stature, to the perfectness of its growth in Christ.

These mysterious truths, to the height of which no human Intelligence can climb, the depth of which no human Reason can fathom, and the length and breadth of which no human Capacity can comprehend, and which even the Angels of heaven themselves did not know, and had been dimly seen by the Prophets, and prefigured by the types and shadows of the Levitical Law, are now revealed by the Holy Spirit to the Apostles, and are displayed to the eyes of Angels and of Men, by the Church, as in a clear mirror, where all may contemplate the beauty and glory of the Love of God in Christ.

EPHESIANS. COLOSSIANS.	EPHESIANS. COLOSSIANS.
With v. 5 compare iii. 5.	With vi. 9 compare iv. 1.
,, — 6 ,, — 6.	n - 18  n - 2
" — 15 " iv. 5.	$\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{-21}{2}$ $\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{-7}{2}$
,, — 19 ,, iii. 16.	<sup>1</sup> See below on iv. 16. The considerations here stated confirm
-21 , $-18$ .	that conclusion.
-25 , $-19$ .	<sup>2</sup> Compare note on Eph. iii. 10.
, vi. l ,, 20.	<sup>3</sup> See on Matt. xvi. 18, and 1 Cor. iii. 10, 11,
-4 , $-21$ .	4 1 Cor. iii. 10.
,, ← 5 ,, ← 22.	* Eph. iv. 5.

From these transcendent dectrines, fully developed ', the Apostle had proceeded to enforce the practical duties of Unity in the Faith, of Truth 2, of Charity, of Holiness 3. He had shown in the Epistle to the Ephesians, how the daily duties of domestic and social life, the duties of Wives to Husbands, and Husbands to Wives; the duties of Children to Parents, and of Parents to Children: the duties of Slaves to Masters, and of Masters to Slaves, all grow out of this one Root, and flourish on the one stem of Unity in Christ, confessed to be God and Man, and of Communion with His

The divine Apostle, in his Epistle to the Ephesians, had thus prepared the way for a subsequent theological application of these fundamental principles, in the Epistle to the Colossians; not only for the purpose of establishing and confirming Evangelical Truth, but also of refuting and exploding Heretical errors. The Epistle to the Colossians discloses various forms of religious error, which are not displayed in any other Epistle of St. Paul, but which, having been disseminated by the Evil One in the field of the Church, and having taken root in primitive times in Phrygia, have brought forth a large harvest of evil, and are still prevalent in our own age.

These errors, like all others which have been most disastrous to the Church, presented themselves originally in the specious garb of Good. They came forward in the name of Philosophy and superior intelligence, and yet were vain and illusory 5. Their Teachers dressed themselves up in the guise of Humility, and yet were inflated with Pride 6. They affected sanctity, and meekness, and a religious reverence for the ritual and ordinances of God according to the Levitical Law 1; and yet, in a spirit of proud and arbitrary lawlessness, they usurped a tyrannical dominion over the wills and consciences of men; and not holding the Head , required them to receive their own human commands and traditions as terms of communion, and as necessary to salvation, and imposed upon them a system of Will-Worship 10. They professed to promote superior spirituality by rigorous rules of asceticism, and self-mortification, and neglect of the body, and yet were vainly puffed up by a fleshly mind"; they ministered to the gratification of the carnal appetites, and to sensual indulgences, by denying due honour to the body 12, particularly by derogating from the dignity of Christ, God manifest in the flesh 13; and thus they were depriving the Human Body of its most glorious prerogative,—that of being sanctified, consecrated, and glorified by the Incarnation of the Son of God, and by union

They professed to be deeply sensible of their own unworthiness, and of the corruption of fallen man, and therefore to be afraid to approach an offended and all-holy God; and in a spirit of affected humility and awe for His tremendous Majesty and for the Holiness of His Nature, and for Him Who had revealed Himself of old by the ministry of Angels, and of honour for His rightcous Law which He had given amid thunders and lightnings from Mount Sinai by the agency of Angels, and of respect for His Word, which represented Angels as Princes of Kingdoms 14, they invoked Angels as Mediators, and thus did dishonour to the only Mediator between God and Man, the Man Christ Jesus 13, Whom, on account of His being man, they treated as inferior to the Angels. And while they professed extraordinary sanctity and devotion to God, they attempted to suborn God's Servants, the Elect Angels, to be accomplices in rebellion against Him, and they perverted the blessed Mystery of the Incarnation,—that stupendous marvel and crowning consummation of God's Love toward man in Christ, for man's everlasting glory and bliss,—into an occasion for working man's ruin, and for dishonouring and degrading Him Who is God Incarnate, God manifest in the flesh, and for frustrating the mercy of God the Father in the person of His dear Son.

Such were the machinations of the Evil One in the Churches of Phrygia. Such were the spiritual perils which beset the Church of Colossæ.

Almighty God, in His wisdom and love, controlled and overruled these evils for endless good to the Colossian Church, and to the Church Universal of every age and country, by the ministry of St. Paul in the present Epistle.

1. The Apostle here asserts in the clearest terms the Godhead of Christ 16, and has thus furnished a divine refutation of all Arian and Socinian Heresies which contravene that Doctrine.

```
1 In the first three chapters, and at the beginning of the fourth chapter to the Ephesians.
```

iv. 3. 14.

&lt;sup>3</sup> iv. 22-32; v. 1-14. <sup>4</sup> Eph. v. 22-33; vi. 1.

&lt;sup>5</sup> ii. 8. <sup>6</sup> ii. 18. 23.

<sup>7</sup> See on ii. 8.

<sup>9</sup> ii. 8. 20. 22. 10 ii. 23.

<sup>11</sup> ii. 18. 23.

&lt;sup>12</sup> ii. 23. <sup>13</sup> 1 Tim. iii. 16.

<sup>14</sup> See on ii. 8. 15 1 Tim. ii. 5.

<sup>16</sup> i. 15, 16.

2. He here proclaims in unequivocal language the Mystery of the Incarnation, and of the Atonement made by Christ fulfilling all righteousness in our Nature by a sinless obedience, and offering Himself as a perfect, expiatory, propitiatory, satisfactory, and meritorious sacrifice to God; taking away the sins of the world, and redeeming Mankind from the bondage of Satan, and from the Curse of the Law, and purchasing them to Himself, and incorporating them in Himself as a Church, and procuring for them an everlasting inheritance in Heaven, by the priceless cost of His own Blood.

Thus the Holy Spirit has supplied in this Epistle a divine panoply against the heretical sophistries of those, who, relying on the frail Reed of a vain Philosophy in matters of Faith, impugn the Doctrine of the Atonement; and who repeat the insults and outrages of the Crucifixion by smiting their adorable Saviour on the head with that Reed 1, even denying the Lord that bought them 2.

- 3. The Apostle has also here provided a safeguard against the devices of those, who, professing superior sanctity, and pretending to afford to their votaries extraordinary means of holiness, and assuming the disguise of lowliness and of self-abasement, hide beneath that specious surface a haughty, aspiring, and ambitious spirit, and exercise lordship over God's heritage, and encroach on men's Christian Liberty, and usurp dominion over their wills and consciences, and would reduce into spiritual bondage and vassalage the servants of God and children of Christ, whom He has purchased for Himself with His most precious blood; and who impose upon them arbitrary forms of Will-worship, and deny them the use of God's creatures, and lay upon them heavy burdens, particularly the yoke of constrained celibacy, and so open a wide door, not only to carnal pride and self-righteousness, but to the indulgence of fleshly lusts; and who require subjection to their own magisterial dictates, and unscriptural traditions and ordinances, as if they were oracles of God, and necessary to everlasting salvation; and invent new Articles of Faith, to be received by all on pain of damnation; and while they call themselves Christians, and boast their own Church to be the only true Church of Christ, yet derogate from the divine honour of the great Head of the Church, and place the holiest of His creatures in an attitude of rivalry against Him, by making for themselves Mediators in the person of Angels and of Saints, and of the Blessed Virgin Mother of Christ.
- 4. St. Paul has also here furnished us with a divine defence against the spurious spiritualism of those, who, forgetting the dignity and the honour, the prerogatives and the privileges, the hopes and the destinies of the Human Body, created by God the Father, assumed by God the Son, and made a Temple of God the Holy Ghost, and the heir of a glorious Resurrection, and of a future heavenly transfiguration into likeness to Christ's glorified Body , would dissolve and decompose man into a mere ghostly phantom, an ideal and shadowy spectre, an airy and visionary dream; and thus, having taken away the foundations of honour and reverence for the Body, while they profess to spiritualize Humanity, would make it an easy prey to the assaults of carnal lusts and sensual appetites, and would reduce it from its high exaltation in Christ Jesus at the very Right Hand of God, to the low level of the beasts that perish.

Thus the Teaching of St. Paul, in this glorious Epistle, displays, by a signal specimen, the love and wisdom of God inspiring the divine Apostle, "redeeming the time, because the days are evil'," and using the temporary and local devices of the Evil One as occasions for the refutation of Error, and for the maintenance and advancement of Truth, and for the perpetual edification and consolidation of the Universal Church of Christ.

II. Had St. Paul ever been at Colossæ before he wrote this Epistle? and did he found the Church there?

This question has been answered in the negative by most modern Expositors, on the following grounds 5;

- (1) St. Paul nowhere speaks of himself in this Epistle as the founder of the Church at Colossæ, or as having preached there.
- (2) He nowhere in this Epistle refutes the errors of the false teachers at Colossæ by reference to what he himself had preached there, as he does in his Epistles to the Galatians, and to the Corinthians.
  - (3) He refers to Epaphras as the teacher of the Colossians.
  - <sup>1</sup> Matt. xxvii. 29. Mark xv. 19.
  - <sup>2</sup> 2 Pet. ii. 1. <sup>3</sup> Phil. iii. 21.
- According to his own precept, Col. iv. 5. Eph. v. 16, where
  - <sup>5</sup> These may be seen in Davidson's Introduction, ii. p. 399, have ἡμῶν, not ὁμῶν.
- and Dean Alford's Prolegomena, vol. iii. ch. iv. § 2. Meyer,
- Einleitung, p. 2.
  <sup>6</sup> Gal. i. 6.
  - <sup>7</sup> 1 Cor. iii. 1—10.
- <sup>8</sup> Col. i. 7, where, however, it is observable that A, B, D\*, G have  $\hbar\mu\hat{\omega}\nu$ , not  $\delta\mu\hat{\omega}\nu$ .

(4) Above all, he says that he has great conflict for them and for those of Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen his face in the flesh 1.

Hence it is inferred by many, that St. Paul had never been at Colossæ when he wrote this Epistle.

Of these several arguments, the only one which seems entitled to much consideration is the last.

As to the other three, it may be replied, that it was not St. Paul's manner to speak much of himself in his Epistles, which were to be read publicly in all Churches of the world.

In the Epistle to the Ephesians he says nothing of his own preaching at Ephesus, or of his ever having been there; and yet we know from the Acts of the Apostles that he had resided and preached there for nearly three years 2.

Wherever he does speak of himself in his Epistles, and of his own preaching, and of its purport and effects, and wherever he asserts his own apostolic dignity and authority, it will be found to be either in his carliest Epistles, which were written and circulated when his name was little known, and his authority was not established, as in the Epistles to the Thessalonians <sup>3</sup>; or in his Epistles to Churches where his apostolic character and commission were disparaged and impugned by rival and false Teachers, as was the case in Galatia and at Corinth.

In those cases he was constrained to speak of himself, in order to vindicate his authority, and to establish his claims to be heard as an Apostle '.

But the erroneous Teachers in Phrygia do not appear to have shown any personal hostility to St. Paul.

Perhaps the restoration of his influence in Galatia 5, and the fame of his preaching and miracles at Ephesus, deterred them from such an attempt. Besides, it is not clear that the false Teachers had as yet gained a footing at Colossæ 6.

The honourable mention made by St. Paul of Epaphras 7 may have been designed to support his authority by his own apostolic name, and also to show the concurrence of Epaphras, a Colossian, and a Pastor of Colosse, in what was now written to the Colossians in this Epistle by St. Paul at Rome, where Epaphras then was 8. It was as much as to say, I concur in what Epaphras taught, and he concurs in what I now write.

The reference to what the Colossians had learnt of Epaphras seems rather to intimate that St. Paul had been at Colossæ with him, and had seen and heard what he had taught. It is in no way inconsistent with a belief that Epaphras, himself a Colossian, had been converted, as Philemon, a Colossian, was by St. Paul <sup>9</sup>; and that, having been approved by St. Paul, he was left by him at Colossæ in the pastoral charge of that city; and that therefore St. Paul speaks of him as he does, in this Epistle to the Colossians <sup>10</sup>.

Perhaps also Epaphras had come to Rome in order to report to St. Paul the state of the Colossian Church; and it may have been at his instance that St. Paul wrote this Epistle, in order to avert the dangers which then threatened the Christians there.

Besides, it must be remembered that the last visit which St. Paul had paid to Phrygia 11, was not less than about ten years before he wrote the Epistle to the Colossians. He might therefore well refer to Epaphras in matters concerning their spiritual condition when he wrote.

On the whole, there seems to be nothing of sufficient weight, in the allegations above recited, to invalidate the arguments—if any can be adduced—to make it probable that St. Paul visited and evangelized Colossæ.

But the main support of the opinion that St. Paul was never at Colossæ, is contained in the fourth proposition recited above, which refers to the Apostle's words in ch. ii. 1, "I desire you to know what conflict I have for you and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh."

It may be readily allowed, that the first impression made on the mind, on hearing these words, is, that the Colossians, whom he was addressing, had never seen the Apostle.

It may also be granted, that if we had no other evidence on this subject but what could be derived from this passage, such a conclusion would seem to be not improbable.

&lt;sup>1</sup> ii. 1.
<sup>2</sup> This he himself states Acts xx. 31. But there was great difference between a speech to friends from Ephesus, and an Epistle to be read publicly in that Church, and in all other Churches.

&lt;sup>3</sup> 1 Thess. i. 5; ii. 1. 5. 11. 2 Thess. iii. 7.

See on 2 Cor. xii. 2, and Introduction, p. 74. Vol. II.—Part III.

<sup>5</sup> See Introduction to the Epistle to the Galatians, pp. 39-41.

&lt;sup>6</sup> See ii. 5. <sup>7</sup> i. 7.

<sup>8</sup> Col. iv. 12. Philem. 23.

&lt;sup>9</sup> Philem. 19.

<sup>11</sup> That mentioned in Acts xviii. 23.

But, on the other hand, it may be affirmed, that, on further consideration, we have much reason to doubt whether such a conclusion is correct.

It seems to proceed from an inadequate conception of the character and design of the Epistles of St. Paul.

In reading these Epistles, we are reading divinely-inspired writings, intended not only for the use of the particular Churches to which they were originally addressed, but also to be communicated to other Christian Communities, and to be read publicly in their ears, as lively oracles of God, even to the end of time.

If we bear in mind this their true nature and purpose, we may be disposed to assign a different meaning to those words in the beginning of the second chapter;

They may perhaps be paraphrased thus:—I would that ye, Colossians, to whom I now write this Epistle from my place of captivity at Rome, knew, what great conflict I have for you and for those of Laodicea who have seen me in the flesh, and who will be the first to receive and hear this Epistle from me publicly read in your Churches; and for this purpose I charge you to send it on to Laodicea, and to receive another Epistle from it. But I wish you to know also, what conflict I have likewise for others, who have never seen me, and who will also receive and read this Epistle in due course of time, and when they hear and read it, I wish them to know that I have no less conflict for themselves whom I have not seen, than for you and the Laodiceans whom I have seen.

Thus interpreted, this sentence of St. Paul receives a large and comprehensive character of perpetual and universal application, in all ages and in all places, similar to that of the prayer of our Blessed Saviour Himself, "Father, I pray for them whom Thou hast given Me.... Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also that shall believe on Me through their word?."

This interpretation, as is well known, is not a novel one. It has been already proposed by one of the most intelligent Interpreters of St. Paul, Theodoret, Bishop of Cyrus in Syria in the fifth century, in his note on that passage.

It is also corroborated by the following considerations;

(1) At the beginning of the Epistle, St. Paul associates the name of Timothy with his own name, in his address to the Colossians.

Timothy was a young man at that time 3; and it is not at all probable that he would be thus prominently put forward, unless he had been at Colossæ.

Wherever Timothy is thus named at the commencement of any other of St. Paul's Epistles, it may be shown that Timothy had been at the places to which those Epistles were sent, and that he had been there in company with St. Paul, or soon after him 4.

It is observable also, that Timothy's name is associated with St. Paul's, in a similar manner, in the opening of the Epistle to Philemon, who dwelt at Colossæ 5.

(2) Now on reference to the Acts of the Apostles, we find that soon after St. Paul had taken Timothy into his company at Lystra, they visited Phrygia together <sup>6</sup>.

Colossæ and Laodicea were cities of Phrygia; and it is probable that they were visited by St. Paul and Timothy at that time.

It has indeed been said, that as Colossæ was not then a very important place, it would hardly have been worth while for St. Paul to spend his time there.

But, it may be observed, that Colossee is mentioned with Laodicea in the beginning of the second chapter; and if it is argued from that passage, that St. Paul in visiting Phrygia had not visited Colosse, then, by parity of reason, he had not visited Laodicea. But this is very improbable. For Laodicea was one of the most important cities, not only of Phrygia, but of the whole of Asia Minor'. Besides, in his Epistle to the Colossians, he sends salutations to "the brethren at Laodicea, and to Nymphas, and to the church in his house'," which seem to intimate personal acquaintance with that city.

It is therefore not unlikely, that in then visiting Phrygia, he not only visited Laodicea, but also its neighbouring city Colossæ.

(3) We see, also, as a fact, that St. Paul thought it worth while to write an Epistle from Rome

See I Thess. i. 1. 2 Thess. i. 1. 2 Cor. i. 1. Cp. Acts xvii.

St. Paul had written to the Romans, whom he had never seen; but he did not associate Timothy (who was then his companion) in writing the Epistle. See Rom. xvi. 21.

<sup>5</sup> Philem. 1.

<sup>6</sup> Acts xvi. 6.

Strabo, xii. p. 557. Tacit. Ann. xiv. 27. Cic. ad Famil. iii.
 ix. 25. See Dr. Schmitz, in his article in Smith's Dictionary of Ant. Geog. ii. p. 122.
 Col. iv. 15.

to Colossæ. Would be not also have thought it worth while, when he was in Phrygia, to visit it?

(4) It is also recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, that St. Paul, about three years after his first visit to Phrygia, made a second visit to that country, and went through the country in order, confirming all the disciples 1.

Hence the probability is increased, that St. Paul had visited and evangelized Laodicca, and also Colossæ, before he wrote this Epistle.

(5) This opinion is corroborated by internal evidence in the Epistle itself.

(1) He speaks of his having been made a minister of God to them<sup>2</sup>.

(2) He supposes that they take an affectionate interest in his personal concerns, and sends Tychicus to declare all his state unto them 3.

(3) He supposes them to be acquainted with his friends and fellow-labourers, and to take an interest in their affairs also, and sends them their salutations 4.

(6) This conclusion is confirmed also by the Epistle to Philemon.

Philemon was an inhabitant of Colossæ 5. He had been converted by St. Paul 6, probably when he had visited that city.

St. Paul speaks of Apphia, generally supposed to be Philemon's wife, and of his house, and of his friend Archippus i, and of Philemon's slave Onesimus; and he desires Philemon to prepare for him a lodging, for he expected to visit him at Colossæ9; thus showing local and personal acquaintance with Colossæ and its inhabitants.

Hence it appears that St. Paul thought Colosse to be well worth an Apostolic visit. Hence also the probability is enhanced that he had been already there 10.

Probably, in fine, the Apostle's visit to Colossæ, and to the house of Philemon there, and his preaching of the Gospel to them, and his conversion of them to the Christian Faith, and the personal influence he had exercised over them, had made a deep impression on the mind of one of the humblest inmates of that family, and led the fugitive slave, Onesimus, in the hours of his sad and solitary remorse, in the great wilderness of Rome, to repair, in the contrite spirit of the returning prodigal, to the prison-house of St. Paul, and to open his griefs to him, and to seek comfort from the Apostle, and to ask for his friendly intercession with his master, and thus, by the blessing of God, he was received into the Church, and was restored to his master Philemon as a beloved brother in Christ.

<sup>1</sup> Acts xviii. 23.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Col. i. 25.

<sup>6</sup> Philem. 19. 7 v. 2.

iv. 7. 9. iv. 10, 11. 14.

<sup>5</sup> This may be shown from the many coincidences between the Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon, and particularly by means of the history of Onesimus, who had fled to Rome from Philemon (v. 12), and who is described as "one of you" to the Colossians (iv. 9).

<sup>8</sup> v. 10. 9 v. 22. 10 Cp. Lardner's History of the Apostles, ch. xiv. vol. iii. p. 362, where the arguments are well stated in behalf of this con-

HPOS KOAASSAEIS.

2 Rom. 1. 7. Gal. 1. 3. Eph. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 2.

b Eph. 1. 15. Phil. 1. 3. 1 Thess. 1. 2. 2 Thess. 1. 3. c Eph. 1. 13, 15, 16. Philem. 5. d 1 Pet. 1. 4. 2 Tim. 4. 8. e Mark 4. 8. & 16. 15. John 15. 16. Phil. 1. 11.

Ι. 1 αΠΑΥΛΟΣ ἀπόστολος Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ, καὶ Τιμόθεος ό άδελφὸς, 2 τοῖς ἐν Κολοσσαῖς άγίοις καὶ πιστοῖς άδελφοῖς ἐν Χριστῷ χάρις ύμιν και ειρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν.

3 ε Εύχαριστοθμεν τῷ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ πάντοτε, περὶ ὑμῶν προσευχόμενοι, 4 ° ἀκούσαντες τὴν πίστιν ὑμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ 'Ιησοῦ, καὶ τὴν ἀγάπην ἡν ἔχετε εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἁγίους, 5 d διὰ τὴν ἐλπίδα τὴν αποκειμένην ύμιν έν τοις ούρανοις, ην προηκούσατε έν τῷ λόγῳ της άληθείας τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, 6 ° τοῦ παρόντος εἰς ὑμᾶς, καθώς καὶ ἐν παντὶ τῷ κόσμω ἐστὶ καρποφορούμενον καὶ αὐξανόμενον, καθώς καὶ ἐν ὑμῖν, ἀφ' ης ἡμέρας ηκούσατε, Προς Κολασσαείς] So A, B, K, and C in Subscr. ad Matt., Lachmann, Tisch., Meyer, Alf. The Codex Sinaiticus (Ν) has πρὸς Κολοσσαεῖς, and in v. 2, Κολοσσαῖς, but in the subscription and headings of the pages it has Kolagoaeis. As to the orthography of the word, see on v. 2.

CH. I. 1. Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ] of Jesus Christ. It is observable that in the beginning of this Epistle—addressed to a Church where the Name of Jesus Christ was disparaged by many, and written in order to vindicate His Dignity-the Apostle repeats the word Christ four times. Chrys.

— Τιμόθεος ὁ ἀδελφός] Timothy our brother. Timothy was with St. Paul when he passed through Phrygia, in which Colossæ was situated. (Acts xvi. 1-6.) Probably he visited Colossæ with the Apostle at that time. If Timothy had not been at Colossæ, it is hardly probable that, being still a young man, he would have been associated with the Apostle in this address to the Colossian Church.

In the case of all the other Epistles, where Timothy is thus introduced, it is certain that he had been with St. Paul at the places, and was well known to the Churches, to which those Epistles were sent. (See 1 Thess. i. 1. 2 Thess. i. 1. 2 Cor. i. 1. Phil. i. 1.) Hence it may be inferred that he had been at Colossæ, and that he had been there with St. Paul, and that St. Paul was not unknown (as has been supposed by some) to the Colossian Church, but had visited it probably in one or both of his missionary tours mentioned in Acts xvi. 6 and Acts xviii, 23. in the latter of which it is specially recorded that the Apostle went through the region of Phrygia in order, confirming all the disciples. This could hardly be said if he had not visited Colossæ. See above, the Introduction to this Epistle, and below on ii. 1.

This opinion is also confirmed by the words δ άδελφδς, our brother, annexed here to Τιμόθεος, and signifying that he was well known to them as such, and was their own brother as well as St. Paul's. Timothy is introduced as "Timothy the brother" in the Epistle to Philemon, who lived at Colossæ (Philem. 1); and this confirms the opinion stated above, that St. Paul and Timothy had visited Colossæ.

2. Κολοσσαίs] Colossæ. Λ (C in Subscr.), and above forty Cursive MSS., and Syriac, Coptic, Æthiopic Versions, and Origen, Theodoret have Kolassais, Colassa, and so Lachm., Tisch., Meyer, Alford, Ellicott.

But the reading Kohoovais is in B\* (see Cardinal Mai's Errata, p. 503; hitherto the reading of B has been cited erroneously), and also in R, and in D, E, F, G, I, and many Cursive MSS., and Chrys., and in Vulg., and Latin Fathers, and is etymologically correct, and is supported by the evidence of ancient coins of Colossæ inscribed with the words  $\delta\hat{\eta}\mu$ os Κολοσσην $\hat{\omega}\nu$ (Eckel iii. 47). It will be observed, however, that these coins do not present the form Κολοσσαείs or Κολασσαείs (which are the forms in the MSS. of St. Paul's Epistle), but Κολοσσηνοί, and they are anterior to the age of our present MSS. of St. Paul, when the form Colassæ (probably a Phrygian accommodation of the Greek word Colossæ) seems to have been the name popularly known. A similar adoption of a popular appellation may be seen in John xviii. 1.

Colossæ, mentioned by Herodotus (vii. 30) as a large City of Phrygia, was situated on the river Lycus, a branch of the Mæander, Phygia, was situated on the river Lycus, a branch of the Magander, and not far from Laodicea (the principal city of Phrygia, see on ii. 1) and Hierapolis (iv. 13), and is classed among the 'celeberrima oppida' of Phrygia by Pliny, v. 41.

Colossæ was the residence of Philemon, to whom St. Paul sent an Epistle from Rome at the same time as the present Epistle. See below on iv. 9, 10, and the Introduction to this Epistle, p. 315.

— ἡμῶν] Elz. adds καl Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, which are not in the major part of the best MSS. and Edd. 3.  $\kappa alj$  Omitted by B, and so Alf., Ellic.— $\tau \hat{\varphi}$  D\*, G, and so Lachm., Tisch.

- περί] B, D, E*, E, F, G have ὖπέρ.
   Δεούσαντες τὴν πίστιν] having heard your faith. The same words are addressed to the Church of Ephesus, where he had preached for three years (Eph. i. 15); and therefore no argument ought to have been grounded on them, that he had never been at Colossæ.
- τ δυ έχετε] which ye have. So the majority of the best MSS., Λ, C, D*, E, F, G, and Edd. Elz. has τήν.
   τ ην έλπίδα] the hope: considered as a deposit laid up in - heaven, and one day to be fully realized. See on Rom. xii. 6.
- προηκούσατε] ye heard already, or formerly. So προ in προ-ητιασάμεθα, Rom. iii. 9. He does not assume to himself the credit of announcing it to them for the first time, or suppose that they are mere neophytes in Christ.

6. του παρόντος els buas] that came to you and abides with — καl αὐξανόμενον] and increasing. Omitted by Elz., but found in the best MSS. and Edd. Cp. 1 Cor. iii. 6, 7. Elz. has καl before ἐστι, but it is not in A, B, C, D**, E.

St. Paul compares the Gospel to a Tree, which not only is always bearing fruit (observe έστι with the present participle), but is ever enlarging itself in size (αὐξανόμενον). Cp. Matt. καὶ ἐπέγνωτε τὴν χάριν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν ἀληθεία, <sup>7 f</sup> καθώς ἐμάθετε ἀπὸ Ἐπαφρᾶ fch. 4. 12. τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ συνδούλου ἡμῶν, ὄς ἐστι πιστὸς ὑπὲρ ὑμῶν διάκονος τοῦ Xριστοῦ,  $^{25}_{
m g\ Rom,\ 12.\ 2.}$

Κυρίου εἰς πᾶσαν ἀρέσκειαν, ἐν παντὶ ἔργω ἀγαθῷ καρποφοροῦντες, καὶ αὐξα- $\frac{1}{2}$  Thess. 2. 12. νόμενοι τἢ ἐπιγνώσει τοῦ Θεοῦ,  $\frac{1}{2}$  ἐν πάση δυνάμει δυναμούμενοι, κατὰ τὸ  $\frac{2}{2}$  Pet. 1. 2, 3. κράτος τἢς δόξης αὐτοῦ, εἰς πᾶσαν ὑπομονὴν καὶ μακροθυμίαν μετὰ χαρᾶς, ἱ Acts 26. 18.  $\frac{1}{2}$  ἱ εὐχαριστοῦντες τῷ Πατρὶ τῷ ἱκανώσαντι ἡμᾶς εἰς τὴν μερίδα τοῦ κλήρου  $\frac{1}{2}$  Thess. 2. 12.  $\frac{1}{2}$  ἱ εὐχαριστοῦντες τῷ Πατρὶ τῷ ἱκανώσαντι ἡμᾶς εἰς τὴν μερίδα τοῦ κλήρου  $\frac{1}{2}$  Pet. 2. 9.  $\frac{1}{2}$  Λεts 20. 28.  $\frac{1}{2}$  Λεts 20. 28. τῶν ἀγίων ἐν τῷ φωτὶ,  $^{13 \text{ k}}$  ος ἐρρύσατο ἡμᾶς ἐκ τῆς ἐξουσίας τοῦ σκότους, καὶ  $^{1.4 \text{ cts}}_{\text{Eph. 1.9}}$ ,  $^{1.9 \text{ cts}}_{\text{poss}}$  μετέστησεν εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τοῦ Υίοῦ τῆς ἀγάπης αὐτοῦ,  $^{14 \text{ l}}$  ἐν ῷ ἔχομεν τὴν  $^{2.\text{Cor. 4. 4.}}_{\text{Phil. 2. 6.}}$  ἀπολύτρωσιν, τὴν ἄφεσιν τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν,  $^{15 \text{ m}}$  ὄς ἐστιν εἰκὼν τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ἀορά- $^{16 \text{ Heb. 1. 3.}}_{\text{Rev. 3. 14.}}$

xiii. 31, where our Lord compares the Kingdom of Heaven to the grain of Mustard-seed. The Gospel of Christ, whether it be in individuals or in Churches, shows its power by fruits of holiness at home, and also by a zeal for Christian Missions to other

7.  ${}^{\circ}\text{E}\pi\alpha\phi\rho\hat{\alpha}]$  Epaphras, a Colossian (see iv. 12,  $\delta$   $\hat{\epsilon}\xi$   $\delta\mu\hat{\omega}\nu$ ), was probably now a fellow-prisoner with St. Paul at Rome (see Philem. 23, δ συναιχμάλωτός μου), and had recently come from Colossæ to St. Paul, and had made a good report to the Apostle of their spiritual state (v. 8), and at the same time made known to the Apostle the spiritual perils from false teachers, by whom the Colossian Church had been invaded. A, B, D\*, G have ἡμῶν here, not δμῶν.

It is probable that this report of Epaphras gave occasion to this Epistle, which the Apostle, as their spiritual Father, would be more eager to write, on account of the detention of Epaphras, the pastor of the Colossians, at Rome, in this hour of trial for his flock. At the same time he bears testimony to the faithfulness

8.  $\ell\nu$   $\Pi\nu\epsilon\dot{\nu}\mu\alpha\tau i]$  in the Holy Spirit. Cp. Rom. xiv. 17. And as to the absence of the article, see Winer, § 20, p. 123. Cp.  $\ell\nu$

9. την επίγνωσιν] the full knowledge. Cp. Luke i. 4. St. Paul contrasts this sound epi-gnosis with the spurious gnosis of the false Gnostic Teachers against whom he writes. Hence this word, Talse Ghoshe Teachers agains, whom he writes. There this word, επίγνωσις, is often repeated in this Epistle (i. 9, 10; ii. 2; iii. 10. Cp. Philem. 6), as it is in the parallel Epistle of St. Paul's brother Apostle, St. Peter; 2 Pet. i. 2, 3. 8; ii. 20. See note on 2 Pet. i. 2. 10. εἰς πᾶσαν ἀρέσκειαν] to all pleasing. St. Paul biddeth Titus exhort servants to please their Masters in all things (Tit. iii)

ii. 9); so must God's servant do. He must study to walk worthy of Him unto all pleasing, not much regarding how others in-terpret his doings, or what offence they take at him, so long as his Master accepteth his services. Whoso is not thus resolved to please his Master, although he should thereby incur the displeasure of the whole world, is not worthy to be called the servant of such a Master, for "If I yet sought to please men, I should not be the servant of Christ" (Gal. i. 10). Bp. Sanderson (iii. p. 320). Cp. Eph. v. 10.

- τῆ ἐπιγνώσει] by the clear knowledge. So the major part of the best MSS., not however B (see Mai). Elz. has εἰς τὴν ἐπίγνωσιν. Ἐπίγνωσιν, full knowledge, is more than γνῶσις (see on Luke i. 4), it is a gift and grace of the Holy Spirit. See ii. 2;

iii. 10; and Meyer here.

This word occurs oftener in this Epistle than in any other of St. Paul. Perhaps St. Paul may have used it as a contrast to the false  $\gamma v \hat{\omega} \sigma is$  (1 Tim. vi. 20) or Gnosticism of the false teachers, who were beguiling the Colossians with the speciousness of their vain Philosophy. (ii. 8.) They, in their theories, promised γνῶσις, but the Apostle gave ἐπίγνωσις by his ministry.

11. κατὰ τὸ κράτος τῆς δόξης] according to the mightiness of His Glory. Observe, the divine Glory is not only a bright

The Glory. Coserve, the divide Glory is not only a bright manifestation of splendour, but an energetic exercise of power. So it was in the days of Christ's earthly ministry, when the soldiers fell back before His presence (John xviii. 6). What will it be at the Great Day! (Cp. 2 Thess. ii. 8.)

12. τῷ ἰκανώσαντι ἡμῶς] who made us meet for, qualified us for (O. S.)

for (2 Cor. iii. 6), made us inavovs, such as might hope to arrive at, come to (ikaveiv, see Passow) the portion of the inheritance of light into which nothing that is unholy is fit to enter, or will be allowed to come. (Rev. xxi. 27.) Cp. Isa. xxxv. 8. S. Aug. renders the word rightly by "qui idoneos fecit" (Serm. 217).

- είς την μερίδα] to the portion of the inheritance. He does not mean 'our particular portion of that inheritance,' which would be a somewhat invidious and exclusive expression, but to the portion generally, to that portion by which the inheritance of light is parted off (μερίζεται) from darkness. Cp. Sept. Version of Joshus, on lots in Canaan, type of heaven.

This meaning is further illustrated by what is said in the following verse on their translation from the one region to the other. Cp. Bp. Sanderson (iii. 380-384) on the character of these two regions respectively, and their inhabitants.

13. τοῦ Υίοῦ τῆς ἀγάπης αὐτοῦ] of the Son of His Love, Who, in dying for the World on the Cross, and in delivering us from the Powers of darkness, is the special object of His Father's Love. and is then pre-eminently the Beloved Son, in Whom He is well pleased. Cp. Eph. i. 6, τῷ ἦγαπημένφ. (Chrys.) St. Paul takes care to anticipate and obviate the objection (caught at in later times by Socinians) that the Son could not have been loved by the Father, Who gave him up to die a cruel death for men who were rebels against Him. He therefore calls the Redeemer "the Son of His Love." See notes above on Matt. xvii. 5. See notes above on Matt. xvii. 5. Eph. i. 6.

14. την ἀπολύτρωσιν] the redemption, by means of the λύτρον, or ransom, no other than His own blood, which He shed Tra λύση, i. e. in order that He might loose or release us from the See above on Matt. xx. 28, and Eph. i. 7, and below,

Heb. ix. 12.

Elz. adds διὰ τοῦ αἴματος αὐτοῦ, which is a gloss, and is not found in the best MSS., and was imported probably from Eph. i. 7. — την άφεσιν των άμαρτιων] the remission of sins. See above on Eph. i. 7.

15.] St. Paul now proceeds to vindicate the Divine Majesty of Christ against the false Teachers at Colossæ, who disparaged Him as man, and as inferior in dignity, and posterior in time, to Angels. Theophyl.

- εἰκὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ἀοράτου] the image of God Who is Invisible. The Fathers generally regard these words as an assertion of the Divine consubstantiality of the Son; δηλοῖ ἡ εἰκὼν τὸ δμούσιον. Theodoret. Origen (c. Cels. vi.) and Hilary (de Synodis, c. 33) speak of Christ as rightly described as the "In-Syndolis, c. 50) speak of Christ as rightly described as the Inconvertible and Immutable Image of the Divinity, and Essence, and Virtue, and Glory." See also Hilary (de Trin. viii. 49), who says that Christ is an image of God by His creative power. So also Theophylact here, who says, "Christ is the Image of God, inasmuch as Christ is God, and the Son of God; and therefore He is superior to Angels and to all created Beings." "Fi-lius Dei est Patris sui vera, viva ac perfectissima Imago, ipsi Patri per omnia etiam magnitudine respondens." Bp. Bull (Def. Fid. Nic. ii. 9. 17).

Since Christ is the Image of Him that is Invisible, He is an Image of the substance of God. (Chrys.) And again, He, Who is an image of the Invisible, is Himself Invisible, or He would not be an Image of Invisibility. And Basil (in Caten. p. 304), Christ is not like an image made by art, but He is a living image, Christ is not like an image made by art, but He is a living image, or rather Life itself, not in any outward fashion, but in the very essence itself, preserving the invariability of God. And Greg. Nazian. (in Caten. p. 305), Christ is an image of God in his Consubstantiality. He is a Living Image of the Living One.

S. Augustine (de Divers. Quæst. 74, vol. vi. p. 120), expounding this text, says, Since God is not subject to the laws of time, and Heaven the said to have heaven the Son in time by Whom.

and He cannot be said to have begotten the Son in time, by Whom He created all time, it follows that the Son is an image of God του, πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, 16 " ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτίσθη τὰ πάντα, τὰ ἐν τοῖς n John 1. 3. 1 Cor. 8. 6. Eph. 3. 9. Heb. 1. 2. Rom. 8. 38. Eph. 1. 21, 22. & 3. 10, 11. ch. 2. 15.

not only as being from God, and that He is not only the likeness of God because He is the image of God, but He is so equal with God as not to be separated from Him by any interval of time.

It is necessary to bear in mind the language of the ancient Expositors on this passage, as a caution against some more recent Interpretations (e. g. that of Meyer, p. 27, and others), applying these words to Christ's Humanity only, and thus impairing the force of the Apostle's words, and marring the connexion of the argument.

- πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως] first-begotten before every creature. Christ is πρωτότοκος τῆς κτίσεως, not as if He had the Creature as a brother, but as being born before every creature. For how can He be a brother of creatures, and yet their Creator, as the Apostle here declares Him to be? Theodoret.

In this clause St. Paul, vindicating the Elernal Pre-existence and divine Power and Majesty of Christ against the false Teachers, distinguishes Him from, and contrasts Him with, all created beings, and predicates two things of Him,

(1) That He is begotten and not made, and therefore not a creature: and

(2) That He is prior to all creatures, as is expressly asserted in v. 17, His generation is eternal, before all creation.

And (3) he enforces this second assertion by adding, that by Him all things were made.

The word πρωτότοκος is used here with a genitive in the same way as πρῶτός μου in two places of St. John (i. 15. 30), before Me, and first of all.

As to the Arian objection, raised from the word πρωτότοκος, first-begotten, as if it implied that other sons were begotten after Him, and that therefore this word cannot be applicable to the Son as God, it is enough to observe (as Theophylact has done) that the word πρωτότοκος is also used of Christ as the first-born Son of Mary, and that phrase was never supposed by the Catholic Church to imply that the Blessed Virgin Mary had other children after Jesus. See note on Matt. i. 25.

The words of St. Paul here were understood in the primitive ages of Christianity to be declaratory of Christ's Divinity, as distinguished from His Humanity. S. Justin Martyr often cites them in that sense. Thus in his Dialogue with Trypho (c. 84) he says that He Who was πρωτότοκος πάντων ποιημάτων became man. And in c. 85 he affirms that all evil spirits are overcome by the name of the Son of God, the πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, who became man. And he says, still more clearly (c. 100), that He revealed to us all things which we have understood by His grace; and we have known Ilim as the First-begotten of God, and before all creatures, πρωτότοκον, τον και προ πάντων των κτισμάτων, -a clear exposition of St. Paul's meaning here. See also ibid c. 125, 138.

So also Tertullian (c. Praxeam, 7), referring to this passage, says, God made the Son equal to Himself, from Whom He came forth as the Son, and the First-begotten, as begotten before all things, and the only-begotten, as alone begotten of God. See also c. Marcion. v. 19.

Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch in the second century, quoting this passage (ad Autol. ii. 22), says, that before any thing was made, God had the Word as His Counsellor (that is, as ἐνδιάθετον); and when He desired to create the World, He begat the Word as προφορικόν, πρωτότοκον πάσης κτίσεως. Cp. ibid. c. 10.

S. Hippolytus also, the scholar of Irenæus (in his recently discovered treatise, "the Philosophumena, or Refutation of all Heresics," p. 335), says, that God begat the Word; and the Word, being His πρωτότοκος, created all things according to His Father's pleasure. See also other authorities on this subject in the present Editor's Volume, "S. Hippolytus and the Church of Rome," p. 280.

Novatian also, in the third century, asserts (de Trin. c. 16), that Christ is primogenitus omnis creatura, because He, as God the Word, according to His Divinity, came forth from His Father before every creature (quoniam secundum divinitatem ante omnem creaturam à Patre Deus Sermo processit), - which is a clear exposition of this text.

S. Ilitary also (de Trin. viii. 50) says, that the term ' first-born' is a declaration of Eternity.

Athanasius, and some Catholic Fathers, sometimes apply this text to illustrate the συγκατάβασις, or condescension, by which Christ became "the first-born among many brethren" (Rom. viii. 29), and because all in Christ are new creatures (2 Cor. v. 17. Heb. x. 20), and the creature is preserved from corruption by its communion with the Incarnate Word. Athanas. (Orat. ii. c. Arianos, p. 419, § 62; and also ad Gentes, p. 32, § 41.) But Athanasius strenuously protests against the notion that Christ can be called a kriois, or creature; and asserts that, when Christ is said to be πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως, this is not because He is on a level with creatures, and their chief in time; for how (he asks) can this be, since He is the Only-begotten Son? Athanas. (Orat. ii. c. Arianos, § 62.)

The above exposition of this important text has been adopted by our best divines; among whom it may suffice to quote two;

and first Pearson, as follows :-

We here read of the Son of God, in whom we have redemption through His blood (Col. i. 14); and we are sure that these words can be spoken of none other than Jesus Christ. He therefore it must be Who is thus described by the Apostle, Who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature. For by Him were all things created that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by Him and for Him. And He is before all things, and by Him all things consist. In which words our Saviour is expressly styled the first-born of every creature, that is, begotten by God as the Son of His love, antecedently to all other emanations, before any thing proceeded from Him, or was framed and created by Him. And that precedency is presently proved by this un-deniable argument, that all other emanations or productions came from Him; and whatsoever received its being by creation, was by Him created. Which assertion is delivered in the most proper, full, and pregnant expressions imaginable. First, in the vulgar phrase of Moses, as most consonant to his description, for by Him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth; signifying thereby that he speaketh of the same creation. Secondly, by a division which Moses never used, as describing the production only of corporeal substances. Lest therefore those immaterial beings might seem exempted from the Son's creation, because omitted in Moses' description, he addeth visible and invisible; and lest in that invisible world, among the many degrees of the celestial hierarchy, any order might seem exempted from an essential dependence upon Him, he nameth those which are of greatest eminence, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers, and under them comprehendeth all the rest. Nor doth it yet suffice thus to extend the object of His power by asserting all things to be made by Him, except it be so understood as to acknowledge the sovereignty of His person and the authority of His action. For, lest we should conceive the Son of God framing the world as a mere instrumental cause, which worketh by and for another, he showeth Him as well the final as the efficient Cause; for, all things were created by Him and for Him. Lastly, whereas all things first received their being by creation, and when they have received it continue in the same by virtue of God's conservation, in Whom we live, and move, and have our being (Acts xvii. 28), lest in any thing we should be thought not to depend immediately upon the Son of God, He is described as the Conserver, as well as the Creator. For He is before all things, and by Him all things consist. If then we consider the two last-cited verses by themselves, we cannot deny but that they are a most complete description of the Creator of the world; and if they were spoken of God the Father, could be no way injurious to His Majesty, Who is nowhere more plainly or fully set forth unto us as the Maker of the World. Bp. Pearson (on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 214).

The following is from Dr. Waterland :-

I pass on to a famous passage in the first chapter of the Epistle to the Colossians, which runs thus: Who is the image of the invisible God, &c., By Him all things consist. Strong, lively, and magnificent expressions, plainly intended of a Person, the Son of God just before mentioned (v. 13); so that here is no room for any Sabellian pretences of a Person pre-existing before the world began (so that here is as little left for the Socinian); lastly, of a Person Who was before all creatures, and made all creatures, which is enough to silence the Arians:

The last particular I am principally obliged to speak to. In the Greek we have two expressions &v aut $\phi$ and $\delta c$ autov, in Him and by Him were all things created; and also είς αὐτὸν. for Him, the same expression which we find used of God the Father probably (Rom. xi. 36), and is there rendered to Him.

So now we have found εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα, as before δι' αὐτοῦ τὰ πάντα, equally applied to Father and Son. Such expressions, so indifferently applied to either, have a meaning, and did not drop by chance from inspired writers

But to consider the passage more distinctly.

In respect of the words first-born of every creature, our translation comes not up to the force or meaning of the original. It should have been born (or begotten) before the whole creation, or, rather, before every creature (see John i. 30, πρῶτός μου ἦν), as is manifest from the context, which gives the reason why He is οὐρανοῖς καὶ τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, τὰ ὁρατὰ καὶ τὰ ἀόρατα, εἴτε θρόνοι, εἴτε κυριότη-  $\frac{0}{23}$ . Τες, εἴτε ἀρχαὶ, εἴτε ἐξουσίαι, τὰ πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν ἔκτισται. 17 καὶ  $\frac{8.4}{\text{Acts }}$   $\frac{15}{23}$ .  $\frac{8.4}{\text{Acts }}$   $\frac{15}{23}$ . αὐτὸς ἔστι πρὸ πάντων, καὶ τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ συνέστηκε.

πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν, ἴνα γένηται ἐν πᾶσιν αὐτὸς πρωτεύων  $^{19}$  ρ ὅτι ἐν  $^{ch. 2.9}$ .  $^{ch$ said to be πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως. It is because He is before all things, and because by Him were all things created. So that this very passage, which as it stands in our translation may seem to suppose the Son one of the creatures, does, when rightly understood, clearly exempt Him from the number of creatures.

He was before all created beings, and consequently was Himself uncreated, existing with the Father from all eternity. Dr.

Waterland (Moyer Lectures, ii. p. 34).

Bp. Fell (p. 264, note) rightly paraphrases the words thus, "the first or only-begotten before all creatures."

Finally, this exposition has been adopted by Meyer (p. 30), who confirms it on philological grounds.

16. ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ ἐκτίσθη τὰ πάντα] because by Him all things were created. He is before all created things, because by Him all things were created. A clear assertion of His Divinity.

See the exposition of this text by the Council of Antioch, A.D. 269, against Paul of Samosata, Routh (R. S. ii. 463). As Dr. Waterland says in the sequel to the words above quoted from him .-

Creation is here ascribed to the Son in very full, clear, and expressive terms. All things, not sublunary things only, not this inferior system, but all things, whether above or below, that are in heaven, and that are in earth; not inanimate things only, or the inhabitants of this globe, but also what is remote and distant, all things visible and invisible; and not only all rational creatures of an inferior rank and order, but the very highest orders of Angels or Archangels: whether they be Thrones or Dominions, Principalities or Powers, they are all created in and by Him, not only so, but for Him, or to Him. He is the final as well as efficient Cause, as much as to say, that they are made for His service and for His glory, the ultimate end of their creation. And that it may not be suspected that they have their dependence upon another, and not upon Him, or that in Him they do not live and move and hold their being, the Apostle adds farther, that by Him all things consist. He is not Creator only once, but perpetual Creator, being the Sustainer and Preserver of the whole Universe. Dr. Waterland.

The force of this exposition is not weakened by the sense which may be assigned to  $\epsilon \nu$   $a \vartheta \tau \varphi$ , and has been assigned to the preposition  $\epsilon \nu$  by able Philologers such as Winer (§ 50, p. 372), and Meyer, and Ellicott here, who distinguish its sense from that of διὰ in δι' αὐτοῦ which follows.

The World was created by God in Christ (says Winer) in so far that the Divine Word was the personal cause of the Divine Act of Creation, just as the world was redeemed by God in Christ.

This may be the force of the preposition  $\ell \nu$  here, though it must be allowed that the Greek Fathers generally regard èv here as instrumental; a sense which it often bears. Thus Chrys.

says, ἐν αὐτῷ δὲ ἀὐτοῦ ἐστίν. See Winer, § 48, p. 346.

However this may be, the work of Creation is ascribed to Christ's agency in the following words, All things have been created (ἐκτισταί) by Him, and exist by Him.

The Apostle uses two tenses here,  $\ell kr i \sigma \eta$  and  $\ell kr i \sigma \tau ai$ , to describe the work of Creation by Christ. The former tense, the aorist, describes the act of creation itself; the perfect tense affirms that all creatures have been created by Him, and that the effects of that one creative act still subsist. Cp. Meyer. Winer, § 40, pp. 242, 243, where examples may be seen of a similar combination of the Aorist followed by a Perfect in the N. T. Cp. 1 Cor. xv. 4.

- ἐν αὐτῷ] in Him. Observe the very frequent repetition of the pronoun avrbs in this and the six following verses, where it occurs no less than fifteen times.

It was doubtless designed to bring out more emphatically the Power, Majesty, and Love of Christ, as the Creator, and Preserver, and Ruler of the Universe, and the only Mediator between God and Man, in opposition to the false Teachers at Colossæ, who assigned to Angels the office and operations which belong only to HIM.

- τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς] the things which are in heaven. Therefore Angels were created by Him. Do not imagine then that He is posterior in time to them. Theophyl.

- εἴτε θρόνοι κ.τ.λ.] The Cherubim and the Angelic Hierarchy. Theodoret, who refers to EZEK. X. 1, and Daniel St. Paul thus condemns the heresy of the False Teachers of Colossæ, who ascribed the work of creation to Angels, and assigned to them authority in ruling and upholding the world, and placed them in a higher degree than Christ Himself, and made them objects of worship.

- εis αὐτόν] into Ĥim; so as to depend on Him as their support, and to minister to His glory as their end.

Their whole substance depends upon Him. Christ not only brought them out of nothing, but He rivets them together, so that if they were severed from His Providence they would fall to pieces, and be dissolved; see Chrysostom, who here, and on Eph. ii. 22, interprets these words as teaching that Christ is the Living Centre, to which all things in Creation converge, the divine Keystone in the arch of the Universe, on which the whole fabric leans; but he warns his readers against supposing that Christ Himself is consubstantial with the creatures whom He made and

This sense of the preposition els is to be further enlarged, so as to express the truth that the purpose, for which all things hang upon the Divine Power of Christ, is the manifestation of His Glory.

— ἔκτισται] have been created; have been brought into being. All things have been brought into existence from nothing by Him, and into Him as their Creator, Preserver, and Lord, on whose Providence they depend, and Whose glory they proclaim; and by Him they subsist. On the force of this tense EKTIGTAL. as distinguished from ἐκτίσθη, see the preceding note on that 17. ἔστι] exists. The editions commonly read ἐστὶ, which is less forcible and appropriate.

—  $\pi p \delta$ ] before, in time, not only in rank, as is alleged by Socinians and others. See above, v. 15.

— συνέστηκε] consist, were put together, and are upheld, by Him. Compare the use of this word in 2 Pet. iii. 5.

18. Καὶ αὐτός] And He Himself also is the Head of the Church. He, the Mighty Divine Being, Whose Majesty I have been describing, even He Himself vouchsafed to take our Nature, and incorporate us as Members in His Mystical Body the Church. Marvellous condescension!

It is observable, that the Apostle often makes the most striking transitions to a new subject by means of the simple conjunction kal, and thus mounts, as it were, by steps on a heavenly ladder to higher degrees of glory. See, for instance, here, vv. 17, 18. 20, 21; below, ii. 10.

Having spoken of Christ's Divine Power, he now proceeds to speak of His infinite Love to Mankind. Theophyl.

Having declared Christ's Divine pre-existence, and Omnipotence, and Glory, he now passes on to describe His relation to us, as God Incarnate, and Head of the Church. Theodoret. - ἡ κεφαλὴ τοῦ σώματος] the Head of the Body. See Eph.

i. 22; iv. 15; v. 23.

— ős  $\dot{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\nu$   $\dot{a}\rho\chi\dot{\eta}$ ] In that He is the  $\dot{a}\rho\chi\dot{\eta}$ , or Head, a word which has a twofold sense, indicating—

(1) Principium, beginning;
(2) Principalitas, dominion, rule.
(1) In the first sense, Christ, by reason of His Incarnation, Death, and Resurrection, is the source and well-spring of Life, both in body and soul, to the Church. In this respect He is the άρχη τῆς κτίστως, the beginning of the new Creation (Rev. iii. 14); and He says, I make all things new, I am the Alpha and the Omega, the first principle, and the Beginning (ἡ ἀρχὴ), and the Comega, the first principle, and the Beginning ( $\eta$  ap $\chi\eta$ ), and the End (Rev. xxi. 6). See also Rev. xxii. 13.

(2) In the second sense, by virtue of His Incarnation and Ascension into heaven, He is the 'Ap $\chi\eta$ , or Principality, Supremacy, and Chiefty of all things; the Head  $\pi\acute{a}\sigma\eta s \ \grave{a}\rho\chi\mathring{\eta}s$  (Col. ii. 10),  $\delta\pi\epsilon\rho\acute{a}\nu\omega \ \pi\acute{a}\sigma\eta s \ \grave{a}\rho\chi\mathring{\eta}s$  (Eph. i. 21). And therefore the Angelic  $\grave{a}\rho\chi a$ l and  $\grave{\epsilon}\xi \rho v\sigma ia$  are not (as the false Teachers pretended) superior to this because He is Man, but over in this Manhault. superior to Him because He is Man; but even in His Manhood He is their Lord, and He has elevated Human Nature itself to a dignity superior to that of Angels. Compare Heb. ii. 5—10 for a full exposition of the Apostle's meaning here.

The word 'Αρχη' is applied to Persons as here in Gen. xlix. 3.

Deut. xxi. 17. Meyer.

— πρωτότοκος ἐκ τῶν νεκρῶν] the first-born from the dead (cp. Rev. i. 5); a beautiful expression suggested by Christ Himself (John xvi. 21), and infimating that Christ by dring made. self (John xvi. 21), and intimating that Christ, by dying, made q Eph. 1. 10. 2 Cor. 5. 18. Eph. 2. 14, 16. Rom. 5. 1, 10. αὐτῶ εὐδόκησε πῶν τὸ πλήρωμα κατοικῆσαι, 20 q καὶ δι' αὐτοῦ ἀποκαταλλάξαι τὰ πάντα εἰς αὐτὸν εἰρηνοποιήσας διὰ τοῦ αἴματος τοῦ σταυροῦ αὐτοῦ, δι' αὐτοῦ, εἴτε τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, εἴτε τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς.

r Eph 2. 1, 2, 12. 21 r Καὶ ὑμᾶς ποτὲ ὄντας ἀπηλλοτριωμένους καὶ ἐχθροὺς τῆ διανοία ἐν τοῖς

Death to be a Birth, and made the Tomb to be a Womb of Life Everlasting, both to body and soul. See notes above on John xvi. 21, and on Acts ii. 24, and xiii. 23.

- Ίνα γένηται] that He might become. Observe this word γένηται, which affords a clue to the sense of this passage.

Christ consented to become mortal and die, and to be the first-born from the dead, in order that as man He might become chief and first in all things. The Apostle is speaking of what He became (ἐγενήθη), not what He was (ὑπῆρχεν); and he is de-Scribing the primacy and supremacy which Christ acquired by His Humanity. See above on Matt. xxviii. 18, and on 1 Cor. xv. 24, 25. Phil. ii. 6—11, which fully explain St. Paul's meaning πρωτεύων] first and chief. See note on άρχη above.

He and no other.

"Ad mortem pervenit, ut sit primogenitus ex mortuis, Ipse primatum tenens in omnibus, princeps vitæ, prior omnium et præcedens omnes." Irenæus (ii. 22. 4).

Perhaps ἐν πᾶσιν is best rendered by "in all things." Cp. τὰ πάντα in v. 17 and v. 20.

19. δτι έν αὐτῷ εὐδόκησε πῶν τὸ πλήρωμα κατοικῆσαι] because He was well pleased that all the fulness (of the Godhead) should dwell in Him. The word εὐδόκησε may either signify—

(1) That God the Son was pleased, or (2) That God was pleased.

(1) If the former interpretation be adopted, the sense of this profound assertion may become clear, when it is remembered that the two Natures are perfect and yet unconfused in the One Person of Christ.

Christ Himself, as God, was well pleased that all the fulness of the Godhead should dwell in the Man Christ Jesus. Eternal Word consented gladly to His own Incarnation. He said to the Father, "Sacrifice and offering Thou wouldest not (où $\kappa$   $\eta\theta\epsilon\lambda\eta\sigma\alpha s$ ), but a body Thou hast prepared Me. In burnt-offerings and sacrifices for sin Thou hast had no pleasure (οὐκ εὐδόκησας). Then said I, Lo, I am come (ἤκω) to do Thy Will, O God" (Heb. x. 5–9). Because God the Father (οὐκ εὐδόκησεν) was not well pleased with (that is, did not rest with complacency on) burnt-offerings for sin (inasmuch as they were not adequate to satisfy Ilis offended Justice), but had prepared a Body (see Heb. x. 5), in order that the Son, in that Body, God Incarnate, might redeem the world; therefore God the Son was well pleased to do His Father's Will, and to take the Body that was prepared for Him, and to become Man; and He was well pleased that all the fulness of the Godhead, of which (with reverence be it said) He was as complete a Possessor as the Father Himself, should be communicated to Man, and should dwell in Man.

That this sense may be given to the passage seems evident from the grammatical structure of it, in which αὐτὸς is emphatically applied to Christ, and from St. Paul's words in the next chapter (Col. ii. 9), where he says that in Christ (i. e. the Man Christ Jesus) dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; and this sense is confirmed by the nominative εἰρηνοποιήσαs in the

And so this sentence was understood in the second century, c. g. by Tertullian, who says, "Boni duxit omnem plenitudinem in semetipso habitare." (c. Marcion. v. 19.) And this  $\epsilon \delta \delta o \kappa l a$ , or good pleasure, of God the Son, has been well expressed by one of the greatest of the ancient Catholic Fathers who have written on the doctrine of the Trinity, S. Hilary, who, commenting on the second chapter of this Epistle of St. Paul, thus writes (de Trin. ix. 6): "These heavenly mysteries were arranged before the world began, that the only-begotten of God should be willing to be born, and to take upon Him human nature, to remain for ever in God; that He, Who is God, should be willing to suffer . . . that He, Who is God, should be willing to die. Therefore God is born, to take us into Himself; He suffers, to make us innocent; He dies, to vindicate us against the Devil; our Humanity abides in Him Who is God; the Spiritual Powers of Wickedness are conquered by the triumph of the Flesh, in which God dies."

The Apostle was not ignorant of this Mystery; and he who knew that this world's Philosophy could not fathom it, says (Col. ii. 8), "Beware lest any man spoil you," &c.

(2) Another interpretation is also admissible. It may be said, with probability, that the nominative Oeds, God, is to be supplied before the verb εὐδόκησε. This ellipse of Θεδs is observable in the phrase, διδ λέγει, sc. Θεδς (Eph. iv. 8; v. 14). Cp. Kühner, § 414. 3, vol. ii. p. 36; and see Meyer here. And this sense will not differ much from the preceding; for it will predicate of the Godhead generally what the former sense ascribes to the good will of One of the Consubstantial Persons of the Undivided Trinity, namely, of the Son.

If, however, St. Paul had meant to ascribe the εὐδοκία to the Father alone, he would hardly have failed to express Him by

Nama

The words εls αὐτὸν, into Himself, are very significant, and represent the Reconciliation which was effected by the taking of the Manhood into God, and by the incorporation of the universal family of Mankind, as a Church, into the mystical Body of Christ, both God and Man.

This work of Reconciliation is here attributed to the Son, and in r. 21. It is ascribed to the Father in 2 Cor. v. 19, because the Father works in the Son, and the Son doeth what He seeth the Father do, and doeth always those things that please Him. (John v. 19. 30; viii. 28, 29.)

(3) On the whole, we may perhaps affirm, that the Apostle designedly placed εὐδόκησεν here without any limitation of a nominative expressed, in order to bring out the truth more fully that the εὐδοκία is to be ascribed to the Father in the Son, and to the Son in the Father, and that there is perfect unity in Will and Operation in both. (See John xiv. 9, 10. 20; cp. below ii. 13.)

- κατοικήσαι] to abide, in a home; stronger than οἰκήσαι. 20. δι' αὐτοῦ ἀποκαταλλάξαι τὰ πάντα είς αὐτόν] and by Himself to reconcile and restore all things into Himself.

On the sense of ἀποκαταλλάξαι, see above, note on Eph. i. 10, and ii. 16. The Son of God is Lord of Angels, who were alienated from Man by reason of Man's disobedience to God (Chrys., Theodoret); and by becoming Man He became the Second Adam, and the Head of the Church; and so, by the union of the two Natures in His One Person, He brought all things, which before were estranged, into harmony, and effected a complete work of reconciliation and restoration between Earth and Heaven. See on Eph. i. 10; ii. 16.

- εἰρηνοποιήσας] having made peace. See notes on Eph. ii.

14-17.

- εἴτε τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, εἴτε τὰ ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς] whether it be the things upon earth or the things in heaven. See on Eph. i. 10; ii. 16. The work of Reconciliation of all things in and by Christ, whether in heaven or earth, is manifestly-

(1) Between God and Man, and

(2) Between Angels and Men, and

(3) Between Jew and Gentile, and (4) Between Man and the inferior creatures;

For, as Bp. Sanderson observes (iii. 159), Man had forfeited by the fall his right of dominion, which he had originally in Adam, over all the creatures which were estranged from him; and God under the Law had forbidden Man the use of many of the creatures as unclean, but now under the Gospel has taken away the stigma of uncleanness from the creature, and has reinstated Man in the free use of creation; and he has recovered all his royalties in the Second Adam, Jesus Christ.

God the Father hath granted us, and God the Son hath acquired to us, and God the Holy Ghost hath sealed to us, a new Patent. The Son of God, having made peace through the blood of the cross, hath recouciled us to His Father, and therein hath also reconciled the Creatures both to us and Him; reconciling, saith the Apostle, all things, not men only, unto Himself. God, having given us His own Son, the Heir of all things (Heb. i. 2), hath He not given us all things else? Hath He not permitted us the free use of the creatures in as ample measure as ever?

above on 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23. This fourth particular in the work of Reconciliation and Restoration is necessary to be noted, because by it the Apostle prepares the way for the refutation of the false Teachers at Colossæ, who impeached this Christian Liberty, and marred this work of Universal Reconciliation, by endeavouring to bring men back into their former state of bondage and estrangement, from which they had been freed by Christ, and would have enslaved them, and have done dishonour to Christ by forbidding them the free use of the Creatures. See the next chapter, vv. 20, 21.

21. Kal buas ] And you. He now proceeds to speak of that reconciliation and restoration of the Gentile World to God their Heavenly Father, which Christ has accomplished by His Death, and which He had before revealed in the Parable of the Prodigal Son. (Luke xv. 11-32.)

έργοις τοις πονηροίς νυνὶ δὲ ἀποκατήλλαξεν 22 ° ἐν τῷ σώματι τῆς σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ « Ερh. 2. 15, 16. εργοις τοις πονηροις νοντ σε αποκατηριας δια τοῦ θανάτου, παραστησαι ὑμᾶς ἄγίους καὶ ἀμώμους καὶ ἀνεγκλήτους κατ- $\frac{\text{Eph. 1. 4.}}{\text{ενώπιον αὐτοῦ}}$  εἰγε ἐπιμένετε τῆ πίστει τεθεμελιωμένοι καὶ ἑδραῖοι, καὶ μὴ  $\frac{\text{Tit. 2. 14.}}{\text{1 John 9. 10, 15.}}$  ενώπιον αὐτοῦ  $\frac{23}{\text{ενώπιον αὐτοῦ}}$  εἰγε ἐπιμένετε τῆ πίστει τεθεμελιωμένοι καὶ ἑδραῖοι, καὶ μὴ  $\frac{\text{Tit. 2. 14.}}{\text{1 John 9. 10, 15.}}$ μετακινούμενοι ἀπὸ τῆς ἐλπίδος τοῦ εὐαγγελίου οδ ἡκούσατε, τοῦ κηρυχθέντος Acts 11.23 έν πάση κτίσει τῆ ὑπὸ τὸν οὐρανὸν, οὖ ἐγενόμην ἐγὼ Παῦλος διάκονος.

 $^{24}$  "  $^{u}$   $^{u}$ αστα τῶν θλίψεων τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐν τἢ σαρκί μου ὑπὲρ τοῦ σώματος αὐτοῦ, ο  $\frac{10}{2}$  μετί. 2. 17. έστιν ἡ ἐκκλησία,  $\frac{25}{3}$  \* ἡς ἐγενόμην ἐγὰ διάκονος κατὰ τὴν οἰκονομίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ,  $\frac{10}{2}$  μετί. 3, 16. την δοθεῖσάν μοι εἰς ὑμᾶς, πληρῶσαι τὸν λόγον τοῦ Θεοῦ,  $^{26}$   $^{y}$  τὸ μυστήριον τὸ  $^{2}$   $^{27}$   $^{in.}$  1.8.  $^{3}$   $^{26}$   $^{3}$  τὸ μυστήριον τὸ  $^{3}$   $^{27}$   $^{3}$   $^{28}$   $^{3}$   $^{28}$   $^{3}$   $^{28}$   $^{3}$   $^{28}$   $^{3}$   $^{28}$   $^{3}$   $^{28}$   $^{3}$

— ἀποκατήλλαξεν] He reconciled. Observe the aorist. He reconciled by the act of His death for you. B has ἀποκατηλλά-γητε, and so Lachm. D*, F, G have ἀποκαταλλαγέντες, and so the old Latin Version of Irenœus, v. 14. Mark too the contrast in δέ.

22. ἐν τῷ σώματι] in the body of His flesh, in His sinless flesh. The Word made flesh brought back our sinful flesh into samity with God. Trenæus (v. 14. 2), who compares the words of St. Paul, Eph. ii. 13—15. See above, Rom. viii. 3.

23. είγε ... τῆ πίστει ... ἐδραῖοι] if at least ye abide in the faith, surely founded and settled; and not shifting off from the large of the County with the hand. A physic adopted by Jana, surely journated and settled; and not sayling of from the hope of the Gospel which ye heard. A phrase adopted by Ignatius (ad Eph. c. 10),  $\pi\rho\delta s \ \tau \dot{\eta}\nu \ \pi\lambda\dot{\alpha}\nu\eta\nu \ \dot{\alpha}\nu\dot{\alpha}\dot{\nu}$   $\dot{\epsilon}\delta\rho\alpha\ddot{\epsilon}\iota$   $\tau\dot{\eta}$   $\pi\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\iota$ , which illustrates St. Paul's meaning here, as warning the Colossians against the errors of the false Teachers, who endeavoured to unsettle them.

ἐν πάση κτίσει] in the presence and hearing of every creavi. 2. Winer, § 48, p. 344. Πάση τῆ κτίσει, in Mark xvi. 15, declares the universality, πάση κτίσει here bespeaks its individual application. Elz. inserts  $\tau \hat{\eta}$  before  $\kappa \tau i \sigma \epsilon \iota$ , but it is not in A, B, C, D\*, F, G. ture that is under heaven. On this use of  $\ell\nu = coram$ , see 1 Cor.

As to this universal diffusion, compare our Lord's command "to preach the Gospel to the whole creation" (Mark xvi. 15), and note on Rom. x. 18, where the Holy Spirit, speaking by the Apostle, as here, from the altitude of His Divine Prescience, regards God's Will as already actually done; "for who hath resisted His will?" God has done His part, that the light of the Gospel should be as universal as the light of the Gospel should be as universal as the light of the Sun. In His desire and design it is Universal. Cp. above, v. 6.

24. παθήμασι] sufferings. Elz. adds μου, which is not in the majority of the best MSS. and Edd.

— ἀνταναπληρῶ τὰ ὑστερήματα κ.τ.λ.] I am filling up by a correspondent and reciprocal supply (ἀντί) what is still lacking of the sufferings of Christ, in my flesh, for His Body, which is the Church. As Tertullian renders the words (c. Marcion. v. 19), "Dicit adimplere se reliqua pressurarum Christi in carne pro corpore Ejus quod est Ecclesiâ."

Christ Himself had said, from His seat in heavenly glory, to Saul persecuting His Church, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me?" and "I am Jesus of Nazareth Whom thou persecutest" (Acts ix. 4, 5).

Well therefore might the Apostle have comfort in reflecting that he himself, who had persecuted Christ, was now filling up what was lacking, of the persecutions and afflictions to be endured by Christ, in His Body, the Church. So Chrys. and Augustine in Ps. lxi., who thus speaks :-

Jesus Christ is One Man with His Body and its Head; the Saviour of the Body, and the Members of the Body, are twain in one flesh; they are one in suffering, and when the iniquity of this world is past, they will be one in rest. Therefore the sufferings of Christ are not limited to Christ; nay, rather the sufferings of Christ are not except in Christ. For if you understand Christ to be both Head and Body, the sufferings of Christ are all in Christ. Christ is not only the Head, He is the Body also. Hence the Apostle says, "Ut suppleam quæ desunt pressurarum Christi in carne meâ." Whosoever therefore thou art, if thou art a Member of Christ, whatsoever thou sufferest, was lacking to the sufferings of Christ. Therefore that suffering of thine is added because it was lacking: thou art filling up the measure, not making it flow over. Thou sufferest so much in thyself as was to be poured into the universal Passion of Christ, Who suffered as our Head, and Who suffers in His Members, that is, in us. The whole measure of suffering will not be filled up till the world filled up the measure of His sufferings as our Head when He said, "It is finished" (John xix. 30). "Tunc implete erant omnes passiones, sed in Capite; restabant adhuc Christi passiones offines passiones, see in capital transfer and the compone."

See also on Ps. lxxxvi., where he says, Christ on the cross VOL. II.-PART III.

Hence the Apostle says, that I may fill up what is lacking of Christ's sufferings in His Body; not in the Head.

And again, in Ps. cxlii., S. Aug. says, "Christ still suffers, not in His own flesh, by which He ascended into heaven and is glorified, but in mine (says the Apostle), which still groans upon earth."

This distinction must be carefully borne in mind, as a safeguard against the erroneous teaching of the Romish Church, which affirms that the sufferings of Christ's saints upon earth are supplementary to the sufferings of Christ upon the cross, and form together with them an exhaustless stock of merit, to be dispensed in Indulgences by the Bishop of Rome. See Bellarmine, Salmeron, Suarez, and the Brief of Pope Clement VI. called Unigenitus, cited here by A Lapide.

But (as Bp. Fell observes here) "these sufferings of the Saints are necessary for the Church, not for the reconciliation of it to God, or satisfying for sin, for that Christ did perfectly : but for the effectual conversion of the world, example to others, perfecting of the Saints, augmentation of the reward;" and, we may add, for a manifestation of God's strength in their weakness, and of the glories of His Grace in what He enables them to do and to suffer for Christ.

On the "full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction" made by Christ once for all upon the Cross for the sins of the whole world, see the scriptural and Catholic authorities in Bp. Beveridge, and Professor Browne on Art. XXXI., and below, notes on Heb. x. 12.

25. κατὰ τὴν οἰκονομίαν τ. Θεοῦ] according to the dispensation of God, the ministry committed to me by God. Theodoret. Cp

1 Cor. ix. 17.

This dispensation of God, i. e. instituted by Him, and "as-In a dispensation of God, i. e. instituted by film, and "assigned by Him to me," is particularized here by what follows,  $\tau h \nu \delta o \theta \epsilon i \sigma \delta \nu \mu o \iota \epsilon i s \delta \mu a s$ , and the sense of the words is, Of which Gospel I was made a minister, according to the dispensation of God, namely, that holy function which was assigned to me as a gift (see iv. 17) for you, i.e. as the scope of my ministry, to fill up the Word of God even to the full measure and extent which He designs for its diffusion.

— eis buûs] to you. Hence, says Theodoret, we may reasonably infer that St. Paul had preached at Colossæ. For if they were part of the sphere and scope of the ministry committed to him by God, the Apostle, when he visited Phrygia (Acts xvi. 6), would not have failed to visit Colossæ and Laodicea, which were chief cities of that country. See above, Introduction to this

Epistle, p. 312.

26. ἀπό τῶν αἰώνων καὶ ἀπό τῶν γενεῶν] The mystery kept secret from the ages, and from the generations of all who lived in them (Eph. iii. 5. 21), but now made manifest to the Saints.

Another argument against the erroneous doctrine of the false Teachers at Colossæ, who ascribed divine powers to Angels. (Col. ii. 18.) The past ages (says the Apostle), even the Angels themselves, knew not the 'Mystery which is now revealed to the Church, and by her means to the Angels themselves, as he teaches in the Epistle to the Ephesians (iii. 10).

That teaching in the Ephesian Epistle, and other points of like nature contained in it, would have made it very serviceable for the Colossians; a consideration which confirms the opinion that the Epistle from Laodicea, mentioned below (iv. 16), was the Ephesian Epistle.

See above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Ephesians, pp. 282, 3.

n Acts 20, 31, 2 Cor. 11, 2, Eph. 5, 27, b ch. 2, 1, Eph. 3, 7, 20.

μυστηρίου τούτου έν τοις έθνεσιν, ος έστι Χριστός έν ύμιν, ή έλπις της δόξης. 28 * δν ήμεις καταγγέλλομεν, νουθετούντες πάντα ἄνθρωπον, καὶ διδάσκοντες πάντα ἄνθρωπον ἐν πάση σοφία, ἵνα παραστήσωμεν πάντα ἄνθρωπον τέλειον έν Χριστώ, <sup>29 b</sup> είς δ καὶ κοπιώ ἀγωνιζόμενος κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν αὐτοῦ τὴν ένεργουμένην έν έμοι έν δυνάμει.

a Phil. I. 30. I Thess. 2. 2. b 2 Cor. 1, 4-6. ch. 3, 14. & 1, 9. 1 Thess. 3, 2. d Eph. 5. 6. ch. 5. 18. e 1 Cor. 5. 3, 4. & 14. 40. 1 Thess. 2. 17. f 1 Thess. 4. 1. Jude 3.

ΙΙ. 1 α Θέλω γὰρ ὑμᾶς εἰδέναι ἡλίκον ἀγῶνα ἔχω περὶ ὑμῶν, καὶ τῶν ἐν Λαοδικεία, καὶ ὅσοι οὐχ ἐώρακαν τὸ πρόσωπόν μου ἐν σαρκὶ, 2 ὁ ἵνα παρακληθῶσιν αί καρδίαι αὐτῶν, συμβιβασθέντες ἐν ἀγάπη, καὶ εἰς πᾶν τὸ πλοῦτος τῆς πληρο-& 5. 14. 2. 16. 17. φορίας της συνέσεως, εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν τοῦ μυστηρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ Χριστοῦ, 3 ° ἐν ῷ οι Cor. 1. 24. εἰσι πάντες οἱ θησανορὶ τῆς σορίας καὶ τῆς ονκίσενος ἀπόκονφοι είσι πάντες οί θησαυροί της σοφίας και της γνώσεως απόκρυφοι.

> 4 d Τοῦτο δὲ λέγω, ἴνα μηδεὶς ὑμᾶς παραλογίζηται ἐν πιθανολογία. 5 e Εἰ γὰρ καὶ τῆ σαρκὶ ἄπειμι, ἀλλὰ τῷ πνεύματι σὺν ὑμῖν εἰμι, χαίρων καὶ βλέπων ὑμῶν την τάξιν, καὶ τὸ στερέωμα τῆς εἰς Χριστὸν πίστεως ὑμῶν. 6 ' 'Ως οὖν παρελά-

27. ος έστι Χριστός εν δμίν] Who is Christ in you. Christ is supreme over all, and Christ is in you. Why then do you adore Angels? And he adds, v. 28, "that we may present every man perfect in Christ." Why then do you seek for perfection from Angels? Chrys., Severian.

28.  $N\rho_i\sigma_i\hat{\varphi}$  Elz. adds ' $I\eta\sigma_i\hat{\varphi}$  against the preponderance of the MSS.

CH. II. 1. περί] A, B, C δπέρ, and so Lachm., Tisch.

At the close of the verse, A, B, C bπερ, and so Lachm., Tisch.

At the close of the verse, A, B, C have εωρακαν, the Alexandrine form, and so Lachm., Tisch., Ellicott; and see Winer, § 13, p. 70, and above, John xvii. 7. Elz. εωράκασι.

— ὑμῶν, καὶ τῶν ἐν Λαοδικεία, κ.τ.λ.] The sense seems to be,—

I am desirous that you should know how great a struggle I have for you and for those in Laodicea; and also for as many others as have not seen my face in the flesh.

This struggle of the Apostle was not only internal, that of anxiety, but it was also a conflict against false Teachers at Rome (cp. Phil. i. 16, 17), who vexed him with their erroneous doctrines, probably not unlike those at Colossæ, and in other Churches of Phrygia, and perhaps abetted the propagation of those notions in that region. Cp. what is said of Epaphras, below, iv. 13.

It is supposed by some that these words imply, that the Apostle had never been at Colossæ.

The ancient Expositors were divided on this point;

Theodoret, in his Preface to this Epistle (vol. iii. pt. i. p. 472), says, "Some argue from these words that the divine Apostle had never been at Colossæ. But they ought to have examined the general tenour of the words. His meaning is, ' I have much anxiety not only for you, but also even for those who have never seen me.' For, he cannot be supposed to say, that he has no solicitude for those who have seen him. Accordingly, the blessed Luke has informed us (Acts xviii. 23) that the Apostle 'went through the region of Galatia and Phrygia,' in which Colossæ is situated."

And in his commentary here, Theodoret observes, that the Apostle says (in v. 2), "that their hearts may be comforted. He does not say 'your hearts;" but the hearts of those who have not seen me."

This question has been considered above in the Introduction to this Epistle, p. 312.

Laodicea, a rich commercial city, famous for its Literature and Arts, on the river Lycus, not far west of Colossæ, and six miles south of Hierapolis. It is mentioned below, iv. 13. 15, 16, and in Rev. i. 11; iii. 14—17. It was the head of a "Conventus," or group of cities, to which Colossæ and more than twenty other towns belonged. Strabo (pp. 576—8). It is fully described in the Switt's Diet of Artsingt Conventus. described in Dr. Smith's Dict. of Ancient Geography, ii. p. 122.

2. συμβιβασθέντες] compacted. So the best MSS and Edd. Elz. συμβιβασθέντων. For examples of this participial anacoluthon, see below, iii. 16. Eph. i. 18; iv. 2. Phil. i. 30. Winer, πλοῦτος] So A, C, Lachm., Tisch. Β πῶν πλοῦτος.

§ 63, p. 505.

 τῆς πληροφορίας τῆς συνέσεως] of the full assurance of understanding. On the word πληροφορία, see on Luke i. 1, and cp. Rom. iv. 21; xiv. 5. 1 Thess. i. 5. This πληροφορία is not an effect of the logical faculty, but it is due to the inner making (μέρων) of the Help Charles.

working (ἐνέργεια) of the Holy Ghost. Chrys.

— τοῦ Θεοῦ Χριστοῦ] of the God Christ. So B and Lachmann, Steiger, Meyer, Ellicott. And this (as Meyer, Tregelles (p. 153), and Ellicott have observed) appears to be the original reading, from which most of the other variations have been derived. Thus A, C have  $\tau o \hat{v} \Theta \epsilon o \hat{v} \Pi \alpha \tau \rho \delta s \tau o \hat{v} \times \lambda \rho \iota \sigma \tau o \hat{v}$ , which perhaps arose from a fear that the words του Θεού Χριστού might be rendered the God of Christ.

D* has τοῦ Θεοῦ δ ἐστιν Χριστός.

D***, E, I, K, and many Cursive MSS., and Elz. have τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Πατρὸς καὶ τοῦ Χριστοῦ. Griesb., Scholz, and Tisch. (in his second edition), and Alf. have only τοῦ Θεοῦ, but this reading has no uncial MS. in its favour.

The reading of the Text is confirmed by S. Hilary (de Trinitate ix. 62, tom. ii. p. 312), who renders St. Paul's words thus: "in agnitionem sacramenti Dei Christi:" and thus expounds them, 'The God Christ is a Mystery,' &c. "Deus Christus Sacramentum est; et omnes sapientize et scientize in Eo thesauri latent." And he calls Christ, in the same place, "Unigenitus Deus," "the Only-begotten God;" and he says; referring to this chapter of St. Paul's Epistle (de Trin. viii. 53, p. 257), "That man is of this world, who knows not Christ as the true God. Christ is the Life, born from the Living God into Living God. The elements of this world were created by God, but are not God. Christ, God of God, is Himself that perfection, which is God. Christ, having God in a Mystery in Himself, is in God."

S. Hilary therefore understood St. Paul to affirm in these words that Christ is God, and he thus rendered them "to the recognition of the Mystery of God Christ," namely, to the recognition of Christ as God.

This Interpretation seems most in harmony with the true sense of the word Mystery, a religious arcanum or secret, and with St. Paul's use of the word, especially as applied to Christ. See above, Eph. iii. 3, 4. 9; v. 32; and below, 1 Tim. iii. 16. "Great is the Mystery of godliness, God was manifest in the

It was not the Mystery of the Messiahship, but it was the Mystery of the Divine Nature of the Man Christ Jesus—it was the Mystery of the God Christ—which St. Paul was most concerned to teach in this Epistle; and which the Colossians most needed to learn, in order to be safe against the seductions of the false Teachers.

This interpretation, which refers the Mystery to Christ as God, is also confirmed by the statements which follow; that in Him All the treasures of wisdom are hid, and that in Him all the fulness of the Godhead dwells (vv. 3. 9).

3. σοφίας και γνώσεως] of wisdom and knowledge. See Aug. in Ps. cxxxv. 8, who considers the difference of these words, and affirms, that σοφία contains within it a divine affection of the Cp. above on Eph. i. 8.

- ἀπόκρυφοι] hidden, stored up, like riches in the unfathomed abyss of some deep Treasury; such as the subterranean Treasuries of Atreus at Mycenæ, or the Minyæ at Orchomenus.

They are ἀπόκρυφοι, concealed even from the Angels them-selves; and, therefore, Christ, Who is the Treasury of all Wisdom and Knowledge, is superior in Wisdom and Knowledge to them.

4. Τοῦτο δὲ λέγω] Now this I say, that no one may deceive you with enticing language. He now passes to the dissuasive and polemical part of the Epistle, directed against the false Gnostic μηδείs] So the best authorities. Elz. μή τις.

 Εἰ γὰρ καὶ τῆ σαρκὶ ἄπειμι] For though verily I am absent from you in body. So he speaks to the Corinthians, to whom he had preached (1 Cor. v. 3). Theodoret.

- το στερέωμα] the firm foundation. 'Firmamentum,' Vulg.

βετε τὸν Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν τὸν Κύριον, ἐν αὐτῷ περιπατεῖτε, <sup>7 g</sup> ἐρριζωμένοι καὶ g Rom. 11 17, 12 έποικοδομούμενοι ἐν αὐτῷ, καὶ βεβαιούμενοι ἐν τῆ πίστει, καθὼς ἐδιδάχθητε,  $\frac{1 \text{ Cor. 1.5.}}{\text{Eph. 2. 20-22.}}$ περισσεύοντες έν αὐτῆ έν εὐχαριστία.

περισσευοντες εν αυτη εν ευχαριο τη.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Βλέπετε μή τις ύμας έσται ὁ συλαγωγων διὰ της φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενης  $^{\text{h}}$  Jer. 29. 8.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Βλέπετε μή τις ύμας έσται ὁ συλαγωγων διὰ της φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενης  $^{\text{h}}$  Jer. 29. 8.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Βλέπετε μή τις ύμας έσται ὁ συλαγωγων διὰ της φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενης  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Jer. 29. 8.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Βλέπετε μή τις ύμας έσται ὁ συλαγωγων διὰ της φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενης  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Jer. 29. 8.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Βλέπετε μή τις ύμας έσται ὁ συλαγωγων διὰ της φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενης  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Jer. 29. 8.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Βλέπετε μή τις ύμας έσται ὁ συλαγωγων διὰ της φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενης  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Jer. 29. 8.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Βλέπετε μή τις ύμας έσται ὁ συλαγωγων διὰ της φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενης  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Jer. 29. 8.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Βλέπετε μή τις ύμας έσται ὁ συλαγωγων διὰ της φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενης  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Jer. 29. 8.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Βλέπετε μή τις ύμας έσται ὁ συλαγωγων διὰ της φιλοσοφίας καὶ κενης  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Jer. 29. 8.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Βλέπετε μή τις ύμας έσται  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Εμφ. 5. 6, 18.  $^{8 \text{ h}}$  Ver. 20. Heb 13. 9.

τὸν Κύριον] the Lcrd—the Lord of all (Acts x. 36), Jehovah.
 See on Luke ii. 9. 11, Χριστὸς Κύριος.

8. Βλέπετε μή τις δμας έσται (so B, C; but Lachm. and 18. Βλεπετε μη τις υμας εσται (80 B, C; out Εμετικι. and Tisch., with A, D, E, have ἔσται ὑμᾶς) ὁ συλαγωγῶν] Look well to it, lest there be any one who shall lead you away captive as his spoil. "Videte, ne futurus sit, ne existat, qui . . " Winer, § 56, p. 446. On the participle with the article prefixed, as here, to predicate something definite of a subject which is not defined, see Gal. i. 7. Winer, § 18, p. 100.

— διὰ τῆς φιλοσοφίας κ.τ.λ.] by means of the Philosophy, which the Apostle proceeds to characterize in the following part of this chapter, and which may be best reviewed collectively here;

This Philosophy is described by him as

(1) κενή ἀπάτη, empty, vain-glorious, deceit; and dogma-

(2) κατά την παράδοσιν των ανθρώπων, according to the traditions of men, in contradistinction to the Revelations of God

cp. Matt. xv. 1-9), and also,

(3) κατὰ τὰ στοιχεῖα τοῦ κόσμου, according to the elements of this world—the creatures, as if they were themselves living Powers, and co-existent with the Creator—the physical elements (cp. Gal. iv. 9), such as the Sun and Moon, regulating times and seasons; and according to superstitious observances of times, Fasts, New Moons, and Seventh-Day Sabbaths (v. 16), ordered thereby (Chrys Cp. Gal. iv. 3. 9), as if they were of the same importance with articles of faith, and equally necessary to salvation; and as if they had not been fulfilled in Christ, and abrogated by Him (n. 17).

(4) And therefore, not according to Christ (v. 8), in Whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and Who has fulfilled and taken away the shadows of the Levitical Law (vv. 16, 17. 20. 21), and has incorporated you in Himself by Baptism (v. 19), and has quickened you together with Himself by His Resurrection, and has forgiven you your sins, and has triumphed over them in His Cross, and has raised you as new creatures, engrafted in Himself, to the hope of a glorious Immortality.

(5) And as professing humility, and yet vainly puffed up with a carnal mind, and intruding into things which it has not seen, and teaching to worship Angels as Mediators (v. 18), and so 'not holding the Head,' which is Christ, the Only Mediator (1 Tim. ii. 5), but disparaging His Divine Nature, and derogating from the dignity of his Mediatorial Office.

(6) And also as professing a rigid asceticism in meats and drinks (v. 16), forbidding to " handle, to taste, and even to touch" (v. 21), those creatures which God has made and blessed, and which Christ has restored to the free use of man (see above on 1 Cor. vi. 12), and doing this according to "the Commandments and doctrines of men," and not according to the Law of God; so usurping a dominion and lordship over you, who are the servants and freemen of Christ; and subjecting your will to its own arbitrary will (v. 18) while it affects humility; and not Christ's Incarnation; and thus tempting to a licentious in-dulgence, and slavish debasement, of the flesh (v. 23), and so doing dishonour to God, Who was "manifested in the flesh."

The characteristics here specified, point in the first place to the spirit of that proud, vain-glorious Pharisaic Judaism, which endeavoured to corrupt the simplicity of the Gospel, and to impose the observances of the Ceremonial Law, and of its own Traditions on the Conscience of Christians, as necessary to salvation, and so to domineer over those whom Christ had purchased with His own blood, and to usurp His authority, and encroach on His Royalties, and to build up what He had broken down, and to deny virtually that He had fulfilled the Levitical and to abridge the use of those creatures which Christ has sanctified and restored to man.

The handwriting of Ordinances was now blotted out, the partition-wall was broken down, and the legal impurity of the creatures was purged away by the blood of Christ. They who sought to bring in Judaism again into the Christian Church evacuated the Cross of Christ. Cp. Bp. Sanderson, iii. 160.

This was now attempted by the false Teachers at Colossæ, under a disguise of humility, and a pretence of mortifying the body; whereas their dogmas proceeded from pride, presumption, and love of power, and tended (by disparaging the Incarnation of Christ) to the debasement and pollution of the flesh.

The worshipping of Angels (as distinct from heathen deities and idols), mentioned in v. 18, was probably grounded by these false Judaizing Teachers on the facts, that God had often revealed His Will by Angels to the Patriarchs, and to Moses, and to the Prophets in the Old Testament; and that the Levitical Law had been given on Mount Sinai by the ministry of Angels (see on Acts vii. 53), as St. Paul himself had taught (Gal. iii. 19; cp. Theodore in Catena, p. 325, and Theodoret); and on the revelations of Angel Rulers of Kingdoms in the Book of Daniel (x. 20, 21); and it was based also on the plea of an affected humility, that man in his fallen state needs the mediatorship of those pure Angelic spirits, in order that by them he may approach See Severian on v. 18, and so Chrys., Œcumen.

On the prevalence of Angel-worship among the Jews, see

This reneration of Angels appears to have been combined with Pharisaism by the heresiarch Cerinthus, who is affirmed to have been the leader of the Judaizing party at the Council of Jerusalem. See above on Acts xv. 1, and Ittig, de Hæresiarchis,

p. 51.

The Cerinthians affirmed that the world was created by Angels, and they enforced Circumcision, and the other cere monies of the Levitical Law. See Iren. i. 25. Augustine, de Hær. 8. Epiphan. de Hær. 28. And Cerinthus professed to have received revelations from Angels. Caius, ap. Euseb. H. E. iii. 22. Cp. Theodoret, Her. Fab. ii. 4; and Itiy, de Hæres. p. 53.
Cerinthus commenced his preaching in Asia (Epiphan.

Hær. 28), and would probably have found a favourable field for it among the inhabitants of Colossa, Laodicea, and other cities of Phrygia, who were famous for their enthusiastic temperament and ascetic practices, which had displayed themselves in heathen times in the mutilations of the flesh and in the phrenetical orgies of the worship of Cybele (cp. above, Gal. v. 12), and which afterwards developed themselves in the Phrygian Church in the visionary revelations and self-mortifying discipline of Montanusa native of that country.

The false teaching of Cerinthus and his sectaries would have been abetted by another heresiarch of the Apostolic age, Simon Magus, and his school, which taught that it was necessary to learn the names of the Invisible Principalities and Powers,  $\lambda\rho\chi\alpha l$ reart the names of the invision reflectantes and rowers, appear and to offer sacrifices to the Father of all by their means (Epiphan. Hær. 21). Tertullian (de Præscript. 33) says, that "the magic of the Simonian doctrine was Angelis serviens," and so Iren. i. 23; ii. 57; vi. 17.

And in these respects they would also receive support from And in these respects they would also receive support from a third heretical school of primitive times, the Ebionites. See Iren. i. 26; iv. 59; v. 2. Tertullian, de Carne Christi, c. 14. Præscr. Hæret. 33. Philost. de Hær. 37. Augustine, de Hær. c. 10. Theodoret, Hæret. Fab. ii. 1. Epiphan. Hæres. xxx. Euseb. iii. 27. Ittig, pp. 61—64. Neander, Church History, § 4.

They agreed also with the Cerinthians in their low notions of Chiral Section 1988.

of Christ as a mere man, and therefore inferior to Angels, and in their enforcement of the Levitical Law. On the heretical tenets of these schools, concerning the nature and person of CHRIST, see below, the preliminary Note to the Second Chapter of the Second Epistle of St. Peter—an Epistle which, as before observed, affords the best commentary on this Epistle to the Colossians.

The worship of Angels, as creators of man, and as entitled to honour from him, and a rigid spirit of asceticism, were fostered by the systems of Menander, Carpocrates, Saturninus, the Sethiani and Caiani, which grew out of those mentioned above. See Epiphan. de Hæret. § 23, and the notes on Iren. i. 24—27, and A Lapide on v. 18. Ittig, pp. 97—119.

On these Heresies generally, besides the work of Ittig, Lips.

1690, see Oehler, Corpus Hæreseologic. Berlin, 1856.

Whether, among the Jews, the Essenes were chargeable with Angel-worship, admits of a doubt; though Josephus tells us that they were careful to preserve their names (B. J. ii. 8.7); and their rigid asceticism would have favoured the errors of the false Teachers here censured by St. Paul. See Euseb. ii. 27. Joseph. Ant. xviii. 2; B. J. ii. 8. Hottinger, Thesaur. Phil. p. 39. Jahn, Archæol. Bibl. § 322.

The Jewish systems of Theology, Cosmogony, and Metaphysics, which were contained in the Cabala,—the origin of T T 2 i John 1. 14. ch. 1. 19.

k John 1, 16, Rom. 8, 38, Eph. 1, 21, οὐ κατὰ Xριστόν.  $^{9}$  ι ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ κατοικεῖ πᾶν τὸ πλήρωμα τῆς θεότητος σωματικῶς.

10 k Καί έστε έν αὐτῷ πεπληρωμένοι, ος έστιν ή κεφαλή πάσης ἀρχῆς καὶ which was traced either from Ezra or Moses, or even Adam himself,—and in which there was much mystical lore concerning the forms and orders of Angels, would have lent their aid for the same end. See Hottinger, Thesaur. Phil. p. 439.

Finally, the admixture of the Platonism of the Jewish Alexandrine school (which has its exponent in the works of Philo) would be also auxiliary in the same design. Philo affirms that Moses introduces the Angels as Ambassadors and Mediators between God and men, and as communicating their needs to Him, and making them acceptable to Him. See Philo, de Gigantibus, p. 222, and de Somniis, p. 455, quoted by Whithy here; and Wetstein, p. 289.

Consequently, we find that the worship of Angels was prevalent in early times in Asia, especially in Phrygia. See Theodoret in v. 18. And the Council of Laodicea, a neighbouring city to Colossæ (he observes), was constrained to pass a decree against the Worship of Angels.

The Canons of this Laodicene Council (circa A.D. 320) deserve notice, as reflecting much light on this chapter. It decreed, that Christians may not "leave the Church of God, and go away and invoke the names of Angels; and let such persons be anathema, for they desert our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God." (Canon 35.) "Ecclesiastical Persons may not use incantations, or make phylacteries." (Canon 36.) "Christians may not receive presents from Jews on their Feast-Days, or feast with them" (Canon 37), or "receive unleavened bread from Jews, or partake in their impieties." (Canon 38, p. 77, ed. Bruns.) "Christians may not Judaize, and rest on their Sabbath, but rest on the Lord's Day; and if they are found to Judaize, let them be anathema." (Canon 29.)

Cp. S. Cyril Hierosol. Catech. iv. pp. 51. 70, with the note of the Benedictine Editor; and Const. Apost. v. c. 20, 21; and Concil. Elib. c. 49.

The prevalence of the worship of Angels among the Jews and Judaizing Christians, to the disparagement of the dignity of Christ, furnished reasons for the arguments in the Epistle to the Hebrews, proving Christ's pre-eminence over Angels, and the consequent superiority of Man's Nature over that of Angels (Heb. i. 4-7. 13; ii. 5-16), and for the declaration that the Angels are ministering spirits, sent to minister to them that are heirs of salvation. (Heb. i. 14.)

It may also have supplied a motive to St. Luke, the companion of St. Paul, for his frequent mention, both in his Gospel and the Acts of the Apostles, of the employment of the ministry of Angels to do homage to Christ, and to succour His faithful servants. Luke i. 11. 26; ii. 9; xii. 8; xv. 10; xvi. 22; xxii. 43; xxiv. 4. 23. Acts i. 10; v. 19; viii. 26; x. 3; xii. 7. 23; xxvii. 23.

Before the Incarnation of Christ, Angels often appeared to the faithful; and during Christ's sojourn upon earth, they ministered to Him, and thus showed their subordination to Him; and in the Apostolic age they often appeared as His agents in succouring His Church. Since that time—especially since they have been worshipped by some—they have rarely been seen; and the eye of the Church is to be fixed on Christ, their Lord and King, and hers.

9. ὅτι ἐν αὐτῷ – σωματικῶς] because in Him dwelleth (κατοικεῖ, abideth perpetually, not παροικεῖ, or sojourneth transitorily: cp. A Lapide) all the fulness of the Godhead (θεότης) bodily. The word θεότης bespeaks the essential Godhead of Christ.

Θεότηs is to be distinguished from  $\theta$ ειότηs. Cp. Rom. i. 20; and Trench, Syn. § ii. Θειότηs is the property of  $\theta$ εότηs:  $\theta$ εότηs is the abode of  $\theta$ ειότηs.

The Godhead dwells in Christ bodily,-namely,

Substantially and truly,—not figuratively, as in a shadow. (See v. 17, where σωμα is contrasted with σκιά.)

This sense of the word  $\sigma\omega\mu\alpha\tau\kappa\omega\hat{s}$  is clearly set forth by S. Hilary commenting on this text, in his work on the Trinity (viii. 53—55, and ix. 1), where he says: "'Corporaliter' in Eo Dei ex Deo naturæ significat veritatem . . Divinitas corporalis in Christo est, non ex parte sed tota, neque portio sed plenitudo; ita corporaliter manens ut unum sint, ut à Deo non differat Deus;' and ix. 1: "Per 'corporaliter habitantem,' verum et perfectum, et paternæ naturæ Deum demonstrari docuimus." See also ibid. ix. 6—11, where he dilates with force and clearness on this text so understood.

(2) Some ancient Expositors apply also the word σωματικῶς (bodily) to illustrate the doctrine of the Incarnation. They teach that the Godhead dwells in Christ bodily, because it dwells not only in the soul of Christ, but in His body; and because the whole of it dwells there, and is not therefore mixed or confused with the body; for, if it were, it would be limited in space, which is content to the Medium of the College.

is contrary to the Nature of the Godhead.

This is thus expressed by the Council of Antioch summoned against Paul of Samosata (A.D. 269. Routh, R. S. ii. p. 473): "We confess that the Son, being God, with the Father, and Lord of all creatures, was sent by the Father from heaven, and became Man in our flesh. Wherefore, the body which He took from the Virgin received all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and is immutably united to the Godhead, και τεθεοποίηται. The same God and Man was foretold by Moses and the Prophets, and is believed in the whole Church under heaven to be both God and Man."

S. Augustine (Epist. 187, p. 1036) combines both the above senses, thus; "In Ipso inhabitat omnis plenitudo Divinitatis corporaliter. He had only dwelt umbraliter, i.e. in types and figures, in the Temple (of the Jews) made with hands, but in Christ the Godhead dwells substantially; or the word 'corporaliter' is used, because God dwells in the body of Christ, which He took of the Virgin, as in a Temple." Cp. John ii. 19. 21, where Christ speaks of the Temple of His Body.

where Christ speaks of the Temple of His Body.

— τὸ πλήρωμα] the fulness. This word pleroma, which afterwards became so celebrated in the Valentinian and other Gnostic systems, by which they adulterated the purity of the Gospel, may perhaps have been already in use among the false Teachers in Phrygia. Cp. Irenæus (iii. 11).

Hence Dr. Waterland says (v. p. 185): "The Gnostics in general, and the Cerinthians in particular, were wont to talk much of the πλήρωμα, or fulness; in which, they meant, a fictitious plenitude of æons was supposed to subsist, and into which spiritual men (such as they esteemed themselves) should hereafter be received. It was the doctrine of the Valentinians (and probably of the elder Gnostics also) that they were themselves of the spiritual seed, had constant grace, and could not fail of being admitted into the plenitude above; while others were in their esteem carnal, had grace but sparingly or occasionally, and that not to bring them so high as the plenitude, but to an intermediate station only. But St. John (i. 16) asserts that all Christians, equally and indifferently, all believers at large, have received of the plenitude or fulness of the divine Logos; and that not sparingly, but in the largest measure, grace upon grace, accumulated grace, or rather grace following in constant succession, grace for grace,—that is, new succours coming on as quick as the former should wear off or cease; or new supplies for the old ones past and gone, without failure or intermission."

Perhaps St. Paul refers to this opinion here. Cp. Blunt on the Early Fathers, p. 634.

10. Kal ἐστε ἐν αὐτῷ πεπληρωμένοι] And ye are made full in Him. Wonderful Mystery! Ye too have been made full of the Divinity,—not however by yourselves, but in Him.; that is, by His Incarnation. For since our Nature is joined to God in Christ, we have been made partakers of the Divine Nature. See Eph. ii. 6. Theophyl. Cp. John i. 14—16, where St. John declares Christ's absolute pleroma, or fulness, in the assertion that He is the Word of God, God of God, the Maker of all, the true Light, and the Only-begotten of the Father, and full of grace and truth (i. 1—14); and then proceeds to say, that of His fulness we have all received.

So here St. Paul, having spoken of the Divine Nature of Christ, passes on to speak of His Incarnation, and its consequent benefits to us. See above on i. 18, where the same transition is made by means of καl. As S. Hilary well observes (de Trinix. 8): The Apostle, knowing well the Mystery of the Incarnation, and that the Philosophy of this world cannot comprehend it, gives this caution, Take heed that no one spoil you, &c. After that, the Apostle, having declared the fulness of the Godhead dwelling in Christ bodily, immediately proceeds to proclaim the Mystery of our assumption into Him. Ye have been filled full into Him. "Ut enim in Eo Divinitatis est plenitudo, it a et nos in Eo sumus repleti; id est, per assumptionem carnis Ejus, in Quo Divinitatis Plenitudo inhabitat." Here is the source of our Hope. "Hujus Spei nostræ non exigua in Eo Potestas est."

The Apostle then goes on to show, how this plenitude in Christ is virtually and really applied to us; and by what means we receive the benefits flowing from His Incarnation and His Divinity, and are made partakers of His fulness,—namely, by the Holy Sacrament of Baptism.

See the words of Hooker (V. lii.—lxviii.), where that admirable writer, following the method of St. John and St. Paul.

έξουσίας· 11 i έν ῷ καὶ περιετμήθητε περιτομή ἀχειροποιήτω, ἐν τὴ ἀπεκδύσει 1 Deut, 10, 16. τοῦ σώματος της σαρκὸς, ἐν τῆ περιτομῆ τοῦ Χριστοῦ,  $^{12}$  " συνταφέντες αὐτῷ  $^{6.6}$ ,  $^{16.4}$ ,  $^{4.4}$ ,  $^{6.80}$ ,  $^{2.29}$ , έν τῷ βαπτίσματι, ἐν ῷ καὶ συνηγέρθητε διὰ τῆς πίστεως τῆς ἐνεργείας τοῦ Ερλ. 4. 22. Θεοῦ τοῦ ἐγείραντος αὐτὸν ἐκ νεκρῶν.  $^{13}$  καὶ ὑμᾶς νεκροὺς ὄντας ἐν τοῖς παρα- $^{\text{ch. 3. 8, 9}}_{\text{Phil. 3. 3.}}$ πτώμασι καὶ τη ἀκροβυστία της σαρκὸς ὑμῶν συνεζωοποίησεν ὑμᾶς σὺν αὐτῷ,  $\frac{m}{Eph.}$  1. 19. χαρισάμενος ἡμῖν πάντα τὰ παραπτώματα,  $\frac{14}{2}$   $^{\circ}$  έξαλείψας τὸ καθ ἡμῶν χειρό- $\frac{82}{Gal.}$  3. 7.  $\frac{15}{Gal.}$  3. 27. γραφον τοῖς δόγμασιν, δ ἦν ὑπεναντίον ἡμῖν, καὶ αὐτὸ ἦρκεν ἐκ τοῦ μέσου,  $\stackrel{\text{o. B.p.}}{}_{0}$  Σρh. 2. 1, 11. Heb. 7. 18. & 8. 13. & 9. 9, 10.

first considers Christ's two Natures,-His Godhead and Manhood,-united in His one Person; and then proceeds to show, how the blessings of the Incarnation are communicated to us; and is thus led to declare the doctrine of the Holy Sacraments, instituted by Christ for the purpose of applying personally to each of us the graces and glories of the divine Nature, joined to our Nature in Christ, in Whom we are incorporated by Baptism, and Who is our spiritual food and sustenance in the Lord's Supper.

— ἡ κεφαλὴ πάσης ἀρχῆς] the Head of all principality; and therefore higher than Angels. See above, i. 16

11, 12. εν & και περιετμήθητε κ.τ.λ.] in whom ye were also circumcised with the true Circumcision.

Your false Teachers may desire to impose Circumcision upon you; but the fact is, ye have been circumcised. cumcised in your Baptism with the true Circumcision, the Circumcision of Christ, the Circumcision of the Spirit, in which ye put off the body of the flesh, and of which the Levitical Circumcision was only a type. See Rom. ii. 29. Phil. iii. 3. And see even the legal and prophetical declarations of the spiritual significance of Circumcision in Deut. x. 16. Jer. iv. 4; and cp. Tertullian, c. Marcion. v. 13.

In this Evangelical Circumcision it was not a part of a bodily member that was cut off, but all the old man was cast off, and ye put on the new man; or, as is expressed in the Baptismal Office, grounded on this passage of St. Paul, the "Old Man was buried, and the New Man raised up." See Rom. vi. 4; and cp. Tertullian (de Res. Carnis, c. 23); and S. Hilary (de Trin. ix. 7), where, commenting on this text, he says, "that the Apostle,—having declared the Mystery of Christ's Nature, and of our Assumption into Him, in Whom the fulness of the Godhead dwells, and we have been filled in Him, by means of His Birth as Man, —proceeds to reveal the rest of the plan of our salvation, saying, 'In Whom ye were circumcised,' &c. We therefore were circumcised, not with the carnal Circumcision, but with the Circumcision of Christ; that is, by being born into the new man. For, when we were buried with Him in Baptism, we died to the old man, because the Regeneration of Baptism is the power of the Resurrection. This is the Circumcision of Christ, -not the cutting off of the flesh of our foreskin, but the dying wholly with Him, that so we may live wholly to Him. For we rise again in Him, by faith in that God Who raised Him from the dead."

Thus S. Hilary, who assigns the true spiritual meaning to the words ἐν τῷ ἀπεκδύσει τοῦ σώματος τῆς σαρκὸς, which seems to have escaped many later Expositors. See the next note.

As Christ dying on the cross put off by death the body of His flesh (cp. St. Peter's expression, "I must soon put off this my tabernacle, i. e. of my body, by death," 2 Pet. i. 14), in order that He might rise again to glory, so we in our Baptism, in which we are conformed to Christ's Death and Burial, put off the body of our flesh, the old man, the body of death (as the Apostle calls it, Rom. vii. 24), in order to put on the new man, the spiritual man, and to rise to grace here, and with a body of glory hereafter, in and through Christ. See Phil. iii. 21, and the note on v. 13, and also on ἀπεκδυσάμενος in v. 15.

Elz. has τῶν ἄμαρτιῶν after σώματος, and τῶν before νεκρῶν in v. 12, but against the preponderance of the best authorities. The sentence gains much in clearness and force from the omission of τῶν ἀμαρτιῶν, for the words doubtless apply to the body of Christ by comparison, as well as to ours.—B, D*, F, G have βαπτισμφ: see on Heb. vi. 2.

13-15. και ύμας κ.τ.λ.] and you, when ye were dead in your trespasses, and in the uncircumcision of your flesh, He quickened, yes, even you (observe ὑμῶs emphatically repeated) together with Himself (observe σὺν repeated after συνεζωοποίησεν, and marking more strongly the completeness of their union with Christ in His resurrection), having forgiven us  $(\hat{\eta}_{\mu}\hat{u}_{\nu})$ , so the best MSS.—Elz.  $\hat{\nu}_{\mu}\hat{u}_{\nu})$  all our trespasses. The Philosophy of this world comprehends not this mystery. God raised Christ from the dead—Christ, in Whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily; and He raised us with Him, forgiving us our sins; cancelling the bond of the Law, which by its previous enactments was adverse to us; and Christ took it away from between us and God, and nailed it to the Cross, divesting Himself of His own Body, τŷ the σροsing powers, and triumphing over them. S. Hilary.

Who can comprehend and express this Mystery? The power of God raises Christ, and this same power raises us in Christ, it forgives our sins, and cancels the bond, and nails it to the Cross. Christ lays aside the flesh in Death. He exposes the Powers of Darkness to scorn, and triumphs over them. Here is the Power of God raising Christ from the Dead. Here is the Power of Christ working in Himself, whatever God works. Christ died as Man, He wrought our Salvation as God. S. Hilary (de Trin. ix. 10), who thus speaks,-

The Apostle does not acknowledge the fear of pain in Christ. No. When he was about to declare Christ's Passion, he preached in it the Mystery of His Godhead. When he is describing the work of our salvation by Him, he so represents the death of Christ as to display Him laying aside His flesh in death, and boldly exposing the adverse powers to ignominy, and trampling over them. Therefore, the shame and suffering of the Cross are not to be perverted into occasions of contumely against the weakness of a frail nature; but in Christ's Death we must contemplate the action of Christ's Own Free Will, and the Mystery of His Power, His Courage, and His Triumph. A Triumph indeed it was for Him,-to be sought by His foes, and when He offered Himself to their hands, to strike them prostrate to the ground (John xviii. 6). A Triumph indeed it was, to stand at the Judgment-seat to be condemned to death, and thence to rise to the Right Hand of Power. A Triumph it was, to be pierced with nails, and to pray for his murderers; to drink vinegar, and to finish the Mystery; Paradise (Luke xxiii. 43); to be raised aloft on the Tree, and to make the Earth tremble; to hang on the Cross, and to make the Sun and Day to flee away; to depart from the body, and to recall the souls of the dead to their bodies; to be buried as dead, and to rise again as God; to suffer all weakness for us, as man, and in all these weaknesses to triumph over all as God. S. Hilary (de Trin. x. 48).

The comments of S. Hilary here offer the best solution of the difficulty supposed by some to exist, as to the subject of these propositions. Do they refer to the Father, or to the Son? refer to God in Christ, and to Christ as God. See above on

i. 19, at end.

14. ξεαλείψας το καθ ή. χειρόγραφον τ. δόγμασιν] having blotted out (literally, having expunged the letters of a wax-tablet) the handwriting that was against us in its δόγματα, that is, its positive decrees and ordinances.

The  $\chi \epsilon_i \rho \delta \gamma \rho \alpha \phi \sigma_i$  or handwriting, was the Levitical Law, written by God's hands: which may also be regarded as a Bond or Syngrapha (from  $\sigma \nu \gamma \gamma \rho \dot{\alpha} \phi \omega$ ), on which the contracting parties write together ( $\sigma \nu \gamma \gamma \rho \dot{\alpha} \phi \omega \sigma_i$ ) their own names, and to which they affix their seals. This the Israelites did by pledging themselves to obey all the precepts of the Law (Exod. xxiv. 3; xix. 8. Deut. v. 27).

But what does St. Paul mean by τοις δόγμασιν?

We must be careful not so to interpret the word, as to open a door to Antinomian libertinism. Christ did not come to take away the Moral Law. On the contrary, He said, "If thou wilt enter into Life, Keep the commandments" (Matt. xix. 17). And St. Paul says that "the commandment is holy, and just, and good" (Rom. vii. 12). The New Testament refers us to the Commandments for a summary of our duty, and enforces their per-petual obligation, and declares to us that Christ died for us, in order that we might fulfil the Law.

See above on Gal. iii. 13. Rom. viii. 4.

It cannot, therefore, be truly said (as is said by some) that Christ "nailed all the Mosaic Law, with all its decrees, to the Cross; and it died with Him."

The word  $\delta\delta\gamma\mu\alpha\tau a$  properly signifies such decrees and ordinances as have no force before their promulgation. See on

Eph. ii. 15.

This is evident from the etymology of the word. Δόγμα is δ δέδοκται, and it is equivalent to the Latin placitum, id quod p Gen. 3. 15. Ps. 68. 18. Isa. 53. 12.

προσηλώσας αὐτὸ τῷ σταυρῷ· 15 p ἀπεκδυσάμενος τὰς ἀρχὰς καὶ τὰς έξουσίας, έδειγμάτισεν έν παρρησία, θριαμβεύσας αὐτοὺς έν αὐτῷ.

Luke 11, 22, John 12, 31, & 16, 11, Eph. 4, 8, & 6, 12, Heb. 2, 14, placet, and is decreed and published as such, and derives its force, not from its intrinsic morality, but from the authority by which it is decreed and promulgated; and only continues to be in vigour as long as it is enforced by the authority which exacts it, and which may repeal it.

Hence the word δόγματα is used in the New Testament for the placita, or decreta, of the Imperial Power of Rome. (Luke ii. 1. Acts xvii. 7.) The δόγματα, therefore, of the Levitical Law, are those parts of it which are not grounded upon the basis of the Natural Law, and Immutable Morality (such as the commandments of the Decalogue), which have never been repealed, nor, with reverence be it said, ever can be, inasmuch as they are based on the Unchangeable Attributes of God. But the δόγματα are merely θετικά, or positive, accidental, circumstantial, local, and tem-

Such was

(1) the curse denounced on every act of disobedience to the . See Gal. iii.  $10\!-\!13$ .

Such also was

(2) Circumcision, and all the ritual ordinances and decrees of the Ceremonial Law.

These ordinances were against us, because we were thus subject to a curse (see on Gal. iii. 10-13), and the ordinances of the Ceremonial Law were "a yoke too heavy to bear." (Acts xv. 10.)

Christ dying for us on the cross, has cancelled all these  $\delta\delta\gamma\mu\alpha\tau a$ , and halh taken (observe the perfect  $\tilde{\eta}\rho\kappa\epsilon\nu$ ) them out of the way (ἐκ μέσου), out of the midst, so that they no longer stand between us and God.

This is St. Paul's meaning here. Accordingly he says (v. 16), Let not therefore any one judge you in respect of meat and drink, or in respect of a holy day, &c., or sabbath, or new moon, which are a shadow of the future things, but the substance is Christ. These evidently are the δόγματα of which he here speaks. Compare the sense of δογματίζεσθε as explained in ii. 20.

On this subject the reader may see the note above on Rom.

προσηλώσας α. τῷ σταυρῷ] having nailed it to the Cross. He has taken it away, having nailed it to His Cross. The allusion seems to be to the cancelling of bonds when they are no longer valid, by transfixing them with a nail; so A Lapide, and

Bp. Pearson, who says,-

It is necessary to express our faith in Christ crucified (Eph. ii. 15), that we may be assured that He hath abolished in flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments; which if He had not done the strength and power of the whole Law had still remained: for all the people had said Amen (Deut. xxvii. 26) to the curse upon every one that kept not the whole Law; and entered into a curse and into an oath, to walk in God's law, which was given by Moses the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the Lord their God, and his judgments and his statutes (Neh. x. 29); which was in the nature of a bill, bond, or obligation, perpetually standing in force against them, ready to bring a forfeiture or penalty upon them, in case of non-performance of the conditions. But the strongest obligations may be cancelled; and one ancient custom of cancelling bonds was by striking a nail through the writing: and thus God, by our crucified Saviour, blotted out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross. (Col. ii. 14.)

He nailed the bond of our debt to the Tree, and as by the Tree in Paradise we became debtors to God in the First Adam, so by the Tree on Calvary we received remission of our debt in the Second Adam. Cp. Irenœus, v. 17. 3.

15. ἀπεκδυσάμενος τὰς ἀρχάς] A profound mystery is revealed in these words. Observe the middle voice, having put off from himself Principalities and Powers. This text will be best explained by reference to the Apostle's language above in v. 11, άπεκδύσει του σώματος της σαρκός, which, as has been already observed, refers primarily to Christ's putting off of His own body by death;

Hence some Ancient Expositors interpret ἀπεκδυσόμενος here to mean, "having divested Himself of His flesh by death," He made a show of hostile Powers. So Hilary (de Trin. ix. 9), "exutus carnem," and see his observations there, ix. 11. So Augustine, c. Faustum xvi. 29, "Exuens Se carnem, principatus et potestates exemplavit," for (adds Aug.) by death the Malignant Powers of the Devil domineered over us, and Christ by dying (i. e. by putting off Ilis mortal body) triumphed over them.

This ancient Exposition affords a clue to the true meaning of the words.

Other Interpreters, especially modern ones, interpret anexδυσάμενος as having little more than an active sense, i. e. having "spoiled Principalities and Powers," having stripped them.

This (as has been observed by Professor Ellicott, in his valuable edition of this Epistle) is manifestly incorrect.

In order to explain the word ἀπεκδυσάμενος, it must be

(1) Its plain grammatical sense is "having divested him-self of."

(2) Christ's flesh was that by which He was mortal, and by which He was capable of suffering the shame and anguish which Satan and "all the Principalities and Powers" of Darkness and the World inflicted upon Him on the Cross. The body of His Flesh was that by which they had power over him.

(3) Those Principalities and Powers plotted and perpetrated

His death, in order to reduce Him, as they imagined, to the lowest abyss of sorrow, suffering, and shame; and, as they vainly sup-posed, to conquer and crush Him for ever.

(4) By dying, He put off from Himself, by His own free Will, the Body of His Flesh. He divested Himself of it.

(5) And by dying He thus divested Himself of that very thing by which they had power over Him.

(6) He thus disentangled Himself from the grasp of those adverse Powers. He divested Himself of them. As (with reverence be it said) Joseph, the type of Christ, extricated himself from the grasp of Potiphar's wife, when he left his own garment in her hand, and fled and got him out (Gen. xxxix. 12); and as Joseph divested himself of her, by disentangling himself of the garment by which she held him, so Christ cast off the garment of His Body (see a similar metaphor in 2 Cor. v. 2. 4); and in casting off His mortal Body, He cast off His weakness. He cast off that by which He was weak, and by which His enemies were strong, for they derived their strength from it. He cast off from Himself His bodily vesture, and with it He also cast off from Himself the Principalities and Powers of Darkness. He unlocked their grasp. He shook them off from Himself with the same ease that Samson shook off his enemies (Judg. xvi. 9-15). He flung them off with the same ease as He cast off His Body, or as He threw aside His raiment, or as He cast off His grave-cloths.

He cast off His mortal body in order to raise the same body immortal, and in order to raise us to Immortality. " Christ. being raised from the dead, dieth no more. Death hath no more dominion over Him" (Rom. vi. 9). Christ is risen from the dead, and hath raised us with Himself (1 Cor. xv. 20). And thus by Death, even by that Death which Satan had plotted and perpetrated, He overcame Death, and "destroyed him that had the power of it, the Devil" (Heb. ii. 14), and reconciled us to God by the body of His flesh through death. See above, i. 22, and Rom.

viii. 3.

This interpretation is confirmed by the expositions of Chrys., Theodoret, and Theophylact.

- ἐδειγμάτισεν] He displayed them, as Captives led in a Triumph before conquerors at Rome; where St. Paul is writing.

- ἐν παβρησία] openly, publicly: παβρησία (from παs and ρησιs, speech) properly means frankness, openness of speech, without reserve or disguise; hence in a secondary sense it sigmines whatever is done openly, and is distinguished from εν κρυπτφ, secretly. See John vii. 4; xi. 54. The Enemies of Christ plotted against Him secretly (see Matt. xxvi. 4. Mark xiv. 1, 2. Luke xxii. 3-6), but He triumphed over them openly -as conquerors did at Rome, riding in a car to the Capitol.

- θριαμβεύσας αὐτοὺς ἐν αὐτῷ] having led them in triumph
 it. On the word θριαμβεύσας, see above on 2 Cor. ii. 14.

Christ is here represented as a glorious Conqueror riding in victory on the triumphal Chariot of his Cross (Theophyl.), and triumphing over His enemies by it; by that very Cross which they had erected for Him, and to which they had nailed Him. And so Satan was like Haman, nailed to his own gallows, which became like a Triumphal Car to Him for whom he erected it.

It is, therefore, well said by a learned English Theologian,-Is it not comfortable and pleasant to behold Christ there on the Cross, standing erect, not only as a resolute sufferer, but as a glorious conqueror: where having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a solemn show, triumphing over them? ii. 15.) No conqueror loftily seated in his triumphal chariot did ever yield a spectacle so gallant or magnificent; no tree was ever adorned with trophies so pompous or precious as the Cross. To the external view and carnal sense of men, our Lord was then exposed to scorn and shame; but to spiritual and true disνουμηνίας, ή σαββάτων, 17 τ ἄ ἐστι σκιὰ τῶν μελλόντων, τὸ δὲ σῶμα Χριστοῦ.

 $^{16}$   $^{q}$   $\mathring{M}$  $\mathring{\eta}$  οὖν τις ὑμᾶς κρινέτω ἐν βρώσει  $\mathring{\eta}$  ἐν πόσει,  $\mathring{\eta}$  ἐν μέρει ἑορτ $\mathring{\eta}$ ς,  $\mathring{\eta}$   $^{q}$  Lev.  $^{11}$  .  $^{2}$   $^{2}$  υμηνίας,  $\mathring{\eta}$  σαββάτων,  $^{17}$   $\mathring{\alpha}$  ἐστι σκιὰ τῶν μελλόντων, τὸ δὲ σῶμα Χριστοῦ.  $^{Rom. 14. \, 3, \, 10, \, 18}$   $^{18}$   $^{8}$   $^{9}$   $^{18}$   $^{9}$   $^{9}$   $^{9}$   $^{18}$   $^{9}$ άγγέλων, ἃ μὴ ξώρακεν ἐμβατεύων, εἰκῆ φυσιούμενος ὑπὸ τοῦ νοὸς τῆς σαρκὸς Ezek. 13 3. αὐτοῦ,  $^{19}$   $^{t}$  καὶ οὐ κρατῶν τὴν κεφαλὴν, έξ οῦ πᾶν τὸ σῶμα διὰ τῶν ἀφῶν καὶ  $^{\text{Eph. 5.6.}}_{2\text{ 1hess. 2. 3.}}$  συνδέσμων ἐπιχορηγούμενον καὶ συμβιβαζόμενον αὔξει τὴν αὔξησιν τοῦ Θεοῦ.  $^{\text{1 John 4. 1.}}_{20}$   $^{\text{1 El. 6.6.}}_{2\text{ 1hess. 2. 3.}}$   $^{\text{20}}$   $^{\text{20}}$   $^{\text{El. άπεθάνετε}}_{2\text{ 20}}$   $^{\text{20}}$   $^{$

ἐν κόσμῳ δογματίζεσθε,  $^{21}$  "  $^{x}$  M η άψη, μηδὲ γεύση, μηδὲ θίγης ;"  $^{22}$   $^{y}$  ά έστι  $^{1}$  Tim. 2. 4–6. & 7. 4, 6. Gal. 2. 19. & 4. 9. ver. 8.  $^{x}$  1 Tim. 4. 3.  $^{y}$  Isa. 29. 13. Matt. 15. 9. Tit. 1. 14.

cerning, all His and our enemies did there hang up as objects of contempt, quite overthrown and undone. There the Devil, δ lσχυρδs, that strong and sturdy one (Matt. xii. 29. Luke xi. 22. Heb. ii. 14), did hang, bound and fettered, disarmed and spoiled, utterly baffled and confounded. There death itself did hang gasping, with its sting plucked out, and all its terrors quelled (1 Cor. xv. 54. 2 Tim. i. 10); His death having prevented ours, and purchased immortality for us. There the world, with its vain pomps, its counterfeit beauties, its fondly admired excellencies, its bewitching pleasures, did hang up, all disparaged and defaced as it appeared to St. Paul; God forbid, saith he, that I should glory, save in the Cross of Christ, by which the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world (Gal. vi. 14). Dr. Barrow (Serm. xxvi. vol. iv. p. 595). See also Bp. Pearson (Art. ii. p. 290), who says,-

Contrary to the custom of triumphing Conquerors (of this world), Christ did not sell, but buy us; because while He saved us, He died for us; and that death was the price by which He purchased us; even so this dying Victor gave us life; upon the Cross, as His triumphant chariot, He shed that precious blood which bought us, and thereby became our Lord by right of redemption, both as to conquest and to purchase.

Cp. above on 2 Cor. ii. 14.

16. Mh ov] Let not, therefore, any man judge you, in eating or in drinking. See on v. 8.

The  $\delta\delta\nu$  explains the  $\delta\delta\gamma\mu\alpha\tau\alpha$  in v. 14. The words  $\beta\rho\hat{\omega}\sigma$ is and  $\pi\delta\sigma$ is do not signify meat and drink, but they designate the acts of eating and drinking of meats and drinks prohibited by the Levitical Law. See Rom. xiv. 2.

On this, and the following verses to the end of the chapter, see the Epistle of S. Jerome (ad Algasiam, qu. 10, vol. iv. p. 204). - ἐν μέρει] in respect of, -in the particular matter of. See

2 Cor. iii. 10.

 - ἐορτῆs] of a festival. See above, v. 8, and Gal. iv. 10.
 - σαββάτων] The Seventh-Day Sabbath, the Jewish Sabbath, which, as far as it was the seventh-day Rest, had been fulfilled by Christ resting in the grave. See note above on Luke xxiii. 56.

The position of the Day is changed from the seventh to the first day of the week (see on Acts xx. 7), but the proportion of one-seventh of our time to be dedicated to God, which dates from the Creation, and is grounded upon it, and concerns all creatures (Exod. xx. 8-11), remains unchanged; and has received new strength and sanction by its consecration to Christ under the Gospel in the Lord's Day. See above on Matt. xxvii. 62; xxviii. 1, and the authorities quoted in No. xliv. of the Editor's Occasional Sermons, on "The Christian Sunday," and below on Rev. i. 10.

17. ä ἐστι σκιά] which things are a shadow of the future good things, which have been now revealed in the Gospel. See the explanation of this in Heb. ix. 11; x. 1.

— το δὲ σῶμα Χριστοῦ] but the substance of them (i. e. of the future blessings) is Christ's. The σῶμα is substantial reality, as opposed to shadow; as σωματικῶs in v. 9.

The shadows of the future things (Heb. x. 1) belonged to Moses and the Law, and to the Jews, but the substance of them helongs to Christ and to the Gospel; and as ye, who have been baptized into Christ, have passed from the shadow to the substance, from the letter to the spirit, therefore if ye return to them, ye renounce the substance for the shadow, and ye forfeit the spirit for the letter. Cp. Theophylact and Augustine (Epist. 149), and Jerome (ad Algasiam, qu. 10).

18. Μηδείς ὑμᾶς καταβραβευέτω] Let no one cheat you of your prize. St. Paul writes at Rome, near the Circus. Cp. Phil. iii. 12.

The word καταβραβευθήναι is used, when one competitor deserves a prize and another receives it. (Chrys., Theodoret.) The preposition κατά indicates that the prize is unfairly adjudged against the deserving candidate.

On the word βραβείον, e. g. a palm-branch, or crown, or other prize to a runner in a course, or a charioteer, &c., see 1 Cor. ix. 24. Phil. iii. 14. Hence our word bravo.

Your false Teachers promise you special privileges; but the fact is, they would defraud you of the everlasting crown, which you will receive as your reward from the Eternal Judge (βραβευς) at the Great Day, if you persevere in the Christian race on which you have entered. un is wrongly omitted before εωρακεν in Cod. Sin.

- θέλων] By the exercise of his mere will (θέλημα); domineering over you by his will, following his own spirit (Ezek. xiii. 3), dictating to you, with arbitrary wilfulness, terms of salvation contrary to the Divine Will (θέλημα) as revealed in the Divine

This spirit of wilful usurpation, in matters of religious doctrine and discipline (which says, "sic volo, sic juleo, stet pro ratione voluntas"), is referred to in another word, ἐθελο-θρησκεία, Will-worship, v. 23, and see above on G2L iv. 9, θέλετε δου-

18, 19. ἐν ταπεινοφροσύνη κ.τ.λ.] In affected and mock lowliness of mind and self-abasement, cp. v. 23 (Theophylact), as is shown by what follows, "vainly puffed up by his fleshly mind," which words (as Chrys. observes) prove that it was a vain-glorious humility; Pride in its worst form; Pride dressed up in the disguise of Lowliness. And this is the besetting sin of the human heart, which is more puffed up by false humility than by open pride. Augustine (Ep. 149).

Those false Teachers alleged, that man is too unholy to approach God without the mediation of some spiritual beings; and then, in a proud, presumptuous spirit, they intruded into hidden secrets, and made Mediators for themselves in the persons of Angels. (See above on v. 8.) And, not holding the Head, they rejected the "only Mediator between God and Man" (1 Tim. ii. 5), Whom God Himself has provided, the Man Christ Jesus. This they did in the name of Humility!

For an exposition of this passage and the context, see Augustine (Epist. 149, tom. ii p. 764).

- θρησκεία των ἀγγέλων] the worship of Angels. See above

- & μη εωρακεν-σαρκός αὐτοῦ] intruding into those things which he hath not seen, and yet pretending to be familiar with them—vainly puffed up by the mind—not of his spirit, or higher principle, but—of his flesh; or animal man.

19. ἐξ οῦ πῶν τὸ σῶμα] out of Whom all the body, by means of its joints and bands, being supplied with nourishment, and being compacted together, increaseth with the increase of God. See on Eph. iv. 16, and on the force of  $\ell \kappa$  here see Eph. v. 30.

20. Ei à  $\pi\epsilon\theta$ d $\nu\epsilon\tau\epsilon$ ] If ye died with Christ in your Baptism. See v. 12. Observe the aorist.

- σὺν Χριστῷ ἀπὸ τῶν στοιχείων τοῦ κόσμου] If ye died with Christ from the elements of the world.

This is best explained by Gal. iv. 8—10, where see note.

The Colossians, like the Galatians, had been heathens, they had been subject to the Elements of this World divinized,—to the Powers of Nature, the Sun, the Moon, the Earth, worshipped as gods. In their conversion to Christianity they died from these; they renounced them, and acknowledged Christ as Lord

But now, by submitting to false Teachers, who arbitrarily required submission to observances (see v. 16) grounded on the elements of Nature, the course of the Sun, and the phases of the Moon, they returned to their ancient bondage. Theodoret on

-  $\tau$ l-δυγματίζεσθε] why are ye subject to such δόγματα as follow, Handle not, taste not, nor even touch? Chrys. See v. 14.

St. Paul recites, per irrisionem, the words of the false Teachers against whom he was warning them, " Handle not, &c. : whereas to the pure all things are pure, and every creature of God is good" (Tit. i. 15. 1 Tim. iv. 4). Augustine (Ep. 149).

21. Mη ἄψη] Do not handle, do not hang on to, do not grasp, embrace. As to the meaning of ἄπτομαι, see on John xx. 17.

- μηδέ θίγης] nor even touch, however lightly. So Augusz ver. 18. 1 Tim. 4. 8. & 5. 23.

a Ps. 110, 1. Rom. 6, 5, Eph. 1, 20, & 2, 6, ch. 2, 12. ch, 2, 12, b Rom, 6, 2, &c. Gal, 2, 20, c 1 Cor, 15, 43, Phil, 3, 21, 1 John 3, 2, πάντα εἰς φθορὰν τῆ ἀποχρήσει, κατὰ τὰ ἐντάλματα καὶ διδασκαλίας τῶν ἀνθρώπων, 23 ε άτινά έστι λόγον μεν έχοντα σοφίας, εν εθελοθρησκεία καὶ ταπεινοφροσύνη, καὶ ἀφειδία σώματος οὐκ ἐν τιμῆ τινι, πρὸς πλησμονὴν τῆς σαρκός.

ΙΙΙ. 1 α Εἰ οὖν συνηγέρθητε τῷ Χριστῷ, τὰ ἄνω ζητεῖτε, οὖ ὁ Χριστὸς ἔστιν έν δεξια του Θεου καθήμενος. 2 τὰ ἄνω φρονείτε, μὴ τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς. 3 6 ἀπεθάνετε γαρ, καὶ ἡ ζωὴ ὑμῶν κέκρυπται σὺν τῷ Χριστῷ ἐν τῷ Θεῷ· 4 ° ὅταν ὁ Χριστὸς φανερωθή ή ζωὴ ἡμῶν, τότε καὶ ὑμεῖς σὺν αὐτῷ φανερωθήσεσθε ἐν tine, "Ne altaminaveris." Cp. Trench, Synonyms of N. T.

22. α έστι πάντα εἰς φθορὰν τῆ à.] which things all tend to perish in the using up.

These meats, from which you are required by your false Teachers to abstain with such scrupulous superstition, cannot enter into the inner man; they only go into the mouth, and into the belly, and "are cast out into the draught" (Matt. xv. 17. Mark vii. 19), and perish. (Jerome, Theophyl.) Why then should such stress be laid upon them? "Meat commendeth us not to God. For neither if we eat, are we the better; neither if we eat not, are we the worse" (1 Cor. viii. 8). These things are therefore the very reverse of spiritual things. If we abstain from spiritual things, our souls are famished and perish. Spiritual things, the more they are used, the more they tend to Salvation (εis σωτηρίαν). But the more they, these carnal things, are used, the more corruption ensues from them.

- κατά τὰ ἐντάλματα] according to the commandments and leading of man-as distinguished from, and opposed to, the Will and Word of God. See above on Matt. xv. 9.

23. ὅτινά ἐστι κ.τ.λ. σαρκός] which things have a show of wisdom in will-worship, and in mortification of the body not held in any honour, and tending to the pampering of the flesh. B omits καl after ταπεινοφροσύνη.

In order to understand these words, it must be remembered that the false Teachers

(1) pretended to humility, but they were puffed up with pride in their fleshly mind (see v. 18);
(2) That they made a great show of mortification of the flesh, but, in fact, they pampered the fleshly mind by wilfulness, and self-righteousness, and other evil passions of the carnal heart;

This was specially the case with the Ebionites. See the authorities in Neander, Church Hist. sect. iv.

(3) That instead of holding "the body in any honour," èv τιμή τινι, and in due reverence (as God had commanded to do), they degraded the body by not holding the Head, in Whom "dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily," and by denying the Godhead of Christ, the Word Incarnate, "God manifest in the flesh," Who has taken Human Nature both in Soul and Body, and has joined it for ever to the nature of God, and has thus consecrated the human body; and by means of the death, which He had suffered in the "body of His flesh," has overcome death (i. 22) and vanquished Satan, and has raised us from death, and has delivered us from the bondage of the Law, and from its curse, and has given us the adoption of Sons, and has made our bodies to be "members of Himself" (1 Cor. vi. 15), and to be "Temples of God" (1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19), and has carried His Body into Heaven, and has seated it in Glory at the Right Hand of God; and Who has also sanctified even the inferior creatures, which God has given for the food of the body, and has restored them to us, to be used by us freely and thankfully, as pure to those who are purified by Him. See on 1 Cor. vi. 12. 1 Tim. iv. 3, 4. Tit. i. 15.

(4) That these false Teachers, by their irreverence toward Christ, the Incarnate God, had not maintained the Body in honour (ἐν τιμῆ), but had robbed it of all its dignity and glorious prerogatives, and had taken away the best safeguards of its purity and holiness, and had opened a wide door to the pampering of the flesh (πρός πλησμονήν της σαρκός) by surfeiting and un-cleanness.

For ample illustration of the meaning of the word πλησμονή, fulness, satisfy, surfeiting, the reader may consult the numerous passages cited by Wetstein, p. 290, in almost every one of which the word πλησμονή is used in a sense of voluptuous and vicious excess. The words πρός πλησμονήν της σαρκός do not here signify "for the satisfying of the flesh in its necessary cravings, but "for the satisfying of the flesh in its sensual concupiscence."

(5) That, therefore, while they affected Humility, they were eaten up with Pride; and that their pretences to bodily Mortification, by means of which they professed to clevate themselves and their hearers to superior degrees of purity and sanctity, tended rather to carnal licentiousness, and to voluptuous sensuality, and dissolute indulgence in fleshly lusts.

(6) That the meaning above assigned to the words our ev τιμή τινι, "not in any honour" (that is, not held in any honour, whereas the body ought to be held in great honour, as being a "member of Christ" and a "Temple of God"), is confirmed by St. Paul's words in another Epistle, "This is the will of God, even your sanctification, that every one of you should know how to possess his vessel (i. e. his body) in sanctification and in honour" (1 Thess. iv. 4, where see note), and where he uses the words &v τιμή, in honour, as here.

(7) Deep wisdom there was, and prophetic foresight, in these words of St. Paul to the Colossians, as was afterwards proved by the history of that remarkable sect which flourished in their neighbourhood, the sect of Montanus, which, commencing with the principles here censured by the Apostle, of arbitrary will-worship, and specious professions of lowly self-abasement. and rigid asceticism, and corporal mortification, and "neglect of the body," developed itself in fanatical excesses, and Antinomian

licentiousness

St. Paul's vigilant eye descried the seeds of this evil, and he endeavoured to uproot them. The history of this Phrygian sect affords a practical comment on St. Paul's Epistle to the Church of Colossæ.

See the primitive collections on this subject in Routh's Re-liquiæ Sacræ, ii. 55-62, ed. 1814.

- ἐθελοθρησκεία] will-worship. For an excellent exemplification of the results of εθελοθρησκεία in the History of the Christian Church, the reader may see the Sermon of Bp. Andrewes "On the Worshipping of Imaginations," vol. v. pp. 55-70.

CH. III. 1. Εἰ οὖν συνηγέρθητε] If therefore ye rose together with Christ in your baptism, seek ye those things that are above, where Christ your Head is, sitting ( ĕστι, not ἐστl, is emphatic) on the Right Hand of God.

If we live well, we have died, and are risen again. He who lives ill, lives not; let him die now, in order that he may escape eternal death. "Mutetur, ne damnetur." And what is it to live well? To mind those things which are above; to seek for happiness above, and not on Earth. Augustine (Serm. 231).

- τὰ ἄνω (ητεῖτε] seek ye those things that are above. Hence Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch in the second century (ad Autolyc. ii. § 17), speaking of the Creation, says, "Four-footed beasts are like images of men who mind earthly things (Phil. iii. 19); but they who live righteous lives soar aloft, like birds, on the wings of the soul, and mind those things that are above."

3.  $\partial \pi \theta \partial \omega = \gamma \Delta \rho$ ] for, in your baptism, ye died (observe the aorist, cp. 1 Cor. vi. 11) to this world, in order that ye might attain to that world where is no death. No one dies in that world, to which none will ever come who has not died to this world. He must die by that death which God's elect die, and by which their heart passes to heaven, while they still abide in this mortal flesh on earth. This is the death of which the Apostle here speaks.

This Death is Love, which is strong as Death (Cant. viii. 6). This Love is Death to the World, and Life with Christ in God. By it we ascend from Earth to Heaven. Augustine (in Joann.

Tract. 65).

 ή ζωη δμῶν κέκρυπται] your life hath been hid, and is hid, with Christ in God. Ye live a hidden life; a life concealed from the observation of this world (Luke xvii. 20), which perhaps despises you as dead. Ye have been engrafted in Him. Be ye good trees. Now, in the world's eye, is your winter; to men ye appear like dry sticks. Your life is hid with Christ. Ye are dead to the ary sticks. Your life is hid with Christ. Ye are dead to the world, dead in appearance, but not dead in reality; dead, as to show of luxuriant leaves, but not dead in your spiritual root. Your root is Christ. His Coming will be your Summer. Then ye will put forth a glorious foliage. "Ye will appear with Him in glory." But the leafy fig-trees of this world will be withered by His Coming. See Augustine (Serm. 36).

4. δταν ὁ Χριστὸς—ἡ [ωὴ ἡμῶν] when Christ shall have been

5 d Νεκρώσατε οὖν τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς, πορνείαν, ἀκαθαρσίαν, d Rom. 8. 13. πάθος, ἐπιθυμίαν κακὴν, καὶ τὴν πλεονεξίαν, ήτις ἐστὶν εἰδωλολατρεία, 6 ° δι' â αἰσχρολογίαν ἐκ τοῦ στόματος ὑμῶν.

 $^{8}$   $^{E}$  Νυνὶ δὲ ἀπόθεσθε καὶ ὑμεῖς τὰ πάντα, ὀργὴν, θυμὸν, κακίαν, βλασφημίαν,  $^{f}$   $^{Rom. 6.19}$   $^{O}$   $^{O}$ κατ' εἰκόνα τοῦ κτίσαντος αὐτὸν,  $^{11}$  κ΄ ὅπου οὐκ ἔνι Ελλην καὶ Ἰουδαῖος, περι-  $^{11}$  Εν. 19. 11.  $^{11}$  Σεςh. 8. 16. τομὴ καὶ ἀκροβυστία, βάρβαρος, Σκύθης, δοῦλος, ἐλεύθερος, ἀλλὰ τὰ πάντα καὶ  $^{11}$  Εςh. 4. 22, 25, 29.  $^{12}$  Ερh. 4. 22, 25, 29.  $^{12}$  Ερh. 4. 26.  $^{13}$  έν πασι Χριστός.

πασι Χριστός. Eph. 2. 10. & 4. 24.  $12^{-1}$  Ένδύσασθε οὖν, ὡς ἐκλεκτοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄγιοι καὶ ἠγαπημένοι, σπλάγχνα  $\frac{1}{1}$  κ Rom. 10. 12.  $\frac{12}{1}$  ενδύσασθε οὖν, ὡς ἐκλεκτοὶ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄγιοι καὶ ἠγαπημένοι,  $\frac{13}{1}$  m ἀνονό  $\frac{8}{1}$  Rom. 10. 12.  $\frac{12}{1}$  εντικοῦς γραστάπητας  $\frac{13}{1}$  m ἀνονό  $\frac{8}{12}$  13. οἰκτιρμοῦ, χρηστότητα, ταπεινοφροσύνην, πραΰτητα, μακροθυμίαν,  $^{13}$  m ἀνεχό- $^{\& 12. \ 13.}_{Gal. \ 3. \ 28.}$ οἰκτιρμοῦ, χρηστοτητα, ταπεινοφρού ονην, πρώτητα, της πρός τινα έχη μομφὴν, καθὼς  $\frac{\& 5.6. & 6.10}{\text{Leph. 4. }32.}$  καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς έχαρίσατο ὑμῖν, οὕτω καὶ ὑμεῖς  $\frac{4}{1}$  π ἐπὶ πᾶσι δὲ τούτοις τὴν  $\frac{\text{Gal. 5. }22.}{\text{Mark }11. }$   $\frac{\text{Gal. 5. }22.}{\text{Mark }11. }$ αγάπην, ο έστι σύνδεσμος της τελειότητος.

 $^{15}$  ° Kaì  $\mathring{\eta}$  εἰρήνη τοῦ Χριστοῦ βραβενέτω ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν, εἰς  $\mathring{\eta}$ ν καὶ  $^{n}$  Eph. 4. 32.

έκλήθητε έν ένὶ σώματι καὶ εὐχάριστοι γίνεσθε.

και η ειρηνη 100 Χρισ100 ρραβευείω εν 1αις καροιαίς υμων, εις ην και  $\xi$  5, 2. h. 2. 2. h. 3. 23. h. 2. 3. h. 3. 23. h. 2.  $\chi$  7 phil 4. 7 ph. 6. ph. 5. p p 1 Cor. 14. 26. Eph. 5. 20.

i. 27, "On the being of God proved from the frame of Human

11. τὰ πάντα καὶ ἐν πᾶσι Χριστός] but all in all (is) Christ; and so God is all in all. This is the fruit of the Incarnation. He who had existed in the form of God, and took on Him the form of a servant, is to be confessed as ever existing in the glory of God the Father. He is in Him, in Whom He was before.

And now, God has become all in all by the Mystery of the Incarnation, in order to make us conformable to the likeness of God. This is our gain, our advancement. The Only Begotten Son of God, although He was born as man, is no other than God, all in all. And by Him our manhood is advanced. We are advanced to a glory conformed to Him, and are renewed into the knowledge of God. This is what the Apostle says: "Exuti veterem hominem in actibus suis, et induli novum qui innovatur in agnitionem Dei, secundum imaginem Ejus qui creavit Eum. Consummatur itaque homo imago Dei.'' Man recovers the divine image which he had lost. And being created anew, he obtains the perfection of his creation by agnition of his God, and by being thus His image, and advancing to Eternity by piety, and by Eternity abiding for ever, the Image of His Creator. S. Hilary (de Trin. xi. 49).

The Apostle, in saying that "the new man is being renovated to perfect knowledge," shows that man, who did not know God, is renovated by that knowledge which has God as its object. And by saying "according to the image of Him that created him, he declares the restoration of man, made in the beginning in the image of God. Mark the emphatic word Christ is kept for the end.

12. σπλάγχνα οἰκτιρμοῦ] bowels of mercy. Cp. Luke i. 78. 2 Cor. vi. 12. Phil. i. 8; ii. 1. Elz. has οἰκτιρμῶν.
13. δ Χριστὸς ἐχαρίσατο] Christ freely forgave you. Forgiveness of sins, attributed to God in Christ (Eph. iv. 32), is here attributed to Christ, and thus the Godhead of Christ is declared. See above on i. 19, 20.

14.  $\sigma'\nu\delta\epsilon\sigma\mu\sigma$ ] bond of perfectness; the bond which perfects every thing; which fulfils the law (Rom. xiii. 10), and girdles the Christian life with a zone of love. Cp. 2 Pet. i. 7. The  $\delta\epsilon\sigma\mu\delta\nu$   $\tau\hat{\eta}s$   $\delta\gamma\delta\pi\eta s$   $\tau\hat{\sigma}$ 0  $\Theta\epsilon\hat{\sigma}$ 0  $\tau$ 1s  $\delta\nu\sigma$ 2  $\tau$ 2 Pet. i. 7. The cestus of Venus was famous; now the girdle of Love. For δ, the reading of A, B, C, F, G, Elz. has ητις.

15. Χριστοῦ] So A, B, C*, D*, F, G.—Elz. Θεοῦ. In this 15. Χριστοῦ] So A, B, Č*, D*, F, G.—Elz. Θεοῦ. In this Epistle St. Paul dwells specially on the dignity of Christ. See i. 1, and in this chapter vv. 1, 2, 3. 11. 13. 16, 17.

- βραβενέτω] Let Peace preside and decide the contest. When there is a competition in your heart between two rival passions, Good and Evil, Love and Hatred, let Peace sit there as Arbitress, and put an end to the dispute, and award the palm to Hardress, and put an test the interpretation of the authorities in Wetstein; cp. Phil. iv. 7, where Peace is again personified. On the literal meaning of  $\beta\rho\alpha\beta\epsilon\delta\omega$ ,  $\beta\rho\alpha\beta\epsilon\delta\omega$ , see on ii. 18.

manifested Who is our Life -. See John xi. 25, and cp. Ignat. ad Ephes. 3, Ἰησοῦς Χριστός, τὸ ἀδιάκριτον ἡμῶν (ῆν.

— ὅταν — φανερωθη] when He, Who is now invisible in Heaven, shall have been made manifest to every eye by the glory of His Coming to Judgment (2 Thess. ii. 8. Rev. i. 7), then ye also (who now live a hidden life, see v. 3) will be manifested with Him in glory.

 Νεκρώσατε τὰ μέλη ὑμῶν τὰ ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς] Mortify your members that are upon the earth. For, your Head is in heaven: there He lives, and thither, by His Ascension, He has raised you, who are His members. (Eph. ii. 6.) He is your Life; your Life is hidden invisibly in Him, and you must therefore mortify your members upon the earth, so that they may not weigh down your heavenly members and destroy your heavenly life. You must be dead to earth, in order to live in heaven. Cp. Phil. iii. 20; and Irenœus (v. 12), who says: "Harum depositionem Apostolus præconatur, et eos, qui talia operantur, velut carnem et sanguinem tantum existentes non posse regnum cœlorum possidere." While we mortify our members upon the earth, we quicken our members in heaven. The death of the one is the life of the other. Augustine (in Epist. Joh. Tract. 9).

Unless we die to the world, we cannot live to God. Therefore St. Paul says of himself, "The world is crucified to me, and I to the world;" and then he adds, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." (Gal. ii. 20.) S. Gregor. on 1 Kings ii.

- πορνείαν] fornication, uncleanness, &c. These are put in apposition with \(\mu^{\lambda}\)\(\text{n}\), members, as being their works, unless they are mortified. See \(Winer\), \(\xi 59.8\), p. 469. Or, as the word may be interpreted, "membra dicebantur ipsorum \(ea\) vitia, quee in membris habitabant ipsorum, modo locutionis (quâ exprimitur) per id quod continet, id quod continetur, sicut dicitur, 'Totum forum loquitur' cum homines loquuntur qui sunt in foro." Augustine (de Continentia, § 30, vi. p. 527, where he gives an exposition of this passage).

8. ἐκ τοῦ στόματος] out of your mouth,—that mouth by which you receive the communion of the Lord's Body. Theoph.

9. ἀπεκδυσάμενοι] seeing that ye have put off the old man—(Authorized Version). See on Eph. iv. 22.

10. ἀνακαινούμενον] who is being renewed daily. Observe the present tense. The new man was born in you at your regenera-tion in Baptism, but needs the daily renewal of the Holy Ghost. See on Tit. iii. 5.

On the difference between véos and καινδs see Eph. iv. 23, and 1 John ii. 8.

On the word εἰκὼν see 1 Cor. xi. 7, where man is called εἰκὼν καὶ δόξα Θεοῦ. It is used by the LXX in Gen. i. 26, 27; v. 1. 3; ix. 6, where God is said to have created man in His own likeness,-that is, His intellectual, rational, moral, and spiritual See Barrow's Serm. vii. vol. iv. pp. 163. 171, on Gen. likeness.

VOL. II .- PART III.

q Rom. 1. 8, 1 Cor. 10, 31, Eph. 5, 20, 1 Thess. 5, 18, Heb. 13, 15, Ifeb. 13. 15. 1 Pet. 2. 5.—9. & 4. 11. r Gen. 3. 16. 1 Cor. 11. 3. & 14. 34. Eph. 5. 22—24, 33. 1 Tim. 2. 12. Tir. 2. 4. 5. Tit. 2 4, 5.
1 Pet. 3, 1, 6.
5 Eph. 5, 25.
1 Pet. 3, 7.
1 Eph. 6, 1. 1 Eph. 6, 1, u Eph. 6, 4, x E<sub>1</sub>h. 6, 5-7, 1 Tim. 6, 1, 2, Tit. 2, 9, 10, 1 Pet. 2, 18, 19, y Rom. 14, 6, 8, Eph. 5, 22, & 6, 6, 7, 1 Pet. 2. 13, 15.

a Eph. G. 9.

z Acts 10, 34. Rom. 2, 11, 1 Pet. 1, 17.

h Luke 18. 1.
Luke 18. 20.
Liph. 6. 18, 20.
Liph. 6. 19.
Liph. 6. 1 b Luke 18. 1. d Eph, 5, 15, 16, 1 Thess, 4, 12, 2 e Eccles, 10, 12, Ecclus, 21, 16, Mark 9, 50, ch 3, 16, Lph, 4, 29, f Acts 20, 4, Eph, 6, 21, 22, 2 Tim, 4, 12, g Philem, 10, κοντες και νουθετούντες έαυτούς ψαλμοίς, υμνοις, ώδαις πνευματικαίς έν τη χάριτι ἄδοντες ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις ὑμῶν τῷ Θεῷ. <sup>17 9</sup> Καὶ πᾶν ὄ τι αν ποιῆτε ἐν λόγω ή ἐν ἔργω, πάντα ἐν ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, εὐχαριστοῦντες τῷ Θεῷ Πατρί δι' αὐτοῦ.

18 τ Αί γυναίκες, ὑποτάσσεσθε τοῖς ἀνδράσιν, ὡς ἀνῆκεν ἐν Κυρίφ.

19 ο Οἱ ἄνδρες, ἀγαπᾶτε τὰς γυναῖκας, καὶ μὴ πικραίνεσθε πρὸς αὐτάς. 20 t Τὰ τέκνα, ὑπακούετε τοῖς γονεῦσι κατὰ πάντα· τοῦτο γάρ ἐστιν εὐάρεστον έν Κυρίω.

21 " Οἱ πατέρες, μὴ ἐρεθίζετε τὰ τέκνα ὑμῶν, ἴνα μὴ ἀθυμῶσιν.

22 × Οί δοῦλοι, ὑπακούετε κατὰ πάντα τοῖς κατὰ σάρκα κυρίοις, μὴ ἐν ὀφθαλμοδουλεία ως ανθρωπάρεσκοι, αλλ' εν απλότητι καρδίας, φοβούμενοι τον Κύριον. 23 5 ο ο εάν ποιήτε, εκ ψυχής εργάζεσθε ως τῷ Κυρίω καὶ οὐκ ἀνθρώποις, 24 εἰδότες ὅτι ἀπὸ Κυρίου ἀπολήψεσθε τὴν ἀνταπόδοσιν τῆς κληρονομίας. Τῶ Κυρίω Χριστώ δουλεύετε. 25 2 Ο γαρ αδικών κομιείται δ ήδίκησε, καὶ οὐκ ἔστι προσωποληψία.

ΙV. 1 a Οί κύριοι, τὸ δίκαιον καὶ τὴν ἰσότητα τοῖς δούλοις παρέχεσθε, εἰδότες ότι καὶ ὑμεῖς ἔχετε Κύριον ἐν οὐρανῷ.

 $^{2}$   $^{\mathrm{b}}$   $T\hat{\eta}$  προσευχ $\hat{\eta}$  προσκαρτερείτε, γρηγοροῦντες ἐν αὐτ $\hat{\eta}$  ἐν εὐχαριστία, 3 · προσευχόμενοι αμα καὶ περὶ ἡμῶν, ἴνα ὁ Θεὸς ἀνοίξη ἡμῖν θύραν τοῦ λόγου, λαλήσαι το μυστήριον του Χριστου, δι' δ καὶ δέδεμαι, 4 ίνα φανερώσω αὐτὸ, ώς δεί με λαλήσαι.

5 α Έν σοφία περιπατείτε πρὸς τοὺς έξω τὸν καιρὸν έξαγοραζόμενοι.

6 ° Ο λόγος ύμῶν πάντοτε ἐν χάριτι ἄλατι ἠρτυμένος, εἰδέναι πῶς δεῖ ὑμᾶς ένὶ έκάστω ἀποκρίνεσθαι.

7 τὰ κατ' ἐμὲ πάντα γνωρίσει ὑμιν Τύχικος ὁ ἀγαπητὸς ἀδελφὸς, καὶ πιστὸς διάκονος καὶ σύνδουλος ἐν Κυρίω δον ἔπεμψα πρὸς ὑμᾶς εἰς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ἴνα γνῷ τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν, καὶ παρακαλέση τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν, 9 g σὺν 'Ονησίμω τῷ πιστώ καὶ ἀγαπητώ ἀδελφώ, ὄς ἐστιν ἐξ ὑμων πάντα ὑμιν γνωριοῦσι τὰ ωδε.

16. ψαλμοῖς κ.τ.λ.] with psalms and hymns. Observe, St. Paul here says, that the proper aim of psalms and hymns is to teach sound doctrine and to glorify God. A truth much neglected now. See the preface to The Holy Year. Cp. Eph. v. 19.
17. ἐν ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ—δι' αὐτοῦ] Do all in the Name

11. εν ονοματι Ίησου Χριστου—δι αὐτου] Do all in the Name of Christ, and offer your praises through Him, and not through Angels or any other Mediators. Theophyl.

For an exposition of this text see Dr. Barrow's Sermon xxxiii. "Of doing all things in the Name of Christ," vol. ii. p. 247. Elz. has Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ. The reading in the text is that of Λ, C, D*, F, G, Lachmann, Ellicott.—Elz. has καl before Israel with it is not in Λ = C.

Πατρὶ, but it is not in A, B, C.

— εὐχαριστοῦντες—18. ὑποτάσσεσθε] giving thanks to God—submit yourselves. Observe that here, as in the Epistle to the Ephesians, St. Paul makes the moral music of the Christian life to depend on two things - a spirit of thankfulness to God, and of submission to man. Thus the human heart is to be kept in tune, and to be prepared for heaven. See above, Eph. v. 20, 21.

— Al yuvaînes] Ye wives. With this and the eight following verses compare the parallels in Eph. v. 21–25; vi. 1–9. After τοις Elz. has ίδίοις, and Θεόν for Κύριον in v. 22.

20. ὑπακούετε—κατὰ πάντα] See also v. 22, where κατὰ πάντα is also used. An example of a precept proceeding on the charitable supposition that the other party will do its duty; for if Parents and Masters order any thing contrary to God's Law, then Children and Servants "must obey God rather than men." (Acts v. 29.) The words κατά πάντα are not in Eph. vi. 1. 5.

On St. Paul's different modes of address to different Churches, as here exemplified, see on Eph. vi. 1, 2.

22.] By these precepts on Slaves St. Paul prepares for his Epistle to Philemon on his slave Onesimus, — a brother, iv. 9.

23. <sup>a</sup>O εdν] So the majority of the best MSS.—Elz. και πᾶν

3 TE 2 dv. 25. κομιείται] shall receive back virtually and in effect, though not in the same form. See Eph. vi. 8. I Cor. xv. 37, and Winer, § 66, p. 547, who compares John xii. 5, where the ointment is spoken of as to be given to the poor, whereas it was its price, after it had been sold, that was to be so bestowed.

CH. IV. 1. Οἱ κύριοι] Ye masters. See Eph. vi. 9.
3. θύραν τ. λόγου] a door for the Word of God preached by me.

5. προς τους έξω] toward those who are not within the Church

1 Thess. iv. 12. 1 Cor. v. 12, 13.

- τὸν καιρὸν ἐξαγοραζόμενοι] redeeming for yourselves the opportunity out of (ἐξ) the hands of the Evil One. The Days are Evil, in this world, sold as it were under bondage, and it is Ghostly Enemy. Seize, as it were unter both age, and to is for you to rescue the Opportunity out of the grasp of your Ghostly Enemy. Seize, as it were, the Opportunity by the forelock, and make it your own. See above on Eph. v. 16, where the reason of the precept is expressed, which the Apostle does not therefore repeat here.

6. ἄλατι ἢρτυμένος] seasoned with salt. See on Mark ix. 50.

— εἰδέναι] that you may know. On the infinitive cp. Acts xv. 10. Heb. v. 5. Winer, § 43, p. 283. Ellicott.

7. Τύχικος] Τγικίντικ. See Eph. vi. 21, 22.

8. Γνα γνῷ τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν] So Elz., Tisch., De Wette, Alf., Ellicott, with C, D***, E, I, K, and a majority of Cursive MSS. and ancient Versions. A, B, D*, F, G, Griesb., Lachm., Meyer, Scholz have Γνα γνῶτε τὰ περὶ ἡμῶν. But, the very purpose (αὐτὸ τοῦτο) for which St. Paul sent Tychicus to the Colossians, was not (it would seem) in order that they might know how St. Paul was faring, but that he might know whether they were standing stedfast in the faith against the attempts of the false

The communication of tidings concerning the Apostle was no doubt a purpose, and would be a consequence of his mission, but not the final cause.

 συν 'Ονησίμφ—ἀδελφῶ] with Onesimus, the faithful and beloved brother. See Philem. 10-15.
 Onesimus had been the slave of Philemon. To how high a dignity has he here been raised, to become the brother of St. Paul! Theophyl.

 $^{10~h}$  'Ασπάζεται ὑμᾶς 'Αρίσταρχος ὁ συναιχμάλωτός μου, καὶ Μάρκος ὁ  $^{h}_{8}$  Λείς  $^{15.37.}_{8.19.29.8.20.4}$  ἀνεψιὸς Βαρνάβα, περὶ οῧ ἐλάβετε ἐντολὰς, ἐὰν ἔλθη πρὸς ὑμᾶς, δέξασθε αὐτόν  $^{8.27.2.}_{2.1 in...4}$   $^{11}_{11}$  καὶ 'Ιησοῦς- ὁ λεγόμενος 'Ιοῦστος, οἱ ὄντες ἐκ περιτομῆς' οῧτοι μόνοι συνεργοὶ  $^{1}_{1}$ Philem.  $^{21.}_{10.5.15.}$ είς την βασιλείαν τοῦ Θεοῦ, οἴτινες ἐγενήθησάν μοι παρηγορία.

12 ΄ Ασπάζεται ὑμᾶς Ἐπαφρᾶς ὁ ἐξ ὑμῶν, δοῦλος Χριστοῦ, πάντοτε ἀγωνι- i Rom (15.30. ζόμενος ύπερ ύμων εν ταις προσευχαις, ίνα στήτε τέλειοι καὶ πεπληροφορημένοι Philem. 23. έν παντί θελήματι τοῦ Θεοῦ. 13 Μαρτυρῶ γὰρ αὐτῷ, ὅτι ἔχει πόνον πολὺν ὑπὲρ ύμων καὶ των ἐν Λαοδικεία καὶ των ἐν Ἱεραπόλει.

14 1 Ασπάζεται ύμας Λουκας ὁ ἰατρὸς ὁ ἀγαπητὸς καὶ Δημας.

k 2 Tim 4.10, 11 Philem. 24.

St. Paul had just been giving Christian counsel to Masters and Slaves, members of the Church at Colossæ, and he now makes a practical application of his own precepts, by sending to them Onesimus, a slave, who, when a heathen, had defrauded his master Philemon at Colossæ, and had run away from him to Rome; but now, having been converted to Christianity by St. Paul, is restored to Philemon, and to them, as one of themselves, a "faithful and beloved" brother in Christ (see below, the Introduction to the Epistle to Philemon), and a confidential messenger of the Apostle; and is commended to them as such, in this Epistle, which was to be read publicly in the Churches of Phrygia, Asia, and the world, and which has been openly read and received every where as divinely inspired Scripture from that day to this.

How much native truth, courage, and beauty is there in Christianity, which enabled the Apostle to speak thus of a runaway slave, to the inhabitants of that city from which he had fled! What other religion in the world could have done this? below, pp. 333-6, Introduction to the Epistle to Philemon.

10. ἀππάζεται ὑμᾶs] The salutations in this Epistle are the same as in that to Philem. 23, 24. Each of these two Epistles, however, furnishes some new incidents. Here (v. 12 and i. 7) Epaphras is called a servant of Christ, and a fellow-servant of St. Paul, there (v. 23) he is called συναιχμάλωτος, a fellow-

Here also Aristarchus is called a fellow-captive, but there he is classed with the fellow-labourers of the Apostle (v. 24). Both Epaphras and Aristarchus were sharers in St. Paul's labours and in his bonds.

It may reasonably be inferred from the non-occurrence of the name of Philemon, the Colossian, in the salutations of this Epistle, that the Epistle to him was sent at the same time as this Epistle; otherwise he would have been greeted here.

— 'Αρίσταρχος ὁ συναιχμάλωτός μου] Aristarchus my fellow-prisoner. Aristarchus of Thessalonica in Macedonia, who was with St. Paul at Ephesus (Actš xix. 29), and accompanied him and St. Luke to Jerusalem with the alms (Acts xx. 4) and in the voyage to Rome (xxvii. 2), where he now was a sharer in his captivity. Cp. Euseb. ii. 22.

 — Μάρκος δ ἀνεψιὸς Βαρνάβα] Mark, the cousin of Barnabas.
 On the meaning of ἀνεψιὸς, see Euseb. iii. 11, who calls Symeon τον ανεψιον of the Saviour, because Cleophas, his father, was the brother of Joseph; and cp. Wetstein here, p. 295, and Lobeck, Phryn. p. 306, who says, "Hesychio ἀνεψιοί sunt fratrum filii, έξάδελφοι in versione Alexandrina, et Scriptoribus Christianis."

It is probable, that the Colossians, and other Christians of Phrygia (a country which St. Paul visited in company with Timothy, Acts xvi. 1-6), very soon after the separation which took place between the Apostle and Barnabas, on account of the temporary defection of his relative, St. Mark (Acts xv. 37), had heard of St. Mark's defection, and of the separation between Paul and Barnabas. Cp. Theodoret here.

There would, therefore, be something very graceful and affecting to their minds in this reference, on St. Paul's part, to St. Barnabas and to St. Mark. It would seem to say, Barnabas was tender-hearted to St. Mark his kinsman: he did for him a kinsman's part; and Mark, though he faltered for a time, has profited by his kinsman's kindness, and by my severity; and he has now returned to me, and to the service which he quitted for a time, never to leave it more. You may have heard of the separation which took place between Barnabas and me; you may have heard of St. Mark's dereliction of me. You will therefore rejoice to hear that now he is with me; I send you his greetings. I have given you commandments concerning him; and if he comes to you, I desire you to receive him. Cp. note below on 2 Tim. iv. 11, and above on Acts xv. 39.

This friendly mention of Barnabas here, as well as of St. Mark, the son of St. Peter in the faith (1 Pet. v. 13), was not without its use in reminding the Judaizing Colossians that St.

Paul, who had resisted Peter and Barnabas at Antioch, when they sided with the Judaizers there (Gal. ii. 11), was now on terms of stated with them both. See on v. 11.

St. Paul here associates St. Mark, the spiritual son of St. Peter, with himself. And in like manner, St. Peter, on his side, associates Silas, St. Paul's fellow-labourer, with himself in his Epistle (1 Pet. v. 12). And thus the two Apostles, who formerly had differed on one occasion, at Antioch, show their Christian love to one another. Cp. on I Pet. v. 12, 13.

— περί οδ ε. ε.] touching whom ye received directions from me. 11. οἱ ὅντες ἐκ περιτομῆς] who are of the Circumcision. See Acts v. 17 as to the participle.

Do not therefore imagine, that I am singular in condemning the imposition of Circumcision, and other Levitical ordinances, as necessary to Salvation. (See above, ii. 11, 12.) They of the Circumcision themselves, whom I have mentioned, concur in what I have said; and Timothy, whom I myself circumcised in charity to the Jews (see on Acts xvi. 3), joins with me in writing this Epistle (i. 1). Cp. on Gal. i. 2.

- οὖτοι μόνοι] these only are my fellow-workers. it does not seem probable that St. Peter was now at Rome.

12.  $^{\circ}\text{E}\pi\alpha\phi\rho\alpha s$ ] Epaphras. See on v. 10. Epaphras was now detained in captivity with St. Paul. (Philem. 23.) This may account for the fact that he, who was a Colossian (v. 12), and had been instrumental in evangelizing Colossæ (i. 7), was not sent with the Epistle.

— πεπληροφορημένοι] fully assured. See on Luke i. 1; and above, ii. 2. Elz. has πεπληρωμένοι. The reading in the text is in A, B, C, D*, F, G.

- ἐν παντὶ θελήματι τοῦ Θεοῦ] in every thing that God willeth.
 Cp. Eph. iii. 15, πῶσα πατριά. 1 Pet. i. 15, ἐν πάση ἀναστροφῆ.
 Winer, § 18, p. 101.
 13. πόνον] labour. So the major part of the best authorities.

Elz. ζήλον.
The word πόνον, painfulness, labour, intimates that a Pastor, though absent from his flock in body, may, and must, labour for them in spirit, especially by prayer (v. 12), and, if need be, by suffering for them in bonds; as Epaphras did for his charge at Colossæ, and as Paul did for the whole Church of Christ. (Eph.

iii. 1; iv. 1.) -This sentence, therefore, is like a reply to those at Colossæ who might have misinterpreted the absence of Epaphras from his flock, into a sign of indifference to their welfare. He also informs the Colossians, in his Epistle to Philemon, that the absence of Epaphras from Colossæ was not voluntary, but that he was detained there by force, as a confessor for the faith which he had taught. (Philem. 23.)

Compare the similar instances of Apostolic thoughtfulness in

2 Tim. iv. 11. 20.

14. Λουκαs δ λατρός δ αγαπητός] Luke the Physician, the beloved; more expressive than " Luke the beloved Physician."

It would seem that St. Luke was known to the Colossians as a Physician. The neighbouring city of Laodicea was a great medical school. (Strabo, xii. p. 580.) It may have had professional attractions for him.

This special mention also of a Physician, as the beloved, may have been designed by St. Paul to impart a Christian dignity to the Medical profession, which was not held in high repute by the polite nations of Antiquity; and to remind its practitioners, particularly those of Laodicea, to whom this Epistle was to be sent (iv. 16), of the honour and holiness of the medical calling, as ministering to the human body, which has been ennobled and consecrated by the Incarnation of Christ. See on ii. 23.

He might also thus intimate, that though special and supernatural gifts of healing were vouchsafed to the Church in those days (1 Cor. xii. 9. 28. 30), yet even then the ordinary means were not superseded, which are provided and bestowed by Almighty God for alleviating the sufferings of humanity through the art and skill of the Physician. Ecclus. xxxviii, 1, 3, 12. U v 2

1 Rom. 16. 5. 1 Cor. 16. 19.

15 1 'Ασπάσασθε τοὺς ἐν Λαοδικεία ἀδελφοὺς, καὶ Νυμφᾶν, καὶ τὴν κατ' οἶκον αὐτοῦ ἐκκλησίαν.

m ! Thess. 5, 27.

16 π Καὶ ὅταν ἀναγνωσθη παρ' ὑμιν ἡ ἐπιστολὴ, ποιήσατε ἴνα καὶ ἐν τῆ Λαοδικέων ἐκκλησία ἀναγνωσθῆ, καὶ τὴν ἐκ Λαοδικείας ἵνα καὶ ὑμεῖς ἀναγνῶτε.

n Philem. 2.

17 η Καὶ εἴπατε ᾿Αρχίππω, Βλέπε τὴν διακονίαν ἡν παρέλαβες ἐν Κυρίω, ἴνα αὐτὴν πληροίς.

18 ° Ο ἀσπασμὸς τῆ ἐμῆ χειρὶ Παύλου. Μνημονεύετε μοῦ τῶν δεσμῶν. χάρις μεθ' ύμῶν.

These words, Luke the Physician, the beloved, suggested in anese words, Luke the Physician, the beloved, suggested in early times the allusion, which is adopted by the Church of England in her Collect for St. Luke's Day, where he is called a "Physician of the soul;" and a reference is made to the "wholesome medicines of the doctrine delivered by him" for the healing of the "diseases of the soul;" as may be seen in S. Jerome's Epist. 50, ad Paulin. iv. p. 574, where he says, "that the Acts of the Apaches was except to be retained by the Apaches was expected by the Apostles may seem at first to be merely an Historical Book, and to describe the Infancy of the Church; but if we remember that their Author is Luke, 'whose praise is in the Gospel' (2 Cor. viii. 18), we shall acknowledge that all his words are medicines of the soul."

Probably St. Luke was already known to the Gentile Churches of Asia by his Gospel. See on 2 Cor. viii. 18.

It would seem also, that the Acts of the Apostles were written by St. Luke at this time. See Introduction to St. Luke's Gospel, and on Acts i. 1. Cp. Iren. iii. 14, and Euseb. ii. 22, Jerome, Cat. Eccl. Scr. 7.

— Δημᾶs] Demas. See Philem. 24, Δημᾶs, Λουκᾶs, οἱ συνεργοί μου. But he says in 2 Tim. iv. 10, Δημᾶs με ἐγκατέλιπεν.
Whence Theodoret rightly infers that the Second Epistle to Timothy was written after this Epistle.

St. Luke and Demas are now associated together with one another, and with the Apostle St. Paul. But, afterwards, when severer trials arose, "the one was taken, and the other left." When St. Paul was at Rome a few years afterwards, in that second imprisonment which terminated in his martyrdom, he wrote thus in his last Epistle (2 Tim. iv. 10, 11), "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world . . . Only Luke is with me." How striking is the contrast!

16. ὅταν ἀναγνωνθη] when this Epistle shall have been read. Observe St. Paul takes it for granted that this Epistle will be publicly read in the Church of Colossæ; a proof that the precept he had given as to the public reading of his Epistles from the beginning (see I Thess. v. 27) had been generally understood, received, and complied with by the Churches to which they were

This second precept for the communication of this Epistle to another Church, and for the reception of another Epistle from that Church, is also a specimen of what was to be done with all his Epistles; and doubtless this precept also was obeyed. And thus the Epistles of St. Paul were diffused throughout the world, and have been preserved by public reading, and by the multiplication of copies, in their original integrity.

- την εκ Λαοδικείας] the letter coming to you from Laodicea; not the letter written from Laodicea, but the letter written to Laodicea, and coming on to you from Laodicea. See Winer, § 66, p. 554, who compares Luke ix. 61; xi. 13, δ πατηρ δ έξ οὐρανοῦ δώσει Πνεῦμα ἄγιον.

The Epistle here referred to was probably St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians. See above, the Introduction to that Epistle,

p. 282.

On the special uses of the Ephesian Epistle to the Colossian Church, see on Eph. iii. 10.

17. 'Αρχιππου' Archippus, of Colossæ. Cp. Philem. 2, 'Αρχ-ίππω τῷ συστρατιώτη ἡμῶν. Theodoret.

— διακονίαν] ministry; his pastoral office. Here is a public charge to Archippus, more needful in the absence of Epaphras the spiritual pastor of the Colossians; a charge also to the Colossians themselves to obey Archippus as over them in the Lord. This is an example of Paul's prudence in government. He gives a public command to the Pastor to do his duty to the flock; and thus he also virtually commands the flock to recognize and obey their Pastor. Theophyl.

18. 'O ἀσπασμός The salutation with the hand of me Paul.

See 2 Thess. iii. 17.

— Μνημονεύετε μοῦ τῶν δεσμῶν] Remember of me the bonds.
 More expressive than τῶν δεσμῶν μου. (Cp. 1 Tim. iv. 12.)
 St. Paul's bonds were providential. If he had been continually moving from place to place in missionary Journeys, the Church might perhaps have never possessed his Epistles to the Colossians, Philemon, Ephesians, and the Philippians. And how much force do his Apostolic appeals in behalf of the Gospel derive from his sufferings for it! She therefore has good cause to remember his bonds with thankfulness. The Word of God, which is there written, is not bound, but it has had force to restrain the Evil One who bound the Apostle, and to deliver immortal souls from the bonds of Satan and of Sin, and to open to them the gates of Paradise and Heaven. Cp. note on Acts xxiv. 17.

When the Apostle, who was then bound to a Roman soldier, took up the pen to write the words just preceding, he must himself have been reminded of his own bonds. And the fact that those Epistles (to the Ephesians, Colossians, Philemon, and the Philippians) were written by him in this state of durance and restraint, and yet were designed to minister comfort to others, and that they have never ceased to cheer the Church of Christ, is certainly one which is worthy of everlasting remembrance.

— 'Η χάρις] Grace be with you. See 1 Thess. v. 28.

INTRODUCTION

TO

THE EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

On the Design and Uses of the Epistle to Philemon.

Ir has been already observed, in the Introduction to the Epistle to the Colossians, that there is an intimate connexion between that Epistle and the Epistle to the Ephesians.

Both those Epistles were written by St. Paul in his imprisonment at Rome, at the same time; and probably both were sent into Asia by the hand of the same messenger, Tychicus; and both, it would appear, were to be communicated, by a reciprocal interchange, to the Churches of Ephesus and Colossæ 1.

The main doctrine of both these Epistles is also one and the same,—the doctrine of the Incarnation of the Son of God. "God manifested in the flesh," is their great argument. The Sun of Righteousness is, as it were, the centre, around which, if the comparison may be allowed, these luminaries revolve, diffusing their spiritual light in the firmament of the Church.

One of these two Epistles, the Epistle to the Ephesians, has specially a positive character. Reflecting the lustre of the Incarnation, it displays the doctrine of Church-Communion and of Church-Unity, as genuine emanations radiating from the Evangelic Shechinah of Christ, the Light of the World, pitching His tabernacle in human flesh 2. And it exhibits the household charities of private life, especially the institution of Marriage, as invested with heavenly beauty, by the effluence of glory beaming upon it from the countenance of Christ.

The other Epistle, that to the Colossians, has also its own peculiar character. It borrows the light of the Incarnation, in order to dispel the mists of Error, and the clouds of Heresy. Its office in this respect has been already considered 3.

Attached to the Epistle to the Colossians is another Epistle, the shortest of St. Paul's writings, the Epistle to Philemon. It was sent at the same time, from the same place, and by the same hands, to the same city, as the Epistle to the Colossians. It is, as it were, its satellite.

It performs also a similar work. It dissipates the gloom of darkness by the light of Christ's Incarnation. It puts to flight one of the worst social evils that brooded over the world, that of Slavery. It does this, by teaching the doctrine of universal fellow-membership, and of universal brotherhood, consequent on the Incarnation of Christ.

"Philemon (says a Christian writer in the fifth century, in his commentary on this Epistle) was a Christian citizen of Colossæ, and his house still remains in that city; and he had a slave called Onesimus, who committed a theft on his master Philemon, and fled to Rome, and was caught in the Evangelical net by St. Paul, who was there at that time in imprisonment. The Apostle, having judged him fit to receive Holy Baptism, sent him back to his Master with the present Epistle."

Philemon was of Colossæ, and was the master of Onesimus, and afterwards his brother in the Lord; and Onesimus is called a Colossian by St. Paul's, and he accompanied Tychicus, the bearer

See above, pp. 310-12.
Theodoret, Proœm. in Epist. ad Phil

5 Col. iv. 9.

&lt;sup>1</sup> See on Col. iv. 16, and above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Ephesians, p. 277, cp. p. 310.

<sup>2</sup> John i. 14 of St. Paul's Epistle to the Colossian Church, which seems to have been sent at the same time as this private commendatory Letter from the Apostle to Philemon.

Hence we find a mention made of Archippus in both the Epistles<sup>1</sup>, "whom I suppose (says another early Christian Author<sup>2</sup>) to have been Bishop of the Church at Colossæ; wherefore he is admonished by St. Paul to fulfil his ministry with zeal and diligence. However this may be, it is evident that Philemon, Archippus, and Onesimus, were of Colossæ, and that the four Epistles which I have mentioned,—those to the Philippians, Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon,—were written about the same time, and that Tychicus was sent with Onesimus by St. Paul from Rome to Colossæ<sup>3</sup>."

Let us observe now, how this short Epistle was instrumental in performing a great and glorious work—the Abolition of Slavery.

The Divine Founder of Christianity did not tempt the vast multitude of Slaves, with which the Roman Empire then swarmed, to receive the Gospel, by promising them Liberty. He cancelled no existing rights; but He christianized them all. He broke no bonds of service, but He dignified and hallowed them, and changed them from iron fetters into the cords of a man. He addressed the Slave by the voice of St. Paul,—"Art thou called, being a Slave?" Art thou baptized into Christ, being a bondsman? "Care not for it;" let not thy slavery afflict thee. "Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called. But if thou mayest be made free, use it rather;" that is, seize not liberty with force, but embrace it with joy".

By the mouth of St. Paul, our Lord reproved those false Teachers who excited the passions of Slaves, and drew them to themselves, by promising them freedom. "Let Slaves count their own Masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and His doctrine be not blasphemed. And they that have Christian Masters, let them not despise them because they are brethren, but rather do them service because they are faithful and beloved." "These things (says St. Paul to Timothy') teach and exhort." The Apostle also condemns the false Teachers, who perverted Christian liberty into a plea for licentiousness. "If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, and to the doctrine according to godliness, he is proud, knowing nothing, doting about perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, supposing that godliness is a trade." "From such Teachers (says the Apostle) withdraw thyself'." And then he cheers the Christian Slave by saying, "But godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment, let us be therewith content."

Still more, St. Paul taught the Slave to obey his Master in all lawful things for the sake of Christ. "Slaves, be obedient to your Masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of heart, as unto Christ; not with eye-service as men-pleasers, but as Slaves of Christ; doing the will of God from the heart, with good-will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men, knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free 7."

Thus he dignified the service of the Slave. It was a work done to Christ, and would be rewarded by Him, the Everlasting Lord and Master of all, with an inestimable recompense at the Great Day.

Here was the comfort of the Christian bondsman; thus his service became one of holy love and religious joy. He knew that the eye of his heavenly Master was upon him, in the house, in the field, in the vineyard, in the garden, at the mill,—even in the prison, and, if God so willed it, on the cross. The slave here would be a saint hereafter. He would be free for ever. He might not receive the cap of liberty upon earth, but he would wear a crown of immortal glory in heaven.

Such were the exhortations and consolations of Christ, speaking by His Apostle to the Slave.

He had also instruction for Masters.

St. Paul wrote to the Church of Colossæ, the city of Philemon; and in that Epistle he inserted a mention of Onesimus. At the close of it , he gave Christian precepts to Masters concerning their duty to their Slaves; and then he passed on by a natural transition to speak of the Colossian fugitive. And in what terms? How expressive and beautiful is his language. He joins the slave

&lt;sup>1</sup> Col. iv. 17. Philem. 2. <sup>2</sup> S. Jerome, Prolog. ad Epist.

<sup>3</sup> Col. iv. 7.

&lt;sup>5</sup> 1 Tim. vi. 1.

&lt;sup>7</sup> Eph. vi 5. 8.

<sup>4 1</sup> Cor. vii. 20, 21.

<sup>6 1</sup> Tim. vi. 5.

<sup>8</sup> Col. iv. 1.

Onesimus with his beloved Tychicus, the bearer of the Epistle; he calls Onesimus "the faithful and beloved brother," and describes him as one of themselves. "All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, whom I have sent unto you, with Onesimus, the faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you."

Thus he commended Onesimus to the love of the Colossian Church. And as if this were not enough, the noble-hearted Apostle, " Paul, the aged, the prisoner of Christ," wrote also a special Epistle to Philemon, in behalf of Onesimus, whom he calls "his own son, whom he had begotten in his bonds;" an Epistle unrivalled in tenderness, and pathos, and refined delicacy, and courtesy, rendered more attractive by its genial playfulness of style, and breathing a divine spirit of Christian wisdom and love.

Philemon, the beloved friend of St. Paul, one whom, as the Epistle says, St. Paul habitually remembered in his prayers, one in whose love he had great joy, "because the bowels of the saints were refreshed" by his mercy, must have been moved by the touching appeal of the Apostle in behalf of his son Onesimus, whom he had begotten in his bonds, and for whom he proffered such an earnest petition. "Receive him, not now as a slave, but above a slave, a brother beloved, specially to me, and how much more unto thee both in the flesh and in the Lord. If thou countest me therefore a partner, receive him as myself." Philemon must have yielded with gladness to such an appeal as this, backed, as it would be, by the intercessions of the Colossian Church, whose sympathies had been wisely enlisted by St. Paul in behalf of the returning Onesimus.

The fact also, that the Epistle to Philemon was communicated by him to the Church of his own City, and was publicly read in the Church in the age of Philemon, and has continued to be so read to this day, authorizes us to conclude, that the hopes of the Apostle were realized, that his petition was granted, and that the Christian slave Onesimus was welcomed as a brother by his Christian master Philemon, and by the Christian Church of Colossæ.

This conclusion is confirmed by the circumstance already mentioned, that the house of Philemon at Colossæ, to which Onesimus returned, was long afterwards pointed out to the affectionate memory of the faithful.

Some persons have expressed surprise, that this short Epistle, addressed to a private person, on a private occasion, should be publicly read in the Church, and be received as a part of Canonical

But the world's History has fully justified the Church of Christ in this respect.

In the age when it was written, Europe and Asia were crowded with an immense population of Slaves. Wheresoever the word 'servants' occurs in our English Version of the New Testament, we must understand 'slaves,'-slaves purchased with money, or taken in war, or reared from slaves in the house of their masters. Phrygia, in which Colossæ was situated, was the land of slaves. A Phrygian was another word for a slave 2. Nothing could be more miserable than their condition.

But Christianity was for all. How would it affect Slaves? What would it do for them? Would it leave them in their present misery? Would it mitigate the rigour of their sufferings? And if so, by what means?

The answer to these questions is supplied by the Epistle to Philemon.

That short Letter, dictated from "the hired house" of the aged Apostle, "Christ's bondsman" at Rome, may be called a divine Act of Emancipation; one far more powerful than any edict of Manumission promulgated by Sovereigns and Senates; one, from whose sacred principles all human statutes for the Abolition of Slavery derive their virtue. Its silent influence, such as characterizes all genuine Reformations, gradually melted away and thawed the hardships of Slavery, by softening and warming the heart of the Master with the pure and holy flame of Christian love; and while it thus ameliorated the condition of the Slave, it did not impair the just rights of the Master, but greatly improved them, by dignifying service, and by securing obedience to man, as a duty done to Christ, and to be hereafter rewarded by Him; and by changing the cunning and fearful slave into an honest and loving servant, and a faithful brother; and by binding every Onesimus in bonds of holy communion with every Philemon, in the mystical body of Christ, in the fellowship of the same Prayers, in the hearing and reading of the same Scriptures, in the reception of the same Sacraments, in the worship of the same Lord, and in the heritorship of the same Heaven.

Therefore the writing of this short Letter to Philemon was a golden era in the History of See S. Hieron. Procem. in Epist. ad Philem.

 Hence the proverb mentioned by Cicero (pro Flacco), "Phrygem plagis meliorem fieri."

Mankind. Happy is it for the world, that this Epistle, dictated by the Holy Ghost, has ever been read in the Church as Canonical Scripture. And every one, who considers the principles laid down in this Epistle, and reflects on the Reformation which they have already wrought in the domestic and social life of Europe and the World, and on the blessed results which would flow from them in still greater abundance, if they were duly received and observed, will acknowledge with devout thankfulness to God, that inestimable benefits, civil and temporal, as well as spiritual, have been conferred on the world by Christianity.

St. Paul did not constrain Philemon to emancipate his slave Onesimus. But he inculcated such principles as divested Slavery of its evils. The Gospel of Christ, preached by the holy Apostle, did not exasperate the Slave-owner by angry and irritating invectives, and by contumelious and contemptuous sarcasms. It did not embitter him against the Slave, and thus injure the Slave himself by an acrimonious advocacy of his rights, and by a violent and intemperate partizanship; and inflict damage and discredit on the sacred cause of Emancipation. But by christianizing the Master it enfranchised the Slave. It did not legislate about names and forms, but it went to the root of the evil. It spoke to the heart of man. When the heart of the Master was stirred with divine grace, and was warmed with the love of Christ, the rest would soon follow. The lips would speak kind words, the hand would do liberal things. Every Onesimus would be treated by every Philemon as a beloved brother in Jesus Christ.

Here, and only here, is the genuine specific for the Abolition of Slavery.

Here also is the only solid groundwork for all truly philosophic and philanthropic endeavours to extinguish Caste in India. It is to be found in the doctrine of the Incarnation of the Son of God, and in the Incorporation of all Nations and Families of the earth, by one Faith and one Baptism, in the mystical Body of Christ.

Happy will be the Sovereigns, Senates, and States, who, wisely comprehending these Truths, will act with courage upon them.

ΠΡΟΣ ΦΙΛΗΜΟΝΑ.

 $^{1}$  α ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, δέσμιος Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ Τιμόθεος ὁ ἀδελφὸς, Φιλήμονι τ $\hat{\varphi}$   $^{a}_{x}$   $^{Eph. 3. 1.}_{4.0.6.20}$  ἀγαπητ $\hat{\varphi}$  καὶ συνεργ $\hat{\varphi}$  ἡμῶν,  $^{2}$  καὶ ᾿Απφί $\varphi$  τ $\hat{\eta}$  ἀγαπητ $\hat{\eta}$ , καὶ ᾿Αρχίππ $\varphi$  τ $\hat{\varphi}$   $^{1}_{p}$   $^{Eph. 3. 1.}_{2.0.20}$   $^{2}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{8}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{8}$   $^{1}$   $^{$

άγαπητῷ καὶ συνεργῷ ἡμῶν, ² καὶ Απφία τη άγαπητῃ, καὶ Αρχίππῳ τῷ κτωπ. 16.5.
συστρατιώτη ἡμῶν, καὶ τἢ κατ' οἶκόν σου ἐκκλησία, ³ χάρις ὑμῖν καὶ εἰρήνη col. 4. 15, 17phil. 2.25.
ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν, καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

ε κοπ. 1. 5.
Ερι. 1. 16.
μαὶι. 1. 3.
χῶν μου, 5 ἀ ἀκούων σου τὴν ἀγάπην καὶ τὴν πίστιν, ἢν ἔχεις πρὸς τὸν Κύριον τhess. 1. 2.
Ἰησοῦν καὶ εἰς πάντας τοὺς ἀγίους. 6 ° ὅπως ἡ κοινωνία τῆς πίστεως σου ἐνεργὴς ἀ Ερι. 1. 15.
σένηται ἐν ἐπιγνώσει παντὸς ἀγαθοῦ τοῦ ἐν ἡμῖν εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. 7 Γ Χαρὰν ε κοπ. 12. 13.

σένηται ἐν ἐπιγνώσει παντὸς ἀγαθοῦ τοῦ ἐν ἡμῖν εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. 7 Γ Χαρὰν ε κοπ. 12. 13.

σένος. 1. 16.
γένηται ἐν ἐπιγνώσει παντὸς ἀγαθοῦ τοῦ ἐν ἡμῖν εἰς Χριστὸν Ἰησοῦν. 7 Γ Χαρὰν ε κοπ. 12. 13.
σένος. 14, 17.

Πρός Φιλήμονα] So A, D, E, F, G.

1.  $\Pi \alpha \hat{\nu} \lambda os$ ] Paul. He does not add the title of Apostle (as in other cases, with some observable exceptions, see 1 Thess. i. 1), because he was not writing as an Apostle, but as a friend, as "Paul, now aged, and in bonds." See on v. 9.

· δέσμιος Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ] a prisoner of Jesus Christ. See

Eph. iii. 1.

He refers to his bonds in the other Epistles written at this time at Rome (Eph. iii. 1; iv. 1. Col. iv. 13. Phil. i. 7. 13, 14. 17), but (as S. Jerome here observes) he does not commence any other Epistle with this appellation of bondsman.

There was something appropriate in introducing himself as a "bondsman of Jesus Christ" in a letter where he pleads the cause of a bond-slave.

— Τιμόθεος] Timotheus is associated with St. Paul, in like manner, in the beginning of his Epistles to the Colossians and Philippians, written at this time. See on Col. i. 1, and S. Jerome here, who rightly says, "Scribit Paulus ad Philemonem, Romæ vinctus in carcere, quo tempore mihi videntur ad Philippenses, Colossenses, et Ephesios, Epistolæ esse dictatæ."

2.  $A\pi\phi[a]$  to Apphia, probably, as ancient expositors suppose, the wife of Philemon. Here is a slight trait of delicate tact and refined wisdom in the Apostle. He engages the tender sympathies of a woman,-the Mistress of the household, Apphia, the beloved, in behalf of the runaway slave.

 — ἀγαπητῆ] beloved. The ancient authorities are nearly equally balanced between this reading and ἀδελφῆ, sister.
 It seems less likely that ἀδελφῆ would have been altered by the copyists into ἀγαπητῆ, than that ἀγαπητῆ should have been changed by them into ἀδελφη, for the reason suggested by Theodoret here, who says, that "some persons were staggered by St. Paul's application of this word beloved to Apphia, who was the wife of Philemon. This offence has been caused by the degenerate practice of the world. But formerly the word beloved was honourable."

Besides, it is not improbable, that  $\mathring{a}\delta\epsilon\lambda\phi\hat{\eta}$  was a gloss on the word 'Aπφία, for (as Hesychius says) 'Aπφία was a name of endearment for a sister.

- 'Αρχίππφ τῷ συστρατιώτη ἡμῶν] to Archippus, our feliow-soldier. Archippus was a Christian Pastor at Colossæ (Col. iv. 7), and a fellow-soldier of St. Paul, in fighting the good fight of faith against the enemies of the Gospel. (Theodoret, Jerome.) Probably he was the Presbyter who ministered to the congregation which assembled at Philemon's house. Cp. Phil. ii. 25, where Epaphrodibus is called by the same title. Vol. II.—Part III.

— τŷ κατ' οἶκόν σου ἐκκλησία] to the Church assembling at thine house. Philemon was probably a person of substance, and in the lack of a public edifice set apart for Christian worship, appears to have opened his own mansion for the reception of a congregation of Christians.

This was one way in which Philemon might be said to have "refreshed the bowels of the saints" (v. 7), and to have shown his Christian faith and love to his poorer brethren. Here probably it was that St. Paul preached when at Colossæ.

No wonder that this same House should have been pointed out as an object of religious interest even in the fifth century. See Theodoret.

This concession of some apartment in their own houses for the purposes of the public worship of the Christian Church, "a sect every where spoken against" (Acts xxviii. 22) in those days, was an act of zeal and courage on the part of the wealthier members of the Christian community, and seems to have elicited special expressions of notice, approval, and affection from St. Paul special expressions of notice, approval, and affection from St. 1 at an and the other Apostles. (Rom. xvi. 5. 23. Col. iv. 15. Cp. 2 Tim. i. 16; iv. 19. 3 John 6, 7.) See Joseph Mede (Discourse on religious places of worship in ancient times, in reference to 1 Cor. xi. 22, Works, p. 324), who says, "Those who were saluted under this title, as having a Church in their house, were such as in their several cities had bestowed and dedicated some part or place within their dwellings, to be an oratory for the Church to assemble in, for the performance of divine duties according to the rule of the Gospel."

5. ἀκούων] heaving, probably from Epaphras of Colossæ, then at Rome. (Col. i. 7; iv. 12.)
6. ὅπως] in order that; depending on προσευχῶν. Cp. Eph. iii. 14. The meaning of this clause, which has been deemed by the content of the some to be a difficult one, may perhaps be explained by the considerations stated on v. 2.

The House of Philemon appears to have been opened for the public worship of Christians at Colossæ, and is specially saluted by St. Paul; and he now prays that a blessing may rest upon it, that the communion of thy faith (i. e. the charitable benevolence with which thou in thy faith hast opened thy house and thy purse, and hast communicated them, and dost now communicate them, for the use of others, thy fellow-members in Christ) may become effectual in the full knowledge (ἐπιγνώσει, see Col. i. 9) of every blessing that is in us into (i. e. into union with) Christ Jesus: that is, that it may be instrumental in communicating the blessings of the Gospel, in the dispensation of the Word and Sacraments to the Christians at Colossæ, gathered together under thy roof, for their spiritual incorporation into, and for their spiritual life in, and their eternal reception into glory by, Christ Jesus. For γάρ πολλήν έσχον καὶ παράκλησιν ἐπὶ τῆ ἀγάπη σου, ὅτι τὰ σπλάγχνα τῶν άγίων ἀναπέπαυται διὰ σοῦ, ἀδελφέ.

g 1 Thess. 2. 2, 6. 2 Cor. 10. 8.

8 ε Διὸ πολλὴν ἐν Χριστῷ παρρησίαν ἔχων ἐπιτάσσειν σοι τὸ ἀνῆκον, 9 διὰ την ἀγάπην μαλλον παρακαλώ, τοιούτος ών ώς Παύλος πρεσβύτης, νυνὶ δὲ καὶ δέσμιος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

h 1 Cor. 4. 15. Gal. 4. 19. Col. 4. 9.

10 h Παρακαλώ σε περί τοῦ έμοῦ τέκνου, ον εγέννησα έν τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου, 'Ονήσιμον, 11 τον ποτέ σοι ἄχρηστον, νυνὶ δὲ σοὶ καὶ ἐμοὶ εὖχρηστον, ὃν ανέπεμψα σοι· 12 σὺ δὲ αὐτὸν, τουτέστι τὰ ἐμὰ σπλάγχνα, προσλαβοῦ. 13 °Ον έγω έβουλόμην προς έμαυτον κατέχειν, ίνα ύπερ σου μοι διακονή έν τοις δεσμοίς τοῦ εὐαγγελίου. 14 ι χωρὶς δὲ τῆς σῆς γνώμης οὐδὲν ἠθέλησα ποιῆσαι, ἴνα μὴ ώς κατα ανάγκην το αγαθόν σου ή, αλλα κατα έκούσιον.

i 1 Cor. 9. 7, 17. 2 Cor. 8. 12. & 9. 5, 7. 1 Pet. 5. 2.

15 Τάχα γὰρ διὰ τοῦτο ἐχωρίσθη πρὸς ὥραν, ἴνα αἰώνιον αὐτὸν ἀπέχης, 16 οὐκέτι ώς δοῦλον, ἀλλ' ὑπὲρ δοῦλον, ἀδελφὸν ἀγαπητὸν, μάλιστα ἐμοὶ, πόσω δὲ μᾶλλον σοὶ, καὶ ἐν σαρκὶ καὶ ἐν Κυρίω. 17 Εἰ οὖν μὲ ἔχεις κοινωνὸν, προσλαβοῦ αὐτὸν ὡς ἐμέ.

18 Εί δέ τι ηδίκησε σε η οφείλει, τοῦτο εμοὶ ελλόγει. 19 Έγω Παῦλος εγραψα

I had much joy and comfort in thy love, because the bowels of the Saints have been refreshed by thee, brother.

On this use of κοινωνία, see 2 Cor. viii. 4; ix. 13. Cp. Gal.

Hence κοινωνία is here interpreted ελεημοσύνη by Theodoret. 7. τὰ σπλάγχνα των ἀγίων κ.τ.λ] the bowels, that is, the cravings and yearnings "of the saints," that is, of the Christians, those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, have been refreshed by thee.

The word σπλάγχνα, bowels, the inner seat of affection, signifies longing desires, as in v. 20, ἀνάπαυσόν μου τὰ σπλάγχνα, and Phil. i. 8, "I long after you in the bowels of

The sense is, they had been refreshed in body and soul by thy love, which has been, as it were, poured forth upon them abundantly, like an exhilarating stream; and has been received by them, as cool water by a thirsty ground, into the inmost recesses of their heart. Cp. Theophyl. 9,10. παρακαλ $\hat{\omega}$ ] I beseech thee for my own son, whom I begat in my bonds - Onesimus. Observe the word Onesimus reserved for the last place, after the affecting preamble τοῦ ἐμοῦ τέκνου κ.τ.λ.

- τοιούτος &ν &s] being such an one as Paul, an old man, and not only such, but now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ.

A beautiful specimen of Christian humility and genuine I might be bold to command thee in Christ's name, by which I am strong; but thou dost not need any argument derived from my strength; and for love's sake I rather beseech thee by my own weakness,—by my years, and by my chains. Such language, the language of entreaty, best befits me now in my prison, and in my old age.

Not therefore now, as St. Paul the Apostle, do I command thee (and therefore he had not prefixed the title of Apostle, as in other Epistles, see v. 1), but as Paul, an old man, and a prisoner for Christ, do I entreat thee.

The Apostle might have confidently commanded, in Christ's name  $(\ell \nu \ X \rho \iota \sigma \tau \hat{\varphi})$ , but he rather entreats, which he does with great authority, as being Paul, and now an old man, and a prisoner of Jesus Christ. Jerome.

Have regard, I pray thee, for Paul; for his old age, for his bonds, which he wears for the Gospel. Theodoret.

So the ancient Expositors; but many modern Interpreters place a colon at παρακαλώ, and begin a new sentence with τοιούτος.

But such an arrangement seems to embarrass the meaning, and to impair the rhythm of the sentence, and also to mar the beauty of the sentiment.

As to St. Paul's age at this time, it may be remembered, that he is called a veavias at the time of St. Stephen's martyrdom (Acts vii. 58); but as he was employed by the Chief Priests, and sent by them with authority to the city of Damascus to execute a public commission in their name (Acts xxii. 5), and as he appears to have been at that period a member of the Jewish Sanhedrim (see Acts xxvi. 10), he could hardly have been less than thirty years of age at that time.

If St. Stephen's Martyrdom was in A.D. 33 (as seems pro-bable, see "Chronological Synopsis" and "Chronological Table" prefixed to the Acts of the Apostles; cp. 1 Tim. i. 13), then St. Paul, writing this epistle about A.D. 63, would be not less than sixty years of age at this time.

St. Paul never exaggerates any thing, for the sake of producing an effect. And he could hardly be less than sixty years old, when he appealed to his old age as a ground of regard to his intercession for Onesimus.

The words of the Apostle here seem to have been in the mind of S. Ignatius (ad Ephes. 3).

10, 11. 'Ονήσιμον,—τὸν ποτέ σοι ἄχρηστον, νυνὶ δὲ σοὶ καὶ ἐμοὶ εὕχρηστον] As to the play on the word 'Ονήσιμος, continued in v. 20, see A Lapide, "Olim erat an-onesimus, id est, inutilis, imò noxius, jam est Onesimus, id est, utilis; olim Paganus, jam Christianus; olim fur, jam fidelis servus; olim profugus, jam redux, ut tibi sit assecla fidus, et perennis." So also Wetstein, p. 381; and see Winer, p. 561, note; and above on Matt. xxvi. 2. Luke xxii. 15. Cp. Acts iv. 30; viii. 31.

11. δν ἀνέπεμψα] whom I send back to thee,—the epistolary aorist. See Gal. vi. 11. Eph. vi. 22. Phil. ii. 28.

The Apostle St. Paul would not tempt away Slaves from their Masters, but sent them back to them as brethren. Here is one of the practical uses to be made of the present Epistle. Chrysostom (in Procem.). See above, Introduction, pp. 333—36.

12. τὰ ἐμὰ σπλάγχνα] the son of my bowels. Gen. xv. 4.

2 Sam. xvi. 11.

"He is my son born from my own bowels" (Theodoret and Suicer in voce, p. 998). Cp. Gal. iv. 19, τεκνία μου οδς πάλι»

Observe the zeal and magnanimity of the Apostle. He is confined in a prison, bound with chains, manacled to a soldier, and separated from his friends, yet he does not feel pain; he knows no other thought but the Gospel, and to beget children to Christ.

13. ξβουλόμην] I was wishing. It was my wish. 14. οὐδὲν ἢθέλησα π.] I willed to do nothing. On the difference between ξβουλόμην and ἢθέλησα see notes on 1 Thess. ii. 18. 2 Cor. i. 15, and Tittmann (Syn. N. T. p. 124).

15. [να-ἀπέχης] in order that you may receive him as your own friend and brother everlastingly.

The conjunction wa is here used, not to indicate the design of the agent himself, Onesimus, but of Almighty God permitting him to act as he did. Cp. 2 Cor. iv. 7; and as to the sense, see the words of Joseph to his brethren, Gen. xlv. 5. 7, 8.

17. μέ] So C, D, E, F, G, I.—Elz. ἐμέ.

18. τοῦτο ἐμοὶ ἐλλόγει] set that down to my account. A, C, D*, F, G have ἐλλόγα, which has been received by Lachm., Tisch., Alf., Ellicott, but no example has been quoted of its use. See Fritz. (ad Rom. v. 13), where έλλογείται is used.

19. 'Εγὰ Παῦλος έγραψα] I Paul wrote it with my own hand. i. e. wrote the words which just precede, viz., If he owes thee any thing, set this down to my account, and also I write this present clause with my own hand.

It does not follow from this sentence that the whole of this Epistle was written with the Apostle's own hand; rather it would seem, that he made this engagement of repayment to be more emphatic and significant by distinguishing it from the rest of the Epistle, and by taking the pen from the hand of his secretary, and τη έμη χειρί, έγω αποτίσω τνα μη λέγω σοι ότι και σεαυτόν μοι προσοφείλεις. 20 Ναὶ, ἀδελφὲ, ἐγώ σου ὀναίμην ἐν Κυρίω ἀνάπαυσόν μου τὰ σπλάγχνα ἐν 21 κ Πεποιθώς τη ύπακοή σου έγραψά σοι, είδως ότι καὶ ύπερ δ λέγω κ 2 Cor. 7. 16. Χριστώ.

1 2 Cor. 1, 11. Phil. 1, 25. ποιήσεις.

χαρισθήσομαι ύμιν.

 $^{22}$   $^{1''}$   $^{$ Μάρκος, 24 η Αρίσταρχος, Δημας, Λουκας, οι συνεργοί μου.

& 20. 4. & 27. 2. Col. 4. 10, 14. 2 Tim. 4. 10, 11. 1 Pet. 5, 13, 25 'Η γάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν.

by inditing that particular clause with his own autograph, well known to Philemon.

- Ίνα μη λέγω σοι] not to remind thee. See 2 Cor. ix. 4, Ίνα μη λέγωμεν ύμεις.

— σεαυτύν μοι προσοφείλεις] thou owest even thyself to me, in addition to the favour which I now ask at thy hands.

On this use of προσοφείλω, see Xenophon, Pædag. 3.

(Wetstein.)

Hence it would appear that St. Paul had been in person at Colossæ, and had preached there. He addresses Philemon as his disciple. (Theodoret.) See above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Colossians, pp. 312, 313.

20. ἐγώ σου ὀναίμην] may I have joy of thee. May I gather fruit from thee, as from a good tree, rich in works of love.

Theodoret.

So Ignatius (ad Eph. 2), δναίμην ύμων διά παντός, ad Polyc. Mag. 2. 12. Rom. 5.

There is a play on the word δνήσιμος in δναίμην-έγω δί

Ονησίμου ὄνησίν σου έχοιμι. See v. 11. ανάπαυσόν μου τὰ σπλάγχνα] refresh my bowels in Christ, what thou doest to the saints do also to me. See v. 7.

- èν Χριστῷ] So A, C, D*, F, G, I.—Εlz. èν Κυρίφ.
22. ἐτοίμαζὲ μοι ξενίω] prepare me a lodging. A thought concerning himself, introduced here not for the sake of himself, but because, as he adds, they prayed to God that his presence might be vouchsafed to them, not only for their personal gratification, but that he might impart to them some spiritual gift, as an Apostle. (Rom. i. 11.) Cp. Phil. i. 25; ii. 24, where a similar hope of liberation is expressed.

He thus intimates a hope that he shall have the joy of seeing, with his own eyes, his present request accomplished with regard to Onesimus; and thus gives to Philemon an additional motive to grant it, and to receive Onesimus into his family.

23, 24. ' $\Lambda \sigma \pi d \langle \varepsilon \tau a | There salute th thee Epaphras (see Col. i. 7; iv. 12), my fellow-prisoner, Aristarchus, (who is mentioned in Acts void 2 as <math>\Omega = \Omega$ in Acts xxvii. 2 as St. Paul's companion in the voyage to Rome, where the Apostle now is,) Demas, Lucas, my fellow-labourers. Here are the same salutations as in the Epistle to the Colossians (Col. iv. 10. 12. 14), with the exception, that in that Epistle Philemon himself is not saluted; a circumstance which confirms the opinion, that this Epistle was sent to him at the same time as the Epistle to the Colossians was sent to them.

On the names here mentioned, Epaphras, see note, Col. i. 7; iv. 12; Mark, see on Col. iv. 10, where Mark is mentioned as about to leave St. Paul, and probably as about to come to Colossæ. Here he is mentioned as still with St. Paul. Another evidence of the contemporaneousness of the two Epistles.

There is a striking contrast between St. Mark and Demas, thus placed side by side. The Apostle might seem now to say, Mark had once forsaken me (Acts xiii. 13; xv. 38, 39) as Onesi mus had left thee, but he has now returned to me, as Onesimus returns to thee.

Concerning Demas the Apostle afterwards wrote, "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world" (2 Tim. iv. 10); never, it is probable, to return to him in this life; and in that passage there is a striking contrast between Demas and another Evangelist, St. Luke, who is here also mentioned together with him. Here Demas is placed in St. Paul's company between two Evangelists, Mark and Luke; there he had deserted the Apostle, who says to Timothy, "Take Mark and bring him with thee; for he is profitable to me for the ministry—Luke only is with me." 2 Tim. iv. 10, 11.

Luke has bequeathed his Gospel and the Acts of the Apostles to the Churches of Christ; and as some of the Apostles from being Fishermen were made Fishers of men, so Luke the Physician became a Physician of the soul; and of him the Apostle says in another place, that he is the brother whose praise is in the Gospel through all the Churches (2 Cor. viii. 18). As long as his writings are read in the Churches of Christ, so long will Luke, the beloved Physician (Col. iv. 14), continue to exercise his healing art. S. Jerome. God grant that by medicine of his doctrine all the diseases of our souls may be healed. Amen.

INTRODUCTION.

TO THE

EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS.

On the Date and Design of the Epistle to the Philippians.

THE Epistle to the Philippians, to whom St. Paul had preached on his first journey from Asia to Macedonia (Acts xvi. 12-20), and whom he afterwards revisited (Acts xx. 6), appears to have been written soon after the Epistles to the Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon; and at the close of St. Paul's two years' detention at Rome, mentioned in Acts xxviii. 30,—that is to say, in the Spring of A.D. 63.

I. That it was written when he was then in prison, may be inferred,

From the references in it to his bonds 1, and to the manifestation of those bonds in Christ to the " whole of the Prætorium and to all the rest?"

From the special salutation sent in it to the Philippians from the Christians of Casar's household ; and

From the confident declaration of the Apostle, that he will be released from his confinement, and be enabled to see them again soon 4.

These particulars do not harmonize with the circumstances of any other imprisonment,

Either at Casarca, which was followed by his voyage to Rome, whither he was sent on his own Appeal to Cæsar 5,

Or of his last imprisonment at Rome, which did not end in his liberation, but in his death . Therefore this Epistle was written in his first imprisonment at Rome, which lasted two years.

- II. It was written at the close of that imprisonment. This may be inferred from the following circumstances:
- 1. Time had been given for the occurrence of a series of events. The Philippians had already had time to hear that St. Paul had been sent to Rome, and that he was detained there; and they had had time to make a collection for him, and to send Epaphroditus from Philippi with pecuniary supplies to St. Paul at Rome. Epaphroditus had fallen sick at Rome in consequence of his exertions in behalf of the Apostle, and had had time to recover from that sickness, which brought him "nigh unto death;" and he had now so far recovered his health as to be in a fit state to travel back again as far as Macedonia, to which he seems to have carried the present Epistle '.
- 2. St. Paul expresses his hopes in this Epistle to send Timothy shortly to Philippi s; and he adds, that he will despatch Timothy as soon as he knows how it will fare with himself's. He is therefore now contemplating the issue of his Trial, and he pre-announces what it will be 10, and expresses a hope of coming soon to Philippi ".

He sends Epaphroditus immediately to the Philippians, in order to comfort them 12; and he

&lt;sup>1</sup> Phil. i. 7, 13, 14, 16.

<sup>2</sup> i. 13, where see note.

<sup>3</sup> iv. 22.

<sup>4</sup> i. 24-26; ii. 24.

&lt;sup>5</sup> Acts xxv. 10, 11, 21; xxvii. 1.

<sup>6</sup> See below, the Introduction to the Epistles to Timothy

<sup>7</sup> See ii. 25-30.

<sup>9</sup> ii. 23.

<sup>10</sup> i. 23-26.

<sup>11</sup> ii. 24.

<sup>12</sup> ji. 25-22.

will also send Timothy speedily, as soon as he is enabled "to see the things concerning himself',"that is, the result of his Trial at the imperial Tribunal, and his own future consequent movements.

If St. Paul had expected to remain much longer at Rome after the date of this Epistle, he would probably have despatched Timothy immediately, in order that he might receive at Rome that report concerning the spiritual state of the Philippians, which he was very anxious to have?

But this Epistle represents him as awaiting the decision of his cause, in order that he may apprise the Philippians of the result, and in order also, that having arranged his own plans, he may inform Timothy of the place where he may find him, and to which Timothy is to come, with the report which the Apostle desires to receive of the Philippians through him.

3. In the other Epistles written during his two years' detention at Rome, the Apostle has still with him some of the companions and fellow-labourers who had accompanied him from Cæsarea to Rome, or had followed him to Rome. Such were Luke, Aristarchus<sup>3</sup>, Tychicus, Epaphras, Marcus<sup>4</sup>. But none of these are mentioned in this Epistle, as now with him. Tychicus had gone to Asia with the Epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians 5. Mark had probably gone to Asia 6. No person but Timothy is mentioned in this Epistle as present with the Apostle; and it is expressly said that no other of his companions and fellow-workers was now with him 7.

III. Indeed, it seems probable from internal evidence, that the Epistle to the Philippians was written after the hearing of the Apostle's cause in the presence of the Emperor and his Assessors, and in the interval between that hearing and the public declaration of the sentence, by which he was eventually set at liberty 8.

IV. These considerations are illustrated, and this conclusion is confirmed, by the substantial similarity, combined with certain circumstantial variations (harmonizing with the differences respectively of St. Paul's two imprisonments at Rome), between this Epistle to the Philippians, and that Epistle which was the last of all the Epistles written by him, viz. the Second Epistle to Timothy.

Both those Epistles were written from Rome. Both were written by St. Paul when in prison.

The Epistle to the Philippians was written at the close of his first imprisonment, when he had an immediate prospect of release by acquittal.

The Second to Timothy was written at the close of his second imprisonment, when he had an immediate prospect of release by death.

The substantial resemblances between those two Epistles, and also their circumstantial differences, may be seen in the following passages among others. Compare-Phil. i. 23-25.

την επιθυμίαν έχων είς το αναλύσαι.... οίδα ὅτι μενῶ καὶ συμπαραμενῶ πᾶσιν ὑμῖν.

"My desire is to depart; but I know that I shall remain, and remain together with you all."

Phil. iii. 17.

εί καὶ σπένδομαι.

"If I am poured out;" put hypothetically.

Phil. iii. 13, 14,

where he is describing his being still in the course, and not having yet attained the goal.

2 Tim. iv. 6.

καιρὸς της έμης ἀναλύσεως ἐφέστηκε.

"The season of my departure is now come."

2 Tim. iv. 6.

'Εγω γαρ ήδη σπένδομαι . . . . "I am now being poured out."

2 Tim. iv. 7.

"I have now finished my course, and the crown of glory is laid up for me."

Compare also the conclusions of both these Epistles, viz.—

Phil. iv. 20.

τῶ Θεῷ καὶ Πατρὶ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων . . . ή χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ύμῶν.

2 Tim. iv. 18.

ῷ ἡ δύξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων . . . . 'Ο Κύριος 'Ιησούς μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματός σου.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Phil. ii. 19.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Col. iv. 10. 14. Acts xxvii, 2. <sup>4</sup> See Col. iv. 7, 10, 12. Philem. 23.

&lt;sup>5</sup> Eph. vi. 21. Col. iv. 7.

&lt;sup>7</sup> ii. 20.

<sup>8</sup> See note on i. 13.

Thus these two Epistles stand in a peculiar relation to each other, to St. Paul and to Christendom.

The Epistle to the Philippians may be regarded as the Apostle's farewell Epistle to the Gentile Churches.

There was a propriety in his choice of the Philippians for such a parting address. He was the Apostle of the Greeks. Philippi was the first Greek Church that he had founded. He had begun his Epistles with writing to their neighbours in Macedonia, the Thessalonians, the inhabitants of the capital city of that Province. He now ends with the Philippians. They were a mixed popu-Philippi was a Roman Colony in Greece: an epitome of the Gentile world. Accordingly, we find in this final Epistle to the Gentiles, a review of the Apostle's sufferings for Christ, and a thankful declaration, that they had all been overruled by God's mercy "for the advancement of the Gospel 1." He reminds his readers that the sufferings of Christ were His road to glory 2; and exhorts them to patient imitation of their Lord; and assures them that he himself rejoices in his sufferings for them3, and encourages them to rejoice with him. He exhorts them to dwell in heart and affection in heaven, and to look for the re-appearance of their Lord and Saviour, "who will change our vile bodies to be fashioned like unto His glorious body'." The whole Epistle breathes an air of love and thankfulness for all the blessings he had enjoyed in the affection and kindness of the Philippians, from the beginning of his apostolic ministry 5. It is like the grateful overflow of a devout heart at the close of a long life, meditating on the loving-kindness of God in Christ, never failing in bounteous supplies of grace and peace.

The final character of this Epistle is also represented in its doctrinal aspect. It contains a compendious summary and brief recapitulation of what the Apostle had already delivered to the Churches in his other Epistles 6.

In a like spirit, in the Second Epistle to Timothy, St. Paul delivers a parting charge and spiritual legacy to his beloved son in the faith, the Bishop of Ephesus, and to other chief Pastors, whom he had set over the Churches founded by him.

In the Epistle to the Philippians, he declares his desire to die, and yet his willingness to live. In the Second Epistle to Timothy, he exults in the prospect of approaching martyrdom. In the one he takes leave of the flock; in the other, he bids adieu to the Shepherds. In both he ascribes glory to God for ever and ever; and he pronounces an Apostolic Benediction on all Christian Churches and Pastors, in the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, for Whom he had lived, and for Whom he died, and with Whom he longed to be for evermore.

&lt;sup>2</sup> ii. 5—10. <sup>3</sup> ii. 17.

<sup>4</sup> iii. 20.

&lt;sup>5</sup> See note on iv. 15.

&lt;sup>6</sup> See particularly iii. 1 and note there.

ΠΡΟΣ ΦΙΛΙΠΠΗΣΙΟΥΣ.

Ι.  $^{1}$  * ΠΑΥΛΟΣ΄ καὶ  $^{5}$  Τιμόθεος, δοῦλοι Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ, πᾶσι τοῖς ἁγίοις ἐν  $^{2}_{b}$   $^{1}$  Cor. 1.  $^{2}$  . Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τοῖς οὖσιν ἐν Φιλίπποις, σὺν ἐπισκόποις καὶ διακόνοις,  $^{2}$  ° χάρις  $^{2}$  Cor. 1. 1. ύμιν καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς ἡμῶν καὶ Κυρίου Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ. c Rom. 1. 7. 1 Pet. 1. 2.

Πρός Φιλιππησίους] So A, B, D, E, F, G.-D, E, F, G prefix ἄρχεται.

CH. I. 1.  $\Pi \alpha \hat{v} \lambda os$ ] Paul. Why does he not add the title of Apostle? He does so in all his other Epistles, except the two earliest (to the Thessalonians), and to the Hebrews, and to Philemon, for which omissions there were special reasons. See 1 Thess. i. 1. Philem. 1, and Heb. i.

Probably this may be ascribed to his modesty, and also to his love. This was the last Epistle that he wrote to a Gentile Church; he was now Paul the aged, and had almost run his Apostolic race. He was still an Apostle to Timothy and Titus (1 Tim. i. 1. Tit. i. 1. 2 Tim. i. 1), and had an Apostolic charge for them. But he had done his work for the Churches of Asia and Greece. He was now like Aaron before his death, laying aside his sacred garments, in order that others might wear them (Num. xx. 28). He would not magnify himself; but the nearer he was to heaven the more lowly he would be. He would divest himself of his official dignity, and leave behind him an example of self-abasement after a life of self-denial and selfsacrifice for Christ.

In like manner, the beloved disciple St. John, who was privileged in some respects above the rest, lays aside the title of Apostle, and calls himself "the Elder," or simply "John."

(2 John 1. 3 John 1. Rev. i. 1. 4. 9; xxii. 8.)

Besides, St. Paul was writing to the Philippians, of whose love he was well assured. He had no need to speak to them in the tone of authority, or to stand on his Apostolic dignity in addressing those. addressing them. He would, therefore, lay aside his official title, and show his affection towards them by not writing to them as an Apostle, but as a friend and a father.

It may also be worthy of consideration whether St. Paul had not now constituted Epaphroditus to be the Chief Pastor and Apostle of the Philippians. He gives him the title of their Apostle in ii. 25; and Theodoret and others of the ancients affirm that he had been appointed to be their Bishop, and that the chief spiritual authority over them was now committed to him as the successor of the Apostle in that city. See below, note on σὺν και Τιμόθεος] and Timotheus. At the commencement of both the Epistles to the other Macedonian Church, Thessalonica, another name is inserted between those of St. Paul and Timothy, viz. the name of Silvanus or Silas. And he had been St. Paul's chief fellow-labourer at Philippi, as well as at Thessalonica. See Acts xvi. 25.

If, therefore, the Epistle to the Philippians had been written at the same time as the two to the Thessalonians, the name of Silvanus would doubtless have been associated with that of Paul and Timothy.

But this Epistle was written at the close of St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome. See above, Introduction to this Epistle, Then Timothy was with him, and accordingly is associated with him at the commencement of this Epistle, and of that to the Colossians and Philemon written about the same time.

But Silas was not with him then. Indeed it is observable, that after St. Paul's first visit to Corinth, and soon after his first visit to Philippi (Acts xviii. 5), the name of Silas or Silvanus never occurs in the Acts of the Apostles, nor is he mentioned in any Epistle of St. Paul written after that time, as present with him. Indeed it disappears altogether from the Apostolic history Here, then, is a remarkable coincidence of a negative kind between the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles of St. Paul.

This coincidence derives additional interest from the in-

What then became of Silas?

From a hint casually let fall in another part of the New Testament, it appears probable, that he laboured, perhaps with St. Mark, among the Asiatic Churches, to which Mark seems to have been known (Col. iv. 10. Philem. 24. 1 Pet. v. 13, compared with 1 Pet. i. 1), especially the Jewish Christians, to whom Silas would be acceptable, from his connexion with Jerusalem (cp. Acts xv. 22), and was associated with another Apostle, St. Peter, who mentions him with St. Mark, and characterizes him as "the faithful brother, Silvanus." (1 Pet. v. 12.)

Such coincidences as these are not undeserving of notice. A forger who had before him St. Paul's two Epistles to the Thessalonians—the first written of the Epistles—and who saw the name of Silvanus there associated with that of St. Paul, and even taking precedence of that of Timothy, would hardly have failed to give him a place in other Epistles, especially in an Epistle to another Church in Macedonia.

The simultaneous evanescence of the name of Silas from the Acts of the Apostles and from St. Paul's Epistles, is also a silent evidence of the consistency and authority of both.

— ἐν Φιλίπποιs] in Philippi. On the history and character of Philippi, and on the labours and sufferings of Paul and Silas there, about ten years before the date of this Letter, on the occasion of his first visit, see above, notes on Acts xvi. 12-40;

St. Paul paid another visit to Philippi, and spent an Easter there, in his journey from Corinth to Jerusalem with the alms for the poor Christians (Acts xx. 6), soon after he had written the Epistle to the Romans, and about four years before the date of this Epistle.

S. Polycarp, a disciple of St. John, and Bishop of Smyrna, early in the second century wrote an Epistle, still extant, to the Philippians, at their request, in which he refers to this Epistle of St. Paul. He there says (cap. 3), Neither I, nor any like me, can keep pace with the wisdom of the blessed and glorious Paul, who, being with you in the presence of those who then lived, preached the Word of Truth with zeal and soundness; and when absent, wrote an Epistle (ἐπιστολὸς, cp. Acts ix. 2. 1 Cor. xvi. 3. 2 Cor. x. 9. 11. Cp. Polyc. Ep. 11) to you, by which, when you study it, you will be able to be built up into the Faith that has been given you, which is the mother of us all; if Hope follows, and Charity, both toward God, and Christ, and our neighbour, leads the way.

- σὺν ἐπισκόποις] together with (that is, united with) the Episcopi, viz. with those of the second order of Ministers, who were called  $\Pi \rho \epsilon \sigma \beta \acute{\nu} \tau \epsilon \rho o i$ , or elders, on account of their age and dignity, and were also called  ${}^{i} E \pi i \sigma \kappa \sigma \sigma o i$ , or overseers, because they had oversight of the flock. See Chrys. and Theodoret here.

d Rom. 1. 1, 10. d Rom. 1. 1, 19
1 Cor. 1. 4.
Eph. 1. 15.
Col. 1, 2.
1 Thess. 1. 2.
2 Thess 1. 3
e ch 4. 14, 15.
Rom. 12, 13.
2 Cor. 8. 4.
Heb. 13, 16.
1 John 6, 29.
1 Thess. 1, 3. h Rom 1. 9. h Rom 1, 9, & 9 1, 2 Tim 4, 1, i Eph. 1, 8, & 5, 17, Col. 1, 9, & 3, 10, 2 Pet. I, 5, 6, & 3, 18.

3 α Εὐχαριστῶ τῷ Θεῷ μου ἐπὶ πάση τῆ μνεία ὑμῶν, 4 πάντοτε ἐν πάση δεήσει μου ύπερ πάντων ύμων μετὰ χαρας την δέησιν ποιούμενος, 5 ° ἐπὶ τῆ κοινωνία ύμων είς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον ἀπὸ πρώτης ἡμέρας ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν, 6 πεποιθώς αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ὅτι ὁ ἐναρξάμενος ἐν ὑμῖν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐπιτελέσει ἄχρις ἡμέρας Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ. 7 ε καθώς ἐστι δίκαιον ἐμοὶ τοῦτο φρονεῖν ὑπὲρ πάντων ὑμῶν, Τριο 1.3 ε το εχειν με έν τη καρδία ύμας έν τε τοις δεσμοις μου καὶ έν τη ἀπολογία καὶ βεβαιώσει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου συγκοινωνούς μου της χάριτος πάντας ὑμας εντις 1.8 εντις 1.8 εντις 1.8 εντις 2.5 ε

8 η Μάρτυς γάρ μου έστιν ὁ Θεὸς, ὡς ἐπιποθῶ πάντας ὑμᾶς ἐν σπλάγχνοις Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ.

9 ι Καὶ τοῦτο προσεύχομαι, ἴνα ἡ ἀγάπη ὑμῶν ἔτι μᾶλλον καὶ μᾶλλον περισσεύη ἐν ἐπιγνώσει καὶ πάση αἰσθήσει, 10 j εἰς τὸ δοκιμάζειν ὑμᾶς τὰ διαφέροντα, j Rom. 2. 18. & 12. 2. 1 Cor. 10. 32. 1 Thess. 3. 13.

who affirm that Epaphroditus, who was then with St. Paul at Rome, and therefore was not addressed in the Epistle, and whom he calls their 'Απόστολος (ii. 25), was their Chief Pastor; and so Blunt, Early Church, p. 81.

According to this ancient Exposition, we have three orders of Christian Ministers at Philippi:

1. Epaphroditus, the successor of the Apostle at Philippi.

2. Presbyters under him, here called Ἐπίσκοποι, as overseers of the flock.

3. Deacons.

Theodoret says (on 1 Tim. iii.), that in the Apostolic age they called the same persons by the two names, Πρεσβύτεροι, Elders, and Ἐπίσκοποι, Episcopi or Overseers; Persons who are now (i. e. in the fifth century) called Επίσκοποι, were then called 'Απόστολοι, Apostles. But in course of time they reserved the name of Apostle to those who had been truly such (viz. those sent by Christ), and gave the name Episcopus to those who had been formerly called Apostles. Thus (adds Theodoret) Epaphroditus was the Apostle of the Philippians."

See below, on 1 Tim. iii. 1, 2, where other reasons are adduced for the opinion that the word ἐπίσκοποι is here applied to the second order of Ministers in the Church of Philippi; and this opinion seems most probable, even after the elaborate argument of Bp. Pearson (Vind. Ignat. ii. 13, pp. 534-575), who connects the words σὺν ἐπισκόποις with Παῦλος καὶ Τιμόθεος.

The opinion of Theodoret, that Epaphroditus was the Chief Pastor of Philippi, with the two orders of Presbyters and Deacons under him, is entitled to careful consideration.

It had been the Apostle's usage from the beginning to ordain

Presbyters in every Church. (Acts xiv. 23.)

The Apostle may also have already placed some person at Philippi as Chief Pastor over the Presbyters there, as he afterwards placed Timothy at Ephesus, and Titus in Crete; and this person may have been Epaphroditus.

St. Paul was now approaching the end of his Apostolic career, and he would naturally be anxious to provide for the spiritual oversight, after his own departure, of the Churches which he had founded. As Moses appointed Joshua to fill the place which he himself was about to vacate (Deut. xxxi. 7—23); as Kings at the close of their reign have been accustomed to name their successors; as the great Conqueror of the East, the son of that king from whom Philippi derived its name, distributed, before his death, his own dominions among his Generals, so the Apostle of the Gentiles, at the end of his career, would now probably be disposed to delegate his own Apostolic functions to several persons, whom he set as his successors over special portions of his own spiritual province.

The Church of Philippi was one of the first that had been founded by St. Paul; it was a Church, which, from the affectionate regard that it had shown to the Apostle from the beginning of his ministry (iv. 15, 16), was specially entitled to his paternal attention; and would be one of the best qualified, by its ripeness in Christian virtue, to receive such a settled form of Church-Government as the Apostle designed to leave behind him, and would be well disposed to co-operate with him in giving stability to such a system of Church-Polity.

It is therefore probable, that one of the first examples of Diocesan Episcopacy-that is to say, an ecclesiastical form of Government, in which a Chief Pastor, succeeding the Apostles in their ordinary spiritual functions, has under him two other orders of Ministers, namely, Priests and Deacons, and has the oversight of them, and of the people in a particular City and its precincts (παροικία)—was exhibited to the world at Philippi.

3. ἐπὶ πάση τῷ μνείᾳ ὑμῶν] on the whole of my remembrance of you, intimating that the whole of his recollections were entirely those of joy, unalloyed by any admixture of regret or disapprobation.

5. ἐπὶ τῆ κοινωνία ὁμῶν εἰς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον] for your communion toward the Gospel. This communion was exhibited—

(1) by their incorporation into the fellowship of the body of Christ;

(2) by their continual indwelling in it by faith and love, and harmonious co-operation with it and its Ministers in sympathy and suffering, and affectionate contribution towards its spiritual life by almsgiving and prayers. See iv. 15. Rom. xii, 13; xv. 27. 2 Cor. viii. 4. Heb. xiii. 16.

See Chrys. and Theophyl. here, who say, How did the Philippians thus communicate? By acts of love to St. Paul, and by thus associating themselves in labours and sufferings for the Gospel, and so communicating with Christ. Cp. Matt. x. 40, and the explanatory word συγκοινωνούς in v. 7 here.

— ἀπὸ πρώτης ἡμέρας ἄχρι τοῦ νῦν] from the first day until now: an expression made more significant by the fact that Philippi was the first City in Greece to which he had preached. See

6. ἄχρις ἡμέρας Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ] to the day of Jesus Christ. He connects the first day (v.5) with the Last Day. The first day marks the beginning of their new life. From that first day their view is extended to the Day of Christ, the Last Day: or, in other words, from their first Resurrection, in Holy Baptism, to spiritual life, even to their second Resurrection-namely, the Resurrection from the dead-to life Everlasting. Cp. Rev. xx. 5, 6-12, 13. John v. 25.

7. έν τε τοις δεσμοις-όντας] inasmuch as both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the Gospel, ye all are my partners in my grace.

He says 'partners in grace,' because (as he expresses it in v. 29) not only to believe in Christ, but also to suffer for Him, was freely given them as a grace (εχαρίσθη). Theodoret.

The proof of their partnership in his grace was shown by their kindness towards the Apostle at Rome (iv. 10), now that he was a prisoner for Christ, and His Ambassador in bonds.

 (Eph. iii. 1; iv. 1; vi. 20. Philem. 9.)
 — ἀπολογία] my public defence. See on v. 13.
 8. ἐν σπλάγχνοις Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ] in the bowels of Christ Jesus, with Whom I am incorporated, and in Whom I dwell, and He in me, so that He lives in me (Gal. ii. 20); and I yearn for you with His love, even with the σπλάγχνα Θεοῦ. Cp. Luke i. 78. "Induimus et quasi transformamur in viscera Christi, cum Ejus misericordiam, compassionem et amorem induimus." A Lapide.

9. προσεύχομαι, "va] I pray that -. The "ra marks both the subject and object of the prayer. See Mark v. 18; vii. 26; viii. 22; xiv. 35. Luke viii. 31. 1 Cor. i. 10; xvi. 12. 2 Cor. ix. 5. Eph. iii. 14. Philem. 6. Winer, § 44, p. 300.

 - ἐν ἐπιγνώσει] in sound knowledge. Cp. Col. i. 9.
 - πάση αἰσθήσει] every moral sense, or feeling; that delicate tact and instinct which almost intuitively perceives what is right, and almost unconsciously shrinks from what is wrong. Cp. Heb.

10. δοκιμάζειν—τὰ διαφέροντα] to approve the things that are excettent; literally, that differ by superiority. See Rom. ii. 18 ίνα ἦτε εἰλικρινεῖς καὶ ἀπρόσκοποι εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ, 11 k πεπληρωμένοι καρ- k John 15. 4, 5, 8.

Ερίι, 1. 12, 20
& 2. 10. πον δικαιοσύνης τον δια Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ εἰς δόξαν καὶ έπαινον Θεοῦ.

γενέσθαι εν όλω τω πραιτωρίω, καὶ τοῖς λοιποῖς πᾶσι· 14 m καὶ τοὺς πλείονας 1 Thess. 2. 2.

- είλικρινεις και ἀπρόσκοποι] pure and without offence. Two things are here predicated of them; first, that they are pure; and, secondly, that they do not trip and stumble in their Christian course; are not offended and scandalized by suffering, or by evil examples.

It required no ordinary discrimination and intelligence on the part of the Philippians, in approving the things that were excellent, not to stumble at, and to be staggered by, the things which had happened to St. Paul.

They had seen the Apostle delivered by a miracle from prison in their own city (Acts xvi. 26), and yet he has now been imprisoned again; he has been kept in prison two years at Cæsarea, and now he is in prison at Rome. And they hear of no miracle wrought to deliver him from his bonds. How was this to be explained? Was he now deserted by the Power which once had rescued him at Philippi?

The Apostle, therefore, might well warn them not to stumble and be perplexed by what they heard: well might he assure them that all that had befallen him had tended "to the furtherance of the Gospel" (v. 12), and that the chains by which he was bound were instruments in God's hands for manifesting the Gospel to the World.

On the word είλικρινής=καθαρός, άδολος, αμιγής (Hesych., Suid.), see on 1 Cor. v. 8; and on ἀπρόσκοπος = ἀσκανδάλιστος (Hesych.), cp. Acts xxiv. 16.

11. καρπὸν—τόν] So the majority of the MS. authorities, and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Alf., Ellicott. The Vatican MS. omits τόν. Elz. has καρπῶν—τῶν. Οη καρπὸς δικαιοσύνης, see James iii. 18.

12. Γινώσκειν-είς προκοπήν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου] Now I would have you to know, brethren, that the matters touching me—my arrest at Jerusalem, my imprisonment at Cæsarea and Rome have turned out rather for the furtherance of the Gospel,-rather than to my hurt, and to the triumph of evil men persecuting the Gospel and me. For an historical demonstration of the striking truth of this assertion of the Apostle, see above on Acts xxv. 23.

Indeed this sentence might form a Motto not only to the Book which records his sufferings, but also to the History of the Church. Cp. Introduction to the Acts of the Apostles, pp.

xix-xxiv, or pp. 10-13 new edit.

13. ὥστε-δεσμούς μου] so that my bonds have been made manifest in Christ: that is, as laid on me in Him, and for His sake, and not for any crime of mine; so that I am His prisoner (Eph. iii. 1. Philem. 1. 9), and my bonds are the bonds of the Gospel. (Philem, 13.)

— ἐν ὅλφ τῷ πραιτωρίῳ] in the whole Prætorium. These words have occasioned much discussion.

With a view to the right interpretation of them, it may be remembered-

(1) That the other prisoners who were conveyed to Rome with St. Paul (Acts xxvii. 42), were delivered by the Centurion, who escorted them, to the στρατοπεδάρχης, or Commander of the Camp, the Præfectus Prætorio at Rome. Acts xxviii. 16.

(2) But St. Paul, probably on account of the impression which he had made on the mind of the Roman Centurion of the Augustan Band (xxvii. 43), already prepossessed in his favour (xxvii. 3) by his presence of mind and language in the storm (xxvii. 21-26), and by his miracles at Malta (xxviii. 7-9), was treated with greater consideration than the other prisoners (xxviii. 16), and was allowed to dwell apart by himself, with a soldier that guarded him, and occupied a lodging (ξενίαν, xxviii. 23) or private hired apartment of his own ( $7\delta iov \mu i \sigma \theta \omega \mu a$ ) at Rome, and was enabled to send for the principal Jews three days after his arrival (xxviii. 17), and to receive them there, and as many as would come to him; and abode there "two whole years preaching the kingdom of God, and the things concerning our Lord Jesus Christ, with all boldness, no man forbidding him." (xxviii. 30, 31.)

(3) Such is the narrative of St. Luke. To it St. Paul adds. here, that "his bonds were made manifest in the whole Prætorium, and to all the rest." And he also says in iv. 22, "All the Saints salute you, particularly they who are of the household of Casar."

(4) What then does St. Paul here mean by the word Pra-Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophylact, Primasius, and the main body of ancient Expositors, understand by that word the Vol. II.—Part III.

Royal Residence of the Emperor Nero, which was on the Palatine

Hill, on the South of the Forum at Rome.

(5) But since the time of Perizonius (A.D. 1690) it has been affirmed by many learned writers, that by the word *Præ*torium St. Paul does not designate the Palace of the Emperor within the City and on the Palatine Hill, but that he means thereby the Camp of the Prætorian soldiers, or Body Guard of the Emperor, which was quartered on the N. E. of the City of Rome, outside the Wall beyond the Quirinal Hill.

This opinion has been maintained with much ingenuity, especially by a learned writer in the "Journal of Classical and Sacred Philology," Cambridge, No. X. Art. iii.

(6) It has been affirmed by other writers that Pratorium here means only the Barrack of the Prætorian Guards attached to the residence of the Emperor in the Capital.

(7) But neither of these latter opinions appears to be correct. As to the former of the two, it seems to have been assumed too confidently, that St. Luke says that St. Paul was committed to the Commander in Chief of the Prætorian Guard, στρατοπεδάρχης (xxviii. 16), in order that he might be confined in the Prætorian Camp.

There is nothing in St. Luke's narrative to justify such a supposition.

A distinction was made between St. Paul and the other prisoners (v. 16), and he was allowed to dwell by himself in a ξενία. or μίσθωμα, and to receive all who came to him.

(8) It has also been too easily taken for granted, that the word Pratorium must mean the Prætorian Camp, or Barrack.

But this word, Pratorium, occurs in seven other places of the New Testament, and in none of those does it mean a camp, but in all of them it signifies the residence of a King (Acts xxiii. 35), or of the Representative of a King, especially in his military and judicial, or, in Roman language, his pratorian, character. See Matt. xxvii. 27. Mark xv. 16. John xviii. 28. 33; xix. 9.

In this sense the word is used in Acts xxiii. 35. So also classical writers of St. Paul's age use the word; as, for instance, residence: "Et circa Regem atque ipsa ad Prætoria as the royal residence: "Et circa Regem atque ipsa ad Prætoria densæ Miscentur." And Juvenal says (x. 161), in the same sense, "sedet ad Prætoria Regis." And in Suetonius (Aug. 63, 72, Calig. 37, Tit. 8) the word Pratorium is employed in the same sense as 'palais' and 'palazzo' in modern times. In Zonaras' Lex. we find  $\pi \rho \alpha i \tau \omega \rho i \varphi = \pi \alpha \lambda \alpha \tau i \varphi$ , and in the Acta Thomæ, pp. 8. 30, 31. 33, ed. Thilo. Wieseler, p. 405.

(9) Further, special salutations are sent in this Epistle from those Christians who were of Casar's household (iv. 22); and this appears to confirm the supposition that the apartment, in which St. Paul dwelt, was not in the extramural Barrack of the Prætorian Guards, but was connected with the Imperial Residence on Mount Palatine in the heart of the Roman Capital.

(10) But it may be asked,

Why then does he not say that his bonds were made manifest in Christ, ἐν ὅλφ τῷ παλατίφ, or ἐν ὅλοις τοῖς βασιλείοις? Why does he use the word Prætorium?

Because it was not with Cæsar, as residing in a Court, that St. Panl had to do; but he was brought before Cæsar as the Sovereign Power, who "bare the sword" (Rom. xiii. 4), in his military and judicial capacity.
St. Paul had appealed unto Cæsar, and to Cæsar he was sent. It was to the Imperator in his Prætorium, and not to the Prince in his Palace; it was to Cæsar as the World's Prætor (for such he was, and therefore all the Legates of the Emperor's Provinces were called Proprætors; Dio, liii. 13), and as having the prerogative of final cognizance and judicature in all causes of Appeal, that St. Paul was sent by Festus from Cæsarea to Rome. Cp. Acts xxv. 21. 25-27.

(11) Yet, further; it was in the Tribunal of Cæsar, sitting as Supreme Judge of Appeals in his Prætorium on the Palatine Hill (Dio, 1vii. 7), that St. Paul was actually tried. Cp. the authorities quoted by Howson, ii. pp. 541-543.

(12) This interpretation is that which (as has been already observed) was generally accepted by Christian Antiquity, and has recently received the approval of the able and learned Author of the "History of the Romans under the Empire;" the Rev. Charles Merivale, B.D., vol. vi. p. 268, note.

των άδελφων έν Κυρίω πεποιθότας τοις δεσμοίς μου περισσοτέρως τολμών άφόβως τὸν λόγον λαλείν.

15 Τινές μεν καὶ διὰ φθόνον καὶ ἔριν, τινές δὲ καὶ δι' εὐδοκίαν τὸν Χριστὸν η 1 Cor. 9. 16, 17. κηρύσσουσιν, 16 η οί μεν εξ αγάπης, είδότες ότι είς απολογίαν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου  $\frac{Gal.\ 2.\ 7.\ 8.}{1\ Tim.\ 2.\ 7.}$  κε $\hat{\iota}$ μαι,  $\frac{17}{1}$  οἱ δὲ ἐξ ἐρι $\theta$ είας τὸν Χριστὸν καταγγέλλουσιν, οὐχ ἁγνῶς, οἰόμενοι  $\frac{1}{2}$  Tim.  $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$   $\frac{1}{1}$  θλίψιν έγείρειν τοις δεσμοίς μου.

(13) If it is the true interpretation (as the Ancient Church believed), then it may be added, that it has the advantage of suggesting some interesting and heart-stirring reflections, which would be marred by recent expositions.

St. Paul's DIVINE MASTER had been arrested by the Jews, and had been delivered up to the Romans, and stood in bonds at Jerusalem, arraigned before Cæsar's Representative in his Prætorium. Matt. xxvii. 27. Mark xv. 16. John xviii. 28. 33;

St. Paul himself had been arrested by the Jews, and was now in bonds for his Master, arraigned before Cæsar himself in his Prætorium at Rome.

It must have been an inexpressible comfort to the Apostle to be thus made like unto CHRIST.

Next, it would have been hardly worth while for St. Paul to tell the Philippians that his bonds were made manifest in the whole of the soldiers' barracks outside the city wall.

But it was very important for him to declare in this Epistle, designed for them and for all Churches of the world, that his sufferings for Christ, and with them the tidings of the Gospel, were made manifest in the heart of Rome, the World's Metropolis, and even in the royal residence of its Sovereign.

It was also a striking fact, that after his bonds had been already made manifest in Christ in the Prætorium of the Roman Procurator, the Vicegerent of Cæsar at Cæsarea, for the space of two years (Acts xxiii. 35; xxiv. 27, see on Acts xxiv. 23, 24), those bonds were also made manifest at Rome, during a like space of two years, in the Prætorium of the Roman Cæsar himself.

Well might he say, that what had befallen him "had happened for the furtherance of the Gospel" (v. 12).

Lastly, there was a remarkable propriety in the mention of this fact in the present Epistle.

It is addressed to the Church of Philippi, which was a Roman Colony in Macedonia (see on Acts xvi. 12), a Colony which bore the Roman title of Augusta Julia.

The Philippians had listened to St. Paul's preaching, and had seen his miracles; they had witnessed his wonderful deliverance from prison by an earthquake in their city. (Acts xvi. 11-26.) They had acknowledged him as a Roman Citizen. (Acts xvi. 38.) But they had heard that he was now again a prisoner, in their own Mother City, Rome.

Was he now forsaken by Christ? Was Christ not able to defend him? They might be perplexed by such surmises as these. See on v. 10.

It must therefore have been no small consolation to them, no slight confirmation of their faith (both as Romans and Christians), to learn that by means of this very imprisonment of their own Apostle, the blessings of the Gospel had been communicated to the Royal Residence of their own Cæsar, the supreme Military Chief and Judicial Arbiter of the World, and had been diffused to others in the great Metropolis; and it must have been with no small comfort that they now received greetings of Christian affection communicated to them by St. Paul from "those of Cæsar's household."

- τοις λοιποίς πασι] to all the rest.

How could St. Paul's bonds have been made manifest to all the rest of the world at Rome?

It could hardly be otherwise than by some public hearing of Appeals like his were heard by the Emperor in his Palace. and in this hearing the Emperor presided, and was assisted by Twenty Assessors, two of whom were the Consuls, and the rest were high Functionaries of the City. (Dio, liii. 21.)

After the Trial each Assessor delivered his opinion in writing to the Emperor, who, having read the several opinions in private, afterwards pronounced Judgment. (Sueton. Nero, 15. Howson, ii. 546.)

It seems probable that this Epistle to the Philippians was written in the interval between the Trial and the Sentence.

For (1) St. Paul here speaks of the sympathy of the Philippians with him in his 'Απολογία, or public defence. Cp. this forensic use of the word, Acts xxii. 1; xxv. 16. 2 Tim. iv. 16; and ἀπολογοῦμαι, Acts xix. 33; xxiv. 10; xxv. 8; xxvi. 1, 2. 24.

(2) He is contemplating the nearness of the issue either for life or death (i. 21-24), and predicts the result of the trial (v. 25).

(3) He hopes to send Timothy immediately, as soon as he sees what is the result, and says that he trusts to come soon to Philippi (ii. 24).

And (4) he here asserts, that his bonds have been made manifest to "all the Prætorium," and (as by a consequence of that judicial manifestation) to "all the rest" at Rome.

14. τους πλείονας ] the more part.

15. Tives her kal] Some persons indeed even through envy and strife, preach Christ. He does not mean any of the brethren mentioned above, but some other parties, perhaps Judaizers, jealous of St. Paul's influence; some of those at Rome who may have been offended by the doctrines propounded in his Epistle to the Church of Rome, where he now was. Cp. 1 Tim. vi. 4, where the feelings here described of  $\phi\theta\delta\rho\sigma$ s and  $\xi\rho\iota$ s are specified as associated with the teaching of those who do not consent to "the doctrine according to godliness."

16. οἱ μὲν ἐξ ἀγάπης-δεσμοῖς μου] Some indeed preach Christ out of love, knowing that I am set for the defence of the Gospel; but others proclaim Christ out of partizanship, not purely, thinking to raise up affliction to my bonds.

This is the order of the paragraphs in the majority of the best MS. authorities, and so Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Alf., Ellicott.—Elz. inverts it, putting οἱ μὲν ἐξ ἀγάπης in the first place.
On the sense of ἐριθεία see above, Gal. v. 20.

Some expositors interpret οἱ ἐξ ἀγάπης as equivalent to those that are of love, that is, who act on a principle of love; and of & έριθείαs as tantamount to those that are of rivalry, that is, who act from a spirit of contentiousness. Compare Rom. ii. 8.

This rendering is entitled to consideration, but it is not confirmed by the Ancient Versions; and it would seem to intimate that the Christians at Rome were divided into two parties, either of love toward, or partizanship against, St. Paul personally, and that they acted on motives relative to himself in their announcement of Christ.

Such an exposition seems hardly in keeping with the modesty of the Apostle.

17. οἰόμενοι θλίψιν ἐγείρειν τοῖς δ. μοῦ] thinking to raise up affliction to my bonds.

To understand this expression it must be remembered that though St. Paul was in bonds, yet he enjoyed much relaxation (ἄνεσιν) in his confinement (see Acts xxviii. 16. 30, 31); he did not suffer that affliction which might have been expected in his condition; and what he complains of here, is, that his bonds were made more rigorous and galling by the agency of some who professed to be his friends.

The mention of the word ἐριθεία (properly 'mercenary partizanship') suggests that the false Teachers here mentioned acted from venal motives; and he says that they preached οὐχ ἁγνῶς, not holily, i.e. not in a pure love of truth, but with corrupt minds and sinister views.

He thus seems to describe that class of persons, who are described by him in another place as making a traffic of godliness (1 Tim. vi. 5), and are there charged with fostering the passions here mentioned, "envy and strife." (1 Tim. vi. 4.)

Such Teachers as these would bring Christianity into discredit, and would entail hardships and afflictions on the Apostle's bonds from the Authorities of Rome, being exasperated against him, as if he were a preacher of a religion of insubordination and sedition. Such persons would inflame the passions of the multitude against their Rulers, and would irritate the Civil Magistrates against Christianity, and against its Apostle, by not qualifying the doctrines of Christ's Sovereignty, and of Christian Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity, with those reasonable restraints with which those doctrines are always coupled and limited by St. Paul himself, especially in his teaching concerning the duties of Subjects to Sovereigns, and of Slaves to their Masters, on which he specially dwells in his Epistles to Rome, and from Rome (Rom. xiii. 1-4. Eph. vi. 5-8. Col. iii. 22, and Philemon), and by which he endeavours to disabuse the Heathen of the prejudices raised against the Gospel by his enemies, especially by the Judaizing faction.

The sense is well expressed by Primasius, who says that "they preached for worldly lucre, and excited obloquy against 18 Τί γάρ; πλην παντί τρόπω είτε προφάσει είτε άληθεία Χριστός καταγγέλλεται, καὶ ἐν τούτω χαίρω, ἀλλὰ καὶ χαρήσομαι.

19 ° Οίδα γὰρ ὅτι τοῦτό μοι ἀποβήσεται εἰς σωτηρίαν διὰ τῆς ὑμῶν δεήσεως, ο 2 Cor. 1. 11. καὶ ἐπιχορηγίας τοῦ Πνεύματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, 20 P κατὰ τὴν ἀποκαραδοκίαν p Rom. 5. 5. καὶ ἐλπίδα μου, ὅτι ἐν οὐδενὶ αἰσχυνθήσομαι, ἀλλ' ἐν πάση παρρησία, ὡς πάντοτε, καὶ νῦν μεγαλυνθήσεται Χριστὸς ἐν τῷ σώματί μου, εἶτε διὰ ζωῆς εἶτε διὰ θανάτου.

 $^{21}$   $^{9}$ Έμοὶ γὰρ τὸ ζ $\hat{\eta}$ ν Χριστὸς, καὶ τὸ ἀποθανεῖν κέρδος.  $^{22}$  Εἰ δὲ τὸ ζ $\hat{\eta}$ ν ἐν  $^{q}$   $^{1}$  Cor. 1. 30.  $^{21}$ σαρκὶ τοῦτό μοι καρπὸς ἔργου, καὶ τί αἱρήσομαι οὐ γνωρίζω,  $^{23}$  τουνέχομαι  $^{66.14.}_{r\ 2\ Cor.\ 5.\ 8.}$  δὲ ἐκ τῶν δύο, τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν ἔχων εἰς τὸ ἀναλῦσαι καὶ σὺν Χριστῷ εἶναι.  $^{2\ Tim.\ 4.\ 6.}$

Paul by their preaching, and aggravated the sufferings of his bonds;" and so Chrys., Theodoret, Theophyl.

The full development of this ἐριθεία or mercenary partizanship and contentiousness of false brethren, is traced in St. Paul's first Epistle to Timothy (vi. 1-6) and to Titus (i. 10-12); and it is well known to have brought manifold afflictions on the first preachers of Christianity, and much odium on the Gospel

 - ἐγείρειν] to raise up. So A, B, D*, F, G. Elz. ἐπιφέρειν.
 18. Τί γάρ; - χαρήσομαι] What then? Notwithstanding, in every way, whether in pretence (see 1 Thess. ii. 5) or in truth, Christ is preached, and therein I do rejoice, yea and I will

This text has been sometimes alleged as an apology for Preaching in Schism.

But it may be doubted whether St. Paul is here speaking of ministerial preaching at all. Cp. Professor Blunt on the Early Fathers, p. 291. But even if this be admitted, it may be remarked that these persons preached Christ, and that St. Paul approved the preaching of Christ; but St. Paul did not, in any respect, approve the preaching in strife. On the contrary, he teaches that envy and strife are carnal (1 Cor. iii. 3); and in the teaches that envy and strile are carried (1 Cor. in. 3); and in the next chapter of this Epistle (ii. 3) he says, using the same word as here, "Let nothing be done through  $\hat{\epsilon}\rho\iota\theta\hat{\epsilon}(a:)$ " and St. James says, using again the same word, that "where there is  $\hat{\epsilon}\rho\iota\theta\hat{\epsilon}(a,$  there is every evil work" (James iii. 14. 16); and "if ye have sensual, devilish." See S. Chrysostom's Sermon on this text, v. p. 410, ύγιὲς ἢν τὸ δόγμα, ἐαυτοὺς δὲ ἀπολλύουσιν ἐκεῖνοι έξ ἀπεχθείας κπρύττοντες. Preachers in Schism are compared by the Fathers to Torches, which, while they lighten others, waste away themselves. The false Prophets, in sheep's clothing, imitate the Shepherd's voice; but they have not any reward from the Chief Shepherd, who commands us to beware of them. (Matt. vii. 15.) They may speak well, but they are doing ill: and they will be judged according to their works (1 Cor. iii. 3. Rom. ii. 6). " Quod fecit male, non prædicat de Cathedra Christi; inde lædit, "Quod fecti mate, non prædicat de Cathedra Christi; inde teatr, unde mala facit, non unde bona dicit; cùm audis bona dicentem, ne imiteris mala facientem." August. (Tractat. in Joann. xlvi.) Cp. Aug. Serm. 101 and 137. "Novit Dominus de malis bene operari, et ad meam omnia salutem gubernat; et adversa vertit in prospera." Primasius. Cp. Bp. Andrewes, v. p. 190.

Whatsoever we do without religious affection is hateful in Cd's sight rabes in the reference in the restriction.

God's sight, who is therefore said to respect adverbs more than verbs—and the mind approves itself to God, not by doing, but by doing well. Hooker (V. lxii. 5).

21. 'Εμοl τὸ ζῆν Χριστός] to me to live is Christ. Cp. Gal. ii. 20. "Nulla voluntas mihi vivendi est, nisi ut corpus Ejus ædificem." Primasius.

- ἀποθανεῖν κέρδος] to die is gain. Because I shall then have a nearer fruition of the presence and glory of Christ (v. 23).

The language of one who soon afterwards wrote to the Christians of the city where St. Paul now was, and died a martyr at Rome, and who is expressing his ardent desire for martyrdon, may be compared here, "Suffer me to be the food of wild beasts, that I may attain unto God, — σῖτός εἰμι τοῦ Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ. Ι do not command you, as Peter and Paul did; they were Apostles, I am condemned. They were freemen, I am only a slave. . . . Suffer me to die. Pardon me in this; I know what is best for me. Now I begin to be a disciple. Let nothing that is seen or unseen envy me the joy of being Christ's. Fire and the Cross, the assaults of wild Beasts, lacerations, distractions, and dispersions of my bones, the crushing of my joints, the grinding of my whole body—welcome, welcome, to them all—so that I may gain Him! I covet not kingdoms of earth. I long to die into Christ Jesus, rather than to be king of the World. Him I seek, Who died for me; Him I long for, Who rose again for me. Now my birth is near. Forgive me, brethren; do not hinder me from being born; do not desire that I should die-I who desire to be God's. Allow me to emerge into the pure light; when I shall arrive there, I shall be a man of God. Suffer me to be an imitator of the Passion of my God." S. Ignatius (ad Rom.

22. Ei δè τὸ ζῆν ἐν σαρκὶ τοῦτό μοι καρπὸς ἔργου] But if to live in the flesh, if, I say, this is to me the fruit of my labour, then what to choose I wot not. I have said, that to me to live is Christ; that is, my life, as long as it is spared to me, consists in being one with Him, and in living in Him, by Him, and for Him, and in doing His work, and in promoting His glory.

I have also said, that to me to die is gain; for when I die,

I have also said, that to me to die is gain; for when I die, I hope to have a nearer and fuller enjoyment of His presence.

But if to live in the flesh, if even this, I say, is not to me and others a barren thing, but is the very fruit of labour; that is, if the essence of that fruit is in my life, and if that life is, as it were, a productive tree, upon which the ripe fruit of Apostolic labour grows, and that fruit is ministerial to the everlasting health of others as well as to my own, then I even wet not which health of others, as well as to my own, then I even wot not which I ought to choose, whether to die or to live; and therefore I leave myself in the hands of God, Who alone knoweth all things.

An important moral has been hence derived by Irenæus

(v. 12. 4), "Si vivere in carne hic fructus operis est, non utique substantiam contemnebat carnis." If to live in the flesh is the very fruit of his labour, verily he did not despise the substance of his flesh. No; and hence may also be deduced a solemn protest against the sin of self-destruction, by which a man recklessly robs himself and others of the fruit which ought to grow on the tree of his own life, - which is God's tree, - and impiously hews down that tree with his own hands. Cp. Chrys., Theodoret.

The pronoun τοῦτο, this, brings out the preceding clause more emphatically. See I Cor. vi. 4, and cp. below, iii. 7; iv. 9.

Winer, § 23, p. 145.

On aiphoopen, I shall choose, the future indicative, where a conjunctive would rather be expected, see Winer, § 41. 4, p. 267.

On this use of γνωρίζω, I recognize, = γινώσκω (Phavorin.), see Job xxxiv. 25. Prov. iii. 6, LXX. Schleusner.

The kal, even, indicates that so far from arrogating to himself the liberty of choosing for himself what should be his lot, whether to live or to die, the Apostle does not even understand what he shall choose; he frankly confesses that he has not the requisite qualifications for making any choice at all.

23.  $\sigma vv \not\in \chi o \mu at \delta \delta$  (so the best MSS. Elz. has  $\gamma d \rho$ )  $\delta \kappa \tau \hat{\omega} v \delta \hat{v} o$ ] yea, I am held together by the two—as in his body he was held at this time a prisoner between the two soldiers, to whom he was bound by two chains (Acts xii. 6), so in his mind he was held in a strait betwixt two internal powers.

— την ἐπιθυμίαν ἔχων κ.τ.λ.] having my desire, or yearning toward the (τδ) departure—which will one day be mine.

My Desire  $(\hat{\eta} \in \pi_1 \theta \nu_\mu l \alpha)$  turns its eyes in that direction, and longs for that blessed time, when I shall be permitted to loose my cable from the shore of this world, where I am a stranger and a foreigner, and to set sail for the heavenly harbour of everlasting

But my Reason acts as a chain, drawing me in another direction, and still holds me to earth.

In a few years afterwards, he was allowed to exclaim, using the same figure, in the same city where he now was, "The hour of my departure is at hand." See on 2 Tim. iv. 6.

This word, ἐπιθυμία, thus used by St. Paul, seems to have

This word, ξπιθυμία, thus used by St. Paul, seems to have been consecrated to express the longing of Christian Martyrs to depart and be with Christ. Cp. Ignat. Mart. 3, ἐπιθυμία τοῦ πάθους, and 6, τοῦ ἀγίου μάρτυρος πληροῦσθαι τὴν ἐπιθυμίαν κατὰ τὸ γεγραμμένον ἐπιθυμία δικαίου δεκτὴ (Prov. x. 24), and 7, τὸν τῆς φιλο χρίστου ἐπιθυμίας τελειώσαντι δρόμον.

On this text, cp. Tertullian, de Patientiâ 9, and Augustine iii. 2528. 2571; v. 1778. "Qui desiderat dissolvi, et esse cum Christo, patienter vivit, et delectabiliter moritur." Aug.

Y y 2

πολλώ γαρ μαλλον κρείσσον 24 το δε επιμένειν εν τη σαρκί αναγκαιότερον δι' ύμᾶς.

t 2 Cor. 1. 14. & 5. 12.

u Eph. 4. 1. Col. 1. 10. 1 Thess. 2. 12. X Matt. 5. 10—12. Rom. 8. 17. 2 Thess. 1. 5. 2 Tim. 2 11, 12. y Acts 5. 41. Rom. 5. 3. a 1 Cor. 3. 16. & 6. 19, 20. & 12. 13. 2 Cor. 13. 14. Col. 3. 12. 10. 16. & 15. 5. 1 Cor. 1. 10. ch 3. 16. 1 Pet. 3. 8. c Rom. 12. 10. d 1 Cor. 10. 24. & 13. 5. e Matt. 11. 29. John 13. 15. 1 Pet. 2. 21. 1 John 2. 6. 1 John 2. 6. f John 1. 1, 2 & 5. 18. & 17. 5. Col. 1. 15. Heb. 1, 3.

25 · Καὶ τοῦτο πεποιθώς οἶδα ὅτι μενῶ καὶ συμπαραμενῶ πᾶσιν ὑμίν, εἰς τὴν ύμων προκοπην καὶ χαρὰν της πίστεως, 26 τ ίνα τὸ καύχημα ύμων περισσεύη έν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ ἐν ἐμοὶ, διὰ τῆς ἐμῆς παρουσίας πάλιν πρὸς ὑμᾶς.

27 " Μόνον ἀξίως τοῦ εὐαγγελίου τοῦ Χριστοῦ πολιτεύεσθε, ἵνα εἶτε ἐλθὼν καὶ ίδων ύμας, είτε άπων, άκούσω τα περί ύμων, ότι στήκετε έν ένι πνεύματι, μια ψυχη συναθλοῦντες τη πίστει τοῦ εὐαγγελίου 28 x καὶ μη πτυρόμενοι έν μηδενὶ ύπο των αντικειμένων, ήτις έστιν αυτοίς ένδειξις απωλείας, ύμων δε σωτηρίας, καὶ τοῦτο ἀπὸ Θεοῦ, <sup>29 y</sup> ὅτι ὑμῖν ἐχαρίσθη τὸ ὑπὲρ Χριστοῦ, οὐ μόνον τὸ εἰς αὐτὸν πιστεύειν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ὑπὲρ αὐτοῦ πάσχειν 30 τὸν αὐτὸν ἀγῶνα ἔχοντες οδον είδετε έν έμοι, και νῦν ἀκούετε ἐν ἐμοί.

ΙΙ. 1 a Εἴ τις οὖν παράκλησις ἐν Χριστῷ, εἴ τι παραμύθιον ἀγάπης, εἴ τις κοινωνία πνεύματος, εί τινα σπλάγχνα καὶ οἰκτιρμοὶ, 2 5 πληρώσατε μοῦ τὴν χαράν, ίνα τὸ αὐτὸ φρονητε, την αὐτην ἀγάπην ἔχοντες, σύμψυχοι, τὸ εν φρονοῦντες, 3 ε μηδεν κατ' εριθείαν ή κενοδοξίαν, άλλα τη ταπεινοφροσύνη άλλήλους ήγούμενοι ὑπερέχοντας έαυτῶν, 4 d μὴ τὰ έαυτῶν ἔκαστος σκοποῦντες, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ ἐτέρων ἔκαστοι.

5 - Τοῦτο γὰρ φρονείσθω ἐν ὑμῖν ὁ καὶ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, 6 ' ὁς ἐν μορφῆ

- ἀναλῦσαι] to depart; properly, to loose,—'solvere funem,'
-to loose a cable, as a ship does when leaving the shore. He continues the metaphor which he had been using: he had described himself as bound ( $\sigma v \nu \epsilon \chi \delta \mu \epsilon \nu \sigma s$ ), he now expresses a desire to loose his cable from the earthly shore, and to set sail for the haven of eternal peace.

- σὸν Χριστῷ εἶναι] to be with Christ. Not to be any longer έν σαρκl, in the flesh, v. 24 (to which the words here are opposed), but to be delivered from the burden of the flesh, as an ancient Father expresses it; "Lucrum maximum computabat Apostolus, post hanc vitam sæcularibus laqueis non teneri, jam nullis pecut his malis careret; et ut ad illam perfectam justitiam, quæ ista non pateretur, perveniret." Augustine (c. duas Epistolas Pelagian. iv. 28). Hence St. Paul says that to him "to live is Christ," but to die is to be "with Christ." catis et vitiis carnis obnoxium fieri; et ideò mortem desideravit

On the state of the disembodied spirit after death, see on Luke xii. 4; xvi. 23; xxiii. 43, and on 2 Cor. xii. 2.

Luke xii. 4; xvi. 23; xxiii. 43, and on 2 Cor. xii. 2.

— μάλλον κρείσσον] On the emphatic force of this double comparative, cp. Mark vii. 36. 2 Cor. vii. 13. Winer, § 35, p. 214, and Wetstein.—Elz. omits γὰρ here, but it is in A, B, C.

26. τὸ καύχημα] the subject of glorying. Gal. vi. 4. 1 Cor. v. 6; ix. 15. 2 Cor. i. 14. Rom. iv. 2.

27. Μόνον ἀξίως—πολιτεύεσθε] Only do ye comport yourselves as fellow-citizens of Christ's Kingdom, in a manner worthy of Christ's Cornel. Ve. inhabitants of Philippi, who dwell in Greece.

Christ's Gospel. Ye inhabitants of Philippi, who dwell in Greece, and justly regard it as an honourable distinction to be citizens of Rome, and subjects of Cæsar, to you I say, Live as citizens of Heaven, and as loyal subjects of Christ. See on Acts xvi. 12. 20-22. 37, 38; and below, on iii. 20. S. Polycarp, in his Epistle to the Philippians, adopts this expression (c. 5), έδν πολιτευσώμεθα άξιως αὐτοῦ, καὶ συμ-βασιλεύσομεν αὐτῷ. So Polycrates (Bishop of Ephesus in the 2nd century), ap. Euseb. v. 24, Μελίτωνα ἐν ἀγίφ Πνεύματι πάντα πολιτευσάμενον, and ibid. ἐν Κυρίω Ἰησοῦ πάντοτε πεπολίτευμαι.

28. πτυρόμενοι] scared-as horses. Diod. Sic. de Alex. M. xvii. 34, ού πτύρομαι έπὶ τοῖς καταπλησσομένοις. A word perhaps connected with πτερόν. "Puniceæve agitant pavidos formidine pennæ" (Virg. Georg. iii. 372), or it may be derived from πτοέω, πτήσσω (Passow). As to the sense, compare 2 Thess. i. 4-7.

- ήτις] which to them is an evidence of perdition, but to you of salvation; your intrepid bearing, due to God's grace, is an evidence of his favour to you, and of His wrath against your enemies. See 2 Thess. i. 5.

29. έχαρίσθη] it was given as a grace, or favour. See v. 7. " Breviter utrumque commendavit Apostolus, et causam pro quâ patiamur, et patientiam quâ mala perferamus, à Deo nobis esse. Quia robis donatum est pro Christo, &c. Ecce causa bona, quia pro Christo, non pro hæresi et schismate contrà Christum. Vobis, inquit, donatum est pro Christo, non solùm ut credatis in Eum, sed etiam ut patiamini pro Eo. Hæc est vera Patientia, hanc diligamus, hanc tencamus." Augustine (Serm. 283). The Philippians were colonists who had land from their General. Afflictions are a donative to Christian Soldiers from their General. 30. olov elbere] such as ye saw in me at Philippi. Acts xvi.

CH. II. 1. El tis our The order of the clauses here is the same as in the Apostolic Benediction, in the name of the Ever-

Blessed Trinity. (2 Cor. xiii. 14.)

The Apostle appeals to what the Philippians themselves have received, and hope to continue to receive from God, as the reason for what they ought to render to one another. If they feel comfort from the grace given them in Christ, and consolation in a sense of God's Love, and are joined together with one another in God, by the communion of the Holy Ghost, and if the Apostle has been to them the minister of these blessings from God, let them fulfil his joy, and dwell together in unity

St. Paul conjureth the Philippians by all the hope they had of comfort in God, to be at one among themselves. Bp. Sander-

- τινα] All the known uncial MSS. (A, B, C, D, E, F, G, I, K, and finally &) have \(\tau_i\s \) here, which is received by Griesb., Scholz, Lachmann, Tisch., not Meyer, nor Alford, nor Ellicott. The reading, τινα, is found in some Cursive MSS., and in Clem. Alexandrin. (of the 2nd century), Strom. iv. p. 604, and in other Fathers. Some MSS. (D* and I) have also τις παραμύθιον—a similar solecism.

The reading ε τις σπλάγχνα seems to have arisen from a mechanical repetition of el 715.

This text, therefore, among others, affords evidence that it is not a sound principle of Criticism, to limit the data for determining the readings of the New Testament to the most ancient extant MSS., and that it is necessary to extend the range of in-extant MSS., and that it is necessary to extend the range of inquiry to the Cursive MSS. and other collateral aids.

3. μηδὲν κατ' (so B, C, D*, F, G, J) ἐριθείαν] nothing in the way of rivalry, a phrase adopted by Ignatius (ad Philad. 8), who adds, ἀλλὰ κατὰ χριστομαθίαν, which is a brief summary of the Apostle's teaching here. On ἐριθεία, see Gal. v. 20.

4. σκοποῦντες] regarding. So B, and the majority of the best authorities. Elz. σκοπείτε.

5. Τοῦτο - φρονείσθω] let this mind be in you: let that φρόνημα be yours; let the mind of Christ, and of Christ only, not the mind of the world (iii. 19), be your mind. Seven Uncial MSS., A, B, C*, D, E, F, G, here have φρονεῖτε, and this reading has been received by Lachmann and Ellicott.

Nearly all the Cursive MSS., and C***, I, K, have φρονεῖτε (all the cursive MSS.)

velσθω, which is retained by Tisch. and Alf., and this seems to be the true reading. If so simple a form as proverte had been found in the original, it is hardly probable that a copyist would have altered it into the more difficult form φρονείσθω. It is remarkable that the word φρονεῖν, to mind, occurs ten times in this short Epistle, i. 7; ii. 2 bis, 5; iii. 15 bis, 19; iv. 2. 10 bis.

6. ἐν μορφη Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων] subsisting, or pre-existing, in the form of God. The meaning of the word  $\mu o \rho \phi \eta$ , as used here, is explained by the subsequent repetition of it with δούλου. The 'form of God' is contrasted here with the 'form of a servant.' And since Christ really and truly took the 'form of a servant,' and acted as such, both towards His Father (Isa. xlii. 1. Zech. iii. 3. Matt. xii. 18. John vi. 38), and to His disciples (Luke xxii. 27. John xiii. 5), so, as the Ancient Fathers rightly argue, He was really and truly God, before He took the form of a servant.

Θεοῦ ὑπάρχων οὐχ άρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῶ, <sup>7 g</sup> ἀλλὰ ἐαυτὸν ἐκέ- g [52, 42, 1. & 52. 13. & 53. 3, 11. Zech. 3. 8. Matt. 20. 28. Luke 22. 27. John 13. 14. Gal. 4. 4.

He who was subsisting in the form of God, and thought Himself to be equal with God (in which thought He could not be deceived, nor be injurious to God), must of necessity be truly and essentially God; because there can be no equality between the divine essence, which is infinite, and any other whatsoever, which must be finite. But this is true of Christ, and that antecedently to His conception in the Virgin's womb, and existence in His human nature. For, being (or rather, subsisting) in the form of God, He thought it not robbery to be equal with God, but emptied Himself, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men (Phil. ii. 6, 7). Out of which words naturally result three propositions, fully demonstrating that Christ was in the form of a servant as soon as He was made man. Secondly, that He was in the form of God before He was in the form of a servant. Thirdly, that He was (as much) in the form of God, that is, did as truly and really subsist in the divine nature, as in the form of a servant, or in the nature of man. Bp. Pearson (Art. ii. p. 228).

By the word "form" is certainly understood the true condition of a servant, and by the likeness is infallibly meant the real nature of man; nor doth the fashion, in which He was found, destroy, but rather assert the truth of His humanity. And, therefore, as sure as Christ was really and essentially man, of the same nature with us, in whose similitude He was made, so certainly was He also really and essentially God, of the same nature and being with Him, in whose form He did subsist.

Bp. Pearson (p. 231).

Cp. Bp. Bull, Def. Fid. N. i. p. 105. Waterland, i. p. 11. — ούχ ἀρπαγμὸν ἡγήσατο τὸ είναι ἴσα Θεῷ] did not deem His own equality with God to be a spoil, which He had seized wrongfully; but knew it to be an attribute, which He possessed by

In order to understand these important words, it is to be borne in mind-

(1) That St. Paul is exhorting the Philippians to mutual condescension, self-abasement, and self-sacrifice, in regard to, and for the sake of, others. "In lowliness of mind let each of you esteem the other better than himself, looking not to your own things, but every one also to those of others."

He then enforces these precepts by referring them to the pattern of their divine Exemplar, Jesus Christ, Who, though He was God, emptied Himself of His glory, and became man, and humbled Himself, and took on Him the form of a servant, and became obedient to death, even to death on the cross.

(2) What the Apostle specially dwells on in the Condescension of Christ, is the fact, that the Humiliation of Christ was not imposed upon Him by any constraint from any other external force, but that it was purely and entirely voluntary. It was not like the surrender of any thing which He had wrongly usurped, and of which therefore He might be rightly despoiled; nor was it the sacrifice of any thing which He lost by abdication: but it was the free and spontaneous cession, by His own gracious choice, of what appertained to Him by His own inherent and indefeasible right, as God existing from Eternity; and this act of self-abasement resulted in an augmentation of His glory. He did not lose His Deity by taking Humanity, but by His perfect Obedience and meritorious Sufferings in His Human Nature, He glorified the Humanity which He took and united to God.

(3) Hence the Apostle emphatically repeats the word ξαυτόν, Himself. Christ (he says) έαυτον ἐκένωσεν, emplied Himself. Christ (he says) ἐταπείνωσεν ἐαυτὸν, humbled Himself. Christ of His own accord "took the form of a servant," and became obedient to death, even to death on the Cross.

(4) These considerations lead to the true sense of the word άρπαγμόs, as used here. This word is derived from άρπάζω, to seize, as rapine, prey, booty, or spoil, as distinguished from property legally acquired and possessed.

Here, as in many other cases, the text is illustrated by the Septuagint Version, in which the cognate word αρπαγμα often septengine version, in which the cognate word αρπαγμα often occurs, and signifies spoil. See Lev. vi. 4. Ps. lxi. 10. Isa. lxi. 8. Ezek, xvii. 7. 12. 16; xix. 3. 6; xxii. 25. 27.

(5) Further, the ancient Versions of this passage agree, for the most part, in translating the word ἄρπαγμον as equivalent to 'a thing seized by violence.' Thus the Vulgate, "Non rapinam arbitratus est se esse æqualem Deo." So the Syriac; and the Arabic has "Semper existens ad imaginem Dei non tenuit sortem raptam parem se esse Deo." And the Æthiopic, in a paraphrastic gloss, "Non abripuit ei qui fuit Deus." And the Gothic and Coptic Versions also confirm the interpretation which assigns to άρπαγμον the sense of 'usurpation' and 'rapine.' So likewise the ancient Latin Version in the Codex Boernerianus, and that of the Codex Augiensis lately published by Mr. Scri-

(6) The assertion of the Apostle here concerning Christ's Eternal Co-equality with God, may also be illustrated by what he says of Christ's Priesthood,—viz. Christ did not glorify Himself to be a High Priest (Heb. v. 5), but He was rightly constituted as such. So here Christ did not usurp His divine Coequality; but He had it by right of His Eternal Generation from the Father.

(7) The Apostle's words may therefore be thus paraphrased: Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus, Who, subsisting from Eternity in the form of God, did not think that His own equality with God ( $\tau \delta$  elva  $\tau \sigma \alpha \Theta \epsilon \tilde{\varphi}$ , see next note) was a spoil which He had usurped wrongfully, and of which therefore He might justly be divested by another; or which, on principles of justice, He was Himself obliged to give up; and which, if He veiled it in a human form, He might be imagined not to possess, and which therefore He would fear to conceal in such a mortal dress. He did not suppose that the divine glory, which He had, was a stolen thing. Satan, who endeavoured to usurp it, fell from heaven; Adam grasped at it, and incurred death. But Christ had it as His own from Eternity.

But He freely emptied Himself of His own divine Glory, and willingly took the form of a servant. Do not therefore imagine that His humiliation was imposed upon Him. By His own free act He appeared in the likeness of men; and being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, yea, even death on the cross.

(8) This, in the main, is the sense which was assigned to this celebrated passage by the best Authors in ancient times.

Christ did not imagine that His own divine Co-eternity, Coequality, and Consubstantiality with the Father was like a stolen spoil; He did not fear lest any one should take it from Him. No; He veiled it willingly. He had not seized it as a prey. It was His own. He had it by the very essence of His Nature. Therefore, the Apostle says, He emptied Himself. Where now, therefore, are those false Teachers, who say that Christ submitted to necessity,-that He was forced to do what He did? No. He emptied Himself. He humbled Himself. He took the form of a servant of His own accord. Chrysostom.

The Son of God did not scruple to veil His glory, for He knew that He would not thus impair it. Therefore the Apostle says, He did not deem His own equality with God to be a thing stolen. An Usurper fears to lay aside the purple, for he knows that it is stolen, and does not belong to him. Not so a King; for he is conscious that it is his kingly right. Chrys. (in Catenâ here, p. 253.) The Son did not seize for Himself the dignity of the Godhead; wherefore Paul says that He did not deem His co-equality with God to be a thing stolen; but it was well-pleasing to the Father, as well as a joy to the Son, that He possesses a kingdom of equal dignity with the Father. Hesychius, in Ps. cix. 1.

Any one who has snatched a thing by violence, dreads to lay it down, lest he should lose what he knows to be not his own. St. Paul, therefore, says here, that the Son of God did not fear to stoop from His proper Dignity, because He was conscious that He possessed that Dignity (of being co-equal with the Father), not by rapine, but by nature. He therefore chose to be humbled, because He knew that in His Humility He preserved His Dignity. Theophylact. Cp. Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 20): "In effigie Dei constitutus non rapinam existimavit pariari Deo, sed exhausit semetipsum." See also Augustine, Serm. 183: "Non rapinam arbitratus est Filius esse æqualis Deo. Non erat ei rapina; natura erat: sic erat ex æternitate, sic erat æqualis Patri . . . Semetipsum exinanivit; formam servi accipiens, non formam Dei amittens." See also Augustine, iv. 372. 716. 844. 1570; vi. 935; viii. 1048; particularly v. 2095, Serm. 361, where he says: How came it to pass that Christ died? because He took the form of a servant. He Who pre-existed in the form of God, had He taken the form of God, or did He possess it by His Nature? The Apostle answers this question. For when he speaks of His being in the form of God, he uses the words cum esset (i.e.  $\delta\pi\dot{\alpha}\rho\chi\omega\nu$ ); but when he mentions the form of a servant, he uses the word accipiens (λαβών). Christ therefore was somewhat, and He took somewhat; He was in the form of God, and equal with God, as St. John testifies (i. 1). He was God; and being in the form of God, He did not deem that existence of equality to be an usurped thing (rapinam). That which is not in us by nature, but is usurped illegally, is rapina (ἀρπαγμός). An Angel usurped equality with God, and fell, and became the Devil. Man usurped equality with God, and fell, and became mortal. But Christ, Who was born equal with God, because He was not born in time, but is the Everlasting Son of the Everlasting Father,—always born, and the Creator of all, He was existing in the form of God. But in order to be Mediator between God and Man, between the Just and Unjust,—between mortals and the Immortal,—He took something from the unjust and the mortal, in order to reconcile them to the Just and Immortal; and taking what He took, He kept what He was. Augustine.

 $^{\rm h~Matt.}$  25. 39, 42. νωσε μορφην δούλου λαβων, εν ὁμοιώματι ἀνθρώπων γενόμενος,  $^{\rm 8~h}$  καὶ σχήματι

The sense is thus briefly expressed by a judicious ancient Expositor, Primasius; "Non rapuit quod habebat, id est, æqua-litatem Patris, quam naturaliter habebat, non rapuit."

(9) The meaning which has been assigned to these words by some Interpreters in recent times,—viz. "He did not deem equality with God to be a thing to be grasped or clutched at, or a prize to be coveted," seems to be liable to grave objections on theological grounds.

The Son of God, God of God, is co-equal with the Father from Eternity; and to say that He did not deem such co-equality to be a thing to be seized upon and to be grasped at, seems to involve an assertion that He did not possess it. For if He had it, how could He be said to grasp at it? Indeed, this interpretation seems chargeable with the Arianizing tendency which has been censured by some of the Fathers here. Thus Theophylact well says,—It is alleged by false Teachers, that the Son, being an inferior Deity, did not venture to grasp at equality with the superior God. But St. Paul (he adds) affirms, that Christ is, and ever has been co-equal with the Father. And here is the force of the Apostolic lesson of Humility derived from the pattern, which he propounds to us, of Christ, Who being by nature co-equal with the Father, and conscious of His own co-equality, voluntarily emptied and humbled Himself, and so became an Example to us.

This may also serve as a reply to the Arian exposition cited by Waterland (vol. i. qu. 2, p. 11): "He did not affect, claim, assume, take upon Him, or eagerly desire to be honoured as God;" and therefore (it is inferred by the Arians) He was conscious that He was not equal with God—contrary to St. Paul's assertion here.

(10) Further, it may be remembered, that St. Paul, writing to the Philippians, Roman inhabitants of a heathen city in Greece, was obliged in his teaching concerning Christ's self-humiliation, to guard them, and the Gentiles generally, against such errors as, under the influence of false Teachers, the ancient Heathens were likely to be betrayed into.

When the Gentiles heard of the Humiliation of the Son of God, and of His descent from His heavenly Throne, they might be tempted to think of the traditions of their own Pagan Theology. Kronus had been dispossessed by Zeus, and Saturnus by Jupiter, in the Greck and Roman Panthëon. The Titans had rebelled against the usurping son of the ancient ruler of Olympus. The Heathens therefore might be told by some (and such indeed was the tendency of much of the Gnostic speculations) that the condescension of the Son of God in Christian Theology was only a just act of deposition from an usurped dignity, or an abdication forced on Him by a conscious sense of usurpation, such as the Heathens were familiar with in their own Mythology.

Standing upon the low ground of their own unregenerate Reason, they might well be slow to suppose, that such a stupendous act of condescension and self-sacrifice, as that of the Son of God, was one of free choice. It is only by Faith in God's Word that we can rise to the Mystery of the Incarnation.

Well, therefore, did the Apostle, writing to the Philippians, a Roman Colony in Greece, provide a safeguard against such erroneous and dangerous surmises, by assuring them that the Son of God had subsisted from Eternity in the form of God, and that it was not because His Equality with God was a stolen thing, and because He was conscious that it was so, that He condescended from His high estate; but that it was of His own free will and spontaneous choice that He, Who had subsisted for ever in the form of God, emptied and humbled Himself, and took upon Him the form of a servant.

(11) Lastly, the remarkable fitness of this wonderful condescension of the Son of God, rightly understood, to be an example of the grace and virtue of Humility here commended to the Philippians by St. Paul, deserves attentive consideration;

If He, Who is God from Eternity, and possesses all the glory of the Godhead by right, stooped so low of His own accord

(1) As to take on Himself the nature of man,

(2) In the form of a servant,(3) And to suffer death for us.

(4) And that death the death of a fugitive slave, the agonizing, ignominious, and cursed death of the Cross; and
(5) If this was His path to glory, and to the exaltation of our Nature in Him even above the nature of Angels; and

(6) If that exaltation was the reward of His obedience and suffering in our Nature, which He took, and in which He suffered and obeyed, surely they, whose Nature He took, they whose Head He is, they whom He has made members of His own mystical body, they whom He, as God-Man, has united to the Deity, and has exalted to God's Right Hand, have, in this condescension of their God and King, the most constraining motives to condescension and love, to self-abasement and self-sacrifice, for the sake of their fellow-men and of their fellow-members in Christ.

—  $\tau \delta$  ε $\bar{l}\nu a_l$  Υσα Θε $\bar{\varphi}$ ] the being on a par with God, i. e. His own Pre-existence, in a condition of Equality with God. He did not deem this a stolen thing. The very memorable words of a celebrated ancient Synod of the third century afford an excellent comment here. Έν  $\tau \bar{\eta}$  εκκλησία  $\tau \bar{\eta}$   $\tilde{v}$  πό  $\tau$  δν οὐρανδν πάση Χριστὸς πεπίστευται Θεδς, κενώσας έαντὸν ἀπό τοῦ ε $\bar{l}$ ναι Υσα Θε $\bar{\varphi}$ . Concil. Antioch. i. p. 848, Labb. Routh, R. S. ii. 473. "In the whole Church under heaven Christ is believed to be Gon; having emptied Himself from the state of being Equal with God." Cp. ibid. i. 292. 328; iii. 377; and see the next note. On the infinitive with the article as here used, see Winer, § 44, p. 289.

The neuter plural You, used adverbially (cp. Winer, § 27, p. 160), is more expressive than the masculine singular would be, as indicating existence in a condition of general equality with God.

See the examples in Whitby here and Wetstein.

The Fathers rightly dwell on this clause, and the context generally, as a safeguard against almost all the Heresies concerning the Nature and Person of Christ.

Consider how many Heresies are here confuted. Marcion condemns the world and the flesh as the work of the Evil One, and thence affirms that flesh could not be assumed by God, and that the body which Christ took was a mere shadow and phantom. Photinus and others say, that the Word is only a power of God, and not a Person. Paul of Samosata affirms that He began to exist from Mary. Sabellius asserts that Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are mere names of one Personal God. Arius, that the Son is a Creature. Apollinarius, that He had not a human soul.

All these are confuted by these words of the Apostle. against Marcion we say, How could that flesh be a mere shadow and phantom, which was taken by One Who had the form of a servant, and was found in the fashion of a man, and Who suffered death on the Cross? And to the others above mentioned, we put these questions, How can the Son be merely a Power and not a Substance, since He Who is said to have taken the form of a servant is said also to have pre-existed in the form of God? How can it be alleged, that He derived His existence from Mary, when He is declared by the Apostle to have subsisted in the form of God? How can He be thought to be a mere Name, when He is said to have existed in a state of equality with God? Equality is between two things. No one can be said to be equal to himself. Therefore we here see a duality of Persons in the One Godhead. How, again, can He be thought to be a Creature, when it is asserted by St. Paul that He existed in the form of God, that is, in the very nature and essence of God, and that He did not count it an unjust assumption on His part (as the Arians do for Him) to be equal with God? How, lastly, could it have been said by the Apostle, that He took the form of a servant, and suffered death which is the separation of soul and body), if He had not also a human soul as well as a human body? See Chrysostom, Theonuman sout as well as a human body? See Chrysostom, Theodoret, Theophyl., and Caten. (pp. 247—253), Tertullian (c. Marcion. v. 20), and Bp. Bull (Def. Fid. Nic. ii. 2, 2, p. 105, ed. Burton), who says, "This one passage, if it be rightly understood, is sufficient for the refutation of all the Heresies against the Person of our Lord Jesus Christ."

7. input Liver of the control o

7. ἐαυτὸν ἐκένωσε] He emptied Himself. Θεὸς κενώσας ἐαυτὸν, ἀπὸ τοῦ εἶναι ἴσα Θεῷ. Concil. Antioch. (i. p. 848, Labbe). 'Ομογενὴς Θεοῦ Λόγος, Θεὸς ὑπάρχων, ἐκ Θεοῦ κεκένωκεν ἐαυτὸν, καὶ τὴν ἄδοξον ταύτην σάρκα ἡμφιέσχετο.

S. Hippolytus (ii. p. 29).

We are not, therefore, to imagine that He either lost His Godhead for a time, or that it was confused with His Manhood. No; "the Word became Flesh," but was not changed into, or εύρεθείς ως ανθρωπος έταπείνωσεν έαυτον, γενόμενος υπήκοος μέχρι θανάτου, πὰν δνομα, το του του συσματό Σησε ἐπιγείων καὶ καταχθονίων, 11 1 καὶ πᾶσα γλῶσσα ἐξομολογήσεται, ὅτι Κύριος Rev. 5. 13. Rom. 14, 9, 11. Ιησούς Χριστός, είς δόξαν Θεού Πατρός.

Τησους Χριστός, εις ουζαν Θεου Πατρος.

1 Cor. 8. 6.

12 m Πατε, ἀγαπητοί μου, καθὼς πάντοτε ὑπηκούσατε, μὴ ὡς ἐν τῷ παρουσία m Heb. 4. 11.

μου μόνον, ἀλλὰ νῦν πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἐν τῷ ἀπουσία μου, μετὰ φόβου καὶ τρόμου & 3. 18.

τὴν ἑαυτῶν σωτηρίαν κατεργάζεσθε·

13 m Θεὸς γὰρ ἔστιν ὁ ἐνεργῶν ἐν ὑμῖν καὶ James 1.6—18.

James 1.6—18.

2 Rom. 1.2 17. τὸ θέλειν καὶ τὸ ἐνεργεῖν ὑπὲρ τῆς εὐδοκίας.

 $^{14}$  ο Πάντα ποιείτε χωρὶς γογγυσμῶν καὶ διαλογισμῶν·  $^{15}$  ρ ἴνα γένησ $\theta$ ε  $^{\frac{3}{6}}$   $^{\frac{4}{4}.9.}$   $^{\frac{5}{4}.14.45.}$ άμεμπτοι καὶ ἀκέραιοι, τέκνα Θεοῦ ἀμώμητα μέσον γενεᾶς σκολιᾶς καὶ δι- Ερh. s. s.

confused with, Flesh. See on John i. 14. "In semetipsum assumendo quod non erat, non amittendo quod erat." Primasius.

sumendo quod non erat, non amitiendo quod erat." Primasius.
7, 8. ἐν ὁμοιώματι ἀνθρώπων γενόμενος, και σχήματι εύρεθεὶς ώς ἄνθρωπος] being made in the likeness of men, and found in fashion as a man. In another place St. Paul says that He appeared in the likeness of sinful flesh (see Rom. viii. 3), and yet he does not deny, but asserts, that He truly took our flesh, but took it without sim. So likewise the Apostle here, when saying that He become in the likeness of men, and were found in fashion. that He became in the likeness of men, and was found in fashion as a man, does not deny but assert His Godhead (Theophyl.).

- θανάτου δὲ σταυροῦ ] Observe δὲ-not only did He submit to death, but to that of the cross. Wonderful humility!

9. Διδ - ὑπερύψωσε] Wherefore God highly exalted Him, and gave Him the Name that is above every name. On the exaltation of Christ in that Nature, namely, the Human, in which He obeyed and suffered, an exaltation consequent, by way of reward, on that obedience and suffering, see the notes above on Matt. xxviii. 18, and on 1 Cor. xv. 24.

Whose nature was it that was raised by Christ's Ascension into heaven? Ours. The Father is inseparably in the Son, and the Son in the Father. But because the Word and Flesh make one Person in Christ, therefore that which was assumed, viz. the Flesh, is not divided from Him Who assumed it; and the honour of its Exaltation is called the Augmentation of Him Who exalted it. As St. Paul says, "Wherefore God very highly exalted Him," where St. Paul is declaring the exaltation of that Human Nature which was assumed, so that it, in Whose sufferings the Deity abode with it inseparably, became co-eternal in the glory of the Deity. S. Leo (Serm. 70, p. 152), and Athanas. (c. Arianos, i. § 44, and § 45, p. 353).

— τὸ ὅνομα (so A, B, C. Elz. has only ὅνομα) τὸ ὑπὲρ πᾶν ὄνομα] the Name that is above every Name. Observe the article 7b, intimating that the Name given to Jesus, as Man, was no other than the incommunicable Name of Jehovah. See v. 11, and on John xvii. 2, and Augustine (Tract. Joann. 104, p. 2375). What is that Name which is given to the human nature of the One Christ? The Name of God. Theophyl. Cp. Rev. xix. 12, 13. 16, and Jer. xxiii. 6, "this is THE NAME by which He shall be called, The Lord (Jehovah) our Righteousness." See on 1 Cor. i. 30, and Rom. v. 21, and above, on Jer. xxiii. 6.

Hence the Name of Jesus is called "the Name," Acts v. 41.

Cp. 3 John 7.

10. ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι] in the Name Jesus, acknowledged to be above every name. Cp. above on Rom. ix. 5, and Heb. i. 5, and Rev. v. 12. "Ut Christo Jesu, Domino Nostro, et Deo, et Salvatori omne genu curvet." Irenæus (i. 10. 1). See also above on Eph. i. 22 on the exaltation of the Manhood of Jesus, and on this text see Bp. Andrewes (Serm. 11, pp. 280.

— καταχθονίων] of beings under the earth; namely, Death and the Grave, over whom Christ has partly triumphed already, and will fully triumph hereafter (see 1 Cor. xv. 26. 54, 55. Rev. xx. 13, 14), and Satan himself and all the Powers of Darkness. (Rev. xx. 10.) The spirits of the departed may also be meant here; see Rev. v. 13, where the creatures beneath the earth join in ascribing honour to the Lamb; and see also note below on 1 Pet. iii. 19.

11. και πᾶσα γλῶσσα κ.τ.λ.] and that every tongue may confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, Jehovah. Observe the Apostle says, that this confession of the Godhead of the Son is the Glorification of the Father; therefore to deny the Godhead of the Son, is to do dishonour to the Father. Cp. John v. 23, and Chrys., Theodoret, Theophyl. here.

The reading ξεομολογήσεται here is confirmed by A, B (see Mai), C, D, F, G, I, K.—Elz. has έξομολογήσηται. The words of the Apostle here are to be compared with Rom. xiv. 11, ζω έγω, λέγει Κύριος, ὅτι Ἐμοὶ κάμψει πῶν γόνυ, καὶ πῶσα γλώσσα έξομολογήσεται τ $\widehat{\varphi}$  Θε $\widehat{\varphi}$ . And from this comparison it plainly appears, that the same honour is to be paid to Jesus as to God, because He is God. Cp. S. Polycarp's Epistle to the Philippian Church, c. 2.

12. "Ωστε So then. Itaque (Vulg.). 1 Cor. iii. 7. 21:

- κατεργάζεσθε] work out with perseverance unto the end. 13. Θεὸς γὰρ κ.τ.λ.] for God it is Who is working in you both to will and to work. We are commanded to work out our own salvation, and that with fear and trembling, lest we should fail of being saved; and not with pride and vain-glory, as if our works were due to our own deserts, and not to the grace of God When the Apostle thus commands us to work out our own salvation, he acknowledges our free will; but when he adds, "with fear and trembling," he warns us against the pride of ascribing our good works to ourselves; and he therefore adds, that it is God who worketh in us. Augustine (de Gratia, c. 9).

Thus St. Paul has provided an antidote to the Heresy of Pelagius, who allowed that our power of willing and liberty of action are from God, but contended that our actual willing and doing are from ourselves. See Augustine (de Gratia Christi, c. 3, c. 5, c. 10), A Lapide, and the Expositors on Article X. of the Church of England, "We have no power to do good works, pleasant and acceptable to God, without the grace of God by Christ preventing us that we may have a good will, and working with us when we have that good will."

Lest, however, it should be said, that we are not able to work, on account of our human weakness, and that we are ex cusable if we do not work out our salvation, the Apostle adds, " For it is God Who is working in you both to will and to work." Wherefore we not only recognize our need of Divine Grace, but also the duty of not resisting it, and of not receiving it in vain, but of cherishing and using it aright, in order that it may receive increase from Him who gives Grace to those who ask for it, and increases Grace to those who use it, and adds new degrees of Grace according to their use of it. And, therefore, God's working in us is a stimulus to our working, both antecedently as setting us to work, and subsequently as rewarding that work with greater power of working. Cp. Theophyl. and Hammond in Sanderson's Works, v. pp. 342, 343.

It is well observed by Bishop Ellicott, that ἐνεργῶν, in St. Paul's Epistles, signifies more than 'worketh in you,' it implies that this in-working is energetic and effective. "Deus facit ut facianus, præbendo vires efficacissimas voluntati." Augustine (de Gratia, 16), who also says (Serm. 169), "Sine voluntate tuâ non erit in te Justitia Dei."

ύπὲρ τῆς εὐδοκίας] in behalf of His good pleasure. It is not God who worketh in you to do what is evil, but that which is good; not to fulfil your own desires, but to do His will; not to run into your destruction, but to attain everlasting salvation. run into your asstruction, but to attain evertasting savation. It is God's Will, that your will should be free, and it is His Will that, by a right exercise of your free will, sanctified and quickened by His grace, you should be saved. (1 Tim. ii. 4.) Therefore work out your salvation, for He worketh in you both to will and to work, for the attainment of that end. Cp. Theophyl. here.

15. μέσον] So A, B (see Mai), C, D*, F, G.—Elz. ἐν μέσφ.

— γενεας σκολίας και διεστραμμένης] of a crooked and perverse generation, among whom (ols, the men of the generation) ye shine forth like lights in the world; ye shine forth like lights which serve to light the steps of the traveller in a crooked and winding way. So ye, who bear in your hands the Word of truth, as a torch which is a lantern unto the feet and a light unto the q 2 Cor. 1, 14. Gal. 2, 2, 1 Thess. 2, 19, & 3, 5, εστραμμένης, εν οις φαίνεσθε ώς φωστήρες εν κόσμω, 16 η λόγον ζωής επέχοντες. εἰς καύχημα ἐμοὶ εἰς ἡμέραν Χριστοῦ, ὅτι οὐκ εἰς κενὸν ἔδραμον, οὐδὲ εἰς κενὸν ἐκοπίασα.

r 2 Cor. 7. 4. 2 Tim. 4. 6.

17 - 'Αλλά εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι ἐπὶ τῆ θυσία καὶ λειτουργία τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν, χαίρω καὶ συγχαίρω πασιν ύμιν· 18 τὸ δ' αὐτὸ καὶ ύμεις χαίρετε καὶ συγχαίρετέ

s Acts 16. 1. Rom. 16, 21, 1 Thess, 3, 2

t 1 Cor. 10, 24.

19 s Ἐλπίζω δὲ ἐν Κυρίω Ἰησοῦ Τιμόθεον ταχέως πέμψαι ὑμῖν, ἵνα κἀγὼ εὐψυχῶ γνοὺς τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν, 20 οὐδένα γὰρ ἔχω ἰσόψυχον, ὅστις γνησίως τὰ περὶ ὑμῶν μεριμνήσει. 21 τοι πάντες γὰρ τὰ ἐαυτῶν ζητοῦσιν, οὐ τὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. 22 Τὴν δὲ δοκιμὴν αὐτοῦ γινώσκετε, ὅτι ὡς πατρὶ τέκνον σὺν ἐμοὶ έδούλευσεν είς τὸ εὐαγγέλιον.

& 13. 5. 2 Tim. 1. 15. & 4. 10, 16. n ch. 1, 25. Philem. 22.

23 Τοῦτον μὲν οὖν ἐλπίζω πέμψαι, ὡς ἂν ἀπίδω τὰ περὶ ἐμὲ, ἐξαυτῆς. 24 " πέποιθα δὲ ἐν Κυρίω, ὅτι καὶ αὐτὸς ταχέως ἐλεύσομαι.

paths (Ps. cxix. 105), appear in the darkness of the night of heathen error and sin, and serve to lead others in the way to ever-

Some learned Expositors suppose that the Apostle's metaphor is derived from the Luminaries of the Firmament, to which he compares the Christians of Philippi. No doubt the word recompares the Christians of Thinppi. No doubt the word φωστήρες is used in this sense. See Gen. i. 14—16, and compare Trench (Syn. N. T. xivi.). But this opinion seems hardly consistent with the context. The Luminaries of the Firmament do not shine in the midst of what is crooked and perverse, but of what is clear and glorious. Nor do they guide any one through the midst of winding intricacies.

Rather (as is above intimated) the figure seems to be taken from the custom of carrying torches to guide passengers along the dark and narrow streets of ancient Cities (see Aristoph. Vesp. 219, and compare the authorities in Smith's Dictionary, v. 'Fax' perhaps of Rome itself, which was at this time remarkable for its narrow and winding streets (όδοι σκολιαί και διεστραμμέναι), soon to be destroyed by Nero's conflagration, which changed the aspect of the city. See Tacitus (Ann. xv. 43) and Suetonius, who says (in his life of Nero, c. 38), that the Emperor set fire to the city, "offensus deformitate veterum ædificiorum, et angustiis flexurisque vicorum."

This interpretation is confirmed by the ancient Greek Expositors on the Apocalypse (i. 16; see Dr. Cramer's Catena, p. 192), who observe, that as Churches are symbolized in the book of Revelation by Lamps deriving their oil from God's Holy Word and Spirit, and illuminating the World, so Christians ought to hold forth the word of life (St. Paul's phrase here) as guides and examples to others, for God's glory (Matt. v. 16) in an evil world.

The Christians little thought, when they read these words of the Apostle, that some of their number would soon be literally made to be  $\phi\omega\sigma\tau\tilde{\eta}\rho\epsilon s$ , or Lights in the Streets, by the Emperor, in that City. One form of their Martyrdom was to be covered with pitch and tar, and then lighted as Torches. "Ut flammati, ubi defecisset dies, in usum nocturni luminis urerentur." Tacitus (xv. 44). Juvenal (i. 156).

φαίνεσθε] ye shine forth. Cp. Matt. ii. 7; xxiv. 27.

17. εί και σπένδομαι] if I am even being poured out as a libation, or drink-offering, upon the sacrifice and ritual service of your faith.

The appropriateness of the Apostle's figure here will appear from a consideration of the fact, that under the Levitical Law the drink-offering was never offered alone, but was always poured forth before the Lord (Num. xxviii. 7), in the Holy Place, "in conjunction with the slain sacrifices, to complete the Mincha, or Meat-offering" (Lev. ii. 1-16). Cp. 2 Chron. xxix. 35, and see Mather on Types, p. 221.

The drink-offering (Nesek) consisted of Wine (Num. xv. 5. Judg, ix. 13), an apt emblem of blood; the blood of branches grafted in the True Vine, which is Christ (John xv. 1-5), Who alone enables them to bring forth fruit, and alone makes their fruit, whether in doing or suffering, to be acceptable to God.

St. Paul here puts as a supposition, what in his second imprisonment at Rome (when he knew that the hour of his departure was at hand), he afterwards stated as a fact,  ${}^*E\gamma\dot{\omega}$   $\gamma\dot{\alpha}\rho$ ήδη σπένδομαι, For I am now being poured out (2 Tim. iv. 6), where see note; and cp. the similar relation of Phil. i. 23 to 2 Tim. iv. 6; and see above, Introduction to this Epistle, p. 341.

The latter is the consummation of the former. What he looked forward to, in his first imprisonment at Rome, was realized in his second imprisonment in the same city.

The Apostle regards the shedding of his own blood in Martyrdom as a Christian drink-offering to be poured out upon the sacrifice and ministration of the Faith of his Christian Disciples, considered as a meat-offering (Mincha) to God; for they are not staggered by his sufferings, but believe that Christ will receive and reward him and all others who have faith in His promises, and suffer according to His example.

Observe also, that in the word here used, there is something prophetic, not merely of the fact of his martyrdom, but of the manner of it.

If St. Paul had been burnt at the stake, as many Christian Martyrs were, the figure would have been less suitable. But it was very significant of effusion of blood by decapitation; and such was his death.

The Libation of the blood of the great Apostle of the Gentiles, in the royal Metropolis of the Heathen World, was indeed like a drink-offering, completing and consummating the Mincha, or Meat-offering, of the faith of the Philippians and other Heathen Nations, whom he had brought to Christ; according to Isa. lxvi. 19, 20, They shall declare My glory among the Gentiles, and they shall bring all your brethren for a Mincha unto the Lord. Cp. Rom. xv. 16, where, writing at an earlier period, he regards the Gentile World as a προσφορά, or offering, presented by himself to God as their Minister.

But now, when he has his own offering-up in his thoughts, he aptly changes the metaphor, and anticipates the pouring out of his own blood as a drink-offering on their sacrifice.

Finally, when he saw his death at hand, and exclaimed,
"I am now being poured out!" (2 Tim. iv. 6,) he completed the metaphor. How much harmony of thought and language is there in this! And if the remark may be permitted, how striking is the evidence derivable from this specimen, among others, of the profit and pleasure to be derived from reading the Epistles of St. Paul in chronological order. See above, Preface, pp. vi-xii.

20. γάρ] for: a remarkable reason. St. Paul, in the time of his trial, sends Timothy away from himself at Rome to Philippi, because he has no one who is like-minded with himself, and therefore no one who will be so earnest and affectionate in his love and care for them. He gives to others what he loved best, and what he needed most for himself.

Thus the divine Apostle exemplifies and enforces by his own practice his precept to them, "Look not at your own things, but every one at the things of others" (v. 4).

lσύψυχου] like-minded with myself, an "alter ego." A remarkable tribute to Timothy, at this the close of his Epistles to the Gentile Churches; and a sufficient reason for St. Paul's subsequent appointment of Timothy to the Bishopric of the great ity of Ephesus. Compare his testimony to Titus, afterwards Bishop of Crete, 2 Cor. viii. 6. 16. 23.

γνησίως] with genuine love: as a genuine spiritual Son of his Apostle and Father in the faith, who will show his love for me by his love of you; cp. iv. 3, σύζυγε γνήσιε. Some expositors interpret γνησίως 'paternally;' but γνήσιος, opposed to volos, and derived from yévos, is rather applicable to the off-spring than to the parent; and see v. 22, where Timothy's final relation to St. Paul is commemorated as known to the Philippians; and St. Paul writes to Timothy himself as γνησίφ τέκνφ, 1 Tim. i. 2, and to Titus i. 4.

 22, γινώσκετε] ye know; see Acts xvi. 1—3; xvii. 14; xviii.
 5; xix. 22.
 23. ώς ἃν ἀπίδω] so soon as I shall have seen, as from a point, from which I am able to contemplate the things around and concerning me; not only the issue of my trial, but also my own con-

25 x 'Αναγκαΐον δὲ ἡγησάμην 'Επαφρόδιτον τὸν ἀδελφὸν καὶ συνεργὸν καὶ x ch. 4. 18. συστρατιώτην μου, ύμων δε απόστολον, και λειτουργον της χρείας μου, πέμψαι 2 Cor. 11. 7-9. πρὸς ύμᾶς, 26 ἐπειδὴ ἐπιποθῶν ἦν πάντας ύμᾶς, καὶ ἀδημονῶν διότι ἡκούσατε ότι ήσθένησε, <sup>27</sup> καὶ γὰρ ἠσθένησε παραπλήσιον θανάτω, ἀλλὰ ὁ Θεὸς ἠλέησεν αὐτὸν, οὐκ αὐτὸν δὲ μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἐμὲ, ἴνα μὴ λύπην ἐπὶ λύπην σχῶ.

28 Σπουδαιοτέρως οὖν ἔπεμψα αὐτὸν, ἴνα ἰδόντες αὐτὸν πάλιν χαρῆτε, κάγὼ άλυπότερος ω.

29 γ Προσδέχεσθε οὖν αὐτὸν ἐν Κυρίω μετὰ πάσης χαρᾶς, καὶ τοὺς τοιούτους γ Acts 28, 10. εντίμους έχετε, <sup>30</sup> ε ότι διὰ τὸ έργον τοῦ Χριστοῦ μέχρι θανάτου ἤγγισε, παρα- & 16.18. βολευσάμενος τ $\hat{\eta}$  ψυχ $\hat{\eta}$ , ἴνα ἀναπληρώση τὸ ὑμῶν ὑστέρημα τ $\hat{\eta}$ ς πρός με λει- $\frac{1}{1}$  Times. 5. 12. τουργίας.

ΙΙΙ. 1 - Τὸ λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοί μου, χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίω.

Τὰ αὐτὰ γράφειν ὑμῖν ἐμοὶ μὲν οὐκ ὀκνηρὸν, ὑμῖν δὲ ἀσφαλές.

a 2 Cor. 13. 11. Eph. 6. 10. ch. 4. 4. 1 Thess. 5. 16. James 1. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 13.

sequent movements. Cp. Jonah iv. 5, where it is said that the prophet went out of the city, and took his seat in front of it,  $\tilde{\epsilon}\omega s$ οδ ἀπίδη τί ἔσται τῆ πόλει.

A, B*, D*, F, G, and № have ἀφίδω here, and so Lach., Tisch., Alf., Ellicott, and Winer (§ 5, p. 43), who ascribes the aspirate form to the influence of the digamma. Cp. Acts iv. 29, where Lachmann has received έφιδε. In these cases it seems hazardous to follow a few MSS., lest on similar authority we nazardous to follow a few Miss., lest on similar authority we should be constrained to admit such readings as ἀφελπίζοντες Luke vi. 35, οὐχ ὄψεσθε Luke xvii. 22, οὐχ ὀλίγος Acts xii. 18, ἐφ' ἐλπίδι 1 Cor. ix. 10, οὐχ Ἰουδαικῶς Gal. ii. 14.

25. ᾿Αναγκαῖον δὲ ἡγησάμην] yet I deemed it necessary. For the reason of this necessity, see the Introduction, p. 340.

— 'Επαφρόδιτον'] Epaphroditus. See iv. 18. Probably this Epistle was carried by Epaphroditus to Philippi. Cp. above on

 - ὑμῶν ἀπόστολον] your Apostle; perhaps he was the chief Pastor of the Church at Philippi, and chosen as such, to be their messenger (2 Cor. viii. 23) to St. Paul. (Theodoret.) See above, i. 1. He is here called a fellow-worker and fellow-soldier of the Apostle St. Paul, and therefore may be supposed to have been a Preacher of the Gospel. In primitive times it was usual for the Churches to communicate with Martyrs and Confessors by means of their respective Bishops and Clergy. Martyr. Ignat. 3, and Ignat. ad Trall. 3. Magn. 2.

26. ἡσθένησε] he was sick nigh unto death, to my sorrow particularly, because it appears from the context that the sickness of Epaphroditus, which was almost fatal, was incurred in his zeal to visit St. Paul at Rome, and to aid him in his troubles there.

A frank avowal on the part of the Apostle himself that he had no commission or power to heal all sickness, and that he could not heal his dearest friends when sick for his own sake.

Similarly we hear from him of the frequent sicknesses of his dearly beloved son in the faith, Timothy (1 Tim. v. 23), and of his leaving Trophimus at Miletus sick. (2 Tim. iv. 20.)

A strong proof hence arises, that the miracles which are asserbed to his agency were really wrought. (Acts xix. 12; xxviii.

As to the question, why the Apostle who wrought so many cures on others did not heal Timothy, Epaphroditus, Trophimus, and other friends, see note on 1 Tim. v. 23.

27. ἐπὶ λύπην] So the best authorities. Elz. ἐπὶ λύπη.
30. παραβολευσάμενος] having staked. So A, B, D, E, F, G, and so R, and Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., Meyer, Ellicott, Alf. and so K, and Grieso., Scholz, Lachm., Meyer, Encout, Ay.—
Elz. has παραβουλευσάμενος, in the sense of having 'consulted amiss for his own life.' But παραβολευσάμενος appears to be the true reading, and signifies 'having staked his life.' The word παραβολεύομαι is derived from the substantive Παραβόλιου. The metaphor is from a legal process of Appeal (ἔφεσις). Παραβόλιον, or Παράβολον, was the pignus, sponsio, or stake, which the appellant deposited (παρεβάλετο), and which, if he was cast in his appeal, he forfeited. See the authorities in Lobeck, Phryn. p. 238. Pollux, viii. 62, 63. Meyer, Att. Proc. 767. 772.

Hence the propriety of the figure here. Epaphroditus came from Philippi to minister to St. Paul's needs in his imprisonment and trial. In the Apostle's Appeal before Cæsar, Epaphroditus made his Παράβολον, not with a small sum of money, but risked and hazarded what was most dear to him; he put, as it were, his own life in pawn for him; he παρεβολεύσατο with his life.

On this figurative use of the word παραβολευσάμενος, see the quotations from Hesychius, Œcumen., Theophyl., and others in Welstein, p. 273.

VOL. II .- PART III.

CH. III. 1. Τὸ λοιπόν] Finally: 'Denique'—more expressive here, because this Epistle to the Philippians was probably the last Epistle written by St. Paul to any Christian Church. See above, the Introduction to the Epistle, p. 342, and the next note.

What follows, therefore, from these words to the end of this Chapter, in which he gives a brief summary of his former teaching in former Epistles, and to the end of the present Epistle. derives special importance and solemnity from this circumstance.

— χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίω] rejoice ye in the Lord. Cp. iv. 4.
 — Τὰ αὐτὰ γράφειν ὑμῖν] To write the same things to you.
 These words have been made the occasion of much controversy;
 To what do they refer? Where had St. Paul written the same things as he writes here?

Some Expositors reply-In an Epistle now lost.

Others say, that he here refers only to the foregoing words, χαίρετε έν Κυρίφ.

(1) The former of these opinions has been supported by reference to S. Polycarp's Epistle to the Philippians, where he Says that "Paul in his absence from the Philippians, while he says that "Paul in his absence from the Philippians, wrote 'Επιστολάs to them" (c. 3); and it is alleged that the word 'Επιστολάs, used there by Polycarp, shows that Paul wrote more than one Epistle to the Philippians.

But this allegation is invalidated by the consideration that Έπιστολαί (plural) often stands for a single Letter. See Acts xxii. 5. 2 Cor. x. 9, and above, note on i. 1, p. 342.

And even supposing that Polycarp uses ἐπιστολὰs in a plural sense, we roay explain this from the probability that Polycarp regarded the Epistles, which St. Paul addressed to Thessalonica, the Capital of Macedonia, and which he required to be read by all the brethren (1 Thess. v. 27), as addressed to all the Macedonian Churches, and therefore also to the Philip-See on 2 Thess. i. 4.

(2) The other opinion, that χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίω is the topic which he repeats, is hardly consistent with the reason of the thing, nor with the fact, nor with the context.

He rather seems to introduce what follows, as far as to v. 14, by these words.

(3) But, it may be asked, how could the warnings which follow be said to be the same things as he had written before?

This may be explained thus; the Epistle now before us was probably the last Epistle, in order of time, that was written by St. Paul to any Gentile Christian Church. See above, pp. 340-2.

It ought to be borne in mind in reading St. Paul's Epistles, that whatever the Holy Spirit wrote by him to one Church, was written to all Churches. See above, Preface, p. vii, note.

Accordingly, a little after the date of the present Epistle, St. Peter, writing to the Churches of Asia, speaks of all St. Paul's Epistles as Scripture, and doubtless well known to them as such. (2 Pet. iii. 16.)

St. Paul's Epistles were designed to be read publicly, and to be circulated from one Church to another, and to teach all Christians in every country and in all ages of the world. And what the Holy Spirit purposed to be done by St. Paul, He effected by his agency. See above on 1 Thess. v. 27. 2 Cor. i. 13. Col.

This important fact, which does not seem to have been sufficiently considered, affords a clue to the sense of this passage: "To write the same things to you (but emphatic) as I have already written to other Churches, to me indeed is not irksome, and to you is safe."

Therefore I will now repeat in this Epistle some warnings.

b Isa, 56, 10, 2 Cor, 11, 13, Gal. 5, 15, c Deut. 10, 16. Jer. 4. 4 John 4. 24. Rom. 2. 29. & 4. 11, 12. Col. 2. 11. d 2 Cor. 11. 18, d 2 Cor. 11. 18, 21, 22. Rom. 11. 1. Acts 23. 6. e Gen. 17. 12. Luke 2. 21. John 7. 21—24. f Acts 8. 8. & 9. 1. & 22. 4. Gal. 1. 13. g Matt 13. 14. h Jer. 9. 23. John 17. 3. Col. 2. 2. Wisd. 7. 9.

2 1 Βλέπετε τους κύνας, βλέπετε τους κακούς έργάτας, βλέπετε την κατατομήν. 3 ε Ήμεις γάρ έσμεν ή περιτομή, οί πνεύματι Θεού λατρεύοντες καὶ καυχώμενοι έν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, καὶ οὖκ ἐν σαρκὶ πεποιθότες, <sup>4 ἀ</sup> καίπερ ἐγὼ ἔχων πεποίθησιν καὶ ἐν σαρκὶ, εἴ τις δοκεῖ ἄλλος πεπριθέναι ἐν σαρκὶ, ἐγὼ μᾶλλον, 5 ° περιτομῆ όκταήμερος, έκ γένους Ίσραηλ, φυλης Βενίαμιν, Έβραιος έξ Έβραιων, κατά νόμον Φαρισαίος, 6 ε κατά ζήλος διώκων την έκκλησίαν, κατά δικαιοσύνην την έν νόμω γενόμενος ἄμεμπτος.

7 ε 'Αλλ' ἄτινα ἦν μοὶ κέρδη, ταῦτα ἥγημαι διὰ τὸν Χριστὸν ζημίαν. 8 h 'Αλλὰ μεν οὖν καὶ ἡγοῦμαι πάντα ζημίαν εἶναι διὰ τὸ ὑπερέχον τῆς γνώσεως Χριστοῦ 'Ιησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου μου, δι' δυ τὰ πάντα έζημιώθην καὶ ἡγοῦμαι σκύβαλα είναι, exhortations, and doctrines, which I have already delivered (as you know) in other Epistles to other Churches; and I will bequeath these warnings, summed up together in a brief compass, as an Apostolic legacy to you, and to all other Churches of the world.

He then proceeds to deliver those warnings, " Beware of the dogs," and so continues in a strain of hortatory doctrine, already delivered in other Epistles to other Churches.

Accordingly, as is well worthy of remark, it will be found on examination, that whatever is added by the Apostle in this and the next chapter, had been already written by him before in other Epistles to other Churches, especially in his Epistles to the Thessalonians, Corinthians, Galatians, and Romans; as may be readily seen by reference to the marginal quotations, and to the

The repetition of the definite article here, in "the dogs," "the evil workers," "the concision," is not without its significance, as showing that he had given previous warnings, in other Epistles, against these things.

He might well say, that it was not irksome to him to write again these things; and that it was safe for them to write them; because by thus repeating, in a summary manner, in this final Epistle to a Gentile Church, what he had said more at large in former Epistles, he declares to the Philippians and to the world, that he has not changed an iota of his teaching; and he thus authenticates those other Epistles, and sets his seal on what had been taught in them, and thus imparts additional assurance to their faith.

It will be seen that in v. 15, he represents this portion of this chapter (vz. 1—14) as comprising, in a brief Compendium or Epitome, the Fundamentals of all Christian Teaching on the doctrine of Justification by Faith. See note on v. 14. See also iv.

2. Tobs Kuvas] the dogs, those false Judaizers, who despise the true Christians as unclean animals, and therefore call them dogs (cp. Deut. xxiii. 18. Matt. vii. 6; xv. 26), but who are themselves shameless and impure, and are therefore to be shunned. Cp. 2 Pet. ii. 22. Rev. xxii. 15, έξω οἱ κύνες.

— τοὺς κακοὺς ἐργάτας] the evil workers,—the false Teachers of whom he had spoken 2 Cor. xi. 13.

- τὴν κατατομήν] the Concision. Circumcisio, olim tam pretiosa, nunc post Christum et Evangelium facta est tantùm Concisio. Nihil enim aliud nunc faciunt Judæi, se ipsos circumcidentes, et aliis circumcisionem imperantes, quam carnem concidunt. Circumcisio jam facta est eis non Circumcisio, sed Concisio. Nos autem, qui Christo credimus et Circumcisione Spiritûs circumcidimur, veram habemus Circumcisionem; nos rem ipsam tenemus, dum illi tantum umbram amplexantur. Vide Chrys., Theoph. Cp. Gal. v. 2; and note above on Gal. v. 12, where a similar paronomasia may be observed.

These words, 'dogs' and 'concision,' bespeak the lateness of this Epistle. He had spoken more tenderly of these things in earlier Epistles (Gal. ii. 7; v. 6; vi. 15. 1 Cor. vii. 19. Rom. ii. 28). But now the Judaizers had received ample warning from ii. 28). But now the Judaizers nad received ample the bim. They could not plead ignorance, and he therefore speaks more sternly of them, even in this most loving Enistle

3. Ημείς γάρ έσμεν ἡ περιτομή] For we are the Circumcision.
As he had already declared in Rom. ii. 28, 29; iv. 11, 12. Col. ii. 11. Cp. Justin M. c. Tryphon. 12, δευτέρας ήδη χρεία περιτομής, και ύμεις επι τη σαρκί μέγα φρονείτε. Elz. has Θεφ here, but Θεοῦ has more authority.

- καυχώμενοι εν Χριστφ 'Ιησού] glorying in Christ Jesus.

As he had said Gal. vi. 14.

4. καίπερ ἐγὼ κ.τ.λ.] Although I myself having ground of confidence even in the flesh, if any one else deems (1 Cor. iii. 18) that he has confidence in the flesh, I more—. The ἐγὼ repeated brings out more forcibly the strength of St. Paul's superior claim as distinguished from that of others, -if he had desired to enforce it; which he did not.

The strength of the argument, as well as the beauty of the language, is more clearly seen, if the sentence is not broken up by colons, but runs on freely from ημείs in v. 3, to αμεμπτος in v. 6.

- είτις δοκεί] if any one deems. As he had already said, 2 Cor. xi. 18-22.

- έγω μαλλον, 5. περιτομή δκταήμερος] I rather than others, being, in circumcision, eight days old; i. e. my circumcision was not delayed beyond the legal time (Gen. xvii. 12), and I was not circumcised as a proselyte. As to the dative case, see Winer, § 31, p. 193. Ellicott, p. 68.

5. ἐκ γένους κ.τ.λ.] of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, a Hebrew of Hebrews. As he had already said in his Epistle to the Corinthians (2 Cor. vi. 22, and Rom. xi. 1). He mentions the stack of Israel, as distinguished from the Gentitie World; he specifies the tribe of Benjamin, as showing thereby that he was not descended from one of the handmaids of Israel, but from his beloved wife Rachel. And he adds that he was a Hebrew of Hebrews, to remind them that he was not a Proselyte or Hellenist, but of pure Hebrew blood. See on Acts vi. 1. Cp. Dean Trench, Syn. N. T. xxxix.

κατὰ νόμον Φαρισαῖοs] in regard to the Mosaic Law a Pharisee, of the most rigid sect. Acts xxiii. 6; xxvi. 5.

6. κατὰ (ῆλος δ. τ. è.] as touching zeal, giving clear proofs of it by persecuting the Church. My zeal was not inactive, but displayed itself in energetic and laborious exertions. Cp. Gal. i. 13, 14. Acts xxii. 3, 4.

He thus also declares, that it was not from any personal resentment or private interest, but out of pure zeal for God, that he did what he did as a Persecutor. Acts xxvi. 9-11. See on Acts xxiii. 1, and 1 Tim. i. 5; and Bp. Sanderson, i. p. 338.

A. B. D. F. G have  $\langle \tilde{\gamma} \lambda o s$  here, the neuter form; and the Vatican MS. in 2 Cor. ix. 2, has το  $\langle \tilde{\gamma} \lambda o s$  here, the neuter form is used by St. Paul's contemporary and friend S. Clement, ad Corinth. c. 5, passim, and c. 9; and by S. Ignatius, ad Trall. 4.

Elz. has ζηλον. Cp. Winer, p. 61.
7. ην] were. Observe the tense; he does not say ἐστί. See note on v. 8, σκύβαλα. Mark also (ημίαν, the emphatic word, put last. — μοί] to me, privately, personally, and individually—emphatic; as distinguished from my membership in Christ. Cp. the similar contrast between the individual man, and the man in Christ, in 2 Cor. xii. 2-5.

The things which were gains to me in my personal character, viz. my Pharisaism and my legal righteousness, commending me to popular esteem, and public honour, among the Jews, these I now count as loss. To me now 'to live is Christ, and to die is gain,' i. 21.

- ήγημαι] I have considered, and do consider.

8. 'Αλλά μεν οδν καὶ ἡγοῦμαι] But I not only have considered them loss .- nay, I even now, after long experience of suffering endured for Christ, do consider all those things as loss. has μενοῦνγε, but the reading in the text is that of B, D, E, F, G, J, K.

- πάντα] them all-individually and collectively; i.e. all, and every one of the temporal advantages to which he has referred.

σκύβαλα] dung. κόπρον (Hesych.). So Etym. M. and other authorities in Wetstein, and several of the ancient Versions here. Hence σκύβαλον is used for any refuse or offal. This text has been made much of by the Marcionites and others, who disparaged the Levilical Law, and denied its divine origin. They alleged, that if the Law had been divine, St. Paul would never have applied such language to it as to speak of its privileges as (ημία and σκύβαλα. See Tertullian c. Marcion. v. 20, and Chrys. and Theophyl. here.

But this allegation arose from a misconception of the Apostle's words. St. Paul says, that he considers as loss not those things ίνα Χριστὸν κερδήσω, 9 i καὶ εύρεθω έν αὐτῷ μὴ ἔχων ἐμὴν δικαιοσύνην τὴν ἐκ i Rom. 10.3. νόμου, ἀλλὰ τὴν διὰ πίστεως Χριστοῦ, τὴν ἐκ Θεοῦ δικαιοσύνην ἐπὶ τῃ πίστει,  $\frac{\& 1.17}{\& 9.30}$ .  $^{10}$   $^{k}$   $^{k}$   $^{0}$ 1 Pet. 5. 10. 2 Pet. 1. 5-8. & 3. 18.

which are a gain to him, such as the Law is, and as he declares it to be, in its moral character (see Rom. vii. 12) and in its Scriptures (Rom. iii. 2; xv. 4. 2 Tim. iii. 15, 16), but such things as were formerly a gain to him privately, personally, and individually (see on v. 7), as distinguished from his present corporate condition as a member of Christ. Such were his secular honour, and rank, and renown among his countrymen for his legal learning, and ceremonial strictness, and religious zeal, his punctual observance of the ceremonial Law, and his reliance on his own righteousness consequent thereon.

These are the things which were a gain to him personally: but which now, that he is in Christ, he regards as loss, and even as dung, and casts them away as such, in order that in their place he may win another gain; in order that he may gain Christ, Who is the end of the Law (Rom. x. 4); and in order that he may be no longer a mere isolated individual  $(\partial \gamma \dot{\omega})$  resting on his own righteousness, but may be found in Him, and have that righteousness which was testified by the Law and the Prophets (Rom.

iii. 21), which is of God through faith in him.

See Rom. x. 3-5. Gal. ii. 16. Cp. Augustine, Ep. 40. 6. 9. εὐρεθῶ ἐν αὐτῷ] may be found (by my Judge at the great day) dwelling in Him, into whom I was baptized. Gal. iii. 27.

- δικ. επί τ. π.] Righteousness is a crown put on Faith's head. 10. τοῦ γνῶναί] that I may know. Winer, § 44, p. 291. 'Ad cognoscendum,' Vulg.

The infinitive marks the design of faith, -viz to know Christ; i. e. to love, obey, and gladly suffer with Christ; to be made comformable to His Death by dying unto sin; and to know the power of His Resurrection, by rising again unto new-

This communion with Christ in His sufferings and death, is signified and sealed in the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper, by which we are made conformable to His death, and partake of its benefits. See on Rom. vi. 3. 1 Cor. x. 16; xi. 26.

Thus the Apostle takes care to guard against the Jewish objection, that the doctrine of Justification by Faith affords encouragement to sin. See Rom. vi. 1. 15.

- συμμορφιζόμενος] being conformed, or rather being now inthe process of conformation. Observe the present tense. The conformation will not be completed till after Death and Resurrection. He had already dilated on this conformation to Christ's Death in Rom. vi. 3, and Col. ii. 11, 12; and fellowship in His sufferings, 2 Cor. iv. 10.

11. την έξανάστασιν την έκ νεκρῶν] the Resurrection from the Dead. So A, B (see Mai), D, E, and several Cursives, and the majority of Versions; and so Scholz, Lachm., Tisch., Alf., Ellicott.—Elz. has τῶν νεκρῶν.

As to the objection that St. Paul does not use the expression την ανάστασιν την έκ νεκρών elsewhere, that is of little weight, inasmuch as it is used in Luke xx. 35. Cp. Acts iv. 2.

Indeed, there seems to be great propriety in the expression

St. Paul could not doubt, whether he himself should have a part in the Resurrection of the dead; but (as Theophyl. observes) what he is not confident of, is, whether he shall attain to a glorious Resurrection; "ad perfectorum resurrectionem, non ad illam quam etiam inviti habebunt." Primasius. This glorious and blessed Resurrection is fitly expressed by  $\hat{\eta}$   $\hat{\epsilon}\xi\alpha\nu\alpha\sigma\tau\alpha\sigma\tau$ :  $\hat{\gamma}$   $\hat{\epsilon}\kappa$   $\nu\epsilon\kappa\rho\hat{\omega}\nu$ ,—not simply "the Resurrection of the Dead," but "the Resurrection which is from the Dead." So Irenæus, v. 13.4: "In Resurrectione eam, quæ à Spiritu datur, capiunt vitam; de quâ Resurrectione Apostolus in eâ quæ est ad Philippenses, ait 'Si quo modo occurram ad Resurrectionem quæ est à mortuis." And so Tertullian (de Resurr. 23): "De mercede ad quam tendens et ipse cum Philippensibus scribit, si quâ concurram ad Resuscitationem quæ est à mortuis." And our Lord Himself had marked this distinction when He said οἱ καταξιωθέντες τοῦ αιώνος τούτου τυχείν, και τῆς ἀναστάσεως τῆς ἐκ νεκρῶν, Luke xx. 35. Cp. Mark xii. 25, ὅταν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναστῶσιν. And this interpretation does not give any countenance to the notion, that a period of a Thousand Years will intervene between the Resurrentian of the right statement. the Resurrection of the righteous and of the wicked (see on Rev. xx. 6); but certain it is, that the dead in Christ will rise first (1 Thess. iv. 16; cp. 1 Cor. xv. 23), and the statement in the text is in harmony with that doctrine.

If any doubt be entertained as to the soundness of the above distinction, the same sense in substance is attained by rendering την έξανάστασιν την έκ νεκρών, His (i.e. Christ's) Resurrection from the dead.

And this construction harmonizes with what precedes: Being made conformable to His Death, if by any means I shall attain to His Resurrection from the dead; and is in unison with what follows, v. 21, μετασχηματίσει το σώμα της ταπεινώσεως ήμῶν σύμμορφον τῷ σώματι τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, and is illustrated by what he had said Rom. vi. 5-8. If we have been planted in the likeness of His Death, we shall be also in the likeness of His If we died with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with Him. Cp. Rom. viii. 11.

11, 12.] If by any means I may attain to the Resurrection from the Dead. Not that I already attained, or have been already perfected, but I am pressing onward, if so be that I may lay hold of that for which I was laid hold of by Christ. Brethren, I count not myself to have laid hold of; but one thing I do: forgetting the things that are behind, and stretching forth after the things that are before, I am pressing on toward the mark, unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Observe here the refutation afforded by this text to the presumptuous doctrines of personal assurance and final personerance.

The divine Apostle himself, even at this late period of his Apostolic career, does not feel absolutely confident, that he himself will attain to the glory of the Resurrection of the Just; and he disavows the notion of being supposed to have already apprehended. Cp. I Cor. ix. 27, where see note.

It was not till on the very eve of his Martyrdom for Christ, that he could exclaim, as he then did, "Henceforth there is laid up for me the crown of Righteousness." 2 Tim. iv. 3.

12. διώκω] I am pursuing after. Cp. v. 14, where the metaphor is more fully expanded.

St. Paul, when writing these words, was probably a prisoner on the Palatine Hill at Rome (see on i. 13), and therefore was in the immediate neighbourhood of the Circus Maximus, which lay in the Valley, on the south-western side of the Palatine Hill.

Doubtless he there often heard the loud and enthusiastic shouts of the Multitude cheering on their favourite Charioteers, and applauding the successful efforts of the victors in the course. which stirred so strongly the passions of the Roman people in the age of Nero, who himself entered the lists of competitors for the prize. Cp. Juvenal's description, xi. 195:

"Totam hodiè Romam Circus capit; et fragor aurem Percutit," &c.

St. Paul derives his imagery and language from that exciting spectacle. The Apostle has a spiritual Circus of his own. He too is a charioteer. He presses eagerly onward to the mark. has a prize to gain,—the palm-branch of Victory from the hand of Christ. Compare the glowing language of Tertullian, quoted above on.1 Cor. ix. 24.

St. Paul connects this imagery with that of his own conversion to Christianity.

He was then also διώκων (a pursuer), but in a different manner; as he says above, v. 6, κατὰ ζήλος διώκων τὴν Ἐκκλησίαν. But when he was furiously racing onward in his mad career of persecution, he was suddenly arrested by Christ; his car was upset; he was flung prostrate on the ground. He was enlisted by Him in a different course. He was apprehended and laid hold on by Christ, in order that he himself might apprehend and lay hold on the prize which Christ gives. Thenceforth he is a Notice of the christ gives. forth he is a διώκων in the Christian Circus; he forgets what he has left behind, and he is continually stretching himself onward to what is before. "Præteritum laborem non computans ad poto what is before. "Pretentum laborem non computans ad potiora festinat." Primas. Cp. Augustine (de Cantico Novo, 4) on the necessity of continual progress in the Christian race. "Qui non proficit, remansit in vià.... Currentem se dixit Apostolus, sequentem se dixit, non remansit, non retrospexit." See A Lapide, and Augustine in Ps. 38, vol. iv. pp. 444. 447, and vol. v. pp. 1062. 1557, "Non progredi est regredi;" and Bp. Sanderson, iii 305.

n Ps. 45, 11. Luke 9, 62, 1 Cor. 9, 24, 2 Tim. 4, 7, 8, Heb. 12, 1, Rev. 3, 21. o 1 Cor. 2. 6. Gal. 5. 10.

P Rom. 12. 16. 2 15. 5, 7. 1 Cor. 1. 10. Gal. 6. 16. q 1 Cor. 4. 16. & 11. 1 Thess. 1. 6. r Gal. 6. 12.

έγω έμαυτον οὐ λογίζομαι κατειληφέναι " εν δε, τὰ μεν οπίσω επιλανθανόμενος. τοις δὲ ἔμπροσθεν ἐπεκτεινόμενος, 14 κατὰ σκοπὸν διώκω ἐπὶ τὸ βραβείον τῆς άνω κλήσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

15 ο ΘΟσοι οὖν τέλειοι, τοῦτο φρονῶμεν καὶ εἴ τι έτέρως φρονεῖτε, καὶ τοῦτο ὁ Θεὸς ὑμῖν ἀποκαλύψει. 16 Ρ Πλὴν εἰς ὁ ἐφθάσαμεν, τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν κανόνι, τὸ αύτὸ φρονείν.

17 9 Συμμιμηταί μου γίνεσθε, αδελφοί, και σκοπείτε τους ούτω περιπατούντας καθώς έχετε τύπον ήμας. 18 πολλοί γαρ περιπατούσιν, ους πολλάκις έλεγον

The Apostle compares himself to an eager Charioteer hanging over his horses, and urging them on to the goal; and he διώκει κατά σκοπόν, pursues onward after the mark, in order to win the prize of his heavenly calling in Christ.

As to the particular phrases here, cp. Exod. xv. 9, διώξας καταλήψομαι. Sir. xi. 11, ἐὰν μὴ διώκης, οὐ μὴ καταλάβης.

Observe also that the word διώκω is used with σκοπόν here: I pursue after the mark as if the goal itself were flying before me in my pursuit. An eloquent and imaginative description : and full of truth.

The reason of this is, because the mark itself in the Christian life is not a fixed object, but is ever receding from the racer himself, and cannot be apprehended by him while he lives.

The word ἐπεκτεινόμενος, stretching myself over, may be well explained by Virgil's vivid description of the Roman Chariotrace: "illi instant verbere torto, Et proni dant lora," &c. See Georg. iii. 103-111.

The term σκοπὸs is used by the LXX for the Hebrew מָבֶּיָה, or mark, especially for archers. (Job xvi. 13. Lam. iii. 12. Wisd. v. 13. 21.) Hence it is applied to that which is the aim and end of any effort, as here. " Secundum scopum persequor and palmam." Tertullian (de Resur. 23).

The Victory in the Circus was determined by the place gained by the Charioteer after going a certain number of heats (usually seven) round the extremities (metæ), and along the side (usually seven) round the extremities (metw), and along the side of the spina. The end of the course (or winning-post) was marked by a linea or calx, and was so called. Hence "à carcere ad calcem," and "mors ultima linea rerum." (Horat.)

On the Boaselov, or prize (whence the word bravo), and on the imagery of this passage, see above, note on 1 Cor. ix. 24.

In the Roman Circus, the Victor descended from his car at the end of the race, and mounted the spina (or low wall, which was the back-bone of the course), and there received his bravium, or prize. Sueton. (Claud. 21.) Juvenal (Sat. vii. 243).

S. Clement of Rome (mentioned by St. Paul in the next chapter, iv. 3) connects this word BpaBelov with St. Paul's own Apostolic career. "St. Paul (he says) gained the Boaselov of endurance, having worn chains seven times for Christ (is there any allusion to the seven rounds of the course?),-having been stoned, having been a Preacher of Christ in the East and in the West, he received the splendid trophy of his faith: having taught righteousness to the whole world (i. e. not by his personal preaching only, but by his Epistles also), and having reached the limit of the west, and having borne testimony before the Rulers, he was thus released from the World, and went to the holy place, having been an illustrious pattern of patience." Clemens R. (ad Cor. 5.)

15. "Οσοι οὖν τέλειοι] As many then as are perfect. The Apostle had before said that he himself had not yet been perfected, τετελειωμένος, but he here claims to be τέλειος, perfect.

That is, he is perfectly initiated in the knowledge of all saving truth; he is not  $\nu \hat{\eta} m \iota s$  (1 Cor. xiii. 11. Gal. iv. 3), but he is  $\tau \epsilon \lambda \epsilon \iota o s$ , he has attained to full ripeness and maturity of manhood in Christ. As he says to the Corinthians, σοφίαν λαλουμεν έν τοις τελείοις, and therefore he exhorts them not to be babes in knowledge (cp. Eph. iv. 14), but to be φρεσί τέλειοι (1 Cor. ii. 6, where see note, and xiv. 20). Cp. Heb. v. 14, τελείων έστιν ή στερεά τροφή, and vi. 1, επί την τελειότητα φερώμεθα.

But he has not yet been perfected, he is not yet come to the society of just men made perfect (τετελειωμένων). Heb. xii. 23. Cp. Luke xiii. 32. He is not yet able to say that he has finished his course with joy. (See Acts xx. 24.) It was not till he saw that the hour of his departure was at hand that he could say as he did, τον δρόμον τετέλεκα (2 Tim. iv. 7), I have finished the race, and the crown of righteousness is mine. (2 Tim. iv. 8.)

— τοῦτο φρονῶμεν] let us have this mind; which he has declared in this course of the destriction.

clared in this summary of his doctrine on Justification, beginning at v. 1, and continued to v. 12 inclusive, of this chapter (where see note). For this is σοφία ἐν τοῖς τελείοις. (1 Cor. ii. 6.)

— καὶ εἴ τι ἐτέρως φρονεῖτε] And then (that is, provided ye entertain this mind, which I have declared concerning the true toundation of the faith) I say, if ye hold any opinion concerning any thing else in a different light from what is right, God will any thing else in a different light from what is right, God will reveal that other thing to you in its true light.

He does not say, if  $\tilde{\epsilon}\tau\epsilon\rho\rho\nu$  opposeire, if ye have a different mind, but if  $\tau$  if  $\tau\epsilon\rho\omega$  opposeire. That is, he does not say, If ye entertain any different and diverse opinion concerning that which I have declared to you as the truth; but he says, If ye hold fast to that, and if, in any thing else which I have not declared to you, ye are minded otherwise, God will enlighten you.

— ἀποκαλύψει] will reveal. "Ambulando in quod pervenimus, et, quò nondum pervenimus, pervenire poterimus, Deo nobis revelante, si quid aliter sapimus, si ea quæ jam revelavit non relinquamus." Augustine (de Gratiâ, 1).

God will be willing to reveal it to you, if you walk in the way of the true faith. (Primasius.)

16.  $\Pi\lambda\eta\nu$ ] But, moreover, however that may be, whether, as to things not fundamental, ye see them in a different light, yet take care to bear this in mind which I am about to say. See I Cor. xi. 11. Eph. v. 33. Rev. ii. 25, where the sense is similar: πλην δ έχετε κρατήσατε.
— els δ ἐφθάσαμεν] as far as we attained; up to that point, to which we are advanced in the Christian faith.

On the sense of  $\phi\theta\dot{\alpha}\nu\omega$ , attingo, see Matt. xii. 28. Luke xi. 20. 1 Thess. ii. 16. Rom. ix. 31. 2 Cor. x. 14.

— τῷ αὐτῷ στοιχεῖν κανόνι, τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν] walk by the same rule, mind the same thing.

The infinitive is rather preceptive than imperative; it declares what is to be done by the teacher himself, as well as by the taught. It lays down a general maxim for all. Cp. Hesiod (O. et D. 391), γυμνόν σπείρειν, γυμνόν δέ βοωτείν. Kühner (G. G. § 644). Winer, § 43, p. 283.

The words κανόνι τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν are not in A, B, and some Versions, and have been rejected by Griesb., Lachm., Tisch., Alf., Ellicott, particularly on the supposed ground that they are a gloss imported from Gal. vi. 16.

But there is a large amount of testimony in their favour, particularly for τὸ αὐτὸ φρονεῖν. And since this chapter in his last Epistle to a Christian Church is designed to be a final summary of St. Paul's teaching on the great doctrine of Justification by Faith, as distinguished from the Judaizing dogma of legal righteousness (see on v. I), it is no argument against the genuineness of these words (but rather the contrary) that something similar to them occurs in other Epistles, especially that to the Galatians (vi. 16; cp. there, v. 12 to v. 16, with the present chapter, 3-9), and the Epistles to the Romans and Corinthians (Rom. xv. 5. 2 Cor. xiii. 11. Cp. Gal. v. 10), to which he would specially desire them to refer for further instruction on the topic 17. Συμμμηταί μου] Be ye followers together of me; not of the false teachers. Cp. 1 Cor. iv. 16; xi. 1.

18, 19. πολλοί γὰρ κ.τ.λ.] for many are walking, of whom I oftentime used to speak to you (cp. ἔλεγον, 2 Thess. ii. 5), and now speak even weeping, the enemies of the cross of Christ. He now passes on to describe another kind of error, that other where Exith and Knowledge. phase of Judaism, which professed to have Faith and Knowledge, but which indulged itself and others in Antinomian Licentiousness, and which had been already condemned by St. James; and to which the Apostle St. Paul himself had referred in his Epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians, and on which he afterwards dwelt more fully in his Epistles to Timothy and Titus, and which at length developed itself in the wild speculations and libertine extravagances of Gnosticism. See the Introductions to those Epistles.

He here points to some features of that immoral delusion; enmily to the Cross, denying the reality of Christ's human body and sufferings, thus subverting the doctrine of the Atonement, and the foundations of Faith and Holiness; love of carnal indulgence, consequent on the denial of the Incarnation and Passion of Christ, "God manifested in the Flesh;" and seeking for worldly gain (cp. 1 Tim. vi. 5. Tit. i. 11), minding the things of earth, and forgetting those of heaven, denying the future Resurrection of the body (2 Tim. ii. 18), and its assimilation to Christ's gloύμιν, νθν δε καὶ κλαίων λέγω, τοὺς εχθροὺς τοῦ σταυροῦ τοῦ Χριστοῦ, 19 5 ὧν 5 Rom 8.5. τὸ τέλος ἀπώλεια, ὧν ὁ Θεὸς ἡ κοιλία, καὶ ἡ δόξα ἐν τῆ αἰσχύνη αὐτῶν, οἱ τὰ  $\frac{R}{2}$  Col 11. 12, 15.

ἐπίγεια φρονοῦντες.

σεως ήμῶν σύμμορφον τῷ σώματι τῆς δόξης αὐτοῦ, κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ Heb. 13. 14. δύνασθαι αὐτὸν καὶ ὑποτάξαι ἐαυτῷ τὰ πάντα.

δύνασθαι αὐτὸν καὶ ὑποτάξαι ἑαυτῷ τὰ πάντα.

IV.  $^{1}$   $^{a}$   $^{a}$   $\Omega$   $\sigma$ τε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοὶ καὶ ἐπιπόθητοι, χαρὰ καὶ  $\sigma$ τέφανός μου,  $^{2}$   $^{1}$   $^{2}$   $^{2}$  Cor.  $^{1}$   $^{5}$   $^{2}$   $^{2}$  Cor.  $^{1}$   $^{5}$   $^{2}$   $^{5}$   $^{2}$   $^{2}$  Cor.  $^{1}$   $^{5}$   $^{2}$   $^{5}$   $^{2}$   $^{5}$   $^{$ λαμβάνου αὐταῖς, αἴτινες ἐν τῷ εὐαγγελίω συνήθλησάν μοι, μετὰ καὶ Κλήμεντος κ. 1. 27. καὶ τῶν λοιπῶν συνεργῶν μου, ὧν τὰ ὀνόματα ἐν βίβλω ζωῆς.

8 21. 27. 8 21. 27.

rified body, and thus taking away the strongest motive to holiness τους έχθρους του σταυρού] the enemies of the Cross of This phrase is adopted by S. Polycarp in his Epistle to

The Philippians (c. 12). On the sense, see the preceding note.

20. ἡμῶν γὰρ τὸ πολίτευμα—ὑπάρχεί] Ye glory in your Roman citizenship (see on i. 27); but look higher. Heaven is the place in which we πολιτευόμεθα, have our citizenship. We are strangers and pilgrims here. Our home is heaven. Others seek for glory in their shame, and mind only τὰ ἐπίγεια, the things upon earth. But we seek the glory which is above.

The Apostle means something more than that "our city or country is heaven;" for men may dwell in a city or country, and yet have no share in its privileges. We have our πολίτευμα, or yet have no share in its privileges. We have our πολίτευμα, or civil status, already pre-existent (ὁπάρχον) in heaven. We were citizens of heaven before we became citizens of earth. Observe the strong word ὑπάρχει. (Cp. ii. 6.) Christ, our Head and King, has ascended thither, and is there, and we, His members and subjects, are there also. Cp. Eph. ii. 6. 19. Heb. xii. 22, and the memorable passage in Justin M. (c. Diognetum) describing the Christian life (§ 5), ἐν σαρκὶ τυγχάνουσιν, ἀλλ' οὐ κατὰ σάρκα (ῶσιν, ἐπὶ γῆς διατρίβουσιν, ἀλλ' ἐν οὐραν ῷ πολιτε ὁονται, and Frag. 7 and 9, ἐν οὐραν ῷ ἡ κατοίκησις ἡμῶν ὑπάρχει.

The words of St. Paul are well paraphrased by Tertullian (de Coronâ Mil. 13), "Tu, Christiane, peregrinus es mundi hujus, civis supernæ Hierusalem. Noster, inquit (sc. Paulus), municipatus in cœlis. Habes tuos census, tuos fastos, nihil tibi cum gaudis sæculi." And again Tertullian says, referring to this passage, to the Martyrs (c. 3), "Vobis corona æternitatis, brabium angelicæ substantiæ, politia in cælis, gloria in sæcula sæculorum."

Our Divine Head is gone into Heaven, and has carried our Humanity thither, and has given us the freedom of the heavenly city, and has prepared a place for us there. (John xiv. 2, 3.)

Many boast the privilege of having the freedom of Rome, and it is sold for a great price. (Acts xxii. 28.) But we have been enrolled in the Census of heaven. We, the Members of Christ, are already in heaven by virtue of the exaltation of our Head. (Cp. Eph. i. 20.) We live and act as subjects of Christ, and fellow-citizens with the Angels (Eph. ii. 19); and therefore we are not at home when we are on earth; "we have here no continuing city" (Heb. xiii. 14), but are journeying to our home

21. μετασχηματίσει τὸ σῶμα τῆς ταπεινώσεως] will change the body of our abasement, so as to be conformed to the body of His glory. Hence Tertullian says (de Resur. Carnis, 55, and ad Marcion. v. 20), "Transfigurabit corpus humilitatis nostræ conformale corpori gloriæ suæ." And so Irenæus (v. 12. 3), with the exception that he uses the word 'conforme,' and not conformale.'

The genitives of the substantives ταπεινώσεωs and δόξης are more expressive than adjectives (ταπεινόν and ένδοξον) would have been; as showing that  $\tau a\pi \epsilon (\nu \omega \sigma is)$  and  $\epsilon \nu \delta (\sigma \sigma)$  would have been; as showing that  $\tau a\pi \epsilon (\nu \omega \sigma is)$ , or abasement, is the characteristic of cur body, and that  $\delta \delta \xi a$ , or glory, is the characteristic of Christ's body (see on this use of the genitive James ii. 4, and cp. Rom. vi. 6,  $\tau \delta$   $\sigma \delta \mu a \tau \eta s$   $\delta \mu a \rho \tau (as)$ , and that the abasement of the body comes from us, but the glory of the body comes from Christ

The Fathers rightly argue from this text for the identity of the risen body, under a change of condition. Thus Tertullian 1. c., "In resurrectionis eventu mutari licebit cum salute substantiæ: resurget hoc corpus nostrum quod humiliatur. Quo-modo enim transfigurabit, si nullum erit?" And Irenæus, l. c., "Quod est humilitatis corpus quod transfigurabit Dominus? Manifestum est, quoniam corpus quod est caro, quod et humiliatur cadens in terram." As St. Paul himself says, "It is sown in dishonour, it is raised in glory." 1 Cor. xv. 43, and see there, v. 51—54. After ἡμῶν Εἰz. has εἰs τὸ γενέσθαι αὐτὸ, which is a gloss. On the proleptic use of the adjective, μετασχημαίσει σύμμουσουν. Ha will transform it so as to be conformed as a Port μορφον, He will transfigure it so as to be conformed, cp. Rom. viii. 29, προώρισεν συμμόρφους. Cp. Winer, § 66, p. 550 (who compares Matt. xii. 13), and Kühner, § 560. Matthiæ, § 414, 3, and note on 1 Cor. i. 8.

 $-\tau \hat{\varphi}$  σώματι τῆς δόξης] to the body of His glory. Wonderful transformation! This frail body of ours, if it is conformed to the body of Christ in suffering on earth, will be also conformed to llis body in glory, even to that body which is adored by Angels, and sitteth at the right hand of God. If all the world could weep, it would never shed tears enough for him who is excluded from that glory, and consigned to everlasting shame. (Chrys., Theoph.) Christ, at His own Transfiguration, gave a pledge and glimpse of the future glorious transformation of the risen Body, and thus prepared the Apostles to suffer with Him on earth, in order that they might be glorified with Him in heaven. Matt. xvii. 2.

- την έ. τ. δ.] the working of His power even to subdue.

CH. IV. 2. Εὐοδίαν παρακαλῶ] I beseech Euodia, and I beseech Syntyche—two women. It is remarked by St. Luke (Acts xvi. 13, 14), that at Philippi St. Paul preached specially to Nai] Yea. So the best authorities. Elz. has καί.

 σύζυγε γνήσιε] true yoke-fellow. St. Paul might, if he had pleased, have handed down this person's name to the praise of the world in all generations, by adding a single word. But he has not done so. And now it cannot be determined who this person was. It cannot be his wife, as some have imagined. Both grammar and history (1 Cor. vii. 7) refute such a supposition. He may, perhaps, be referring to St. Luke, who cannot have been now at Rome (see ii. 20), and who appears to have been specially conversant with the Philippians. Cp. on 2 Cor. viii. 18.

But such particulars as these are doubtless left in uncertainty for a good purpose, in order that we may not pretend to be "wise above what is written" (1 Cor. iv. 6), and also to remind us, that it is of little importance, whether our names are found recorded with honour in the world's history, provided they are found hereafter written "in the book of life," v. 3. Compare what is said above, Introduction to the Acts of the Apostles, pp. xii, xiii, or

p. 6 of new edit.

 — αὐταῖs] them, i. e. Euodia and Syntyche.
 — Κλήμεντος] Clement; probably the same person who was afterwards Bishop of Rome, and whose Epistle to the Corinthians is still extant. So Origen in John i. 29. Eusebius, iii. 4, and iii. 15, and S. Jerome, de Viris Illust. 15. S. Irenœus says (iii. 3. 3), that the blessed Apostles (Peter and Paul) having founded the Church of Rome, committed the Episcopate of it to Linus, whom St. Paul mentions in his Epistles to Timothy (2 Tim. iv. 21), and that Linus was succeeded by Anencletus, and that after him, in the third place [S. Jerome says the fourth, and Tertullian says, de Præscr. 32, "Clementem à Petro ordinatum"], Clement was appointed to that Episcopate, who had beheld the blessed Apostles, and had been conversant with them, and who had their preaching still ringing in his ears, and their tradition before his eyes; and in this respect he was not single, for others were then surviving, who had been taught by the Apostles. In the time of this Clement, no small dissension arose among the brethren at Corinth; and the Church of Rome sent to the Corinthians a letter, very adequate to the occasion, constraining them to peace, and renovating their faith, and declaring to them e Rom. 12. 12. 2 Cor. 13. 11. 1 Thess. 5. 16. ch. 3. 1. d Heb. 10. 25. Matt, 6, 25, 1 Pet, 5, 7, 1 John 14, 27, & 16, 33, 2 Cor. 13, 11, Gat, 5, 22, Col. 3, 15, Rem. 1, 7, g Rem. 12, 17, & 13, 13, 1 Cor. 13, 4-7, 1 Thess, 4, 3-5, $5, 22, 1 Thess. 4. 3— & 5. 22. h Rom. 15. 33. 2 Cor. 13. 11. 1 2 Cor. 11. 9. Gal. 6. 6. 1 1 Tim. 6. 6, 8. k 1 Cor. 4. 11. 2 Cor. 11. 27.

l John 15. 5. 2 Cor. 12. 9.

4 ° Χαίρετε ἐν Κυρίω πάντοτε, πάλιν ἐρῶ, χαίρετε. 5 d Τὸ ἐπιεικὲς ὑμῶν γνωσθήτω πασιν ανθρώποις ὁ Κύριος ἐγγύς. 6 ° Μηδεν μεριμνατε, αλλ' ἐν παντί τη προσευχή και τη δεήσει μετά εὐχαριστίας τὰ αἰτήματα ύμῶν γνωριζέσθω πρὸς τὸν Θεόν. Τε καὶ ἡ εἰρήνη τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἡ ὑπερέχουσα πάντα νοῦν, φρουρήσει τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν καὶ τὰ νοήματα ὑμῶν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

8 ε Τὸ λοιπὸν, ἀδελφοὶ, ὅσα ἐστὶν ἀληθῆ, ὅσα σεμνὰ, ὅσα δίκαια, ὅσα άγνὰ, όσα προσφιλή, όσα εὖφημα, εἴ τις ἀρετὴ, καὶ εἴ τις ἔπαινος, ταῦτα λογίζεσθε• 9 η α και εμάθετε και παρελάβετε και ήκούσατε και είδετε εν εμοί, ταῦτα πράσσετε καὶ ὁ Θεὸς τῆς εἰρήνης ἔσται μεθ' ὑμῶν.

10 1 Ένάρην δὲ ἐν Κυρίω μεγάλως, ὅτι ἤδη ποτὲ ἀνεθάλετε τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ φρονείν, εφ' ῷ καὶ ἐφρονείτε, ἡκαιρείσθε δέ. 11 οὐχ ὅτι καθ' ὑστέρησιν λέγω. έγω γαρ ξμαθον έν οἷς εἰμὶ αὐτάρκης εἶναι· 12 κ οἶδα καὶ ταπεινοῦσθαι, οἶδα καὶ περισσεύειν, εν παντί και εν πασι μεμύημαι και χορτάζεσθαι και πεινάν, και περισσεύειν καὶ ὑστερεῖσθαι· 13 1 πάντα ἰσχύω ἐν τῷ ἐνδυναμοῦντί με. 14 Πλὴν καλως ἐποιήσατε συγκοινωνήσαντές μου τη θλίψει.

the tradition which he had recently received from the Apostles. Clement was succeeded by Evarestus. (Irenæus.)
On the succession of the earlier Bishops of Rome, see Bp.

Pearson, Minor Works, ii. pp. 461—468, with the additions of his learned Editor, pp. 469—473. Bp. Pearson places the Episcopate of Linus, s.D. 55—67; that of Anencletus, to 69; that of Clement, to 83. Was S. Clement (who wrote in Greek) from Philippi? It has happened providentially, that while the names of so many helpers of St. Paul are not specified, the names of Linus and Clemens were commemorated by him. The support of St. Paul's Apostolic authority was thus given to them and their public acts, as Bishops of the Church, after his death. It is not unworthy of remark, that these commemorations of them are found in Epistles written by him from Rome, of which City each of them was Bishop; and in his farewell Epistle, viz. in the Philippin Ph lippian Epistle, the last that he wrote to a Church, and that is addressed to a Colony of Rome; and in the second to Timothy, the last of all his Epistles.

— ἐν βίβλφ ζωῆs] in the book of life. Therefore, it need not be recorded by me.

That this saying does not imply any assertion concerning the certainty of their salvation, appears from Exod. xxxii. 32. Ps. lxix. 28. Rev. iii. 5, where names once written in the book of Life are represented as liable to be blotted out. In the last named of those passages Christ says, "He that overcometh, I will not blot out his name out of the book of life."

4.  $\pi \dot{\alpha} \lambda \iota \nu \ \ell \rho \ddot{\omega} \ I$  will say again; although some may think it strange that I, now in prison at Rome (i. 7. 13), should rejoice, and invited the same of th and invite you to rejoice, yet I say it, and will say it again.

5. Τὸ ἐπιεικές] let your fairness (see 1 Tim. iii. 3) be known unto all men. A fitting exhortation to the Philippians, Roman colonists (see Acts xvi. 12), many of them soldiers settled in Greece, a conquered province; such persons were prone to be unfair, insolent, and oppressive to their neighbours.

— δ Κύριος ἐγγύς] The Lord (is) at hand. The Christian Watchword. Ye Roman colonists and soldiers, do not be proud of your Roman lordship, remembersony Lord. Christians the definition of the control of the contro your Roman lordship: remember your Lord—Christis near at hand.

7. ἡ εἰρήνη τοῦ Θεοῦ] the Peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and minds.—Weapons of war guard the World; God's Peace guards the Church. Cp. Col. iii. 15. This Apostolic Benediction, which has sounded through Christendom for 1800 years, proceeded from St. Paul in prison. Such was the power of the Holy Ghost, and of faith. His body is chained, but his heart is in heaven. So it had been in the prison of Philippi, to which he now writes from Rome. He and Silas were in prison there, but at midnight they prayed and sang praise unto God. Acts xvi. 24, 25. Cp. here v. 6—" Be over careful for nothing, but," &c.

 ή ὑπερέχουσα πάντα νοῖν] which overpasseth all under-standing. "Pax ista præcellit omnem intellectum nostrum, neque sciri à nobis, nisi cum ad cœlestia vencrimus, potest." Augustine

8. Τὸ λοιπόν] Finally. He repeats the word (see iii. 1), like one who still lingers, and is loath to bid farewell.
- ὅσα εὕφημα] 'quæcunque bonæ famæ.' St. Paul does not think it beneath him to pay regard to things of 'good report.' He who keeps his life clear of sin does good to himself; he who have the set of the part o keeps it clear of suspicion, is merciful to others. Our life is necessary to ourselves, but our good name is necessary to others.

Therefore the Apostle commands us to provide things honest, not only in the sight of God, but also in the sight of men (2 Cor. viii. 21). And in this exhortation, he does not omit to mention things of 'good report,' as necessary to be minded by us. I suppose the Apostle did not over-value the praise of men; for r suppose the Apostie and not over-value the praise of men; for he says, "If I pleased men I should not be the servant of Christ." (Gal. i. 10; cp. 1 Cor. iv. 3. 2 Cor. i. 12). But he endeavoured not only to live a good life, but also to keep a good name—the one for his own sake, the other for the sake of other men, as well as for himself. Bp. Sanderson (in his excellent Sermon on well as for himself. Bp. Sanderson (in his excellent Sermon on Eccles. vii. 1, vol. i. pp. 1—32).

— ετ τις ἀρετή] Not to be rendered, 'if there is any virtue' (for this could not be questioned), but 'whatever virtue there is.' Cp. ετ τις θέλει, whosoever desires, Luke ix. 23; and the phrase, ετ τις έχει ῶτα ἀκούειν, whosoever hath ears to hear, Mark iv. 23; vii. 16, which is equivalent to ὁ ἔχων ὧτα ἀκούειν: and Rom. xiii. 9, ετ τις ἐτέρα ἐντολη, whatsoever other commandment there is; 1 Cor. iii. 14, ετ τινος ἔργον μενεί, whosesoever's work shall remain; and viii. 3. See also John iii. 3. 5; vi. 53, where this phrase introduces very important doctrinal declarations. trinal declarations.

- λογίζεσθε] reason upon, meditate on them, so as to practise them. Cp. Ps. cxxxix. 2, έλογίσαντο έν καρδία άδικίαν. Prov. xvi. 30. Ezek. xi. 2. Hos. vii. 15. Mic. ii. 1, λογιζόμενοι κόπους καὶ ἐργαζόμενοι. Compare the use of the Italian word ragionare.

The thought is expressed, according to his degree, by Horace (1 Ep. i. 10), "Quid verum atque decens curo et rogo, et omnis in hoc sum." See also I Sat. iv. 137, "hæc ego mecum Compressis agito labris."

10. ἀνεθάλετε τὸ ὑπὲρ ἐμοῦ φρονεῖν] ye put forth fresh sprouts of your care for me; 'repullulastis sapere pro me' (Aug.); 'refloruistis sentire pro me.' (Vulg.) He rejoices that they had sprouted forth afresh in their care for him, now that he was relieved by their alms, as in a second spring. Cp. Aug. Conf. xiii. 26.

'Aναθάλλω is used here in an active sense, as in Ezek. xvii. 24. Ecclus. i. 18. Ye had the mind of tender affection for me always, but ye now displayed it; like a tree which has life in it in winter, but which puts forth evidence of that inner life by its foliage in spring. The Christian, in his almsgiving, is like a tree planted by the water-side, whose leaf does not wither, and which brings forth its fruit in due season. (Ps. i. 3.)

The former germinations of their loving care for the Apostle had shown themselves when he was at Thessalonica, on his first visit to Greece (v. 15), and probably when he was afterwards at Corinth. See on Acts xviii. 5, and on 2 Cor. xi. 9.

— ἡκαιρεῖσθε] ye had not a season. It was not from any barrenness on your part, that you did not put forth buds and sprouts of affection, but you had no favourable season for such spiritual vegetation.

11, 12.] See Bp. Sanderson's Sermon, vol. i. 113—117.

12. Οίδα καί] I know both, &c. Etz. has δὲ instead of καλ, which is more expressive, and is in the best MSS.

- ἐν παντὶ καὶ ἐν πᾶσι] in each thing (taken singly), and in all (collectively). —  $\mu \epsilon \mu \nu \mu \mu \mu$ ] a beautiful word. I have been initiated. These are our Christian Mysteries:—how different from those of the

13. ενδυναμούντι με] who empowereth me. So Ignatius (ad Smyrn. 4) looking forward to martyrdom, έν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ

15 m Οἴδατε δὲ καὶ ὑμεῖς, Φιλιππήσιοι, ὅτι ἐν ἀρχῆ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, ὅτε ἐξῆλθον m 2 C.r. 11. 8, 9. ἀπὸ Μακεδονίας, οὐδεμία μοι ἐκκλησία ἐκοινώνησεν εἰς λόγον δόσεως καὶ λήψεως, εί μη ύμεις μόνοι 16 ότι καὶ έν Θεσσαλονίκη καὶ ἄπαξ καὶ δὶς εἰς την χρείαν μοι ἐπέμψατε. 17 η Οὐχ ὅτι ἐπιζητῶ τὸ δόμα, ἀλλὰ ἐπιζητῶ τὸν καρπὸν η Rom. 15. 28. τὸν πλεονάζοντα εἰς λόγον ὑμῶν. 18 ο ᾿Απέχω δὲ πάντα καὶ περισσεύω πεπλή- ο 2 Cor. 19. 12. ρωμαι δεξάμενος παρὰ Ἐπαφροδίτου τὰ παρ' ὑμῶν, ὀσμὴν εὐωδίας, θυσίαν δεκτήν εὐάρεστον τῶ Θεῶ.

δόξη ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

 $^{20}$   $^{9}$   $T\hat{\omega}$  δὲ Θε $\hat{\omega}$  καὶ Πατρὶ ἡμῶν ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αἰώνων, ἀμήν.

1 ο δε Θεφ και Πατρι ημων η οοξα εις τους αιωνας των αιωνων, αμην.

21 'Ασπάσασθε πάντα ἄγιον ἐν Χριστῷ 'Ιησοῦ' ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς οἱ σὺν ἐμοὶ Gal. 1. 5. Eph. 3. 21.

αδελφοί 22 ἀσπάζονται ὑμᾶς πάντες οἱ ἄγιοι, μάλιστα δὲ οἱ ἐκ τῆς Καίσαρος Jude 25. οἰκίας.

Χριστοῦ εἰς τὸ συμπαθεῖν αὐτῷ πάντα ὑπομένω αὐτοῦ με ἐνδυναμοῦντος. Cp. 1 Tim. i. 12. 2 Tim. iv. 17. Elz. adds Χριστῷ, not in A, B, D*.

15.  $\dot{\epsilon}\nu$  ἀρχῆ τοῦ εὐαγγελίου] at the beginning of the Gospel preached by me. Philippi was the first city to which he preached in Greece (Acts xvi. 12). He makes it a subject of praise to the Philippians, that at the beginning of his Apostolic career, when he was little known in Greece, they, a poorer Church, had come forward, and stood alone in ministering to his needs, even when he was absent from them; and had twice sent pecuniary supplies to him, even when he was in the wealthy City of Thessalonicathe capital of Macedonia.

Clement of Rome says to another Greek Church, that of Corinth (c. 47), "Take the Epistle of the blessed Paul into your hands. What did he write to you first of all, ἐν ἀρχῆ τοῦ εὖαγγελίου, i. e. at the beginning of his preaching to you?" He then refers them to the first Chapter of the first Epistle (1 Cor. i. 10). In that case the word εὐαγγέλου seems to be used (as Cotelerius observes) of preaching by writing. Here it is said of preaching by word of mouth, and signifies 'his first preaching of the Gospel among them.' See Acts xvi. 12—xvii. 1. Cp. Sanderson (i. p. 112).

We are not to imagine (as some have done) that St. Paul's Apostolic career began at his Conversion. It is not to be dated from his Conversion at Damascus, but from his Ordination at Antioch. See above on Acts xiii. 3, 4.

This mention here of the kindness of the Philippians at the beginning of his Apostolic Ministry, is more striking as a record of his thankful remembrance of them, because it is made in this Epistle, almost at the end of his Ministry. See above, Introduction to this Epistle, the last that he wrote to a Gentile Church.

It is observable that there is a similar retrospect in the last Epistle of all that St. Paul wrote-the Second to Timothy.

There he goes back, with grateful reminiscence, to the earliest period of his own Ministry—the persecutions he endured at Antioch, and Iconium, and Lystra (iii. 11), and to the commencement of his intercourse with Timothy (i. 5).

At the close of his career, he takes a review of the whole, from the beginning, in order that he may be duly sensible of God's continual care and love towards him. So here. An exemplary pattern of thankfulness to all-especially at the end

There is a difficult passage, hitherto unexplained, in the Epistle of S. Polycarp to the Philippians, which illustrates, and is illustrated by this text.

In the Old Latin Version of S. Polycarp's Epistle, sect. xi. (the original Greek of that section is lost), we read, "Nihil tale sensi in vobis, in quibus laboravit beatus Paulus, qui estis in principio Epistolæ ejus."

This clause has been usually supposed to mean that the Philippians are mentioned in the beginning of his Epistle. But this is unintelligible. The true meaning of S. Polycarp seems to be, that they themselves are his (St. Paul's) Epistles in the beginning of his ministry. Cp. St. Paul's own language to the Corinthians, "Ye are my Epistle," 2 Cor. iii. 2, where see note.

Corinthans, "Ye are my Epistic," 2 cor. In. 2, where see hole.

— ὅτε ἐξῆλθον ἀπὸ Μακεδονίας] when I went out of Macedonia. This circumstance is mentioned, because he was driven out of Macedonia by the inveterate rancour of the Jews, persecuting him first from Thessalonica (Acts xvii. 5—10), then following him to Beroea, and expelling him also thence; and thus he was forced to go out of Macedonia. Yet he says, ye Philippians did not desert me, but succoured me even then.

- είς λόγον δόσεως και λήψεως] for an account or reckoning (see v. 17), of giving on one side, and of taking on the other. "In ratione dati atque accepti." Augustine.

No other Church gave, and I took from no other Church but from you.

It may be said, that there could be no taking, if there was no

But it is to be remembered, that the word  $\lambda \alpha \mu \beta d\nu \epsilon i \nu$ , as applied to ministerial maintenance, signifies to take as a due. See 2 Cor. xi. 8. 20, et  $\tau_{18}$   $\lambda \alpha \mu \beta d\nu \epsilon_{1}$ . The minister of God  $\lambda \alpha \mu \beta d\nu \epsilon_{1}$ , by right, under the Gospel, as under the Law. See on 1 Cor. ix. 14, and Irenaus iv. 8. 3, who shows the unity of both Testaments in this provision.

16. και ἐν Θεσσαλονίκη] even in Thessalonica, that great and wealthy City, where it might be expected that some would befriend me. Ye sent and succoured me even there.

17. τὸ δόμα—τὸν καρπόν] Not that I seek after the gift, but I do seek after the fruit that aboundeth to your account. Observe the definite articles. The gift is not the thing that I seek after, in your love, but the fruit that aboundeth to your account, not to mine. "Non ut ego explear, sed ne vos inanes remaneatis."

Aug. (Serm. 46.)

I have learnt from Thee, O Lord, to distinguish between the gift and the fruit. The gift is the thing itself, which is given by one who supplies what is needed, as money, or raiment. But the fruit is the good and well-ordered will of the giver. It is a gift, to receive a Prophet, and to give a cup of cold water; but it is fruit. to do those acts in the name of a Prophet, and in the name of a Disciple. The raven brought a gift to Elias, when it brought him bread and flesh; but the widow brought fruit, because she fed him as a man of God. Augustine (Confess. xiii. 26, referring to St. Paul's words here, and to Matt. x. 41, 42, and to 1 Kings xvii.).

18. ὀσμὴν εὐωδίαs] an odour of sweet smell—like the odour of incense. There is a fragrant perfume in Almsgiving to man, which ascends in a cloud of aromatic incense to God. See Eph. v. 2.  $-\theta \upsilon \sigma [\alpha \nu -\Theta \epsilon \widehat{\varphi}] \quad a \ sacrifice \ acceptable, \ well-pleasing \ to \ God.$ An offering, therefore, not made to me, but to God, Whose Apostle I am. Cp. Prov. xix. 17. Matt. xxv. 35. Heb. xiii. 16. This is the true character of Christian almsgiving. Cp. ii. 17, and see S. Irenœus, iv. 18. 4, where he shows that the Jews are no longer able to offer oblations acceptable to God; which are offered in the Church, through Christ, and there only, and by Him alone; and explains what those oblations are. An important lesson to those who imagine, that if money is given, it signifies little from whom it comes, and with what motive it is offered.

21. πάντα ἄγιον] every saint. Observe St. Paul's thought-fulness for individuals: and cp. St. John's message, "Greet the friends by name." 3 John 15.

22. μάλιστα οἱ ἐκ τῆs Καίσαρος οἰκίας] especially the Christians of Casar's household-probably freedmen, and other domestics of the Palace. Cp. Lightfoot, Journal of Philology, vol. iv.

St. Paul says, "specially they of Cæsar's household," and thus shows that he had special means of intercourse with them. In his confinement on the Palatine (see on i. 13) he had become acquainted with some members of the Imperial Household. Perhaps some of them had been employed in ministering to him, as a state-prisoner, in his detention; and he had gained influence over some who were appointed to guard him.

At Philippi, a Colony of Rome, the Apostle had preached to the Jailor who guarded him, and to all his household  $(\tau \hat{p})$  oikiq αὐτοῦ, Acts xvi. 32), and they all were baptized by him. He is now at Rome, and has made converts of Cæsar's household, who salute the Philippians as their brethren in Christ. Such a greeting as this must have been specially welcome to the Philippians. See above, i. 13.

23 ΄Η χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν ἀμήν.

The Gospel was first preached to the poor (Matt. xi. 5), and God chose the weak things of this world (1 Cor. i. 26-28), and the Apostle had shown his Christian tenderness for the large and despised class of slaves, to which Onesimus belonged, by his letter to Philemon (Philem. 16). Now Christianity has found its way into the household of Cæsar. At length, after it had been persecuted by the Cæsars, it won Emperors to Christ. Thus the mustard-seed of the Gospel grew, and stretched forth its branches, and overshadowed the World. (Matt. xiii. 31. Luke xiii. 19.)

and overshadowed the World. (Matt. xiii. 31. Luke xiii. 19.) 23. τοῦ πνεύματος ὑμῶν] your spirit. So A, B (see Mai), D, E, F, G, and Lachm., Tisch., Alf., Ellicott. Elz. πάντων.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS

I. On the Authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

This Epistle has been ascribed to different persons. The names of those to whom it has been assigned may be conveniently taken into consideration in the following alphabetical order.

1. Apollos has been regarded as its author by many learned writers in recent times 1. But to this opinion there are several insurmountable objections.

Apollos was of Alexandria 2; and it may be safely affirmed, that, if Apollos had written the Epistle, his Christian fellow-countrymen would have been cognizant of the fact, and would have been moved by a sense of justice, as well as national zeal, to vindicate its authorship to him.

The ancient Church of Alexandria was the most learned Church in Christendom. In its Catechetical School, founded by St. Mark, it reared a succession of men eminent for erudition and literary research. The early Christian Teachers of Alexandria would not have allowed that distinguished Alexandrine Teacher to be despoiled of his due honour.

Apollos had many devoted adherents 3; and if he had been the writer of the Epistle, some of them would have come forward in his native country, and elsewhere, to claim for him the credit of so signal a service to the cause of the Gospel, as the composition of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

But, as will be shown hereafter, the Christians of Alexandria, from the earliest times, unanimously ascribed this Epistle to another person. Not one Alexandrine writer can be cited as having assigned it to the Alexandrine Teacher Apollos.

Nor is this all. The fact is, that not a single Author of any note, in any part of Christendom for fifteen centuries, attributed it to Apollos. That opinion first appeared in the world in the sixteenth century 4.

It is clear from the Epistle itself , that the Author was known by his friends, especially those to whom it was first sent; and few persons, it may be supposed, will be induced to imagine, that the authorship remained a secret for so long a time, and that it was first discovered fifteen hundred years after Christ 6.

2. St. Barnabas has been supposed by others to be the Author of this Epistle.

That opinion has been maintained by many able advocates with much learning and ingenuity?. The most important argument in its favour is, that the Epistle is ascribed to Barnabas, without hesitation, by one of the most learned writers of the second and third centuries, Tertullian 8.

In one of his Montanistic treatises, where he urges the necessity of a severe penitential discipline towards those who have lapsed into deadly sin, and cites passages from the writings of St. Paul in support of his own opinion, he says: "I am willing, by way of supererogation, to add Apollo;" and see his Sermon, 1 Cor. iii. 4.

See xiii. 18, 19. 23.
 Cp. Dr. W. H. Mill, Prælectio Theologica, Cantabrigiæ,

1843, p. 32.

<sup>7</sup> Especially by Ullmann, Studien u. Kritiken, 1828, vol. i. H. 2, p. 368, and Wieseler, Chronologie, p. 504.

8 De Pudicit. 20.

<sup>1</sup> Particularly by Ziegler, 1791, Dindorf, Bleek, Tholuck, Credner, Reuss, Feilmoser, Lutterbeck, De Wette, and last of all by Lünemann, 1855. See his Einleitung, p. 22.

2 Acts xviii. 24.

&lt;sup>4</sup> It was then broached by Luther, ad Gen. xlviii. 20: "Autor Epistolæ ad Hebræos quisquis est, sive Paulus, sive, ut ego arbitror, Vol. II,-Part IIÎ.

the testimony of one who was a companion of the Apostles; and who is qualified, by the nearness of his own rights, to confirm the discipline of his masters. There is extant a writing of Barnabas to the Hebrews, -a man sufficiently authorized by God 1, inasmuch as Paul associated him with himself in the maintenance of self-denial2; and verily the Epistle of Barnabas is more generally received among the Churches than the Apocryphal Pastor's of adulterers."

Tertullian proceeds to quote from the Epistle to the Hebrews that memorable passage, which was the occasion of so much controversy in ancient times between the writers of the Church on the one side, and the partizans of the severe penitential discipline of Montanus and Novatian on the other 4. He then adds: "The writer who received this doctrine from the Apostles, and taught this with them, had never learnt, that a second repentance was promised by the Apostles to an adulterer or fornicator."

This certainly is a strong testimony; and it derives additional cogency from the consideration, that Tertullian, who was distinguished by the extent of his learning, does not seem to have entertained any doubt as to the authorship of the Epistle; and that, if he had heard it attributed to any person of superior dignity to St. Barnabas, he would probably have mentioned the fact, in his desire to procure the highest sanction in his power for the testimony which he adduced from the Epistle in favour of his own tenets.

On the other hand, it is to be remembered, that in the age of Tertullian, there was but little crudition among the Christians of the West. The Latin Church had no literature before his time o. And Tertullian,—as this passage and many others in his writings show,—was accustomed to speak dogmatically, in an arbitrary and magisterial tone (a frailty incidental to learned men standing alone among their contemporaries), and to promulgate his own private opinions with somewhat of oracular authority.

The ascription of this Epistle to Barnabas may be reckoned among the private opinions of that great African Father. It never took root in Christendom 6. It was almost unknown in the East. It was not received in Cyprus, the country of St. Barnabas himself. Epiphanius, the learned Bishop of Salamis in Cyprus in the fourth century, who was by origin from Palestine, and therefore an important witness on this subject, knew nothing of it. He ascribed the Epistle to another author 7.

Nor was Tertullian's opinion accepted in Africa, his own country. S. Athanasius and S. Augustine, the ablest writers of the African Church, attribute the Epistle to another,—the same person as Epiphanius 8. So does Primasius, a learned African Bishop of the sixth century, and an excellent commentator on St. Paul's Epistles 9, who discusses the question of the authorship. And what is of greater importance, the Bishops of the African Church, in several Synods, ascribe it to another author 10.

Besides, if Barnabas had written the Epistle, he would, in all probability, have prefixed his name to it. Barnabas had taken part with Peter at Antioch in the debate concerning the Ceremonial Law 11, and his name would have commended the Epistle to the favourable acceptance of the Hebrew Christians. He would probably have followed the example of the Apostles St. Peter and St. James, who, in writing to Jewish Christians, placed their own names at the beginning of the Epistles which they wrote.

Yet further; it is a constant tradition of the Church that Barnabas wrote one Epistle; and that Epistle is not reckoned by the ancients among the Canonical Scriptures 12. Whether that Epistle is the same as the Epistle now extant which is ascribed by some to Barnabas, is doubtful 13. If it is,

<sup>1</sup> The true reading (as Oehler and Delitzsch have pointed out) is, "à Deo satis auctorati viri," not "adeò satis auctoritatis viri."

<sup>2</sup> That is, in not claiming ministerial wages from the Churches

<sup>3</sup> Tertullian so calls the work entitled the "Shepherd of Hermas," the discipline of which was regarded by him as too lax, and as affording encouragement to sin.

Heb. vi. 4-8.

5 Evidence has been given of this fact in another place, in the Editor's volume on "S. Hippolytus and the Church of Rome," chap. ix.

<sup>6</sup> This statement is not contravened by the testimony of S. Jerome concerning the Epistle: "licet plerique eam vel Barnabæ, vel Clementis arbitrentur" (Epist. ad Dardan. 129), where "plerique" does not signify "most persons," but "many," and is designed to comprise those who ascribed it to S. Clement: and is to be explained by what S. Jerome says in another place (Cat. Eccles. Script. 5), "Epistola que fertur ad Hebraeos non l'auli creditur, propter styli sermonisque dissonantiam, sed vel Barnabæ juxta Tertullianum, vel Lucæ Evangelistæ juxta quosdam, vel Clementis, Romanæ postea Ecclesiæ Episcopi, quem aiunt ipsi adjunctum sententias Pauli proprio ordinasse sermone." S. Jerome's own opinion will be stated hereafter.

Tepiphan. Hær. 76. See also Hær. 42. 69, 70; the passages may be seen in Kirchofer, pp. 14. 250.
 Ad Rom. § 11, and De Doct. Christ. ii. 12, 13.

9 Primasii Commentaria in Epist. S. Pauli, Præfatio Generalis, and Præfat. ad Hebr. in vol. lxviii. of Migne's Patrologia, pp.

10 Conc. Hippon. A.D. 393, can. 36. Conc. Carth. iii. can. 47; v. can. 29.

11 Gal. ii. 13.

12 See Euseb. H. E. iii. 25. Jerome, Scr. Eccl. 6.

13 See Hefele, Patres Apostolici, p. 7; and Dressel, Patres Apostolici, p. x. The Epistle of Barnabas is contained in the Codex Sinaiticus, N.

then the great difference in power and authority between it and the Epistle to the Hebrews, refutes the supposition that the latter is due to him. At any rate, it is certain that the one Epistle which the ancient Church attributed to Barnabas, was not the Epistle to the Hebrews.

On the whole it may be affirmed that no other ancient writer of any note can be specified as having ascribed this Epistle to Barnabas. Tertullian's opinion, however it may have arisen ', is not of sufficient weight to counterbalance the arguments, positive and negative, on the other side.

3. S. Clement, Bishop of Rome<sup>2</sup>, is supposed by others to be the writer of this Epistle.

If, however, the ancient testimonies on this subject are examined, it will be found that they only go so far as to intimate that some persons were of opinion, that the language of the Epistle was from him; and that they ascribed the substance to another person 3, and said, that Clement either translated the Epistle from Hebrew, or clothed the thoughts of another in the dress which they now wear in the Epistle.

Our present inquiry is concerning the subject-matter of the Epistle.

There is no ancient authority in favour of its ascription to Clement of Rome.

On the other hand, there is a peculiar circumstance in his relation to the Epistle, which appears to refute the opinion that Clement was its author.

An Epistle of Clement himself has come down to us. In it he often quotes or refers to the Epistle to the Hebrews 4, as has been already observed by S. Jerome 5.

The use which S. Clement has made of the Epistle to the Hebrews is very important, as proving the primitive antiquity of that Epistle, and the high esteem in which it was held. It also seems to afford a strong presumption that Clement himself was not the Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews. He would hardly have quoted it as he does, blending passages from it with citations from Holy Scripture, if he himself had written it. And if he himself had written the Epistle to the Hebrews, which was received as Canonical Scripture by the Eastern Churches from the earliest times, it seems probable that the other Epistle, which Clement afterwards wrote when Bishop of Rome, in the name of the Roman Church to the Church of Corinth, would have been characterized by similar spiritual endowments, and would have attained a no less dignity than the Epistle to the

The Epistle of S. Clement to the Corinthians is (as S. Jerome calls it) a "very useful Epistle." It breathes a spirit of genuine Christian charity, and is dictated by an earnest desire for Christian unity. It is in every respect worthy of an Apostolic Bishop and Father. But the Epistle to the Hebrews has far higher titles; and we need not hesitate to say, that the writer of the Epistle, still extant, which was sent in the name of the Church of Rome to that of Corinth, and is universally ascribed to S. Clement, was not the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

4. St. Luke has been named by others as the writer of this Epistle.

But the same observations which have already been made with regard to S. Clement may be applied also to St. Luke. Those ancient testimonies which mention his name in connexion with the Epistle, do not ascribe to him the substance of the Epistle, but only the form 7.

St. Luke did not, according to them, conceive the plan of the Epistle, or furnish the thoughts and ideas, but only attired them in their present dress. And even this supposition is confessedly put forth as an expedient for removing a difficulty, and in order to account for the phenomena of the style of the Epistle, supposed to differ from that of the received Epistles of St. Paul.

There appear to be insuperable objections to the opinion which ascribes the Epistle to him.

himself, iii. 38; and Jerome, Cat. Script. Eccl. c. 5, quoted above.

<sup>4</sup> See Clement, Epist, i. cap. 12. 17, 36, 43, 45, 56, <sup>5</sup> Jerome, Cat. Scr. Eccl. 15, "Clemens scripsit ex persona Romanæ Ecclesiæ ad Ecclesiam Corinthiorum valdè utilem Epistolam, quæ et in nonnullis locis publicè legitur, quæ mihi videtur characteri Epistolæ quæ sub Pauli nomine ad Hebræos fertur convenire. Sed et multis de eâdem Epistolâ non solùm sensibus sed juxta verborum quoque ordinem abutitur; omnino grandis in utrâque similitudo est.

6 Particularly by Grotius, Köhler, and last of all, though not confidently, by Delitzsch, in his learned Commentar zum Briefe an die Hebräer, Leipzig, 1857, pp. 701-706.

7 See for example Euseb. iii. 38; vi. 25.

&lt;sup>1</sup> If a conjecture may be allowed in this matter, perhaps the It a conjecture may be allowed in this matter, pernaps the Epistle to the Hebrews may have been read by Tertullian in a Manuscript commencing with the Epistle ascribed to Barnabas (to which Origen refers c. Celsum, i. 63; Clem. Rom. Hom. i. 18; and Euseb. vi. 13), and the Epistle to the Hebrews not having any name prefixed to it, may therefore have been supposed by Tertullian to have been written by him. The practice of binding together MSS., the compositions of different authors, was very ancient. The Epistle of S. Clement is contained in the Alexandrine MS. of the New Testament. The old Latin Version of the Epistle of Barnabas was discovered in a MS. of a work of Terture. tullian.

&lt;sup>2</sup> See above on Phil. iv. 3.

&lt;sup>3</sup> See for example Origen ap. Euseb. vi. 25; and Eusebius

St. Luke was not of Hebrew origin 1, nor is there any evidence that he was even an Hellenistic Jew. It is most probable that he was a Gentile Christian; and the testimony of Christian Antiquity derives his origin from the city of Antioch2, the capital of Syria, the centre of Gentile Christianity.

It is by no means probable, that a Gentile Christian, or even a Jewish Hellenist, would have ventured to undertake the task of writing an Epistle to the Hebrews.

Such an act would have savoured too much of presumption, and would not have been in accordance with the characteristic modesty of the Evangelist.

Besides, if St. Luke had been the author of the Epistle, it can hardly be doubted that the Christians of Syria, of Asia, and of Greece, would have known the fact, and would have attributed it to him.

But we find, on examination, that the Church of Antioch unhesitatingly assigned the Epistle to another person.

The Bishops assembled in a celebrated Synod in that city in A.D. 269, to examine the heretical teaching of Paul of Samosata, quote the Epistle 3, and ascribe it not to St. Luke, but to St. PAUL.

Thus then we are brought to the question-

I. Was the Epistle to the Hebrews written by St. Paul?

II. Is the language of the Epistle from him, or only the substance; or both?

These questions may be considered with reference-

(1) To external testimony,

(2) To internal evidence.

The external testimony divides itself naturally into two branches, (1) that of the Eastern Church, and (2) that of the Western.

1. The Epistle was addressed to the Hebrews of the East, especially of Jerusalem and Palestine Although the Author of the Epistle writes anonymously, yet those persons, to whom the Epistle was primarily and specially addressed, were acquainted with the name and person of the Author. He thus speaks to them: Pray for us, for we are persuaded that we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly; but I beseech you the rather to do this, in order that I may be restored to you the sooner . . . And again, Know ye that our brother Timothy has been set at liberty, with whom, if he come soon, I will visit you 4.

These and other similar expressions bespeak an individual well known personally to the friends whom he addresses.

The question therefore arises here—

What is their testimony concerning the writer? To whom did they ascribe the Epistle?

The answer to this inquiry is, that the Churches of Jerusalem, Palestine, Syria, Asia, and Alexandria concurred in ascribing the Epistle to the Apostle St. Paul.

From Jerusalem and Palestine we have the testimony of a celebrated Bishop of Jerusalem in the fourth century, S. Cyril, who attributes the Epistle to him without any hesitation 5.

The same may be said of Eusebius, Bishop of that city in Palestine, in which St. Paul was confined for two years, Cæsarea o, and who ascribes the substance of the Epistle to St. Paul.

The testimony of Eusebius is of more value, because the Epistle to the Hebrews has ever been regarded by the Church as one of its best safeguards against the heresy of the Arians, who sometimes appealed to Eusebius as favourably inclined to their tenets. If (says Theodoret, Bishop of Cyrus') the Arians are not willing to listen to us concerning the benefits which the Church has received from the Epistle to the Hebrews, let them listen to Eusebius of Palestine, to whom they appeal as an advocate of their own dogmas. For Eusebius confesses that this Epistle is the work of the divine Apostle St. Paul, and that all the ancients entertained this opinion concerning the authorship of the Epistle *.

<sup>1</sup> Cp. Col. iv. 11. 14.

troduction to St. Luke's Gosper.

3 Routh, R. S. ii. 473, 474.

4 Heb. xiii. 18. 23.

5 S. Cyril Hierosolym. Catech. iv., where he is treating expressly of the Canonical Books of Holy Scripture.

6 Euseb. E. H. iii. 3, where he says, "the fourteen Epistles of St. Paul are manifest and evident; though it is not right to be ignorant of the fact, that some persons, however, have rejected that to the Hebrews, affirming that it is excepted against by the Church of the Romans as not being St. Paul's.

It ought to be added, that Eusebius elsewhere inclines to the opinion that the substance of the Epistle was St. Paul's, but the diction from another hand. See E. H. iii. 38.

<sup>7</sup> In his Procem. to his Exposition of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

<sup>8</sup> It is quoted as St. Paul's by Eusebius in extant works; e.g. de Mart. Palæst. c. 11. Demonst. Evang. v. 3, in Ps. ii. Cp. Dr. Davidson's Introduction, iii. p. 192.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Euseb. iii. 4. S. Jerome, Cat. Eccl. Scr. 7. Sce above, Introduction to St. Luke's Gospel.

The testimony of the Church of Antioch, the capital of Gentile Christianity, and the centre of St. Paul's missionary labours', has been already referred to. It ascribed the Epistle to St. Paul 2.

Testimonies to the same effect may be adduced from competent witnesses of the Churches of Asia and Greece.

The Council of Nicæa received it as a genuine work of St. Paul 3. Gregory Thaumaturgus 4, Gregory of Nazianzum, Basil the Great, Gregory of Nyssa, Theodore of Mopsuestia in Cilicia, St. Paul's own country, Chrysostom at Antioch and Constantinople, Epiphanius of Salamis in Cyprus, Theodoret of Cyrus, the Synod of Bishops assembled at Laodicca (A.D. 363), all agreed in assigning it to St. Paul 5.

In a word, to cite the expression of S. Jerome, "All the Greek writers received it as his "."

The witness of the Church of Alexandria is entitled to special attention.

That Church was of primitive origin; it was founded by St. Mark, who was with St. Paul in his first imprisonment at Rome 7, and perhaps also at his martyrdom 8. Its tradition was probably derived from that Evangelist.

The ancient Alexandrine Church was also distinguished by an uninterrupted succession of writers eminent for ability, for learning, and enterprising research, who were reared in, or presided over, the Catechetical School of that city, even from the days of St. Mark 9. One of the Principals of that School, in the second century, was Pantænus 10, the master of the learned 11 Clement of Alexandria, another Teacher in that Institution.

Pantænus (as is commonly believed) ascribed the Epistle to St. Paul, and endeavoured to explain the reason of the absence of the Apostle's name from the commencement of the Epistle 12.

The Epistle was also assigned to St. Paul by the successor of Pantænus, S. Clement 13.

The Testimony of Origen, the scholar and successor of S. Clement, is substantially the same as that of his predecessors.

He says in one place that he has arguments to prove that it is a genuine work of St. Paul 14; and in another he declares, "whatever Church 15 receives it as St. Paul's, let it be commended for doing so; for (he adds) it is not without reason that the primitive writers 16 have delivered it to us as Paul's 17."

It is true, that Origen in one place adverting, as S. Clement of Alexandria had done, to the difference of style between this Epistle and the acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul, offers another solution in explanation of that phenomenon; and expresses an opinion, "that the thoughts of the Epistle are from the Apostle, and the composition and phraseology in which they are clothed, are from some other person, who recorded the apostolic materials, and committed to paper what was dictated by his master . . . . but, who it was that reduced the Epistle to writing, God knows; however, the story which has reached us, from some persons, is, that Clement, Bishop of Rome, committed the Epistle to writing, and from others, that it was St. Luke 18."

On these testimonies two observations may be made;

First, it hence appears, that there was an uniform and consistent tradition at Alexandria in the second and third centuries, that the substance of the Epistle was from St. Paul.

And, secondly, it is hence also clear, that there was a discrepancy of opinion concerning the person who put the materials of the Apostle into writing. In the earliest account, that of Pantænus, there is no hint that the diction of the Epistle was not from St. Paul, as well as the matter;

See above on Gal. ii. 11.
 See also the testimony of Ephrem, the Syrian, in the fourth century; and of Severian, Bp. of Gabala in Syria, in Lardner, ii.

- 33. Harduin, Concil. i. p. 402.
  4 Cardinal Mai, Script. Vat. Nova. Coll. vii. p. 176.
  5 See the evidence to this effect given by Lardner, iii. 329, Guerike, Einleitung, pp. 432, 433.

Jerome, Epist. ad Evagrium, 125.
Col. iv. 10. Philem. 24.

8 2 Tim. iv. 11.

9 "In Alexandriâ, ubi à Marco Evangelistâ semper ecclesiastici fuere doctores," says S. Jerome, Cat. Eccl. Scr. c. 37.

10 See the authorities in Routh, R. S. i. 338, 339.

- 11 Euseb. vi. 13.
- 12 See the testimony of Clement in Euseb. vi. 14, where the "blessed Presbyter" is generally supposed to be Pantænus. If it is not Pantænus, yet the witness of a man to whom so learned a person as Clement refers with so much veneration as his senior,

- will still command great respect. And the opinion of Pantænus, his master, may be inferred from Clement's own testimony as to the authorship of the Epistle.
- <sup>13</sup> See Euseb. vi. 14. Clement conjectured that it was written originally in Hebrew by St. Paul, and translated into Greek by St. Luke, and he constantly quotes it as St. Paul's; e.g. Stromat.

- ii. p. 420; vi. p. 645.

  14 Origen, Ep. ad African. vol. i. p. 19.

  15 εγ τις ἐκκλησία. This is the meaning of the phrase (see note above on Phil. iv. 8), and not 'if any Church,' as it is some-
- 16 of ἀρχαίοι ἄνδρες, ' the primitive men,'—not (as it has been sometimes translated) 'ancient men;' the expression is much stronger than that.
- ofer, p. 244, that Origen quotes the Epistle to the Hebrews about 200 times, and often cites it expressly as St. Paul's; and never attributes the substance of it to any other writer.

  18 Origen, ap. Euseb. vi. 35.

although his attention was evidently called to the question; inasmuch as he suggests a reason for the absence of St. Paul's name from this Epistle 1.

S. Clement puts forth a private opinion, that the Epistle is a translation from a Hebrew original written by St. Paul 2.

Origen propounds a different hypothesis,—that the materials of St. Paul were arranged by another writer who was unknown; but some mentioned S. Clement, and others St. Luke, as the person who gave it its present dress.

The inconsistency of these various suppositions concerning the language of the Epistle imparts greater force to the consistency of the tradition concerning its substance. They show, that the question concerning its authorship had even then been discussed and examined. And this uniformity of independent witnesses, who differ from each other as to the minor matter of its phraseology, and whose testimony reaches back to primitive times, and comes from the most learned School of ancient Christendom, will not easily be shaken by any conjectural theories of later Criticism.

It may also be here remarked, that the variety of ancient Alexandrine speculations concerning the person, to whom the language, apart from the substance, is due, affords a presumption that the substance and language are not from different hands, but from one and the same. This conclusion is confirmed by the succeeding testimony of the Alexandrine Church.

For, the tradition concerning the authorship of the subject-matter of the Epistle continued to maintain its consistency. And the various floating speculations concerning the author of the diction, as distinct from the substance, gradually vanished away. The author of the matter and the language was thenceforth generally regarded as one and the same person—St. Paul.

This appears from the testimony of the celebrated Dionysius, a scholar of Origen, and Bishop of Alexandria (A.D. 247), who ascribes the Epistle to St. Paul; and of Peter, the celebrated Bishop of that city (A.D. 3003), and of his successor Alexander (in 3134), and, finally, of the two great Bishops of that see, namely, S. Athanasius and S. Cyril's. All these ascribed the Epistle-both in substance and form—to St. Paul.

Before we pass from the testimony of the East to that of the Western Church, we may observe that the most ancient Greek Manuscripts, now extant, of St. Paul's Epistles, place the Epistle to the Hebrews among those Epistles. They do not place it after the Pastoral Epistles (as is done in the Vulgate and in our own Authorized Version), but before them.

In the Alexandrine Manuscript, the Sinaitic Manuscript, the Vatican Manuscript, the Codex Ephrem, and in the Codex Coislinianus, and also in some Cursive Manuscripts 6, the Epistle to the Hebrews follows immediately after the Epistles to the Thessalonians 7.

It is also deserving of remark, that in still more ancient Greek Manuscripts than any which we now possess, the Epistle to the Hebrews was placed immediately after that to the Galatians, and before that to the Ephesians *.

From this testimony of ancient Manuscripts it is evident, that at the time when those Manuscripts were written, the Epistle to the Hebrews was reckoned among those of St. Paul.

2 Let us now turn to the testimony of the West.

S. Clement, Bishop of Rome,—whom St. Paul himself mentions with affection as one of his own fellow-labourers whose names are in the book of life,—quotes the Epistle, as has been already observed, but he does not say that it was written by St. Paul.

On the other hand, he does not ascribe it to any one else. He does not specify the name of the

This mode of dealing with the Epistle on the part of S. Clement, who doubtless knew the author, does not indicate an opinion on his part, as some seem to think, that St. Paul was not the

The Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, whoever he was, had written anonymously; and

- 1 Euseb. vi. 14.
- <sup>2</sup> In Euseb. vi. 14.
- 3 In his 9th Canon. See Routh, R. S. iii. 333.
- 4 See Lardner, ii. p. 302.
- <sup>5</sup> Ibid. ii. pp. 400, 401; iii. p. 9.

In the very valuable Ancient Catena lately published for the first time by Dr. Cramer (Oxon, 1844) from Cod. 238 of the Imperial Library at Paris, are numerous Scholia of S. Cyril, S. Athanasius, and others, recognizing the Epistle as St. Paul's.

- 6 Codd. 17. 23. 47. 57. 71. 73, and others. See Tischendorf, N. T. ed. 1858, p. 555.

  7 And it is so placed in Lachmann's edition, p. 537.

8 As appears from the marginal numerals of the sections as they still stand in the Vatican Manuscript. See Cardinal Mai's they still stall in the value of the stall in the most ancient MSS. of the Sahidic Version. See Zoega, in Catal. Codd. Copt. MSS. p. 186. Tischendorf, N. T. p. 555 ed. 1858.

9 See Phil. iv. 3.

doubtless he had good reasons for doing so. If the writer was St. Paul, then S. Clement, who was an intimate friend of the Apostle, and wrote soon after his decease, would know and respect those reasons, and would be guided by them. As a fellow-labourer and follower of the inspired Apostle, he might well be inclined to quote the Epistle, in order to show his reverence for it as a part of Canonical Scripture, and to commend it as such to the reverent use of the faithful; and the more so, because the Epistle was anonymous, and could not commend itself, as the other Epistles of St. Paul do, by his Apostolic name prefixed to them. But, in his love for the Author, he would not do what the Author himself had not done; he would not betray the secret, and publish his name to the world at large, at that early date, when the reasons for not divulging it were still in force. He would quote the Epistle to the Hebrews as divinely-inspired Scripture, and would leave it to Time to make known the Author's name.

· This is precisely what is done by S. Clement.

The testimony of Tertullian, ascribing it to Barnabas, has been already considered.

It must, however, be noticed again, because it seems to afford some explanation of the manner in which the Epistle was regarded by some in the Roman Church in the age of Tertullian, that is, the second and third centuries.

Tertullian, we have seen, refers to the earlier portion of the Sixth Chapter of the Epistle. It is observable, that he does this in one of his Montanistic treatises, in which he is denouncing, in no measured terms, what he regarded as the lax and dissolute discipline of a branch of the Western Church, most probably the Roman.

In this treatise Tertullian ascribes the Epistle to Barnabas.

The Western Church, at that time, possessed no writers that could be compared with Tertullian in learning. Indeed, with the single exception of Minutius Felix, no Latin Christian writer of any note belongs to that period.

Besides, the Latin Church was then harassed by the Montanists from the East, and afterwards by the Novatians from Africa.

Both of these sects found, as they imagined, a strong testimony in behalf of their rigorous penitential discipline in that portion of the Sixth Chapter of the Epistle which had been cited by Tertullian in his Montanistic Treatise, "de Pudicitiâ."

The Roman Church, in the stress of controversy for which she was then little qualified, and in the lack of time for research, and of critical aid and resources, may probably have been so much influenced by Tertullian's bold and peremptory assertion, ascribing the Epistle to Barnabas, together with her own desire to get rid of the inconvenient argument which he and her Montanistic adversaries invoked against her from that Epistle, that she may have not been very reluctant to allow the authorship of the Epistle itself to be regarded as doubtful; and some of her controversialists may have thus been led even to accept Tertullian's assertion, and to affirm that it was written by some other Author than St. Paul <sup>2</sup>.

Accordingly we find that one of her champions is signalized as having omitted the Epistle to the Hebrews from the catalogue of St. Paul's Epistles.

This was Caius. It is observable that he was celebrated for his strenuous efforts against Montanism, and it is expressly recorded, that "he mentions only thirteen Epistles of St. Paul, not enumerating the Epistle to the Hebrews with the other Epistles," and that he does this in a treatise against Montanism<sup>3</sup>.

It does not follow from this statement, that Caius and his friends actually denied that the Epistle was St. Paul's. He may have thought only that it was doubtful, whether it was St. Paul's or no, and therefore in enumerating his Epistles, he did not set it down in the list. But it must be carefully borne in mind, in arguments concerning the authorship of books of Scripture, that there is a wide difference between doubts and denials.

The same remark may be made on the ancient Latin Canon of Scripture, first published by Muratori, and dating from the second half of the second century *.

&lt;sup>1</sup> De Pudicitiâ, c. l. Audio edictum esse propositum et quidem peremptorium, Pontifex scilicet Maximus Episcopus Episcoporum dicit, "Ego et mechiæ et fornicationis delicta pænitentià functis dimitto." Cp. Bp. Kaye on Tertullian, p. 239.

p. 239.

It does not indeed appear, that Novatian himself laid much stress on that passage of the Epistle to the Hebrews. The Novatians certainly did so; and this circumstance led to its disparagement by some Western writers. See the express testimony of Philastrius (Bp. of Brescia A.D. 380), who says (de Hæresibus, lxxxix.) that "there are some persons who do not regard the Epistle to the Hebrews as St. Paul's, and that it is not publicly read by them .... on account of the Novatians." He then proceeds to vindicate the sixth chapter (v. 4—6) from the Novatian misconstruction.

Euseb. vi. 20.
 See Routh, R. S. iv. p. 26. Westcott on the Canon of N. T., pp. 236. 557.

The Epistle to the Hebrews is not mentioned in this Canon; and it says that St. Paul wrote only to Seven Churches 1.

But this document is in a fragmentary condition. It does not mention some Epistles which were generally received as canonical, namely, the first Epistle of St. Peter and St. John. And the canonicity of the Epistle to the Hebrews cannot be doubted, whatever may be said of the

Therefore the authority of this document is not of much weight in the present inquiry.

Thus then, though doubts existed in the Western Church concerning the Pauline origin of the Epistle to the Hebrews, yet we have little evidence of any distinct assertions that it was not written by the Apostle.

There are two eminent Greek writers who lived in the second and third centuries, and who were connected by many associations with the Latin Church, whose testimony deserves attention—S. Irenœus, Bishop of Lyons, and his disciple, S. Hippolytus, Bishop of Portus, near Rome.

It is said by some ', that Irenœus and Hippolytus asserted that the Epistle to the Hebrews was not by St. Paul.

As to Irenœus, he knew the Epistle, and quoted it 3; and if the fragments discovered by Pfaffius are genuine, he ascribed it to St. Paul'.

With regard to S. Hippolytus, there is no positive testimony on either side in his extant writings; and it is certainly worthy of remark that he does not quote the Epistle.

Nor does S. Cyprian quote it in any of his surviving works 5.

Perhaps both of these writers, especially the latter, were deterred from doing so by the confident assertion of Tertullian, that it was a work of Barnabas, while others ascribed it to St. Paul; and they may have thought it wiser to suspend their own judgment, and may therefore have abstained from appealing to it, as being, in their opinion, of doubtful origin.

But this abstinence, with regard to this Epistle, seems rather to show that the writers who abstain from quoting it, were not qualified to give evidence concerning it.

For, whatever may be thought of its Authorship, no one can doubt of its Inspiration. And, as an inspired writing, it was entitled to be quoted, whoever might be its author; and it was as much entitled to be quoted, as any book whose author was known.

Let it also be supposed, for argument's sake, that Cyprian and others in the west, not only entertained doubts concerning its authorship, but even denied that it was written by St. Paul.

Then we may add, that the judgment of the Western Church after their times, more strongly confirms the Pauline origin of the Epistle;

Their doubts-for they did doubt, -and their denials-if they did deny-must certainly have led to a careful examination of its authorship.

Its claims to be a work of the Apostle St. Paul must have been minutely scrutinized and severely tested.

What, then, was the result?

Did the doubts or denials of the Western Church overrule the affirmatory tradition and judgment of the Eastern Churches?

Or, did the assertions of the East prevail over the hesitations and negations of the West?

The answer to these questions is easy;

The doubts of the West were dispersed in the fourth century, and did not appear again till they were revived by one or two persons in the sixteenth.

The Epistle to the Hebrews was received as a genuine work of St. Paul by S. Hilary, Bishop of Poietiers (A.D. 368°), by S. Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, by S. Jerome, and by S. Augustine (not, however, without some hesitation), by Innocent, Bishop of Rome 7, by Primasius, Isidore, Haymo, Alcuin, and Aquinas, and by the general consentient voice of the Western Church; and it was accordingly inserted as a genuine Epistle of St. Paul in the Canon of the Councils of Hippo, Ε'ρηναίος την πρός 'Εβραίους 'Επιστολήν Παύλου οὐκ ἐκείνου εlval φασιν.

<sup>3</sup> Euseb. H. E. v. 26. See also Iren. contra Hæreses, ii. 30. 8, 'verbo virtutis sua,' which appears to be from Heb. i. 3; and the

1 This assertion, however, on which much stress has been laid argument and language in Iren. iii. 6. 5, seems to be from Heb.

by some, does not exclude the Epistle to the Hebrews; for the Hebrews could hardly be said to be a Church in the sense that the Romans, Corinthians, and others residing in specific cities, and addressed as such by St. Paul, are Churches.

2 By Slephen Gobar, in Phot. Bibl. Cod. 232: Ίππόλυτος καl

<sup>Ed. Lug. Bat. 1743, p. 26, where he quotes Heb. xiii. 15, as written by St. Paul. See ibid. p. 119.
Cp. Guerike, Einleitung, p. 435.
Do Trin. iv. 11.</sup>

&lt;sup>7</sup> See the authorities in Lardner, iii. 330, 331; and in Credner, pp. 501-509; and Guerike, p. 436; and Davidson, 179-

<sup>8</sup> See Credner, pp. 510, 511.

Carthage, and, lastly, of the Council of Trent 1; and was received by the Church of England as such in her Authorized Version of Holy Scripture 2.

All the Churches of Western Christendom agreed with all the Churches of the East in receiving the Epistle to the Hebrews as the work of St. Paul.

This result is the more convincing and satisfactory, even on account of the obstacles and difficulties of doubts and denials, which the Church had to traverse, and through which she pursued her course, till she arrived at her conclusion.

The doubts and denials of former ages prove that the question was diligently sifted at a time when ample evidence was at hand for settling the question. Doubts existed; therefore the question was examined, and decided; and the doubts disappeared. And so those doubts themselves have been of great service. They are like the doubts of St. Thomas concerning Christ's Resurrection 3. He doubted, and was convinced; and we are convinced by means of his doubts. The result of such doubts is, that we need not doubt.

3. As to the internal evidence afforded by the Epistle itself, it is true that the absence of St. Paul's name from its commencement seems to present a presumption in the first instance against its ascription to him.

But on examination, this circumstance may appear rather to be in favour of its Pauline origin. The Epistle was written by some inspired person in the Apostolic age. Whoever its author may be, the Epistle itself is a part of Canonical Scripture.

The author, whoever he is, in writing anonymously, deviates not only from the usage of St. Paul, but from that of the other writers of Epistles in the New Testament '.

The questions therefore arise-

What divinely-inspired person would be most likely to write, and to write anonymously, to the Hebrews? Would St. Paul, or would any one else?

The Epistle was designed primarily for the Jewish Christians of Palestine 5, who were tempted to relapse into Judaism, and for other Jewish Christians, and also for the benefit of Jewish readers throughout the world, and lastly for universal use.

It was designed for enemies as well as for friends, for Judaizing Christians, and for unchristianized Jews.

Of all the Apostles or Apostolic men of the primitive age, no person would be better qualified, and no one would be more desirous, to write such an Epistle to such parties as these, than St. Paul. He was a Hebrew of the Hebrews 6, an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham 7; he had been brought up at the feet of Gamaliel; he was a Pharisec, the son of Pharisees 8; he had been made an instrument in the hands of the Jewish Sanhedrim for persecuting the Church. Therefore he owed to them and to the Church a debt of Christian reparation. He was consumed by a fire of zeal and love for the souls of his brethren, his kinsmen according to the flesh; so that, if it were possible, he could wish himself to be anothema for their sakes. He had made collections in Asia and Greece for the temporal needs of his poor brethren at Jerusalem 10; and his last visit to that city had been paid for the purpose of bringing alms to his nation 11. How much more desire would he feel to provide spiritual food, such food as is provided in the Epistle to the Hebrews, for their immortal souls!

But if he had prefixed his name to the Epistle, he would have run the risk of marring his own labour of love.

The name of Paul was obnoxious to Judaizing Christians on account of his uncompromising conduct at Antioch 12, and for his bold assertion of the doctrine of Universal Redemption by Christ. And he had been constrained to use stern language, and to utter solemn warnings against those of the concision in the last Epistle which he wrote in his first imprisonment at Rome, the Epistle to the Philippians 13. His name was still more offensive to the Jews; he was abhorred by them as a

<sup>1</sup> Session iv. A.D. 1546. Labbé, Concilia, xiv. p. 746: "Pauli Apostoli ad Hebræos.

<sup>2</sup> Also in her Book of Common Prayer, in the Office for the Visitation of the Sick, she thus speaks: "St. Paul saith in the twelfth chapter to the Hebrews;" and in her Form for the Solemnization of Matrimony she says, "Marriage is commended of St. Paul to be honourable among all men," i. e. in Heb. xiii. 4.

John xx. 24-29.

VOL. II .- PART III.

6 Phil. iii. 5. 7 2 Cor. xi. 22.

<sup>4</sup> The Epistles of St. John form no exception. The first words of them sufficiently bespeak the Author, though he does not name <sup>5</sup> As was the opinion of Chrysostom, Theodorei, Jerome, and the Alexandrine Fathers (see Credner, p. 562), and has been satisfactorily proved by Stuart, in his Introduction, §§ 4. 10.

<sup>8</sup> Acts xxii. 3; xxiii. 6; xxvi. 5.
9 Rom. ix. 2, 3; x. 1.

<sup>10</sup> Rom. xv. 25. 11 Acts xxiv. 17

<sup>12</sup> Gal. ii. 11-13.

<sup>13</sup> Phil. iii. 2.

renegade and an apostate. The last time that he had been at Jerusalem, when he declared to them that he had been sent to preach to the Gentiles, they cried out, "Away with him, it is not fit that he should live '." And more than forty of them banded themselves under an oath, that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul 2.

In a word, though as a Hebrew, a Pharisee, and a former persecutor of the Church, and as a divinely-inspired Apostle, St. Paul was specially competent to write such an Epistle, yet as he was the Apostle of the Gentiles, and the author of such Epistles as those to the Galatians and the Romans, the name of Paul could not be acceptable to many of those for whom the Epistle to the Hebrews was designed.

Suppose that in writing an Epistle to the Hebrews St. Paul had followed his usual practice, and had prefixed his name to it. What bitter feelings of rancour would the sight of that name have excited in the minds of many whom he desired to win to Christ! They would have recoiled from it with disdain and execration. The very first word of the Epistle would have deterred many of them from reading it; it would have almost frustrated the purpose for which the Epistle was written, and would have stirred in their hearts those angry passions, which he, who had taught others to put no stumbling-blocks in another's way, and to give no offence to Jews or Greeks, would have been the last to awaken 3.

The Apostle St. Paul, acting in conformity with the precepts of love, which he himself had delivered, would not expose any to such temptations as these; he would not provoke the jealousy and malignity of any, and so cause them to sin; he would not gratuitously excite the least prejudice against himself, and still less against the Gospel of Christ; he shrank from no necessary avowal of the Truth; he had suffered the loss of all things for the Gospel; and finally he shed his blood in its cause. But in a spirit of holy wisdom and divine charity, which he had learnt from his Master, Christ', he did all in his power to make that Truth lovely and attractive, even to its worst foes.

He would not, indeed, withhold his name where it was needed; but he would not obtrude it where it would provoke hatred, and repel any from that Gospel which he was sent to preach.

III. On the whole, then, as to the present point, we may thus conclude:—

The Epistle to the Hebrews was written by some person in the Apostolic age. It is anonymous. It is a part of Canonical Scripture. The divinely-inspired Author, whoever he was, whose consummate wisdom is apparent from the Epistle itself, was guided by God's Spirit, not only in writing the Epistle, but in not prefixing his name to it. And if St. Paul had written such an Epistle as this, we recognize strong and sufficient reasons why he should have been restrained from following his usual practice, and that of other writers of Epistles, and from inserting his own name at its

But we do not see similar reasons of equal force for the suppression of the name of Apollos, or Barnabas, or Clement, or of any other person, to whom the Epistle has been ascribed.

Therefore the non-appearance of the Author's name in the Epistle to the Hebrews does not diminish, but rather increases, the probability that its Author was St. Paul<sup>5</sup>.

But are we, therefore, to imagine that the Epistle was not known to be his by his friends, to whom it was sent? No; doubtless the bearer of the Epistle communicated to them the quarter from which it came. And the Epistle itself, as has been already observed 6, bears evidence that the Author was known to them. He desires their prayers, and promises to visit them 7. The mention also of the name of our brother Timothy, who had been St. Paul's associate from his youth, for many years, and is called "his brother" in several of his Epistles', would suggest to his friends the name of St. Paul.

Let it also be remembered that there was a special token by which his Epistles were to be discerned by his friends.

Each of the Thirteen Epistles, to which St. Paul's name is prefixed, contains near its close his

<sup>1</sup> Acts xxii. 22.

<sup>2</sup> Acts xxiii. 12.

<sup>3</sup> See 1 Cor. x. 32. Rom. xiv. 13.
4 See the precept of Christ, Matt. x. 23, and His example in declining the malice of His enemies, Matt. ii. 13; xii. 16. Luke iv. 29, 30. John viii. 59, and St. Paul's own practice, Acts ix. 25;

xiv. 6; xvii. 14.

5 The above reasons were well urged in early times by Augustine, Exposit. Epist. ad Rom. sect. 11; and more at length by another African Bishop, Primasius, in the sixth century, in his Preface to this Epistle.

<sup>See above, p. 364.
Heb. xiii. 18, 19, 23.
Thess. iii. 2. 2 Cor. i. 1. Col. i. 1. Philem. 1. Cp. Bp. Pearson, Opera Postuma, p. 359, where he adverts to this cir</sup>cumstance, and thus expresses his opinion as to the authorship of the Epistle: "Eam Epistolam esse Pauli non video quomodo quisquam negare possit, nisi putet de ea re semper dubitandum esse, de qua quisquam aliquando dubitaverit."

Apostolic Benediction, "Grace be with you." And, in one of the first Epistles which he had written, he had announced that this would be the token in every Epistle, and that so he would write 1. And no other writer of Scripture uses this token during St. Paul's lifetime 2. It was reserved to him as his special badge and cognizance.

And this Apostolic Benediction, found at the close of each of the acknowledged Thirteen Epistles of St. Paul, is found also at the close of the Epistle to the Hebrews 3.

IV. We may now advert to some objections that have been made to this conclusion.

1. On the ground of discrepancy of style between this and St. Paul's received Epistles.

In his acknowledged Epistles, the Apostle speaks with authority, and rebukes with sternness. But the language of the Epistle to the Hebrews is, for the most part, mild, gentle, and subdued.

The style of his undisputed Epistles is vehement and abrupt, and, as he himself says, he does not use excellency of speech, or enticing words of man's wisdom, but is rude in speech *.

But, as Origen 5 and others have observed, the Epistle to the Hebrews has more of a Grecian air in its composition than those other Epistles; its periods flow in smoother and more harmonious cadences, its arguments are arranged with systematic exactness, and the Epistle resembles the work of a practised orator.

But these phenomena are not inconsistent with the conclusion already stated.

In the first place, the Epistle to the Hebrews hardly admits of being compared with the received Epistles of St. Paul. It partakes rather of the character of an address spoken than written; it is rather an oration than an Epistle. It is like a voice of warning and exhortation uttered by one of God's Ancient Prophets to His Own People. It is the utterance of a Christian Isaiah. Being formed, as it seems, on such a prophetical model, it naturally assumed a different tone and character from an Epistle, and can scarcely be compared with such a composition.

Next, it can scarcely be supposed, that the divinely-inspired Apostle St. Paul could not write in different styles on different occasions, and to different persons. Even uninspired men can do this. Great Masters can paint in different manners; and great Authors can write in different styles.

What more different, than S. Cyprian's Epistle to Donatus 6, and the rest of his works? more different, than the beautiful lyrical effusions of Aristophanes 7, and his comic raillery? What more different, than the exuberant luxuriance of Lycidas and Comus, and the sober severity of Samson Agonistes and Paradise Regained?

An eminent ancient critic, Longinus 8, speaking of the different styles of the Iliad and the Odyssey, has some remarks which are relevant to this question. He compares the genius of Homer, as displayed in the Iliad, to the sea in its full strength; and in the Odyssev, to the same sea gently subsiding in a quiet calm. It is the same Sea in both, but in different states. There are, says he, signs of old age in the Odyssey, but it is the old age of Homer.

The mind of the great Apostle must have been in a very different condition when writing the Epistle to the Hebrews (supposing him to have been the Author) from what it was in when he wrote his earlier Epistles. He was now "Paul the aged "." This Epistle was the last great effort of his mind. Even, therefore, on the ground of a change of physical temperament, we might expect some change of style.

But, waiving such considerations as these, as being perhaps less applicable to inspired writers, we may reflect, whether there were not some special circumstances in the condition of the writer (supposing him to be St. Paul), and of those persons whom he addressed in the Epistle to the Hebrews, which would necessitate such a modification of style, as has been described.

The Author has purposely concealed his name, and for the same reasons he might be unwilling to discover himself to all by his style.

He does not speak in the same authoritative tone as in his other Epistles. No; for he was speaking to a very different class of persons.

St. Paul might well speak with authority to the Thessalonians, Galatians, and Corinthians, for they were his spiritual children; and even to the Romans, for he was the Apostle of the Gentiles.

&lt;sup>1</sup> See note above, 1 Thess. v. 28.

<sup>2</sup> It is found only in the Apocalypse, written after St. Paul's

<sup>3</sup> See also another consideration deducible from this fact, at the close of this Introduction. 4 1 Cor. ii. 1. 4. 13. 2 Cor. xi. 6.

Ap. Euseb. vi. 25.
 As Augustine has observed, De Doct. Christ. iv. 31.

Such as Nubes, 300-312. <sup>8</sup> De Sublimitate, sect. ix. 9 Philem. 9.

But in writing to the Hebrews, especially the Hebrews of Jerusalem, he could not forget what he himself was, and what they were.

At Jerusalem he had shed the blood of St. Stephen. He had been a blasphemer and a persecutor, and injurious 1. He could not write to the Hebrews without feelings of penitential selfhumiliation, and compassionate forbearance, which must subdue his spirit, and chasten his style. He would write to them as one who would "deal gently with the ignorant, and with them that were out of the way "."

Besides, among the Hebrews were some, who were to be regarded by him with dutiful venetation, as the fathers of the Ancient Church of God, the descendants of Abraham, the representatives of Moses and Aaron, and of the august line of Priests and Prophets of the old Dispensation. How could be address such personages as these, except in a reverential tone of quiet reserve, and measured self-control?

Again; he had deliberately and purposely adopted an energetic and vigorous, a plain and unadorned style, in writing to the other Churches, lest any one should allege that he had fascinated them with bewitching words of man's wisdom, and had converted them to Christianity by the allurements of an artificial Rhetoric 3. He had studiously done this, in order that their faith might not "stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

But the Hebrews were a different class. They could not be spoilt by the graces of polished language. There was no danger that it should be said, that he had enchanted them by harmonious diction, and charmed them into belief by Grecian eloquence.

And when the Epistle to the Hebreus came to be disseminated, as it would be, and as it was, among the Greeks, and Romans, and Asiatics, they would derive great pleasure and profit from the proof which it brought with it, that St. Paul had been able, if he had been willing, to write with equal beauty and harmony of diction to them; and that he had abstained from doing so, because he preferred God's glory, and their salvation, to any applause that could accrue to himself, from the splendour of human Eloquence.

It is true, that the Epistle to the Hebrews differs in style from the undisputed Epistles of St. Paul to other Churches. But it is also true, that the Hebrews differed much from them, and that St. Paul's condition in addressing the Hebrews was very different from his position in writing to others. These differences in the condition of the writer and of the parties to whom he writes, seem amply sufficient to account for the difference of style '.

Further, as has been shown by others, together with this circumstantial difference of form and expression, there is a substantial similarity of thought and matter 5, and frequently even of words 6, between the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul.

- <sup>1</sup> 1 Tim. i. 13.
- <sup>2</sup> Heb. v. 2. 3 1 Cor. ii. 1-6.
- 4 Compare note below on iv. 4.
- 5 The allegations as to discrepancies and divergences of teaching, in this Epistle and the received Epistles of St. Paul, have been so well disposed of by Stuart, Introduction, § 27; and by Davidson, Introduction, iii. 215-225, that it seems superfluous to repeat them.

As to the objections raised from Heb. ii. 3, "confirmed to us by those who heard him;" and on ix. 4, as to the θυμιατήριου, see notes there.

The objections raised by some upon supposed inaccuracies as to the Temple-worship, proceed from inadvertence to the fact that the writer is speaking of the Levitical Tabernacle; and they who urge such objections are impugning not only the Pauline origin, but the Canonicity of the Epistle, which was universally acknowledged, and is firmly established.

6 See the work of the Rev. C. Forster, B.D., On the Apostolical Authority of the Epistle to the Hebrews, London, 1838, sectt. i.—iv. See also Stuart, Introduction, sect. 23. Cp. note below, on Heb. xiii. 5. Some of these verbal resemblances may be noted here.

- HEBREWS i. 2. δι' οῦ ['Ιησοῦ Χριστοῦ] καὶ τοὺς αἰῶνας [δ Θεός] ἐποίησε.
- καλ χαρακτήρ της ύποστάσεως αύτοῦ.
- Cot. i. 16. τὰ πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ ['Ι. Χ.] ἔκτισται.
- i. 3. δε ων απαύγασμα της δόξης i. 15. δε έστιν είκων του Θεού τοῦ ἀοράτου.
  - Phil. ii. 6. δε έν μορφη Θεοῦ ύπαρχων.
  - 2 Cor. iv. 4. δς έστιν είκων τοῦ Θεοῦ.

- HEBREWS i. 3. φέρων τε τὰ Col. i. 17. τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ πάντα τῷ δήματι τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ.
- i. 4. τοσούτφ κρείττων γενόμενος των άγγελων, δσω διαφερώτερον παρ' αὐτοὺς κεκληρονόμηκεν δνομα.
- i. 5. υίδς μου εί σὺ, ἐγὰ σήμερον γεγέννηκά σε.
- i. G. τον πρωτότοκον....
- ii. 2. δ δι' ἀγγέλων λαληθεὶς Gal. iii. 19. δ νόμος . . . διαλόγος. ταγεὶς δι' ἀγγέλων. See Acts
- ii. 4. σημείοις τε καὶ τέρασι καὶ ποικίλαις δυνάμεσι και Πνεύματος άγίου μερισμοίς.

- συνέστηκε.
- Eph. i. 21. ὑπεράνω . . . παντδς ονόματος ονομαζομένου ου μόνον έν τῷ αἰῶνι τούτῳ, ἀλλὰ
- καὶ ἐν τῷ μέλλοντι.
  Phil. ii. 9. ὁ Θεὸς . . . ἐχαρίσατο αὐτῷ τὸ ὄνομα τὸ ὑπὲρ πᾶν ὔνομα• Ίνα ἐν τῷ ὀνόματι Ἰησοῦ παν γόνυ κάμψη ἐπουρανίων, к.т.λ.
- Acts xiii. 33. viós μου εί σὺ, έγω σήμερον γεγέννηκά σε.
- Rom. viii. 29. els tò elvat autòv πρωτότοκον.
- Col. i. 15. πρωτότοκος πάσης κτίσεως. 18. πρωτότοκος.
- vii. 53.
- 1 Cor. xii. 4. διαιρέσεις δε χαρισμάτων είσι, τὸ δὲ αὐτὸ πνεῦ-
- χίι. 11. πάντα δὲ ταῦτα ἐνεργεῖ τὸ ἐν καὶ τὸ αὐτὸ πνεῦμα, διαιρούν ίδία έκάστφ καθώς Βούλεται.
- Rom. xii. 6. Exortes de xaploματα κατὰ τὴν χάριν τὴν δοθεῖσαν ὑμῖν διάφορα.

2. The use of the Septuagint Version in quotations from the Old Testament, has also been adduced as an objection to the Pauline origin of the Epistle.

This objection seems to be grounded on a misapprehension of the name Hebrews prefixed as a title to the Epistle.

The word Hebrew is not there used, as sometimes it is', in opposition to Hellenist; but it is designed to comprise all, of whatever class, who had passed from the Synagogue to the Church, or who still adhered to the religion of the Temple. The word Jew had now become offensive, as being opposed to Christian 2.

By what name could they who are here addressed be designated? There was no other so appropriate and attractive as Hebrew 3.

Doubtless, many of those whom the writer addressed understood Hebrew, and could read the Old Testament in the original tongue. But the great majority could not, but used the Septuagint Version; and the Epistle was designed eventually for the common use of all Christendom.

Even in St. Stephen's speech, spoken at Jerusalem before the Sanhedrim, the quotations from ύποκάτω τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ.

ii. 10. δι' δν τὰ πάντα, καὶ δι' οῦ Rom. xi. 36. ἐξ αὐτοῦ καὶ δι' τὰ πάντα.

ñ. 14. Ινα . . . καταργήση του το κράτος έχοντα τοῦ θανά-του, τοῦτ ἔστι, τον διά-

ii. 16. σπέρματος 'Αβραάμ, that is, Christians.

iii. 1. κλήσεως ἐπουρανίου.

iv. 12. ζων γὰρ ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ . . . καὶ τομώτερος ὑπὲρ πασαν μάχαιραν δίστομον. v. 8. καίπερ ών υίδς, έμαθεν άφ' ων έπαθε την ύπακοήν.

ν. 13. νήπιος γάρ ἐστι.

ν. 14. τελείων δέ έστιν ή στερεά τροφή.

νί. Ι. τελειότητα.

vi. 3. εάνπερ επιτρέπη δ Θεός.

vi. 10. της αγάπης ης ένεδείξασθε είς τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ, διακονήσαντες τοις άγίοις καλ  $\delta \iota \alpha \kappa o \nu o \hat{\upsilon} \nu \tau \epsilon s.$

viii. 5. οίτινες ύποδείγματι καὶ σκιά λατρεύουσι των έπουρα-

x. 1. σκιάν γάρ έχων δ νόμος τῶν μελλόντων.

viii. 6. κρείττονός έστι διαθήκης 1 Tim. ii. 5. είς μεσίτης . . . . μεσίτης.

viii. 10. καὶ ἐπὶ καρδίας αὐτῶν ἐπιγράψω αὐτούς.

ΗΕΒREWS ii. 8. πάντα ὑπέταξας 1 Cor. xv. 27. Πάντα γὰρ ὑπέταξεν ύπο τους πόδας αὐτοῦ. Eph. i. 22. και πάντα ὑπέταξεν ύπὸ τοὺς πόδας αὐτοῦ.

Phil. iii. 21. ὑποτάξαι ξαυτῷ τὰ πάντα.

αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτὸν τὰ πάντα. Col. i. 16. τὰ πάντα δι' αὐτοῦ καὶ εἰς αὐτόν.

1 Cor. viii. 6. εls Θεδs . . . . έξ οδ τὰ πάντα καὶ εἶs Κύριος . . . δι' οὖ τὰ πάντα.

1 Cor. xv. 26. έσχατος έχερδς καταργείται ὁ θάνατος. 2 Tim. i. 10. καταργήσαντος μέν τον θάνατον. Gal. iii. 29. εί δὲ δμεῖς Χοιστοῦ, άρα τοῦ ᾿Αβραὰμ σπέρμα ἐστέ.

iii. 7. οἱ ἐκ πίστεως, οὖτοί εἰσιν υἱοὶ ᾿Αβραάμ. Phil. iii. 14. της άνω κλήσεως τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Rom. xi. 29. ἡ κλησις τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Eph. vi. 17. την μάχαιραν τοῦ πνεύματος, δ ἐστι ῥῆμα Θεοῦ.

Phil. ii. 8. ἐταπείνωσεν ἐαυτὸν, γενόμενος ὑπήκοος, μέχρι θα-

1 Cor. iii. 1. ως νηπίοις ἐν

Χριστώ. Eph. iv. 14. Ίνα μηκέτι δμεν vhTIOL.

Rom. ii. 20. διδάσκαλον νηπίων.

Gal. iv. 3. δτε ημεν νήπιοι. 1 Cor. xiv. 20. ταις δε φρεσί τέλειοι γίνεσθε. Col. iii. 14. σύνδεσμος της τελειότητος. 1 Cor. xvi. 7. έαν δ Κύριος έπι-τρέπη. 2 Cor. viii. 24. την οὖν ἔν-δειξιν τῆς ἀγάπης ὑμῶν . . . εἰς αὐτοὺς ἐνδείξασθε.

Col. ii. 17. α έστι σκιά των μελλόντων . . .

Χριστός Ἰησοῦς.

Gal. iii. 19, 20. έν χειρί μεσίτου. δ δε μεσίτης ενδς οὐκ εστιν. Rom. ii. 15. τὸ ἔργον τοῦ νόμου γραπτον έν ταις καρδίαις αὐ-

2 Cor. iii. 3. ἐγγεγραμμένη . . . ἐν πλαξὶ καρδίας σαρκίναις. ix. 15. θανάτου γενομένου είς Rom. iii. 25. διὰ τῆς πίστεως ἀπολύτρωσιν τῶν ἐπὶ τῆ πρώτη διαθήκη παραβασέων.

HEBREWS X. 19. EXOVTES .... παρρησίαν είς την είσοδον τῶν άγίων ἐν τῷ αἴματι Ἰησοῦ.

χ. 28. ἐπὶ δυσίν ἡ τρισίν μάρτυσιν αποθνήσκει.

x. 30. έμοι ἐκδίκησις, ἐγὰ ἀνταποδώσω.

χ. 32. ἄθλησιν . . . . παθημά-

x. 33. δνειδισμοίς τε καὶ θλίψεσι θεατριζόμενοι.

x. 33. κοινωνοί τῶν οὕτως ἀναστρεφομένων γενηθέντες.

x. 38. δ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.

μενον ήμιν αγώνα.

xiii. 18. πεποίθαμεν γάρ δτι καλην συνείδησιν έχομεν.

xiii. 20. δ δε Θεδς της είρηνης.

xiii. 18. προσεύχεσθε περὶ ἡμῶν.

Heb. xiii. 25. The Pauline Benediction. See on 1 Thess.

v. 28.

e.g. in Acts vi. 1. <sup>2</sup> The full development of this feeling is seen in the last Gospel, where the term "the Jews," of Ἰουδαῖοι, occurs in numberless places to designate the enemies of Christ (see John v. 16. 18; vi. 41; vii. 1; x. 31; xi. 8), which is never the case in the first

3 Similarly the Jews of the dispersion to whom St. Peter addressed his Epistles, are called Εβραΐοι. Euseb. iii. 4.

έν τφ αὐτοῦ αίματι, εἰς ἔνδειξιν της δικαιοσύνης αὐτοῦ, διά την πάρεσιν των προγεγονότων άμαρτημάτων. efficacy of Christ's atoning blood extends back to past

Rom. v. 2. δι' οδ την προσαγωγην έσχηκαμεν τη πίστει εls την χάριν ταύτην.

Eph. ii. 18. δι αὐτοῦ ἔχομεν την προσαγωγην . . . πρός τον πατέρα.

iii. 12. ἐν ῷ ἔχομεν τὴν παββησίαν και την προσαγωγην έν πεποιθήσει.

2 Cor. xiii. 1. ἐπὶ στόματος δύο μαρτύρων καὶ τριῶν σταθήσεται παν δημα.

1 Tim. v. 19. ἐπὶ δύο ἡ τριῶν μαρτύρων.

Rom. xii. 19. εμοί εκδίκησις, έγὼ ἀνταποδώσω.

Phil. i. 30. τον αυτον άγωνα οδον ζδετε εν εμοί.

Col. ii. 1. ήλίκον ἀγῶνα ἔχω

 $\pi$ ερὶ ὑμῶν.
1 Thess. ii. 2. λαλῆσαι . . . τδ εὐαγγέλιον . . . . ἐν πολλῷ άγῶνι. Contest in regard to afflictions. 1 Cor. iv. 9. θέατρον εγενήθη.

μεν τῷ κόσμῳ, κ.τ.λ. Phil. iv. 14. συγκοινωνήσαντές μου τῆ θλίψει. Rom. i. 17. δ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται.

Gal. iii. 11. 8TI & Slkatos ek πίστεως ζήσεται. xii. 1. τρέχωμεν τον προκεί- 1 Cor. ix. 24. οδτω τρέχετε ίνα καταλάβητε.

Phil. iii. 14. τὰ μὲν ὀπίσω ἐπιλανθανόμενος, τοις δέ έμπροσθεν έπεκτεινόμενος, κατά σκοπον διώκω. Acts xxiii. 1. έγω πάση συνειδήσει αγαθή πεπολίτευμαι,

K.T.A. Rom. xv. 33.  $\delta$   $\delta \in \Theta \in \delta s$   $\tau \hat{\eta} s$

1 Thess. v. 25. προσεύχεσθε περί ήμῶν.

the Old Testament are given in the words of the Septuagint Version. The speech of St. Stephen to the Jewish council, is, as it were, a prelude to the Epistle to the Hebrews; and the form in which that speech is presented in Holy Scripture to the Church and to the World, may serve to explain and illustrate that of the Epistle in this and in other respects.

Besides, it is to be carefully borne in mind, that the Apostle, writing to the Hebrews, had special reasons for using the Septuagint Version.

That Version had been executed by Jews; its execution had been honoured by the Jews with the institution of an annual Festival to celebrate it 2; it had been received by the Jews, and was publicly read in the Jewish synagogues where the Greek language was spoken. The Septuagint Version was, in a word, the Authorized Jewish Version of the Old Testament 3.

Therefore, the Apostle, in quoting from the Septuagint, in this Epistle to the Jewish Nation, is quoting from a Jewish Version of the Jewish Scriptures; he is quoting from a Version, against which the Jews could not make any objection; he is quoting from a Version, which had received the public sanction of their own Hierarchy, and was authorized by their own religious use in all parts of the world.

But if the Author, writing to the Hebrews, had substituted some private Greek translation of his own in the place of this publicly received Version of the Jewish Nation, then the Jews would probably have excepted against his interpretations of their own Scriptures, as erroneous; they would have alleged, that he had some private ends and sinister purposes to serve, in this deviation from the public standard; and then all his reasonings in this Epistle, grounded upon quotations from the Old Testament, would have fallen idly to the ground.

3. With regard to the hypothesis, that the matter of the Epistle is due to St. Paul, but the diction to another person, this is tantamount to a theory that the Epistle to the Hebrews is to be ascribed to two different authors. This theory is refuted by the Epistle itself, which plainly points to one person as its author, in the following passages;-

"Pray for us; for we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly. But I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner... I beseech you, brethren, suffer the word of exhortation, for I have written a letter unto you in few words. Know ye that our brother Timothy is set at liberty, with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you."

4. The other supposition of some persons in ancient and modern times, that the Epistle to the Hebrews was written by St. Paul in the vernacular Hebrew of his age <sup>5</sup>, and was afterwards translated into the Greek form in which it is now extant, by St. Luke or S. Clement, is simply conjectural.

No such Hebrew original now exists, nor (as far as we know) ever existed.

St. James, the Bishop of Jerusalem, and St. Peter, the Apostle of the Circumcision, wrote their Epistles in Greek. St. Paul, it is true, wrote primarily for the Hebrews in Palestine, but he wrote also for all Jews, and for all men; and the probability seems to be, that he would write in the common language of all in that age,—namely, in Greek.

Besides, it has been rightly argued from external evidence, particularly from the constant use of the Septuagint Version in the Epistle, and the frequency of paronomasias in the Epistle,—a figure of speech very common with St. Paul 7,—and from verbal allusions and arguments, that the Greek form of the Epistle is original, and not a translation 9.

On the whole, then, after a review of external testimony from the Eastern and Western Churches, and of the internal evidence supplied by the Epistle itself, we arrive at the conclusion, that the Epistle to the Hebrews, both in its substance and its language, is from one and the same person, the Apostle St. Paul.

II. On the date of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

If this conclusion is sound, then we may determine very nearly the date of the Epistle.

The Author was then at liberty, for he promises to come to Palestine shortly. He is not any longer at Rome, or he would probably have specified that city in his salutation, which is, "They of Italy salute you 2."

The Author is expecting Timothy, who had probably been sent by St. Paul to Philippi in Macedonia, according to his promise, immediately on his own release from his two years' imprisonment at Rome 3, and who, it seems, had himself been imprisoned, perhaps as a well-known friend of the Apostle, and therefore obnoxious to the Jews, and had now been set at liberty 4.

The Epistle, therefore, appears to have been written some time after the release of St. Paul from his first imprisonment at Rome, perhaps after his journey to Spain 5, when he was attended by some friends from Italy, and was on his way westward toward Palestine, for that last missionary circuit by Crete, where he placed Titus as Chief Pastor, to Jerusalem, and to Philippi in Macedonia, in his way to which country he left Timothy at Ephesus 6, and so to Colossæ and Miletus, which terminated with his apprehension, and with his final imprisonment, and martyrdom at Rome.

The Epistle to the Hebrews was therefore probably written A.D. 64.

III. On the design and contents of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

1. The Epistle to the Hebrews may be regarded as confirming and completing the argument commenced by the Apostle St. Paul in the Epistle to the Galatians, and continued by him in his Epistle to the Romans.

It is observable, that there is the same prophetic key-note in these three Epistles, The Just shall live by Faith 7; and it is also worthy of remark, that this text is quoted in all these three Epistles, with a variation from the original, and that the variation is the same in them all *. This is a confirmation of the Pauline origin of this Epistle.

In the Epistle to the Galatians, he had endeavoured to recover Gentile Christians, who had lapsed, or were lapsing, from the foundation of Justification by Faith in Christ, to reliance on the ritual observances and ceremonies of the Levitical Law, as necessary and conducive to salvation.

In the Epistle to the Romans, he had taught the Jewish Christians that all needed a Redeemer, and that a Redeemer had been provided for all, Gentiles as well as Jews, on equal terms, in Christ, and in Him alone; and that this plan of Universal Redemption, and of Justification by Faith in Him, and not by means of the Mosaic Law, had been pre-announced by the Law and the Prophets, and had been designed from Eternity by God 10.

In the Epistle to the Hebrews he now completes his work.

He is constrained to write to them by his fervent love, and ardent zeal for God's glory; feelings which derived additional earnestness and intensity from his foreboding, that the period of the probation allowed to Jerusalem was now drawing near to its close.

The Apostle, therefore, comes forward to rescue the Jewish Christians from the impending doom. He is like the Angels sent from heaven to Sodom with a message from God to the Patriarch,

"Arise; escape for thy life, lest thou be consumed in the iniquity of this city "."

The Christian Jews of Jerusalem were subject to severe trials; they had lately lost their Chief Pastor, their Apostle and Bishop, St. James, by a violent and cruel death 12, who had been seized by the Jews, in their vindictive exasperation and fury, on account of the rescue of St. Paul from their hands.

St. Paul, therefore, might well desire to pay to the flock of the Apostolic Martyr, and to his blessed memory, a debt of pastoral solicitude and affection. Their Jewish persecutors, hardened by sin, given over to a reprobate mind, like Pharaoh, had become more reckless and ruthless in their resentful rage against the Church, in proportion as their own destruction approached.

Some of the Christians of Judæa, perplexed by doubt, appalled by fear, and wearied out by affliction, taunted by their insulting adversaries with the scandal of the Cross, and with the ignominy of a suffering Messiah, and with the reproach of worshipping a dead Man, who had perished by a death which their Law had pronounced to be accursed 13, and with disparaging the xiii. 24, where see note.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Heb. xiii. 23.

 See Phil. ii. 19—23.
 Heb. xiii. 23.

<sup>5</sup> Rom. xv. 24. 28. 6 1 Tim. i. 3. See below, Introduction to the Epistles to <sup>7</sup> On which see note above, Gal. vi. 11.

Gal. iii. 11. Rom. i. 17. Heb. x. 38.
 See above, Introduction to that Epistle, p. 41.

<sup>10</sup> See above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 187-197.

<sup>11</sup> Gen. xix. 15—17.
12 A.D. 62, at the Passover. Euseb. ii. 23. See above, Chronol. Synops. prefixed to the Acts of the Apostles, p. 25.

13 See on Gal. iii. 13.

majesty of Jehovah, the Living God; and perhaps disappointed by the frustration of their hopes of a speedy re-appearance of Christ to Judgment, had been tempted to forsake public worship<sup>1</sup>, and even to renounce their Baptism, and to apostatize from Christ, and to relapse into Judaism<sup>2</sup>; which specially commended itself to them at Jerusalem, by the still unimpaired magnificence of its august Temple, and by the stately pomp and dazzling splendour of its solemn Ritual; and by the awful traditions of the Levitical Dispensation delivered by God from Mount Sinai by the ministry of Angels, amid thunderings and lightnings, and by the miraculous agency of Moses, and by the voices of Patriarchs and Prophets sounding from a remote antiquity of two thousand years. How could they resist the torrent of such influences as these?

Here the Apostle comes forth, to remind them that the same God, Who had spoken in times past in divers portions, and divers manners, to the fathers of the Hebrew race, had now spoken in these last days, in the Gospel, to themselves "by His own Son, Whom He hath appointed Heir of all things, by Whom also He made the worlds, Who, being the brightness of His Father's glory, and the express Image of His Person, and upholding all things by the word of His Power, after He had Himself purged our sins, sat down at the Right Hand of the Majesty on High 3."

He thus proclaims, that the Gospel is not at variance with the Levitical Law, as the Jews alleged, but that they are both from the same God; and that the Gospel is the consummation of the Law. And he prepares the way for the demonstration, that Christ, Who preached the Gospel, and Who purged away our sins by His own blood, is far higher than the Angels, by whose ministry the Law was given; and is no other than God, and is far greater than Moses, who was His servant; and that therefore disobedience to Christ, and to His Gospel, will be attended with far worse punishment than was ever inflicted on those who rebelled against Moses in the wilderness, and who were excluded from the Promised Land—the type of heaven—for their rebellion '.

He thus disposes of the objections which might be alleged to the disparagement of the Person of Christ, from the consideration of His suffering Humanity; and shows the necessity of that Humanity, and of those sufferings, to constitute Christ what He is, a merciful and compassionate, as well as an Everlasting and All-prevailing High Priest; and to qualify Him for that place of Glory and Power at God's Right Hand, within the Veil of the Heavenly Holy of Holies, into which He is entered with the pure and spotless sacrifice of His own blood, shed once for all on the Cross for the sins of the whole world; and where He pleads the meritorious efficacy of that blood, and where He ever liveth to make intercession for us.

Let them not be staggered and perplexed by the Manhood and Death, and sacrificial blood-shedding of Christ. For all the ritual ceremonies of their own Levitical Law, and all the solemn services of the Tabernacle and Temple, proclaim with one voice, that "without shedding of blood there is no remission" of sins 5.

He shows, that the Gospel of Christ is far more excellent than the Law, not only because Christ is far greater than Moses, but also because His Priesthood, in which He offered Himself, is far more excellent than the Priesthood of Aaron, and of all his successors, whose ministrations, which so dazzled by their splendour the Jewish Christians of Jerusalem, were only faint figurative shadows of the transcendent glory of the Priesthood of Christ, and were preparatory to His Sacrifice.

He proves this from the Hebrew Scriptures themselves, in which the Holy Ghost describes Christ as a Priest solemnly set apart, with the intervention of an oath of God, and consecrated to be a Priest for ever; a Priest not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchizedek 6, who gave a sacerdotal benediction to Abraham himself, and so was greater than Abraham, and to whom Abraham paid tithes; and who was therefore greater than all the Priests of the Levitical dispensation, who came from Abraham 7.

If Melchizedek, the type of this future Priest, who is to remain for ever, and therefore to supersede the Levitical Priests, was so great, how great must be the Antitype! Thus, therefore, the majesty of Christ appears even from His office in that Human Nature, which qualified Him to be a Priest, and to offer a sacrifice once for all, for the sins of all mankind, on the Cross.

Nor let it be imagined, argues the Apostle, that we preach a new religion. Christianity is the religion of the Law. It is the religion of all the Worthies of old; of all the holy men who lived under the Law, and before the Law. They all looked forward with Faith to what we now sec.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Heb. x. 25.

² vi. 4-6.

&lt;sup>B</sup> i. 1-3.

<sup>4</sup> i. 8; ii. 2, 3.

&lt;sup>5</sup> ix. 22. <sup>6</sup> v. 10; vii.

<sup>7</sup> VII. 7—9.

<sup>8</sup> See above, on Exodus xxv. Introduction to Leviricus; and the notes to that book passim.

They saluted our blessings from afar, like mariners greeting a wished-for shore. They suffered affliction gladly for the sake of what they believed. They are our forefathers in the faith; they are our examples in patient endurance, and in valiant conflicts, and in glorious victories.

Wherefore, "seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; Who for the joy that was set before Him endured the Cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God. For consider Him that endured such contradiction of sinners against Himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds 1."

2. The Author, according to the manner of St. Paul, follows up his sublime statement of doctrinal verities with the sober inculcation of moral duties.

At the conclusion of the Epistle to the Hebreus the same thing is done, as is done at the close of the great dogmatic Epistle to the Jewish Christians, the Epistle to the Romans.

If we may venture so to speak, the Writer, having presented to the eye of his readers the form of Faith fashioned by his heavenly art, like a beautiful statue chiselled by the hand of some skilful sculptor, weaves a graceful garland of Christian Proverbs, and crowns that divine form with a fair chaplet of Christian virtues.

He then concludes the whole with some personal greetings, as was also usual with the Apostle St. Paul. He assures the Hebrews, that he bears no ill-will to the inhabitants of the Holy City, although he had been violently assaulted and arrested there by them in the Temple, and was in danger of death at their hands. He expresses an earnest desire to visit it again; and he asks their prayers, that he may be enabled to do so the sooner, and he speaks of that wished-for visit under the affectionate and endearing terms of a "restoration" to his own home<sup>2</sup>.

He assures the Hebrews of his own love and the love of his friends, especially those "of Italy," whose salutations he sends to them. And, finally, he concludes the Epistle with the Apostolic bencdiction of St. Paul<sup>3</sup>.

3. On the whole, we may regard these Three Epistles, to the Galatians, the Romans, and the Hebrews, as an Apostolic Trilogy from the hand of the same writer, and composed on one plan.

There is the same Divine Personage, the central figure of them all, Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever '. Justification by faith in Him is declared to be the only method of salvation provided by God; that plan of salvation was conceived in the divine mind from eternity, and it extends to all nations, countries, and ages of the world. The Levitical dispensation delivered by God from Mount Sinai through the ministry of Angels, and by the hand of Moses, was subordinate and ministerial to that plan, which is now at length fully revealed by the same God to all in the Gospel, and is the final consummation of all other dispensations, and which seals, and sanctifies them all "by the blood of the everlasting covenant of the same God to all other dispensations, and which seals, and

This doctrine of Justification by Faith in Christ is cleared from all difficulties and objections alleged by the Jews,—arguing for the dignity of their own Law, and against the sufferings and Crucifixion of Christ,—by the Apostolic demonstration in this Epistle, that Christ, Whom he had presented to the Jews in the two former Epistles, to the Galatians and the Romans, as the object of Faith, and as procuring and bestowing Justification freely on all by His Death, is far greater than Moses and the Angels; that He is the Creator of the World, as well as its Redeemer; that He is co-equal and co-eternal with Jehovah; that He is God as well as Man; and that, while by becoming man, He was able to suffer, He is also, as God, ever able and ever ready to save.

Thus the Apostle completes his labours for the salvation of "his brethren, his kinsmen according to the flesh 6."

He who had once persecuted Christ in his zeal for the Law, endeavours to win them to Christ, Who is the "end of the Law." He endeavours to reclaim the erring, to uphold the falling, and to confirm the strong. He has provided for the Church Universal of every age and country, a divine safeguard against all the attacks of her ghostly Enemy assaulting the Faith, by means of Mar-

&lt;sup>1</sup> Heb. xii. 1-3.

* xiii, 19.

<sup>3</sup> On the principle stated by the author himself, that "without contradiction, the less is blessed by the greater" (Heb. vii. 7), the adoption of this Benediction seems itself to imply, that the Author was greater than those whom he addressed; that is, was Vol. II.—Part III an Apostle, not a mere Presbyter or Evangelist, and therefore it excludes the names of Apollos, Luke, or Clement from a claim to the authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

<sup>4</sup> Heb. xiii. 8.

&lt;sup>5</sup> xiii. 20.

<sup>6</sup> Rom. ix. 3.

cionite or Manichæan objections to the Gospel, as if it were at variance with the Law; or by Arian and Socinian allegations, disparaging the Divinity, or denying the Atonement of Christ. He has provided in this Epistle an exhaustless supply of hope, comfort, peace, and joy, for every Christian soul, looking to the Cross of Christ, and thence raising its eyes to heaven, and beholding Him seated as our King at God's right hand, ever living as our Priest to make intercession for us, and coming hereafter in His glorious Majesty to judge the quick and dead, and to put all enemies under His feet; and to reward all true Israelites, who believe in Him, obey Him, and suffer for Him, and who regard Him with the eye of faith as no other than God of God, Light of Light, Very God of Very God, of one substance with the Father, existing before the worlds, creating and sustaining all things with His power; and to welcome them to the everlasting mansions of the only continuing City, the heavenly Jerusalem, whose builder and maker is God'.

The best preparation for a profitable study of the Epistle to the Hebrews is a careful perusal of the Book of Leviticus; and the Editor ventures to refer to his Introduction to that Book, and to the Notes upon it, for an elucidation of the spiritual meaning of these Levitical Sacrifices and Ceremonies, which, as the Author of this Epistle shows, had their consummation in Christ. The Epistle to the Hebrews cannot be understood without a previous attentive examination of the Book of Leviticus, expounded not according to "the letter which killeth," but according to the "Spirit which giveth life" (2 Cor. iii. 6. Cp. on 2 Cor. iii. 14, and on 1 Cor. x. 1—11).

&lt;sup>1</sup> Heb. xi. 8. 10. 16; xiii. 14.

HPOZ EBPAIOYZ.

Ι.  $^{1}$   $^{a}$  ΠΟΛΥΜΕΡΩΣ καὶ πολυτρόπως πάλαι  $^{5}$  Θεὸς λαλήσας τοῖς πατράσιν  $^{a}$   $^{Num.\ 12.\ 6.\ 8.}$  εν τοῖς προφήταις, ἐπ' ἐσχάτου τῶν ἡμερῶν τούτων ἐλάλησεν ἡμῖν ἐν Υτῷ,  $^{2}$   $^{b}$   $^{5}$   $^{0}$   $^{5}$   $^{8}$   $^{12.\ 6.\ 8.}$  εν τοῖς προφήταις, ἐπ' ἐσχάτου τῶν ἡμερῶν τούτων ἐλάλησεν ἡμῖν ἐν Υτῷ,  $^{2}$   $^{5}$   $^{5}$   $^{5}$   $^{6}$   $^{8}$   $^{12.\ 2.\ 38.}$ εν τοις προφητίες, επ $\epsilon$ ο χατον των ημερών τουτών επαίησεν  $\frac{1}{3}$ ο  $\frac{1}{6}$ ος  $\frac{1}{6}$ ν άπαύγασμα  $\frac{1}{6}$ οι  $\frac{1}{6}$ ι  $\frac{1$ c Ps. 110. 1. Wisd. 7. 26. John 1. 4. & 14. 9. 2 Cor. 4. 4. Col. 1. 15, 17. Phil. 2. 6. ch. 8. 1. & 9. 12, &c. & 12. 2.

Πρὸς 'Εβραίους ] So A, N, B, D, K.

On the argument of this chapter, and of the Epistle generally, it may be observed, that the Jewish Christians were specially exposed to afflictions and temptations (1 Thess. ii. 14. Heb. x. 34): that they were denounced by their fellow-countrymen as apostates from Jehovah and from Moses, as traitors to their own Polity, and renegades from the Law and from the Traditions of their Forefathers, and were charged with having deserted the religion of the Living God for the worship of a dead man. Hence the Apostle takes occasion to show in the beginning of the Epistle, that Christ is greater than the Prophets,—that He is coeternal with the Father, and Creator of the world. He then compares Him with Angels, and proves from the Jewish Scriptures that He is the Son, and God, and that they are His creatures and servants. Next he shows that the blessings which Christ bestows are greater than what Moses gave. He then compares the Levitical Priesthood with that of Christ, and shows the superior excellency of the latter; and, finally, he proves that all the holy men under the Law and before the Law, were cheered to do and to suffer what they did and suffered, by Faith in Christ. Thus he encourages the Hebrews to remain stedfast in their profession unto the end. Theodoret.

See above, Introduction to the Epistle, pp. 375-8.

CH. I. 1.] All the other Epistles of St. Paul begin with his name, Paul; and in most of them he presents himself as Paul the Apostle of Jesus Christ. Why does he not commence this Epistle

Because he was writing to Hebrews, and because he knew that his name was obnoxious to many of them, and would deter them from reading what bore it; and because he was not their Apostle, but the Apostle of the Gentiles. Gal. ii. 8. (Augustine, Primasius.) See above, Introduction to this Epistle, p. 369.

- Πολυμερῶς και πολυτρόπως! In many parts and in many manners; or, in many pieces or parcels, and in many fashions.

(Βρ. Andrewes, i. 103, 104.) Πολυμερὴς is that which is not displayed fully and entirely at once, but is divided into many portions (Hesych.), and πολύτροπος is that which is presented in various forms; as in the Jewish dispensation, by types, sacrifices, prophecies, Urim and Thummim; and so both words are distinguished from the in the first presented in the second continuous forms. are distinguished from what is aπλοῦν. Maxim. Tyr. xviii. 7. Valck. p. 356.

The Apostle vindicates God from the charge of leaving Himself without a witness. He did not confound the Israelites by one great manifestation of Himself, but taught them as children gradually, with line upon line and precept upon precept, here a little and there a little (Isa. xxviii. 10), "as they were able to bear it," and He also instructed them in various ways. I have spoken by Prophets, and multiplied visions, and used similitudes, Hosea xii. 10 (Theophylact), and He thus led them up, by a course of gradual preparatory training, to Christ.

St. Paul thus marks the transcendent excellence and preeminent privileges of the Christian Dispensation, by contrasting it with all preceding ones;

To the Fathers of the Jewish Nation God spake

(1) πολυμερωs, in many portions; revealing one part of His will by one Prophet at one season; and another part by another Prophet, at another time; but to us He speaks entirely and fully,

(2) To them He spake πολυτρόπως, 'after sundry fashions;' but to us uniformly, in the same Church, and Word, and Sacraments, and Ministry, for all.

(3) Lastly, to the Fathers He spake by His servants, but to us by His Son.

The Paronomasias in πολυμερῶs and πολυτρόπωs, and in v. 8,  $\xi\mu\alpha\theta\epsilon\nu$   $\dot{\alpha}\phi$   $\dot{\omega}\nu$   $\dot{\epsilon}\pi\alpha\theta\epsilon\nu$ , seem to show that this Epistle is not a translation from Hebrew (as some have supposed), but that the Greek form of it in our hands is the Original. See above,

- ἐν τοῖς προφήταις] in the Prophets; God spake in the Prophets, who were inspired by Him: see 2 Pet. i. 21. Observe ἐν, in, much more expressive than διὰ, through, or by. Cp. Gal. i. 16, and Eph. v. 26.

- êπ' ἐσχάτου] at the end. So A, B, D, E, I, K, M, and Griesb., Scholz, Lachm., Tisch., Lünemann.—Elz. has êπ' ἐσχάτων.

God speaks to the world at the end of these days, -that is, at the end of this world's existence, as distinguished from the world to come. The Gospel is the final revelation of God to man, and the days of the Gospel are the Last Days. See Acts ii. 17.

1 Pet. i. 20. 1 John ii. 18.

The term 'last days' was commonly used by the Rabbinical writers to describe 'the Days of the Messiah.' R. Nachman on

Gen. xlix. 1. Stuart, p. 15.

— ἐν Υίῷ] in His Son, or the Son, not a Son. Cp. Winer,

§ 19, pp. 109 and 114. The ancient author of the Shepherd, Hermas, who wrote in the middle of the second century, appears to refer to this passage in the following remarkable words;

"Petra vetus est, Porta autem nova; quia Filius Dei omni creatură antiquior est, ita ut in consilio Patri aduerit ad condendum creaturam (cp. Coloss. i. 15). Porta autem propterea nova est, quia in consummatione novissimis diebus (ἐπ' ἐσχάτου  $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu \stackrel{h}{\eta} \mu \epsilon \rho \hat{\omega} \stackrel{h}{\omega}$  apparebit, ut qui assecuturi sunt salutem per eam intrent in regnum Dei." Hermas (Pastor. lib. iii, Similitud. ix.

xii. p. 540, ed. Dressel).

2. robs alwas] the universe (see xi. 3), all things that were created in time,—a sense of the word  $al\omega \nu \epsilon s$  equivalent to the later meaning of the Hebrew מוֹלָמִים (olamim). Delitzsch, p. 4. As to the sense, cp. Col. i. 15—19. John i. 3. 10. Athanas. i. pp. 181—3. Bp. Pearson, Art. ii. p. 212, and Stuart and Lünemann here.

The Apostle here, refuting the common opinion of the Jews, makes three assertions;

(1) That the same God Who had spoken of old by and in the Prophets, has now spoken to us by and in His Son.

(2) That this Son is the Creator of the World; and he

3 C 2

 $\frac{d}{d}$  Eph. 1.  $\frac{20-22}{2}$  της δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ, δι ἐαυτοῦ καθαρισμὸν ποιησάμενος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἐκάθισει  $\frac{d}{d}$  Εph. 1.  $\frac{20-22}{2}$  της δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ, δι ἑαυτοῦ καθαρισμὸν ποιησάμενος τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν ἐκάθισει  $\frac{2}{2}$  Sam. 7. 14.  $\frac{1}{2}$  δεξιᾳ της μεγαλωσύνης ἐν ὑημαροῦς  $\frac{4}{2}$   $\frac{d}{d}$ της δόξης καὶ χαρακτήρ της ύποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, φέρων τε τὰ πάντα τῷ ῥήματι άγγελων, όσω διαφορώτερον παρ' αὐτοὺς κεκληρονόμηκεν ὄνομα. 5 · Τίνι γὰρ εἶπε ποτὲ τῶν ἀγγέλων, Υίός μου εἶ σὺ, ἐγὼ σήμερον γε·

(3) That Jesus Christ, by Whom He has spoken, is God as

3.  $\text{$\omega v$}$  existing from everlasting; a declaration of the Eternity of Christ, which is coupled in v. 4 with His Humanity, by means of the word γενόμενος, having become. Cp. Rom. ix. 5.

It must be borne in mind, that in the common opinion of the Jews of the Apostolic age, the Messiah, or Christ, was regarded as a great King and Conqueror, but not as a Divine Person Co-equal, and Consubstantial with God. Also, that in their opinion the Messiah was to be a human Person, but not subject to human sufferings; a Redeemer from captivity by conquest, but not by the sacrifice of Himself.

The introductory verses of this chapter are a Christian Apology against the Jews in these two particulars; and in confuting them, the Apostle has supplied convincing arguments against the Arians and Socinians, who in many respects symbolize with the Jews. See on Acts ii. 36.

— ἀπαύγασμα τῆς δόξης] the splendour of His glory. ᾿Απαύγασμα is light flowing from a luminous body (ἔκλαμψις). Wisdom is described as ἀπαύγασμα φωτὸς ἀτδίου in the Book of Wisdom, vii. 26; and Man is described by Philo (de Mundi Opif. i. p. 35) 28 κατά την διάνοιαν ψκειωμένος ΘΕΙΩι ΛΟΓΩι, ἀπαύγασμα γεγονώς.

This word is equivalent to the expression "Light of Light" of the Nicene Creed, and is interpreted in that sense by Origen, tom. xxxii. in Ioann. Athanasius, c. Arianos, Orat. ii. vol. i. p. 318, and by Chrys., Theophyl.; and, as Theodoret observes, it affirms the co-eternity of the Son with the Father; and asserts, that He is "the everlasting Son of the Father, as the ray of light from the sun is co-etaneous with the sun, from whence it flows by a natural process." Tertullian. Cp. Clemens Rom. ad Cor. 36, who adopts St. Paul's argument and language,—δς ὧν ἀπαύγασμα της μεγαλωσύνης αὐτοῦ τοσούτω μείζων έστὶν ἀγγέλων, ὄσω διαφορώτερον ὄνομα κεκληρονόμηκεν,—and who admirably describes the effect of this light of God in Christ upon us. See above on 2 Cor. iii. 18.

The use made of the Epistle to the Hebrews by S. Clement, St. Paul's fellow-labourer, whose name is in the book of life (Phil. iv. 3), is a circumstance of great importance in regard to the authorship and authenticity of this Epistle, and was noticed accordingly by early writers. "Clement wrote a very useful accordingly by early writers. "Clement wrote a very useful Epistle to the Corinthians in the name of the Church of Rome (of which he was Bishop). That Epistle bears a great resemblance, both in thought and language, to the Epistle, which bears St. Paul's name, to the Hebrews." Jerome (Scr. Eccl. 15).

- δόξα] = τίσο (cabod), glory. Luke ii. 9; ix. 31. Acts χαρακτήρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως] the image of His essence.

 χαρακτήρ is effigies, figura,—as the impression of a seal, or figure formed in a mould, or an effigy engraved or stamped upon figure formed in a mould, or an ethey engraved or stamped upon a coin. Cp. Eschyl. Suppl. 279. Aristot. Pol. i. 6. Philo (i. p. 332), ή λογική ψυχή τυπωθεῖσα σφραγῖδι Θοοῦ, ἦs ὁ χαρακτήρ ἐστιν ἀτδιος λόγος. Clem. Rom. c. 33, says that God created man τῆς ἐαυτοῦ εἰκόνος χαρακτῆρα.

'Υπόστασις does not here mean Person (which is a post-Nicene sense of the word), but Essence. So Athanasius, Epist. ad Afros, c. 4, ἡ ὑπόστασις οὐσία ἐστίν. Cp. Gieseler, Eccl. Hist. § 83, note 13. So the Vulgate and Syriac Versions, and cp. Delitzech p. 11.

Delitzsch, p. 11.

In these two phrases, the Son is characterized as the Effluence of His Father's Glory and the Image of His Essence, which is eternal, invisible, and divine.

The Apostle thus declares τὸ συναΐδιον καὶ τὸ δμοούσιον αὐτοῦ-the co-eternity and consubstantiality of the Son. Theodoret.

God the Father hath communicated to the Eternal Word the same divine essence by which He is God; and consequently, the Word is of the same nature with the Father, and thereby He is the perfect image and similitude of Him, and therefore He is His proper Son . . . . whence Christ is called the Image of God, the brightness of His Glory, and the express image of His Substance. Cp. Primasius here, and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 258; and see notes above on Col. i. 15, and Phil. ii. 6.

 φέρων] φέρω = κὰς (nasa), Isa. xlvi. 3; lxvi. 12, upholding, supporting, maintaining; κυβερνών, συγκρατών. Chrys.

Christ not only created the world, but He also ever upholds it.

Cp. Col. i. 17, τὰ πάντα ἐν αὐτῷ συνέστηκεν.

 τῶ βήματι τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοῦ] by the word of His power.
 The phrase is more emphatic than 'His powerful word;' it means that His Power works by His word, and therefore it is a declaration of the divine manner of His working. Cp. Eph. vi. 10, τῷ κράτει τῆς ἰσχύος.

This expression is remarkable, as being apparently quoted by Irenaus (ii. 30. 9), "Verbo virtutis sua." See above, Introduction, p. 368.

The Apostle declares the Divinity of the Son, by saying that His word is sufficient for the creation and government of the universe. Theodoret.

 δι' ἐαντοῦ] through Himself, and not by Levitical sacrifices; but by His own act, in voluntarily taking our nature, and laying down His life for us. See on Phil. ii. 7.
 These two words are cancelled by Bleek, De Wette, Lachm., Alford, and are not found in A, B, D**, and some Cursives, and in Vulg. and some Fathers; but they are in D***, E, K, L, M; and this reading is confirmed by the Syriac and Arabic Versions, and by the Coptic and Æthiopic, and the majority of Cursives and Fathers; and Theodoret has δι' αὐτοῦ, and so D*, and they are retained by Griesh., Matth., Scholz, Bloomf., and are restored by Tisch. in his last edition, 1858.

In this verse the Apostle affirms the union of the Human Nature with the Divine, in the One Person of Christ, and then proceeds in a natural order, to speak of His exaltation and Session in glory in that Nature. The Son of God, being God most High, humbled Himself and became Man; and as Man He received that glory which He had ever possessed as God. (John xvii. 5.) Theodoret.

— καθαρισμόν ποιησάμενος τῶν ἄμαρτιῶν] having made a cleansing of sins. He is speaking here, not of the λύτρον, or price paid for our release, but the λουτρόν, or washing of our sins by Christ's blood. Christ, our great High Priest and Sacrifice, fully and really effected in substance once for all by His blood shed on the cross, all that was done in figure by Levitical Priests in the purifications by blood and water; and He is ever applying in the Christian Sacraments, namely, in the laver of regeneration at Baptism, and by the communion of His Blood in the Holy Eucharist, the virtue of that one Sacrifice to the cleansing of the soul. See below, on 1 John v. 6, "This is He Who came by Water and Blood.'

For a full and excellent exposition of these three introductory verses, see Bp. Andrewes (Sermons, i. 102-117).

4. τοσούτφ κρείττων γενόμενος] having become, in His human nature, so much greater than the Angels; for, in His Divine Nature, He always was greater than the Angels, from Eternity, See v. 3; and cp. Eph. ii. 6, where it is shown, that by Christ's exaltation and Session in glory in our human Nature, that Nature has been raised above the Nature of the Angels. Cp. Phil. ii.

This assertion is apologetic.

The Apostle, in affirming the superiority of Jesus to Angels, refutes two errors common among the Jews;

(1) That the world was created by the aid of Angels.

(2) That Angels are entitled to worship from men.

The prevalence of these errors among the Jews may be shown from the Rabbinical writings quoted by Schöttgen (Hor. Hebr. p. 906). See on Col. ii. 8. 18.

Clemens Romanus (i. 36) shows from this passage, which he quotes, that by Christ's Incarnation, we men have been made capable of seeing the glory of God.

- διαφορώτερον - ονομα] He has inherited a far more excellent name than they; the title, namely, of 'Son of God,'-a title ac-

The Apostle is here proving the glory acquired by Christ as God-Man: and not the glory which He always possessed as the Everlasting Word. See v. 3, ἐκάθισε, and v. 4, γενόμενος, neither of which could be predicated simply of the divine Logos

5. σήμερον γεγέννηκά σε] to-day have I begotten Thee. Ps. ii. 7, where the words are spoken by Jehovah to Christ, as Man, after His Passion and Resurrection; and this text is applied to the Resurrection of Christ, as the First-begotten of the dead, by St. Paul, Acts xiii. 33, where see note; and this Psalm is therefore appointed by the Church to be sung on Easter Day.

γέννηκά σε; καὶ πάλιν, ἸΙγὼ ἔσομαι αὐτῷ εἰς πατέρα, καὶ αὐτὸς ἔσται μοι εἰς υἱόν;  $^{6}$   $^{6}$   $^{7}$ Οταν δὲ πάλιν εἰσαγάγη τὸν Πρωτότοκον εἰς τὴν  $^{6}$   $^{1}$   $^{8}$   $^{5}$   $^{7}$   $^{7}$   $^{7}$   $^{8}$   $^{8}$   $^{9}$

<sup>7 g</sup> Καὶ πρὸς μὲν τοὺς ἀγγέλους λέγει, Ὁ ποιῶν τοὺς ἀγγέλους αὐτοῦ g Ps. 104. 4. πνεύματα, καὶ τοὺς λειτουργοὺς αὐτοῦ πυρὸς φλόγα. 8 h πρὸς δὲ τὸν h Ps. 45. 6, 7.

It is allowed by the Jewish Rabbis that this Psalm relates to | the Messiah. See Surenhus. p. 592. Some of the Fathers (e.g. Origen in Ioann. tom. i. and Athanasius cont. Arian. iv. 24, and Basil c. Eunom. ii. 24), regarding σήμερον, to-day, as equivalent to God's eternal now, apply γεγέννηκα to the Eternal Generation of the Son: and others (as Chrys. here) to His Incarnation. See the authorities in Suicer, Thes. v. σήμερον, vol. ii. p. 954.

- 'Εγὰ ἔσομαι αὐτῷ εἰς πατέρα] I will be to Him for a Father. 2 Sam. vii. 14, LXX.

These words were spoken by God primarily concerning Solomon, the Son of David, and builder of that Temple which David desired to build, but was not permitted by God; and were spoken by God, in reference to that desire. See 2 Sam. vii. 5, 1 Chron. xvii. 11.

But the words were spoken in a secondary sense concerning Christ, the promised Son of David, the Builder of the Christian

This is clear from the inapplicability of some portions of the promise to Solomon, especially that portion which assures to him an everlasting kingdom.

The Apostle, inspired by the Holy Ghost, teaches us to make this transfer from the type to the antitype.

And such a transfer was commonly regarded by the Jewish Rabbis as a legitimate one. See Surenhus. pp. 592, 593. It is well observed by Stuart (p. 26) that the Apostle in applying these quotations to the Messiah, must have supposed, that they whom he addressed, would readily admit the propriety of the application; otherwise he would not have ventured to make it.

We derive also this benefit from the Apostle's words. are assured, on his authority, that we are right in regarding Solomon as a type of Christ. And thus we have a clue to the right understanding of a book of the Old Testament, viz. the Book of Canticles, or the Song of Solomon, as representing the love and espousals of Christ and His Church.

6. "Όταν δὲ πάλιν] And, in another place, when He shall have brought the Only-Begotten into the World, He saith, And let all the Angels of God worship Him.

Πάλιν is used here, as commonly in this Epistle (see i. 5; ii. 13; iv. 5; x. 30), and in the previous clause, to introduce a new quotation. Cp. Rom. xv.  $10_r$  11, 12; indeed  $\pi \delta \lambda \iota \nu$ , again, is the 'vox solennis' for this purpose. It served the same uses in ancient literature that inverted commas do in modern typo-

As to the position of  $\pi d\lambda w$ , see similar examples of trajections in Winer, p. 488. Cp. 2 Cor. ii. 1.

There is a climax in the Apostle's argument.

Even at Christ's Incarnation, when He was humbling Himself, and condescending to become a little Child, even then Jehovah declared His glory; He proclaimed even then the su-premacy of the First-Begotten (Col. i. 15) over the Angels of God. For even then, when He introduced Him into this lower world (οἰκουμένην, cp. Luke ii. I), He gave a command to the Angels of Heaven to worship Him.

"Οταν είσαγάγη = cum induxerit; literally, 'when He shall have introduced.' The σταν with conj. aorist is equivalent to cùm with the futurum exactum in Latin. See Winer, § 42,

p. 275.

This mode of speech is to be accounted for here by the consideration that the Writer puts himself in the place of a Prophet contemplating the pre-existence of Christ, and considering the event of the Incarnation as future.

The introduction into the habitable world (οἰκουμένη) was at The introduction into the hadrance world (otroupern) was at the Incarnation,  $\delta \tau \epsilon$  è  $\sigma \alpha \rho \kappa \delta \theta \eta$ . Greg. Nyssen, Cyril, Chrys., Theodoret, Theophyl., and so Primasius, and Ep. Fell, and others. Cp. below, x. 5,  $\epsilon i \sigma \epsilon \rho \chi \delta \mu \epsilon \nu o s$   $\epsilon i s$   $\tau \delta \nu \kappa \delta \sigma \mu o \nu$ , which is said of the Incarnation.

This Exposition seems preferable to that of some Interpreters, who refer this introduction of the Son to His Resurrection, or to His Second Advent, as Böhme Tholuck, De Wette, Lünemann, Delitzsch, p. 24. The Second Advent of Christ to Judgment in His glorious Majesty can hardly be called a bringing in of the First-begotten into the World.

— προσκυνησάτωσαν αὐτ $\hat{\varphi}$  πάντες ἄγγελοι Θεοῦ] let all the Angels of God worship Him. Probably a quotation from Ps. κενίι. 7, where the LXX have προσκυνήσατε αὐτ $\hat{\varphi}$  (Cod. Alex.); whence the LXX seem to have adopted, in Deut. xxxii. 43, προσκυνησάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες ἄγγελοι Θεοῦ.

In both these cases there seems to be a plurality of Persons; the Angels are introduced as the Angels of One Person, and they are commanded by Him to worship another Person; and that Person must also be God; for Divine Worship can be paid only

The Angels of God are commanded by the Holy Spirit, speaking by the Psalmist, to worship some other Person, who manifests the glory of God to all people (see v. 6), and of Whom this is said, that a "Light is sprung up to the righteous One," v.11 ( $\phi \hat{\omega} s \, dv \hat{\epsilon} \tau \epsilon \iota \lambda \epsilon \, \tau \hat{\varphi} \, \delta \iota \kappa a l \varphi$ ), and that "Sion heard and rejoiced thereat" (v.8), and that "the multitude of the Isles is glad" at His appearance (v.1), and that "He hath declared His Salvation, and His Righteousness hath He openly showed in the sight of the Heathen; and hath remembered His Mercy and sight of the Heathen; and hath remembered His Mercy and Truth toward the house of Israel, and all the ends of the world have seen the salvation of God" (Ps. xcviii. 1-4).

The Song of Zacharias, the Father of the Baptist, who is said in the Gospel to be "filled with the Holy Ghost," takes up the language of these Psalms, and associates them with the Incarnation of Christ. See Luke i. 67-79.

The ninety-seventh Psalm begins with a declaration that "The Lord reigneth;" and the same affirmation is repeated in this Group of Psalms, which, as the Jewish Rabbis allow, relate to "Messiah the King," and to the beginning of His Monarchy, the last Monarchy of Daniel. (Dan. ii. 44; iv. 3. 34; vii. 14. 27. Cp. Rev. xi. 15.) Ps. xciii.—ci., or, according to LXX, xciii.—c. See Ps. xciii. 1; xcv. 3; xcvi. 10; xcviii. 7.

The hopes expressed in this Psalm are Messianic. The appearance of Christ was of the nature of a Judyment . . . and the Grace which He revealed to the world is displayed in the preceding Psalm.

The exclamation, "The Lord reigneth," the theme of these psalms, began to be fulfilled at the Incarnation and First Advent. and will reach its final consummation when all the Kingdoms of this World shall have become the Kingdom of the Lord and of His Christ. See Hengstenberg in Ps. xcvii.

We, who are Christians, may thankfully receive through St. Paul, such an exposition from the Holy Spirit, Who inspired the Psalmist, and Who guides us, by the hand of St. Paul, to see in this and the other Psalms with which it is combined, and which illustrate its meaning (viz. the ninety-third to the one hundredth Psalms), a prophecy concerning the Judgment and Mercy, the Glory and Grace, of God, manifested to all the world in the Incarnation. And we may rest satisfied, that St. Paul would not have treated this Psalm as prophetical of the First Advent of Messiah, unless the Holy Ghost had designed it so to be, and the Ancient Church of God had rightly regarded it as such.

Happily for the Christian Church, the Septuagint Version, which the Apostle quotes, was made by Jews, and was read in Jewish Synagogues; it is in fact the Hellenistic Targum of the Old Testament, and its interpretations may be regarded as exponents of the sense of the most learned of the Jewish Nation before the coming of Christ.

No exception therefore could be made by the Jews against the Apostle's quotations from the Septuagint Version; and he is therefore careful to follow as closely as possible the language of that Version in this Epistle, and not to substitute for it any private Interpretation of his own, against which the Jews might have excepted as incorrect. See above, Introduction to the Acts of the Apostles, p. xviii; and also, Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 373-4.

Thus, if any should object that ἄγγελοι here is not a correct rendering of the Hebrew אַלהִים (elohim), it was enough for the Apostle to answer, that it had been so rendered by Jews them-

Apostle to answer, that it had been so rendered by Jews themselves in the Septuagint Version, here, and in Ps. viii. 5; cxxxvii. 1. See the notes above on Ps. viii. 3—5; xcvii. 7.

Here is clear evidence of Christ's Divinity. Jehovah (as the Apostle expounds the words) commands the Angels to worship Christ. See Waterland, vol. iv. p. 360, "On the Divinity of Christ proved from His claim to be worshipped."

7. πρός] in regard to; the Hebrew or by. Luke xx. 19.

Acts xii. 21. Rom. x. 21. Lünemann.

— 'Ο ποιῶν—φλόγα] See the notes on Ps. civ. 4. The sense is not "Who maketh His Angels Spirits," nor is it, "Who 1 Isa. 61. 1, 3. Acts 10, 38.

k Ps. 102, 25,

1 Isa. 51. 6. 2 Pet. 3. 7, 10.

Τίὸν, 'Ο θρόνος σοῦ, ὁ Θεὸς, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ αἰῶνος ῥάβδος εὐθύτητος ή ράβδος της βασιλείας σου, 9 ήγάπησας δικαιοσύνην, καὶ ἐμίσησας ἀνομίαν· διὰ τοῦτο ἔχρισέ σε ὁ Θεὸς, ὁ Θεός σου, ἔλαιον αγαλλιάσεως παρα τους μετόχους σου. 10 k Καὶ, Σὺ κατ' ἀρχὰς, Κύριε, τὴν γῆν ἐθεμελίωσας, καὶ ἔργα τῶν χειρῶν σου εἰσὶν οἱ οὐρανοί 11 αὐτοὶ ἀπολοῦνται, σὺ δὲ διαμένεις καὶ πάντες ὡς ἱμάτιον παλαιωθήσονται, 12 καὶ ώσεὶ περιβόλαιον ελίξεις αὐτοὺς, καὶ ἀλλαγήσονται σὺ δὲ ὁ αὐτὸς εἶ, καὶ τὰ ἔτη σου οὐκ ἐκλείψουσι.

m Ps. 110. 1. Matt. 22. 24. Mark 12. 36. Luke 20. 42. Acts 2. 34. 1 Cor. 15. 25. Eph. 1. 20. ch. 10. 1, 2. & 12. 2. n Ps. 103. 21. & 34. 7. & 91. 11.

13 π Πρὸς τίνα δὲ τῶν ἀγγέλων εἴρηκέ ποτε, Κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν μου, ἔως αν θω τους έχθρούς σου υποπόδιον των ποδων σου; 14 n Ουχὶ πάντες είσὶ λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα, εἰς διακονίαν ἀποστελλόμενα διὰ τοὺς μέλλοντας κληρονομείν σωτηρίαν;

ΙΙ. Ι Διὰ τοῦτο δεῖ περισσοτέρως προσέχειν ἡμᾶς τοῖς ἀκουσθεῖσι, μή ποτε maketh the Winds His Angels," but it is "Who maketh His Angels to be Winds (ninn, ruchoth), and His Ministers to be a flaming fire;" that is, who employs His Angels in the government of the natural world and in the visible phenomena of the Universe. The Angels are His Ambassadors and Servants in the material world which is inhabited by man. This view was familiar to the ancient Jewish Church. See the quotations from the Rabbinical writers (in Wetstein and Schöttgen), who use the same words as the Apostle, "facis Angelos Tuos Ventos, aliquando Ignem;" and their report of the answer of the Angel to Manoah, nonnunquam Deus facit nos ignem, aliàs ventum.

This text opens to us a sublime and magnificent revelation of the invisible agency employed by Almighty God in the operations of Nature. Angels are employed by Him as servants in them; but the Son is Creator and Lord of all.

From this Apostolic citation we learn therefore-

To interpret Nature aright; and To interpret this Psalm aright.

S. Clement of Rome adopts St. Paul's argument upon it (ad

S. Clement of Rome adopts St. Paul's argument upon it (ad Corinth. i. 36).

8, 9. 'O θρόνος σοῦ, δ Θεὸς—μετόχους σοῦ] From Ps. xlv. 6, 7, almost verbatim from the LXX. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever! Christ is here invoked as God; see the notes there.

The words δ Θεὸς, used here by the LXX, are employed as a vocative commonly in that Version. See Ps. iii. 7; iv. 1; v.

10; vii. 1.

This use is the best illustration of the words of St. Thomas to our Lord, who is addressed by him as God, "My Lord, and my God," Θεός μου. John xx. 28. Cp. Luke xviii. 11. 13. my God," Θεός μου. John xx. Mark xv. 34. Winer, pp. 59. 164.

This Fsalm is entitled by the LXX "a Song for the Beloved One," ὦδη ὑπὲρ τοῦ ἀγαπητοῦ, and it has generally been understood by the best Jewish Expositors (as Aben Ezra, Kimchi, and others), and by all the ancient Christian Interpreters, to refer to the Messiah as King, and Head, and Husband of His Church. The use here made of it by St. Paul may suffice to assure us of the correctness of that application by the Church in her services for Christmas Day, when St. Paul's words expounding the Psalm are appointed to be used as the Epistle.

9.  $\xi \chi \rho_i \sigma \in \delta \Theta \in \delta S$  God anointed Thee with the oil of gladness. Some expositors regard & Oeds here also as a vocative. So Primasius, Theophyl., and even Symmachus, who renders the word here (which is Elohim) by  $\theta\epsilon\dot{\epsilon}$ . A remarkable confession from him. And so Lünemann.

It appears that the LXX and St. Paul rather intended it as n nominative; and so the Syriac, Arabic, and Æthiopic Versions, and our English Translators, who have, however, placed "O God" in the margin.

— ἔχρισέ σε-ἔλαιον] On the double accusative, see Rev.

This Unction is predicated of the Son as Man in His threefold character of Prophet, Priest, and King, Who is thus the Messiah, Christ, or Anointed of God. See Theodoret here, and Bp. Pearson, Art. ii. pp. 159. 179, and above on Matt. i. 1.

This Unction, begun at the Conception of Christ (Luke i. 35) and further displayed at His Baptism (Matt. iii. 16), was consummated at His Enthronization in His Heavenly Palace at God's Right Hand, when He received the Holy Ghost to give to His Church. Acts ii. 1. Eph. iv. 8. Christ is anointed with the oil of gladness above His fellows; because the unction which His members, who are also anointed (cp. Ps. cv. 15), receive, is derived from His unction; cp. Ps. cxxxiii. 2. Men are called Christ's μέτοχοι, or fellows, because He has taken their nature (cp. ii. 14), and they partake of His unction (iii. 14).

10-12. Σὸ κατ' ἀρχὰς-ἐκλείψουσι] Ps. cii. 25-27. Almost verbatim from LXX; see above on that Psalm.
12. ἐλίξεις] Thou shalt fold or roll them up. The Hebrew word here signifies 'thou shalt change;' whence, in the Alexandrine MS. of the LXX, we have anadters here. The heavens whence the figure. Cp. Isa. xxxiv. 4; it. 6. 2 Pet. iii. 10. Stuart, p. 34. For \(\xi\) \(\xi\) \(\xi\) sand many Latin authorities have ἀλλάξεις, and so N.

αὐτούs] Lach. adds ὡς ἱμάτιον, with A, B, D*; but this is probably only a marginal gloss, for ὡς περιβόλαιον, imported into the text.

13. Κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν] Sit Thou on My Right Hand. Ps. cx. 1, LXX; a Psalm applied by Christ to Himself as God and Man. See Matt. xxii. 44. Cp. Acts ii. 34, and St. Paul's reasoning on this text, 1 Cor. xv. 25-28.

14. Οὐχὶ πάντες ε. λειτουργικὰ πνεύματα κ.τ.λ.] Are they not all ministering Spirits? The Angels are πνεύματα λειτουργικὰ, Spirits ministering to God in His Heavenly Sanctuary, as the Cherubim in the earthly λειτουργία, or divine service, of the Holy of Holies. On this sense of λειτουργικόs, see viii. 6; ix. 21. Num. iv. 12, LXX. Angels are God's λειτουργοί, and man's

In the argument of this Chapter concerning the nature of Angels and their subordination to Christ, and as doing service to man, the Apostle had doubtless before his eye that erroneous tenet of Judaistic Gnosticism, which he had encountered in his Epistle to the Colossians; and which represented the Angels as co-operating with God in Creation, and as Mediators between God and Man, and as entitled to receive worship from man, and which thus undermined the dignity, and contravened the worship of Christ. See above on Col. ii. 18. Cp. Eph. i. 21.

The argument is followed up by St. Paul's contemporary, Clement of Rome, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, c. 36.

On the existence of the Holy Angels, and their office of ministering to the faithful, see Bp. Bull's two admirable Sermons, xi. and xii. vol. i. pp. 260—325.

Observe, that this chapter, designed as an argument in the first instance against the errors of Judaism, is a storehouse of authorities against the Marcionite, Arian, Sabellian, and other Heresies, which impugn the truth concerning the Two Natures, and the One Person, of Christ; as has been shown by the ancient expositors upon it, Chrys., Theodoret, Primasius, Theophyl., and others, cited in the valuable Catena from Cod. Paris. 238, ed. Cramer, pp. 279—381.

CH. II. 1. Διὰ τοῦτο] Because the Gospel is delivered to us by Christ Himself in person; Who is so much greater than the Angels, through whom men received the Law; therefore, we ought to give more diligent heed to it.

μή ποτε παραβρυῶμεν] lest we fail. Παραβρυῶμεν is the 2 aor. conj. passive from παραβρεῖν, Matt. G. G. § 248. Kühner, § 176, § 196. § 230.

The metaphor is from a Stream-and a beautiful and appropriate one it is, especially in an address to the dwellers in Palestine, a land of temporary torrents. The nature of a Stream is to flow by, and therefore the sense cannot be, lest we flow by, that is, continue to flow; but the meaning is, 'ne delabamur, ne deficiamus,' lest we be dried up by the scorching rays of the sun, in the heat of trial and affliction, like a Brook, which glides away παραβρυῶμεν.  $^2$  εἰ γὰρ ὁ δι ἀγγέλων λαληθεὶς λόγος ἐγένετο βέβαιος, καὶ a Deut. 4. 3. 4. πᾶσα παράβασις καὶ παρακοὴ ἔλαβεν ἔνδικον μισθαποδοσίαν,  $^3$  τως ἡμεῖς  $^{8.27.20.}_{Acts 7.30.}$   $^{8.27.20.}_{Acts 7.30.}$   $^{8.27.20.}_{Acts 7.30.}$ πᾶσα παράβασις καὶ παρακοὴ ελαβεν ενδικον μισυαποσοσιαν, πως ημευς Acts 7. 38, 53. εκφευξόμεθα τηλικαύτης ἀμελήσαντες σωτηρίας, ἥτις ἀρχὴν λαβοῦσα λαλεῖσθαι [6 Al. 17. διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου ὑπὸ τῶν ἀκουσάντων εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐβεβαιώθη, 4 ° συνεπιμαρτυροῦντος ch. 12. 25. ch. 12. 26. 26. 27. 20. Δετς 22. 22. 22. 22. 24. 7, 11 Cor. 12. 4. 7, 11

5 d Οὐ γὰρ ἀγγέλοις ὑπέταξε τὴν οἰκουμένην τὴν μέλλουσαν, περὶ ἦς λαλοῦ- d ch. 1. 2, 4, 8. μεν 6 ο διεμαρτύρατο δέ που τὶς λέγων, Τί ἐστιν ἄνθρωπος, ὅτι μιμνήσκη 2 Pet. 3. 13. αὐτοῦ, ἢ υίὸς ἀνθρώπου, ὅτι ἐπισκέπτη αὐτοῦ; 7 Ἡλάττωσας αὐτὸν & 144.3. βραχύ τι παρ' άγγέλους δόξη καὶ τιμή ἐστεφάνωσας αὐτὸν, καὶ

and disappears in the drought of summer, when it is most needed. | See Job vi. 15. Jer. xv. 18.

The word is derived from the LXX, Prov. iii. 21,  $vi\hat{\epsilon}$ ,  $\mu\hat{\gamma}$  maradhours,  $\pi \eta \rho \sigma \sigma \sigma \delta \hat{\epsilon} \hat{\epsilon} \mu \hat{\gamma} \rho$  sour,  $\nu$  where it corresponds to the Hebrew  $\nu \hat{\gamma}$  (luz), to depart, rendered  $\hat{\epsilon} \kappa \lambda \epsilon (\pi \epsilon \nu, to fail$ , as water does (Prov. iv. 21),  $vi\hat{\epsilon}$ ,  $\hat{\epsilon} \mu \hat{\eta}$  has a phase  $\pi \rho \delta \sigma \epsilon \chi \epsilon \dots \delta \pi \omega s$   $\mu \hat{\gamma} \hat{\epsilon} \kappa \lambda (\pi \omega \sigma i)$  of all  $\pi \eta \gamma \alpha i$  sour and the word is rightly explained by  $\mu \hat{\gamma}$   $\hat{\epsilon} \kappa \pi \epsilon \omega i$ . σωμεν, by Chrys., and by ξξολισθώμεν in Hesych., and by 'ne forte evanescamus,' by Primasius. (John vii. 38. Prov. xviii. 4.)

The Apostle exhorts them, not to suffer themselves to be dried up by the heat of persecution, and to somer themselves to be dried up by the heat of persecution, and to flow away, through fear, and apostatize from Christ, and so be utterly lost; but to hold fast to the words of Him Who is the fountain of Living Waters; and to be like perennial Streams flowing from Him Who will be to them a never-failing Well of Water springing up to Everlasting Life. (John iv. 14.)

2. δι' ἀγγέλων] by Angels. On the giving of the Law from Mount Sinai by the Ministry of Angels, see above on Acts vii. 53.
 Gal. iii. 19. Augustine, Serm. 7, and Delitzsch here, p. 49.

There is no express mention of the intervention of Angels in the Mosaic account of the Delivery of the Law on Mount Sinai. But the words in Deut. xxxiii. 2. Ps. lxviii. 17, combined with the declarations above cited in Acts vii. 53, and Gal. iii. 19, and with the assertion in the preceding chapter (i. 7), that God "maketh His Angels winds, and His Ministers a flaming fire," suggest a belief, that the Thunderings and the Lightnings, and the Cloud, and the Voice of the Trumpet, exceeding loud (Exod. xix. 16), which accompanied the delivery of the Law on Mount Sinai, were Angelic Ministrations to God in His Temple of the

- ἐγένετο βέβαιος] became, and was proved to be, stedfast and inviolable, by the infliction of penalties for its infraction or παράβασις καὶ παρακοή] transgression and disobedience; that is, every sin of commission, and every sin of omission also.

таракой represents the disposition and habit of not hearkening to God's commands; παράβασις expresses an actual transgression of them.

3.  $\eta\mu\epsilon$ is] we Christians: "jungit personam suam illis Paulus, more suo." Primasius. Cp. note above on 1 Cor. vi. 12.

—  $\sigma\omega\tau\eta\rho[as]$  salvation—an argument from the grace of the Gospel, as distinguished from the terrors of the Law. Cp.

— ήτις ἀρχὴν λαβοῦσα λαλεῖσθαι] which having received the beginning of its utterance through Him who is the Lord Jehovah Himself; and not like the Law which came to the Jews through a Mediator and by Angels. See on Gal. iii. 19. \( \pi_{\tau t is} \) is more significant than \( \pi_{\tau} \): it is equivalent to "quippe que." See Rom. i.

It is observable, that the writer of this Epistle uses the word Kopios thus, as an appellation for Christ, here and in vii. 14, and this has been alleged by some as inconsistent with St. Paul's usage, and as an argument against the Pauline origin of the Epistle. Davidson, p. 244.

But St. Paul also employs Κύριος in this manner in his received Epistles, 1 Thess. iv. 15, 16. 2 Thess. ii. 2. 2 Tim. iv. 18. And this expression was very appropriate in an Epistle to the Hebrews, as reminding them that the Jesus of the Gospel is no other than the Jehovah of the Old Testament. See Luke ii. 9.

The same may be said concerning the objection raised by some on the fact that the words Ἰησοῦς and Χοιστὸς are often used absolutely, and not often in combination (though sometimes, as x. 10; xiii. 8. 21) in this Epistle. The Writer of it is professedly and specially treating of Our Lord's Humanity as Jesus, and of Illi Deighbord or Christ. and of His Priesthood as Christ.

- εἰς ἡμῶς ἐβεβαιώθη] was conveyed stedfastly to us (Theophyl.), so that we were assured of its truth. On the use of eis, see 1 Thess. i. 5. 2 Cor. viii. 6. Col. i. 25. 1 Pet. i. 25, and or.

this sense of βεβαιοῦν, see 1 Cor. i. G.

No argument can be hence deduced against the Pauline origin of this Epistle, as if this statement were at variance with Gal. i. 12, where he speaks of direct revelations from God, and not from man, to himself. It is usual with the Apostle, in his condescension and charity, to divest himself of his own personal individuality, and to identify himself with those whom he addresses, and indeed with classes of persons generally to whom he does not actually belong. See on Rom. vii. 7, and Stuart, does not actuary belong. See on the Holy Introd. § 27 (17), and above, v. 3.

 4. Πνεύματος άγίου μερισμοῖς] distributions of the Holy Ghost. Gifts which the Holy Ghost distributed (ἐμέρισε). See Acts ii. 2. 1 Cor. vii. 17; xii. 11, and 2 Cor. x. 13, and Rom.

This interpretation seems preferable on the whole to that which regards the Holy Spirit as distributed, μεριζόμενον, and not as the Agent in the distribution of His own Gifts.

The argument of the Apostle appears to be enforced by an appeal to all the Three Persons of the Trinity, as co-operating in the preaching of the Gospel.

— κατὰ τὴν αὐτοῦ θέλησιν] according to His own Will; the will of the Spirit Himself. See on 1 Cor. xii. 11, and so Primasius and Œcumenius.

5. Οὐ γὰρ ἀγγέλοις] For not to Angels (emphatic) did He subject (aorist) the future world, of which we are speaking.

An answer to the Judaistic objection, that Jesus, being Man, is inferior to the Angels, the Mediators of the Law.

The Manhood of Jesus is acknowledged by the Apostle (vv. 6-18); and it is shown, that the Jewish Scriptures testify to the elevation of Human Nature above the Angels, and that those Scriptures are fulfilled in Christ, Who is God from Everlasting, but was made Man, and suffered death as Man, in order to fulfil those Scriptures, and to reconcile God to Man, and to exalt Human Nature above the Nature of Angels, even to the Right Hand of God.

 — την οἰκουμένην την μέλλουσαν] the future world, the world which was looked for by the Hebrews, as the Time of the Messiah, and by them called מוֹשׁע ל μέλλων, אַוֹלָם הַבָּא, whence the Messiah was called by them πατήρ μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, the father of the world to come. Cp. below, vi. 5, δυνάμεις μέλλοντος αἰῶνος, and on ix. 11, and 1 Cor. xv. 24. Rom. viii. 21. 2 Pet. iii. 13.

This assertion of the Apostle is designed to meet the objection of the Jews, derived from the Old Testament, that God has subjected the World to Angels, whom He made to be Rulers of Provinces. See the passages in Dan. x. 13. 20, 21.

Be it so, replies the Apostle; but these are only particular lordships of this present world, which will soon have an end with all its kingdoms and dominions, to be succeeded by One Universal Kingdom, that of Christ, which (as the same Prophet testifies, Dan. ii. 44; iv. 34; vi. 26; vii. 14.27) will consume all other kingdoms, and never be destroyed.

6. \(\tau ls\)] some one—of great dignity and authority testified, earnestly and solemnly affirmed—whom you know and revere, and to whose words you will defer. On the accent, see Tisch.

6-8. Τί ἐστιν-ποδῶν αὐτοῦ] Verbatim from the Septuagin Version of Ps. viii. 3-7, already applied by St. Paul to the Messiah, I Cor. xv. 27; see the notes above on that Psalm.

The words καὶ κατέστησας—σου are omitted by B, D***, I, K, and many Cursives, and Griesb., Scholz, Tisch., Bleek, De Wette, Lünemann, Delitzsch: they are found in A, C, D*, E*, M, and Vulg., and Syriac, Arabic, and Ælhiopic Versions; and are admitted into the text, in brackets, by Lachmann.

7. Ἡλάττωσας αὐτὸν βραχύ τι] Thou madest him (man) to be only a little (mpn, meat) lower than the Angels (Elohim, ch. 5. 9. & 12. 2. ch. 10. 10, 14.

γάρ αὐτῷ, δί ον τὰ πάντα, καὶ δί οῦ τὰ πάντα, πολλούς υίους εἰς δόξαν ἀγαγόντα τὸν ἀρχηγὸν τῆς σωτηρίας αὐτῶν διὰ παθημάτων τελειῶσαι. 11 10 τε see i. 6). That is,-Although the heavens are so glorious, yet Thou didst make man to be more glorious still. That this is the meaning of the text, is evident from the Hebrew original. Cp. That this is the on Gen. i. 26-29; and the notes above on Ps. viii. 3-7.

The word Elohim, in this Psalm, is rendered by Angels in the Chaldee Paraphrase of the Psalms, as well as in the Septuagint Version-both of unquestionable authority with St. Paul's readers.

8. πάντα ὁπέταξας] Thou didst put all things without exception in subjection to Man. This prophecy, says the Apostle, finds its fulfilment in the Man Christ Jesus, and in Him alone. Cp. 1 Cor. xv. 27.

8, 9. Νου δε ούπω δρώμεν κ.τ.λ.] But at present we do not yet see all things made subject to him (Man)— $o\ddot{\sigma}\pi\omega$   $\delta\rho\tilde{\omega}\mu\epsilon\nu$ , we do not yet see this with our bodily eyes. But we  $\beta\lambda\epsilon\pi\sigma\mu\epsilon\nu$ 'In o ov, with the eye of faith we do look up to and do contemplate JESUS (the Man so called, as being our Saviour), Who had been made a little inferior to Angels, now having been crowned (ἐστεφανωμένον) with glory and honour on account of the suffering of the death which He endured, in order that by the free favour of God, and not by any merits of ours, He might taste death on behalf of every man.

On this sentence it is to be observed that  $\delta\rho\hat{\omega}\mu\epsilon\nu$  is contrasted with βλέπομεν, which expresses a more intent, earnest, spiritual contemplation than δρῶμεν. Cp. Acts iii. 4. 1 Cor. i. 26; iii. 10; viii. 9. Heb. x. 25. The words διὰ τὸ πάθημα ἐστεφανωμένον, crowned on account of suffering, are explained in the following verse by διὰ παθημάτων τελειῶσαι, to make perfect by means of suffering; and the argument is more fully expounded by the Apostle in Phil. ii. 5—11, which is the best comment on this passage. Cp. Winer, § 49, p. 355.

This assertion is designed by St. Paul to be a reply to the Jewish objection, that the Messiah was to be a Conqueror, and not to be a sufferer; and to refute their allegation, that those Hebrews who had passed from Judaism to Christianity, had deserted the worship of the Living God, for the religion of a Man who had died an accursed death.

He shows that the sufferings of Christ were purposely designed by God to be His path to Victory. The Cross of Christ was like the Triumphal Car and Royal Throne of His Exaltation; and it is that by which He saved and exalted our Nature; and when we look up to Jesus with the eye of faith, sitting at the Right Hand of God, we see ourselves, His members, crowned with honour and glory in Him our Head. See above on Eph. ii. 6. Col. ii. 13-15, and Chrys. and Primasius here, and the Vulgate, Arabic, and Æthiopic Versions, which render this passage correctly.

Fitly, therefore, does the Church appoint this Psalm (Ps. viii.) to be used on the Festival of the Ascension, when she praises God for the exaltation of Human Nature in the person of Christ; and in Ps. xxiv., used also on the same day, the Same Person is proclaimed to be the King of Glory and Lord of Hosts.

9. δπως—γεύσηται] in order that He might taste of death.

Cp. Winer, § 53, p. 410.

The phrase 'taste of death,' means more than to die; it signifies to taste the bitterness of death. See on Matt. xvi. 28. John viii. 52, which explain the sense here; which is, that Christ tasted the bitterness of death for every one individually, and not only for all collectively, in order that no one who believes in Him might taste it.

But on what word does &mws depend?

By some Expositors it has been made to depend on ἡλαττωμένον (Aug., and A Lapide).

By others it is made to depend on διὰ τὸ πάθημα τοῦ θανάτου. And this seems to be the true construction. Christ submitted to the suffering of death (τδ πάθημα τοῦ θανάτου) in order that by the grace of God He might taste death for every

The Apostle is replying to the objections of those who would not accept the doctrine of a suffering and dying Messiah.

In their opinion, the Messiah was to be a Conqueror, and one who was not to die, but to 'abide for ever.' See John xii. 34.

St. Paul states the reasons and the results of Christ's death. He suffered death in order that by the free grace and gift of God (cp. Rom. v. 15-20), and by no merit of men, He might taste death for every individual man; and in order that every one death for every individual man; and in order that every one who believes on Him might never taste of death. See John viii. 51, 52. Cp. John v. 24; vi. 40; xi. 26, and note above on Matt. xvi. 28. Luke ix. 27.

The sufferings of Christ, therefore, so far from being a stumbling-block to you Hebrews, ought to be regarded as a reason for great gratitude, for God's wonderful grace and favour to you, in freely providing a Delivery for you feet the hitter points of that freely providing a Deliverer for you from the bitter pains of that Death to which all of you were subject on account of sin; and of thankfulness and love to Christ, Who condescended to endure such shame and anguish for you, and to die upon the Cross, in order that you might live for evermore.

But do not imagine, therefore, that Christ is not a Con-queror, or that He does not abide for ever. Behold Him crowned with the Grown of Victory (ἐστεφανωμένον στεφάνω, not δια-δήματι: see on Rev. vi. 2; xix. 12), in that Nature of yours in which He suffered for you on the Cross. Behold Him crowned as Conqueror on account of  $(\delta i \dot{\alpha})$  those very sufferings, which He endured there, and by which He has procured peace and pardon, liberty and joy eternal for you. He conquers by the Cross, and enables you to conquer by it.

Thus, then, His sufferings (against which some of you make an objection) are seen to redound to His everlasting glory, and to the eternal happiness of every child of man. See Chrysostom's excellent comment here.

This divine declaration affords a complete refutation of all partial and exclusive notions concerning the efficacy of Christ's

The Apostle says that Christ tasted death for every one; for each individual man, ὑπὲρ παντός. He died (says Chrys. here) not only for those who believe, but for all the world. What, although some do not believe? Yet Christ has done His part. And so another ancient Expositor here. Christ is like a Physician who offers health to every one that will accept His spiritual medicines. They who hearken to Him receive them, and are saved. He proffers them to all, but the medicines profit those only who accept them., "Ita et Christus quantum pro se fuit, pro omnibus mortuus est, quanquam non prosit Ejus Passio nisi solummodò iis, qui in eam credere volunt." Primasius. On this doctrine of the Universality of the Redemption by Christ, see above on 1 Cor. viii. 11. Rom. viii. 30; below, 2 Pet. ii. 1.

Instead of χάριτι Θεοῦ, which is the reading of A, B, C, D, E, K, L, and also of R, and of most Cursive Manuscripts, some copies mentioned by Origen, and some Fathers, read χωρίς Θεοῦ (apart from God), a reading which was employed by the Nestorians in favour of their tenet of a double personality in Christ. See Œcumen. Caten. p. 395. Tisch. p. 559. Delitzsch, pp. 65, 66. That reading is probably only a marginal Gloss on ὑποτάξει αὐτῷ.  $\tau \dot{\alpha} \pi \dot{\alpha} \nu \tau \alpha$ , to harmonize it with 1 Cor. xv. 27, and was afterwards imported from the Margin into the Text.

10. ἔπρεπε—αὐτῷ] it was seemly for Him. πρέπει τῷ Θεῷ φυτεὐειν ἐν ψυχῆ τὰs ἀρετάs. Philo, i. p. 48.

— δι' οῦ] through Whom—God the Father Almighty. "Propler Patrem vivit Filius quod ex Patre Filius est; fons Pater Filii, radix Pater Filii est." Ambrose (de Fide iv. 5). "Pater de nullo Patre, Filius de Deo Patre Filius; et quod Filius est, propter Patrem est, et quod est, à Patre est." Augustine in Joann. Tract. 19. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. i. p. 65.

This text, in which διὰ is applied to God the Father, is a refutation of the heretical notion, derived by some from its application to the Son, in such passages as i. 2, that it argues inferiority in Him. See Basil, in Caten. p. 397.

— ἀγαγόντα—τελειῶσαι] to make perfect; τελειῶσαι = to consecrate as a Priest; see above on Levit. xxi. 10.

The sense of the word τελειωσαι, to make perfect, to conse-.crate, extends to the future, full, and final accomplishment of the γαρ αγιάζων και οι αγιαζόμενοι έξ ένος πάντες δι ην αιτίαν ουκ έπαισχύνεται άδελφούς αὐτούς καλείν 12 k λέγων, 'Απαγγελώ τὸ ὄνομά σου τοῖς άδελ- k Ps. 22. 23, 26. φοίς μου, έν μέσφ έκκλησίας ύμνήσω σε καὶ πάλιν, Έγω έσομαι πεφοίς μου, εν μεσφ εκκλησιας σμνησω το ποιθώς έπ' αὐτ $\hat{\varphi}$   $^{13}$  καὶ πάλιν, Ἰδοὺ έγὼ, καὶ τὰ παιδία, ἄ μοι ἔδωκεν  $^{11}$  καὶ  $^{18}$   $^{18}$   $^{18}$   $^{17}$   $^{18}$   $^{18}$   $^{18}$   $^{19}$   $^{1$ $^{14}$  "  $^*Επεὶ$  οὖν τὰ παιδία κεκοινώνηκεν αἴματος καὶ σαρκὸς, καὶ αὐτὸς παρα-  $^{\rm m \, Isa, \, 25. \, 8.}$ πλησίως μετέσχε τῶν αὐτῶν, ἴνα διὰ τοῦ θανάτου καταργήση τὸν τὸ κράτος John 1. 14. 1 Cor. 15. 54, 55. ἔχοντα τοῦ θανάτου, τουτέστι τὸν Διάβολον, 15 n καὶ ἀπαλλάξη τούτους, ὄσοι Phil. 2. 7. n Luke 1. 74. φόβω θανάτου διὰ παντὸς τοῦ ζῆν ἔνοχοι ἦσαν δουλείας.

16 Οὐ γὰρ δήπου ἀγγέλων ἐπιλαμβάνεται, ἀλλὰ σπέρματος ᾿Αβραὰμ ἐπιλαμ-number of the Elect. See the use of the verb in xi. 40. Christ | is indeed already perfected in His own Person (v. 9), but His members are not yet perfected (xi. 40). When the whole Number of the Elect shall be perfected, who, as Members of Christ, derive their τελείωσιs from the sufferings of Him Who is the Leader and Author of their salvation; and when they are all brought to glory,—then their Head will be persected in them.

His sufferings are effectually applied to the glorification of every every member of His mystical Body, at the dissolution of every one who falls asleep in Jesus; and they will be effectual toward the perfection of His own Mystical Body, even to the final con-summation of all things in the universal triumph of the Church glorified, which is His Spouse and Body.

Hence, therefore, the verse may be rendered thus:-

It was seemly for God, for Whom and through Whom are all things, having brought many sons to glory (by means of the Only-begotten Son), to make the Leader of their salvation perfect through sufferings.

11. "Ο τε γὰρ ἁγιάζων] For He that sanctifieth, and they that are being sanctified (present tense), are all from One, God

The Apostle here obviates a Jewish objection. They alleged that the Messiah would never die, but abide for ever. (John xii. The Apostle replies here, Do not be staggered by what I have said, that God should show such favour  $(\chi d\rho \nu)$ , see v. 9) to men, as to give up His own Son to die, even by the death of the Cross, for every man, and that the way He appointed for His and their perfection was by suffering. The reason of this is, that man, for whom Christ suffered, is also a son of God. God is our Father, and loves us as His Children, and desires that we should be sanctified, in order that we may be glorified.

We are all sons of God by nature, and God sent His Son to take our nature, and suffer in it, in order that we may become sons also by adoption and grace, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, that He may be the First-born among many brethren. See Gal. iv. 4—7. Rom. viii. 29. For both He that sanctifieth, and they who are being sanctified, are all of one Father—God. Chrys., Theodoret, Theophyl. Bp. Pearson, Art. i. p. 55.

The words evbs, of one, are to be explained from the preceding viol, sons. It was fitting that God, the universal Father, Who brought many sons to glory, should make their Leader,—their Elder Brother, His only beloved Son,—perfect through suffering.

He Who makes us holy, and they who are being made holy, are all sons of one and the same Father, and therefore are brethren; and He Who is holy must take their nature, which, by the Fall of the first Adam, was tainted by sin, in order that it may be consecrated to God, and so be glorified.

The word  $\dot{\alpha}\gamma_i\dot{\alpha}\zeta\omega_i$  as used here, is best explained by our Lord's own language in John xvii. 17—19; and see S. Cyril here in Catena, p. 401.

δι' ην αιτίαν-καλείν] He that sanctifieth, that is Christ, and they who are being sanctified, that is faithful Christians, are all of one, the same Father, God; for which cause Christ is not ashamed to call them brethren. But they are not all sons of God in the same manner as He is. The many sons are not on an equality with the One Son, the Captain of their salvation. Christ is the First-Born, the Only-Begotten Son: the many sons exist in a relation of dependence on His Sonship, as given unto Him, and as being sons of faith in Him; for we are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus (Gal. iii. 26), and we receive the right of Sonship from Him; for as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become sons of God (John i. 12). Cp. Gregory Nyssen here (in Catenâ, p. 406).
 12. 'Απαγγελῶ—σε] From Ps. xxii. 22.
 The Twenty-second Psalm is referred to the Messiah by some Jewish Expositors (see Stuart, p. 59; Welstein, p. 392; Schöltgen, p. 933), and by the whole Christian Church in ancient times, following the teaching of Christ, Who adopted the first words of it on the Cross. (Matt. xxvii. 46. Mark xv. 34.) Cp. Justin Martyr, Dialog. c. Tryph. c. 106, showing how this prophecy was fulfilled by Christ in the Gospel; and Hengstenberg on the Psalms, i. p. 362.

VOL. II.-PART III.

Hence the Church of England has wisely appointed it as one of the Proper Psalms for Good Friday.

13.  $\hat{\epsilon}\gamma\dot{\omega} - \delta \Theta\epsilon\delta s$  From Isa, viii. 17, 18. The Messiah is introduced as speaking, and saying that He will put His trust in the Lord; and this is an evidence of His Manhood. And He adds, that He and the Children, whom the Lord hath given Him, are for signs and wonders in Israel. And thus He speaks of a seed given to Him by God.

This progeny of Christ, made man, is said by Him to be "a sign and wonder in Israel," because the Jews were staggered by the manner of its generation, which was by the Incarnation, and Passion of Christ, from Whose side, pierced on the cross, the Church was formed, as Eve was from Adam sleeping in Paradise, and thus He is able to say, "Behold I and the Children which the Lord hath given Me."

14. κεκοινώνηκε — μετέσχε] Observe the change of tense. Since the children have communicated, and do communicate, in the same blood and flesh, He, therefore, at the time of His Incarnation, and by it, took part in the same. Cp. Winer, § 40, Elz. has σαρκός και αίματος, but the reading in the text is authorized by A, B, C, D, E, M, and received by Gricsb., Lachm., Bengel, Tisch., Lünemann. Perhaps the Apostle studiously placed alματος first, with reference to the blood-shedding of Christ, the true Paschal Lamb, upon the cross, the Victim typified by all the sacrifices of the Law.

— παραπλησίωs] in like manner, and coincidently. The word παραπλήσιος represents what lies by the side of. Human Nature was like the dead child on which Elisha laid himself, and put his mouth, eyes, and hands upon its mouth, eyes, and hands, and stretched himself upon it, and it waxed warm and revived (2 Kings iv. 34). So Christ stretched Himself upon Human Nature, and it revived; and He did this not only by way of application and coincidence, but by actual participation (μετέσχε τῶν αὐτῶν). His Blood : Body will revive ours. His Blood flows in our veins, and quickens us. His

Hence the Fathers use this passage against the Doceta, who imagined that Christ's Body was only a phantom. See Chrys.

and Theophyl. here.

The Angels are like men, and appear in human form (see Acts i. 10); but Christ took really and substantially our human flesh and blood; and by our union with the Divine Logos we are become heritors of Immortality. Cp. S. Cyril and S. Athanasius here, pp. 408-413.
15. 8501 as many as. Observe 8501, declaring the universality the Redemption effected by the death of Christ. See v. 9.

— ἔνοχοι-δουλείαs] captives of bondage; held by its grasp.

There is a paronomasia between μετέσχε and ἔνοχοι. He became μέτοχος, that we might cease to be ἔνοχοι. See on 1 Cor.

taile μετοχύς, that we hight cease to the erroxus. See th I Cor. xi. 27, and Gal. v. 1,  $\mu\eta \zeta \nu\gamma\varphi$  δουλείας ενέχεσθε.

16. Οὐ γὰρ δήπου ἀγγέλων ἐπιλαμβάνεται] For, I trow, He is not laying hold of Angels, in order to raise up and help them by His death. No; they are not subject to bondage, they are not under the dominion of the Devil. But man was. They have no weaknesses and passions as man has. Christ taketh hold of us in our frailties, and He is made like to us in our weakness, in order that He may feel with us, and save us.

See the full exposition in Bp. Andrewes' Sermons, i. pp.

Δήπου, only found here in New Testament, and never in LXX, I trow, I wot, and you allow, equivalent to Latin 'opinor.' See Hartung, i. p. 285. Linemann, p. 87. Delitz. p. 87. Also, δήποτε is used only once in N. T., John v. 4.

— ἀλλὰ—ἐπιλαμβάνεται] but He is laying hold of Mankind o Phil. 2. 7, 8. ch. 4. 15, 16. & 5. 1, 2.

p ch. 4. 15, 16. a Rom. 15. 8. Phil. 3, 14. ch. 4, 14, 15. & 6, 20. & 8, 1 βάνεται. 17 ο Θθεν ὤφειλε κατὰ πάντα τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς ὁμοιωθῆναι, ἵνα ἐλεήμων γένηται καὶ πιστὸς ἀρχιερεὺς τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν εἰς τὸ ἱλάσκεσθαι τὰς ἁμαρτίας τοῦ λαοῦ. 18 ρ Ἐν ῷ γὰρ πέπονθεν αὐτὸς πειρασθεὶς δύναται τοῖς πειραζομένοις βοηθήσαι.

 $\frac{\kappa}{2}$  6.11.  $\frac{8}{10}$  21. III.  $\frac{1}{2}$   $\frac{a}{0}$   $\theta$ εν,  $\frac{a}{0}$  δελφοὶ αγιοι, κλήσεως ἐπουρανίου μέτοχοι, κατανοήσατε τὸν by the hand, in order to help it and lift it up from the ground, and to raise it from a state of bondage and death, to life and

The word ἐπιλαμβάνεται is best explained by its use below in chap. viii. 9,  $\ell\pi\iota\lambda\alpha\beta$ ομένου μου τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῶν, derived from the Septuagint, Jer. xxxi. 32; cp. Sirac. iv. 2; and by its use in the Gospels, where it is employed to express the action of our Lord in stretching out His hand to heal the sick and blind. Matt. xiv. 31. Mark viii. 23. Luke ix. 47; xiv. 4.

So Christ comes, and is taking hold of Human Nature, as it were, by the hand, and delivers it out of the grasp of the Devil, and assists and raises it up from bondage, blindness, disease, and death. See Isa. xlii. 6, 7; and below on iii. 5.

This sense of ἐπιλαμβάνεται is most in harmony with the reasoning of the Apostle. Christ is not taking hold of Angels, in order to succour them, but He is ever taking hold (present tense) of men; and in order that He may do this, it was requisite that He should be made like to them in all things.

There is also another cognate and derivative meaning in ἐπιλαμβάνομαι, which was probably in the mind of the Apostle.

This word represents the office and act of the Goël, or next of kin (ἀγχιστευs, Ruth iii. 12), who, by taking hold of a family by proximity of relationship ('attingens consanguinitate'), did the work of a redeemer of property for the maintenance of its inheritance. See Ruth iv. 14.

Christ is our Goël, Redeemer, by becoming next of kin to us all by His Incarnation.

A Jewish Commentator, in expounding Ps. lx. 9, says, "Here is meant that mighty Goël, Who is to come of the seed of David." Schöttgen.

σπέρματος 'Αβραάμ] the seed of Abraham. A double act of Christ's love is thus implied,-

(1) That He was made Man, (2) That He was made under the Law, and so redeemed us from the curse of the Law. See this explained, Gal. iv. 4, where St. Paul observes, that Christ was made man, and also made under the Law; i.e. that He takes hold of the seed of Abraham, both in its human infirmity and legal obligations, in order to assist and deliver it from both.

Besides this, doubtless, the Apostle, in using the word Abraham, refers to the promise of God to Abraham, that in him all Nations should be blessed. (Gen. xxii. 18.)

St. Paul says, He takes hold of the seed of Abraham, rather than the seed of man, in order to remind them of the promise made to Abraham. (Theodoret.)

Thus these words have also a large and comprehensive sense. Christ takes hold of all who take hold of the promise by faith. And thus St. Paul himself expounds the words Abraham's seed, for he says "to the Galatians, so doing, that though they were heathen men, as we be, yet that they are Abraham's seed, and should be blessed together with him." See Bp. Andrewes' Sermons, i. p. 31.

The seed of Abraham. St. Paul does not determine whether he uses this term here in a spiritual or a literal sense. Either sense will suit his purpose. He leaves it to the readers to choose. The present tense (ἐπιλαμβάνεται) confirms the spiritual sense; and the Christian reader will interpret the words 'seed of Abraham' to mean, all those of every Nation who are Children of Abraham's faith. See Gal. iii. 7-9. 29. Rom. iv. 12-18; xi. 16. Christ is ever helping them all.

St. Paul's Jewish readers would understand 'seed of Abraham' in a literal sense; but since Abraham and his seed are members of the human family, this sense would not weaken the force of the Apostle's argument.

It is a groundless supposition of some, that this expression must be limited to the literal Israel; and that therefore this Epistle could not have been written by St. Paul.

17. δμοιωθηναι] to be made like, not only in His humanity, but in its weaknesses and sorrows, -poverty, pain, hunger, thirst, tears, and death. An answer to the Jews, who objected to the sufferings of Jesus as inconsistent with the office of the Messiah.

- πιστδς άρχιερεύς] a faithful High Priest. See Clem. Rom. i. 58, διὰ τοῦ προστάτου καὶ ἀρχιερέως ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ ₹ριστοῦ.

- iλάσκεσθαι τὰς ἀμαρτίας] to cover the sins. Cp. the use of έξιλάσκομαι, Dan. ix. 24. 1 Sam. iii. 14. Sirach iii. 3. 29; xx. 28; xxviii. 5; xxxiv. 19, LXX.

This use of the word iλάσκεσθαι is derived from the Septuagint, where it is equivalent to the Hebrew tip (kipper), 'to cover.' See Exod. xxxii. 29. Levit. iv. 20.

In Classical Writers the word Ιλάσκεσθαι signifies, 'to propitiate a person.' But it is remarkable, that the writers of Holy Scripture never use this word in that sense, as applied to God. Neither in the Septuagint, nor in the New Testament, do we find the expression ίλάσκεσθαι Θεόν, to propitiate God, or ίλάσκεσθαι οργην Θεοῦ. Cp. Delitzsch, p. 94.

This reserve of Scripture, as to this word iλάσκεσθαι, may, perhaps, be designed to be a silent refutation of the notion of Heathens, and of some among the Jews, that they were able to propitiate God by expiatory sacrifices offered by themselves; a notion expressly contradicted in Scripture. (Ps. xlix. 7, 8. Heb. And it may be intended to be instrumental in teaching the true doctrine, that it is not man who can propitiate God; but it is God Himself Who provides an offering for the appearing of His own wrath. It is 'God in Christ' Who reconciles the World to Himself. See 2 Cor. v. 18, 19. It was God, Who set forth for Himself (προύθετο) an iλαστήριον, or propiliation, in Christ. Pages 318 25. Co. Col. is 90. This is 16. Christ. Rom. iii. 25. Cp. Col. i. 20. Eph. ii. 16.

God is said in Scripture ίλασθηναι, to be merciful to man (see Luke xviii. 13); and Christ is called an ἱλαστήριον, and an ίλασμός περί ἄμαρτιῶν (1 John ii. 2; iv. 10); and Christ, as our High Priest, is said ἱλάσκεσθαι ἄμαρτίαs here; but it is of God's own mere mercy towards us, that He is propitious to us; and it is of His infinite love, that He has provided a propitiation for Himself; that He reconciles the World to Himself in Christ, His only-begotten Son, in Whom He is well pleased. See x. 4, 5. The work of the Atonement is from the free Grace of God.

18. 'Ev  $\tilde{\phi}$   $\gamma \tilde{\alpha} \rho$   $m \tilde{\epsilon} \pi o \nu \theta e \nu$ ] For in that He hath suffered, He Himself having been tempted, is able to succour them that are being tempted. Here is another reply to the Jewish objection against a suffering Messiah. In that  $(\tilde{\epsilon} \nu \tilde{\phi})$  He hath suffered, He, having Himself been tempted, is able (observe  $\delta \dot{\nu} \nu \alpha \tau \alpha \iota$ ) to help those who are in temptation. His sufferings are a source to Him of power. The word temptation is of large and complete hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning, and includes all trials, whether by affliction hensive meaning are supplied to the supplied of the or otherwise. (Cp. Luke xxii. 28. James i. 2. 22.) Therefore, far from being ashamed of Christ's sufferings, we affirm rather that He has gained new powers by suffering. By His Passion He has acquired Compassion. We are sure that He, Who suffered so much, feels with us, and for us, in our sufferings. See Chrys. here. On the sense of  $\hat{\epsilon}\nu$   $\hat{\phi}$ , quaterus, see Rom. viii. 3; below, vi. 17. And on Christ's capacity of acquiring knowledge and power, see below, v. 8.

CH. III. 1. "Οθεν] Whence -. From this inferential particle, used here and in other places of this Epistle (e.g. ii. 17; viii. 3), and never in the Epistles inscribed with St. Paul's name, an argument has been derived, that this Epistle was not written by St. Paul. It is remarkable that it is so used in a speech of St. Paul (Acts xxvi. 19). It is also used once by St. John (1 John ii. 18), and by no other writer of the New Testament.

- ἀδελφοί ἄγιοι] holy brethren. An address never used by St. Paul in any of his Epistles. But it would be unreasonable to allege this as an argument against the Pauline origin of this Epistle. It is rather an evidence in confirmation of the opinion that this Epistle is addressed to a peculiar class, viz. those who dwell in the Holy City (Matt. iv. 5; xxvii. 53), and came of the holy seed (Rom. xi. 16), separated, from ancient times, by special consecration as a holy people to God. Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 5. 9.
St. Paul himself calls those of Jerusalem αγίους, κατ' έξοχην, in 1 Cor. xvi. 1. 15. 2 Cor. viii. 4; ix. 1. Rom. xv. 31. So that this expression is quite in harmony with his language.

- κλήσεως επουρανίου μετοχοί] partakers of the heavenly ing; God called our Fathers by the Prophets, and now calls us by His own Son. See i. l. It is one and the same Calling, from the same God, speaking from Heaven, and inviting us to — τὸν ἀπόστολον] the Apostle, being sent of God as Moses was. (Exod. iii. 10—15.) Christ is called an Apostle, because the Father sent Him; and as the Father sent Him, so sent He the Twelve. (John xx. 21.) The Heavenly Householder first ἀποστολον καὶ ἀρχιερέα τῆς ὁμολογίας ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν, <sup>2 6</sup> πιστὸν ὄντα τῷ ποι- 6 Ναμ. 12.7. ήσαντι αὐτὸν, ὡς καὶ Μωϋσῆς ἐν ὅλω τῷ οἴκω αὐτοῦ.

ταντι αὐτὸν, ὡς και Μωυσης εν ολω τω οικω αυτου. <sup>3 °</sup> Πλείονος γὰρ οὖτος δόξης παρὰ Μωϋσῆν ἠξίωται, καθ' ὄσον πλείονα τιμὴν <sup>c Zech. 6. 12. <sup>Matt. 16. 18.</sup> <sup>2 Cor. 5. 17.</sup></sup> έχει τοῦ οἴκου ὁ κατασκευάσας αὐτόν.

4 d Πας γαρ οἶκος κατασκευάζεται ὑπὸ τινός ο δὲ πάντα κατασκευάσας, Θεός, d Eph. 2. 10.

5 ° Καὶ Μωϋσῆς μὲν πιστὸς ἐν ὅλω τῷ οἴκω αὐτοῦ ὡς θεράπων, εἰς μαρτύριον e Deut. 18. 15, 13 τῶν λαληθησομένων, 6 t Χριστὸς δὲ ὡς υίὸς ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ, οὖ οἶκός ἐσμεν fch. 1. 2. Matt. 24. 13. ήμεῖς, ἐάνπερ τὴν παρρησίαν καὶ τὸ καύχημα τῆς ἐλπίδος μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν  $\frac{2 \text{ Cor. 6. 16.}}{\text{Eph. 20. 35.}}$  κατάσχωμεν.

 $^{7}$  ε Διὸ, καθὼς λέγει τὸ  $^{7}$  Μνεῦμα τὸ ἄγιον, Σήμερον ἐὰν τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ  $^{9}$  ε 95.7. γε 15. & 4.7.  $^{8}$  h μὴ σκληρύνητε τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν, ὡς ἐν τῷ παραπι-  $^{1}$  h Exod. 17.2. Num. 20. 13.

sent His Servants the Prophets, but last of all He sent His own Son. (Matt. xxi. 33. 37.) Cp. John iii. 34; v. 36; vi. 29. 57; vii. 29. 1 John iv. 10. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. i. p. 66.

Cp. Justin Martyr, Apol. i. 12, ό ημέτερος διδάσκαλος, καl τοῦ πατρὸς πάντων καl δεσπότου υίὸς καl ἀπόστολος, Ίησοῦς Χριστός.

Justin Martyr says also, Apol. i. 63, "The Word of God is His Son, and He is also called an Angel or Messenger (ἄγγελος), or Apostle, for He announces (ἀπαγγέλλει) whatever we need to know; and He is sent (ἀποστέλλεται) to declare whatsoever things are announced, as He Himself says (to His Apostles), He that despiseth Me, despiseth Him that sent Me (Luke x. 16)."

Christ is the Son of God, and His Apostle. He was sent as God's Apostle, but He pre-existed as the First-begotten Logos of God, and as God, λόγος πρωτότοκος Δυ τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ Θεὸς ὑπάρχει.

- ἀρχιερέα] High Priest. So the Messiah is named, Ps.
 cx. 4; and He was typified by the High Priest under the Law.
 Thus St. Paul points to Christ as uniting the office of Moses and Aaron in His own Person.

This phrase supplies the clue to the order and treatment of the subject;

He first compares Christ with Moses, and proves His superiority to him (iii. 3); then he contrasts the Priesthood of Christ with that of Aaron, and shows its pre-eminence (iv. 14).

—  $\tau \hat{\eta} s \ \delta \mu o \lambda o \gamma (as \ \hat{\eta} \mu \hat{\omega} v)$  of our Christian profession as distinguished from Judaism (iv. 14; x. 23. 1 Tim. vi. 12. Rom. x. 9). So Philo (i. 654) calls the Divine Logos, τον μέγαν ἀρχιερέα τῆς δμολογίας, if the text be genuine there. See Mangey and Bleek.

2. τῷ ποιήσαντι] to Him Who constituted Him. See I Sam. xii. 6, and on Mark iii. 14, ἐποίησε δώδεκα, and cp. Acts ii. 36, Κύριον καὶ Χριστὸν αὐτὸν δ Θεὸς ἐποίησε. Chrys., Theodoret, Theoph., and the authorities in Suicer, Thesaur. v. ποιέω, ii.

The interpretation, "to Him Who created Him," has less authority (though it is applied by some of the Fathers, as Athanasius and others, in Cat. pp. 437, 438, to the human generation of the Son), and is not consistent with the argument, and would make the Apostle speak a language which is not in harmony with that of Scripture, and was perverted by the Arians to serve their purpose, whence some persons had scruples as to the genuineness of the Epistle. See Philastr. Hæres. 89, p. 84, ed. Oehler.

— ως και Μωϋσης] See Clem. Rom. i. 17 and 43, who has δλφ in both places; omitted by B, and formerly by Tisch., but restored in his last Edition, 1858.

Οἶκος αὐτοῦ is not the house of Moses, but of God. See Numb. xii. 7, " My servant Moses is faithful in all Mine house." Cp. Acts vii. 38. And the word αὐτοῦ intimates that Moses himself was in God's house, and not in his own house; and that He, in whose house Moses was as a steward, was He Who constituted Jesus to be a Priest and Apostle.

3. Πλείονος—αὐτόν] This Jesus has been deemed by God to be worthy of greater honour than Moses, insomuch, or in proportion as, he who built a house has more honour than the house

There is, therefore, as much difference between Moses and Christ has been deemed worthy of greater honour by God, for God made the worlds by Christ (i. 2; cp. ii. 5—8).

Elz. has πλείονος γὰρ δόξης, but the reading in the text is that of the best MSS.

4. Πας γαρ οίκος] For every house—and therefore that house in which Moses was a faithful steward,—is builded by some one, and does not build itself; but the Person Who builded all things (as you know from the writings of Moses, Gen. i. 1) is God.

It is God who made all things, He is Lord of all; but He made them by His own Son, co-equal and co-eternal with Himself; whom He set over the House He had builded, not as a servant, but as a Son. Cp. Delitzsch here, p. 110. These words, "He that built all things is (not man, but) God," were regarded by the Fathers (Theodoret and others) as assertory of Christ's Godhead. And there is good ground for this assertion. For in v. 3 Christ is represented as the Builder of the House.

Elz. has  $\tau \dot{\alpha} \pi \dot{\alpha} \nu \tau \alpha$ , but  $\pi \dot{\alpha} \nu \tau \alpha = all \ things$ , is the true

The word κατασκευάζω, here used, means something more than 'build;' it is equivalent to construo, instruo, 'to build and to furnish,' 'adornare, apparare,' with σκεύη. Cp. Luke i. 17, λαδυ κατεσκευασμένου, 'populum præparatum,' It is used by the LXX for the Hebrew πψυ (asah), to make (Numb. xxi. 27. 2 Chron. xxxii. 5. Prov. xxiii. 5), and is ex-

(Numb. xxi. 27. 2 Chron. xxxii. 5. Prov. xxiii. 5), and is explained by δημιουργφ in Phavorinus. Cp. below, ix. 2, σκηνη γάρ κατεσκευάσθη ή πρώτη (ix. 6; xi. 7).

5. θεράπων] a servant. Exod. xiv. 31. Josh. i. 1; viii. 31. Barnabas (Epist. 14): Μωσής θεράπων &ν έλαβε (τὰς πλάκας)· αὐτὸς δὲ ὁ Κύριος ἡμῖν έδωκεν είναι εἰς λαὸν κληρονομίας δι. ήμᾶς ὑπομείνας [θάνατον], ἐφανερώθη δὲ ΐνα.... τὰς ήδη δεδαπανημένας ἡμῶν καρδίας τῷ θανάτω, καὶ παραδεδομένας τῆ τῆς πλάνως ἀνομία. λυτοωσάμενος ἐκ τοῦ σκότους διάθηται ἐν ἡμῖν πλάνης ἀνομία, λυτρωσάμενος ἐκ τοῦ σκότους διάθηται ἐν ἡμῖν διαθήκην λόγφ. And the author then cites Isa. xlii. 6, 7; lxi. 1, 2, which illustrates the word ἐπιλαμβάνεται in ii. 16.

- λαληθησομένων] to be spoken by Christ. See Deut. xviii. 15. ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ] over His House—the House of God, see v. 2; but also the House of Christ, as its Builder, v. 3.

 - ἐἀνπερ] if that is (περ in ἐάνπερ gives emphasis to the hypothesis, and intimates that it involves a sine qua non) we hold fast our confidence, and the matter of our glorying, stedfast unto the end. Their need of constancy is emphatically declared by the repetition of this proviso, v. 14, εdνπερ—κατάσχωμεν.

— το καύχημα] the subject-matter of the glorying of our hope, which does not faint in present afflictions, but looks forward πορέ, which does not not the present attentions, our locus forward to the future bliss. Rom. viii. 24. Cp. vi. 11; x. 35.

— μέχρι τέλουν βεβαίαν] Omitted by Tisch. and others on the authority of B. But the words are in A, C, D, E, K, L, M, and are retained by Lachmann.

7-11.] Ps. xcv. 7-11, from the LXX. Observe here the direct assertion of the Apostle, that the Psalms were spoken by the Holy Ghost (cp. Acts i. 16); as was the belief of the Jews, a belief sanctioned by Christ Himself. Matt. xxii. 43.

This Psalm was, probably, made for, and sung at, the Feast of Tabernacles,—the annual Commenoration of the Sojourning in the Wilderness. The Rest of Canaan, after that wandering in the Arabian Desert already past, was typical and suggestive of the future rest, that of Heaven, after our mortal pilgrimage in the Wilderness of this World; see the notes above on that Psalm.

ἐἀν — ἀκούσητε] if ye shall have heard; 'si audieritis,' Vulg. The agrist after ἐἀν generally has the force of the futurum exactum. See Winer, § 41, p. 262.

This is important to observe, because the Apostle's warning is to those who have been permitted to hear, and are in danger of falling away; and his main design is to exhort to constancy and perseverance to the end. See iii. 6. 12. 14; iv. 14; vi. 6.

8. ἐν τῷ παραπικρασμῷ] in the contention, מַרִיבָה (meribah), Exod. xvii. 7. παραπικραίνω in the LXX = κτίνο (hikeis), to provoke, exacerbate; from root Dry (kaas), angry, provoked, irritated. Jer. xxxii. 29. Hence it has also the rendering of מֵרָר (marad), to rebel, Ezek. ii. 3, and is connected with יחָר (meri), rebellion, Ezek. ii. 5-8; and is interpreted by παροργίζω by 3 D 2 κρασμώ, κατά την ήμέραν του πειρασμού έν τη έρήμω, 9 ου έπείρασαν οί πατέρες ύμων έν δοκιμασία, καὶ είδον τὰ έργα μου τεσσαράκοντα έτη 10 διὸ προσώχθισα τῆ γενεᾶ ταύτη, καὶ εἶπον, 'Αεὶ πλανωνται τῆ καρδία, αὐτοὶ δὲ οὐκ ἔγνωσαν τὰς ὁδούς μου, 11 ἱώς ώμοσα έν τη όργη μου, εί είσελεύσονται είς την κατάπαυσίν μου.

i Num. 14. 21. Deut. 1. 34.

k ch. 10. 24. Rom. 7, 11.

l ver. 6. ch. 4. 14.

12 Βλέπετε, ἀδελφοὶ, μήποτε ἔσται ἔν τινι ὑμῶν καρδία πονηρὰ ἀπιστίας ἐν τῷ ἀποστῆναι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ ζῶντος 13 κ ἀλλὰ παρακαλεῖτε έαυτοὺς καθ' έκάστην ήμέραν, ἄχρις οδ τὸ σήμερον καλείται, ἵνα μὴ σκληρυνθῆ ἐξ ὑμῶν τις ἀπάτη ch. 4. 14. 18. Της άμαρτίας· 14 ΄ μετοχοι γαρ του Αριοτού γερουστών Εν τῷ λέγεσθαι, Σήμεm ver. 7.
n Num. 14. 4, 11, ὑποστάσεως μέχρι τέλους βεβαίαν κατάσχωμεν. 15 m' Εν τῷ λέγεσθαι, Σήμετης άμαρτίας 14 1 μέτοχοι γάρ τοῦ Χριστοῦ γεγόναμεν, ἐάνπερ την άρχην της  $^{18}$  νιμι. 13. 4, 11, υποστάσεως μέχρι τελους βεβαιαν κατασχωμεν.  $^{18}$  Εν τω λεγεσθαί, 2ημε-24, 30. Deut. 1. 36. ο Num. 14. 22, 37. ρον, έὰν τῆς φωνῆς αὐτοῦ ἀκούσητε, μὴ σκληρύνητε τὰς καρδίας κε 26. 65.  $^{16}$   $^{16}$   $^{16}$   $^{16}$   $^{16}$   $^{16}$   $^{16}$   $^{16}$   $^{16}$   $^{16}$  άκούσαντες παρεπίκραναν; άλλ' οὐ πάντες οἱ ἐξελθόντες ἐξ Αἰγύπτου διὰ Μωϋσέως; 17 ° Τίσι δὲ προσώχ-

9. ἐπείρασαν they tempted Me. Πειρασμός = Hebr. που (massah). Exod. xvii. 7. Deut. vi. 16; ix. 22.

Elz. adds με, against the best authorities, and has εδοκίμασαν με. But A, B, C, D, D*, have εν δοκιμασία, and so Lachm., Tisch., De Wette, Bleek, Lünemaun.

— τεσσαράκοντα ετη] Forty Years,—a term which gives a remarkable significance and propriety to this warning as applied here by the Apostle to the Jews of his own age.

For, the time of probation of Jerusalem and of the Jewish Nation, between the Crucifixion of Christ and the Taking of Jerusalem by the Romans, lasted just Forty Years. See Euseb. iii. 7; and above, at the end of the Chronological Synopsis prefixed to the Acts, p. 29.

That term of trial was very near its expiration, when this

That term of that was very near its expiration, when this solemn warning was spoken by St. Paul. Cp. below on v. 10.

10. προσώχθισα] I was offended with. Literally, 'I stumbled at;' as a ship impinging, πρὸς ὕχθη, on a sand-bank. προσέκοψα (Hesych.), προσέκρουσα (Suid.); hence προσοχθίζω is a word frequent in the LXX. Cp. Valck. p. 465.

— ταύτη] this. So A, B, D*, M, and Bengel, Böhme, Griesh.

Lachm., Bleek, De Wette, Tisch., Lün. This reading illustrates what has been said on the term of Forty Years on v. 9. He might well say. This generation; for the Jews, in the forty years before the destruction of Jerusalem, were identifying themselves by their sins with the generation that perished for disobedience in the Wilderness; and thus it was true, according to our Lord's prophecy, that "all these things would come on this generation," and that "this generation should not pass away till all would be fulfilled." Matt. xxiii. 36; xxiv. 34. Elz. has ἐκείνη.

11. &s] so that. Winer, § 53, p. 410.

— εἰ εἰσελεύσονται] if they shall enter in; i.e. they shall not enter in; an elliptical expression or aposiopesis of indignation, in which є = Hebr. אַנ (im). Winer, § 53, p. 444. See on Mark viii. 12. Cp. 1 Sam. iii. 17; xiv. 45. 2 Sam. xi. 11.

- την κατάπαυσίν μου] My Rest, the Rest of God, the Everlasting Rest of Heaven.

There are three Rests,-

(1) The Rest of the Sabbath, on which God rested from His works

God does not here speak of that Rest, for that Rest was now past (see iv. 4), and He is here speaking of some future Rest.

(2) The Rest of Canaan, into which Joshua brought the people after their wanderings in the Wilderness.

God is not speaking of that Rest here, for it also was past when David wrote, by whom God here speaks. (See iv. 8.)

(3) The future and never-ending Rest of heaven, which was typified by the two former Rests, and is properly God's Rest, and is described by Him as "My Rest,"—the Rest of Him Who is Everlasting. This is the κατάπαυσις (Resting), of which God is speaking here. Theophyl.

12. Θεοῦ ζῶντος] the Living God. He who falls away from Christ, does not fall away, as some of you perhaps may imagine, and as your Jewish fellow-countrymen blasphemously affirm, from a dead man, but from the Living God.

13. ἐαυτούs] one another. 1 Thess, v. 13. 1 Cor. vi. 7. Col.

— ἄχρις οὖ τὸ σήμερον καλεῖται] so long as the 'to-day' (observe the article), mentioned by God in the Psalm, is still being named or mentioned: observe the present tense; that is, so long as that to-day lasts; and God's voice is still speaking to you, and you are yet able to hear it. καλείται = Hebr. אָקָרָא (nikra).

14. μέτοχοι γάρ τ. Χ. γ.] for we have been made and are partakers of Christ in reality, only, that is to say, if we hold the beginning of our assurance firm unto the end.

The order of the words in the text is that of the majority of the best MSS., including B. (See Mai's Table of Errata, p. 503.) Elz. has μ. γ. γ. τ. Χ. Οπ μέτοχοι Χριστοῦ, cp. vi. 4.

- ἐάνπερ] See v. 6.

- ὑποστάσεωs] firm expectation, trust, confidence, reliance. See Ps. xxxviii. 7, ἡ ὑπόστασίς μου ἔν σοι. Ruth i. 12. Ezek. xix. 5, LXX: and below, xi. 1; and Wetstein on 2 Cor. ix. 4.

15. Ἐν τῷ λέγεσθαι] In its being now said by God (in that solemn warning uttered by Him, which I have quoted and will now repeat, on account of its awful importance, and which I, who now speak to you by His command, will apply to you), To-day if ye shall have heard His voice (see on v. 7), harden not your hearts, as in the provocation.

For, who were they, that, when they heard, provoked God? Yea verily (ἀλλὰ), was it not even all who came out of Egypt by Moses? that is, the main body of those who came forth in the Exodus, provoked God. For, only two remained loyal, and did not provoke the Lord. See Numb. xiv. 1-10. 26-39.

This is doubtless the true rendering of this passage. Tives is interrogative, who? and not indefinite, as in the Vulgate, which has 'quidam.' And 'Aλλ' οὐ—Μωϋσέωs is also interrogative, and not affirmative. Cp. Bengel and Delitz. p. 127.

From the sentence thus pointed and interpreted, the Apostle's argument is clear, that no multitude of numbers will protect the Jews, and others with them, who reject Christ, from God's chastisements for their sin. Their own History shows this. All who heard Him speak in the Wilderness provoked Him; and all who provoked Him fell in the wilderness, and failed of His Rest.

On this passage it is to be observed, that the  $\gamma \lambda \rho$  (for) in 16, introduces the question put by the Apostle. Such a position of yap is easily explained from the expediency of not breaking up the long clause (σήμερον-παραπικρασμώ); and the conjunction yap is often employed to give force and sharpness to interrogations, as here. Matt. xxvii. 23. John vii. 41. Acts viii. 31; xix. 35. 1 Cor. xi. 22. Lünemann, p. 107. Winer, § 53,

p. 396. Delitz. p. 129.

The ἀλλὰ, but, yea verily (cp. 1 Cor. iv. 3. 2 Cor. vii. 11), gives great life to the second question, as much as to say, whatever you might have thought to be probable, and notwithstanding God's love (shown by His warnings and promises, miracles and revelations) to your fathers; and notwithstanding their vast numbers, which you might imagine would have saved them, yet nevertheless I ask of you, "Did not all that vast multitude of 600,000 persons, who were led out of Egypt by the ministry of Moses, provoke God? And with whom was He wroth? Whom did He consume? Whom did He exclude from His rest in Canaan? Was it not even that immense multitude, who came out of Egypt under the guidance of that holy Leader, Moses? And why were they consumed in the Wilderness, and excluded from Canaan? Was it not even for their unbelief?"

Here then,—in the history of your fathers,—is a fearful warning for yourselves, as to the dreadful consequences of provoking and disobeying Christ, Who is far greater than Moses. Here is a solemn admonition to you, that severer chastisements are now hanging over Jerusalem for rejecting Him, than were ever inflicted on your forefathers for rebelling against Moses. Cp.

1 Cor. x. 2-5, 10-12.

As to the interpretation of this passage as thus expounded, see Theodoret and Chrysostom, and the Syriac, and (in part) the Arabic Version here.

θισε τεσσαράκοντα έτη; οὐχὶ τοῖς άμαρτήσασιν, ὧν τὰ κῶλα ἔπεσεν ἐν τῆ έρήμω; 18 P Τίσι δὲ ὤμοσε μὴ εἰσελεύσεσθαι εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσιν αὐτοῦ, εἰ μὴ p Num. 14. 30. τοις απειθήσασι;

19 Καὶ βλέπομεν, ότι οὐκ ήδυνήθησαν εἰσελθεῖν δι' ἀπιστίαν.

ΙΥ. Ι Φοβηθώμεν οὖν, μή ποτε καταλειπομένης ἐπαγγελίας εἰσελθεῖν εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσιν αὐτοῦ, δοκῆ τις έξ ὑμῶν ὑστερηκέναι. 2 Καὶ γάρ ἐσμεν εὐηγγελισμένοι, καθάπερ κάκεινοι άλλ' οὐκ ἀφέλησεν ὁ λόγος τῆς ἀκοῆς ἐκείνους μὴ συγκεκραμένους τῆ πίστει τοῖς ἀκούσασιν. <sup>3 a</sup> Εἰσερχόμεθα γὰρ εἰς τὴν κατά- a Pa. 95. 11. παυσιν οἱ πιστεύσαντες, καθώς εἴρηκεν, 'Ως ὤμοσα ἐν τῆ ὀργῆ μου, εἰ εἰσελεύσονται εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου, καίτοι τῶν ἔργων ἀπὸ κατα- b Gen. 2. 2. βολης κόσμου γενηθέντων. 4 b Εἴρηκε γάρ που περὶ τῆς ἑβδόμης οὕτω, Καὶ & 31. 17.

17. ὧν τὰ κῶλα] Cp. Numb. xiv. 29, ἐν τῆ ἐρήμφ ταύτη πεσείται τὰ κῶλα ὑμῶν, and see 1 Cor. x. 8.

CH. IV. 1. κατάπαυσιν αὐτοῦ] His Rest, the Rest of God. The Apostle grounds an important argument on the Pronoun The Rest of God cannot be a mere earthly temporal Rest; it cannot be the Rest of Canaan. It must be a heavenly and Eternal Rest.

- μη-δοκή τις έξ ύμων ύστερηκέναι] lest any of you should appear to have failed, or fallen short, of it. He uses the word δοκη, appear, because no one could as yet predicate, what the final condition of any of them would be. The fact of their failure or attainment would not be determined and declared till the day of doom. He says, let us fear, lest any of you should seem to have fallen short of it; for, he is about to speak of the great difference between those who refuse to hearken, and therefore, fail, and himself and others who believe, and therefore enter into the Rest of God. See v. 3.

2. Kal γάρ ἐσμεν εὐηγγελισμένοι] For we also have had good tidings announced to us, even as they had: we have a gospel also, as they had: they had a promise of Canaan; we, of Heaven. On the passive verb see Matt. xi. 5; below, v. 6.

— δ λόγος τῆς ἀκοῆς] Not simply the word preached, or the word of preaching, but much rather, the word of hearing; i. e. which was uttered in order to be heard. The stress is laid on the necessity of hearing what God was pleased to speak. See above, note on 1 Thess. ii. 13. Rom. x. 17. This expression conveys the wholesome admonition, that, however important may be the office of preaching, the work of hearing is no less so.

In the present passage, stress is to be laid on ἀκοὴ in its true sense of hearing, hearkening to that which is spoken by God; because an error has been propagated in many translations of this verse, from non-advertence to the true sense of τοις ἀκούσασιν, which probably means those persons who did hearken to the word of hearing, and received and obeyed it; see next note.

 μὴ συγκεκραμένους τῆ πίστει] The reading of this passage is controverted. Elz. has συγκεκραμένος, in the singular number nominative case, with the Peschito, some Cursives, and the Vulgate and Arabic Versions; and N (Cod. Sinait.) reads συνκεκερασμένος; and the nominative is adopted by Tischendorf, Lünemann, Delitz.

(1) This reading gives a very good sense. The Word spoken did not profit them, not being mingled with their Faith. The Word spoken is compared to wine poured into a vessel, according to our Lord's own comparison (Matt. ix. 17); but it did not profit them, because it was not mingled with Faith in the recipients. The metaphor may be derived from the ancient practice of mingling wine with other fluids. Or it may refer to the digestive process in the reception of food, which does not profit, unless such a process is performed by the recipient. Compare also James i. 21, "Receive with meekness the engrafted Word."

(2) But there is an almost overwhelming amount of MS. testimony in favour of the accusative plural, which is found in A, B, C, D*, D***, E, I, K, M. And even the slight discrepancies of these MSS. as to the form of the accusative,—some having συγ- οτ συν-κεκερασμένους, others συγκεκραμμένους, -some συγκεκραμένους, others συνκεκραμένους, give additional force to their testimony, as showing its independence, and that they are not mere transcripts from the same copies.

The accusative is also confirmed by the authority of Theodor. Mops., Cyril, Macarius, Chrys., Theodoret, Photius, and a large number of Cursive Manuscripts, and the Coptic, Æthiopic, and Armenian Versions; and so the Catena lately published by Dr. Cramer, p. 450, and so Lachmann and Bleek.

If this be the true reading, the sense may be thus paraphrased: They ought all to have been tempered together (συγκεκραμένοι) by Faith and Charity, into one harmonious body; but only a few hearkened to the Word, emphatically the Word of Hearing, because all were bound to hearken to it. The others were not tempered with them, but rebelled against Moses and Aaron, and were ready to stone Caleb and Joshua, who did hearken to the Word. Numb. xiv. 10. Cp. Exod. xvii. 4.

Therefore the word spoken did not profit them.

No more will the word now spoken by Christ profit you, unless you comply with the conditions He requires of you. He has said, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear" (Matt. xi. 15; xiii. 9), and "Take heed how ye hear" (Luke viii. 18), and "He that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark xvi. 16). His Word will not be profitable to you, unless you are blended together in faith with those who have hearkened to Christ's Word, and who believe in Him, and have been incorporated into His Church, and who dwell together as fellow-members in unity in His mystical body, of which He has tempered all the members together, as one man in Himself. Cp. Chrysostom, Theophylact, and Hammond here, and the examples in Wetstein, p. 397, of the use of the word συγκεράννυσθαι, as applied to persons harmoniously combined together with one another, and the use of a similar metaphor in Jewish writers. See also particularly 1 Corxii. 24, δ Θεδς συνεκέρασε τὸ σώμα, where the word συνεκέρασε, expounded in its spiritual sense by the Apostle (1 Cor. xii. 12-27), may serve as a clue to the meaning of συγκεκραμένους τοις ἀκούσασι in the present passage (if this is the true reading), and as a comment upon it. And thus, by means of the two words (συγκεκραμένους πίστει), the Apostle has combined here the two great doctrines of Faith and Unity; the one, Faith, as the Foun dation on which the fabric of the Church rests; the other, Unity, the Cement which binds all the members of the Church together as living stones in the House of God (iii. 6).

3. of πιστεύσωντες] We, who have professed our faith in Christ, and abide together in His Body, are entering by faith into the rest of God. The words of πιστεύσωντες explain τοῖς ἀκούσασι in the preceding verse, and confirm the interpretation of it there given. On the force of the agrist πιστεύσας, see Rom.

— καίτοι κ.τ.λ.] although His works were done from the foundation of the world, yet God still speaks by the Psalmist of His Rest as a thing still future; and therefore the rest of which He speaks by David is not the Seventh-Day Rest, or Sabbath, following immediately on the Hexameron of Creation (see v. 4), but it is some future Rest; and being God's Rest, is an everlasting one. See v. 5.

4. Εἴρηκε] He hath spoken, as of a thing past. (Gen. ii. 2.) Observe the formula by which the Author of this Epistle introduces quotations from the Old Testament. He cites them as spoken, and not as written.

St. Paul, in his speeches recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, does not quote the Old Testament in one and the same manner to Jews and Gentiles.

He observes a difference according to his audience. To Felix, the Roman Governor, he says of himself, "believing all things which are written in the Law and the Prophets" (Acts xxiv. 14). But to the Jewish King, Agrippa, "saying none other things than those which the Prophets and Moses did say should come" (Acts xxvi. 22). See Dr. Townson's Works,

In his Epistles to Gentile or to mixed congregations he rarely uses any other form than, "It is written," or "the Scripture saith." But in the Epistle to the Hebrews, though the Old Testament is often quoted, yet in no instance is it quoted as κατέπαυσεν ὁ Θεὸς ἐν τῆ ἡμέρα τῆ ἑβδόμη ἀπὸ πάντων τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ. 5 Καὶ ἐν τούτω πάλιν, Εἰ εἰσελεύσονται εἰς τὴν κατάπαυσίν μου.

e Ps. 95. 7. ch. 3. 7, 15.

6 Ἐπεὶ οὖν ἀπολείπεται τινὰς εἰσελθείν εἰς αὐτὴν, καὶ οἱ πρότερον εὐαγγελισθέντες οὐκ εἰσῆλθον δι' ἀπείθειαν, 7 ° πάλιν τινὰ ὁρίζει ἡμέραν, Σήμερον ἐν Δαυΐδ λέγων μετὰ τοσοῦτον χρόνον, καθώς προείρηται, Σήμερον, ἐὰν τῆς φωνής αὐτοῦ ἀκούσητε, μη σκληρύνητε τὰς καρδίας ὑμῶν.

8 Εί γὰρ αὐτοὺς Ἰησοῦς κατέπαυσεν, οὐκ ἂν περὶ ἄλλης ἐλάλει μετὰ ταῦτα ήμέρας. d Rev. 14. 13. 2 Esd. 2. 11.

9 α Αρα ἀπολείπεται σαββατισμὸς τῷ λαῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ. 10 ὁ γὰρ εἰσελθὼν εἰς

Here then is a discrepancy of manner between the universally acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul and that to the Hebrews.

At first sight this discrepancy might seem to present an argument against the Pauline origin of this Epistle; and it has been alleged as such by some Critics (De Wette, Davidson, p. 244). But on examination we find that it is a discrepancy precisely similar to that which exists (as has just been observed) in his speeches as recorded in the Acts.

It is, therefore, an argument in favour of the Pauline origin. And this characteristic discrepancy may serve to explain other discrepancies (by which some Critics have been staggered) be-tween the manner of this Epistle and the other Epistles of St.

Paul. See Introduction above, pp. 371, 372.

It may be added, that in the particular respect just noticed, there is the same difference between the Evangelist St. Matthew on the one hand, and St. Mark and St. Luke on the other.

St. Matthew, writing specially for the Hebrews, always introduces the words of the Old Testament as spoken; for he was writing for that favoured people with whom God had communicated by word of mouth. But St. Mark and St. Luke, writing for Gentile use, generally quote the Old Testament as written.

The Old Testament was a living oracle to the Hebrews; it was a written Book to the rest of the world.

5. Kal ἐν τούτφ πάλιν] And again in this Scripture. Πάλιν here, and in v. 7, introduces a new quotation. See i. 6.

— Εἰ εἰσελεύσονται] They shall not enter in; literally, I am not the God of truth, if they shall enter in. See iii. 11.

— κατάπαυσίν μου] My Rest. The emphatic word is Mov, which betokens that it is the Rest of God, and therefore not a mere rest on earth in time, like the seventh-day Sabbath, but in Heaven, and for Eternity. It is therefore a future Rest, and concerns you (says the Apostle) and all men, even to the end of

6. δι ἀπείθειαν] because of disobedience. Rom. xi. 30. 32.

Eph. ii. 2; v. 6.

7. πάλιν τινα δρίζει ἡμέραν ] again, He limiteth a certain day, saying, "To-day," even in and by David, who lived after so long a time, viz. about 500 years after the date of the entrance into Canaan, and who himself was living in Canaan. Theodoret.

The word πάλιν, again, introduces a new argument, intimating that those persons, to whom the former offer of entering into rest had been made, failed of attaining that Rest; and that God made a second offer of Rest to others living in another

God, in His great long-suffering and tender mercy, appointed another "to-day," even 500 years after the Rest of Canaan, into which those persons, to whom the word was first preached, failed

The term δρίζει (Ίστησιν, δρον δίδωσιν, Hesych., defines, limits) intimates that this day has its end, its horizon, beyond which the time of probation will not extend. Cp. Acts xvii. 26.

Since then God, who is Eternal, is speaking by David, and since He uses the word to-day, and warns the people living even at that later day, not to harden their hearts, lest they should be afterwards excluded from some future Rest, as their fathers who died in the wilderness had been excluded from the rest of Canaan for disobedience, it is evident that some other rest remains, which was not attained even by those Israelites who were admitted under Joshua into the promised Land; for they never attained to any other Rest since the time of David; nor has any other Rest been offered beside the Rest of God, the heavenly and Eternal Rest, of which he spake by David. Therefore God's "Today" remains still to us.

This To-day, limited for the Jews, was now drawing to its close. Soon after this Epistle was written the day of probation was over, and the sun of its glory set in darkness, in the fall of Jerusalem.

The probationary period of the Forty Years' sojourn in the wilderness was reproduced, as it were, in the Forty Years of trial, allowed to Jerusalem and the Jewish Nation, between the rejection and crucifixion of the Messiah, and the execution of the penalty due to that national sin in the destruction of their City by the Gentiles.

The Forty Years' sojourn in the wilderness is also a type of the time allowed to every one in his mortal pilgrimage in the wilderness of this world, after his baptismal passage of the Red Sea, in his journey, through the wilderness of this World, toward the Everlasting Rest of the Heavenly Canaan.

To every one God says, To-day, if thou hast heard My voice, harden not thy heart. He reiterates that warning every Wisely therefore has the Church of England inserted the Ninety-fifth Psalm, here quoted, in her office of Daily Prayer.

In that Psalm God speaks to every child of man even to the day of doom, and points to the example of the Israelites, who had His promises, and whose carcases fell in the wilderness, as an awful warning of the bitter fruits of disobedience.

That Psalm is supposed by some to have been sung at the Feast of Tabernacles (see Bp. Fell, p. 359, note), in which the Ancient People of God commemorated their sojourn in the wilderness. And the Church of Christ, which is a pilgrim journeying to her heavenly inheritance, and has received a precept from the Apostle to exhort her people "daily, while it is called tohas rightly provided that this divine warning should sound daily in the ears of her people, and remind them of the certainty of God's judgments, by the example of the Israelites, who were excluded from the earthly Canaan, and prepare them by its salutary admonitions to enter into that Rest which "remaineth to the people of God."

This Warning has a more awful character as addressed to us, than it had even when spoken to the Hebrews by St. Paul.

They looked back upon the Forty Years in the Wilderness, and the death of the disobedient there. But we look back, not only on that period, and on that judgment, but on the like period of Forty Years between the Crucifixion of Christ and the utter desolation of Jerusalem by the Roman Armies, and the scattering abroad of the Jews into all lands, where they have remained as outcasts for nearly twenty centuries. And thus we have a twofold warning of the awful consequences of Disobedience.

8. 'Ingovs Jesus. Joshua, the Son of Nun. See Acts vii. 45, and cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii. pp. 142-146.

-οὐκ ἀν-ἐλάλει] He would not have been now speaking. Observe the imperfect tense. He does not say, οὐκ ἃν ἐλάλησε, " He would not have spoken."

9. "Αρα ἀπολείπεται σαββατισμός τῷ λαῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ] There remaineth therefore a Sabbath-rest to the people of God. Observe the word here used,  $\sigma \alpha \beta \beta \alpha \tau_1 \sigma \mu \delta_s$ . He had used the word κατάπαυσις, cessation, before (iii. 11. 18; iv. 1. 3. 5: cp. 10, 11), but he now employs the word sabbatism, and thus he shows that the Sabbath, naw, on which God rested from His own works (Gen. ii. 2), was typical of that future Rest of God into which all they who are truly 'His people' will enter, when they "rest from their labours." Rev. xiv. 13. The typical character of a Weekly Sabbath, dating from the Creation, is not yet exhausted, nor ever will be exhausted, till Time shall be no more.

Are we the "people of God?" Do we look for that eternal Rest? Do we hope to enter into it? Does it remain to us? Then let us keep the Law which God gave to His People, on the duty of a religious rest on one day in seven,—a Law which dates from the Creation, and concerns all Creatures, and reaches to Eternity; a Law modified indeed to us as to the position of the day, but confirmed (even by that modification) as to the proportion of time. That Law, therefore, concerns us, who are Christians; and if we do not hallow God's Sabbaths on earth, we cannot hope to enjoy His Eternal Sabbath in heaven.

την κατάπαυσιν αὐτοῦ καὶ αὐτὸς κατέπαυσεν ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων αὐτοῦ, ὥσπερ ἀπὸ των ιδίων ὁ Θεός.

ν κατάπαυσιν αυτου και αυτου ν ίδίων ὁ Θεός. <sup>11</sup> Σπουδάσωμεν οὖν εἰσελθεῖν εἰς ἐκείνην τὴν κατάπαυσιν, ἵνα μὴ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ <sup>e Isa, 49, 2</sup>. Prov. 5, 4, 1 Cor. 14, 24, 2 Cor. 10, 4, 5. τις ύποδείγματι πέση της απειθείας.

12 e Ζων γαρ ο Λόγος του Θεου καὶ ένεργης, καὶ τομώτερος ὑπερ πασαν μά- Eph. 6. 17.

On the obligation of the Christian Sabbath see above, Matt. xxviii. 1. Luke xxiii. 56; xxiv. 1. John xx. 26. Acts

10. δ γὰρ κ.τ.λ.] A Sabbath-rest remaineth to the people of God; and it is truly so called, for  $(\gamma \delta \rho)$  every one who has fallen asleep in Jesus, and has entered into His rest (i. e. the rest of God, the never-ending rest), he also, when he was delivered from the burden of the flesh by death, ceased from his labours; he also has his Sabbath, as God has His. (Cp. Theodoret and Chrys.) The Rest of Christ in the grave has made Death to be a Sabbath to us. See on Luke xxiii. 56.

11. μὴ ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ τις ὑποδείγματι πέση τῆς ἀπειθείας] lest any one fall in the same example of disobedience; that is, so as to be an example to others of the bitter fruits of disobedience, in like manner as our fathers, the Israelites of old, are to us.

This warning of the Apostle will be recognized as having a remarkable propriety and prophetic significance, when it is remembered that it was addressed to that Hebrew Nation, which was soon after to become an example of the terrible consequences of Rebellion against God, and which has remained a proverb and by-word among all Nations from the time of the destruction of Jerusalem to this day.

12. Ζῶν γὰρ ὁ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ κ.τ.λ.] For the Word of God is living, and effectual, and more able to cut than any two-edged sword, and piercing through and through even to the severance of the soul, and of the spirit, and of the joints and the marrow, and a discerner of the inward emotions and thoughts of the And there is no creature which is not manifest in His sight; for all things are bare and opened, even to the back-bone, to the Eyes of Him to Whom our account is to be given.

What is the meaning of the term, δ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ, " the Word of God," here?

The Apostle is stating the consequences of disobeying Christ. He could hardly hope to effect his purpose of alarming the conscience of the Hebrews by referring them to the Word of God as something written or spoken by Him.

But his argument is recognized as more cogent, as well as harmoniously coherent, when it is understood to remind them that He, Whose Gospel they have heard, is the Discerner of their hearts, and will summon them to render an account to Himself as Judge of Quick and Dead.

Besides, the tenour of his language, concerning the Word of God, seems to point rather to a living and energizing Person, than to an inanimate thing.

Further, though the Christian Law itself, by which all are to be judged, may in a certain sense be regarded by us as a living Power, yet this was hardly the case with those to whom St. Paul was now writing. They were not to be awed by the written declarations of Christianity, but by the personal Majesty of Christ.

Besides, in other similar passages, where the Apostle is drawing a parallel between the pilgrimage of the Israelites and the probation allowed to Christians in this life, he introduces the Person of Christ as executing judgment. See 1 Cor. x. 9.

He adds also, in the following verse, that there is no creature which is hidden in His sight; but every thing is naked, and laid open to the back-bone, to the eyes of Him to Whom our account is to be given.

These words clearly point to a Person, Divine, Omnipresent, Omniscient, the JUDGE of Quick and Dead.

Hence it was the general sense of Christian Antiquity that St. Paul is here speaking of Christ, the Everlasting Word of God. S. Clement (Ep. § 21), the friend and fellow-labourer of St. Paul (see Phil. iv. 3, and Bp. Pearson's dedication of his Exposition of the Apostles' Creed), applies these words to a Person, even God Himself, ερευνητής γάρ εστιν εννοιών και ένθυμήσεων. Eusebius, Athanasius, Chrysostom, Gregory Nyssen, Cyril, and Isidorus, in the valuable ancient Catena printed by Dr. Cramer, pp. 458-467, and Theodoret and Theophylact, apply the words to Christ, the Eternal Word of God, the Judge of Quick and Dead. So also S. Ambrose (de Fide, iv. c. 7) and Primasius, who has an excellent comment on this text.

The Hebrews, and Hebrew Christians, and Hellenists had already been made familiar with the term "Word of God," as applied to a Divine Person, in their Chaldee Paraphrases, and also in the writings of the Alexandrine School of Theology. See above, note on John i. 1.

Therefore St. Paul, in writing to the Hebrews, was very likely to use this term, in order to show to them, that what had been predicated, in their Paraphrases and other writings, concerning the Divine Person called the "Word of God," was to be understood of no other than CHRIST.

Further, St. Paul here speaks of the IVord as being able to cut more sharply than a two-edged sword, an instrument of

Judgment and Justice. (Rom. xiii. 4.)

It is observable, that in another place of Holy Scripture, where the two-edged sword is mentioned, it is assigned to the Person Who is Judge of all, Christ. Out of His mouth goeth a two-edged sword (Rev. i. 16); and again, see Rev. ii. 12. 16, where Christ Himself speaks. And further, He Who is described as executing Judgment with the two-edged sword, is designated by that very title which is used here, "the WORD OF GOD." (Rev. xix. 13.)

It has indeed been alleged by many in recent times, that the name "Word of God" is never applied to Christ by any writer of Holy Scripture but St. John. But such assertions as these, concerning the Person of Christ, are of a questionable character. There seems to be an antecedent probability against them, as having a tendency to represent the divinely-inspired Writers as fettered by rigid rules, like material machines, and not as living Persons and Powers, animated by One Divine Spirit.

And these assertions do not seem to be borne out by fact.

See note below on Titus i. 3.

There was indeed good reason, why the Apostle, when writing to Gentiles, should not use such an expression as "the Word of God" for an appellation of Christ. And therefore we often occur in this sense in the Apostolic Epistles.

But there was no reason, why St. Paul should abstain from its use in writing to the Hebrews, or Hellenists, or to Christians well grounded in the truth.

On the contrary, it might well be matter for surprise, that he and the other Apostles should leave this expression, embodying such solemn truths, to the solitary use of St. John; and should not rather have prepared the way for his use of it, so that it might be seen, that the general teaching of the Apostles is in harmony with itself, and with that of the Ancient Jewish Church, in the great doctrines concerning the Name and Offices of Christ.

Accordingly, some of the best Divines of the Church of England have adopted the ancient exposition of this passage.

The following may be cited:

If I mistake not, the true understanding of the phrase in Heb. iv. 12, 13, is spoken of the Essential Word of God, the Second Person of the Ever Blessed Trinity. Bp. Sanderson (iii. 20).

Is the importance of this name (the Word of God), or the emblem by which the power of it is emblazoned, to wit, His sharp and glittering sword (Deut. xxxii. 41, 42), any where sharp and guttering sword (Deut. xxxii. 41, 42), any where literally expressed in the Apostle's writings? It is, most fully and most emphatically, in Heb. iv. 12, 13. "Vivus est sermo Dei." The Word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, &c. Yet is it questioned by some (whose names I conceal) whether by the Word of God in that place, the Eternal Word Himself be literally and directly meant; and whether St. Paul by the Word of God means the self-same that St. John doth in his Gaspel, charming the terms. self-same that St. John doth in his Gospel, chap. i. 1, In the beginning was the Word; and again, v. 14, The Word was made flesh.

It is a very weak exception which some have made to the contrary, viz. Because the author of that Epistle nowhere else instyles the Son of God the Word of God.

But to this exception the answer is very easy-Because the author of that Epistle had nowhere else the like occasion thus to instyle Him.

The same exception (were it warrantable) might be taken against the literal meaning of St. John, or against the ordinary interpretation of the first verse of his Gospel; because St. John nowhere else, besides in the two verses before mentioned, instyles the Son of God by the same name.

[Rather, only in the Apocalypse does St. John call Christ "the Word of God," and in his Gospel only the Word. See on Titus i. 3. The argument, therefore, is even stronger than this f 2 Chron. 16. 9. Job 26. 6. Ps. 33. 13—15. & 34. 16. & 90. 8. 8 90, 8. 139, 11, 12. Eccles. 15, 19. g ch. 3, 1. & 6, 20, & 7, 26, & 8, 1, & 9, 11, 24.

Author, Dean Jackson, here puts it.]

χαιραν δίστομον, καὶ διϊκνούμενος ἄχρι μερισμοῦ ψυχής καὶ πνεύματος, άρμῶν τε καὶ μυελών, καὶ κριτικὸς ἐνθυμήσεων καὶ ἐννοιῶν καρδίας, 13 f καὶ οὐκ ἔστι κτίσις άφανης ένώπιον αὐτοῦ, πάντα δὲ γυμνὰ καὶ τετραχηλισμένα τοῖς ὀφθαλμοίς αὐτοῦ, πρὸς ὃν ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος.

14 ε Εχοντες οὖν ἀρχιερέα μέγαν, διεληλυθότα τοὺς οὐρανοὺς, Ἰησοῦν τὸν Υίὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, κρατῶμεν τῆς ὁμολογίας.

But the complete subject, either of the first proposition, The Word of God is lively," or of the second, "The Word of God is powerful," or of the third, "The Word of God is sharper than any two-edged sword;" the Word written or preached cannot be: nothing can be besides God Himself, or that Word which St. John saith was in the beginning, in Whom was life, and whose life was the light of men.

Nor are the peculiar and special attributes of God any where set forth in a more full and majestic character of words than in these words of St. Paul.

The propositions are in number seven or eight. 'Ο Λόγος, the Word, is the same: and for this reason, if any of these attributes be literally meant of the Son of God, or of the Son of God only completive, all the rest must be completely meant of Him. He only it is, "qui tanti mensuram nominis implet," Who rightly fills the importance of this title, Λόγος, or Word, in that place. Admit, then, the Word written or preached may truly be said to be quick and powerful, and in some sort, not more sharp, but more piercing, than any two-edged sword (for a sword with one edge may be as sharp as a sword with two edges, but not so piercing); but admit the Word of God preached might be more piercing than any sword, yet could it not properly be said to be a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, or that there is no creature which is not manifest unto it; nor can it possibly be imagined to be the logical subject of the two last propositions; for the Apostle plainly speaks of a living Person: neither is there any creature that is not manifest in His Sight, but all things are naked and open unto the eyes of Him, προς δυ ήμων δ λόγος, with Whom we have to do, as our English renders it. As Beza and Calvin had before better expressed it than Erasmus, who renders it, of whom we speak; or than the Vulgar Latin, "ad quem nobis est sermo." But the Syriac of all most fully: All things are opened unto the eyes of Him, to whom men must render an account. Every one that which he hears; but this account we must not, we cannot give unto the Word preached, but unto Him, Whose Words they are which we hear, or from Whom the Word preached must derive all the efficacy, force, and power which it hath. (Dean Jackson on the Creed, xi. chap. xii. vol. x. pp. 216-218. See also the same Luthor, book vii. chap. xxvi. and xxvii., and book xi. chap. xlvii.)

It is plain to him that hath carefully read St. Paul's Epistles, and is acquainted also with the writings of Philo, that the holy Apostle well understood that cabalistical Theology of the Jews, and retained so much of it, as by the direction of the Divine Spirit in him, he found to be sound, good, and genuine. In the tenth chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians, St. Paul expounds the manna showered on the Israelites in the wilderness, and the rock that gave them water to quench their thirst, to be significations of our Saviour Christ; and shows, moreover, that the angel going before the people of God in their pilgrimage, and tempted by them, was our Lord Christ. And all this Philo likewise understands of the  $\Lambda \delta \gamma os$ , the Word, or Son of God, which we Christians know to have been in the fulness of time made man, and called by the name of Jesus Christ. Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, in the fourth chapter of that Epistle, vv. 12, 13, speaking of the Λόγοs, the Word of God, useth almost the very same expressions, but altogether the same sense, that Philo hath, discoursing of the same matter in his writings, as hath been observed by the learned Grotius on the place; who, from that and other indications, conjectures that the divine author had read the books of that learned Jew. Bp. Bull (Serm. x. vol. i. p. 243).

- τομώτερος] more able to cul; τμητικώτερος (Hesych., Gloss. Alberti).

This office of cutting, applied as an attribute to the Supreme God Himself, is described by Jewish Hellenists, e. g. Philo on Gen. xv. 10 (Quis hæres, &c., p. 491, Wetstein), Tva evvons Oedv τεμόντα τὰς σωμάτων καὶ πραγμάτων ήρμόσθαι καὶ ἡνῶσθαι δοκούσας φύσεις. Philo adds that this work of cutting is performed το τομεί των συμπάντων αυτοῦ λόγφ. And it was much to St. Paul's purpose to remind these Jewish Christians that this Adyos is Christ.

- ψυχης και πνεύματος] of the animal life, and also of the spirit, or higher principle. "Animâ (ψυχŷ) vivimus, spiritu (πνεύματι) intelligimus; vita nobis carnalis cum bestiis communis est, ratio spiritalis cum Angelis." Primasius. See above on 1 Thess. v. 23.

Primasius observes that Christ cuts more sharply than any two-edged sword, for that can only kill the body, but cannot touch the soul, as Christ Himself says, Matt. x. 28; but He is our Judge, and can cast both body and soul into hell.

He can pierce and penetrate, even to the separation of the animal soul and the rational spirit, and of the joints, and marrow contained in the hidden joints themselves.

This last expression may be taken either literally or figuratively. Cp. μυελδε ψυχῆε in Eurip. Hippol. 257. But perhaps it is better to understand it literally, and to consider the whole sentence as referring to the triple division of the human frame into body, soul, and spirit (1 Thess. v. 23). Christ our Judge can search out and discern the inmost secrets of them all, and can sever these elements critically, and anatomize each with precision, and determine what sins are due to the weaknesses of the flesh, what to the lusts of the animal man, what to the pride of the spirit. He will regulate the Judicial Balance with the most scrupulous exactness, and will apportion, adjust, and dispense each man's punishment, and award each man's recompense according to an unerring scale of retributive Justice.

 κριτικὸς ἐνθυμήσεων καὶ ἐννοιῶν] a Discerner and Judge of our imaginations and thoughts of the heart, of our secret desires and motives, and of our never-executed intentions, as well as of our overt acts.

A warning against the doctrine of the Pharisees, which dwelt on the letter of the commandment, and cared little for the spirit: and taught, that if a man did not sin with the hand, it was of little importance what he did with his heart. Cp. the Sermon on the Mount, Matt. v. 22. 28.

On ἐνθύμησις, see Matt. ix. 4; xii. 25. Acts xvii. 29.

13. ἀφανής] non-apparent; for we must all be made apparent before the Judgment-seat of Christ. See on 2 Cor. v. 10, φανε-— γυμνὰ καὶ τετραχηλισμένα] bare, and laid open to the neck, throat, and back-bone. The metaphor is from sacrificial victims, first flayed naked (γυμνά), and then dissected and laid open by the anatomical knife of the sacrificing Priest, so that all the inner texture, the nerves, and sinews, and arteries of the body, were exposed to view.

So the secrets of our hearts and reins will be revealed at the Judgment-seat of Christ, Who is our great High Priest. He Who came to save us, He Who now prays for us in Heaven, He will also judge us. His two-edged sword will pierce us through and through, and dissect and anatomize, and lay us bare and ορen, even to the back-bone. See Chrys., Isidorus (in Caten.), Theophyl., Œcumen. p. 6. τετραχηλισμένα = πεφανερωμένα (Hesyc.). φανερὰ καὶ ἀνακεκαλυμμένα (Phavorin., and so Cyril). See Suicer in voce, Βρ. Sanderson, ii. 17, and the excellent note of Dr. Hammond here, who observes that it was the special duty of the Priests to examine, by anatomical inquisition, whether the victims to be offered to God had any blemish or no. Cp. Philo, de Agricult. i. p. 320. Clem. Alex. Strom. iv. § 18. This was called μωμοσκοπείν, δοκιμάζειν. Cp. Prov. xx. 27, "the candle of the Lord searcheth the inner parts of the belly."
So Christ our great High Priest has also a judicial function, and will scrutinize each of us, whether we are fit Sacrifices to be offered to God. Cp. Rom. xii. 1.

This exposition is confirmed by the Apostolic Fathers, S. Clement (i. 41), and especially S. Polycarp (ad Phil. 4), who says of widows, "Let them know that they are the altar of God, and that every thing is scrutinized as a victim by Him, whether, it has any blemish (πάντα μωμοσκοπείται), or is ἄμωμος (see on ix. 14); and nothing escapes His notice, either of reasonings, or thoughts, or any of the secrets of the heart, λέληθεν αὐτὸν οὐδὲν ούτε λογισμών ούτε έννοιών, ούτε τι τών κρυπτών της καρδίας, where S. Polycarp seems to refer to the present words of — πρὸς δν ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος] with Whom we have to do, with Whom our reckoning is, to Whom we are to render up our account. See on v. 12, and the use of ὁ λόγος in Luke xvi. 2.

14. Εχοντες οὖν ἀοχιεοέα μέγαν] Having then a great High 15 h Οὐ γὰρ ἔχομεν ἀρχιερέα μὴ δυνάμενον συμπαθῆσαι ταῖς ἀσθενείαις h Isa. 53. 3. 2. Luke 22. 28. 28. ιῶν, πεπειρασμένον δὲ κατὰ πάντα καθ' ὁμοιότητα, χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας. 27. Phil. 2. 7. ήμων, πεπειρασμένον δε κατά πάντα καθ' όμοιότητα, χωρίς άμαρτίας.

 $^{16}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{16}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{16}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{16}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{16}$   $^{1}$   $^{1}$   $^{16}$   $^{1}$   $^{16}$   $^{$

έλεος, καὶ χάριν εὖρωμεν εἰς εὖκαιρον βοήθειαν.

V.  $^{1}$  a Hâs γὰρ ἀρχιερεὺς, έξ ἀνθρώπων λαμβανόμενος, ὑπὲρ ἀνθρώπων καθ $^{1}$  ε  $^{1}$  ε ίσταται τὰ πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν, ἵνα προσφέρη δῶρά τε καὶ θυσίας ὑπὲρ ἄμαρτιῶν, καθάπερ καὶ ᾿Ααρών. 5 ° Οὕτω καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς οὐχ ἐαυτὸν ἐδόξασε γενηθῆναι βλομα 8.54. την τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ. <sup>7 go</sup>Os έν ταις ήμέραις της σαρκός αὐτοῦ δεήσεις Matt. 26. 37, 38, & 27. 46, 50. Mark 15. 34. John 12. 27. & 17. 1.

Priest. This mention of the High Priesthood of Christ seems to have been suggested to the writer by the metaphor just employed by him concerning the Judicial Inquisition of Victims to be offered to God. Every man is to be offered as a sacrifice to God. We must present ourselves, our souls and bodies, and substance to Him (Rom. xii. 1, 2. Phil. ii. 17; iv. 8. 1 Pet. ii. 5). And Christ is our High Priest, by Whom we ourselves, and all our offerings, are to be presented to God, if it is to be an acceptable sacrifice unto Him (cp. Clemens R, i. 59). Christ is our High Priest, and offers us. But, as our Priest, He also examinesus, He anatomizes us as Victims, He probes our hearts and reins, He scrutinizes our inward parts, our very joints and marrow, our thoughts, affections, motives, and designs. He thus tests us, whether we are fit victims for the altar of God. Cp. Clemens R. i. 41, who says, "Sacrifices are not offered in every place, but at Jerusalem, and there only before the Sanctuary at the Altar; and that which is offered has been carefully scrutinized by the High Priest."

The Rabbis enumerate no less than seventy-three kinds of blemishes, which vitiate a sacrifice, and render it unfit to be offered to God. Maimonides.

 Τουν οὐρανούς] the heavens, not the material veil of the Holy of Holies; though typified by it, ix. 11—26; x. 19, 20.
 πεπειρασμένον] tempted. So A, B, D, E, Origen, Chrys., Elz., Wets., Scholz, Lachm., Lünemann. Cp. ii. 18; xi. 17. 37. Others have received the reading πεπειραμένον from C, J, K, but this does not seem consistent with the sense.

16. τῷ θρόνῷ τῆς χάριτος] to the Throne of Grace, typified by the Mercy-Seat of the Ark, called the seat of God, where the Shechinah of the Divine Presence was enthroned, in the Holy of Holies, between the Cherubim. (Ps. lxxx. 1.) See Rom. iii. 25; Mather on the Types, pp. 408. 411. 454; and Schöttgen

CH. V. 1. Πας γάρ αρχιερεύς, έξ ανθρώπων λαμβανόμενος] For every High Priest, being taken from men, and not from Angels. The emphasis is on men. The writer is accounting for Christ's Manhood. So rightly Theodoret; and see in Catena, p. 472.

There ought therefore to be a comma after ἀρχιερεύs.

St. Paul is explaining the reason of Christ's Incarnation, and why He, Who is so high, stooped so low. He is answering the objection, that Christ cannot be supposed to possess those divine attributes which the Appostle had just ascribed to Him (iv. 12). For, if He were so mighty and majestic a Person, He would not have taken human flesh, nor have been subject to human infirmity, nor have needed a call to the Priesthood; but would have appeared in divine power and majesty, and have presented Himself to the world on His own independent authority.

St. Paul shows, that this condescension of Christ was required by the nature of the Priestly Office, to which Christ was anointed by God.

He is also refuting the error of those among the Jews who addressed themselves to Angels as Mediators. See Col. ii. 18.

Λαμβανόμενος—λαμβάνω =  $\Pi_{\mathbb{C}^2}(lakah)$ , to choose, and take for appointment to an office. Cp. Acts xv. 14,  $\lambda \alpha \beta \epsilon \hat{\imath} \nu \ \hat{\epsilon} \xi \ \hat{\epsilon} \theta \nu \hat{\omega} \nu$

2. μετριοπαθείν] to deal gently; not to be without feeling, according to the Stoic ἀπάθεια,—nor yet to be violent and excessive in the display of emotions, but to be mild and moderate in his feelings toward them. Aristotle used to say that "the wise man Vol. II .- PART III.

ought not to be without feeling (ἀπαθήs), but to be μετριοπαθής."

See Diog. Laert. v. 31.—μετριοπαθώ, 'moderor' Gloss. Vet.
— δυνάμενος—ἀσθένειαν] being able to deal gently with those who are ignorant and out of the way, because he himself is compassed with infirmity. God did not appoint Angels to be Priests and Mediators under the Old Law, but Men. The Priest's ability to discharge his office is derived from his infirmity. is from his weakness; see above, iv. 15. He is clothed with the priestly robe, even because he is clothed with the human garb of suffering. So Christ, Who is gentle to those who sin from ignorance, as well as those who err from negligence or wilfulnessποταική, the wind as those wind ε in the megity enter of ε in the use of the dative after μ ετριοπαθείν, see Delitz. On the sense of π ερίπειται with an accusative, see Kühner, § 565.

3. δι' αὐτήν] sc. ἀσθένειαν: on account of this very human infirmity. Elz. has διὰ ταύτην. But αὐτὴν is in A, B, C*, D*, and is received by Lachm., Bleek, De Wette, Tisch., Lüne-

 $-\pi\epsilon\rho$ l  $\epsilon$ au $\tau$ o $\hat{\nu}$ ] for himself; which was not the case with Christ (see iv. 15); and if it had been, His offering would not have been, what it was, a full satisfaction for the sins of the world. Cp. Theophyl.  $-\pi^{\epsilon}\rho l$   $\hat{a}\mu a \rho \tau (\hat{a}\nu)$  Elz. has  $\hat{b}\pi \hat{e}\rho$   $\hat{a}\mu a \rho \tau (\hat{a}\nu)$ , but  $\pi \epsilon \rho l$  is in A, B, C\*, D\*, and is received by Lachm., Tisch., and others.

4. Kal οὐχ ἐαυτῷ] And no one taketh this priestly honour to himself. The second reason for Christ's condescension. A Priest λαμβάνεται (see v. 1), is taken, and does not take, οὐ λαμβάνει. Christ did not come on His Own Divine Authority, because every Priest is taken from Men; He came as a Man, and as a Priest; and no one is a lawful Priest, who takes the office on himself, and comes without a due Call and Ordination. If He had not been duly called and sent, He would have been like Korah (Numb. avi., Jude 11), and not like Aaron, concerning whose ordination, see Levit. viii., and the notes on that chapter.

— ἀλλὰ καλούμενος] but being called of God, as Aaron was; He does not take the office, nor does He refuse to receive it. Here are two distinct propositions. No one, except he is called of God, presumes to take the Priesthood; and no one who is called of God declines to take it. Christ showed His obedience to God in both respects. These propositions are brought out by the reading in the text received from A, B, C, D, E, K, L, with Bengel, Griesb., Matth., Knapp, Scholz, Lachm., Bleek, De Wette, Tisch., Lünemann, instead of the reading of Elz. δ καλούμενος.

οὐχ ἐαυτὸν ἐδόξασε] He did not glorify Himself. Ho waited till the legal age, and was publicly invested in His Priestly Office by the Unction of the Holy Ghost, and by the Voice of the Father from heaven. See above on Matt. iii. 16, and on Luke

6. Συ-Μελχισεδέκ] Thou art a Priest for ever after the order (not of Aaron, but) of Melchizedek. Ps. cx. 4, from LXX. A Psalm applied by the Jews themselves to the Messiah.

See i. 13.

— κατὰ τὴν τάξιν] = της (al-dibrathi), Ps. cx. 4, where is used, as in Eccl. iii. 18, for estate, order, place, manner. Cp. Stuart, p. 124; Gesen. 188; Fuerst, 313.

Melchizedek. For a more particular explanation of the typical analogy in him, see on vii. 1.

7. *Os-προσενέγκας] Who in the days of His flesh (of His human humiliation and infirmity), having offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears to Him that was able h ch. 1. 5, 8. & 3. 6. Phil. 2. 6. 8. i ch. 2. 10.

k 1 Cor. 3. 1, 3. 1 Pet. 2. 2.

τε καὶ ίκετηρίας πρὸς τὸν δυνάμενον σώζειν αὐτὸν ἐκ θανάτου μετὰ κραυγῆς ίσχυρᾶς καὶ δακρύων προσενέγκας, καὶ εἰσακουσθεὶς ἀπὸ τῆς εὐλαβείας, 8 h καίπερ ων Υίος έμαθεν ἀφ' ων έπαθε την ύπακοην, 9 i καὶ τελειωθείς έγένετο τοις ύπακούουσιν αὐτῷ πᾶσιν αἴτιος σωτηρίας αἰωνίου, 10 προσαγορευθείς ὑπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἀρχιερεὺς κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ.

11 Περί οῦ πολὺς ἡμῖν ὁ λόγος, καὶ δυσερμήνευτος λέγειν, ἐπεὶ νωθροὶ γεγόνατε ταις ἀκοαις. 12 k Και γαρ ὀφείλοντες είναι διδάσκαλοι δια τον χρόνον πάλιν χρείαν έχετε τοῦ διδάσκειν ύμᾶς τινα τὰ στοιχεῖα τῆς ἀρχῆς τῶν λογίων to save Him from death, and also having been heard by reason of His reverence. An open avowal and profession of Christ's human affections and infirmities,—proving that He is qualified, in that respect, to be a High Priest for men; which He would not have been, if He had been an Angel, and not really and truly a man. See v. 1, and Theodoret here.

— ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῆς σαρκός] in the days of His Flesh; that is, in the brief time of His weakness and subjection to mortality as Man; especially that time which He called His Hour, as distinguished from His Eternity as God. See on John ii. 4. But that time of suffering in the flesh is now past, and He now reigns in His flesh, exalted and glorified at the Right Hand of God. And that Glory in His Flesh is due to His Sufferings in the flesh.

 δέήσεις τε καὶ ἱκετηρίας] prayers and supplications (cp.
 Tim. ii. 1),—the former expressing a need (ἔνδειαν), the other implying a resort (ίκετεία from ἰκνέομαι) to another person for its supply; both words, therefore, proper to the human nature of μετὰ κραυγῆς ἰσχυρᾶς καὶ δακρύων] with strong crying and tears, in His agony at Gethsemane. Matt. xxvi. 42—44.

 Luke xxii. 44 (Theodoret, Œcumen., Dean Jackson on the Creed, ix. 3); and on the cross, when He cried twice with a loud voice (Matt. xxvii. 46. 50. Luke xxiii. 46); and He shed tears over Jerusalem and at the grave of Lazarus (Luke xix. 41. John xi.

- και είσακουσθεις ἀπό της εὐλαβείας and also having been heard (by God) for His reverence toward Him,—"et pro sua reverentia exauditus." The Apostle is affirming the true humanity, and consequent dependence and weakness, of Christ. Hence He prayed. And this sense of the weakness of His humanity, and His consequent reverence toward God, especially in His Agony (Matt. xxvi. 42-44. Luke xxii. 42), was so far from being a reason for disparagement, that it was the very cause why His prayers prevailed. Here also His Weakness is His Strength. Let us not therefore be ashamed to confess His infirmities; for thus we proclaim the Power of His Intercession. Winer, § 47, p. 332. Matt. xviii. 7. Luke xix. 3; xxii. 41; xxiv. 42. Acts xii. 14; xx. 9; xxii. 2.

On the sense of εὐλάβεια, religious fear or awe, see examples in Wetstein here, and Trench, Syn. N. T. § x. xlviii. and Delitz. p. 190.

Our Lord received an evidence of love, in reply to His reverential prayer in His Agony, from His heavenly Father, Who sent an Angel to strengthen Him. (Luke xxii. 43.) Also His Prayer on the Cross obtained a reply of love from His Father, Who received His Spirit (Luke xxiii. 46), and restored it again to His Human Body, which He raised in triumph from the

8. καίπερ ων Yids έμαθεν] although being the Son of God (and so, full of all knowledge and wisdom from all eternity, see Col. ii. 3), yet He learnt obedience by experience of what He Himself suffered as Man. The contrast is between Tibs and ξμαθεν.

Tios here and i. 2, does not signify (as it is sometimes interpreted) a Son, but the Son of God. See Theodoret, Gregor. Nazianz., Cyril (in Catenâ), Ambrose (Epist. 63), and others.

There would be no force in the assertion that a Son learnt any thing, and particularly that a Son learnt obedience. Every son ought to learn it. But what the Apostle dwells on is, that He, Who is the Everlasting Son, and to whom God said "Thou art My Son" (0.5), learnt obedience by His own sufferings in His Human Nature; and by this learning was perfected and glorified, and became the Author of everlasting salvation to all who imitate His obedience (ὑπακοἡν), and are dutiful to Him as God, as He as Man was to the Father. See Phil. ii. 8—11 (the best exposition of this passage), γενόμενος ὑπήκοος μέχρι θανάτου κ.τ.λ.

On the proverbial paronomasis, ξμαθεν ἀφ' ὧν ξπαθε, see on Herod. i. 207; and Blomf. on Æschyl. Ag. 170, του πάθει μάθος θέντα κυρίως έχειν, and for other paronomasias in N. T. see Welstein here, p. 401, and note above on Luke xxi. 11. Philem. 20. Winer, § 68, p. 560.

The frequency of paronomasia (a favourite figure with St. Paul, see 2 Thess. iii. 11) occurring in this Epistle, confirms the evidence of its Pauline origin, and of its being an original work, and not a translation. See above, Introduction, p. 374.

On the attraction in Δν ἔπαθε, see John vi. 29; xvii. 9. 1 Cor. vii. 1. Rom. x. 14.

The Apostle says that Christ learnt obedience, την ὑπακοήν. We must not weaken this saying, but rather we may thankfully accept it, in all its mysterious fulness, as proclaiming,

(1) The true Manhood of Christ, in a human soul as well as a human body; in which soul, according to the words of the Holy Ghost Himself, He increased in wisdom, as well as He increased, as to His body, in stature. See above, note on Luke

(2) The perfect union of the two natures in the One Person of Christ. Being the Son of God, co-equal and consubstantial with the Father, yet He learned obedience as Man, from the sufferings He endured.

Thus this Scripture is a safeguard against the Heresies of Nestorius and Eutyches, who divide the Personality or confound the Natures of Christ; and of Apollinarius, who denied His reasonable soul, capable of learning; and of the Mono-thelites, who denied His human will, capable of subjection and obedience to God.

The Apostle is speaking here of Christ's Mediatorial Kingdom, which He holds in subjection to the Father, and which, when He has put all enemies under His feet, He will deliver up; and God will be all in all. See above on 1 Cor. xv. 24-28.

10. προσαγορευθείs] addressed as an Everlasting Priest by God Himself; and therefore indubitably a Priest, as is here declared by the word  $\tau \in \lambda \in \iota \omega \theta \in ls = consecrated$ ; see ii. 10; vii. 28.

11. Hepl of Concerning Whom, as an Everlasting Priest, according to the order of Melchizedek, we have a long discourse to make, and hard to be interpreted to you, since you have now become dull of hearing.

- δυσερμήνευτος] hard to be interpreted to you. He therefore interprets it for them. See vii. 2, έρμηνευόμενος.

— νωθροί γεγόνατε ταις ἀκοαίς] ye have become (not, 'ye are') dull in your ears. Cp. Prov. xxii. 29, where νωθρὸς is contrasted with ὀξὺς, sharp. It is combined in the Glossaries with βραδείς and υπτιοι, slow and supine; 'hebetes, pigri.' See Wets. Ye have lost the keen edge of your spiritual senses, and have become obtuse, and stupid, and sluggish in your hearing. Ye were once sound and vigorous in the faith, ye have now become inert and languid. Ye have lost your first love.

Justin Martyr, in his Exposition of this same Psalm, and of the same verse in it, says to the Jews, "These words were spoken of our Jesus, as they themselves declare, but your ears are stopped and your hearts hardened." Justin M. c. Tryphon. c. 33. See also capp. 32—34, which deserve a careful comparison with this passage of St. Paul.

12. διὰ τὸν χρόνον] by reason of the length of time that ye have professed Christianity.

- χρείαν έχετε τοῦ διδάσκειν ύμας τινα τὰ στοιχεία] ye have need that some man (Tiva) should teach you the elements. need that some man (τινα) snouta teach you the elements. Γινα is not a neuter plural agreeing with στοιχεῖα, but it is the accusative singular preceding the infinitive διδάσκειν. So the Ethiopic Version, and Ecumen., Lachm., Bleek, Ebrard, Lünem., and others. Ye ought to be teachers of others, but ye have need that some man (τινα) should teach you. Ye have not need that any one should teach you what the elements are (for ye know that well, by reason of the long time that ye have protected the Cornelly, but we have need that some one should teach fessed the Gospel); but ye have need that some one should teach you in them; should remind you of them, and so make you learn them, and hold them fast. This therefore I am now de-

This clause, thus interpreted, affords an easy transition to the τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ γεγόνατε χρείαν έχοντες γάλακτος, καὶ οὐ στερεᾶς τροφῆς. 13 Ι Πᾶς γὰρ ὁ μετέχων γάλακτος ἄπειρος λόγου δικαιοσύνης, νήπιος γάρ ἐστι 11 cor 3.2. 14 τελείων δέ έστιν ή στερεὰ τροφὴ, τῶν διὰ τὴν ἔξιν τὰ αἰσθητήρια γεγυμνασ- Ερλ. 4. 14. μένα έχόντων προς διάκρισιν καλού τε καὶ κακού.

VI. 1 Διὸ, ἀφέντες τὸν τῆς ἀρχῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ λόγον, ἐπὶ τὴν τελειότητα φερώμεθα, μὴ πάλιν θεμέλιον καταβαλλόμενοι μετανοίας ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων, καὶ πίστεως ἐπὶ Θεον, <sup>2</sup> βαπτισμῶν διδαχῆς, ἐπιθέσεώς τε χειρῶν, ἀναστάσεώς τε νεκρών, καὶ κρίματος αἰωνίου.

commencement of the next Chapter, which has been frequently misunderstood.

- τὰ στοιχεῖα] the rudiments, or elements of the Christian Faith, which are enumerated in vi. 1, as long familiar to his γεγόνατε] ye have become. Observe this repetition of the word from v. 11. He lays stress on the fact of their declension and degeneracy from their primitive standard of Christian faith. and from their original spiritual state, and thus prepares the way for the solemn declaration which he is about to make.

στερεας τροφης] of solid food.

12-14.] St. Paul uses very similar language 1 Cor. iii. 1, 2. 13.  $\nu \eta \pi ios$ ] a babe, opposed to  $\tau \epsilon h \epsilon \iota os$ , one of mature age in Christ. Cp. Gal. iv. 3. 1 Cor. ii. 6; iii. 1; xiv. 20. Eph. iv. 14, with Col. i. 28. Eph. iv. 13.

14. προς διάκρισιν καλοῦ τε και κακοῦ] From the Hebrew בין (yada tob vara), to discern good and evil. Gen. ii. 17. Deut. i. 39. Cp. Isa. vii. 15, 16. Καλοῦ is not equivalent to τοῦ καλοῦ, nor is κακοῦ equivalent to τοῦ κακοῦ (see I Thess. v. 22). St. Paul is not speaking of the good and the evil, in the abstract, but of any good or evil.

CH. VI. 1.  $\Delta i\delta$ ] Wherefore. Since you have been for so long a time admitted to the privileges of the Gospel, and ought therefore to be now advanced to the full ripeness (τελειότης, see above, v. 13, 14) of spiritual manhood; and since you will be in danger of reducing yourselves to the weakly and puny condition of spiritual childishness and infancy (νηπιότης), if you do not shake off that spiritual lethargy which now benumbs your senses; and since there is good reason to hope for God's grace and blessing on the efforts of persons, who, like yourselves, have brought forth the fruits of good works and labour of love towards His Name (v. 10); therefore let me now stir you up to awake from your spiritual slumber, and to quicken your course. Cp. Chrys. and Theophyl. here, and Dr. W. H. Mill's Prælection on this passage, p. 11, Cantabrigiæ, 1843.

—  $\tilde{\alpha}\phi\ell\nu\tau\epsilon s$ ] having left; past tense. He supposes them to have long since started from the beginning ( $\tilde{\alpha}\phi\epsilon\sigma\iota s$ ) of the Christian race-course; and he urges them now to hasten their steps, and to run on (φέρεσθαι) to the goal of Christian Perfection.

1, 2. μη πάλιν θεμέλιον—αλωνίου] not laying again the foundation of Repentance from dead works, and of Faith toward God, and of the Doctrine of Baptisms, and of Laying on of Hands, and of the Resurrection of the Dead, and of Everlasting Judg-ment. St. Paul here enumerates the first Principles, or elementary rudiments, of the Doctrine of Christ (v. 12), which the Hebrew Christians had been taught as Catechumens. He does this by way of reminding them of what they had already long since learnt; and so stimulates them, by a sense of shame, to awake from their lethargy.

Dead Works are Works which are done without lively Faith in Christ, and which cause moral defilement (see ix. 14), and therefore need repentance. See Bp. Beveridge and Prof. Browne on Art. XIII. on Works before Justification. They who receive the Christian Faith, abhor such works as these; and exercising Repentance for them, come to Holy Baptism, and obtain the Grace of the Holy Ghost by the Laying on of Hands, and receiving in Baptism the type of the Resurrection, wait for the Universal Resurrection of the Dead, and the Judgment to come. Theodoret. Cp. Augustine, de Fide, 20.

In your Baptism ye renounced the Devil, and professed Repentance from dead works; and by the Laying on of Hands xe received the Gift of the Holy Ghost. Chrysostom, Theophyl. See notes above, on Acts viii. 14-17; xix. 6.

2. βαπτισμῶν διδαχῆs] doctrine of Baptisms (or Washings); that is, the doctrine concerning the difference and superiority of the Baptism which was instituted by Christ, compared with all other Baptisms.

difficulty, which many persons have found in these words, will disappear, if it be remembered that these words are not addressed to Gentiles, but to Jewish Christians.

In their elementary training, it had been requisite for their Teachers to speak to them, not only of "the One Baptism" instituted by Christ, but also of Baptisms in the plural; in order that they might be able to distinguish between the Baptism they were to receive on their admission to the Church (the Baptism of Christ, to be administered once, for the remission of sins, to all of all Nations in every age), and those other Baptisms with which they were familiar; such as the Baptism administered to Proselytes, and the Baptism lately administered in Judæa by John the Baptist (see Theodoret here, p. 579), which some persons among themselves might already have received; and in order that they might not confound Christian Baptism with those other Baptisms, or with any of the numerous and frequently reiterated βαπτισμοί, or washings and lustrations, of the Levitical Law (see Mark vii. 4. 8. Heb. ix. 10); or imagine that Christian Baptism could be repeated, or be succeeded by any other Baptism.

There was great danger of such a confusion in their case; and there was a great need therefore of careful discrimination, lest the Baptism of Christ should be only supposed to be like one of many other Baptisms; as is evident from the dispute about purifying in John iii. 25. 26 (where see note at end of the chapter), when the difference between Christ's Baptism and John's Baptism came into discussion; and see John iv. 1, 2; and compare the remarks of St. Paul himself, Acts xix. 4, discriminating Christian Baptism from that of John the Baptist.

Observe, therefore, that St. Paul here not only uses the plural number, but he also uses the word Bantiouds, which he never would have used, if he had been speaking only of the Christian Sacrament of Baptism, which is never called βαπτισμός, but always βάπτισμα, in the New Testament.

The reading in Col. ii. 12, where B, D*, F, G have βαπ-

 $\tau\iota\sigma\mu\hat{\varphi}$ , is at least doubtful; and even if it be correct, then in that passage, the addition of the definite article  $au \hat{\varphi}$  serves to bring out distinctly Christian Baptism as the Baptism to be distinguished from all others xxxix. 17.

On the different kind of Baptisms see Greg. Naz., Orat.

- ἐπιθέσεώς τε χειρῶν] and Laying on of Hands. The Apostle places Confirmation among the first Principles or Fundamentals of Christianity. "Impositionem manuum appellat, per quam plenissimè creditur accipi donum Spiritûs Sancti, quod post Baptismum, ad Confirmationem Unitatis in Ecclesiâ, à Ponti-ficibus fieri solet." Primasius here. Cp. Bingham (xiii. 6), and Dr. Mill's Prælection (p. 13), who refers to Theodoret's Commentary above cited, and observes, that "the Apostle's enumeration here is illustrated by the History of the Acts of the Apostles, which reveals, that, in the system of Apostolic teaching, the first place was assigned to the Doctrine of Repentance, Faith, Baptism, Resurrection, Judgment (Acts ii. 32—41; x. 38. 47; xiii. 26—41; xvi. 30—33; xxiv. 24, 25; xxvi. 8. 22, 23), with the Gift of the Holy Ghost in Confirmation." (Acts viii. 14—17;

See also the candid avowal of the learned Lutheran Delitzsch here, who says, concerning Confirmation: "Can we suppose that the Apostolic writer of this Epistle would represent the Laying on of Hands, following after Baptism, as among the Fundamentals of Christianity, if it were not an holy Ordinance, and had not a divine promise annexed to it? And even though it be true, that not the Laying on of Hands, as such, but the Prayer which accompanies it, is the principal thing, is there not such a thing as a Prayer of Faith, under special circumstances, to which a special promise is made? (James v. 14, 15.) Unhappily, the Church of the present lacks many things, in comparison with the Church of the first century; but that deficiency will only become greater, if it forms thereon mere theories, not to say empty dreams." Delitzsch, Komment. p. 218.

Such larguage as this converse a subtray administration to the

Such language as this conveys a salutary admonition to the Church of England.

She, by God's blessing, possesses the Apostolic Rite of the Laying on of Hands, of which this pious writer speaks, and of which he regrets the loss. She has great reason to show her a Acts 18. 21. 1 Cor. 4. 19. James 4. 15. b Matt. 12. 31, 45. ch. 10. 25, 27, 2 Pet. 2. 20. 1 John 4. 10.

3 a Καὶ τοῦτο ποιήσομεν, ἐάν περ ἐπιτρέπη ὁ Θεός.

4 6 Αδύνατον γάρ τοὺς ἄπαξ φωτισθέντας, γευσαμένους τε της δωρεας της έπουρανίου, καὶ μετόχους γενηθέντας Πνεύματος άγίου, <sup>5</sup> καὶ καλὸν γευσαμένους Θεοῦ ρημα δυνάμεις τε μέλλοντος αίωνος, 6 καὶ παραπεσόντας, πάλιν ἀνακαινίζειν είς μετάνοιαν, άνασταυρούντας έαυτοις τον Τίον του Θεού και παραδειγματίζοντας.

thankfulness to God by endeavouring to maintain it, and to communicate it to those who have it not Especially has she cause to pray and labour, that by a subdivision of her Dioceses, and by a provision of a sufficient number of chief Pastors for its due administration, her own children may not be deprived (as now they are to a very great degree) of that elementary spiritual blessing, which the holy Apostle reckons among "the first principles of the Doctrine of Christ." See above on Acts viii. 14-18.

- κρίματος αἰωνίου] everlasting Judgment; that sentence which will take effect for Eternity.

He does not use the word κρίσεως (which would have represented the act of judging, see below, ix. 27), but κρίματος, sentence or doom pronounced, and he combines it with the same word as is used by our Future Judge. Matt. xxv. 41. 46. He declares that the κρίμα or doom pronounced, whether life or death, is alwviov, everlasting.

On the topics above specified, as holding the first place in the Teaching of the doctrine of Christ, see above, Introduction to the First Epistle to the Thessalonians, pp. 4, 5, whence an argument arises in support of the Pauline origin of this Epistle.

3. ποιήσομεν] we will do. A, C, D, E have ποιήσωμεν, and Lünemann. But the reading in the text, which is that of so Lünemann. B, J, K, and is received by Tischendorf, seems preferable; and the o and  $\omega$  are so often confused in MSS., that internal evidence is the best guide here. See above on 1 Cor. xv. 36. 49. Rom.

v. l. 4, ᾿Αδύνατον γὰρ—παραδειγματίζονταs] Having stated that they, who have been long since admitted to the privileges of the Gospel, ought not any longer to be children, but to grow in grace to the full stature of Christian maturity, he next displays the fearful consequences of falling back from Christ, and warns his readers of the danger, to which they will be exposed, of utter rejection, unless they proceed onward in their Christian course.

The difficulty which has been felt by some persons in apprehending the sense of these verses, may be cleared by observing-

(1) That the impossibility of renewal unto repentance, of which the Apostle speaks, is an impossibility on the part of man, but that nothing is impossible with God. Matt. xix. 26. Mark x. 27. Luke xviii. 27.

(2) That it is impossible to renew unto repentance the persons here described as ἀνασταυροῦντας, crucifying afresh the Son of God, and putting Him to open shame. That is, it is impossible for man to renew such persons unto repentance, as long as they persevere in such a desperate course of wilful and presumptuous sin against the Son of God.

Observe, that the participles here used are in the present tense (ἀνασταυροῦντας, παραδειγματίζοντας). And this usage may be compared with that in x. 26, έκουσίως αμαρτανόντων κ.τ.λ., as long as we continue to sin wilfully, after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there is no more sacrifice for sin, but only a fearful looking for of judgment. And we may also compare the phrase, There is joy over one sinner repenting (μετα-νοοῦντι), Luke xv. 7. 10; that is, there is joy over him when he ceases from sin, and turns to God by repentance. (See note there.) So the sense is here, It is impossible to reclaim the sinner when he is crucifying Christ afresh, i. e. as long as he continues to do so.

The present tense of these participles is to be noted the more carefully, because in the previous part of the paragraph the Apostle had used the aorist or past tense in the four other participles (φωτισθέντας, γενηθέντας, γευσαμένους, and twice παραπεσύντας); and by the change to the present tense he studiously marks that he is now speaking of a continued state, and not (as he had done before) of any single act.

(3) Observe also, that he uses throughout in this address the first person plural, and not the second person. He does not say, "Go ye on to perfection," but "Let us go on to perfection, not laying again the foundation;" which act of laying the foundation; dation is an act of the Teacher even more than of the taught. And he adds, "This will we do, if the Lord permit."

(4) On the whole then, the sense may be thus expressed. Ye have been for a long time believers in Christ. Ye have also been admitted to enjoy the blessed privileges of the Gospel. Ye might now be teachers of others (v. 12); but ye have become languid and lukewarm in your Christian profession (v. 11, 12); ye have become dull of hearing; and ye have need that some one teach you the first principles of the doctrine of Christ (v. 12). Ye are in danger of falling back into spiritual infancy, instead of being, what ye ought to be, mature and complete in Christ. Ye have reduced yourselves to the state of requiring milk, and not solid food (v. 12). This is a subject for grief and shame, both for you and me, for the teacher and for the taught.

Wherefore (δib) let us, having left behind us (as already taught and learnt) the first elementary principles of the doctrine of Christ, go forward to ripeness and perfectness of knowledge Let us not lay again the foundation. Let not me be and faith. reduced to toil in this work, which has been already done; but let us all labour together in building up the spiritual superstructure. And this will we do with the help of God. We cannot hope to do it without His grace; but He will aid us in the work. therefore, to us if we do not do it. Woe to me, if I do not endeavour now to arouse you; and woe to you, if you do not listen to the warning which I now deliver. If you go not forward, you will go backward. You will fall away from Christ. And then it will be too late for me, or for any other human Teacher, to endeavour to arouse, and reclaim, and recover you in that desperate state. For it is impossible for any man to renew unto repentance those who have once been enlightened, particularly by that spiritual illumination vouchsafed to them at their φωτισμός, or Baptism (see on Eph. v. 8, and the Syriac Version here which renders the word φωτισθέντας by baptized. Justin Martyr. i. 62. 65, and Theophyl., and other ancient expositors here; and cp. x. 32). It is impossible for any one to renew unto repentance those who have been enlightened, and have had the taste of the heavenly gift, and have been made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come; and who then, after all this spiritual nurture from God, have fallen aside from the right way. It is impossible, I say, for any human power to renew such persons unto repentance, while they continue in such a state as this, crucifying to themselves afresh the Son of God, and putting Him to open shame.

In this clause we must notice the word γευσαμένους, twice used, in the former instance with the genitive case (δωρεας έπουρανίου), in the latter with the accusative (ρημα and δυνάμεις).

Cp. John ii. 9.

The former denotes that they were admitted to have the taste of, that is, a spiritual perception of, and relish for, the sweetness of the heavenly gift, first bestowed upon them when they were illuminated and made partakers of the Holy Ghost.

The accusative signifies the regular habit of feeding on, as their daily bread. Cp. Kühner, § 526; Delitz. p. 227; and note above on Acts x. 10, ήθελε γεύσασθαι: xx. 11.

There is a regular gradation and series, from the words φωτισθέντας to δυνάμεις μέλλοντος αίωνος, i. e. from the mention of the initiatory illumination of the Sacrament of Baptism to the habitual communion with God in His Word and in the other Sacrament, and constant feeding upon them, and communion with the Powers of the World to come (see ii. 5), as opposed to the hostile Powers of the Devil, who has now great power in this World (see Eph. ii. 2; vi. 12); namely, those miraculous operations of the Spirit of Christ (cp. ii. 4. Gal. iii. 5) which have their beginnings here, but will be fully consummated hereafter.

 παραπεσόντας] having fallen aside from the truth.
 The word παραπίπτω is used by the LXX for Heb. לַיַּלַ (maal). Cp. 2 Chron. xxix. 19, where the LXX represent the cognate Hebrew substantive by ἀποστασία.

- πάλιν ἀνακαινίζειν] to renew again; i. e. to renew, so as to bring back again to their original state.

— ἀνασταυροῦντας ἐαυτοῖς κ.τ.λ.] crucifying afresh, not to His injury, for He is now impassible, but to themselves and to their own perdition; and putting Him to open shame, by denying Him Whom they formerly confessed, and exposing Him as a Malefactor and Impostor to the malice and scorn of His enemies, especially in the City of Jerusalem, where He was crucified; and by doing this, in a far more guilty and impious manner, than was done by those who actually crucified Him, and reviled Him in the hour of His humiliation when hanging on the Cross, because this act of apostasy from Christ, and wilful resistance to His

<sup>7 ·</sup> Γη γαρ ή πιούσα τὸν ἐπ' αὐτης ἐρχόμενον πολλάκις ὑετὸν, καὶ τίκτουσα · Ps. 65. 10. βοτάνην εὔθετον ἐκείνοις δι' ους καὶ γεωργεῖται, μεταλαμβάνει εὐλογίας ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ εκφέρουσα δὲ ἀκάνθας καὶ τριβόλους ἀδόκιμος καὶ κατάρας ἐγγὺς, ἦς τὸ τέλος εἰς καῦσιν.

9 Πεπείσμεθα δὲ περὶ ὑμῶν, ἀγαπητοὶ, τὰ κρείσσονα καὶ ἐχόμενα σωτηρίας, εἰ καὶ οὕτω λαλοῦμεν· 10 d οὐ γὰρ ἄδικος ὁ Θεὸς ἐπιλαθέσθαι τοῦ ἔργου ὑμῶν a Prov. 14. 31 Μatt. 10. 42. καὶ τῆς ἀγάπης, ἣς ἐνεδείξασ $\theta$ ε εἰς τὸ ὄνομα αὐτοῦ διακονήσαντες τοῖς ἁγίοις  $\frac{80.25}{20.5}$  40. καὶ διακονοῦντες. <sup>11</sup> Ἐπιθυμοῦμεν δὲ ἔκαστον ὑμῶν τὴν αὐτὴν ἐνδείκνυσθαι  $^{\text{Mark 9.41.}}_{\text{Rom. 3. 4.}}$  σπουδὴν πρὸς τὴν πληροφορίαν τῆς ἐλπίδος ἄχρι τέλους,  $^{12}$  ἴνα μὴ νωθροὶ  $^{1}_{\text{Thess. 1. 6. 7.}}$ γένησθε, μιμηταὶ δὲ τῶν διὰ πίστεως καὶ μακροθυμίας κληρονομούντων τὰς έπαγγελίας.

Grace, is done to Him, Who has now manifested fully His Divine Majesty and Glory by His Resurrection and Ascension into Heaven, and by His sending the Holy Ghost from Heaven; and Who has incorporated us as members in Himself, and has given us the gift of the Holy Spirit; so that, in our case, Apostasy from Him is rebellion against the Son of God seated on His heavenly throne, and not hanging on the Cross on Calvary; and it is also a sin against the Holy Ghost. Cp. below, x. 26-31; xii. 14-17. 25. 29. 2 Pet. ii. 20-22.

Here we may see a terrible Malediction pronounced by Almighty God against those Nations of the Earth, which, having received the Gospel, do not make His Word the Rule of their Public Policy, and do not make the promotion of His Glory, and the advancement of His Kingdom, the main aims and ends of their Public Acts; but apostatize from Christ, now enthroned in Heaven, King of Kings and Lord of Lords, and break His bonds asunder, and cast away His cords from them (Ps. ii. 3).

The above Passage is one of great importance, with reference

 To Christian Doctrine, and To the Canon of Holy Scripture.
 It was used as an argument in favour of the rigid system of Montanus and Novatian (following Tertullian, de Pudic. c. 20), admitting only Remission of sins in Baptism, but denying Absolution to those who fell into sin after Baptism. See Cyprian, Epist. 55. Euseb. vi. 43. Ambrose, de Pœnitentià, ii. 2. Athanas. c. Serapion. iv., cited in Catena on St. Luke xii. 8. Epiphan. lix. μετὰ τὸ λουτρὸν μηκέτι ἐλεεῖσθαι δύνασθαι τὸν παραπεπτωκότα. Socrates, H. E. iv. 28. Cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. x. p. 685. Dr. W. H. Mill, Prælect. p. 18, and Bp. Beveridge and Professor Browne on the XVIth Article, "Of Sin after Baptism;" and note above on Acts viii. 22; and Routh, Re-liquiæ, i. 367; iii. 13. 53; cp. vi. 410. 416, on this text.

(2) In the earlier stages of this controversy, the authority of this Epistle seems to have been questioned by some writers of the Western Church, on the erroneous supposition that the doctrine here enunciated could not have proceeded from St. Paul. See above, Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 366—8, and Kirchofer, Quellensammlung, pp. 240. 247, and the present Editor's Lectures on the Canon of Scripture, Lect. ix.

But in course of time the true sense of this passage was cleared and vindicated, and the Epistle recovered the place which it had originally held in the judgment of the Western Church, as is evident from the use made of it by the Apostolic Father, S. Clement, Bishop of Rome. In the Eastern Church its authority was never questioned. See above, Introduction to the Epistle, pp. 366-8.

(3) This Text is also of great importance in regard to the Question concerning Final Perseverance. It clearly shows (against the upholders of the Calvinistic Scheme) that it is possible for those who have been once justified, to fall away totally and finally. See Dr. Hammond in Bp. Sanderson's Works, v. p. 330; and also the writers on Art. XVI.

Therefore this text is to be defended against the misinterpretation of the Montanists and Novatians on the one hand, who deny the "grant of repentance to such as fall into deadly sin after Baptism;" and against the dangerous misconstructions of later sectaries on the other, who say, that after they have received "the gift of the Holy Ghost they can no more sin as long as they live here;" and that if once they have felt an inward assurance of God's favour, and of their own predestination to life, they cannot fail of salvation.

St. Paul's own dealings with the incestuous Corinthian (see on 1 Cor. v. 5), and with Hymenæus and Alexander (1 Tim. i. 20) afford the best expositions of his mind in this passage.

(4) This text also teaches the need of constant and heartfelt Repentance for sins committed against the Law of Nature, Reason, and Conscience, and against the clear light of the Gospel, and the supernatural gifts and graces, and heavenly motions of God the Holy Ghost, stirring our hearts and speaking within us; sins therefore to be bewailed, with proportionate shame, poignant sorrow, and godly fear, lest God should hide His Face from us, and cast us off in our sin; and lest the Holy Spirit, Whom we have resisted, provoked, and grieved, should leave us to ourselves, and to the dominion of the Evil Spirit, whose works we have done in disobedience to Christ, Who has purchased us with His own Blood; and with fervent yearnings and prayers, accompanied with practical proofs of contrition by works meet for Repentance, in order that we may obtain mercy and pardon of Him, Who alone can cleanse us from our sins, and restore us to the favour of God.

7.  $\Gamma \hat{\eta}$  | land, any piece of ground; not 'the earth.'

ή πιοῦσα] that has drunk in ; as you have in your Baptism, and in the other means of Grace.

— εύθετον ἐκείνοις δι' οὐς καὶ γεωργεῖται] serviceable for those (viz. God and Christ) for whose sake ("propter quos," Tertullian) it is also tilled by us, the husbandmen in the vine-

There is a reference here to the practice of letting out land to Husbandmen ( $\gamma \epsilon \omega \rho \gamma o i s$ ), who were bound to till ( $\gamma \epsilon \omega \rho \gamma \epsilon i \nu$ ) the land let, and to make a payment for the use of it, from its fruits (καρποί), to the Landlord, for whose benefit (δι' δν) it was cultivated. See Matt. xxi. 33—41. Mark xii. 2, and note on Luke xxi. 6. Luke xx. 10. God is the universal Landlord, for whom the whole Earth is tilled; and all men are γεωργοί under Him, and owe Him the fruits thereof.

9. τὰ κρείσσονα] the better things. Cp. Luke x. 42, την έχδμενα σωτηρίας] clinging to, or laying hold of, salvation. He thus prepares the way for the metaphor of the Anchor of Hope in v. 19. On  $\xi \chi \in \sigma da := to \ hold \ oneself \ on \ to \ cleave \ to, to \ be near, see on Mark i. 38. Acts xiii. 44; xx. 15; xxi. 26.$

10, 11.] for God is not unjust, so as to forget your work, and the love which ye showed unto His Name, in that ye ministered to the Saints (poor Christians, Rom. xv. 25), and yet do minister. But we earnestly desire that every one of you should show the same diligence toward the full assurance of your hope even to the end. This passage bears a strong resemblance to the language of two acknowledged Epistles of St. Paul. See 2 Thess. i. 3, and 2 Cor. viii. 24; ix. 1. Col. i. 4.

10. où yan thursel for God is not unrighteous, so as to forget our labour and love. Having worked on their feeling of shame your labour and love. (v. 12; vi. 1-3), and of fear (vi. 4-8), he now proceeds to encourage them with hope, grounded on faith in the equity of God remembering their good works in relieving the needs of their poorer brethren. Before της ἀγάπης Elz. has τοῦ κόπου, not in A, B, C, D*, E*.

 διακονήσαντες τοις άγιοις] having ministered to the Saints, probably the poor Christians at Jerusalem and in Judæa, who were exposed to special dangers and difficulties, and suffered special afflictions, consequent on their position. See on Acts ii. 44; xi. 28-30. Gal. ii. 10. Cp. 1 Cor. xvi. 1. 2 Cor. viii. 4-9. Rom. xv. 25, πορεύομαι είς Ἱερουσαλημ διακονών τοῖς άγίοις.

And cp. note above on iii. 1.

11. την αὐτην—σπουδην] the same earnestness. We carnestly desire that each one of you would show forth the same earnestness and zeal for the full assurance of your own Hope of everlasting Salvation unto the end, as you have done in the work of Love for the relief of the temporal wants of your poorer brethren.

12. Iva  $\mu \dot{\eta} \ \nu \omega \theta \rho ol \ \gamma \dot{\epsilon} \nu \eta \sigma \theta \dot{\epsilon}$ ] that  $ye \ \text{may not become sluggish}$  in Hope, as ye have become in spiritual intelligence. See v. 11.

e Gen. 22, 17. Ps. 105. 9. Luke 1. 73.

13 ο Τώ γὰρ ᾿Αβραὰμ ἐπαγγειλάμενος ὁ Θεὸς, ἐπεὶ κατ' οὐδενὸς εἶχε μείζονος ομόσαι, ώμοσε καθ' έαυτοῦ 14 λέγων, <sup>3</sup>Η μην εὐλογων εὐλογήσω σε, καὶ πληθύνων πληθυνῶ σε  $^{15}$  καὶ οὕτω μακροθυμήσας ἐπέτυχε τῆς ἐπαγγελίας.

f Exod. 22, 11,

16 Ε Ανθρωποι μέν γὰρ κατὰ τοῦ μείζονος όμνύουσι, καὶ πάσης αὐτοῖς ἀντιλογίας πέρας είς βεβαίωσιν ὁ ὅρκος.

g Ps. 33. 11. Rom. 11. 29. h Tit. 1. 2. 1 Tim. 6. 12. ch. 12. 1.

17 ε Έν ῷ περισσότερον βουλόμενος ὁ Θεὸς ἐπιδεῖξαι τοῖς κληρονόμοις τῆς έπαγγελίας τὸ ἀμετάθετον της βουλης αὐτοῦ ἐμεσίτευσεν ὅρκω, 18 μ ἴνα διὰ δύο πραγμάτων αμεταθέτων, εν οίς αδύνατον ψεύσασθαι Θεον, ισχυράν παράκλησιν έχωμεν οι καταφυγόντες κρατήσαι της προκειμένης έλπίδος, 19 ήν ως άγκυραν έχομεν της ψυχης ἀσφαλή τε καὶ βεβαίαν, καὶ εἰσερχομένην εἰς τὸ ἐσώτερον τοῦ καταπετάσματος, 20 k οπου πρόδρομος ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν εἰσῆλθεν Ἰησοῦς, κατὰ την τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ άρχιερεύς γενόμενος είς τὸν αίωνα.

Lev. 16. 15. ch. 9. 7.

k ch. 4. 14. & 8. 1. & 9. 11.

13. Τῷ γὰρ 'Αβραάμ] Look to Abraham, your Father; follow his faith and patience. And, for your own comfort, remember that the promise which God made to him He made with an oath (Gen. xxii. 16. Luke i. 73), and made it to his seed, namely, to you, as well as to Abraham himself: and that Abraham, having quitted his own country at God's command, hoping against hope, and, in spite of many difficulties, remaining stedfast unto the end, at length, after waiting patiently for many hundred years, obtained the promises, first of the land of Canaan, and next of the coming of Christ (cp. John viii. 56), and so became a pattern to you his children. Therefore imitate him.

you in schared. Therefore imitate him. -  $\ell \pi \ell \ell \kappa \alpha'$  où $\delta \epsilon \nu \delta s$ ] since He could not swear by any greater than Himself, He sware by Himself: the same argument is used by Philo, Legg. Allegor. iii. 72,  $\delta \rho \hat{q} s$  őti où  $\kappa \alpha \theta'$   $\hat{\epsilon} \tau \epsilon \rho$  ou  $\hat{\delta} \mu \nu \nu \epsilon i$   $\delta \Theta \epsilon b s$ , où $\delta \epsilon \nu$   $\gamma \hat{\alpha} \rho$  aŭto $\hat{\nu}$   $\kappa \rho \epsilon \ell \tau \tau \nu$ , à $\lambda \lambda \hat{\alpha} \kappa \alpha \theta'$   $\hat{\epsilon}$  auto $\hat{\nu}$ , ős  $\hat{\epsilon} \sigma \tau i$

14. H  $\mu\eta\nu$ ] The MSS, here have three various readings,  $\epsilon l$  $\mu \dot{\eta}_i$ ,  $\epsilon i \mu \dot{\eta}_i$ , and  $\delta \mu \dot{\eta}_i$ . Of these three,  $\epsilon i \mu \dot{\eta}_i$ , unless (= Heb. 85 DN,  $im\ lo$ ), which is a form frequent in assertions in the LXX, is to be explained on the same principle as  $\epsilon i$  in iii, 11; iv. 3: that is, May I no longer be called true, unless I bless thee. And from this formula  $\epsilon i$   $\mu \gamma_i$ , and from the direct assertion  $\bar{\gamma}$   $\mu \gamma \nu$ , Verily (Gen. xxii. 16, 17), seems to have arisen the third composite variety,  $\epsilon i$   $\mu \gamma \nu$ , which is found here in A, B, D, and in R. The LXX have  $\bar{\gamma}$   $\mu \gamma \nu$  in the place to which St. Paul is referring (Gen. xxii. 17).

16. και πάσης αὐτοις ἀντιλογίας—δ δρκος and of all controversy (gainsaying, or contradiction) to them, an end for confirmation and assurance, is an Oath; literally, the Oath.

Observe the order of the words here; especially the emphatic word Oath kept for the last place; cp. vii. 22. Observe also the article  $\delta$  before  $\delta \rho \kappa os$ , the Oath. The Oath to which the litigants resort, and which is appointed and constituted by Law for the purpose of maintaining Truth, Equity, and Peace, which are essential to Human Society, puts an end to contradictions which would otherwise be interminable. A very important text in reference to the theological question concerning the nature and obligation of Oaths. See above on Matt. v. 34.

17. 'Εν ϕ̃] On which principle, or in which respect. Cp.

Winer, § 48, p. 346; above, ii. 18.

- ἐμεσίτευσεν ὅρκω] intervened, as a Mediator, with an Oath, between Himself and Abraham.

If the covenant had been between a man and Abraham, the man who was a covenanting party would have called God to witness, that what he, the covenanting party, promised to Abraham, was true.

Almighty God, therefore, condescending to Abraham, and conforming Himself to human usage with regard to oaths, called, as it were, Himself to Witness, and so came between Abraham and Himself with an Oath, for greater assurance to Abraham.

18. διὰ δύο πραγμάτων] through two things; i. e. the Promise and the Oath. Theodoret.

 - ἐν οἶs ἀδύνατον ψεύσασθαι Θεόν] in which it is impossible for God to lie. Οὐδὲν ἀδύνατον παρὰ τῷ Θεῷ, εἰ μὴ τὸ ψεύσασθαι. Clem. Rom. 27.

παράκλησιν] comfort.
 της προκειμένης ελπίδος] the Hope lying before us. Not the thing hoped for, but the Hope itself, the Christian Grace.

The sense of the whole is, God desiring to show more abundantly to us, the heirs of the Promise, the immutability of His Counsels, intervened between Abraham and Himself with an Oath, in order that by means of two things, in which it was not possible for Him, Who is God, to lie, we, who have fled, as it were, for refuge from a Storm, to take hold of the Hope lying before us, as of an Anchor laid out of the Ship in which we are, the vessel of the Church, may have strong comfort.

The Metaphor is evidently derived from Navigation. The Apostle represents himself and other Christians, as Mariners in a Ship tossed in a tempest, such as that through which he himself had passed in his voyage toward Rome; and as laying out Anchors by cables from the ship, so as to steady her in the storm, and to prevent her from falling upon rocks. See note on Acts xxvii. 29, 30, where the words ἀγκύρας ἐκτείνειν, to lay out anchors from the ship, afford the best illustration of the phrase προκειμένην έλπίδα here, i. e. the Hope laid out as an Anchor by cables from the Ship.

This metaphor from Navigation is quite in harmony with the manner and usage of the Apostle St. Paul, who had now made so many voyages in his missionary labours (cp. 2 Cor. xi. 25, written some years before), and often derives his illustrations from mari time affairs (see on Acts xx. 20, and above, 2 Thess. ii. 2; iii. 6. 2 Cor. viii. 20); and it confirms the belief of the Pauline origin of Hope is represented on Ancient Coins by the symbol of

19. ην ως άγκυραν κ.τ.λ.] which Hope we have as an Anchor of the Soul, unfailing, and stedfast, and reaching, as it were, by a cable laid out of the Ship, and not descending downward to an earthly bottom beneath the troubled waters of this World, but, what no earthly Anchor can do, extending upward above the pure abysses of the liquid sea of bright ether, and stretching by a heavenward cable even into the calm depths and solid moorings of the waveless harbour of Heaven; whither our Forerunner Jesus has entered, and to Whom the Church clings with the tenacious grasp of Faith (see on John xx. 17); as a Vessel is moored by a cable or an Anchor firmly grounded in the stedfast soil at the bottom of the sea.

Christ, our Forerunner, has carried our nature above the

The Jewish High Priest went alone into the Holy of Holies, and had no followers. But Christ, our High Priest and Head, is gone into the Heavenly Oracle; and where our Head is, there the Members are already in Hope, and will be for ever in deed.

By means of Christ's Ascension we have cast anchor-the Anchor of Hope-in heaven.

The Anchor, of which the Apostle speaks, with its cable stretched upward from Earth, and firmly grounded in Heaven, and safely mooring the Bark of the Church riding on the billows of this world, and tossed by its winds and storms, is indeed a bold metaphorical figure of Christian Hope; but his readers would indeed be νωθροί, if they did not acknowledge its beauty. been well paraphrased by two Commentators, quoted by Delitz, p. 259: "Nostram ancoram mittimus ad interiora cœli, sicut ancora ferrea mittitur ad inferiora maris" (Sedulius). "Spem nobis à cœlo porrexit Christus, tanquam funem à throno Dei ad nos usque demissum ac pertingentem, et rursus à nobis penetrantem usque ad interiora cœlorum et Dei sedem" (Faber Stapulensis). These passages seem to be grounded on similar ones in the earlier writers (Chrysostom, Theodoret, and others), which may be seen in Suicer's Thesaurus, v. ἄγκυρα, i. p. 63.

Compare also the examples of the figurative language of Ancient Christian Writers, derived from the equipments of a Ship, in the note above on Acts xxvii. 40.

- τοῦ καταπετάσματος] the Inner Veil which separated the Holy of Holies from the Holy Place (Exod. xxvi. 31-35; xxvii. 21. Levit. xxi. 23. Numb. iv. 5. See Matt. xxvii. 51. Philo,

VII. 1 a Οῦτος γὰρ ὁ Μελχισεδὲκ βασιλεὺς Σαλημ, ίερεὺς τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ a Gen 14. 18, &c.

de Vit. Mosis, iii. pp. 667. 669), through which the High Priest alone passed once a year with blood (Levit. xvi. 2), which he sprinkled on the Mercy-seat on the Great Day of Atonement, on which, though it was a day of Humiliation, the Jubilee (whenever it occurred) was to be proclaimed (Levit. xxv. 9), and thus typified Christ, the true High Priest, passing from this World, which was typified by the Courts of the Temple, into the Heavenly Holy of Holies, where God sits enthroned. See below, ix. 1-12. Joseph. Ant. Jud. iii. 7. 7, where the Author dwells on the typical character of the Tabernacle. Compare Primasius here, and Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. vi. p. 505, and the valuable work of Mather on the Types, p. 450, Lond. 1705.

20. κατά την τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ] according to the order of Melchizedek. The writer here returns from his digression on the sin and danger of Apostasy, to the argument introduced in connexion with the main topic of the Epistle, concerning the Priesthood of Christ, as typified by Melchizedek, and so, superior to the Levitical Priesthood (v. 10).

It has been well observed, that there is in the style of St. Paul a characteristic species of digression, which Dr. Paley calls "going off at a word" (on Eph. v. 12—15). Examples of it occur in 1 Cor. xv. 27. 2 Cor. ii. 14. Eph. iv. 8-11. Forster,

There is a similar episode here; and also in ii. 7-9;

iii. 2; xii. 18-29.

The mention of their spiritual insensibility had started a train of thoughts in his mind concerning the fearful sin and punishment of Apostasy, which had hurried him aside by the violence of its current; but he now returns to the point from which he had

This sudden transition, by which he is carried from the main stream of his argument, shows in a forcible manner the vehemence of his own emotions, and the overwhelming importance of the subject by which he was so powerfully affected.

The digression and return here, are (as Dr. W. H. Mill has observed, Prælect. p. 10) entirely in the manner of St. Paul, and confirm the ascription of the Epistle to him.

CH. VII. 1. Οὖτος γὰρ ὁ Μελχισεδέκ] For this Melchizedek, King of Salem, Priest of the Most High God.

The Apostle proves the superiority of Christ's Priesthood to that of the Levitical Dispensation, by Christ's relation to Mel-chizedek, as declared by God Himself—the Lord sware, and will not repent; Thou art a Priest for ever after the Order of Melchizedek-in Ps. cx. 4.

That Psalm was written when the Ark of the Covenant, and the seat of government, had been brought to Mount Sion (v. 2), from which His Kingdom was to be extended. David had then received the promise through Nathan of the eternal duration of his Seed. (2 Sam. vii. 12-16.)

Christ, as Universal King, and as Conqueror of all His enemies, and as seated at God's right hand, is the subject of the Psalm. But this Universal King and Conqueror is also a Priest for ever—not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchizedek. And this everlasting Priesthood is assured to Him by God with an Oath.

The Psalm opens with a declaration of Christ's Divinity, in the words, My Lord, as expounded by Christ Himself (Matt. xxii. 44, 45). It proclaims Him as a Judge and a Conqueror (vv. 5, 6), and no less clearly proclaims His Manhood and His sufferings, as His path to Glory. He shall drink of the brook in the way, therefore shall He lift up His head (v. 7).

This Psalm, therefore, is one of the most comprehensive prophecies of the Messiah contained in Holy Writ. Our Lord attests that it was written by the Holy Ghost, and there is no portion of the Old Testament so often quoted in the New. Cp. Hengstenberg on Ps. cx.

The question here arises-Who was Melchizedek?

Melchizedek was not Christ Himself (as has been supposed by some); for he is said to have been made like to Christ (v. 3), and no one is like himself.

Nor was he (as some have imagined) the Holy Spirit, nor an Angel; for he was a Priest, and every Priest is taken from among men (v. 1).

Besides, Melchizedek had a local residence at Salem. Cp. Cyril, in Catena, p. 525, and Epiphanius, on the Heresy of the Melchizedecians, Hæres. lv.

Nor was he Shem (as has been said by some), for Shem has a genealogy recorded in Scripture; but Melchizedek is without any such pedigree (v. 3).

All that is known of Melchizedek personally, is contained in Gen. xiv. 18-20, where he appears, as it were, suddenly, as King of Salem, bringing forth Bread and Wine, and pronouncing a blessing on Abram in the Name of the Most High God: and praising God for Abram's victory over the Kings; and Abram gives him tithes of all.

In what respects was Melchizedek a type of Christ?

(1) As a King; and in the names he bore as such, viz.

Melchi-zedek (מְלֶּבְיָבֶּיְהַ) = King of Righteousness, and also King of Salem (שֵׁלִים) = King of Peace.

So Christ is the Lord our Righteousness (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16. Cp. Ps. xlv. 6, 7; above, 2 Cor. v. 21. Rom. v. 21), and the Prince of Peace. Cp. Isa. ix. 6; xxxii. 17.

(2) As also a Priest (Gen. xiv. 18) anointed with oil after the Levitical ordinance, but yet "a Priest of the Most High God." So Christ.

- (3) Melchi-zedek was distinguished from the Aaronical Priests, as being also a King. They had no royal power. And the Jewish Kings might not intermeddle with the Priest's office. Uzziah was smitten with leprosy for doing so (2 Chron. xxvi. 18-21). But Melchizedek was both a King and Priest. And
- (4) As "Priest of the Most High God, Possessor of Heaven and Earth," not for any particular nation, as the Levitical Priests were; but for all nations; and as blessing Abram the "Father of the Faithful," in whose Seed "all Nations are blessed;" and as blessing him before he had received Circumcision.

So Christ is the One Universal Priest of all Nations and Ages of the World, and blesses them.

(5) In not offering the bloody sacrifices of slain animals, but in bringing forth Bread and Wine (Gen. xiv. 18), the fruits of the earth, for the refreshment of Abram and his people. Cp. Philo-Judæus, Sacr. Leg. Allegor. ii. p. 106.

So Christ is ever bringing forth Bread and Wine; He is ever refreshing His faithful people in the Holy Sacrament of His blessed Body and Blood, by means of the Creatures of Bread and Wine which He has appointed and instituted for that purpose. Cp. Cyprian, ad Cæcilium, Ep. lxiii. Clemens Alex., Stromata, iv. 25, p. 637, Potter. Tertullian, adv. Judæos, c. 3. Dean Jackson on the Creed, ix. c. x. Dr. Waterland's Charge on the Distinctions of Sacrifice, § 11, who says that Melchizedek bringing forth Bread and Wine for the refreshment of Abram, the Father of the Faithful, the typical Representative of the Faithful of all Nations, was regarded by the ancient Fathers as a Type of Christ, the great Priest of all faithful Israelites in every age and nation,-Who gives the true food from heaven in the Holy Eucharist. See also Professor Blunt, Early Fathers, p. 565.

(6) As blessing Abram, and so exercising a spiritual preeminence over him and his seed; and as receiving Tithes, in token of homage, and in recognition of his Priesthood, from Abram; and in him from Levi himself, and from the Levitical Priesthood who would afterwards proceed from his loins.

So Christ, the Great Universal Everlasting High Priest, in ascending from this world into heaven, lifted up His Hands over the Apostles, the Heads and Patriarchs of the Spiritual Israel, and blessed them, and so was parted from them (Luke xxiv. 50, 51), and He ever liveth in heaven as our Priest to make intercession for us. (Heb. vii. 25.)

And He claims our homage and the offering of our substance in recognition of His Priesthood, for His honour and service, and for the maintenance of His Ministry. See on Gal. vi. 6. 1 Cor.

(7) Melchizedek was also a type of Christ, in that shadow of Eternity which the Holy Spirit in the Book of Genesis casts upon him. Unlike other great personages in the early records of Holy Writ, Melchizedek is introduced without any previous no-tice of his ancestry, or subsequent commemoration of his progeny. He stands alone. There is no mention of his father or mother, of his birth or death. He, the King of Righteousness and of Peace, appears only once for all, in the Volume of God's Word. He has no Predecessor or Successor; he has remained a Priest for ever; he has a typical Eternity. Chrys., Theophyl., Œcumen. Cp. Jackson on the Creed, vol. viii. p. 232. So Christ. In so far as He is a Priest He has no pedigree; but He remaineth a Priest

The Holy Spirit speaks only once in Holy Scripture concerning Melchizedek and his Priesthood; so Christ offered Himself once for all (Primasius); and by offering Himself on the cross, and by entering into the true Holy of Holies with His own Blood, He exhausted all the legal sacrifices of the Aaronical Priesthood, and became both Priest and Victim for all, even to the end of time (cp. Tertullian c. Jud. c. 14, and c. Marcion. v. 9); and also being made perfect through sufferings, He was inaugurated and enthroned as King of the world at the Right Hand

ύψίστου, 5 συναντήσας 'Αβραάμ ύποστρέφοντι ἀπὸ τῆς κοπῆς τῶν βασιλέων.

of God, where He now sitteth till all His enemies are made His footstool. (Ps. cx. 1.)

On this subject see the exposition of Chrys., Theodoret, and Theophyl. here; and Cyril Hierosol. (Caten. p. 144), and the interesting discourse of S. Cyril of Alexandria in Catena, p. 524 -545; and the notes above, on Genesis xiv. 18, 19.

- βασιλευς Σαλήμ] King of Salem. Another question occurs here;—

Where is Salem, of which Melchizedek was King?
Where is Salem, of which Melchizedek was King? (1) Many learned Expositors have maintained that it is the same place as Jerusalem.

This opinion is supported by the authority of ancient Hebrew and some Christian Interpreters. See Joseph. (Ant. i. 10. 2), and the authorities quoted by See Joseph. (Ant. 1. 10. 2), and the authorhers quoted by Jerome (Ep. 126, ad Evagrium, vol. ii. p. 570), who however was not persuaded of the truth of that opinion. Cp. Wetstein, and Smith's Dict. of Geog. ii. p. 17. Winer, R. W. B. ii. p. 78. Mill's Prælect. p. 32, and Lünemann here.

(2) But this opinion seems liable to grave objections. Jerusalem is never called Salem in the Book of Genesis, nor in any of the historical books of the Old Testament.

Nor does Jerusalem appear to have been called Salem in the Patriarchal times, or before the age of David. Its ancient name was not Jerusalem, but Jebus (Judges xix. 10, 11. Josh. xviii. 16. 28), and the Jebusites continued to dwell in it during the time of the Judges; and it was not finally taken from them till the time of David. (Cp. Josh. xi. 3; xv. 63. Judges i. 8. 21; xix. 10. 2 Sam. v. 6.) We do not find the word Salem applied to Jerusalem till the age of David, and that only once (Ps. lxxvi. 2),-not in history, but poetry,-if, indeed, it means Jerusalem there, which is not certain.

It is not surprising, that later Jewish Historians and Targumists should desire to identify the Salem of Melchizedek with Jerusalem.

But they are not trustworthy in such a matter as this. It is remarkable, that in their jealousy of the Samaritans they endeavoured to deprive Sichem in Samaria of the bones of the Patriarchs. (See on Acts vii. 16.)

And if Salem was in Samaria, then, under the influence of the same spirit, they would be ready to rob it also of Melchi-zedek, so eminent a type of Christ.

(3) Melchizedek was not priest of the Jews, nor of any particular family, but "of the Most High God, the Possessor of heaven and earth," the universal Father of all; and he was a type of Christ, not as a priest of the Jewish race after the order of Aaron, but as the Everlasting Priest and Universal King of all.

In this respect, it would not seem fitting, that Melchizedek should have been connected with the Jewish capital Jerusalem, where the Aaronical Priesthood ministered, and where the Levitical sacrifices were offered. It would seem to be more appropriate, that he should be associated with some other place, especially some place which might be regarded as a Gentile Jerusalem,-a religious sanctuary of all nations.

The surest method of arriving at the truth in this matter, is to examine what place is called Salem in that portion of the sacred record which alone records the history of Melchizedek,- namely, the Book of Genesis.

(4) In that Book he is not called King of Jebus, the ancient Jerusalem, nor does he present himself to Abram, near the site of that city.

In that Book, the name Salem (ロζή), in LXX Σαλλμ, as here, occurs twice; once in the history of Abram and Melchizedek, - the passage referred to by the Apostle here, Gen. xiv. 18.

Again, in the history of Abraham's grandson Jacob (Gen. xxxiii.18), where it is said that he came to Shalem or Salem, near Shechem or Sichem, and bought a parcel of a field there, and built an altar there, and called it El-Elohe-Israel.

(5) Therefore the Salem of the Book of Genesis appears to have been at, or near, Sichem. And it is called Sichem by S. Jerome, who lived in Palestine: " Salem civitas Sicimorum quæ est Sichem." And Epiphanius, Hæret. lv. 2, recites this opinion: "Some say that this Salem is a Salem in the place of Sicima (Shechem), opposite to Neapolis (Nablús)." See also Dr. Robinson's Biblical Researches in Palestine, who describes a site still called Salim, not far from Sichem, in the following words (vol. iii. sect. xiv.): "Shechem was a very ancient place, though we do not find it mentioned as a city until the time of Jacob. Abraham indeed first came, in the land of Canaan, 'unto the place of Shechem, unto the plain of Moreh' (Gen. xii. 6); and Jacob, on his return from Padan-Aram, came to Shalim, a city of Shechem, 'and pitched his tent before' (east of) the latter city. This corresponds to the present village of Sâlim. which lies east of Nablus, across the great plain. In this plain the Patriarch encamped, and purchased the 'parcel of ground' still marked by his well and the traditional tomb of Joseph. The whole valley of Nablus is full of fountains, irrigating it most abundantly, and for that very reason not flowing off in any large stream. The valley is rich, fertile, and beautifully green, as might be expected from this bountiful supply of water. The sides of the valley too, the continuation of Gerizim and Ebal, are studded with villages, some of them large, and these again are surrounded with extensive tilled fields and olive-groves; so that the whole valley presents a more beautiful and inviting landscape of green hills and dales than perhaps any other part of Palestine. It is the deep verdure arising from the abundance of water which gives it this peculiar charm, -in the midst of a land where no rain falls in summer, and where of course the face of nature, in the season of heat and drought, assumes a brown and dreary aspect."

(6) Now, as has been shown before (in the notes on Acts vii. 16, and on John iv. 5), this place, Sichem or Sychar, is the most remarkable of all the sites mentioned in the Old Testament in connexion with the History of the Patriarchs.

There it was, that "the Most High God" vouchsafed to make His first manifestation of Himself to Abram, when that Patriarch came into Canaan. See Gen. xii. 6, 7.

There it was, that Abram built his first altar to God.

There it was, that he purchased a plot of ground for a burialplace. (Acts vii. 16, and note.)

Sichem also was the first place, to which Jacob repaired, after his return from his banishment.

There also it was, that he purchased a plot of ground, and built an altar, which he called El-Elohe-Israel. (Gen. xxxiii.

There it was, that Joseph and his brethren were buried,even in preference to Machpelah or Hebron, the burial-place of Abraham.

St. Stephen lays special stress on that circumstance, as showing that the God of Abraham designed to reveal Himself to all nations, and to sanctify all places by His presence. (See note on Acts vii. 16.)

Finally (which is very important to be observed), when the Everlasting WORD of God took our flesh, and dwelt among us, He came to the same place in which Jehovah had revealed Himself to Abraham. It was at Sichem, that Christ chose to make the first revelation of Himself as the Messiah, or Anointed One of God, -the Priest and King of all people. He there manifested Himself as such to a woman, a Samaritan woman; a woman who had had many husbands; a woman, however, who hearkened to Christ, and professed her faith in Him, and brought her own fellowcitizens to Christ: a woman, therefore, who has always been regarded by ancient Christian Expositors as a signal type of the Church Universal,—coming to Christ from the Gentiles, and from the lords many of Heathenism, and believing in Him Whom the Jews rejected, and as bringing the world to Christ. See above on John iv. 7. 26-42.

There it was,-at Sichem, where God first showed Himself to Abram in Canaan, and where Abram had built his first altar,-that the Son of God declared that "the hour was coming when not at Jerusalem only, nor on that mountain Gerizim, but in all places, men should worship the Father." (John iv. 21.)

There it was, near the plot of ground which Jacob gave to Joseph, and where he dug a well of water (John iv. 5, 6. 12), that He revealed Himself as the true source of Living Water to all nations. (John iv. 10-14.)

There He proclaimed the truth of the prophecy, that "from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same," God's name should be great among the Gentiles, and in every place incense should be offered unto His name, and a pure offering; for My name shall be great among the Heathen, saith the Lord of Hosts. (Mal. i. 11.)

We need not therefore travel beyond the limits of the Book of Genesis for the site of Salem, of which Melchizedek was king.

He was king of that place which is called Salem in that And the facts mentioned in that book, that Sichem was near Salem, and that Abram had received a revelation from Jehovah at Sichem, and had erected an altar there, explain the circumstance that Abram was well known to Melchizedek, king of Salem, which was in the neighbourhood of Sichem, and that he therefore came out to bless Abram. And there is something of special interest in this circumstance, as showing that Melchizedek, the Priest of the Most High God, did not look on Abram as an intruder, and on his altar as schismatical, but acknowledged καὶ εὐλογήσας αὐτὸν, 2 ῷ καὶ δεκάτην ἀπὸ πάντων ἐμέρισεν ᾿Αβραὰμ, πρῶτον μεν έρμηνευόμενος βασιλεύς δικαιοσύνης, έπειτα δε και βασιλεύς Σαλήμ, ο έστι βασιλεύς εἰρήνης, 3 ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ, ἀγενεαλόγητος, μήτε ἀρχὴν ἡμερῶν μήτε ζωης τέλος έχων, ἀφωμοιωμένος δὲ τῷ Τίῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, μένει ἱερεὺς εἰς τὸ διηνεκές.

4 b Θεωρείτε δε, πηλίκος ούτος, ώ καὶ δεκάτην 'Αβραὰμ ἔδωκεν ἐκ τῶν ἀκρο- b Gen. 14. 20.

θινίων ὁ πατριάρχης.

5 ° Καὶ οἱ μὲν ἐκ τῶν υἱῶν Λευΐ τὴν ἱερατείαν λαμβάνοντες ἐντολὴν ἔχουσιν ς Num. 15, 21, 26. ἀποδεκατοῦν τὸν λαὸν κατὰ τὸν νόμον, τουτέστι τοὺς ἀδελφοὺς αὐτῶν, καίπερ Josh 14. 4. εξεληλυθότας εκ της οσφύος 'Αβραάμ' 6 d δ δε μη γενεαλογούμενος εξ αὐτῶν d Gen. 14. 20. δεδεκάτωκε τὸν 'Aβραὰμ, καὶ τὸν ἔχοντα τὰς ἐπαγγελίας εὐλόγηκε.  $^7$  Χωρὶς δὲ  $^{ m Rom. 4.1}_{
m Gal. 3.16}$ . πάσης ἀντιλογίας τὸ ἔλαττον ὑπὸ τοῦ κρείττονος εὐλογεῖται. 8 Καὶ ὧδε μὲν δεκάτας ἀποθνήσκοντες ἄνθρωποι λαμβάνουσιν ἐκεῖ δὲ, μαρτυρούμενος ὅτι ζῆ.

Abram's God as his own God, and blessed Abram as a worshipper of that God, Whose Priest he himself was.

He by his own name was King of Righteousness, and was king of a City whose name is Peace, and he was Priest of the Most High God. He brought forth Bread and Wine, and blessed Abram, the Father and Representative of the Faithful of every age, returning from a victory over heathen kings; and received from him Tithes of the spoil, in homage and acknowledgment of his Priesthood. He did all this to Abram, as Father of all true believers, before Abram was circumcised. He did this near that believers, before Abram was circumcised. He did this near that same place which the Most High God Himself had chosen in order to make the first manifestation of Himself to Abram,-not at Jerusalem, but at Sichem. He did this, near that place at which Abram built his first altar, and which was the first place to which Jacob came after his return from Padan-Aram, and to which the bones of the twelve Patriarchs,—the types of the twelve Apostles, the heads of the Universal Church of Christ,—were brought out of Egypt, and where they still rest in peace.

Melchizedek did these things near that place, to which He, of Whom he was a type, Jesus Christ, the Lord our Righteousness, the true Prince of Peace, came from Judæa, and in which He made the first revelation of Himself as the Messias, -not to the Jews, but to a Samaritan Woman, the type of the Gentile Church, which is to be gathered from all Nations, and which looks for Righteousness and Peace from Him alone Who is our Righteousness and Peace.

Melchizedek blessed Abram in that place, where the true Melchizedek lifted up His hands and blessed all Nations, and invited them all to Himself, by proclaiming that He has spiritual refreshment for all true Israelites; that whosoever drinketh of the water that He will give, shall never thirst, but the Water that He will give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life (John iv. 14); and by declaring, that God is a Spirit, present every where; and that He seeketh true worshippers not at Jerusalem merely (as the Jews supposed), nor at Gerizim, but in every place; and that He Himself is the promised Messias, the Anointed One of God, the King, the Priest, the Prophet, the World's Everlasting Melchizedek. He it is, in Whom alone all the seed of Abraham are blessed; it is He, Who stretches His divine hands from Heaven over them all, and blesses them. He it is, Who is ever feeding them all with Bread and Wine. He it is, Who ever liveth to make intercession for them; He, Who brought forth from the hearts and lips of those who heard Him at Sichem, that good confession, "We have heard Him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world" (John iv. 42).

3. ἀπάτωρ, ἀμήτωρ] without father, and without mother, recorded in Holy Scripture. So Sara is called ἀμήτωρ by Philo (i. 365), because her mother's name is not mentioned in the Bible. As man, Christ has no father; and as God, Christ has no mother.

See the preceding notes on this chapter.

— ἀγενεαλόγητος] without genealogy. Melchizedek has no pedigree in Holy Writ. In this respect he differs from the Levitical Priests, who derive their lineage from Aaron, and are studious to prove it. He has no predecessor or successor in his priesthood in Scripture. So Christ. "Who shall declare His generation?" See Acts viii. 33.

On the mode of arguing here used by the Apostle, it is to be observed, that the Hebrew Rabbis rightly inferred, that there is something significant in what is not said, as well as in what is said, in Holy Scripture. There is eloquence in its secrecy and reserve. There is inspiration in its silence. Thus the absence of any scriptural mention of the death of Cain was construed into an intimation of the duration of evil in this world. (Philo, i. 555.) VOL. II.-PART III.

Thus also the absence of any mention of an evening of the Seventh day has been regarded as an intimation of the neverending duration of the Sabbath of Eternity. See Augustine, Serm. 4, and de Civit. Dei, ad finem.

The Apostle expressly declares here that there was a divine meaning in the Silence of Scripture, not recording the birth, parentage, and death of Melchizedek, as compared with the Priests of the line of Aaron, and that this Silence prophesies of Christ.

This important Apostolic declaration opens to our view a new field of biblical research—the Inspiration of the Silence of Scripture. This is a subject which deserves careful consideration. will, perhaps, be one of the blessed employments of a higher state of existence to recognize and admire the Wisdom of God, not only in what He has revealed in His Holy Word, but also in what He has kept secret from men on earth, in order that He may unfold it to them in heaven.

- ἀφωμοιωμένος] So Elz. with A, B, K, and κ. Some recent Editors have adopted ἀφομοιωμένος with C, D, E, I.

 — εἰς τὸ διηνεκές] continually; extending forwards perpetually. See x. 12, διηνεκὲς (from διὰ and ἐνείκω, ἐνέγκω) ἐπιμηκὲς, Είγm. Mag. in Ps. xlviii. 15, where the LXX have εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας. Symmachus has εἰς τὸ διηνεκές. Melchizedek abides a Priest continually, because he stands alone in Scripture, without any mention of any successor in his Priesthood; and because his Priesthood is continued in the Priesthood of Christ, "Who ever liveth to make intercession for us.'

4. πηλίκος] how great. See Gal. vi. 11.

- καὶ δεκάτην] even a tithe.
- ἐκ τῶν ἀκροθινίων] from the prime spoils; i. e. the 'spolia opima,' regarded as first-fruits, the best and chiefest spoils, which fell to the share of Abram and the kings as captains of the host. Τὰ τοῦ πολέμου ἀριστεῖα, καὶ τὰς τῆς νίκης ἀπαρχάς. Philo, in Caten. p. 549.

—  $\delta \pi \alpha \tau p d \rho \chi \eta s$ ] Observe the measured rhythm of the sentence, and the gravity and dignity of its structure, reserving the last place for the emphatic words δ πατριάρχης. Cp. the similar instances in St. Stephen's speech, Acts vii. 16. 43, and Gal. iii. 1.

5. Kal οἱ μὲν ἐκ τῶν υἱῶν Λευΐ] And they indeed of the sons of Levi, who receive the priesthood, have a command to take tithe of the people, according to the law. St. Paul is declaring the various points in which the Levitical Priesthood was inferior to that of Melchizedek.

(1) They tithed their brethren, those of the same family and

But Melchizedek tithed Abram, the Patriarch of the whole Jewish race. See v. 8.

(2) The Levitical Priests are mortal.

But Melchizedek's Priesthood is immortalized in Christ.

(3) Melchizedek tithed the Levitical Priesthood itself in Abram. On the spiritual sense of this history, see above on Gen. xiv.

6. δεδεκάτωκε εὐλόγηκε] he hath tithed, and hath blessed. Cp. v. 9, δεδεκάτωται. Observe this use of the perfect tense, intimating that the act was done by Melchizedek, but its effect remains for ever in Christ typified by Melchizedek. See on v. 8.

Such seems to be the force of that tense here. See on 1 Cor. xv. 4. Cp. 2 Cor. i. 19. Col. i. 16. 1 Tim. vi. 17. Cp. IViner, § 40. 4, who gives, however, a somewhat different interpretation of the present text.

7. τὸ ἔλαττον] the less. Observe the neuter gender, describing the condition of the person blessed, in relation to the condition of him who blesses. The hierarchical state represented by Melchizedek was superior to that signified by Abraham. See v. 9.

8. μαρτυρούμενος ὅτι ζῆ] attested (in Holy Scripture) that He liveth; that is, is not dead officially, as other Priests die, who are

9 Καὶ, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν, διὰ ᾿Αβραὰμ καὶ Λευτ ὁ δεκάτας λαμβάνων δεδεκάτωται 10 ετι γὰρ εν τῆ ὀσφύϊ τοῦ πατρὸς ἦν, ὅτε συνήντησεν αὐτῷ ὁ Μελχισεδέκ.

f Gal. 2. 21.

11 Εὶ μὲν οὖν τελείωσις διὰ τῆς Λευϊτικῆς ἱερωσύνης ἦν, ὁ λαὸς γὰρ ἐπ' αὐτῆς νενομοθέτηται, τίς ἔτι χρεία κατὰ τὴν τάξιν Μελχισεδὲκ ἔτερον ἀνίστασθαι ίερέα, καὶ οὐ κατὰ τὴν τάξιν 'Ααρων λέγεσθαι; 12 μετατιθεμένης γὰρ τῆς ίερωσύνης, έξ ἀνάγκης καὶ νόμου μετάθεσις γίνεται. 13 Έφ' δυ γὰρ λέγεται ταῦτα, φυλης έτέρας μετέσχηκεν, ἀφ' ης οὐδεὶς προσέσχηκε τῷ θυσιαστηρίω. 14 ε Πρόδηλον γάρ, ὅτι ἐξ Ἰούδα ἀνατέταλκεν ὁ Κύριος ἡμῶν, εἰς ἣν φυλὴν περὶ ἱερέων οὐδὲν Μωϋσῆς ἐλάλησε.

15 Καὶ περισσότερον έτι κατάδηλόν έστιν, εἰ κατὰ τὴν ὁμοιότητα Μελχισεδὲκ ανίσταται ίερευς έτερος, 16 ος ου κατά νόμον έντολης σαρκίνης γέγονεν, αλλά κατά δύναμιν ζωής άκαταλύτου. 17 h μαρτυρείται γάρ, "Οτι σὺ ίερεὺς εἰς τὸν αίωνα, κατά την τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ.

18 ' Αθέτησις μεν γαρ γίνεται προαγούσης έντολης δια το αὐτης ἀσθενες καὶ ανωφελές· 19 k οὐδεν γαρ ετελείωσεν ο νόμος, επεισαγωγή δε κρείττονος ελπίδος, δι ής έγγίζομεν τῷ Θεῷ.

<sup>20</sup> Καὶ καθ' ὄσον οὐ χωρὶς ὁρκωμοσίας. <sup>21 1</sup>οἱ μὲν γὰρ χωρὶς ὁρκωμοσίας είσιν ίερεις γεγονότες, ὁ δὲ μετὰ ὁρκωμοσίας, διὰ τοῦ λέγοντος πρὸς αὐτὸν, h Pa. 11) 1. ch. 5. 6.

g Isa. 11. 1. Matt. 1. 2. &c Luke 3. 33. Rom. 1. 3.

i Rem. 8 3. Gal. 4. 9. k Gal. 3. 24. ch. 9. 9. Acts 13. 32. Rom. 3. 20, 21. Eph. 2. 18. & 3. 12. ch. 4. 16. 1 Ps. 110. 4.

made after the order of Aaron, but he liveth for ever. Christ, Who is made after the order of Melchizedek, and so, as it were, continues for ever the sacerdotal life and functions of Melchizedek.

9. ωs έπος είπειν] so to speak; 'ut ita dicam;' a phrase used to soften and qualify what may seem a paradox.

Theophyl.

10. ἔτι γὰρ ἐν τῷ ὀσφύῖ τοῦ πατρὸς ἦν] Levi was as yet in the loins of his father Abram when Abram was blessed by Melchizedek; for Isaac had not yet been born or conceived. Theodoret.

11.  $\ell \pi^{\lambda} = \hat{n} \hat{n} \hat{n} \hat{n}$  in its time, and under its influence and sway. On this use of  $\ell \pi^{\lambda}$ , see on Mark ii. 26; and above, i. 1,  $\ell \pi^{\lambda}$ έσχάτου των ήμερων. 1 Pet. i. 20. 2 Pet. iii. 3. Elz. has αὐτη, but αὐτης is in A, B, C, D\*, E\*, and is received by Lach., Bleek, Tisch., Lünemann.

 νενομοθέτηται) hath received the Law. Cp. viii. 6. Matt.
 xi. 5, πτωχοὶ εὐαγγελίζονται. Winer, § 30, p. 333. Elz. has νενονομέθητο, but the reading in the text is in A, B, C, D*, and so Lachm., Bleek, Tisch., Lünemann.

— τίς ἔτι χρεία] what need would there have been any longer for that, which the Holy Spirit, speaking by David, who lived under the Law, declared to be needful, namely, that a different (έτερον) Priest should arise, according to a different order from that of Aaron? -  $o^{i}$  -  $\lambda \epsilon \gamma \epsilon \sigma \theta a i]$  to be called not according to the order of Aaron, but of Melchizedek. The negative  $o^{i}$  is not to be joined with the infinitive, but with the words immediately following it, which it denies. Cp. Winer, § 55, p. 428.

12. μετατιθεμένης γὰρ τῆς ἰερωσύνης] for when the Priesthood is being changed (observe the present tense), a change also of the Law takes place, because the Law limits the Priesthood to the family of Aaron alone.

And this change certainly would not take place unless such a change were needful. For the Law is confessedly from God, and could not therefore be changed, unless He, Who is all-Wise, so willed it. The cessation of the Law had therefore been announced by the same Prophecy which proclaimed the failure of the Priesthood, by pre-announcing the succession of a different Priest, not to be constituted after the order of Aaron, but after a different order, that of Melchizedek. And the Priesthood, which was pre-announced in that Prophecy, is the Priesthood of Christ.

13. 'Eg' or He, with regard to Whom these things are spoken, namely, The Messiah.

He proceeds with the proof-

That the Levitical Priesthood was to be superseded, and That Jesus Christ is the Priest pre-announced by David. This is evident, because

(1) The Messiah, or Anointed Priest, prc-announced by David in the 110th Psalm, was not to be of the order of Aaron, and therefore not of the Tribe of Levi, but after the order of Melchizedek, who was both a Priest and King.

(2) The Messiah was to be of the tribe of Judah, the Kingly
 e. So Micah had prophesied, v. 2.

(3) These Prophecies have been fulfilled in Jesus Christ.

He was not of the Tribe of Levi, but He has arisen from the tribe of Judah. Matt. i. 2; ii. 4-6.

14. έξ 'Ιούδα ἀνατέταλκεν δ Κύριος ἡμῶν] our Lord halh arisen, like a Star, or Day-spring. 'Ανατολή is the word used in the LXX in Jer. xxiii. 5; xxxiii. 15. Zech. iii. 8; vi. 12, and is said with reference to His Name, "Vir, Nomen Ejus Oriens" (see on Luke i. 78), and also to His name as the Branch. See on Matt. ii. 23.

 περὶ ἐερέων οὐδέν] nothing concerning Priests, but much concerning Kings. (Gen. xlix. 10.) Elz. has οὐδεν περὶ ἱερωσύνης, but ἰερέων is in A, B, C*, D*, E, and is received by Lach., Bleek, Tisch., Lünemann, &c.

No promise was made of the Priesthood to Judah. Uzziah, the King, was stricken with leprosy for invading the Priest's office. Theodoret.

He has arisen from Judah. Probably the two Gospels (of St. Matthew and St. Luke) containing the Genealogies of Jesus had now been published; and therefore it was manifest to all that our Lord had sprung of Judah.

15. Kal περισσότερον έτι κατάδηλόν έστιν] And it is still more abundantly manifest, that the Levitical Priesthood is imperfect, and therefore transitory, and liable to be superseded (see v. 11) if, as is the case, a different (ἔτεροs) Priest ariseth, i.e. is preannounced as arising, like to Melchizedek. On this use of the

The present tense, see Matt. ii. 4, ποῦ ὁ Χριστὸς γεννᾶται;
16. σαρκίνης] So A, B, C, D, I.—Elz. σαρκικῆς. See I Cor.
iii. 1. 2 Cor. iii. 3. The reading in the text is also preferable, because it is not to be supposed that St. Paul could condemn the because it is not to be supposed that St. Paul could condemn the Law, as if it were carnal; indeed he expressly disclaims such a notion. (Rom. vii. 14) But what he means is, that the Law is σάρκινος (carneus), temporary, liable to change, and so is not to be compared to the Priesthood of Christ, which is Eternal.

17. μαρτυρείται] So A, B, D*, E*.—Elz. μαρτυρεί.

18, 19. 'Αθέτησις—τῷ Θεῷ] for a cancelling indeed,—on the one hand,—of a foregoing and foreleading (προαγούσης) commandment takes place, or ensues (γίνεται), by reason of its realness and insufficiency (for the Lay of Moses made anothing weakness and insufficiency (for the Law of Moses made nothing perfect); but (be), on the other hand, by way of compensation, and of more than compensation, for that cancelling of the Levitical Commandment which led the way, there takes place also (\gamma\text{vive}\tau) a superintroduction of a better Hope by the Incarnation and Gospel of Christ,—by which we draw nigh to God;—which we could not do by the Law, which reminded us of our sinfulness and consequent alienation from God, but provided no compete for it. The Gospel is a better to be better to be the comment of the com remedy for it. The Gospel is a bringing-in of a better covenant upon the Law, which went before as our guide. It is the superinduction of a better hope, through which we approach near to God. Observe the contrast between προάγουσα, applied to the Law, and ἐπεισαγωγή (superinduction), applied to the

 Α has ἐγγίζωμεν here. Cp. Rom. v. 1.
 Καὶ καθ' ὕσον] Another evidence of the permanence of Christ's Priesthood. Aaron was consecrated by Moses, but Christ was consecrated by God Himself with the solemnity of an Oath.

"Ωμοσε Κύριος καὶ οὐ μεταμεληθήσεται Σὺ ίερεὺς εἰς τὸν αἰωνα κατά την τάξιν Μελχισεδέκ, 22 m κατά τοσούτο κρείττονος διαθήκης γέγονεν mch. 8. 6. έγγυος Ἰησοῦς.

23 Καὶ οἱ μὲν πλείονές εἰσιν ἱερεῖς γεγονότες διὰ τὸ θανάτω κωλύεσθαι παραμένειν,  $^{24}$  ὁ δὲ, διὰ τὸ μένειν αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν αίωνα, απαραρωτον εχετ ..., σύνην  $^{25}$  η δθεν καὶ σώζειν εἰς τὸ παντελὲς δύναται τοὺς προσερχομένους δὶ η Rom. 3. 24. 1 Tim. 2. 5. ch. 9. 24. 1 John 2. 2.

26 ° Τοιούτος γὰρ ἡμιν καὶ ἔπρεπεν ἀρχιερεὺς, ὅσιος, ἄκακος, ἀμίαντος, κεχω- ο Rom. 8. 34. ρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἁμαρτωλῶν, καὶ ὑψηλότερος τῶν οὐρανῶν γενόμενος <sup>27 ρ</sup>ος & 9.2.1. ούκ έχει καθ' ήμέραν ανάγκην, ώσπερ οι αρχιερείς, πρότερον ύπερ των ίδιων [ Lev. 9. 7. άμαρτιῶν θυσίας ἀναφέρειν, ἔπειτα τῶν τοῦ λαοῦ· τοῦτο γὰρ ἐποίησεν ἐφάπαξ ch. 5. 3. 9. 6mm. 6. 10. καυτον ἀνενέγκας. <sup>28 η</sup> Ο νόμος γὰρ ἀνθρώπους καθίστησιν ἀρχιερεῖς ἔχοντας η ch. 2.10. ἀσθένειαν ὁ λόγος δὲ τῆς ὁρκωμοσίας τῆς μετὰ τὸν νόμον Τίὸν εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα τετελειωμένον.

VIII. 1 \* Κεφάλαιον δε έπὶ τοις λεγομένοις, τοιούτον έχομεν άρχιερέα, ος a Emp. 1.20. εκάθισεν εν δεξια του θρόνου της μεγαλωσύνης εν τοις ουρανοίς, 2 5 των άγίων ch. 1. 3. & 6. 20. λειτουργὸς, καὶ τῆς σκηνῆς τῆς ἀληθινῆς, ῆν ἔπηξεν ὁ Κύριος, οὐκ ἄνθρωπος.  $\frac{\text{b ch. 9.8, 11, 24.}}{\text{$\&$ 10.21.}}$

3 ° Πας γαρ αρχιερεύς είς τὸ προσφέρειν δωρά τε καὶ θυσίας καθίσταται · Eph. 5. 2. οθεν αναγκαίον έχειν τὶ καὶ τοῦτον, ὁ προσενέγκη.

4 Εἰ μὲν οὖν ἦν ἐπὶ γῆς, οὐδ' ἀν ἦν ἱερεὺς, ὄντων τῶν προσφερόντων κατὰ τὸν who answers for us, and by whom we έγγίζομεν τῷ Θεῷ, "become near (έγγὺς) to God" (v. 19).

22. διαθήκης | Covenant : not Testament.

— 'Ιησοῦς] Jesus: the name is reserved, for sake of emphasis, to the last place in the sentence (see above on Gal. ii. 1, and Heb. vi. 16), and on that word—Jesus—the mind rests.

11eb. vi. 10), and on that word—Jesus—the mind rests.
23. Kal ol μèν πλείονες] They indeed are many Priests made.
Another proof of the superiority of Christ's Priesthood is to be recognized in its permanence. There is a double contrast between the Els &ν 'Iερεὺs, the One Priest, Christ, who exists for ever, and the πλείονες ἱερεῖς γεγονότες, the many Priests of the Levitical Law, who are made and constituted in succession from time to time.

24. ἀπαράβατον ἔχει τὴν ί.] hath His priesthood never passing by; not transitory, like that of the Levitical Priests.
25. εἰς τὸ παντελές] to the uttermost. The παντελὲς, perfectness, or completeness of Christ's one offering, in its extent, duration. tion, and efficiency, is opposed to the ἀτελές or imperfectness of the Law. (vv. 11. 19.) He is able to save to the uttermost those that approach God through Him, living ever, as He does, in order to make intercession for them.

26. καὶ ἔπρεπεν] also became us. Kaì, restored from A, B, D, E, adds to the force of the sentence. His preceding reasons for the permanence of Christ's Priesthood were derived from the nature of the case considered objectively. He now adds a very powerful and affecting argument from the peculiar suitableness of that Priesthood to us,—our sorrows, our weaknesses, and our sins.

21. καθ ἡμέρω] daily. 'Ο ἀρχιερεὐs εὐχὰs καὶ θυσίας τελῶν καθ ἐκάστην ἡμέραν. Philo, ii. p. 321.

- ἐφάπαξ] once for all: 'semel et simul.' 'Einmal für allemal' (Schleusner). Cp. Rom. vi. 10; and below, x. 10. 12.

The Levitical Priests offered sacrifices often, and they offered for themselves, as well as for the people; but Christ did none of these things, because He was without sin, and because the One Sacrifice once offered by Him is sufficient for the salvation of all.

They offered other sacrifices, but He offered Himself. Theo-t. "Unum est sacrificium Christi, et semel oblatum; et sufficit in sempiternum ad tollenda omnia peccata credentium." Primasius.

28. Υίδν εἰς τὸν αίῶνα τετελειωμένον] The Son Who is perfected for evermore.

The word τετελειωμένος, as applied here to Christ's Ever-lasting Priesthood, is to be explained from the Septuagint Version, where it describes the consecration and inauguration of the Priest. See on Lev. xxi. 10, τετελειωμένου ἐνδύσασθαι τὰ ἱμάτια, and above, ii. 10; v. 9; below, x. 14.

CH. VIII. 1. Κεφάλαιον] The sum total, which results, or accrues, as an aggregate upon what is being said by us.

The κεφάλαιον of a numerical account is the sum total, which collects together and combines, as in a head, all the constituent members or items. See Thucyd. iv. 50; Aristot. Metaph. vii. 1; and the ancient Expositors on Eph. i. 10.

So the sum total of our discourse concerning the Priesthood of Christ may be represented in the following proposition, τοιουτον έχομεν ἀρχιερέα κ.τ.λ. Κεφάλαιον is not an accusative, but nominative, in apposition with the following sentence. Cp. Winer, § 59, p. 472. 2. των άγιων] of the Holy of Holies. See ix. 8. 12. 25; x.

λειτουργόs] a Minister—literally, for the people (λεως, λήϊτον, λείτον). See on Acts xiii. 2.
 - ἀληθινήs] true, real, as distinguished from what is figurative, ideal, or counterfeit. See Luke xvi. 11; and on John xvii.

rative, ideal, or counterlest. See Luke xvi. 11; and on John xvii.
3. On the Tabernacle as a type, see above on Exodus xxv.
4. El μèν οῦν (so A, B, D*,—Elz. γὰρ) ἦν ἐπὶ γῆs] If, however, Christ had been upon earth, He would not even have been a Priest now, while there still exist those who offer the appointed gifts according to the Law. That is, If Christ had not entered into the true Holy of Holies, namely, into the area itself. He, Who is of the Tribact Judgh and not of the search. itself, He, Who is of the Tribe of Judah, and not of the sacerdotal Tribe of Levi, would not even have been a Priest at all, much less would He have been, as He is, our great High Priest; because there still exist, not as yet visibly superseded and discharged by God, Priests of the Tribe of Levi, to which God in the Law limited the Priesthood; and they still minister in His Temple on earth at Jerusalem, and offer those sacrifices which God has prescribed in the Law.

St. Paul says that "He would not even have been a Priest," i. e. in the Jewish sense of the word-as a sacrificer of victims on the altar of God.

If He had been on earth, that is, if He had not died, and been taken up into heaven after His Resurrection, He would not have been a Priest; for there were other Priests still existing, and a schism would have arisen between Him and them. But He died, in order to offer the sacrifice of Himself; and having risen from the dead, He ascended into heaven, in order that He might bave Heaven as His Sanctuary, wherein to officiate as a Priest. Chrysostom.

The Apostle says this by way of self-defence, in order that he may show to the Hebrews that he does not disparage the Lene may show to the Hebrews that he does not disparage the Levitical Law, but rather regards it with veneration, as being a figure of heavenly things. Hence he admits that it would have been superfluous to call Christ a Priest, if He were on earth, inasmuch as there are still Priests who discharge the priestly function according to the Levitical Law. Theodoret.

But here (adds Theodoret) the following question may be

Since the Levitical Priesthood has now come to an end (by the total destruction of the Temple at Jerusalem, and the cessaNum. 8. 4. Acts 7. 44. Col. 2. 17. ch. 10. 1.

νόμον τὰ δῶρα, 5 ο οἴτινες ὑποδείγματι καὶ σκιὰ λατρεύουσι τῶν ἐπουρανίων, καθώς κεγρημάτισται Μωϋσής μέλλων έπιτελείν τὴν σκηνὴν, Ορα γάρ, φησι, ποιήσεις πάντα κατά τὸν τύπον τὸν δειχθέντα σοι ἐν τῷ ὅρει.

e 2 Cor. 3. 6. ch. 7. 22.

6 ° Νυνὶ δὲ διαφορωτέρας τέτυχε λειτουργίας, ὅσω καὶ κρείττονός ἐστι διαθήκης μεσίτης, ήτις έπὶ κρείττοσιν έπαγγελίαις νενομοθέτηται.

f ch. 7. 11, 18.

<sup>7 ε</sup>Εὶ γὰρ ἡ πρώτη ἐκείνη ἦν ἄμεμπτος, οὐκ ἂν δευτέρας ἐζητεῖτο τόπος· g Jer. 31. 31, &c. 8 g μεμφόμενος γάρ αὐτοῖς λέγει, Ἰδού, ἡμέραι ἔρχονται, λέγει Κύριος, καὶ συντελέσω έπὶ τὸν οἶκον Ἰσραὴλ καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον Ἰούδα διαθήκην καινην, ο οὐ κατὰ την διαθήκην, ην ἐποίησα τοῖς πατράσιν αὐτῶν, ἐν ἡμέρα ἐπιλαβομένου μου τῆς χειρὸς αὐτῶν, ἐξαγαγεῖν αὐτοὺς ἐκ γῆς Αἰγύπτου ὅτι αὐτοὶ οὐκ ἐνέμειναν ἐν τῆ διαθήκη h Jer. 31, 33, &c. μου, κάγω ήμέλησα αὐτων, λέγει Κύριος. 10 h ὅτι αὕτη ἡ διαθήκη, ἡν διαθήσομαι τῶ οἴκω Ἰσραὴλ μετὰ τὰς ἡμέρας ἐκείνας, λέγει Κύριος. διδούς νόμους μου είς την διάνοιαν αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ καρδίας αὐτῶν

i John 6. 45, 65. ch. 10. 16. 1 John 2. 27.

Zech. 8. 8.

k Rom. 11. 27. ch. 10. 17.

έπιγράψω αὐτοὺς, καὶ ἔσομαι αὐτοῖς εἰς Θεὸν, καὶ αὐτοὶ ἔσονταί μοι είς λαόν. 11 καὶ οὐ μὴ διδάξωσιν έκαστος τὸν πολίτην αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἔκαστος τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, λέγων, Γνῶθι τὸν Κύριον ὅτι πάντες είδήσουσί με ἀπὸ μικροῦ αὐτῶν ἔως μεγάλου αὐτῶν. 12 κ Οτι ἴλεως ἔσομαι ταῖς ἀδικίαις αὐτῶν, καὶ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ἀνομιῶν αὐτῶν οὐ μὴ μνησθῶ ἔτι.

13 Έν τῷ λέγειν καινὴν πεπαλαίωκε τὴν πρώτην τὸ δὲ παλαιούμενον καὶ γηράσκον έγγυς άφανισμού.

a Exod. 25, 8.

ΙΧ. 1 ε Είχε μεν οθν και ή πρώτη δικαιώματα λατρείας, τό τε άγιον κοσμικόν.

tion of its Ritual), and since He, Who is the High Priest according to the order of Melchizedek, has offered His sacrifice, and has made other sacrifices to be needless, how is it that the Priests of the New Covenant perform the Mystical Ministration (i. e. of the Holy Eucharist)?

The answer is this. It is well known to all who have been instructed in divine things, that we do not offer any other sacrifice; but we execute the commemoration of that one saving sacrifice, which Christ offered on the Cross (οὐκ ἄλλην τινὰ θυσίαν προσφέρομεν, ἀλλὰ τῆς μιᾶς ἐκείνης καὶ σωτηρίου τὴν μνήμην ἐπιτελοῦμεν). For the Lord Himself commanded us to do this, saying, "Do this in remembrance of Me." And this we do, in order that by contemplation we may call to mind the figure  $(\tau \nu \pi \sigma \nu)$  of the sufferings which He underwent for us, and may stir up our love toward our Benefactor, and await the fruition of the good things to come. Theodoret.

The Apostle could never have written the words in this text, if he had believed, that the Priests of the Christian Church continually immolate and offer Christ Himself corporeally in the sacrifice of the Mass; and his words effectually refute that doctrine of the Romish Church. See below on x. 12.

Elz. has  $\tau \tilde{\omega} \nu$  lepéw before  $\pi \rho o \sigma \phi \epsilon \rho \delta \nu \tau \omega \nu$ , but these words are not in A, B, D\*, E\*, nor in  $\aleph$ , and are a gloss, and have been rejected by Lach, Bleck, Tisch, Linemann, on the authority of those MSS, and some ancient Versions.

5. ὑποδείγματι] sketch; preparatory and faint outline, and delineation. Theophyl.

κεχρημάτισται] has been commanded by the divine voice.
 See Matt. ii. 12. 22. Luke ii. 26. Acts x. 22.

See Matt. ii. 12. 22. Luke ii. 26. Acts x. 22.

6. τέτυχε] So A, D*, I, K, and R*, Athan., Œcum., Theophyl., and Lach., Bleek, Tisch., Lün. Cp. Lobeck, Phryn. p. 395. Winer, p. 82. Elz. has τέτευχε.

— μεσίτης] a Mediator. Å word applied to Moses (Gal. iii. 19, 20), and to Christ, 1 Tim. ii. 5, and below (ix. 15; xii. 24).

7, 8. Εἰ γὰρ ἡ πρώτη - καινήν] Compare Justin Martyr in his dialogue with Trypho the Jew, c. 34.

8-12. '1δοὺ-μνησθῶ ἔτι] From Jer. xxxi. 31-34, or xxxviii. 31-34, in LXX, with scarcely any variation, except that of λέγει Κύριος for φησί Κύριος, as the reading is in Cod. Vat. of the LXX; but the Codex Alexandrinus has λέγει, as cited in

v. 8, not in v. 9. On this quotation, see the notes on Jeremiah.

For συντελέσω LXX has διαθήσομαι. The original has της.

Cp. x. 16, 17, where the text is quoted with the reading διαθήσουαι.

9. κὰγὼ ἡμέλησα αὐτῶν] On the accuracy of this rendering, see Bp. Pearson, Præfat. in LXX, Minor Works, ii. p. 261, ed. Churton.

10. καρδίας] K has καρδίαν, in the singular, and so N.

11. οὺ μὴ διδάξωσιν] they shall not teach at that season. See Winer, § 56, p. 450. — πολίτην] his fellow-citizen. So the best authorities. Elz. has πλησίον. The Cod. Alex. of LXX has ἀδελφὸν in the first member of the sentence, and πλησίον in the second.

13.  $\pi \in \pi \alpha \lambda \alpha (\omega \kappa \in ]$  He hath made old; which God, its author, could do. And so the sense is more forcible than 'He declared it to be old.' By speaking of a new Covenant He, ipso facto, antiquavit, or superannuated, the former Covenant. His Word, which first made it, has also unmade it.

CII. IX. The Apostle proceeds to show the excellency of the One Sacrifice offered once for all by Christ, and presented by Him to the Father in the Heavenly Temple; and its superiority over all the Levitical Sacrifices offered in the Tabernacle, all which were typical; see Exodus xxv., and Introduction to Levit.

1. Εἶχε μὲν οὖν] The first Covenant also had indeed, it is true, &c. He does not disparage what the first Covenant possessed; on the contrary, he acknowledges that its ritual and furniture were from God. But he shows that they were designed by Him to serve a purpose which is now fulfilled.

He therefore uses the past tense, εἶχε, 'it had.' Chrys. This is carefully to be borne in mind, because it has been objected by some writers in modern times (e. g. Bleek) that the Author of this Epistle is chargeable with inaccuracies in this chapter, in his description of the Temple Service.

Hence they have inferred, that the Author cannot be St. Paul, who was brought up at Jerusalem at the feet of Gamaliel, and was deeply versed in all that concerned the Law and Ritual of his own Nation. And by the same reasoning, it would also follow that the Author cannot have been inspired by God, Whose worship He misrepresents; and that therefore this Epistle is not a part of God's Word. But the fact is, that the Author is not describing the worship of the Temple, but of the Tabernacle, and he shows his knowledge of his subject, by not confounding the one with the other. See below on v. 4.

- ἡ πρώτη] The first, i. e. Covenant. Elz. adds σκηνή, not in the best MSS. Besides, the word πρώτη does not agree with Σκηνή, or Tabernacle, understood, but with Διαθήκη, Covenant, referred to in the preceding verse.

- δικαιώματα λατρείαs] ordinances of worship. δικαιώματα

 $^2$  δ Σκηνη γὰρ κατεσκευάσθη ή πρώτη, ἐν ἢ ἤ τε λυχνία, καὶ ἡ τράπεζα, καὶ  $^b$  Exod. 25. 80. ή πρόθεσις τῶν ἄρτων, ἤτις λέγεται ἄγια·  $^3$   $^c$  μετὰ δὲ τὸ δεύτερον καταπέτασμα  $^c$  Exod. 26. 31, 33. σκηνὴ ἡ λεγομένη ἄγια ἁγίων,  $^4$   $^d$  χρυσοῦν ἔχουσα θυμιατήριον, καὶ τὴν κιβω-  $^d$  Exod. 16. 33.  $^6$  40. 3. 6 Exod. 26. 16. 16. 21.  $^6$  Εχου. 16. 16. 21. 16. 16. 21. τὸν τῆς διαθήκης περικεκαλυμμένην πάντοθεν χρυσίω, ἐν  $\mathring{\eta}$  στάμνος χρυσ $\mathring{\eta}$   $\overset{\& 25. 10, 16, 21.}{\overset{\& 25. 10, 16, 21.}{\overset{\o}}}}}}}}}}}}}}}$

are literally what has been regarded as right and just, δεδικαίωται, by a superior authority, and has been commanded as such, and therefore it corresponds in LXX to the Hebrew Fin (chok) or Statute. (Exod. xv. 25, 26. Lev. xvv. 18.) Hence δικαιώματα = νόμος, Suid. See above on Rom. i. 32; ii. 26; v. 16; viii. 4.

— τό τε ἄγιον κοσμικόν] and the holy place which was worldly, i. e. a figure of this visible world; as distinguished from, and yet introductory to, the invisible Heavenly region typified by the Oracle, or Holy of Holies, parted off from the Holy Place by the Veil. Cp. Exod. xxvi. 33, διοριεί τὸ καταπέτασμα ἀνάμεσον τοῦ ἀγίου (the Holy place) καὶ ἀνάμεσον τοῦ ἀγίου τῶν ἀγίων. Cp. Exod. xxvi. 31. 33—37.

The Holy Place was an image of our Earthly Πολιτεία, or Conversation; the Holy of Holies represented the future Life in Heaven. Theodoret, Ecumen. See also Joseph. Ant. iii. 6. 4, and iii. 7. 7; B. J. v. 5. 4.

The Holy Place is also called κοσμικόν, worldly (cp. Titus

The Holy Place is also called  $ko\sigma\mu ko\nu$ , worldly (cp. 11618 ii. 12), as being visible and material, and so temporary, and distinguished from the Heavenly Sanctuary. See Bp. Pearson on the Creed, as quoted above, vi. 19.

2.  $\Sigma \kappa \eta \nu \dot{\eta} \gamma \dot{\alpha} \rho \kappa . \tau . \lambda .]$  For a Tabernacle was constructed, namely, the first, or anterior portion of it. 'H  $\pi \rho \dot{\omega} \tau \eta$  here signifies the anterior court, or Holy Place; see vv. 6, 7, where it is contrasted with the δευτέρα σκηνή, the second tabernacle, or Holy of Holies. On this use of πρωτος, as primus, in Latin, for prima pars, the first portion, see Valck. p. 550.

— λυχνία—τράπεζα] The Golden Seven-Branched Lamp, and the Table. See the notes on Exod. xxv. 30—39, Jahn, Arch. Bibl. §§ 327. 332, as to their typical character, and Mather on Types, pp. 388—411. Cp. below, Rev. i. 12, 13. 20; ii. 5; xi.

4, on the word λυχνία, as an emblem of a Church.

 $-\dot{\eta}$  πρόθεσιs τῶν ἄρτων] the (weekly) selting forth, or exhibition of (twelve) loaves on the Table (panes propositionis), in two rows of six each, before the Lord. See Exod. xxv. 30. Lev.

xxiv. 5. Cp. Winer, § 67, p. 559.
— ἄγια] Holy Place. Neuter plural, and therefore to be accentuated on the antepenultimate syllable, and contrasted with the neuter plural, ἄγια ἄγίων, immediately following. Theodoret.
In the Septuagint, and also in the works of Philo Judæus, the word ἄγια in the plural is often used synonymously with ἄγιον in the singular, to signify the Holy Place.

3. το δεύτερον καταπέτασμα] the second veil, namely, the veil of purple-blue, purple-red, and crimson wool, and twisted byssus, and embroidered with Cherubim, and supported on four columns of acacia-wood, with silver feet; which parted off and concealed the Holy of Holies from the Holy Place, and was rent in twain at the Crucifixion. See on Matt. xxvii. 51. Mark xv. 38. Luke xxiii. 45; and cp. above, vi. 19.

It is called the second veil, to distinguish it from the other curtain at the entrance of the Holy Place. Cp. Philo, Vit. Mos. iii. p. 669, where he calls the Holy Place the Πρόναον εἶργόμενον δυσίν ὑφάσμασιν. Τὸ μὲν ἔνδον ὃν καλεῖται καταπέτασμα, τὸ δ' ἐκτὸς προσαγορεύεται κάλυμμα. The second veil, or καταπέτασμα, was made, he says (iii. p. 667), Ίνα ἐπικρύπτηται τὸ ἄδυτον, that it might conceal the inner Shrine, or Oracle, the άγιω λοίων, or Holy of Holies.

 4. χρυσοῦν – θυμιατήριον] a golden censer, or thuribulum, in which the High Priest offered incense on the great day of Atonement in the Holy of Holies. On other days he used a silver "Omnibus diebus reliquis suffitum facturus de altari Sanctum Sanctorum intulit," says the Mishna. Ioma, iv. 4. Wetstein, p. 414. Cp. Lev. xvi. 12—14. And so Maimonides and Abarbanel. Cp. in Buxtorf, Hist. Arcæ, p. 76.

The word θυμιατήριον is not to be rendered 'Altar of Incense,' with some Expositors; but it is to be rendered ' Censer,' with the Vulg., Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic, and English Versions, and with Theophylact (on v. 7), Anselm, Aquinas, and with Villalpandus, Grotius, Wetstein, Bengel, Reland, Deyling, J. G. Michaelis, Böhme, Sluart, Klee, Stier, and others. For (1) This is the sense which the word θυμιατήριον bears in the Septuagint Version, the best exponent of the Apostle's words.

(2 Chron. xxvi. 19. Ezek. viii. 11.)

(2) But the Golden Altar of Incense is called both in the Old and New Testaments the θυσιαστήριον τοῦ θυμιάματος. (Exod. xxxi. 8. Luke i. 11.)

(3) Besides, the Golden Altar was not in the Holy of Holies, but stood before the Veil, between the Table of Shewbread and the Golden Candlestick. (Exod. xxx. 1-10. 34-37; xxxvii. 25-29; xl. 5. 26. Josephus, Ant. iii. 6. 8. B. J. v. 3. 5.)

(4) The allegations of some recent writers (Bleek, and even Lünemann, p. 232), that the Writer of this Epistle was not acquainted, from personal knowledge, with the ritual and sacred furniture of the Temple, or that this Epistle is not an original work, and that the supposed inaccuracy is to be attributed to its Translator (Jahn, Arch. § 332), serve only to invalidate the conclusions grounded on such suppositions.

(5) It is true that there is no mention of a Golden Censer to be specially used on the Day of Atonement, in the description of the furniture of the Holy of Holies, in the Old Testament. But the existence of such a Censer may be inferred as probable from Lev. xvi. 12-14, describing the ritual of that great Day of Expiation: and it appears to be very likely, that some particular Censer should have been set apart and reserved (as the Rabbis affirm) for the religious service of that solemn Anniversary. Cp.

Reland, Antiq. i. 5.

(6) The Incense, which was offered before the Mercy-Seat by the High Priest when he entered with blood into the Holy of Holies, and sprinkled the Mercy-Seat with blood, and which covered the Mercy-Seat with a cloud, was a type of the Prayers to be offered in Heaven by Christ, having entered into the true Holy of Holies with His Own Blood. Cp. Rev. v. 8; viii. 3, 4. Ps. cxli. 2.

And the uses of such a Golden Censer as here described, seem to be specially typical of the work of Christ, our great High Priest and Mediator, ministering within the Veil, in the Heavenly Holy of Holics, where He ever liveth to make intercession for us (vii. 25), and is ever offering the Incense of our Prayers in the Golden Censer of His own merits, by which they are made acceptable to God, "In sanctis Sanctorum erat Thuribulum, quia Christus in secretis patriæ cœlestis consistit, per Quem Orationes nostras ad Deum Patrem dirigimus." Primasius.

(7) It has indeed been said by some, that it is a strange thing that no mention should be made here of the Golden Altar of Incense, and therefore it is alleged that θυμιατήριον ought to be understood as specifying that Altar.

But neither is there any mention here of the great Brazen Altar of Burnt Offering.

The fact is, the Author has his eye fixed on one great sacerdotal Act, viz. the entrance of the High Priest into the Holy of Holies on the Day of Atonement, as foreshadowing Christ's Perpetual Intercession in Heaven.

He therefore dwells mainly on what was done by the High Priest within the Veil. And inasmuch as it is remarkable, that the incense to be offered on the Day of Atonement was not to be kindled on the Golden Altar of Incense before the Veil, but was to be taken by the Priest in his hand into the Holy of Holies, and to be first kindled within the Veil (see Lev. xvi. 12), therefore most fitly the Author waives all mention of the Golden Altar of Incense in reference to that Act, and speaks only of the Golden Censer in which the Incense was kindled within the Veil in the Holy of Holies. Cp. Lightfoot, Temple Service, chap. xv., where a striking proof is given of the sin of kindling the Incense outside the Veil.

Observe further, that the Writer places this golden θυμιατή. pion in the fore-front of all the objects that he enumerates as connected with the Holy of Holies; he also puts the epithet golden in the first place of the sentence; thus intimating that he is speaking of something which was of primary use in the Day of Atonement, and which was distinguished as golden from other objects of a like kind, which were not golden. This is in perfect harmony with what the Rabbinical authorities testify concerning the one censer of gold, used by the High Priest on one day in the year-the Great Day of Atonement, and Expiation.

On this question, cp. Stuart, Excursus xvi.

-  $\kappa$ ιβωτόν] On the Ark as a type, see on Exod. xxv. 10-22. - εν η in which, i. e. in the Ark; that is, the things here mentioned were in it originally; as may be inferred from Exod. xvi. 34; xxv. 16. Num. xvii. 10. Deut. x. 2. 5, as the Jews themselves assert. See R. Levi, Ben Gerson, on 1 Kings viii. 10, in Wetstein, p. 414. Schöttgen, p. 973.

The fact that these things were not in the Ark in later times, is no proof of any inaccuracy in the writer, but rather it is έχουσα τὸ μάννα, καὶ ἡ ράβδος 'Ααρων ἡ βλαστήσασα, καὶ αἱ πλάκες τῆς διαθήκης, 5 ο ύπεράνω δε αὐτης Χερουβίμ δόξης κατασκιάζοντα τὸ ίλαστήριον e Exod 25. 18. περί ὧν οὐκ ἔστι νῦν λέγειν κατὰ μέρος.

f Num. 28. 3. g Exod. 30. 10. Lev. 16. 2, 15, 34. ver. 25.

h John 14. 6. ch. 10. 19, 20.

i Acts 13, 39. Gal. 3, 21.

k Lev. 11. 2. Num. 19. 7, &c.

6 Τούτων δε ούτω κατεσκευασμένων, είς μεν την πρώτην σκηνην διαπαντός εἰσίασιν οἱ ἱερεῖς τὰς λατρείας ἐπιτελοῦντες. 7 ε εἰς δὲ τὴν δευτέραν ἄπαξ τοῦ ένιαυτοῦ μόνος ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς, οὐ χωρὶς αἵματος, ὃ προσφέρει ὑπὲρ ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τῶν τοῦ λαοῦ ἀγνοημάτων 8 η τοῦτο δηλοῦντος τοῦ Πνεύματος τοῦ άγίου, μήπω πεφανερῶσθαι τὴν τῶν ἀγίων ὁδὸν, ἔτι τῆς πρώτης σκηνῆς ἐχούσης στάσιν 9 ήτις παραβολή είς του καιρου του ενεστηκότα, καθ' ην δώρά τε καὶ θυσίαι προσφέρονται, μη δυνάμεναι κατά συνείδησιν τελειώσαι τον λατρεύοντα, 10 k μόνον ἐπὶ βρώμασι καὶ πόμασι, καὶ διαφόροις βαπτισμοῖς, δικαιώματα σαρκὸς, μέχρι καιρού διορθώσεως έπικείμενα.

1 ch. 3. 1. & 4.14. & 6. 20. & 8. 1. m Acts 20. 28. Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14. ch. 10. 10. 11 Ι Χριστός δὲ παραγενόμενος ἀρχιερεὺς τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν, διὰ τῆς μείζονος καὶ τελειοτέρας σκηνής, οὐ χειροποιήτου, τουτέστιν οὐ ταύτης τής κτίσεως, 12 m οὐδὲ δι' αἵματος τράγων καὶ μόσχων, διὰ δὲ τοῦ ἰδίου αἵματος, cn. 10, 10. 1 Pet. 1. 19. Rev. 1. 5. & 5. 9. εἰσῆλθεν ἐφάπαξ εἰς τὰ ἄγια, αἰωνίαν λύτρωσιν εὑράμενος.

an evidence of his knowledge and of his candour. He is describing the Holy of Holies in the Tabernacle, as it was constituted by Moses, and not as it existed in the Temple in his own day; and the circumstances here mentioned prove that he was well acquainted with the differences between the two, and that he was not desirous of disparaging the dignity of the Levitical Priesthood; but, on the contrary, would give it credit for ornaments which it had originally possessed, but which it did not then retain.

It is a fortunate circumstance, that Jewish Writers them-selves bear witness to the accuracy of the Apostle in this matter; and their evidence may suffice to refute the charges of ignorance and error brought against him in this place by some professors of Christianity, who assume that they themselves are better in-formed, concerning the Ritual of the Ancient Worship of God, than an Author whose work has been received by the Church of God, as written by the Inspiration of God.

God, as written by the Inspiration of God.

— ἡ βάβδος 'Ααράν'] the rod of Aaron, the badge of the priesthood. See Num. xvii. 10. Clemens Rom. i. 43.

5. ὑπεράνω—ἰλαστήριον] the Cherubim of Glory (of the Glorious Presence or Shechinah) shadowing the Mercy-Seat. See Exod. xxv. 18, on Rom. iii. 25, and Lightfoot, Temple Service, chap. xxxviii., and the notes above on Exod. xxv. 13—22. It is observable, that Josephus uses both the masculine and feminine article with the word Χερουβεῖς, but Philo says always τὰ Χερουβίμ. Delitz.

τὰ Χερουβίμ. Delitz.

6. είς μεν την πρώτην] into the first court. The Jewish Historian thus writes-" All persons, who have seen the construction of our Temple, know of what sort it was, and that its holiness It has four courts round it, and each of these had their peculiar guardians assigned to them according to our had their peculiar guardians assigned to them according to our Law. Into the outermost court all strangers might enter. Into the second, all Jews and their wives when free from legal impurities. Into the third, male Jews, if pure. Into the fourth (the  $\pi\rho\omega\tau\eta\nu$   $\sigma\kappa\eta\nu\dot{\eta}\nu$  in the present verse), the Priests alone, in their sacerdotal attire. Into the inmost shrine ( $\delta\delta\nu\tau\sigma\nu$ ), the High Priest only, clad in his robes of office." Josephus, c. Apion. ii. 8. Cp. Lightfoot on the Temple Service, chap. i. vol. i. p. 898.

7. eis δε την δευτέραν] but into the second. See Bp. Pearson on the Creed, pp. 406, 407, Art. iv., and the notes above on Levit. xvi., for the Christian sense of these Levitical provisions.

8. μήπω πεφανερῶσθαι την τῶν ἀγίων δδόν] that the way into the Holiest of all had not yet been made manifest. The entrance to the Holy of Holies was obstructed and intercepted by the Veil, which was rent in twain at the Crucifixion, in order to show that the way to that which was typified by the Holiest Place, namely, the way to Heaven itself, had now been laid open by the sacrifice of Christ, Who is "the Way" (John xiv. 6). See on Matt. xxvii. 51; and on Levit xvii., which is to be carefully read here.

31; and on Levit xvi., which is to be carefully fead here. On  $\tau \delta$   $\tilde{\alpha}\gamma \iota \alpha$ , the Holy Place,  $\kappa \alpha \tau$   $\tilde{\epsilon} \delta \chi \delta \gamma \nu$ , that is, the Holiest of all, see above, v. 1, and below, vv. 12. 24, 25; x. 19; xiii. 11; and on the genitive, cp. Matt. x. 5,  $\delta \delta \delta \nu$   $\tilde{\epsilon} \theta \nu \hat{\omega} \nu$ .

9.  $\tilde{\eta}\tau \iota s$   $\kappa.\tau.\lambda$ .] which first Tabernacle was a parable or likeness, or type, designed to instruct the worshippers and people generally (Chrys.) for the season (καιρον) then present; and to lead them up to something beyond itself.

- καθ' ήν] according to which, -- either Parable, or Tabernacle. Elz. has  $\kappa \alpha \theta^{\circ} \delta \nu$ , but  $\hat{\eta} \nu$  is in A, B, D, and is received by Scholz, Lachm., Bleek, and Lünemann.

- κατά συνείδησιν] according to the conscience, or inner man. They could only alter his external condition in the eye of men, and in reference to legal impurities, but could not justify him in foro conscientiæ, and reconcile him to God.

10. μόνον κ.τ.λ.] The sense of this sentence is to be cleared up by the restoration of δικαιώματα with Scholz, Lachm., Bleek, Lünemann, for δικαιώμασιν, the reading of Elz., and by the rejection of καl after βαπτισμοΐς.

The meaning is, that the gifts and sacrifices offered in the Tabernacle, being only parabolical of a higher and spiritual Ritual, could not make the worshipper perfect; that is, could not bring him to spiritua! manhood, but were designed as accommodations to his unripe condition in a state of spiritual childhood (see above, v. 13, 14, on the sense of the word  $\tau \epsilon \lambda \epsilon \omega s$ ), and being merely δικαιώματα σαρκός, ordinances of the flesh (not of the spirit); ordinances of an external, corporeal, fleshly kind, and dealing only with the outer man, and being in respect to, or upon, meats, and drinks, and divers washings, and imposed and imperative on the people only until the season of reformation. Cp. Winer, \$ 67, p. 559. The word \*πικείμενα is used with reference to the burdensome character of these enactments. \*Ecumen\*. See Acts xv. 10. 28, and cp. Lünemann here.

The genitive σαρκὸς expresses the characteristic property and element of the δικαιώματα, or ordinances.

element of the δικαιώματα, or ordinances.

11.  $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu \mu \epsilon \lambda \lambda \delta \nu \tau \omega \nu \ \, a \gamma a \theta \hat{\omega} \nu \, ]$  But Christ having now come, a High Priest of the future good things, i. e. of the good things that were prefigured by the Law, and were looked for as future by the holy men who lived under the Law. On this use of  $\mu \dot{\epsilon} \lambda \lambda \omega \nu$ , see  $\ddot{n}$ . 5. Observe the article here, and in the following words,  $\tau \hat{\eta} s \mu \dot{\epsilon} (\hat{s} \rho \omega s) \kappa a 1 \tau \dot{\epsilon} \lambda \dot{\epsilon} c \tau \dot{\epsilon} \rho a s \sigma \kappa \mu \dot{\gamma} \hat{\eta} s$ , of the greater and wave project Tabornacle, which was twiffed by the Tabornacle, which was twiffed by the Tabornacle. more perfect Tabernacle, which was typified by the Tabernacle in the wilderness. Christ has passed through the Heavenly Holy Place into the true Holy of Holies, not made by human hands (see the use of χειροποίητα in v. 24), nor of this earthly building, even to the Right Hand of God. See above, notes on Lev. xvi. — οὐ χειροποίητου] not made with hands. Cp. Acts vii. 48; xvii. 24; and below, v. 24.

12. οὐδέ] nor yet.

— δι' α'[ματος τράγων] by blood of goals; the means with which and by which the High Priest was permitted to enter into the Holy of Holies on the Day of Atonement. Lev. xvi. 14, 15.

- διὰ δὲ τοῦ ἰδίου αίματος] but through His own blood shed once for all. Observe, he does not say here σὺν αίματι, but δι' αίματος, through blood, as through a door.

— ἐφάπαξ] once for all: in accordance with that eternal redemption (αἰωνίαν λύτρωσιν), that purchasing, which is to be valid for ever, being effected with the infinite cost of His Own Blood, paid as the price of our redemption from that captivity and imprisonment in which we were held, as insolvent debtors, on account of our sins; and for our admission to our heavenly inheritance. See on Matt. xx. 28. Eph. i. 14.

Christ is said, in these and other passages of Scripture, to have paid our ransom ( $\lambda \dot{\nu} \tau \rho o \nu$ ), in order to redeem us from captivity. See above on Eph. i. 7. 14.

tivity. See above on Epn. 1. 7. To whom was this ransom paid?

 $^{13}$   $^{\rm n}$  Eί γὰρ τὸ αἷμα τράγων καὶ ταύρων, καὶ σποδὸς δαμάλεως ῥαντίζουσα  $^{\rm n}$   $^{\rm Lev.\ 16.\ 14.\ 10.}$  τοὺς κεκοινωμένους, άγιάζει πρὸς τὴν τῆς σαρκὸς καθαρότητα,  $^{14}$   $^{\rm o}$  πόσω μᾶλλον  $^{\rm ch.\ 10.\ 4.}$   $^{\rm o}$   $^{\rm Luke\ 1.\ 75.}$   $^{\rm ch.\ 10.\ 4.}$   $^{\rm o}$   $^{\rm Luke\ 1.\ 75.}$   $^{\rm ch.\ 10.\ 4.}$   $^{\rm o}$   $^{\rm Luke\ 1.\ 75.}$   $^{\rm ch.\ 10.\ 4.}$   $^{\rm ch.\ 10.\ 13.}$   $^{\rm Eph.\ 5.\ 2.}$   $^{\rm Eph.\ 5.\ 2.}$   $^{\rm Eph.\ 5.\ 2.}$   $^{\rm Eph.\ 5.\ 2.\ 14.}$   $^{\rm Eph.\ 5.\ 2.\ 14.}$

 $^{15}$  γ Καὶ διὰ τοῦτο διαθήκης καινῆς μεσίτης ἐστὶν, ὅπως θανάτου γενομένου  $^{1}$  John 1. 7. Rev. 1. 5. p Rom. 3. 25. & 5. 6. 1 Tim. 2. 5. ch. 3. 1. & 12. 24. 1 Pet. 3. 18.

Some of the Ancients said, to Satan, who held us in bondage.

Origen, in Matt. tom. xvi. p. 726. See Delitz. here, p. 385. But though we through our sins had reduced ourselves into bondage and captivity to Satan, yet it is not to be imagined that Satan derived any advantage from the price paid by Christ for our deliverance. The prison in which we were held, though Sutan was its gaoler, was not the property of Satan. All things are God's. Tophet is His (Isa. xxx. 33); the instruments of death are His (Ps. vii. 13. Prov. xv. 11). Compare the note on 1 Cor. vi. 20; xv. 26, and see Greg. Nazianz. Orat. xlv. p. 862. By sin we contract a debt to God. We are held as His prisoners till we pay that debt. We are His bondsmen. And the payment, which Christ, of His own free will, made for our deliverage with the inferite price of His own Placed was could be deliverance, with the infinite price of His own Blood, was paid to God. God Himself, in His infinite love, provided this payment, in order that we might be delivered, at the same time that the imnutable Attribute of His own Divine Justice was fully satisfied. And therefore Christ is said in Scripture to offer Himself to God (see v. 14); and God is also said to have delivered up His own Son. (Rom. viii. 32.) See below on v. 22.

The feminine form alwala is found only here, and in 2 Thess. ii. 16, and is one of the connecting links of this Epistle with the received Epistles of St. Paul.

On the form εδράμενος, see Winer, § 15, p. 79.

The Aposte uses the middle form, ebpduevos, 'having procured for himself,' to intimate, that, as Christ's death was voluntary, so the effect of it was glorious to Himself, as well as to us. He thus obviates the Jewish objection, that it was inconsistent with the Messiah's dignity to die.

13. Et  $\gamma \partial \rho$   $\tau \partial$  alfua  $\tau \rho d\gamma \omega \nu$ ] For if the blood of goats and bulls (Levit. xvi. 14–18), and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean (Num. xix. 2. 17), sanctifieth to the purity of the flesh in ceremonial relations to the service of God, so that they who before were unclean are thenceforth admitted to His worship and service, and to the benefits afforded thereby-how much more shall the blood of Christ, which is the essential reality that was typified by all those sacrifices, and gave them all the efficacy that they possessed—who through the Eternal Spirit offered Himself spotless to God, cleanse your conscience from dead works so as to serve the Living God?

Cp. Justin M. c. Tryph. c. 13, who hence argues for the virtue of Christian Baptism, deriving its efficacy from the Blood of Christ, and cleansing those who come to it with Repentance and Faith in His Blood; and he therefore calls it τὸ σωτήριον λουτρον τοις μεταγινώσκουσι, και μηκέτι αίμασι τράγων και προβάτων ή σπόδω δαμάλεως, ή σεμιδάλεως προσφοραίς καθαριζομένοις, άλλὰ πίστει διὰ τοῦ αίματος τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ τοῦ θανάτου

14. διὰ Πνεύματος αἰωνίου] through the Everlasting Spirit, the Holy Spirit.

So Theodoret and other ancient Expositors, and the Syriac, Vulgate, and Coptic Versions, and D, which has άγίου here.

The truth of this ancient interpretation appears from the following considerations:-

The Apostle is here speaking of the atoning, sanctifying, and cleansing efficacy of Christ's Blood. The emphatic words here are ἄμωμον, spotless,—a word specially applied to Victims which were examined (μωμοσκοπούμενα) by the Priests, to see whether they had any blemish (see on iv. 13, and the passages of Philo quoted here by Loesner, p. 437),—and καθαριεί, shall cleanse. Now, this efficacy was due to the operation of the Holy

Christ, as man, derived His sanctity-and His consequent ability to offer to the Father a spotless sacrifice, and to cleanse us from all sin-from God the Holy Ghost.

Thus then we recognize a testimony to the distinct Personality of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and to the great Truth that each of the Three Persons of the Ever-Blessed Trinity had His proper office, and that they all co-operated, in the work of our Redemption.

This important doctrine has been well expressed by Theodoret here as follows: άμωμον ἐκεῖνο τὸ σῶμα τὸ Θεῖον ἀπετέλεσε Πνεθμα' πάντα γὰρ εἶχε τοῦ Θείου Πνεύματος χαρίσματα, καὶ ἐκτοῦ πληρώματος αὐτοῦ ἡμεῖς πάντες ἐλάβομεν. (John i. 16.) The Holy Ghost, who filled Him as Man in the Virgin's Womb, preserved Him from all sin, so that He might be for us an Immaculate Victim, and a sweet-smelling sacrifice to God. Pri-

To which we may add the words of our learned English Expositor of the Creed :-

The belief of Christ's conception by the Holy Ghost is necessary to prevent all fear or suspicion of spot in this Lamb; of sin in this Jesus. Whatsoever our original corruption is, however displeasing unto God, we may be from hence assured there was none in Him, in whom alone God hath declared Himself to be well pleased. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean (Job xiv. 4)? saith Job,-a clean and undefiled Redeemer out of an unclean and defiled nature? He whose name is Holiness, whose operation is to sanctify, the Holy Ghost. Our Jesus was like unto us in all things as born of a woman, sin only excepted, as conceived by the Holy Ghost.

This original and total sanctification of the human nature was first necessary to fit it for the personal union with the Word, Who, out of His infinite love, humbled Himself to become flesh, and at the same time out of His infinite purity, could not defile Himself by becoming sinful flesh.

Secondly, the same sanctification was as necessary in respect of the end for which He was made man,-the redemption of mankind; that, as the first Adam was the fountain of our impurity, so the second Adam should also be the pure fountain of our righteousness. God, sending His own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, condemned sin in the flesh (Rom. viii. 3); which He could not have condemned had He been sent in sinful flesh. The Father made Him to be sin for us, Who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him (2 Cor. v. 21); which we could not have been made in Him, but that He did no sin (1 Pet. ii. 22), and knew no sin. For whosoever is sinful wanteth a Redeemer; and he could have redeemed none, who stood in need of his own redemption. We are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ; therefore precious, because of a Lamb without blemish, and without spot (1 Pet. i. 19).
Our atonement can be made by no other High Priest than by Him Who is holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners (Heb. vii. 26). We cannot know that He was manifested to take away our sins, except we also know that in Him is no sin (1 John iii. 5). Wherefore, believing it is so, it is necessary to believe the original holiness of our human nature in the person of our Saviour; it is as necessary to acknowledge that by which we may be fully assured of that sanctity, His conception by the Holy Ghost. Bp. Pearson, Art. iii. p. 314.

— ἀπὸ νεκρῶν ἔργων] from dead works; works not done from faith in Christ, Who is Our Life, and without Whom we are dead.

Dead works are not only not meritorious, but, since they spring not from faith in Christ, Who is the source of all life to man, and to human actions, but proceed from the carnal elements of man's nature, such as pride, vain-glory, &c. in which man lies dead in the first Adam, therefore such works bring with them a moral pollution; and he who does them, needs to be cleansed from them; just as the Israelite under the Levitical Law required to be cleansed from touching a dead body. Num. ix. 6. 10. Hag. ii. 13. See Chrys.

The VATICAN MANUSCRIPT (Codex B) fails in the middle of the word καθαριεί here. It does not contain the remainder of this Epistle, nor that to Philemon, nor the Pastoral Epistles. Cardinal Mai, in his edition, has supplied Heb. ix. 14—27 from a MS. of the fifteenth century; and Heb. x.—xiii., and the Epistle to Philemon and Pastoral Epistles, from Cod. Vat. 1761 of the

15. διαθήκής καινής] of a Covenant that is New. Observe the order of the words. Cp. viii. 8, the only places in the New Testament where διαθήκη precedes καινή. Cp. xii. 24. Observe also the absence of the article.

The emphasis is to be laid on the newness of the  $\Delta \iota a\theta \eta \kappa \eta$ , not on its exact resemblance to the Old. The sense therefore is, And for this reason He is a Mediator of a Covenant which is New; i. e. He succeeds and supersedes Moses, the Mediator of the Old Covenant (Gal. iii. 19), in order that, a Death having είς απολύτρωσιν των έπὶ τῆ πρώτη διαθήκη παραβάσεων τὴν ἐπαγγελίαν λάβωσιν οἱ κεκλημένοι τῆς αἰωνίου κληρονομίας.

n Gal. 3, 5,

16 Όπου γὰρ διαθήκη, θάνατον ἀνάγκη φέρεσθαι τοῦ διαθεμένου 17 9 διαθήκη γαρ έπὶ νεκροῖς βεβαία, ἐπεὶ μή ποτε ἰσχύει ὅτε ζῆ ὁ διαθέμενος. 18 "Οθεν οὐδὲ  $^{\rm r}$  Exod. 24. 5, 6.  $^{\rm f}$  πρώτη χωρὶς αἴματος ἐγκεκαίνισται.  $^{\rm 19}$   $^{\rm r}$  Λαληθείσης γὰρ πάσης ἐντολῆς κατά τὸν νόμον ὑπὸ Μωϋσέως παντὶ τῷ λαῷ, λαβὼν τὸ αἶμα τῶν μόσχων καὶ τῶν τράγων, μετὰ ὕδατος καὶ ἐρίου κοκκίνου καὶ ὑσσώπου, αὐτό τε τὸ βιβλίον been effected for the redemption of the transgressions committed upon the First Covenant, they who have been called may receive the promise of the everlasting inheritance covenanted by God to Abraham and his seed in Christ.

On the sense of καινδς, as distinguished from νέος, see Eph.

iv. 23.

16, 17. "Οπου γὰρ διαθήκη] For wheresoever a Testament (properly so called) is, there a Death must of necessity be brought to pass (in order to give it force), namely, the death of the Testator. For a Testament is of force, on the parties being dead who make it; since it is never valid while the Testator liveth.

On φέρεσθαι, compare the use of the word φέρεται, as applied to extant writings contrasted with what are lost.

It may also have a forensic sense, like constare, said of what is brought forward judicially, and is established by legal evidence. See Hammond and Elsner.

On μήποτε, never, used subjectively as here, see Winer,

§ 55, p. 426.
This is a controverted passage;

Some have ventured to allege, that the Apostle here resorts to "mere Hellenistic play upon words." Others have charged him with sophistry; others with "feebleness of logic."

Some Expositors have maintained, that διαθήκη ought to be here rendered by Covenant, and not by Testament; and that dia-θέμενος means, 'the person included in the Covenant;' and that φέρεσθαι is equivalent to be borne, or endured. But such renderings as these do violence to the language, and have no foundation in ancient authorities.

Consider the scope of the Apostle's argument;

He is obviating an objection, and comforting those who were staggered by Christ's Death; and he shows that His Death was necessary, in order to give effect to His merciful dispositions in their behalf. Theodoret.

But how, it may be asked, can the Old Covenant, ברית (Berith), be called a Testament?

Because it conveyed an inheritance.

The reference to a Testament naturally follows from what he had just said concerning their inheritance. In His Covenant with the Israelites, God is, as it were, a Testator, Who devises, on the conditions of their obedience, the possession of a large and fruitful territorial Estate—the Land of Promise; the type of the heavenly Inheritance procured by Christ. Cp. Stuart and Delitz.

The Author is comparing the two Διαθήκαs; and it is only the New, which is expressly called by him a Διαθήκη in the twofold sense of Testament and Covenant.

He says that the latter Διαθήκη is New, καινη, not νέα. It is New, in this very sense of being promulgated as a Testament as well as a Covenant, and so differing from the Old.

The former was not originally promulgated as a Testament, although it had something of a testamentary character, and bore a typical witness to the Testamentary Character of the New Covenant; and was also itself, in a modified sense, a Testament; as conveying an inheritance; and as will be explained below.

Therefore, in v. 18, he does not repeat the word  $\delta \iota \alpha \theta \eta \kappa \eta$  after  $\dot{\eta} \pi \rho \dot{\omega} \tau \eta$ ; and in v. 19 he calls it an  $\dot{\epsilon} \nu \tau \sigma \lambda \dot{\eta}$ , or commandment, and introduces the person from Whom, and by whom (namely, God and Moses), the commandment came; and says, This is the blood of the Διαθήτη (not the blood of any Testator, but) which God commanded; not which He devised as a Tes-

He was writing in Greek to readers of Greek, and he shows that the Gospel was a Διαθήκη in a larger and more proper sense of the Greek word, than the Law was, as originally promulgated.

He also explains the inner prophetical meaning of the dedication of the First Covenant with Blood, and of the speech then uttered by Moses. Exod. xxiv. 5-8.

This exposition of the word Διαθήκη, which, in its proper Greek significance, means Testament (see Hesych., Suid., and other ancient Lexicographers, quoted by Schleusner and Suicer in voce), and only in a derivative sense signifies Covenant ( $\sigma v_0 = \theta \eta \kappa \eta \nu$ ), was the more reasonable, because it was a return to the primary meaning of the word; and also because Our Blessed Lord Himself, in the Gospels, uses the word Διαθήκη, just before His death, in instituting the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and in bequeathing to the Church that last legacy, which derives its force from the Death of the Testator, and where by speaking of a New Testament—"This is My blood of the New Testament"— He implies the existence also of an Old one. See Matt. xxvi. 28. Mark xiv. 24. Luke xxii. 20.

It may, therefore, be suggested for consideration, whether there is not a profound meaning in the Apostle's words here;

In the Divine Mind the Gospel is prior to the Law. Christ is the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world (Rev. xiii. 8. 1 Pet. i. 20). All the virtue of the Levitical Sacrifices was derived from the Death of Christ. He "came by Water and Blood" to the faithful in every age. (1 John v. 6.)
Thus the Levitical Covenant was dependent on, and was subsequent to, the Death of Christ, in reason, power, and effect, although not in time.

Accordingly, St. Paul declared, that the Scriptures of the Old Testament were able to make Timothy wise unto salvation, through Faith in Christ Jesus. See 2 Tim. iii. 15.

The Levitical Covenant viewed in this light, as founded on the sacred ground of the pre-ordained and pre-supposed sacrifice of Christ's Death, and as deriving all its efficacy from it, may, in a profound spiritual sense, be called a Testament.

In the Counsel and Decree of God, to Whom all things are present at once, Christ was already slain, when the Law was delivered from Mount Sinai; and all the Faithful, who were accepted by God, were foreseen and accepted in Christ from the beginning of the world. Hence the Apostle says (xi. 26) that Moses preferred the reproach of Christ to the riches of Egypt. Christ was the Paschal Lamb, by whose blood the Israelites were delivered from the sword of the destroying Angel. He was the Rock smitten in the Wilderness, from which the water flowed. (1 Cor. x. 4.) They who rebelled there, tempted Christ. (1 Cor. x. 9.)

Christ Himself was the Διαθέμενος Who covenanted with the Israelites. As God He could not die; but in the fulness of time He was to become Man, and as Man He was to die. The Covenant was grounded on His Death, foreseen and presumed; and all the virtue of the Covenant, which He made with the Israelites, flowed from His death. It would have been of no avail, if Christ had never died; it derived all its force from that death.

Thus the Old Covenant was itself a Testament. Christ was its Testator. He is the Giver of Both Testaments; they are both scaled by His Blood, and derive all their virtue from it.

It is not, therefore, without reason that the Church of Christ, following the suggestion of the Apostle, calls the Hebrew Scriptures the Old Testament.

They, as well as the Gospel, are a Testament from Christ; they receive all their saving efficacy from His Death. And whenever we speak of the Old Testament, we declare a solemn truth, we profess a fundamental article of Faith, which distinguishes us alike from Jews and Heathens; we declare that Both Testaments are from One and the Same Author, Who gives Laws to the world as God, and makes His Covenant to become a Testament by dying for us, in order that all who enter into Covenant with Him, and live as His children, may enjoy the heavenly inheritance, bequeathed to them by Him, and purchased for them by His Blood. Observe also, that as a Will is not opened till the Testator is dead, but is opened when he is dead, so the Old Testament in its types and prophecies, was sealed up till the Death of Christ, but it was opened and unfolded by that Death: on this subject, see the notes above, on Exodus xxiv. 6, 7.

19.  $a\dot{v}\tau\dot{v}$   $\tau\dot{v}$   $\beta_i\beta\lambda(iv-\dot{v}\dot{e}\dot{\rho}\dot{\rho}\dot{\omega}v\tau i\sigma\dot{e})$  He sprinkled the very Book itself of the Covenant (see v. 21). Moses sprinkled with Blood the Tabernacle and all the Vessels of the service as well as the People. (Exod. xxiv. 6–8.) By thus sprinkling those very things, by which the people sought to be cleansed, Moses, the Mediator of the Old Covenant, declared the imperfection of that Covenant, and he proclaimed that it could not cleanse, but needed itself to be cleansed by Blood, namely, by the Blood of Christ; and that, therefore, the bloody sacrifices enjoined in that Coveκαὶ πάντα τὸν λαὸν ἐρράντισε  $^{20}$  ° λέγων, Τοῦτο τὸ αῗμα τῆς διαθήκης, ἦς s Exod. 24. 8. ἐνετείλατο πρὸς ὑμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς,  $^{21}$  ° καὶ τὴν σκηνὴν δὲ καὶ πάντα τὰ σκεύη  $^{\text{Lex. d. 29. 36. 15}}_{\text{Lev. s. 15, 9.}}$  τῆς λειτουργίας τῷ αἵματι ὁμοίως ἐρράντισε.  $^{22}$   $^{\text{u}}$  Kαὶ σχεδὸν ἐν αἵματι πάντα  $^{\text{u}}_{\text{u Lev. 17. 11.}}$ καθαρίζεται κατά τον νόμον, και χωρίς αίματεκχυσίας οὐ γίνεται ἄφεσις.

23 Ανάγκη οὖν τὰ μὲν ὑποδείγματα τῶν ἐν τοῖς οὐρανοῖς τούτοις καθαρίζεσθαι, αὐτὰ δὲ τὰ ἐπουράνια κρείττοσι θυσίαις παρὰ ταύτας.

24 × Οὐ γὰρ εἰς χειροποίητα ἄγια εἰσῆλθε Χριστὸς ἀντίτυπα τῶν ἀληθινῶν, x Rom. 8. 34. άλλ' είς αὐτὸν τὸν οὐρανὸν, νῦν ἐμφανισθῆναι τῷ προσώπῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν 1 John 2. 2. 25 <sup>9</sup> οὐδ' ἴνα πολλάκις προσφέρη ἑαυτὸν, ὥσπερ ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς εἰσέρχεται εἰς τὰ y Exod. 30. 10. άγια κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ἐν αἴματι ἀλλοτρίω<sup>. 26 ²</sup> ἐπεὶ ἔδει αὐτὸν πολλάκις παθεῖν ἀπὸ <sup>Lev. 16. 2, 34.</sup> <sup>21 Cor. 10. 11.</sup> καταβολης κόσμου νῦν δὲ ἄπαξ, ἐπὶ συντελεία τῶν αἰώνων, εἰς ἀθέτησιν άμαρ- Gal. 4. 4. τίας δια της θυσίας αυτου πεφανέρωται.

<sup>27 a</sup> Καὶ καθ' ὄσον ἀπόκειται τοῖς ἀνθρώποις ἄπαξ ἀποθανεῖν, μετὰ δὲ τοῦτο Eccles. 12. 14.

nant, prefigured some other sacrifice, some other bloodshedding, |

by which that Covenant was to be sanctified.
 20. Τοῦτο τὸ αἶμα τῆς διαθήκης, ἦς] This is, or (as it is in the Hebrew), Behold the blood of the Covenant which God made with you.

St. Paul argues with great force of reason, that this act of Moses, and these words, were typical and prophetical of some future Διαθήκη. See above, notes on Exodus xxiv. 6—8.

The Old Covenant testified its own insufficiency, by being sprinkled. It thus confessed that it could not cleanse, but required itself to be cleansed. And in being itself sprinkled, and in the sprinkling of the People with the blood of goals and calves, animals inferior to man, who could not be cleansed as to his conscience by their blood, it bore witness to a future cleansing by some other blood, which could cleanse the people, who, in the sprinkling of themselves, and of the Covenant, confessed their need of being cleansed.

The speech, therefore, of Moses was prophetic.

The blood of goats and calves is the blood of the Covenant which God has made with you, or (as the Apostle expounds the words) which God commanded you; but you see the imperfection of this Covenant, in this sprinkling of the Book, and of the Tabernacle, and all the vessels.

But God does nothing imperfectly. Therefore you may be sure, that this Covenant, though imperfect in itself, is not imperfect in its lendencies, but leads to something that is perfect; and that this Blood, which sprinkles you and the Covenant itself, is typical of some other Blood, and therefore of some other Death which will have sufficient power to cleanse you perfectly from all your sins. That Blood, to be shed and sprinkled hereafter, is typified by this Blood which has been shed and sprinkled now.

That the Blood, to which Moses thus referred by way of contrast and inference, is no other than the Blood of Christ, might well be assumed by St. Paul, from the declaration made by Christ Himself, instituting the Lord's Supper, when like took up the words of Moses and applied them to Himself. (Matt. xxvi. 28. Mark xiv. 24. Luke xxii. 20.) And they had been already so treated by the Apostle in 1 Cor. xi. 25.

already so treated by the Apostle in 1 Cor. Xi. 20.

22. χωρls αίματεκχυσίας οὐ γ. ἄφεσις] without shedding of blood, remission of sins doth not take place (οὐ γίνεται), is not, as it were, born. Its birth is due to death, as the Jews themselves confessed. Schöttgen, p. 976.

Jesus has not only revealed to us, but also procured for us, the way of salvation. We were all concluded under sin,—and, since the wages of sin is death (Rom. vi. 23), we were obliged to eternal nunishment, from which it was impossible to be freed. since the wages of sin is death (Rom. vi. 23), we were obliged to eternal punishment, from which it was impossible to be freed, except the sin were first remitted. Now this is the constant rule, that without shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that Christ should appear, to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. (Heb. ix. 22, 23. 26.) And so He did; for He shed His blood for many, for the remission of sins (Matt. xxvi. 28), as Himself professeth in the Sacramental Institution: He bare our sins in His own body on the tree; as St. Peter speaks (1 Pet. ii, 24), and so in Him we have redemption through speaks (1 Pet. ii. 24), and so in Him we have redemption through His blood, even the forgiveness of sins. (Col. i. 14.) Again, we were all enemies unto God, and having offended Him, there was no possible way of salvation but by being reconciled to Him. If then we ask the question, as once the Philistines did concerning David, Wherewith should we reconcile ourselves unto our Master? (1 Sam. xxix. 4,) we have no other name to answer it but Jesus. For God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them. (2 Cor. v. 19.) And as, Vol. II.—Part III.

under the Law, the blood of the sin-offering was brought into the tabernacle of the congregation to reconcile withat in the Holy Place (Lev. vi. 30), so it pleased the Father through the Son, having made peace by the blood of His cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself. (Col. i. 20.) And thus it comes to pass, that us, who were enemies in our mind by wicked works, yet now hath He reconciled in the body of His flesh through death. (Col. i. 21, 22.) And upon this reconciliation of our persons must necessarily follow the salvation of our souls. For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of His Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by His life. (Rom. v. 10.) Furthermore, we were all enslaved by sin, and were brought into captivity by Satan,—neither was there any possibility of escape but by way of redemption. Now it was the Law of Moses, that, if any were able, he might redeem himself (Lev. xxv. 49); but this to us was impossible, because absolute obedience in all our actions is due unto God, and therefore no act of ours can make any satisfaction for the least offence. Another Law gave yet more liberty, that he which was sold might be redeemed again; one of his brethren might redeem him. (Lev. xxv. 48.) But this, in respect of all the mere sons of him. (Lev. XXV. 46.) But this, in respect of all tine mere sons or men, was equally impossible, because they were all under the same captivity. Nor could they satisfy for others, who were wholly unable to redeem themselves. Wherefore, there was no other brother, but that Son of man, which is the Son of God, Who was like unto us in all things, sin only excepted, which could work this Redeemtion for us. And what He only could work this Redeemtion for us. could work this Redemption for us. And what He only could, that He freely did perform. For the Son of man came to give His life a ransom for many (Matt. xx. 28); and as He came to give, so He gave Himself a ransom for all. (1 Tim. ii. 6.) So that it is the son of that in Him we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins. (Eph. i. 7.) For we are bought with a price (1 Cor. vii. 23); for we are redeemed not with corruptible things, as Lamb without blemish and without spot. (1 Pet. i. 18, 19.) He then which hath obtained for us remission of sins, He Who through Himself hath reconciled us unto God, He Who hath given Himself as a ransom to redeem us, He Who hath thus wrought out the way of salvation for us, must necessarily have a second and a far higher right unto the name of Jesus, unto the title of our Saviour. Bp. Pearson (on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 140).

23. ὑποδείγματα] delineations, copies,—not 'patterns.' 24. χειροποίητα] made by human hands. See v. 11.

 - ἀντίτυπα] copies, not 'antitypes' in the usual English sense. The Levitical Tabernacle was an ἀντίτυπον of the ἀρχέτυπον shown to Moses on the Mount. Christ is the substance of the archetype and of its type.

26. ἔδει] it was necessary; that is, in the case supposed. The imperfect indicative is used, as in Latin, 'optimum erat,' 'longum erat,' &c. Cp. Winer, § 41, p. 254.

27, 28. καθ' ὅσον] inasmuch as. The Apostle thus removes the scruples and stumbling-blocks of the Hebrew Christians, who were taunted by the Jews with believing in a dead Christ.

Christ, as Man, is the Second Adam. He unites all men in Himself. All men are destined to die once; therefore Christ died, but He died only once—once for all. But He is also their future Judge. All must appear before His judgment-seat; and then He, Who died once to bear the sins of all, will appear again, apart from sin; see the next note.

b Matt. 20, 28. & 26, 28. Rom. 6, 9, 10. 1 Pet. 3, 18. 1 John 3, 5.

κρίσις, 28 b ούτως καὶ ὁ Χριστὸς ἄπαξ προσενεχθεὶς εἰς τὸ πολλων ἀνενεγκεῖν άμαρτίας, εκ δευτέρου χωρίς άμαρτίας οφθήσεται τοις αυτον άπεκδεχομένοις είς σωτηρίαν.

a Col. 2. 17. ch. 8, 5, & 9, 9.

Χ. 1 ε Σκιὰν γὰρ ἔχων ὁ νόμος τῶν μελλόντων ἀγαθῶν, οὐκ αὐτὴν τὴν εἰκόνα τῶν πραγμάτων, κατ' ἐνιαυτὸν ταῖς αὐταῖς θυσίαις, ἃς προσφέρουσιν εἰς τὸ διηνεκές, οὐδέποτε δύναται τοὺς προσερχομένους τελειωσαι 2 ἐπεὶ οὐκ αν ἐπαύσαντο προσφερόμεναι, διὰ τὸ μηδεμίαν ἔχειν ἔτι συνείδησιν άμαρτιῶν τοὺς λατρεύοντας, ἄπαξ κεκαθαρισμένους; <sup>3</sup> άλλ' έν αὐταῖς ἀνάμνησις ἁμαρτιῶν κατ' b Micah 6. 6−8. c Ps. 40. 7. & 50. 8, &c. Isa. 1. 11. Jer. 6. 20. Amos 5. 21, 22.

4 b' Αδύνατον γαρ αξμα ταύρων καὶ τράγων ἀφαιρεῖν άμαρτίας. 5 ° Διὸ εἰσερχόμενος είς τὸν κόσμον λέγει, Προσφοράν καὶ θυσίαν οὐκ ἡθέλησας,

28. χωρις άμαρτίας] apart from sin. He does not say άτερ, but  $\chi \omega \rho is$ : he does not entertain the notion that Christ had ever been with sin, in the sense of 'blemished by sin;' but he means, that He will appear again, without sin, or apart from sin, in another very different sense; that is, as no longer supporting the heavy weight of the sins of others, even of the whole world, on His own shoulders (1 Pet. ii. 24), and as made Sin for us (2 Cor. v. 21), and as made a Curse for us (Gal. iii. 13); but bringing v. 21), and as made a curse for us (Gal. III. 13); but oringing salvation to all, who look for, and love, His appearing; and then He will say to the wicked, "Depart from Me, ye cursed; Depart from Me, all ye that work iniquity." (Matt. xxv. 41; vii. 23.)

To appear the second time without sin is this,—not to appear any longer in the likeness of sinful flesh (Rom. viii. 3), nor to bear the sins of the world in His own Body on the tree (1 Pet. ii. 24), as He did at His First Advent; and not to intercede any more for sins, but to exercise Judgment upon sinners.

Primasius.

From a neglect of the true meaning of the adverb  $\chi\omega\rho$ ls here, this text has been perverted by some in modern times into an argument for the heretical notion, that Christ was not perfectly sinless in His Human Nature, while He was yet upon earth. Others have incorrectly regarded αμαρτίας as equivalent to a sacrifice for sin. Compare above, Rom. vi. 10, which illustrates this text.

- δφθήσεται—είs σωτηρίαν] He will appear to them who are patiently expecting Him, for their salvation. He will come to save them, and to destroy their enemies. But in the mean time they must wait for Him; they must be ever expecting Him. A lesson to the Hebrews, and to all, of Patience, and of watchful Preparation for the Second Advent of Christ. See Matt. x. 22. Mark xiii. 13. 37.

CH. X. 1.  $\sum \kappa_i \dot{\alpha} \nu - \tau \hat{\omega} \nu \ \mu \in \lambda \lambda \delta \nu \tau \omega \nu \ \dot{\alpha} \gamma \alpha \theta \hat{\omega} \nu ]$  a shadow, or sketch, of the future good things, -future to the Patriarchs and Prophets (see ix. 11), but revealed and assured to us by Christ in the Gospel (Matt. xiii. 17), yet still, in a certain sense, future, because they are to be consummated hereafter in heaven. pare the parallel passage in Col. ii. 17. See ix. 11, and the Introduction to Leviticus, on their Christian significance.

— οὐκ αὐτὴν τὴν εἰκόνα τῶν πραγμάτων] not the very image, or rather picture, of the things. According to the mind of ancient Expositors, the word oned would best be rendered here by sketch or outline (and not shadow); and the word εἰκὼν by picture (not image).

There are three things considered here.

1. The reality of the future good things-in Heaven and

2. The εἰκὼν, or clear picture of them, in the Gospel. 3. The okià, or dim outline of them, in the Law.

"Umbra in Lege; Imago in Evangelio; Veritas in Cœlo."

S. Ambrose on Ps. xxxviii.

St. Paul designates here the future life as the things them-selves; and he calls the Gospel the εἰκόνα, or picture, of those things; and he terms the Old Dispensation the σκιάν, or sketch, of the picture. For the  $\epsilon i \kappa \dot{\omega} \nu$ , or picture, exhibits the objects more clearly, but the shaded outline  $(\sigma \kappa \iota \alpha \gamma \rho \alpha \phi (\alpha))$  delineates them more obscurely than the  $\epsilon i \kappa \dot{\omega} \nu$  does. Theodoret.

The Law is the mere σκιὰ of the future, and is not the picture. Until the painter lays on the colours in the painting, it is only a sketch (\sigma(a),—but when he adds the hues, it becomes a picture. Such the Law was; for he calls it a sketch of the future good things. Chrysostom.

As the picture (einar) falls short of the original, so do our present mysteries fall short of the future good things which are perfect. And as the sketch (σκιαγραφία) falls short of the picture (εἰκων), so does the Law fall short of the Gospel. Theophyl.

The picture (εἰκὼν), although it does not exhibit the reality itself, yet it is a vivid resemblance of it; but the sketch (σκιὰ) is a faint outline of the picture. Œcumen.

Our present things (under the Gospel) are a picture of the Future. In Holy Baptism we see a type of the Resurrection, but hereafter we shall behold the Resurrection itself. Here we see the Symbols of the Lord's Body, there (i. e. in heaven) we shall see the Lord Himself. Theodoret (in 1 Cor. xiii, 12). Cp. Lünemann (Kommentar, pp. 216. 266), who rightly observes, that the contrast here is between the Law as giving merely a dim resemblance of future things, and the clearer exhibition of them under the Gospel.

Some modern Expositors interpret εἰκόνα τῶν πραγμάτων to mean an image consisting of the things, and equivalent therefore to their substance; but this seems to be a forced exposition. The fact is, that as yet even under the Gospel we see through a ylass darkly, but hereafter we shall see face to face. See on 1 Cor. xiii. 12.

 - εἰs τὸ διηνεκέs] in continuum. Cp. vii. 3; x. 12. 14.
 2. οὐκ] Omitted by Elz., but found in the best authorities.
 - κεκαθαρισμένουs] So the preponderance of the best MSS. Elz. κεκαθαρμένους.

ἀνάμνησις] a calling to mind. See Luke xxii. 19.
 'Αδύνατον] Impossible. He had spoken of the death and sufferings of Christ as necessary, and pre-ordained for their salvation, and had thus endeavoured to comfort and confirm the Hebrew Christians in their faith, against the cavils and scoffs of the Jews.

He now raises their minds to a higher elevation, by an argument drawn from the Divinity of Christ.

The following remarks on this point are from an English Theologian, who was raised up by God's Providence in the last century to defend the great doctrines of the Atonement and Divinity of Christ;-

The Apostle tells us, that "it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goals should take away sins" (Heb. x. 4); which words appear to resolve the satisfaction, not merely into God's free acceptance, but into the intrinsic value of the sacrifice. while we rest it there, I do not see why we may not say, that it is not possible for the blood of any creature to take away the sins of the world, since no creature can do more than his duty, nor can have any stock of merit to spare for other creatures. In this light, the Scripture doctrine of the satisfaction infers tho Divinity of Him that made it; and hence it is, that those who have denied our Lord's proper Divinity, have commonly gone on to deny any proper satisfaction also; or while they have admitted it in words or in name, they have denied the thing. Scripture itself seems to resolve the satisfaction into the Divinity of the reself seems to resolve the satisfaction into the Divinity of the Person suffering. It was Jehovah that was pierced. (Zech. xii. 10, compared with John xix. 37.) It was God that purchased the Church with His own blood. (Acts xx. 28.) It was δ δεσπότης, the High Lord, that bought us. (2 Pet. ii. 1.) It was the Lord of Glary that was crucified. (1 Cor. ii. 8.) And indeed, it is unintelligible how the blood of a creature should make any recovered to remission for single photography. proper atonement or expiation for sin, as before intimated. This again is another of those arguments, or considerations, which at once insinuate both the truth of our doctrine and the importance However, if Scripture otherwise testifieth that Christ is properly God, and the same Scriptures elsewhere, independently of our present argument, declare that Christ has atoned for us, then, from these two propositions put together, results this third,—that a divine Person has satisfied for us. Consequently, whoso-ever impugns the Divinity of Christ, justly so called, does at the same time impugn the true notion of the satisfaction made by Him. Dr. Waterland (on the Doctrine of the Trinity, v. p. 38).

5. είσερχόμενος είς τον κόσμον] coming into the world, at His Incarnation. See i. G.

σώμα δὲ κατηρτίσω μου 6 όλοκαυτώματα καὶ περὶ άμαρτίας οὐκ εὐδόκησας 7 τότε εἶπον, Ἰδοὺ, ἦκω, ἐν κεφαλίδι βιβλίου γέγραπται περί έμου, του ποιήσαι, ο Θεος, το θέλημά σου. 8 Ανώτερον λέγων, Ότι θυσίας καὶ προσφοράς καὶ ὁλοκαυτώματα καὶ περὶ άμαρτίας ούκ ἠθέλησας, οὐδὲ εὐδόκησας, αἴτινες κατὰ τὸν νόμον προσφέρονται, 9 τότε εἴρηκεν, Ἰδοὺ, ἤκω τοῦ ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλημά σου ἀναιρεῖ τὸ πρῶτον ίνα τὸ δεύτερον στήση· 10 d ἐν ῷ θελήματι ἡγιασμένοι ἐσμὲν διὰ τῆς προσφορᾶς d ch. 9. 12. τοῦ σώματος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐφάπαξ.

11 Καὶ πᾶς μὲν ἱερεὺς ἔστηκε καθ' ἡμέραν λειτουργῶν, καὶ τὰς αὐτὰς πολλάκις προσφέρων θυσίας, αἴτινες οὐδέποτε δύνανται περιελεῖν άμαρτίας 12 ° οὖτος δὲ ο Col. 3 1. μίαν ύπερ άμαρτιων προσενέγκας θυσίαν είς το διηνεκές εκάθισεν εν δεξιά τοῦ σῶμα δὲ κατηρτίσω μοι] So LXX. The Hebrew is graph (ozenaim carithalli), Thou hast opened mine ears; literally, ears hast thou digged, or hollowed out, for me.

The metaphor has sometimes been supposed to be drawn from boring the ear of a servant with an awl, in token of perpetual subjection. (Exod. xxi. 6.) So Bp. Pearson (on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 230). Joseph Mede (Works, p. 896).

But it is, probably, to be deduced from the act of removing all obstructions from the ears, and unstopping the ears of the deaf (Isa. xxxv. 5), and of communicating the grace of attention, intelligence, and obedience.

The best illustration of this passage as applied to Christ is supplied by the prophet Isaiah (l. 4-6). Christ describing the complete subjection of His human body to the will of His Father, there says, "The Lord God wakeneth mine ear to hear, as the The Lord God hath opened mine ear; and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back. I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; I hid not my face from shame and spitting."

But it may be asked, How is it that St. Paul expresses the words of the Psalmist, Mine ears Thou hast opened, by the Greek words σῶμα κατηρτίσω μοι?

The answer is,-(1) He found this reading in the Septuagint, the Authorized Greek Version made by Jews, and used by them. The Jews were familiar with this rendering, and might have excepted against any other from him. See above, Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 373, 374.

(2) Although this rendering is not a literal one, yet it is a very just and appropriate Paraphrase. And it is to be borne in mind, that Expository Paraphrases, rather than literal Versions, were familiar and congenial to the Jews. They had their Chaldee Targums; and the Septuagint Version was their Greek Targum. It was purposely designed to explain the idioms of the Hebrew text, often obscure to Greek readers, and to render them more intelligible to them by paraphrastic interpretations. It ought to be regarded in this light by us, if we are to appreciate the Septuagint aright.

The sense and voice of the verb  $\kappa \alpha \tau \eta \rho \tau l \sigma \omega$ , as used here, is to be carefully noticed. Καταρτίζω signifies to train, to disci-to be carefully noticed. Karapriζω signines to train, to discipline, and to instruct, to mould and prepare. See Ps. xvii. 36; lxxix. 16. Luke vi. 40. Heb. xiii. 21. In the N. T. it also means to repair, reclaim, restore. (Matt. iv. 21. Gal. vi. 1.)

The middle voice καταρτίζομαι is used here, and it signifies to train or prepare for oneself. Thus κατηρτίσω alvov, thou hast prepared praise for thyself. (Ps. viii. 3. See Matt. xxi. 16.) And here σῶμα κατηρτίσω means, Thou didst train my body for Thyself; Thou hast disciplined my body for Thy service.

This sense is expressive of Christ's complete Chedience in This sense is expressive of Christ's complete Obedience in His Human Body, as represented by the prophet Isaiah (l. 4, 5). And this paraphrase might well be accepted by St. Paul from the hands of the Hellenistic Jews who framed the Septuagint Version, as a suitable explanation of the meaning of the words, My ears hast Thou opened, which mean, Thou hast made me subject and obedient to Thyself.

The word Obedience is from ob and audio, to hearken; and if we may venture to use the expression, our Blessed Lord's Obedience to His heavenly Father was so perfect, that in His Human Body He may be said to have been all Ear.

How far it may be right to presume, that the Authors of the Septuagint Version,—a Version prepared by the ancient People of God for the future use of the Christian Church, and employed by the Holy Ghost in numberless passages of the New Testament (as the present Epistle shows), had been guided by the 5-7. θυσίαν-τὸ θέλημά σου] From Ps. xl. G-8, almost Holy Spirit Himself, to express His own meaning by paraphrastic verbatim from LXX. tating the New Testament, is a very interesting and important question, which deserves more careful consideration than it has ever yet received, or is likely to receive, until we have been enabled to understand and to appreciate more justly the Septuagint Version, which stands pre-eminent and alone among all Versions of the Old Testament, as having been consecrated by the use of the Holy Ghost Himself in writing the New.

In the mean time we may here adopt the words of a learned and wise Theologian of our own :- I am not of their opinion, who think that the writers of the New Testament, who were inspired by the Holy Ghost, and almost always quote the Old Testament in the words of the Septuagint, are in need of an apology: -that is too feeble a word. But my judgment rather is, that we ought to examine whether the Hebrew Text may not bear the Interpretation which they have given it, in order that the sense of the Old Testament may be more rightly understood, and the authority of the New may be more clearly confirmed. Bp. Pearson (Præf. Par. in LXX, reprinted by Archdn. Churton in his Minor Works, p. 265). On this passage see above on Ps. xl. 6.

6. περί άμαρτίας] on account of sin. Cp. Rom. viii. 3. Winer, — οὐκ εὐδόκησαs] Thou hadst no pleasure in. The verb is found with an accusative, as here, in LXX, Gen. xxxiii. 10, et

7. ἐν κεφαλίδι] in the roll. Κεφαλίs properly signifies cornu, the end of the cylindrical stick, round which the Volume, מנלה (megillah), was rolled. The megillah itself, or roll, is sometimes rendered by κεφαλls, its most conspicuous part. (Ezek. ii. 9; iii. 1-3.) Cp. Wetstein, Lünem.

It has been asked, In what portion of what book is this

The word κεφαλls, used for megillah, supplies the answer to this question.

The decree of God, that Christ should come to do His will, is not declared in this or that part only, but in the Volume itself taken as a whole and rolled up together; but to be afterwards unfolded in Christ. See Cyril and others in Ps. xl. and Theophylact here; and the notes above on Ps. xl. 6, 7.

The Church, following this Apostolic interpretation of the 40th Psalm, has wisely appointed it to be used on Good Friday.

8. θυσίας και προσφοράς] So A, C, D*, Lachm., Tisch., Bleek, Lün.—Elz. has θυσίαν και προσφοράν.
10. διὰ τῆς προσφορᾶς] by means of the offering of the one sacrifice of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. Not as was the case with the Jewish Sacrifices, which were repeated daily; this sacrifice was offered once for all. Ecumen.
11. facial A C have described to be a lacher. Linear part

11. lepeus] A, C have apxiepeus, so Lachm., Lünem., not

12. οδτος δέ (so A, C, D*, E; Elz. has αὐτὸς) κ.τ.λ.] but this Man having offered one Sacrifice for sins for ever, sat down at the right hand of God.

The words εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς signify for ever, that is, available for ever. See above on vii. 3, μένει ἰερεὺς εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς, and cp. x. 14. This phrase (εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς) occurs in three other places in this Epistle, the two just cited, and x. 1. And in all these cases it is to be construed with the verb preceding, and not with what follows. Cp. Chrys.,  $\tilde{a}\pi a \xi \pi \rho \sigma \sigma \eta \nu \hat{\epsilon} \chi \theta \eta$ , red  $\epsilon i s$   $\tau b$   $\tilde{a}\epsilon l$   $\tilde{\eta} \rho \kappa \epsilon \sigma \epsilon$ , and so Theophyl., who says, "Christ offered one Sacrifice for our sins, namely, His own body; a sacrifice which is sufficient for us for ever" ( $\epsilon i s$   $\tau b$   $\delta \iota \eta \nu \epsilon \kappa \hat{\epsilon} s$ ), so that we need no other sacrifice. And so Geomen.,  $\mu (a\nu \epsilon l s \tau b) \delta \iota \eta \nu \epsilon \kappa \hat{\epsilon} s$   $\tilde{a} \rho \kappa \delta \tilde{u} \sigma \nu \epsilon \kappa \delta s$ . So Valck.,  $B\tilde{o}hme$ , Lachm.

Other Expositors connect the words with what follows: so the Syriac, and Erasmus, Calvin, Grotius, De Wette, Bleek f Ps. 110. 1. Θεοῦ, 13 τὸ λοιπὸν ἐκδεχόμενος ἔως τεθῶσιν οἱ ἐχθροὶ αὐτοῦ ὑποπό-Acts 2. 35. l Cor. 15. 25.

Lünem., Ebrard, Hofmann, Delitz., and the English Authorized

It is obviously inconsistent with grammatical rules, to in-terpret the Apostle's words as meaning "having offered one perpetual sacrifice."

(1) Observe the contrast between ἔστηκε, stands, said of the Jewish Priests, v. 11, and the acrist, ἐκάθισε, sat down, said of Christ, and declaring His dignity and continuance, sovereignty and judicature. Theophyl., Ecumen. Bp. Pearson, Art. iv. p. 522.

(2) The second contrast is between the same sacrifices offered often by the Levitical Priests, and the one Sacrifice offered once for all by Christ.

The statement of the Apostle here is of great importance in reference to the true nature of the solemn work performed in the Holy Eucharist.

St. Paul declares that Christ offered one Sacrifice for everonce for all, v. 10; and that by "one Sacrifice He hath perfected for ever them that are being sanctified," v. 14.

He proves the insufficiency of the Levitical sacrifices, from the fact, that the same sacrifice was often repeated under the

See ix. 25; x. 1, 2.

If, therefore, it were true, that the Sacrifice of Christ can be reveated, it is evident that the Sacrifice of Christ could not be, what the Apostle affirms it is, a sufficient sacrifice for the sins of Ilis argument is conclusive against the notion, that the Sacrifice made by Christ upon the Cross may be repeated. Such a view of that Sacrifice degrades it to the level of the Levitical sacrifices, which, as St. Paul teaches, were superseded by it.

St. Paul's doctrine appears to be no less cogent against the tenet of others, that Christ's one Sacrifice is still continued in the Holy Eucharist; and that the Holy Eucharist is itself a "Sacrifice identical with the Sacrifice offered on the Cross."

St. Paul says that Christ "has offered one Sacrifice for ever, that is, one Sacrifice available for ever-as the Ancient Expositors interpret the word. He does not say, that He offered one perpetual Sacrifice. A past act cannot be perpetual. But Christ has offered a Sacrifice available in perpetuity. He says that Christ has done this, and that after He had done it, He took His seat (ἐκάθισεν) at the right hand of God.

If it were true, that the Sacrifice of the Cross is continued in the Holy Eucharist, and that the Holy Eucharist itself is "a Sacrifice identical with the Sacrifice on the Cross," then, since the Sacrifice of Christ is inseparable from His sufferings, Christ's sufferings must still be continued. Then Christ is "crucified afresh" in the Holy Eucharist. Such language as this has even been adopted by some who hold this tenet; and they do not scruple to say, that the same Jesus Christ Who died upon the Cross "is again immolated on our Altars." "The Sacrifice which He offered on the Cross is every day repeated on our Altars." the evidence of this, cited in Notes at Paris, p. 72.) (See

This proposition is contrary to St. Paul's teaching, who rejects the notion of Christ offering Himself often; for then He would have often suffered; but now once for all He hath been manifested to abolish Sin by the Sacrifice of Himself; and after He has accomplished this one Sacrifice, He has taken His seat at the Right Hand of God. See ix. 25.

Indeed this proposition seems even to come under the fearful condemnation pronounced by the Apostle on those who "crucify Christ afresh," after the Crucifixion on Calvary, and who "put Him again to open shame." (Heb. vi. 6.)

The doctrine of the Apostle on this subject is thus expounded by ancient Authors;

He consecrated Wine for a memorial of Himself. Tertullian (de Animâ, 17).

The Eucharist is the memorial, in which a remembrance is made of the Passion which the Son of God has endured for Christians. Justin Martyr (c. Tryphon. c. 117. See also c. 70).

Similarly the Eucharist is called an act done "in commemo-rationem Domini" several times by S. Cyprian, Ep. 63, ad

After having done all other things, Christ having auspiciously made a marvellous Sacrifice and special immolation to the Father, offered it up for the salvation of us all; and He commanded us to offer a commemoration thereof continually, instead of a sacrifice to God. We have received a command to execute on the Holy Table the commemoration of this one Sacrifice, by means of the symbols of His Body and of His saving Blood, according to the Laws of the New Testament. We offer the incense spoken of by the Prophet (Mal. i. 11), "In every place incense shall be offered unto My Name, and a pure offering, saith the Lord of Hosts." We offer sacrifice and incense, because, according to the mysteries delivered us by Christ, we perform the Remembrance of the Great Sacrifice, and present our Eucharistic sacrifice of thanksgiving (προσκομίζομεν εὐχαριστίαν) for our salvation with holy hymns and prayers to God; as also in that we are there consecrating ourselves wholly in body and soul, as a sacrifice, dedicating ourselves to Him and to His High Priest the Word. Eusebius (Demonst. Evang. i. 10).

In the holy oblation and participation of the body and blood of Christ, Christians celebrate a memory of the same Sacrifice that has been accomplished, "peracti ejusdem sacrificii memoriam celebrant." Augustine (c. Faustum, xx. 18).

Was not Christ offered once in Himself? And yet He is offered in the Sacrament daily. Nor does any one say what is false in saying that He is so offered. For unless Sacraments bore a resemblance to the things of which they are Sacraments, they would not be Sacraments. But from this resemblance they have the names of the things themselves. Augustine (Ep. 23, ad Bonifac, Serm. 220).

The awful Mystery of the Lord's Body, which is celebrated by us, is not the offering of different sacrifices, but it is the commemoration of the Sacrifice which has been offered up once for all (της άπαξ προσενηνεγμένης θυσίας ανάμνησις). Eulogius, Archbishop of Alexandria (c. Novatianos, lib. ii. Bibl. Phot. 280).

The Jewish sacrifices were to be offered continually on account of their insufficiency. But (it may be said) do not we Christians offer daily? Yes, we do offer, but this we do, making a commemoration of Christ's death. And this is one sacrifice, and not many. How, you may ask, is it one sacrifice, and not Because it was once offered. . . . Our High Priest is He Who offered the Sacrifice which cleanses us; that Sacrifice we offer even now, that which was then offered, and is unconsumed. This which we do, is done for a commemoration of what was then done. Chrys.

We do not offer different sacrifices, as the High Priest did, but always the same. But rather we perform a commemoration of a Sacrifice. Chrysostom here.

The language of Theodoret on this subject may be seen above on ch. viii. 4.

Hence we see that the Fathers applied the word "to offer" to the Eucharist as a commemorative sacrifice: and that they speak of the Eucharist as a resemblance and a commemoration of the one Sacrifice offered on the Cross.

It is certain that a person speaking of a resemblance might designate it by the name of the thing or person which it resembles; but he never would designate a person, or thing, as a resemblance of himself, or of itself. The Fathers might well call the Eucharist a sacrifice, if they believed that the Eucharist represents, and conveys the blessings of, the One Sacrifice offered on the Cross. But they would never have called it a resemblance of that sacrifice, if they had thought that it was identical with, or a repetition of, that One Sacrifice.

They would naturally be disposed to speak with fervour of the transcendent blessedness and glory of these Holy Mysteries, in which the Son of God gives Himself to us, and feeds us with the food of Immortality.

They had not seen the evils which have arisen since their days, from the proposition, that the Holy Eucharist is a continua-tion or a reiteration of the Sacrifice of the Cross. They would, therefore, not be so scrupulous in speaking on this subject, as they would be, if they lived now. This is to be borne in mind in reading their works.

The opinions of eminent Anglican Divines on this subject The opinions of eminent Anglican Divines on this subject may be seen in Bp. Andrewes (ad Bellarmin. p. 184, and in Acts ii. 42, vol. v. p. 66, and as quoted above on 1 Cor. v. 8). Abp. Laud against Fisher, p. 256, ed. Oxon, 1839. Abp. Bramhall, ii. p. 276. Bp. Bull, Answer to Bossuet's Queries, ii. p. 250, ed. Oxon, 1827. Dr. Waterland's Distinctions of Sacrifice, p. 112, ed. 1740, vol. vii. p. 349; viii. p. 161. Mede on the Christian Sacrifice, pp. 355-379. Nelson's Life of Bull, p. 414. Blunt on the Early Fathers, Series ii. Lect. xii. The Bp. of St. Andrews' learned and valuable "Notes to assist toward forming a right judgment on the Eucharistic Controversy," Perth, 1858. Fragmenta S. Irenai, ed. Pfaffii, Lug. Bat. 1743, with the Editor's Dissertations, see pp. 128, 183.

On the whole, we may affirm on the authority of Holy Writ,

(1) That in the Holy Communion we make a solemn re-cordation (ἀνάμνησιν) of Christ, according to His own command (Luke xxii. 19. 1 Cor. xi. 24), and show the Lord's Death διον τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ· 14 μιὰ γὰρ προσφορὰ τετελείωκεν εἰς τὸ διηνεκὲς τοὺς άγιαζομένους.

 $^{15}$  Μαρτυρεί δὲ ἡμίν καὶ τὸ Πνεῦμα τὸ ἄγιον· μετὰ γὰρ τὸ εἰρηκέναι,  $^{16~g}$  Αὕτη  $^{g Jer. \, 31. \, 8c.}$  ἡ διαθήκη ἣν διαθήσομαι πρὸς αὐτοὺς μετὰ τὰς ἡμέρας ἐκείνας, λέγει  $^{ch. \, 8. \, 8.}$ Κύριος, διδούς νόμους μου έπὶ καρδίας αὐτῶν, καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν διάνοιαν αὐτῶν ἐπιγράψω αὐτοὺς, 17 καὶ τῶν άμαρτιῶν αὐτῶν καὶ τῶν ἀνομιῶν αὐτῶν οὐ μὴ μνησθῶ ἔτι. 18 Όπου δὲ ἄφεσις τούτων, οὐκ ἔτι προσφορὰ περὶ άμαρτίας.

 $^{19 \text{ h}}$   $^*E\chi$ οντες οὖν, ἀδελφοὶ, παρρησίαν εἰς τὴν εἴσοδον τῶν ἁγίων ἐν τῷ αἴματι  $^{\text{h}}_{\text{Rom. 5. 2.}}$   $^{\text{II}}_{\text{Thoo}}$   $^{\text{II}}_{\text{O}}$   $^{\text{II}}_{\text{O}}$  ματος, τουτέστι της σαρκὸς αὐτοῦ,  $^{21}$  καὶ ἱερέα μέγαν ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον τοῦ Θεοῦ,  $^{\text{ch. 9. 8, 12.}}$

(τὸν θάνατον τοῦ Κυρίου καταγγέλλομεν) till He come (1 Cor.

(2) That thereto we come together in order to break bread (see on Acts xx. 7), and in the bread then broken we have a visible representation of Christ's body broken for us on the Cross (Luke xxii. 19, 20. 1 Cor. xi. 24), and given to us to be our living bread, the bread of life, the bread of heaven, the bread of God. (John vi. 35. 58.)
(3) That the Holy Eucharist is the Communion of the Body of Christ and of the Blood of Christ. (1 Cor. x. 16.)
(4) That it was instituted for the purpose of conveying remission of sins to us (Matt. xxvi. 28), and that pardon is actually dispensed and applied therein to each individual who comes thereto with the requisite dispositions of Repentance, Faith, and Love. (1 Cor. xi. 28.)

(5) That thereby we dwell in Christ, and Christ in us (John vi. 56), and that therein Christ gives us His own most blessed Body and Blood, which are meat indeed and drink indeed; and puts into our hands a pledge and earnest, as well as a mean and instrument, of a glorious Resurrection of our bodies at the last Day, and of eternal life both to our souls and bodies. (John vi. 54. 56.)

(6) That therein we are knit together as fellow-members of the Eody of Christ; for we are all partakers of that one bread.

(1 Cor. x. 17.)
(7) That in it we make a devout oblation and sacrifice of ourselves, and present our souls and bodies a living sacrifice (Rom. xii. 1), which is our rational worship (λατρεία), and offer an eucharistic sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, and also of alms (Heb. xiii. 15, 16); and, moreover, plead before God the one all-sufficient Sacrifice offered once for all by the outpouring of the blood of the Son of God, God and Man, on the Cross; and represent and exhibit it by a perpetual commemoration, according to the Lord's commandment; and that we receive from Him pardon and grace, peace, and joy unspeakable in those Holy Mysteries, which He has appointed and instituted for the perpetual conveyance, bestowal, and application of all the benefits of that one Sacrifice offered once for all, to the great and endless comfort of the soul and body of every penitent, devout, faithful, and loving receiver; whom Christ unites therein with Himself and with God, and makes to be an heir of a glorious Immortality.

These benefits will amply suffice for the peace, joy, and assurance of every devout and humble Christian, who will not desire to be "wise above what is written," and will not pry with inquisitive and profane curiosity into the inscrutable manner of Christ's presence and working in these Holy Mysteries (see on John vi. 25); but will joyfully receive Him into his heart, and will shrink from any thing which might tend to impair the transcendent dignity of the one Sacrifice once offered on the Cross, by reducing it to the low level of the Levitical Sacrifices, whose imperfection was proved by their repetition; and will not entertain the notion of bringing down the Adorable Saviour from His Throne in Heaven to be sacrificed by human hands, and to suffer again upon earth; nor will he be persuaded to allow, that the living well-spring of spiritual health, which gushed from the Rock, smitten once for all on Calvary, and is to be drunk with longings and thirstings of the devout soul of every true Israelite, may rightly be changed into a stagnant or frozen pool, to be viewed by the worshipper from afar, but not to be tasted by him, aithough the Lord has said, "Drink ye all of this." (Matt. xxvi. 27.)

Cp. above, notes on John vi., and on 1 Cor. v. 7, 8, and 1 Cor. x. 4, and 16—20, and below, Heb. xiii. 10.
15. εἰρηκέναι] So A, C, D, E. Εlz. προειρηκέναι.
16. τὴν διάνοιαν] So A, C, D*, Lachm., Bleek, Lünemann. Elz. has τῶν διανοιῶν.

20. ἡν ἐνεκαίνισεν κ.τ.λ.] an entrance which He newly dedicated for us, a fresh and everliving way through the veil, that is,

The verb ἐγκαινίζω (see ix. 18) continues happily the idea of newness and dedication, and derives a special interest from the word Eykaivia, as used by the Jews. See on John x. 22.

Also the word  $\pi\rho\delta\sigma\rho\alpha\tau\sigma s$  seems purposely chosen as being properly applied to a victim newly killed, from  $\pi\rho\delta$  and  $\sigma\phi\alpha(\omega)$ , to immolate. (Homer, Iliad xxiv. 757, and Wetstein here. Passow in v. Lobeck, Phryn. p. 374.) The new sacrifice of Christ, the One Victim typified by all victims, opened the new entrance to the true Holy of Holies. The Veil hanging between the Divine Presence and Throne

in the Holy of Holies was a figure of Christ's Human Nature, veiling the Godhead; and when that Veil of the body of the Second Adam was rent on the Cross by His Death, then the obstruction, which was placed between God and man by the Old Adam, was removed, and the new and living Way was opened into the Heavenly Oracle. See Chrys. The Flesh of Christ was the Veil hung before the true Holy of Holies. He must pass through all the human weakness and suffering abasement, in which Flesh is Flesh; in order to come to the glory of the Mercy-seat of the Divine Throne where He now sits as King, and where He now ministers as our Priest. The Veil of the Temple was rent when that Flesh was crucified, and when by Death Christ passed into glory, and gained an entrance to the true Holy of Holies, where He maketh intercession for us. See Matt. xxvii. 51.

21.] And having a great High Priest over the House of God, let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed (λελουμένοι) with pure water. Let us hold fast the profession of our faith.

In these few words are pointed out

(1) The meritorious cause of our Justification, expressed by the sprinkling, viz. with the blood of Christ, in allusion to the blood of the ancient sacrifices.

(2) The instrumental mean of the conveyance of Justification, namely, Baptism (cp. Eph. v. 26, and Titus iii. 5), expressed by the washing of our bodies.

(3) The instrumental mean of the reception of Justification.

on our part, expressed by the word Faith.

(4) The merits of Christ applied in Baptism by the Spirit, and received by a lively faith, and effecting our Justification for the time being. See above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 201-203.

I know not whether the Apostle's here laying so much stress upon our bodies being washed with pure water, might not, among several other similar considerations drawn from the New Testament, lead the early Fathers into a thought which they had, and which has not been so commonly observed, namely, that the water in Baptism secured, as it were, or sealed the body to a the soul; and so the whole man was understood to be spiritually cleansed, and accepted of God, in and by Baptism. "Corpora enim nostra per lavacrum, illam quæ est ad incorruptionem unienim nostra per lavacrum, illam quæ est ad incorruptionem unitatem acceperunt; animæ autem per Spiritum; unde et utraque necessaria, cùm utraque proficiunt ad vitam Dei," &c. Irenæus, lib. i. c. 17, p. 203, ed. Bened. Compare Tertullian, de Baptismo, c. 4, p. 225; De Animâ, c. 40, p. 294. Cyril Hierosol. Catech. iii. p. 41. Nazianzen, Orat. xl. p. 641. Hilarius, in Matt. p. 660, ed. Bened. Grey. Nyssenus, Orat. de Bapt. Christi, p. 360. Cyril Alex. in Joan. lib. ii. p. 147. Ammonius, in Catenâ in Joann. p. 89. Damascen. de Fid. Orthodoxâ, lib. iv. c. 9, p. 260. They had also the like thought with respect to the elements of the other sacrament, as appointed by God for insurving to the hadu a happy resurrection along with the soul insuring to the body a happy resurrection along with the soul k Ps. 51, 6. Ezek. 36, 25. James 1, 16. 1 John 3, 21. Eph. 3, 12. 1 1 Cor. 1, 9. 1 Thess. 5, 24, ch. 4, 14, m Rom. 13. 11. 2 Pet. 3. 9, 11, 14.

n Num. 15. 30. n With, 15, 30, ch. 6, 4, 2 Pet, 2, 20, 21, 1 John 5, 16, o Ezek, 36, 5, Zeph, 1, 18, & 3, 8, p ch. 2. 2. Num. 15. 30. Deut. 17. 6. & 19. 15. & 19. 15. Matt. 18. 16. John 8. 17. 2 Cor. 13. 1. q 1 Cor. 11. 29. r Deut. 32. 35, 36. Rom. 12, 19, 6 Gal. 3, 4. Phil. 1, 29, 30. Col. 2, 1. t Phil. 1, 7. & 4. 14. u Matt. 5. 12. & 6. 20. & 19. 21. Luke 12. 33. Acts 5. 41. & 21. 33. 1 Thess. 2. 14. 1 Tim. 6, 19.

James 1, 2,
x Matt. 10, 32, y Luke 21, 19. z Hab. 2. 3, 4. Hag. 2. 7. Luke 18. 8. Rom. 1. 17. Gal. 3. 11. 1 Pet. 1. 6. & 5. 10. 2 l'et. 3. 8.

22 κ προσερχώμεθα μετὰ ἀληθινης καρδίας ἐν πληροφορία πίστεως, ἐρραντισμένοι τὰς καρδίας ἀπὸ συνειδήσεως πονηρᾶς, 23 καὶ λελουμένοι τὸ σωμα ύδατι καθαρώ κατέχωμεν την ομολογίαν της έλπίδος άκλινη, πιστός γάρ ο έπαγγειλάμενος, <sup>24</sup> καὶ κατανοῶμεν ἀλλήλους εἰς παροξυσμὸν ἀγάπης καὶ καλῶν ἔργων, 25 m μη έγκαταλείποντες την έπισυναγωγήν έαυτων, καθώς έθος τισίν, άλλα παρακαλούντες, καὶ τοσούτω μαλλον όσω βλέπετε έγγίζουσαν την ήμέραν.

26 η Έκουσίως γάρ άμαρτανόντων ήμων μετά το λαβείν την επίγνωσιν της άληθείας, οὐκ ἔτι περὶ άμαρτιῶν ἀπολείπεται θυσία, <sup>27</sup> ο φοβερὰ δέ τις ἐκδοχὴ κρίσεως, καὶ πυρὸς ζήλος ἐσθίειν μέλλοντος τοὺς ὑπεναντίους.

28 ρ' Αθετήσας τὶς νόμον Μωϋσέως χωρὶς οἰκτιρμῶν ἐπὶ δυσὶν ἢ τρισὶ μάρτυσιν ἀποθνήσκευ 29 η πόσω δοκείτε χείρονος ἀξιωθήσεται τιμωρίας ὁ τὸν Υίὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ καταπατήσας, καὶ τὸ αἷμα τῆς διαθήκης κοινὸν ἡγησάμενος ἐν ὧ ήγιάσθη, καὶ τὸ Πνεθμα τῆς χάριτος ἐνυβρίσας; 30 ο Οἴδαμεν γὰρ τὸν εἰπόντα, Έμοὶ ἐκδίκησις, ἐγὼ ἀνταποδώσω, λέγει Κύριος καὶ πάλιν, Κρινεῖ Κύριος τον λαον αὐτοῦ. 31 φοβερον το έμπεσείν εἰς χείρας Θεοῦ ζώντος.

32 s 'Αναμιμνήσκεσθε δὲ τὰς πρότερον ἡμέρας, ἐν αις φωτισθέντες πολλὴν ἄθλησιν ὑπεμείνατε παθημάτων, 33 t τοῦτο μεν ὀνειδισμοῖς τε καὶ θλίψεσι θεατριζόμενοι, τοῦτο δὲ κοινωνοὶ τῶν οὖτως ἀναστρεφομένων γενηθέντες 34 καὶ γὰρ τοις δεσμίοις συνεπαθήσατε, και την άρπαγην των ύπαρχόντων ύμων μετά χαρας προσεδέξασθε, γινώσκοντες έχειν έαυτοις κρείττονα υπαρξιν και μένουσαν.

35 × Μη ἀποβάλητε οὖν τὴν παρρησίαν ὑμῶν, ἥτις ἔχει μεγάλην μισθαποδοσίαν 36 γ ύπομονης γαρ έχετε χρείαν, ίνα τὸ θέλημα τοῦ Θεοῦ ποιήσαντες κομίσησθε την ἐπαγγελίαν. 37 2 Ετι γαρ μικρον οσον οσον ο ἐρχόμενος ήξει, καὶ οὐ χρονιεῖ. 38 Ο δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται καὶ ἐὰν ὑποστείληται, οὐκ εὐδοκεῖ ἡ ψυχή μου ἐν αὐτῷ.

Dr. Waterland on Justification, vol. ix. p. 440. See above on 1 Cor. x. 16-20.

23.  $\tau \eta \nu \delta \mu o \lambda o \gamma (a \nu \tau \eta s \epsilon \lambda \pi (\delta o s))$  the confession of our hope. It is remarkable that our Authorized Version has here faith instead of hope; no MS. has πίστεως, and the earlier Versions (Wicliffe, Tyndall, Cranmer, Geneva) have hope.

25. τὴν ἐπισυναγωγήν] the gathering of ourselves together in the public assemblies of the Church. Cp. Schöltgen, p. 982. Do not omit, through fear, this public profession of your faith; do not forfeit the means of grace, and of mutual edification, which are bestowed by the Ministry of the Word and Sacraments on those who are "gathered together" in Christ's Name, like the Eagles of the Gospel, "gathered together" to the Body of Christ, which for the most of the Christ, which is the the second of the Christ, which is the control of the slain for them, and giving them life and glory.

On this remarkable word ἐπισυναγωγή, see note on Matt. xxiv. 28. Luke xvii. 37; and on 2 Thess. ii. 1, which will suggest many reflections with regard to it. On εγκαταλείποντες, see

26. Έκουσίως γ. ἀμαρτανόντων] See above on vi 4—7; and Aug. ad Rom. § 15, vol. iii. p. 2650; and Sanderson, v. 331; and cp. v. 39, as to the doctrine of "Final Perseverance," 28.] See Deut. xvii. 6, LXX.
30.] See Deut. xxxii. 35, 36.

32-34.] See Bp. Sanderson, Serm. i. p. 411. On the persecutions of the Jewish Christians, see 1 Thess. ii. 14, 15.

32. φωτισθέντες] having been enlightened—at Baptism. See

33. θεατριζόμενοι] being made a spectacle, as in a theatre. See 1 Cor. iv. 9.

34. δεσμίοιs] prisoners. So Λ, D* (B and C are defective here), and several Cursives, and the Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, Coptic, Armenian Versions; and Chrys., Theodoret, in their commentaries; and Valck., Griesb., Lach., Scholz, Bleek, Tisch., Lünemann. Elz. has δεσμοΐς μου, my bonds. Cp. xiii. 3.

Though δεσμίοιs is in all probability the true reading, yet it is very likely that in commemorating their affection and succour to those who were in bonds for Christ, the Apostle intends to acknowledge their kindness to himself, who had been a bondsman of Christ for four years, two at Cæsarea, and two at Rome. The word δέσμιος, applied to St. Paul in Acts xxiii. 18; xxv. 14.27; xxviii. 17, is so used by himself, Philem. 1. 9. Eph. iii. 1; iv. 1. 2 Tim. i. 8. - έαυτοῖς] for yourselves. Elz. prefixes έν, which is not in — εαυτοική for yourserves. Ετ.z. prenxes εν, which is not in D, E, I, K, and is rejected by Griesb., Scholz, Tisch.

After ὅπαρξιν Εlz. adds ἐν οὐρανοῖς, which is not in A, D*, nor in the Vulgate, Coptic, Æthiopic Versions, and appears to be only an explanatory gloss, but would scarcely have been corrected by a copyist.

36.] See Bp. Sanderson, i. 203. 209.
37. 8σον 8σον] how little, how little. Isa. xxvi. 20, LXX.

Cp. Aristoph. Vesp. 213.

38.] Hab. ii. 3, 4, LXX. On the text, δ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται, the key-note of St. Paul's three Epistles to the Galatians, Romans, and Hebrews, see above on Gal. iii. 11, 12, and Gal. vi.

11, and Introduction to this Epistle, above, pp. 373. 377.
 After δίκαιος Α, Ν* add μου, which is received by Lach. and Tisch., not by Delitz. D* has μου after πίστεως, but μου is not in D***, E, I, K, N**. Inasmuch as μου is found (either after δίκαιος or after πίστεως) in the Manuscripts of the September 1. tuagint, it does not seem so probable that the copyists would have omitted it, as that they would have inserted it.

— ἐὰν ὑποστείληται, οὐκ εὐδοκεῖ ἡ ψυχή μου ἐν αὐτῷ] So the words stand in the Septuagint, where the Original has Behold, τους (uplah); His soul (the soul of God) is not content, or pleased, in him.

But what is the meaning of the word ning (uplah)? The root substantive ophal signifies a hill, or a tower. xxxii. 14. Mic. iv. 8. 2 Chron. xxvii. 3. Neh. iii. 27.) Hence the word uplah (the form of which is matter of controversy, whether it is to be considered as a verb, adjective, or substantive) is employed to signify a proud presumptuous reliance on self, and a departure from God, and rebellion against Him. See Numb. xiv. 44, where the word is rendered by παραβιασάμενοι in LXX, and by presumed in our Version.

Cp. Deut. i. 43, where LXX has also παραβιασάμενοι.
The act of defection, described in Numb. xiv. 44 (the only place besides Hab. ii. 4 where the word occurs), seems to offer the best exposition of its sense.

The question is, whether the Greek words ὑποστέλλομαι and ύποστολή can bear this sense?

The proper meaning of ὑποστέλλομαι is to shorten sail, or to reef sail, with a view of declining or avoiding a danger. Hence it came to signify the act of shunning, of separating oneself from 33 Ήμεις δε οὐκ ἐσμεν ὑποστολης εἰς ἀπώλειαν, ἀλλὰ πίστεως εἰς περιποίησιν

XI. 1 a *Εστι δè Πίστις ἐλπιζομένων ὑπόστασις, πραγμάτων ἔλεγχος οὐ βλε- a Rom. 8. 24. 25.

πομένων 2 έν ταύτη γαρ έμαρτυρήθησαν οί πρεσβύτεροι.

βμένων το εν ταυτη γαρ εμαριορήσησαν σε πρέσμετη.

3 b Πίστει νοοῦμεν κατηρτίσθαι τοὺς αἰῶνας ῥήματι Θεοῦ, εἰς τὸ μὴ ἐκ φαινο- b Gen. 1. 1.
Ps., 33. 6.
Room τὰ Βλεπόμενα νενονέναι.

2 Pet. 3. 5. μένων τὰ βλεπόμενα γεγονέναι.

4 ° Πίστει πλείονα θυσίαν *Αβελ παρὰ Κάϊν προσήνεγκε τῷ Θεῷ, δι' ἡς ἐμαρ- c Gen 4.4.10. τυρήθη είναι δίκαιος, μαρτυροθυτος έπὶ τοῖς δώροις αὐτοθ τοθ Θεοθ· καὶ δί ch. 12.24.

αὐτης ἀποθανων ἔτι λαλεῖ.

 $^{5}$   $^{d}$  Πίστει  $^{2}$ Ενὼχ μετετέθη τοῦ μὴ ἰδεῖν θάνατον, καὶ οὐχ ηὑρίσκετο, διότι  $^{d$  Gen.  $^{5}$   $^{2}$ Ετείιις.  $^{4}$ Α.  $^{16}$ Ετείις  $^{6}$ Ηετέθηκεν αὐτὸν ὁ Θεὸς, πρὸ γὰρ τῆς μεταθέσεως αὐτοῦ μεμαρτύρηται εὐ- $^{6}$ ηρεστηκέναι τῷ Θεῷ. 6 Χωρὶς δὲ πίστεως ἀδύνατον εὐαρεστήσαι πιστεῦσαι any object or person. See above on Gal. ii. 12. This act may proceed either from fear, hatred, or pride. Cp. 2 Thess. iii. 6, and the passages from Philo quoted by Loesner here, and on Acts xx. 20; and see the note above on Habak. ii. 3, 4.

The words, therefore, ἐὰν ὑποστείληται, as used by the LXX, and by St. Paul, mean, If he separate himself from Me, instead of relying on Me by faith; for the Just shall live by faith in Me, and not by reliance on himself, which is shown by his act of defection. Behold that man is lifted up by pride, and hath set himself against Me; and I have no pleasure in him.

But we (says the Apostle) are not of defection, unto perdition; but we are of faith, to the saving of the soul.

It is evident from this text, that he who has once been accounted just by God may separate himself, and may forfeit God's favour, and incur perdition. See on vi. 4, and 1 Cor. x. 12. 2 Pet. ii. 21; and Bp. Sanderson, v. p. 330; Bp. Pearson, Pref. ad LXX, Minor Works, ii. pp. 262-264, and the Expositors of the XVIth Article of the Church of England.

Indeed, it would seem that the Apostle, who (it will be observed) has inverted the order of the two clauses as they stand in Hab. ii. 4, has done so with the purpose of rendering them more instructive, in the first place, to the Hebrew Christians, by reminding them that though they themselves had once been illumimated (v. 32; cp. vi. 4 and following verses), and therefore had been accounted just in the sight of God, yet, unless they hold their profession firm, and without wavering (see vv. 23—31), they may fail of salvation; and for the sake of inculcating on all men the salutary lessons of godly fear, and watchfulness, and patient perseverance unto the end, by this serious warning, that they who have once been justified "may fall finally and totally" from the

The above exposition is confirmed by a passage in the ancient Epistle ascribed to S. Barnabas, where it is said, c. 4, "Ye ought not to withdraw yourselves separately as if ye were justified, but ye ought to come together, and consider, what is most conducive and profitable to the whole body of the faithful. For 'woe to them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight'" (Isa. v. 21). Let us become spiritual; let us be a perfect Temple to God.

CH. XI. 1. Έστι δὲ πίστις κ.τ.λ.] Having declared the sin and penalty of falling away from the Gospel, and the blessedness of Faith, he takes up that word (in the usual manner of St. Paul, see on vi. 20), and proceeds to expatiate upon it. He declares that the true object of Faith is Christ; and that it is not to be imagined that the Gospel (as the Jews pretended) is a novel religion, at variance with the Law of Moses, but, on the contrary, that the Fathers under the Law, and before the Law, believed in Christ (see Article VII.); and were thus consoled under affliction, and were justified and saved by God, and became Ensamples to us.

He thus accomplishes a double purpose. He displays the power of Faith, and that it was able to do, what the Law could not do; and he shows the Hebrew Christians, that in believing in Christ they could not be rightly charged by the Jews with abandoning the Faith of their Fathers; and, in a sublime strain of heavenly eloquence, he comforts them under their afflictions, and exhorts them to patience, by showing what their Fathers were empowered to do by Faith in Christ not then come; and excites them to consider what they themselves may do, and ought to do, by Faith in the same Christ, Who has now been clearly revealed. Cp. Theodoret, and Cyril Hieros. Catech. p. 72, on the nature of Faith; and see below, v. 33.

This was the "point at issue," at the English Reformation;—

For what contend the wise?—for nothing less, Than that the Soul, freed from the bonds of Sense, And to her God restored by evidence Of things not seen, drawn forth from their recess, Root there,—and not in forms,—her holiness;— For FAITH; which to the Patriarchs did dispense Sure guidance, ere a ccremonial fence Was needful round men thirsting to transgress. Wm. Wordsworth (Ecclesiastical Sonnets, xxvi.).

On the accent of  $\tilde{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\iota$ , see Kühner, i. § 78, p. 72. It is placed emphatically in the beginning of the sentence, because the writer is proceeding to define what Faith is, and what it has done. Cp. 1 Tim. vi. 6. 2 Tim. iv. 11.

- ὑπόστασις] firm trust in. See iii. 14.

- ἔλεγχος] conviction; the mental state of being convinced

2. &  $rai r\eta \gamma d\rho$ ] for in and by this. A proof that Faith looks to unseen things. For the Fathers, who died long ago, before the revelation of the Object of their Faith, received a testimony, as being just, from God, because they lived in and by faith.

The preposition  $\epsilon \nu$  signifies something more than that being in a state of faith they were attested; it means that they were attested on that account. See this use of έν in 1 Cor. iv. 4; xi. 22.

3. τοὺς αἰῶνας] the worlds. See i. 2.

- τὰ βλεπόμενα] the things that are seen. A, D*, E* have τὸ βλεπόμενον, which has been approved by Lach., Bleek, Tisch., De Welle, Linemann, Delitz., and may, perhaps, be the true reading; but compare 2 Cor. iv. 18.

No mortal eye saw God making the world; He did not make it by the hand, but by His word. And Faith teaches us, that God, Who has existed from eternity, made it out of nothing.

4. δι' αὐτῆs] by it—i. e. by his faith. — ἔτι λαλεῖ] he yet speaketh; he though dead yet lives and preaches the blessedness of faith, and the doctrine of a future Resurrection. The first blood which was shed on the Earth was that of Abel, and it was shed by Cain. He, whose offering "pleased God," was slain by his brother, whose offering was not accepted by God. Thus the first Death that happened in the World proclaims the certainty of a Resurrection and Judgment to come, and of future rewards to the righteous. Thus Abel's blood crieth from the ground (Gen. iv. 10). Cp. below, xii. 24.

See Chrys. and Theophyl., who says that λαλείται is the reading of some MSS., but is not approved by him. Λαλεί is in A and some Cursives, and in many of the Fathers; and is received by Scholz, Lachm., Tisch, &c. Elz. has λαλείται with D, E, I, K. On Abel as a type, see notes above on Gen. iv. 4.
5.] With this and the following verses the reader may compare the similar treatment of the subject by S. Clement, the fellow-labourer of St. Paul (Phil. iv. 3), in his Epistle to the Corinthians, in the Western Church. Cp. i. 3, and Introduction above, $-\frac{\mathrm{E}\nu\omega\chi}{\mathrm{E}noch}$ , the seventh from Adam, taken from this world to Rest, and a type of the heavenly sabbath, or Rest, that world to kest, and a type of the heavenly sabbath, or kest, that remaineth to the people of God (iv. 9). See Jude 14. The language of the Author here is from the Septuagint Version, Gen. v. 22. 24. On the history of Enoch see notes above, on Gen. v. 24. — του μή ίδειν θάνατον] in order that he might not see death. The purpose of God in translating him is thus declared. Cp. Luke ii. 26. Lünemann.

γαρ δεί τον προσερχόμενον τῷ Θεῷ ὅτι ἔστι, καὶ τοῖς ἐκζητοῦσιν αὐτὸν μισθαποδότης γίνεται.

e Gen. 6, 13, Ecclus, 44, 17, Rom. 3, 22, Phil, 3, 9, f Gen. 12. 1, 4. Acts 7. 2.

g ch. 3 4. & 12. 22. & 13. 14. Rev. 21. 2. h Gen. 17, 19. Rom. 4, 19. i Gen. 15, 5. & 22, 17. Rom. 4, 18.

k Gen. 23. 4. & 47. 9. 1 Chron. 29. 15. Ps. 39. 13. & 119. 19. John 8. 33.

1 Exod. 3. 6. Matt. 22, 32. Acts 7, 32.

<sup>7 ·</sup> Πίστει χρηματισθεὶς Νῶε περὶ τῶν μηδέπω βλεπομένων εὐλαβηθεὶς κατεσκεύασε κιβωτὸν εἰς σωτηρίαν τοῦ οἴκου αὐτοῦ, δι' ἡς κατέκρινε τὸν κόσμον, καὶ της κατὰ πίστιν δικαιοσύνης έγένετο κληρονόμος.

<sup>8 τ</sup>Πίστει καλούμενος 'Αβρααμ υπήκουσεν έξελθειν είς τον τόπον, ον ήμελλε λαμβάνειν είς κληρονομίων, καὶ έξηλθε μη έπιστάμενος ποῦ ἔρχεται.

9 Πίστει παρώκησεν είς τὴν γῆν τῆς ἐπαγγελίας ὡς ἀλλοτρίαν, ἐν σκηναῖς κατοικήσας μετὰ Ἰσαὰκ καὶ Ἰακὼβ τῶν συγκληρονόμων τῆς ἐπαγγελίας τῆς αὐτῆς, 10 g έξεδέχετο γὰρ τὴν τοὺς θεμελίους ἔχουσαν πόλιν, ῆς τεχνίτης καὶ δημιουργός ὁ Θεός.

11 1 Πίστει καὶ αὐτὴ Σάρρα δύναμιν εἰς καταβολὴν σπέρματος ἔλαβε, καὶ παρὰ καιρὸν ἡλικίας ἔτεκεν, ἐπεὶ πιστὸν ἡγήσατο τὸν ἐπαγγειλάμενον.

12 Ι Διὸ καὶ ἀφ' ένὸς ἐγεννήθησαν, καὶ ταῦτα νενεκρωμένου, καθώς τὰ ἄστρα τοῦ οὐρανοῦ τῷ πλήθει, καὶ ὡς ἡ ἄμμος ἡ παρὰ τὸ χεῖλος τῆς θαλάσσης ἡ άναρίθμητος.

13 κατὰ πίστιν ἀπέθανον οὖτοι πάντες, μὴ λαβόντες τὰς ἐπαγγελίας, ἀλλὰ πόρρωθεν αὐτὰς ἰδόντες, καὶ ἀσπασάμενοι, καὶ ὁμολογήσαντες ὅτι ξένοι καὶ παρεπίδημοί είσιν επί της γης 14 οί γαρ τοιαθτα λέγοντες έμφανίζουσιν ότι πατρίδα ἐπιζητοῦσι. 15 Καὶ εἰ μὲν ἐκείνης ἐμνημόνευον ἀφ' ἡς ἐξέβησαν, εἶχον αν καιρον ανακάμψαι 161 νυν δε κρείττονος ορέγονται, τουτέστιν επουρανίου. Διὸ οὐκ ἐπαισχύνεται αὐτοὺς ὁ Θεὸς Θεὸς ἐπικαλεῖσθαι αὐτῶν ἡτοίμασε γὰρ αὐτοῖς πόλιν.

6. ἔστι] He exists; not ἐστί. There is a contrast here between the words ἔστι and γίνεται. God always exists, and He becomes a Rewarder of those who seek Him out.

7. εὐλαβηθείς] having been inspired with godly fear by the χρηματισμός. Cp. v. 7. Acts xxiii. 10. On εὐλάβεια see v. 7.

— κατέκρινε τὸν κόσμον] he condemned the world: "comparatione melioris ejus fidei et facti" (Primasius). Noah, by his faith, proved them to be deserving of punishment, in that they would not believe that the flood would come, although they saw him building the Ark for 120 years, and heard his preaching. Primasius, Theophyl. As to this sense of κρίνω and κατακρίνω cp. 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3. Rev. xx. 4.

— δικαιοσύνης] of righteousness. Noah is the first person that is called δίκαιος in the Old Testament. Gen. vi. 9. Philo, p. 532. On the history of Noah see notes above, Gen. vi.—ix.

 Πίστει καλούμενος] See Clem. Rom. i. 10. On the call of Abraham see above, notes on Genesis xii. 1.

9. παρφκησεν] sojourned as a stranger. Cp. Luke xxiv. 18. Acts vii. 6. 29. Eph. ii. 19. 1 Pet. ii. 11.

- ἐν σκηναῖς] in tents-not houses with Isaac, &c. See on Gen. xxxiv. 1.

10.  $\xi \xi \epsilon \delta \dot{\epsilon} \chi \epsilon \tau o - \pi \delta \lambda \iota \nu$  He looked (not for an earthly, but) for the heavenly City, which hath the glorious and immoveable foundations. Ps. lxxxvii. 1. Rev. xxi. 14-20. Observe the articles. He looked for the only City that hath a foundation that cannot be moved. A strong contrast to the tents in which they dwelt as strangers and sojourners, and which they were ever moving from place to place.

11. καὶ αὐτὴ Σάβρα] even Sara herself, who was before incredulous. (Gen. xviii. 12.) Sara is presented as a pattern of repentance to the Hebrew Christians, who had fallen into unbelief. Chrys. On the example of Sarah see on Gen. xviii. 12.

- είς καταβολήν σπέρματος] Ad immissionem seminis virilis in ejus uterum; hoc est, eo fine ut fœtum gigneret, vel, ut ait Chrysostomus, εἰς τὸ κατασχεῖν τὸ σπέρμα εἰς ὑποδοχὴν δύναμιν Chrysostomus, εις το κατασχειν το σπερμα εις υποσοχην συναμιν  $\xi$ λαβεν; et pari modo Theophylactus, ένεδυναμώθη εἰς το ὑποδέξασθαι και κρατήσαι τὸ καταβληθέν εἰς αὐτήν σπέρμα τοῦ ᾿Αβραάμ. Haud aliter Œcumenius, ἐνεδυναμώθη εἰς τὸ ὑποδέξασθαι παιδοποιὸν σπέρμα. Locutiones καταβάλλειν σπέρμα. καταβολή σπέρματος propriæ et solennes sunt physicorum de hâc re disserentium, uti liquidò apparet ex scriptis Galeni, Hippocratis, aliorumque artis medendi peritorum, à Wetstenio ad hunc locum citatorum p. 425, adeò ut nonnullorum recentiorum criticorum interpretatio supervacanea sit, είς καταβολήν σπέρματος, contrà usum loquendi communem, 'ad familiæ fundamenta jacienda'

Hìc igitur piis omnibus, qui has res debitâ reverentiâ contemplantur, subit animadvertendum, Deum esse Qui claudit uterum et aperit (Gen. xx. 18; xxx. 22), Deum esse, Qui dat benedictiones uteri (xlix. 25), et liberos esse donum et hæreditatem quæ venit à Domino. Ps. cxxvii. 3.

The word ἔτεκεν, after καιρὸν, has been expunged by some as a gloss; but, it seems, without adequate reason.

12.] Some Editors read έγενήθησαν for έγεννήθησαν, on insufficient authority, and to the weakening of the sense. Elz. has  $\dot{\omega}\sigma\epsilon$ l before  $\check{\alpha}\mu\mu\sigma$ , but the reading in the text has more evidence in its favour, and is received by Griesb., Scholz, Lach., Lün., Tisch.

13. Κατὰ πίστιν ἀπέθανον] these not only lived, but died (not according to the present world (κατ' αἰῶνα τοῦτον), through which they passed as strangers, but) according to Faith, which sees what is invisible and future, and lives in and by that spiritual

- ίδόντες] Elz. adds και πεισθέντες, but against the best authorities.

- ἀσπασάμενοι] having saluted them; having hailed or greeted them from afar, as a voyager hails his own home when first descried from a distance, and recognizing and saluting from afar the hills and headlands of his beloved soil. Chrys., Estius, Trench. Thus the Ten Thousand under Xenophon, on their return to Greece, greeted the Sea with the simultaneous acclamation, Θάλασσα, θάλασσα. And in like manner, Virgit says, "Quum procul obscuros colles humilemque videmus Italiam (their promised land), Italiam læto socii clamore salutant," Æn. iii. 522. They greeted them from afar, as a friend salutes a distant friend, with whom he cannot have nearer intercourse. "Otho protendens manus adorare vulgum, jacere oscula" (Tacit. "Otho protendens manus adorare vulgum, Jacere oscula" (Tacil. Hist. i. 36). "Blandaque devexæ jactaret basia rhedæ" (Juvenal, iv. 118). "Jactat basia Tibicen" (Phadr. 87). This salutation, when addressed to Princes, was called 'labratum,' ἀσπαστικὸν βασιλέωs. See Ouzel and others on Minuc. Felix,

p. 14.

There may also be a reference here to the act of προσκύνησιs,

See Minuc. Felix, as an act of reverence paid to sacred objects. See Minuc. Felix, p. 12, ed. Ouzel, "Cæcilius, simulacro Serapidis denotato, manum ori admovens osculum labiis pressit." And compare Job xxxi. 26:—28. Ps. ii. 12. 1 Kings xix. 8. See below on Rev. xiii. 4. 15. ξξέβησαν] So A, D*, E*, Lach., Tisch.—Elz. has εξηλθον.

ρειν δυνατός ὁ Θεὸς, ὅθεν αὐτὸν καὶ ἐν παραβολή ἐκομίσατο.

20 ° Πίστει καὶ περὶ μελλόντων εὐλόγησεν Ἰσαὰκ τὸν Ἰακὼβ καὶ τὸν Ἰσαῦ. ο Gen. 27, 27, 29

21 P Πίστει Ἰακωβ ἀποθνήσκων εκαστον των υίων Ἰωσὴφ εὐλόγησε καὶ p Gen. 48. 5, 15, προσεκύνησεν έπὶ τὸ ἄκρον τῆς ράβδου αὐτοῦ.

22 q Πίστει Ἰωσὴφ τελευτῶν περὶ τῆς ἐξόδου τῶν υίῶν Ἰσραὴλ ἐμνημόνευσε, q Gen. 50. 24.

καὶ περὶ τῶν ὀστέων αὐτοῦ ἐνετείλατο.

23 τΠίστει Μωϋσης γεννηθείς έκρύβη τρίμηνον ύπο των πατέρων αὐτοῦ, διότι τ Exod. 1. 16. είδον άστείον το παιδίον, και οὐκ έφοβήθησαν το διάταγμα τοῦ βασιλέως.

17. προσενήνοχεν] hath offered. Observe the perfect tense. He has done it, in will and in God's sight, although it was not really effected. God here describes the act as done by Abraham, because He knows that it would have been done by him, if He Himself had not interfered to prevent it.

πειραζόμενος] being tried; not as if God did not know what he was. On this trial see above, on Gen. xviii.  $12-\xi\pi\epsilon$ i  $\rho$ a $\sigma$ e $\nu$   $\delta$   $\Theta$ e $\delta$ s  $\tau$  $\delta$  $\nu$   $^{2}$ A $\beta$ ρααμ, οὐκ ἀγνοῶν  $\tau$  $\delta$ s  $\tilde{\eta}$  $\nu$ , ἀλλ  $\tilde{\lambda}$   $\tilde{\lambda}$  ταῦτα δείξη, καὶ μὴ κρύψη τοιυῦτον, καὶ διεγείρη εἰς μίμησιν τῆς ἐκείνου πίστεως καὶ ὑπομονῆς, καὶ πείση καὶ τέκνων στοργῆς ἀμε-λεῖν, πρὸς ἐκπλήρωσιν θείου προστάγματος (Clement R. Frag. 2).

— προσέφερεν] was offering up. Hence St. James speaks of the act as done, ii. 21; and so Clement R. 10, προσήνεγκεν

18. πρὸς ὄν] to whom, i. e. to Abraham; not "concerning whom" (Isaac).

19. δθεν αὐτὸν καὶ ἐν παραβολῆ ἐκομίσατο] whence he received him back even also in a parable, or figure. Observe the conjunction kal. The sense is, Abraham not only received back his son Isaac, whom in will he had already offered (see v. 17); but, as an additional reward for his faith, he received him back also in and with a parable, or likeness of some other great recovery; none other than the Resurrection of the Son of Abraham, Christ, in Whom all Abraham's seed are blessed, typified by this restoration of Isaac from the dead. Then, in faith, Abraham prophesied and said, God will provide for Himself a Lamb for a burnt-offering (Gen. xxii. 8); then, in faith, he called the name of the place Jehovah Jireh (v. 14); then in faith, he saw the day of Christ, and was glad (John viii. 56). Therefore he then received something more than Isaac from the dead. He saw in him a parable, a figurative vision of Christ, given up by His Father to death, and raised by Him from the dead. Theodoret. Cp. Chrys., Ecumen., Theophyl., Primasius. See above on Gal. iii. 6, and Delitz. here, and the notes above, on Genesis xxii.

Isaac was sacrificed, and yet lived, to show that Christ should truly die and truly live again. In Abraham's intention, Isaac died; indeed, the Apostle does not hesitate to say that Abraham offered him up. In his expectation (v. 19) he was to rise from the dead; and therefore, being spared, Isaac was received by Abraham as from the dead. And all this was transacted, in order to presignify that the only Son of God was really and truly to be sacrificed and die, and after death to be raised to life. And thus the Resurrection of the Messiah was represented in a Parable. Cp. Bp. Pearson, Art. v. p. 476, who quotes Gregory Nyssen in Resur. Orat. i. p. 383. "Ideo immolatus Isaac non est, quia Resurectio Filio Dei servata est." (Prosper.)

The interpretations of some learned modern Expositors (e. g.

Lünemann), that παραβολή here means a stake, or deposit, which is risked for a greater sum, or with great peril and daring, are inconsistent with the common usage of the New Testament, where παραβολή occurs often and only in the sense of a likeness; and were unknown to Christian Antiquity, and are inadmissible.

The sense in which the Author of this Epistle uses the word παραβολή above, ix. 9—where he calls the Tabernacle a παρα-Boah, and explains its parabolic character, - is the best exponent of his meaning here.

21. ἔκαστον τ. νίῶν] each of the sons of Joseph. Ephraim and Manasseh. (Gen. xlviii. 3. 5—16. 20.) Some ancient writers suppose a symbolical act in the crossing of the hands of the Patriarch in this act of benediction.

— προσεκύνησεν] worshipped God; in thankfulness for the past, and beholding in faith the blessings which hereafter would be vouchsafed to his seed.

There is no ground for the supposition, that the Patriarch Jacob did obeisance to Joseph, his son, and much less to his staff, as a type of some other person. Indeed, it is expressly recorded Vol. II.—Part III.

that Joseph bowed down before Jacob in Gen. xlviii. 12; and the word there used to describe Joseph's action at that time is προσεκύνησεν in LXX. See also next note.

έπὶ τὸ ἄκρον τῆς ῥάβδου αὐτοῦ] leaning on the top of his staff.

This was done by Jacob, when he had made Joseph swear

This was done by Jacob, when he had made Joseph swear that he would not bury him in Egypt, but in the burying-place of his fathers at Machpelah. Gen. xlvii. 31: see the notes there.

The Hebrew text here, as now printed, relates that Jacob worshipped towards the head of his bed, הַּמְשָה הַיּאָים (al rosh hammittah).

The rendering of the LXX, adopted by the Apostle here, enables us to understand aright the original Hebrew, and appears to show that it ought to be pointed המסה (hammatteh), and not המבות (hammittah), and that the true meaning is (as the LXX and the Apostle expound it), 'he strengthened himself upon his staff, and so, leaning forward, worshipped God.' And so Augustine, in Genesim. Yet this text has been employed as an argument for the worship of images. See A Lapide here. Cp. Surenhus. p. 646. Schöttgen, p. 986.

The Septuagint Translators have κλίνην, bed, in Gen. xlviii. 2; and their translation, βάβδος, in Gen. xlvii. 31, to which the Apostle here refers, is entitled to more attention on that account.

Other Expositors have supposed, that the Septuagint Translators mistook the Hebrew Original; but it is more likely that there is an error in the present Masoretic points of the word non, than in the Greek text cited by St. Paul: see on Gen. xlvii. 31.

The staff of Jacob might well be mentioned, as suggestive of God's mercies to him, according to the Patriarch's own words, "With my staff I passed over Jordan, and now I am become two bands" (Gen. xxxii. 10). Besides, the staff is the scriptural characteristic of travel. Hence the Israelites were commanded by God to eat the Passover with their loins girded, and their shoes on their feet, and their staff in their hand. (Exod. xii. 11.) And this introduction of the staff into the scene of the Patriarch's last charge concerning himself, and the removal of his own body after its mortal pilgrimage to repose in the promised land, the type of heaven, may be designed to remind the reader that even in his old age he was still a pilgrim, and was travelling onward from the Egypt of this world to his heavenly rest. It is doubtful also, whether an Eastern bed could be properly described, in the modern sense of the words, as having a head.

The two incidents recorded in the Book of Genesis (xlvii. 27—31, and xlviii. 2), as interpreted by the LXX, appear to represent a gradual decline and decrepitude. In the former, the Patriarch is represented as leaning on his staff; in the latter he is laid upon his bed. In both, he shows his faith in the promises of God. In the former, he provides for his own burial in Canaan; in the latter, he blesses the sons of Joseph. St. Paul inverts the order of the incidents, and dwells more upon the latter, because it was more relevant to his purpose, as declaring the Patriarch's hope and trust in blessings to come, and as intimately connected with the similar command which he next recounts from Joseph himself.

22. περl των ὀστέων] concerning his bones, which were taken out of Egypt, and buried at Sychem. See on Acts vii. 16.

This command, concerning his bones, was an evidence of his faith in God's promise, that the seed of Abraham would go out of Egypt, and return to Canaan. Theophyl.

It was also a prophecy of a future resurrection, and a preannouncement of the repose of the body, to be glorified hereafter in the heavenly Canaan.

23. ἀστεῖον τὸ παιδίον] that the child was fair, viz. Moses, who refused to be called the child of Pharaoh's daughter.

Compare the words of St. Stephen concerning the same person, Acts vii. 20. 22.

The Speech of St. Stephen before the Hebrew Sanhedrim at c Jud. 7, 21. & 15. 15. 1 Sam. 14. 1, &c. & 20. 1. 2 Sam. 7, 12. 1 Kings 9. 4. & 19. 1, &c. 2 Kings 6. 16. & 20. 7. 1 Chron. 22. 9. Joh 42, 10.

Job 42, 10. Ps. 6, 9. & 89, 20, &c. Isa, 33, 21. Dan. 3, 25.

24 ° Πιστει Μωϋσης, μέγας γενόμενος, ηρνήσατο λέγεσθαι υίδς θυγατρός ε Εκοά. 12. 15, 16. Σε Τιστεί Μωυσης, μεγάς γενομενος, ηρνησάτο λεγεσθαί υίος θυγάτρος ε Εκοά. 10. 28, 29. Φαραω, <sup>25</sup> μαλλον έλόμενος συγκακουχεῖσθαι τῷ λαῷ τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἡ πρόσκαιρον ε 13. 17, κε. α Εκοά. 12. 3, κε. ἔχειν ἁμαρτίας ἀπόλαυσιν· <sup>26</sup> μείζονα πλοῦτον ἡγησάμενος τῶν Αἰγύπτου θηαποκαιο 12.3, &c. εχειν αμαρτίας αποκαυστιν τη μειζονα πκουτον ηγησαμένος των Αίγυπτου  $\times$  21.22.  $\times$  22.22.  $\times$  23.23.  $\times$  24.24.  $\times$  25.25.  $\times$  25.25.  $\times$  27.4  $\times$  16.27.  $\times$  28.4  $\times$  28.4  $\times$  29.5  $\times$  2.25.  $\times$  3.24.4 .6.  $\times$  6 11.  $\times$  11. 11.  $\times$  28.4  $\times$  15.38.1. 20.  $\times$  28.4  $\times$  16.32.  $\times$  3.24.  $\times$  3.25.  $\times$  3.26.  $\times$  3.26.  $\times$  3.14.  $\times$  17.  $\times$  3.27.  $\times$  3.29.  $\times$  16  $\times$  4  $\times$  7.  $\times$  3.29.  $\times$  16  $\times$  4  $\times$  6.1  $\times$  3.29.  $\times$  16  $\times$  6  $\times$  7  $\times$  6  $\times$  7  $\times$  7  $\times$  6  $\times$  7  $\times$  7  $\times$  6  $\times$  7  $\times$  7 27 1 Πίστει κατέλιπεν Αἴγυπτον μη φοβηθεὶς τὸν θυμὸν τοῦ βασιλέως, τὸν γὰρ

28 " Πίστει πεποίηκε τὸ πάσχα καὶ τὴν πρόσχυσιν τοῦ αἴματος, ἴνα μὴ ὁ

2 Sam. 8. 1. & 10. 19. & 12. 29. λαβόντες οἱ Αἰγύπτιοι κατεπόθησαν. Dan. 6. 22. C Jud. 7. 21. 30 5 Πίστει τὸ ΄΄ 29 * Πίστει διέβησαν τὴν Ἐρυθρὰν θάλασσαν ὡς διὰ ξηρᾶς γῆς ἡς πεῖραν 30 γ Πίστει τὰ τείχη Ἱεριχὼ ἔπεσε κυκλωθέντα ἐπὶ ἑπτὰ ἡμέρας.

31 ε Πίστει 'Ραὰβ ή πόρνη οὐ συναπώλετο τοῖς ἀπειθήσασι, δεξαμένη τοὺς κατασκόπους μετ' εἰρήνης.

32 a Καὶ τί έτι λέγω; ἐπιλείψει γάρ με διηγούμενον ὁ χρόνος περὶ Γεδεών καὶ διὰ πίστεως κατηγωνίσαντο βασιλείας, εἰργάσαντο δικαιοσύνην, ἐπέτυχον ἐπαγγελιων, εφραξαν στόματα λεόντων, 34 ° εσβεσαν δύναμιν πυρος, εφυγον στόματα

Jerusalem seems to have been in the mind of the Author of this Epistle, and its thoughts and even its phrases are reproduced here. Cp. Acts vii. 2, 3-5. 16. 20, 21. 53. Heb. ii. 2; xi. 8, 9. 13-15. 22-24.

It was very natural, that St. Paul, especially, writing to the Hebrews at Jerusalem, and speaking to them as he does here, of those who had died in faith, as Martyrs for the truth, should bethink himself of the first Martyr, and of the speech which he weight to St. Stephen's last words. Cp. Acts xxii. 20.

26. ἀνειδισμόν τοῦ Χριστοῦ] the reproach of Christ; the reproach borne by Moses looking in faith to Christ and to His Cross. See above on ix. 19; and below, xiii. 13.

- ἀπέβλεπε γάρ] for he was looking off from present sufferings to the glorious reward to which they would lead.

28. πεποίηκε] he hath celebrated. See Matt. xxvi. 18, ποιῶ τὸ πάσχα. Cp. Winer, § 40, p. 244.

29. γῆς] land. Omitted by Elz., but found in A, D*, E, and content to θέλληση and the conte giving force to the sense as a contrast to θάλασσαν, sea; and received by Lach., Bleek, Tisch.

31.  $\dot{\eta} \pi \delta \rho \nu \eta$  the harlot; emphatic. She who once had been so, but had been reclaimed from her evil life. Cp. Matt. xxvi. 6, Σίμωνος τοῦ λεπροῦ, that Simon who was well known to have once been a leper, and had been cleansed.

So Rahab. And she by repentance and faith became a pattern to sinners; and by God's grace, she was received into covenant with Him, and was made an ancestress of Christ Himself. She was a monument of His Love to the world, and a figure of the Church recovered from Heathenism and espoused to Christ. See note above on Matt. i. 3. 5. Cp. James ii. 25, 'Paλβ  $\mathring{η}$  πόρνη  $\mathring{υ}ποδεξαμένη$  τοὺς ἀγγέλους, and Clement i. 12, διὰ πίστιν ἐσώθη 'Paλβ  $\mathring{η}$  πόρνη. Here is an appeal 'ad verecundiam,' and could PaaB η πόρνη. Here is an appeal 'ad verecundiam,' and the moral is, Let it not be true of you Hebrews, that "the harlots and publicans go into the kingdom of God before you!" Matt. xxi. 31, 32.

In connexion with the history of Rahab, it may be observed, that many Fathers, dating from S. Clement (i. 12),—viz. Justin Martyr, Irenœus, Origen, Ambrose, Jerome, and Theodoret here,—regard her scarlet thread as typical of Christ's blood. Thus S. Clement says that the spies προσέθεντο αὐτῆ σημείον, δτως κρεμάση έκ του οίκου αύτης κόκκινον, πρόδηλον ποιούντες στι διά του αίματος του Κυρίου λύτρωσις έσται πάσι τοις πιστεύουσι. On Rahab's typical character, see on Josh. ii. 1.

32. ἐπιλείψει γάρ με διηγούμενον ὁ χρόνος] for, the time will fail me while I tell of Gideon —. So Philo Judæus (de Somn. p. 1116 D), Ἐπιλείψει με ἡ ἡμέρα τὰς διαφοράς τοῦ ἀνθρωπείου βίου διεξιόντα. Loesner (p. 445).

— Γεδεών — Σαμψών καὶ Ἰεφθάε. Some have supposed a chronological embarrassment here, inasmuch as Barak was before Gideon, and Jephthah before Samson.

But the names are arranged in pairs; and so stand in the Syriac, Æthiopic, and Arabic Versions. The Vulgate omits the copulas. And A omits the second and third καί. A and D* read καί Βαράκ. D, E, I, K have καὶ before 'Ιεφθάε.

On the whole the sense seems to be, - The necessary time will fail me in speaking of Gideon and also of Barak (who was before him, but deserves also to be celebrated), of Samson, and also of Jephthah (who preceded him in time, but ought not to be forgotten), of David, and also of Samuel who was his senior, but deserves to be celebrated.

In each of these pairs, there is, as it were, an act of retrogression from the principal person mentioned, to another person who resembled him, or was connected with him, and ought not to be forgotten.

Such a mode of speech is peculiarly natural to persons who are compelled to hurry onward, for lack of time, and yet look wistfully back on those objects which they leave behind. acts of Gideon, &c., see notes on Judges, and Introduction.

33. εἰργάσαντο δικαιοσύνην] they wrought righteousness,—a proof that the Faith, of which the Apostle is here speaking, is the same kind of Faith as that inculcated by St. James, the Bishop of Jerusalem, in his Epistle to the Jews of the dispersion.

The Faith on which St. Paul here lays special stress, is an operative Faith. Certainly this is no proof (as has been alleged by some) that this Epistle was not written by the author of the Epistles to the Romans and Galatians. Indeed, his language here is a natural corollary and necessary supplement to those two Epistles. And it is in perfect unison with the warnings and exhortations which were given in the later Epistles of the Apostle, written nearly at the same time as this Epistle,-namely, in the Pastoral Epistles, which were rendered specially necessary by the Jewish Antinomianism of this time.

See above, the Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 204-206, and pp. 375-378, and below, Introduction to the Pastoral Epistles.

At the same time, the Apostle has taken good care in this Epistle to contrast the Justification by an operative Faith in Christ, of which he is here speaking, with that Justification which many of the Jews sought to establish for themselves, and against which he had contended in the Epistles to the Galatians and Romans, by the deeds or ceremonies of the Mosaic Law. See xiii. 10, and the whole of chapters vii.-x.

Gideon, Barak, Samson. Some of these persons were not exempt from failings and sins. True; but this is not the question to be considered here. Were they not also distinguished by Faith? He is not writing a history of their lives, but is reciting the triumphs of Faith. Theophyl.

 - ἔφραξαν στόματα λεόντων] stopped the mouths of lions, as Samson did, Judges xiv. 6; David, 1 Sam. xvii. 34; and Daniel, Dan. vi. 22. They did this by faith in God.
 34. ἔσβεσαν δύναμιν πυρόs] quenched the violence of fire, as Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego did. (Dan. iii. 20 - 27.) In this and the preceding verse the Apostle happily combines two cases of Martyrdom for the worship of God, from the same book of the Old Testament, the Book of Daniel; the first, the example of Daniel himself, preferring to encounter death from the lions rather than forego his private prayers to God in obedience to the King's command; the second, the example of the three children choosing the fiery furnace rather than pay to the Golden μαχαίρας, ενεδυναμώθησαν από ασθενείας, εγενήθησαν ισχυροί εν πολέμω, παρεμβολας εκλιναν αλλοτρίων. 35 α ελαβον γυναίκες εξ αναστάσεως τους νε- αι Kings 17 23. παρεμβολάς εκλινάν αλλοτριών εκαρον γυναικές ες αναστάσεως τους νε- α τλιμές τις κρούς αὐτών ἄλλοι δὲ ἐτυμπανίσθησαν οὐ προσδεξάμενοι τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν, ἴνα 2 Macc. 6. 19, 28. κρείττονος ἀναστάσεως τύχωσιν. 36 ° ἔτεροι δὲ ἐμπαιγμῶν καὶ μαστίγων πεῖραν Αcts 22.25 e Jer. 20. 2 ἔλαβον, ἔτι δὲ δεσμῶν καὶ φυλακῆς  $^{37}$  ἐλιθάσθησαν, ἐπρίσθησαν, ἐπειράσ-  $^{11}$  Kings  $^{21}$ . 15  $^{21}$  Κings  $^{21}$ . 15  $^{21}$  Κings  $^{21}$ . 16  $^{21}$  Κings  $^{21}$ . 18  $^{21}$  κings  $^{21}$ . 18  $^{21}$  καὶ φόνω μαχαίρας ἀπέθανον περιῆλθον ἐν μηλωταῖς, ἐν αἰγείοις δέρμα-  $^{11}$  Ματτ. 3. 4. σιν, ύστερούμενοι, θλιβόμενοι, κακουχούμενοι, 38 ων οὐκ ἢν ἄξιος ὁ κόσμος, ἐν έρημίαις πλανώμενοι καὶ όρεσι, καὶ σπηλαίοις καὶ ταῖς όπαῖς τῆς γῆς.

<sup>39 g</sup> Καὶ οὖτοι πάντες μαρτυρηθέντες διὰ τῆς πίστεως οὐκ ἐκομίσαντο τὴν g ver. 2. ἐπαγγελίαν· 40 τοῦ Θεοῦ περὶ ἡμῶν κρεῖττόν τι προβλεψαμένου, ἴνα μὴ χωρὶς ήμων τελειωθώσι.

ΧΙΙ. 1 - Τοιγαρούν καὶ ήμεις τοσούτον έχοντες περικείμενον ήμιν νέφος a Rom. 6.4. μαρτύρων, όγκον ἀποθέμενοι πάντα, καὶ τὴν εὐπερίστατον ἁμαρτίαν, δι' ὑπο- 1 Cor. 7.14. μονης τρέχωμεν τὸν προκείμενον ἡμῖν ἀγῶνα,  $^2$  ὁ ἀφορῶντες εἰς τὸν της πίστεως  $^{\rm Eph.~4.~22.}_{\rm Phil.~3.~13,~14.}$ άρχηγον καὶ τελειωτὴν Ἰησοῦν, ος ἀντὶ τῆς προκειμένης αὐτῷ χαρᾶς ὑπέμεινε [Ol. 3. 8.] σταυρὸν αἰσχύνης καταφρονήσας, ἐν δεξιᾶ τε τοῦ θρόνου τοῦ Θεοῦ κεκάθικεν.

αὐτὸν ἀντιλογίαν, ἴνα μὴ κάμητε ταῖς ψυχαῖς ὑμῶν ἐκλυόμενοι.

c 1 Cor. 10. 13. ch. 10. 32-34.

> Сн. XII. 1. Тогуаро $\hat{v}$  —  $\mu$ арт $\hat{v}$ р $\omega v$ ] Ср. Clement. R. i. 19. On the word νέφος, nimbus, for πληθος, multitude, see Wetst.,

> The picture seems to be drawn from the immense multitudes of spectators which the Apostle had seen witnessing the races in the Stadium at Corinth, or in the Circus at Rome. "Totam hodid Romam Circus capit." (Juvenal.) Such a comparison is a favourite one with St. Paul. See on Phil. iii. 14.

> — εὐπερίστατον ἄμαρτίαν] that sin which most readily besets us, and, as it were, begirds us. The word εὐπερίστατος is only found here. Its derivation from  $f\sigma\tau\eta\mu\iota$  (to place, statuo, not sto) intimates that it is something readily placed around, so as to hem in and beset; and therefore it is rendered circumstans by Vulg. Cp. στατός ίππος (Hom. Il. v. 506): στατόν ΰδωρ, stagrant water, and (what is very relevant to the Apostle's meaning) στατδε χιτὼν, a long, straight, and ungirdled tunic, ὀρθοστάδιος. See Passow. Hence Chrys. here well explains the word εὐπερίσταπος by εὐκόλως περιισταμένη, and so the Syriac and the English Authorized Version, 'which easily besets us.' Bp. Sanderson (iv. 60) well renders it 'quæ nos arctè complectitur;' following Erasmus, 'tenaciter inhærens.' Let us cast this sin off, > as a garment which encumbers us in our Christian race.

>
> The metaphor is from the act of runners laying aside their outer garments, in order to run with more expedition.

 τρέχωμεν-ἀγῶνα] let us run the race. A Pauline figure.
 See Gal. ii. 2; v. 7. Rom. ix. 16. Phil. ii. 16.
 2. ἀφορῶντες—Ἰησοῦν] looking to Jesus. He excites them to look with the eye of Faith through the Cloud of Human Witnesses, and to see the Sun of Righteousness standing in splendour and glory at the Right Hand of God.

The Saints are, as it were, the Clouds of Christ's Presence, which are illumined by the beams of His brightness, and by which He will be surrounded when He comes in His glorious Majesty to judge the quick and dead.

On this text see the noble Sermon of Bp. Andrewes (ii. 158; and cp. Bp. Sanderson (i. p. 401; iv. 60).

— ἀντὶ—χαρᾶς] for the joy that was set before Him, He endured the cross. The joy which He felt in the prospect of our Salvation to be effected by His sufferings was His βραβείον, or Prize. Looking to it, He ran His Race, and, having finished His Course, He has now taken His seat ( $\kappa\epsilon\kappa\delta\theta\iota\kappa\epsilon$ ), where He is now enthroned,—not by the side of some human  $\beta\rho\alpha\beta\epsilon\dot{\nu}s$ , or Arbite of the Race, but at the Right Hand of God. Look up to Him, follow Him.

Elz. has  $\epsilon \kappa d\theta \iota \sigma \epsilon$ : but the reading of the text is far preferable as to sense, and is supported by the best authorities.

3. 'Aναλογίσασθε] On this text see Bp. Sanderson's Sermon

(i. p. 401).

4. Οὔπω μέχρις αΐματος ἀντικατέστητε] Ye did not yet resist unto blood, as Christ did. Observe the acrist here, ἀντικατέστητε. Ye did not resist unto blood, as ye might have done on several oc-

Image, which the King had set up, that public homage which is due to God alone. The former was ready to die rather than omit, for a single day, the worship of Him Who is True; the latter would sooner perish than commit the sin of performing a single act of worship to what is false. Two striking examples for the Hebrews at that time. See above, x. 24. They are happily united Hebrews at that time. See above, x. 24. They are happily united in the two Proper Lessons appointed by the Church to be read on the Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity.

— παρεμβολάς] armies here, as often in LXX, as well as camps. Cp. xiii. 11. 13. Rev. xx. 9. Acts xxi. 34.

35. γυναῖκες] women; e. g. the widow of Sarepta from Elijah (1 Kings xvii. 23); the Shunammite from Elisha (2 Kings iv. 36).

έτυμπανίσθησαν] they were beaten to death. See the authorities in Suicer (Thesaur. in v. pp. 1327-35), where is an elaborate dissertation on the word; the sense of which appears to be, to stretch and suspend the body on a rack, and then to beat it to death by repeated strokes of wooden instruments loaden with brass or leaden balls covered with leather; like the action of beating a drum  $(\tau \dot{\nu} \mu \pi \alpha \nu \sigma \nu)$ . Cp. 2 Macc. vi. 28. Hence it was used in a more general sense for any violent torture.

- κρείττονος ἀναστάσεως] a better resurrection of the body than that restoration of it to life in this world, which was offered them, if they recanted, after their condemnation to death. They might have risen again to life in this world, after their sentence of death; but they died with joy, in faith of resurrection to life eternal; so the Maccabees did: 2 Macc. vii. 9. 11. 23. 29. 36.

Or, as some interpret the passage, a better resurrection than that of the two children just mentioned as restored to life in this world by the two Prophets. Theophyl.

37. ἐλιθάσθησαν] they were stoned; as Naboth, 1 Kings xxi.

13; Zechariah, son of Jehoiada, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20—22. Matt. xxiii. 37. Here is a comfortable assurance in reading their history. They died as Martyrs here, and will have their reward

- ἐπρίσθησαν] they were sawn asunder, as Isaiah by order of king Manasseh, according to the Jewish tradition. Schöttgen (p. 987). Justin M. (c. Trypho. 120). Tertullian (Scorpiac. 8. de Patient. 13). Delitz. (p. 589); note above, on 2 Kings xxi. 16.

- ἐπειράσθησαν] they were tempted by Satan, and by allurements of pleasure and profit from persons in worldly power, as the Prophet of Judah was tempted by Jeroboam (1 Kings xiii. 7); perhaps the most trying form of Martyrdom, and requiring the most courage and faith.

This specification of temptation to apostasy from Christ would have a special pertinency to the case of the Hebrew Christians, and is very appropriate here. The word  $\hat{\epsilon}\pi\epsilon\iota\rho d\sigma\theta\eta\sigma\alpha\nu$  has been rejected by some Editors, but without reason. It is received by Tisch. in his last edition.

- ἐν μηλωταῖs] in sheepskins, as some of the Prophets. (Zech. ziii. 4.) See Clem. Rom. i. 17, who applies the words to Elijah, Elisha, and Ezekiel.

e Deut 9 5. 2 Sam. 7. 14. Prov. 13. 24. & 19. 18. f Ps. 73. 15. 1 Pet. 5. 9. g Num. 16. 22. & 27. 16. Eccles. 12 1, 7. Isa. 57. 16. Zech. 12. 1.

5 α καὶ ἐκλέλησθε τῆς παρακλήσεως, ἥτις ὑμιν ὡς νίοις διαλέγεται, Υίέ μου, μη όλιγώρει παιδείας Κυρίου, μηδε εκλύου ύπ αὐτοῦ ελεγχόμενος 6 ου γὰρ ἀγαπὰ Κύριος παιδεύει, μαστιγοί δὲ πάντα υίὸν ον παραδέχεται. 7 ε Εί παιδείαν ύπομένετε, ώς νίοις ύμιν προσφέρεται ὁ Θεός τίς γάρ έστιν υίδς, δν οὐ παιδεύει πατήρ; 8 Εὶ δὲ χωρίς έστε παιδείας, ης μέτοχοι γεγόνασι πάντες, ἄρα νόθοι ἐστὲ, καὶ οὐχ υίοί.

9 ε Είτα τοὺς μὲν τῆς σαρκὸς ἡμῶν πατέρας εἴχομεν παιδευτὰς, καὶ ἐνετρεπόμεθα· οὐ πολλώ μᾶλλον ὑποταγησόμεθα τῷ Πατρὶ τῶν πνευμάτων, καὶ ζήσομεν; 10 οί μεν γαρ προς ολίγας ήμερας κατά το δοκοῦν αὐτοῖς ἐπαίδευον, ὁ δὲ ἐπὶ τὸ συμφέρον, είς τὸ μεταλαβεῖν τῆς άγιότητος αὐτοῦ.

h Isa. 23. 17. James 3, 18.

11 h Πάσα δὲ παιδεία πρὸς μὲν τὸ παρὸν οὐ δοκεῖ χαρᾶς εἶναι, ἀλλὰ λύπης. ύστερον δε καρπον είρηνικον τοις δι' αὐτης γεγυμνασμένοις ἀποδίδωσι δικαιοσύνης.

i Isa. 35. 3. Job 4. 3, 4. Ecclus. 25. 23. k Prov. 4. 26, 27. Gal. 6. 1. 1 Rom. 12. 18. 2 Tim. 2. 22. Mart 5. 8 Matt. 5. 8. 2 Cor. 7. 1. m 2 Cor. 6. 1. 2 Pet. 1. 10. Deut. 29. 18.

ch. 3, 12, Gal. 5. 12.

12 ι Διὸ τὰς παρειμένας χείρας καὶ τὰ παραλελυμένα γόνατα ἀνορθώσατε,  $^{13}$  καὶ τροχιὰς ὀρθὰς ποιήσατε τοῖς ποσὶν ὑμῶν, ἴνα μὴ τὸ χωλὸν ἐκτραπῆ, ἰαθῆ δὲ μᾶλλον.

14 1 Εἰρήνην διώκετε μετὰ πάντων, καὶ τὸν άγιασμὸν, οὖ χωρὶς οὐδεὶς ὄψεται τον Κύριον 15 m έπισκοπουντες μή τις ύστερων από της χάριτος του Θεού μή τις ρίζα πικρίας ἄνω φύουσα ἐνοχλῆ, καὶ διὰ ταύτης μιανθῶσιν οἱ πολλοί· casions at Jerusalem, if ye had been animated with the courage of Martyrs; for instance, in the persecution ἐπὶ Στεφάνω (Acts xi. 19. Cp. xxvi. 10. 1 Thess. ii. 14); and as the Apostle St. James, the brother of John, did (Acts xii. 1, 2); and as the other St. James, your late Bishop, did very recently. Euseb. ii. 22, 23.

It is the more requisite to bear in mind the tense and the true rendering of this verb (ἀντικατέστητε), because an argument has been built by some upon an erroneous rendering of it ("ye have not yet resisted unto blood"), as if it implied that they to whom the author writes had not been exposed to any sanguinary persecution; and that therefore this Epistle could not have been addressed to the Hebrew Christians of Palestine.

It is clear from the whole tenour of the sentence, that the writer is expostulating here with many of those whom he addresses, for their pusillanimity, and lack of zeal, valour, and patience, in not encountering afflictions for the Faith. See vv. 5-12: Ye did not yet resist unto blood (when ye ought to have done so), and ye have forgotten the exhortation, &c.

5, 6. Υι'ε μου—παραδέχεται] Prov. iii. 11, 12, LXX. Cp. Rev. iii. 19. Clement R. (i. 56). Augustine (iii. 2641; iv. 265, 381, 1445; v. 333, 460). Bp. Sanderson (i. 417).
7. τίς γάρ ἐστιν νίδς κ.τ.λ.] for who is a son, whom his father chasteneth not? That is,—who is really treated as a son, if his chiral the sevential discription to the latest and the sevential discription.

if his father denies him that corrective discipline, to which, as a son, he is entitled from his father?

This seems to be the true rendering of the words, and not what son is there?' The emphatic word is viòs, as opposed to νόθος. See v. 8.

9. τῷ Πατρὶ τῶν πνευμάτων] the Father of our spirits, as distinguished from the fathers of our flesh. God is the Creator of our bodies, souls, and spirits; but He is not the Father of the carnal corruptions of our nature, which we inherit through our parents from Adam, who are therefore here called πατέρες της σαρκός ήμῶν, as contrasted with the πνεῦμα, or highest faculty of man. (1 Thess. v. 23.)

Some early Christian writers supposed that the human spirit is created 'totics quoties' by God; e.g. Primasius, who says, "Corpus nostrum ex semine paterno et materno conficitur, anima vero semper à Deo ex nihilo creatur." But it does not seem that the Apostle designed to express any opinion here on the question which afterwards agitated the Church in the controversies between the Advocates of Creationism and Traducianism as to the origin of the Soul. Cp. Lünemann, p. 340; and Delitz. p. 619.

The birth, of which the Apostle is here speaking, is the new birth, the spiritual birth, which is wrought by God in the Sacrament of Baptism, of which St. John speaks, when he says, that "as many as received Him (the Incarnate Word), to them gave He power to become sons of God . . . . which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." (John i. 12, 13.) And John iii. 6, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." It is therefore truly said by a great English moralist and metaphysician, that "the generation, whether of plants or living creatures, is effected by that prolific virtue which is in the seed. Answerable, therefore, unto the twofold birth spoken of in the Scriptures, there is also a twofold seed. The first birth is that of the old man, by natural generation, whereby we are born the sons of Adam. The second birth is that of the new man, by spiritual regeneration, whereby we are born the sons of God. Answerably whereunto the first seed is semen Adx, the seed of the old Adam, derived unto us by carnal propagation from our natural parents, who are therefore called the fathers of our flesh (Heb. xii. 9); together wherewith is also derived that uncleanness of corruption, which upon our first birth cleaveth so in-separably to our nature, and is the inward principle from which all the works of the flesh have their emanation. But then there is another seed, semen Dei, as St. John calleth it (1 John iii. 9), the seed of the second Adam, Jesus Christ, God blessed for ever, derived unto us by the communication of His Holy Spirit, inwardly renewing us; together wherewith is also derived a measure of inherent supernatural grace, as the inward principle whence all the choice fruits of the Spirit do flow." Bp. Sanderson (i. p. 428).

12, 13.] Isaiah xxxv. 3. Prov. iv. 26, LXX. Τροχιὰ is properly מְיַבֶּל (maëyhal), an orbita, a road made for, and marked by, wheels; which was to be carefully followed, in order that the draught might be more easy. He returns to the metaphor drawn from the stadium, v. 1, 2. Theophyl. Here also is an argument against the Novatian heresy. Theophyl. Cp. vi. 4-6, and below, 13-15.] These words are almost metrical. Thus καὶ τροχιὰς ορθάς ποιήσατε τοις ποσίν ύμων form an Hexameter verse, and ού χωρίς οὐδείς ὄψεται τον Κύριον— Ἐπισκοποῦντες μή τις ὑστερῶν ἀπὸ make two Iambic verses. Cp. John iv. 35. James i. 17. 2 Pet. ii. 22. Perhaps such musical adaptations of moral precepts were designed in order to be helps to the memory, and in order that such sayings as these might easily circulate from mouth to mouth among Christians.

15. βίζα πικρίας] a root of bitterness. Deut. xxix. 18, LXX. Cp. Acts viii. 23. Rev. viii. 11.

- διὰ ταύτης] A has δι' αὐτης, and so Lach., not Tisch., ol πολλοί] the many. So A, Lach., and Tisch .- Elz. omits oî. Thus all the printed books, and the generality of MSS.; but the famous Alexandrine, and another at Oxford, have  $\mu \iota \alpha \nu \theta \hat{\omega} \sigma \iota \nu$ of πολλοί, lest the many be defiled, the multitude, the populace, the congregation,-which certainly is the more elegant, nay, the genuine reading, and ought to be assumed into the public editions. Dr. Bentley (Sermon on 5 Nov. vol. iii. p. 246).

16 η μή τις πόρνος, ή βέβηλος, ώς 'Ησαῦ, ος ἀντὶ βρώσεως μιᾶς ἀπέδοτο τὰ η Gen. 25. 33. πρωτοτόκια αὐτοῦ· 17 ° ἴστε γὰρ, ὅτι καὶ μετέπειτα θέλων κληρονομῆσαι τὴν Col. 3. 5. εὐλογίαν ἀπεδοκιμάσθη· μετανοίας γὰρ τόπον οὐχ εὖρε, καίπερ μετὰ δακρύων ο Gen. 27. 34, &c. έκζητήσας αὐτήν.

 $^{18}$   $^{p}$   $O\mathring{v}$  γὰρ προσεληλύθατε ψηλαφωμένω ὄρει, καὶ κεκαυμένω πυρὶ, καὶ γνόφω  $^{p}$   $^{exod. 19.12, &c.}$ καὶ ζόφω καὶ θυέλλη,  $^{19}$   $^{9}$  καὶ σάλπιγγος ἦχω, καὶ φων $\widehat{\eta}$  ἡημάτων, ης οἱ ἀκού- $^{\frac{8}{20}}$   $^{20}$   $^{15}$ .  $^{\frac{2}{20}}$   $^{15}$  σαντες παρητήσαντο μη προστεθηναι αὐτοῖς λόγον,  $^{20}$   $^{7}$  οὐκ ἔφερον γὰρ τὸ  $^{\frac{8}{20}}$   $^{15}$ .  $^{5}$ .  $^$ διαστελλόμενον, Καν θηρίον θίγη τοῦ ὄρους, λιθοβοληθήσεται, <sup>21</sup> καὶ, <sup>r Exod. 19. 13.</sup>

16. πόρνος, ἡ βέβηλος] fornicator, or profane. It is noted as | one of Esu's impleties, whom the Scripture hath branded as a profane person, that he grieved his parents in the choice of his wives. (Gen. xxvi. 35; xxviii. 8.) Bp. Sanderson, i. 38. Some of the Fathers (e. g. Primasius) regard those marriages as censured here in the word πόρνος.

The combination of the two words intimates the connexion of gluttony and uncleanness. Cp. Bengel.

— πρωτοτόκια] the Birthright, to which was annexed the progenitorship of the Messiah, and also the Priesthood.

Before the Priesthood of Aaron was constituted by God, the Priesthood was in the First-born of the family by hereditary succession. (See Bp. Bilson on Perpetual Government of the Church, p. 37. Bp. Patrick and others, upon Job i. 5; xlii. 8.) The goodly raiment which belonged to Esau, and which Rebecca took, and in which she clothed Jacob (Gen. xxvii. 15), was probably the raiment which belonged to the first-born as the Priest of the household. Primasius. As to Esau's raiment, compare Professor Blunt's Coincidences in the Old Testament concerning the Patriarchal Church, pp. 12-16.

The Birthright, which was a spiritual prerogative, is to be distinguished from the Blessing, which was dependent on the Father's will. See here v. 17. Gen. xxvii. 36, 37.

Esau is called βέβηλος, a profane person, because "he despised his birthright" (Gen. xxv. 33). And his example is here presented to the Hebrews as a warning not to despise their Christian Birthright, and incur his doom.

17. ἴστε—αὐτήν] for ye know that also afterwards (i. e. after he had sold the birthright) when he was desirous of inheriting the blessing (from his father) he was rejected; for he found not any place for repentance (i. e. for change of mind) although he sought it diligently with tears.

Esau is represented as a profane person, because he sold his birthright, for the gratification of a carnal appetite. His profaneness consisted in bartering away his spiritual privileges for a mess of pottage. He said, "What profit shall this birthright do me? So he despised his birthright" (Gen. xxv. 31—34). We hear of no remorse on his part at the time when he was guilty of profaneness. Cp. "Christian Year," 2nd Sunday in Lent.

It was not till afterwards, when he found that the forfeiture of a spiritual privilege involved a temporal loss, that he grieved over it. As long as he regarded it as purely spiritual, he was careless about it. But when he found, that his brother Jacob, to whom he had sold his birthright, had presented himself as the first-born to Isaac (Gen. xxvii. 19), and in the assumed character of the first-born had obtained the blessing from Isaac, and that Isaac declared "that he should be blessed," then Esau "cried with an exceeding bitter cry" (Gen. xxvii. 33, 34). When he heard that the blessing had conveyed to Jacob the temporal dominion and lordship over himself, and superabundance of wealth "in corn and wine," then he "lifted up his voice and wept." Then, but not till then, Esau rued what he had done in selling his birthright. Then, but not till then, he would have changed his mind with respect to his birthright, because he was desirous (θέλων) to inherit the temporal blessing (εὐλογίαν) that was annexed to the birthright; then he would have revoked the sale.

But it was now too late. The door of repentance was shut; the place of change of mind could no longer be found; the day of Retribution was come. God punished him for his profaneness in selling his birthright, and would not now allow him to change his mind (μετανοείν) in that respect. He had said, "What shall this birthright profit me?" He had despised it. He now regretted the sale, but it was only because it entailed temporal loss to himself, and conveyed secular supremacy to his brother. And even then, though he sought for a change of mind, as to the past sale, yet he was not truly contrite in heart. His grief was 'dolor amissi,' but not 'dolor admissi.' It was not 'dolor ob peccatum,' but 'dolor ob pænam peccati.' His tears were not shed for his sin, but for his suffering. They were like those of Cain: not shed for his offence, but for its penalty. They were not like the tears of Peter, but of Judas (see Matt. xxvi. 75; xxvii. 3). They were tears of a worldly sorrow that worketh death (2 Cor. vii. 10). They were tears of envy and rage, of malice and revenge against his brother, who had been blessed by God, and whose death Esau was plotting, and whose blood he desired to shed while he was shedding tears, in order that he might recover by murder what he had lost by profaneness, and that he might retrieve what God had given to Jacob by the voice of his father Isaac.

Therefore Esau was not really penitent at all. He found no place of repentance; for he did not search for it aright: see Dr. IV. H. Mill's excellent sermon on Esau's rejection. Serm. xxiii.

Thus interpreted, this passage affords no countenance to the Novatian heresy (cp. Theodoret here, and see above on vi. 4-10); nor is there any ground for the more constrained interpretation adopted by some learned Expositors in recent times, who suppose μετάνοιαν to mean " change of purpose in the mind of Isaac

The phrase μετανοίας τόπον εύρεῖν, is interpreted by all the Greek Expositors, "to find no place for his own repentance" (not Isaac's), and it was a phrase familiar to the Greek ear. See Wisdom xii. 10, κρίνων κατά βραχν εδίδους τόπον μετανοίας. Clemens Rom. c. 7, μετανοίας τόπον έδωκεν δ δεσπότης τοις βουλομένοις ἐπιστραφῆναι ἐπ' αὐτόν: and so 'dare locum pæni-tentiæ,' in Latin authors, e. g. Liv. xliv. 10. Plin. Epist. x. 97.

The sentence, rightly understood, contains a solemn warning to the Hebrews, as showing the sin and danger of despising their Christian Birthright, which, when it is too late, they may in vain desire to recover; and as inculcating the necessity of Repentance on their part; and as also pointing out the hollowness and futility of mere worldly sorrow; and as describing the true nature of that Repentance, by which alone they might be reconciled to God. It also coheres harmoniously with the sentences which follow, in which the Apostle exhorts to Repentance, by considerations of the excellency of the Gospel, and of the love of God manifested therein to all who are truly penitent.

18. Où  $\gamma d\rho$ ] Ye are not like Esau, who did not find any place for Repentance, as to the sale of his Birthright. Ye, in your approach to God, have not come near to a mountain that is only being felt-for in the dark with the hands of men who are blinded by clouds and darkness, like that awful gloom which enveloped Mount Sinai, when the Law was given from it. Cp. Acts xvii. 27, ζητείν τον Θεον, εὶ ἄρα ψηλαφήσειαν αὐτον, καὶ εὕροιεν, and the uses of the word ψηλαφῶν by the LXX in Gen. xxvii. 12. 21. Deut. xxviii. 29. Judg. xvi. 26. Isa. lix. 10, the best illustrations of this text; and cp. note above, on Exod. xix. 13.

St. Paul especially had personally realized the meaning of this word  $\psi \eta \lambda a \phi \hat{a} v$ , when he was struck with blindness, and was led by the hand of others (Acts ix. 8, 9), and when he saw Elymas the sorcerer also suddenly smitten with blindness, and groping his way, seeking some to lead him by the hand. (Acts xiii. 11.)

Ye have been invited with loving words to draw near to God; see vii. 19. And in your approaches to Him, ye are not like your Fathers at Mount Sinai. He is more gracious now to you in Christ and in the Christian Sion, than He ever was to them, His favoured people in ancient days. Ye are not come to a mountain that is felt-for by the hands of men groping their way in gloom.

But ye have come to the noonday light, and Evangelical sunshine of Mount Sion, and to Jesus the Mediator of the New Covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling which cleanses you from your sins. Ye are therefore not like Esau. Ye may find the place of Repentance. Ye have been brought to it in the Gospel. The door of Repentance is opened to you by Jesus, the Mediator of the New Covenant. It is sprinkled by His Blood. Therefore do not turn away from it, or ye may incur his doom.

On the present participle ψηλαφωμένφ, see Winer, § 45,

p. 307, who compares τὰ βλεπόμενα, xi. 3.

For a similar comparison of the circumstances of the delivery

For a similar comparison of the circumstances of the delivery of the two Covenants, see Justin M. c. Tryphon. c. 67. For  $\delta\phi\phi$ , the reading of A, C, D\*, Elz. has  $\sigma\kappa\delta\tau\phi$ . 20.  $\tau\delta$   $\delta\iota\alpha\sigma\tau\epsilon\lambda\lambda\delta\mu\epsilon\nu\sigma\nu$ ] that which was being commanded. Observe the present tense; referring to the awful circumstance which accompanied the delivery, and inspired the dread here described. Cp.  $\phi\alpha\nu\tau\alpha\delta\delta\mu\epsilon\nu\sigma\nu$ , that which was appearing, v. 21.

ουτω φοβερον ην το φανταζόμενον, Μωυσης είπεν, Έκφοβός είμι καὶ έν-e Gal. 4. 26. Rev. 3. 12. & 21. 2, 10. Phil. 8. 20. Deut. 33. 2. Jude 14. Luke 10. 20. Gen. 18, 25, ch. 11, 40. Phil, 3, 12. u Gen. 4. 10. Exod. 24. 8.

22 5 'Αλλά προσεληλύθατε Σιων όρει, καὶ πόλει Θεοῦ ζωντος, 'Ιερουσαλήμ έπουρανίω, καὶ μυριάσιν ἀγγέλων, <sup>23 *</sup> πανηγύρει καὶ ἐκκλησία πρωτοτόκων ἀπογεγραμμένων έν οὐρανοῖς, καὶ κριτή Θεώ πάντων, καὶ πνεύμασι δικαίων τετελειωμένων, 24 " καὶ διαθήκης νέας μεσίτη Ἰησοῦ, καὶ αἴματι ραντισμοῦ κρεῖττον λαλοῦντι παρὰ τὸν "Αβελ.

25 Βλέπετε, μη παραιτήσησθε τον λαλούντα. Εί γαρ έκείνοι οὐκ ἔφυγον τον Exod. 24. 8. 10. 2. 10. 25  $^{\circ}$  Βλέπετε, μὴ παραιτήσησθε τὸν λαλοῦντα. Εἰ γὰρ ἐκεῖνοι οὐκ ἔφυγον τὸν ch. 8. 6. 8. 9. 15. 2. 10. 22. 21. 4. ἐπὶ γῆς παραιτησάμενοι χρηματίζοντα, πολλῷ μᾶλλον ἡμεῖς οἱ τὸν ἀπ' οὐρανῶν 1 pet. 1. 2. 2 vch. 2. 2. 3. 2 tch. 2. 2. 6. ver. 19. 9 Ps. 102. 27. 9 Ps. 102. 27. 9 Ps. 102. 27. 102. 27. 103. 25. 29 Pet. 3. 10. 27. 27 Fet. 3. 10. 27. 28 Tch. 27. 28 Tch. 28 Tch. 29 Tch. 30 Tch. 29 Tch. 30 Tch. 20 Tch. 2 τὰ μὴ σαλευόμενα.

23 ε Διὸ βασιλείαν ἀσάλευτον παραλαμβάνοντες έχωμεν χάριν, δι ής λατρεύωμεν εὐαρέστως τῷ Θεῷ μετὰ αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας 29 22 καὶ γὰρ ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν πῦρ καταναλίσκον.

ΧΙΙΙ. 1 ε ή φιλαδελφία μενέτω 2 της φιλοξενίας μη ἐπιλανθάνεσθε, διὰ ταύτης γὰρ ἔλαθόν τινες ξενίσαντες ἀγγέλους.

 $^3$   $^{ m c}$ Μιμνήσκεσhetaε τῶν δεσμίων ὡς συνδεδεμένοι $^{
m c}$  τῶν κακουχουμένων ὡς καὶ αὐτοὶ ὄντες ἐν σώματι.

4 Τίμιος ὁ γάμος ἐν πᾶσι καὶ ἡ κοίτη ἀμίαντος πόρνους δὲ καὶ μοιχοὺς κρινεῖ zz Deut. 4. 24. Jsa. 66. 15. Ps. 97. 3.

£ 1 Pet. 2. 5.

a Rom. 12, 10. a Rom. 12. 10. Eph. 4. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 22. & 2. 17. & 3. 8. & 4. 8. b Gen. 18. 1. b Gen. 18. 1. & 19. 1. Rom. 12. 13. 1 Pet. 4. 9. c Matt. 25. 36. Rom. 12. 15. Col. 4. 18. 1 Pet. 3, 8, After λιθοβοληθήσεται Elz. adds ή βολίδι κατατοξευθήσεται -not in the best MSS.

22. προσεληλύθατε] ye have come—so much greater are your privileges than theirs. Ye have come to Mount Sion; they were like blind men groping for Mount Sinai. Even Moses, their Mediator, was smitten with fear and trembling. But your Medistor is Jesus, the true Joshua, the Everlasting Saviour, the Son of God, and He has ascended the Mountain of God, and has called you to Himself, to that heavenly Rest which was typified by the earthly Canaan, and which He has purchased for you by His own Blood.

23. ἐκκλησία πρωτοτόκων] the Church of the First-born—the true First-born. He continues the reference to Esau, the elder brother according to the flesh, who was rejected for his own profaneness and impenitence. You have come to the Church of the First-born, made so by their adoption into Christ, the Only-Begotten Son of the Father (cp. i. 6. Gal. iv. 7. Rom. viii. 16. 29), and the First-Begotten from the Dead. (Col. i. 18. Rev.

πνεύμασι δικαίων] the spirits of just men made perfect by faith in Christ. The spirits of those who have been engrafted in Christ, and have continued stedfastly in His mystical Body, are not separated from it by Death, which severed their spirits from their own mortal bodies; Death cannot pluck them out of His hand. Their bodies are resting in the grave till the sound of the last trump, and the day of Resurrection; but their spirits are in Paradise, and hold converse with each other there, and communicate with the blessed company of all faithful people, who are united together in the Communion of Saints. Here is a joyful assurance of the blessed state of the Souls of the Just, in the interval between Death and Resurrection. See above on I Thess. iv. 16, and on Luke xxiii. 43. Cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ix. p. 664.

24. αίματι - Aβελ] The blood of Abel cried from the ground for vengeance against his murderer. The blood of Christ cries for vengeance against his murderer. The blood of Christ cries for pardon for you to God. Theophyl. Cp. on Gen. iv. 8-10.

28. μετὰ αἰδοῦς καὶ εὐλαβείας] Some Editors (Lach., Bleek, Tisch., Liin.) have μ. εὐλαβείας καὶ δέους. But αἰδοῦς is found in D***, I, K, M, and the Peschito, and is not so likely as δέους to have been inserted by the copyists.

29. πυρ καταναλίσκον] a consuming fire: from Deut. iv. 24,

CH. XIII. 2. έλαθόν τινες ξενίσαντες άγγέλους] some entertained Angels unaurres. As Abraham, Gen. xviii. 2, Lot, Gen. xix. 1. "Quî scis an Deum suscipias, cùm hospitem putas? sic enim scriptum est in Evangelio, dicento Domino Jesu, Hospes eram, et collegistis Me." Matt. xxv. 35. Ambrose, de Abraham 5. A Lapide.

There seems to be a paronomasia in ξλαθον and μη ἐπι- $\lambda \alpha \nu \theta d \nu \epsilon \sigma \theta \epsilon$  —a common figure with St. Paul, especially at the close of his Epistles. See above, Rom. xii. 3, and 13, 14, note, and 2 Thess. iii. 11.

4. Τίμιος δ γάμος ἐν πᾶσι] Two things are to be here observed: (1) the order of the words;

(2) the non-insertion of the verb substantive, either earl, is, or ἔστω, let it be.

The reason of this seems to be, that the sentence was designed to be a Christian proverb, and to pass currently from mouth to mouth, as a maxim of Christian life. Accordingly, the verb substantive is not inserted; and this non-insertion is characteristic of Proverbs, especially in Hebrew, as may be seen in those of Solomon. "Honorabile conjugium in omnibus" expresses the sense in Latin: but it is not easy to render it in English, without restricting it either to the sense of an assertion, or to that of a precept: whereas it seems most probable that the Apostle intended that it should serve either purpose, but not to the exclusion of the other. Accordingly, we find that the ancient to adopt a restricting which would comprise both. Perhaps it might be best expressed thus, "Honour to Marriage!" There is a similar proverbial conciseness in v. 5, ἀφιλάργυρος δ τρόπος, and in the Christian axiom contained in Rom. xii. 9.

and modern Expositors give both senses: and it would be better

The word τίμιος, honourable, is specially appropriate here, as containing a warning against the πάθη ἀτιμίας (Rom. i. 26), by which some dishonoured their bodies: and as conveying a command to keep the body ἐν τιμῆ, in honour (see on 1 Thess. iv. 4), and to "give honour to the wife, as the weaker vessel." See I Pet. iii. 7.

The words  $\ell \nu$   $\pi \hat{a} \sigma \iota$  signify in all respects (see v. 18. Col. 3. Phil. iv. 12. Titus ii. 9), as well as in all persons, as Theophyl. explains it, μη ἐν τούτφ τῷ μέρει τίμιος, ἐν άλλφ δ' ου, άλλ' δλος δι' δλου: so that the sense is, Marriage is, -and où,  $\lambda\lambda\lambda'$  3 $\lambda$ 0,  $\delta\iota'$  3 $\lambda$ 0v: so that the sense is, Marriage is,—and let it be accounted,—honourable in all places, times, and persons. Cp. the Arabic and Ethiopic versions; the former rendering it in all respects, the latter every where; Marriage is altogether honourable. Honourable let it be, on account of its institution by God in Paradise (Gen. ii. 22). Honourable, on account of its consecration by Christ (Eph. v. 22—33). Honourable, as a remedy against fornication (1 Cor. vii. 2. 1 Tim. v. 14). Honourable as the appointed when so the programmable as the appointed as the programmable as the programmable as the appointed as the programmable nourable, as the appointed means for the procreation of children, and for the peopling of Heaven with saints.

By the word 'honourable' he delivers a protest against those Indaizing and Gnostic teachers, who stigmatized Marriage as

 $^{5}$   $^{4}$  Αφιλάργυρος ὁ τρόπος, ἀρκούμενοι τοῖς παροῦσιν, αὐτὸς γὰρ εἴρηκεν, O  $\overset{d}{v}$   $\overset{\text{Exod. 23}}{\overset{1}{\circ}}$   $\overset{8}{\circ}$   $\overset{6}{\circ}$   $\overset{$ μή σε ἀνῶ, οὐδ' οὐ μή σε ἐγκαταλίπω, 6°ωστε θαρροῦντας ἡμᾶς λέγειν, Κύή σε άνῶ, οὐδ' οὐ μή σε εγκαταλιπω, "ωστε υαρρουντας ημας λεγειν, ΙΣΟ- 1 Chron. 28. 20. ος ἐμοὶ βοηθὸς, καὶ οὐ φοβηθήσομαι τί ποιήσει μοι ἄνθρωπος; Prov. 15. 16. Ματί 6. 25, 31. <sup>7 ·</sup> Μνημονεύετε τῶν ἡγουμένων ὑμῶν, οἴτινες ἐλάλησαν ὑμῖν τὸν λόγον τοῦ Phil. 4. 11. 1 Tim. 6. 6, &c. ριος έμοι βοηθός, και ου φοβηθήσομαι τί ποιήσει μοι ἄνθρωπος;

Θεοῦ· ὧν ἀναθεωροῦντες τὴν ἔκβασιν τῆς ἀναστροφῆς μιμεῖσθε τὴν πίστιν.

 $^8$  Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς  $\dot{\epsilon}_X \theta \dot{\epsilon}_S$  καὶ σήμερον  $\dot{\delta}$  αὐτὸς, καὶ εἰς τοὺς αἰώνας.

9 ε Διδαχαίς ποικίλαις καὶ ξέναις μὴ παραφέρεσθε καλὸν γὰρ χάριτι βεβαιοῦσθαι τὴν καρδίαν, οὐ βρώμασιν, ἐν οἶς οὐκ ὡφελήθησαν οἱ περιπατήσαντες.

f ver. 17. ch. 6. 12. g Eph. 4. 14. & 5. 6 & 5. 6 1 John 4. 1. Rom. 14. 17. Col. 2. 8, 16. 1 Tim. 4. 3.

dishonourable; and asserts its proper office in the keeping of the body in sanctification and honour (τιμῆ, 1 Thess. iv. 4). See on 1 Tim. iv. 3. Col. ii. 23. Cp. Iren. i. 24, "Nubere et generare à Satanâ dicunt esse." Grey. Nazianz. Hom. xxxvii. p. 651, και ή κοίτη αμίαντος] and the bed undefiled. Some have censured this rendering of the English Version as inaccurate. But it seems to be commendable, in what it does not say, but leaves undetermined. It seems probable that the writer himself purposely left this Christian proverb to be applied either as a precept or as an assertion. This is the very essence of Proverbs. See the foregoing note, and on Eph. iv. 1. Honourable [is, and honourable be accounted] Marriage in all (both things and persons), and the bed (the marriage-bed) if undefiled; Honorabile conjugium, et lectus genialis, non pollutus adulterio neque libidine. Hec autem dicuntur ab Apostolo contrà eos, qui vel Nuptias damnabant tanquam à Diabolo conflatas, vel honestum matrimonii usum conjugatis interdicebant (cf. 1 Tim. iv. 3. 1 Cor. vii. 5) vel matrimonii vinculum divortio temerè dirumpebant. Matt. xix. 3. 10.

The word κοίτη is used by the Apostle with that reverential modesty and reserve which characterize him, (see on 1 Thess. iv. 6,) for conjugal intercourse; cp. Rom. ix. 10. The plural κοίται in Rom. xiii. 13 expresses the abuses of the κοίτη.

Some recent interpreters render και ή κοίτη αμίαντος and let the bed be undefiled; but this seems to be an incorrect translation. It is not true that the non-insertion of the article  $\dot{\eta}$ before àmiantos. The since the that the hotenestation of the anter  $\eta$  before àmiantos proves that àmiantos is a predicate. See Gal. i. 4. 1 Cor. x. 3. Winer, § 20, and Kühner, § 493, who rightly observes that  $\delta$  àn  $\eta$  àn  $\eta$  and  $\delta$  is equivalent to  $\delta$  n  $\eta$  and  $\delta$  is an  $\delta$  and  $\delta$  is equivalent to  $\delta$  n  $\delta$  n words ή κοίτη ή ἀμίαντος would have signified "the undefiled bed."

The whole sentence may be thus paraphrased. Whatever false Teachers among you may assert, either to the disparagement of Matrimony and of conjugal intercourse on the one side (1 Tim. iv. 3; cp. 1 Cor. vii. 3. 5. Col. ii. 23) in a proud spirit of self-righteous asceticism, (see the foregoing note;) or whatever libertines may our saceticism, (see the foregoing note;) or whatever inertines may practise, on the other side, by treating the deadly sin of fornication as an indifferent thing (see on Acts xv. 20); and violating the divine law, which forbids Divorce (Matt. xix. 9); do not you run into any of those sins. Let this be your watchword, this your rule,  $Tl\mu os \delta \gamma d\mu os \kappa al \hat{\eta} \kappa ol\tau \eta \hat{\alpha} \mu lavros$ , "Honour to Matrimony, and Honour also to the Marriage-Bed, when kept undefield!" defiled."

— 5¢] but. So Elz. with C, D***, I, K, and the great majority of Cursives and Fathers, and Tisch. But Griesb. and Lach.

have γάρ, with A, D*, M, and so Alf.
5. 'Αφιλάργυρος δ τρόπος, ἀρκούμενοι τοις παροῦσιν] Your behaviour without love of money: being content with your lot. Τοις εφοδίοις του Θεού άρκούμενοι. Clem. R. i. 2.

A remarkable syntax:

This passage generally, xiii. 1—6, and this clause in it, are very characteristic of St. Paul, and afford evidence of the Pauline origin of the Epistle.

Dr. Barrow has the following just remark at the commencement of one of his Sermons (Serm. vi. On the Duty of Prayer, i. p. 69, ed. 1683). "It is," he says, "the manner of St. Paul in his Epistles, after that he hath, discussed some main points of doctrine or discipline, to propose several good advices and rules, in the observance whereof the life of Christian practice doth consist. So that he thereby hath furnished us with so rich a variety of moral and spiritual precepts concerning special matters, subordinate to the general Rules of Piety and Virtue, that out of them might well be compiled a Body of Ethics, or system of precepts de officiis, in truth and completeness far excelling those which any Philosophy hath been able to devise or deliver. These he rangeth not in any formal method, nor linketh together with strict connexion, but freely scattereth them, as from his mind (as out of a fertile soil, impregnated with all seeds of wisdom and goodness) they did haply spring up, or as they were suggested by that Holy Spirit, which continually guided and governed him."

Such are the words of Dr. Barrow. For an example of this truth, it may suffice to refer to the ethical conclusion of St. Paul's great dogmatic Epistle, the Epistle to the Romans. At the close of its eleventh chapter, he passes from the region of Spiritual doctrine, and (to adopt Dr. Barrow's figure) begins to sow the precepts of moral practice.

And now, in the structure of the present Epistle, we find precisely the same thing done. The Author has passed from doctrine to practice; the seed sown here is very much the same as in the Epistle to the Romans, and the manner of sowing it is the same. The latter parts of these two Epistles are like two gardens cultivated by the same hand.

There is also another characteristic in both. In the Epistle to the Romans (xii. 9) we read, " Let Love be without dissimulation, abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good." words stand thus in our English Version, and there is nothing remarkable in such an English construction. But the construction of the original is very remarkable: ἡ ἀγάπη ἀνυπόκριτος, ἀποστυγοῦντες τὸ πονηρὸν, κολλώμενοι τῷ ἀγαθῷ. Here we have no verb expressed; we have two nominatives placed absolutely; and what is more remarkable, we have a noun feminine nominative absolute (ή ἀγάπη ἀνυπόκριτος) branching out suddenly into a participle masculine nominative absolute (ἀποστυγοῦντες τὸ πονηρὸν, κολλώμενοι τῷ ἀγαθῷ). Scarcely another instance of this construction can be found in the New Testament, except in one place. And that place is the parallel practical portion at the close of the present Epistle to the Hebrews (Heb. xiii. 5), where we read ἀφιλάργυρος δ τρόπος, άρκούμενοι τοις παρούσιν.

Nor is this all. If we turn back to the passage in the Epistle to the Romans, we find that the precept, being joined on as it to the Romans, we find that the precept, being joined on as it were by stalks and branches with other similar precepts, has its root in a text of Holy Scripture,—"For it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord" (Rom. xii. 19). So the precept here, "Be content with such things as ye have, for He hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

Not only, therefore, is the seed sown, and the manner of sowing, in the Epistle to the Hebrews, very like that of St. Paul, is his Friedle to the Represe but they is a givilar mode of coeff.

in his Epistle to the Romans, but there is a similar mode of grafting also in the one and the other; whence we may infer, that, to the Hebrews also the Apostle St. Paul might have said, Ye are God's husbandry ; we are labourers together with Him: I have planted, and God hath given the increase. (1 Cor. iii. 6. 9.)

5, 6. Οὐ μή σε ἀνῶ-ἄνθρωπσς] Deut. xxxi. 8. Ps. cxviii. 6, LXX. Ti = Hebr. np, what? a direct question.

7. Μνημονεύετε των ήγουμένων] Remember your spiritual In bidding them to remember them, and to consider the end of their conversation, he is referring (as Theodoret says) to those who had died for Christ at Jerusalem, particularly to St. Stephen, the First Martyr, and to his preaching (Acts vii. 1-60), and to St. James, the first Martyr-Apostle (Acts xii. 1, 2), and to St. James, their first Bishop, whose memory might well be revered by St. Paul, because the death of St. James was a consequence of St. Paul's own deliverance from the Jews, about three years (as is probable) before the date of this Epistle. See Euseb. ii. 23, and above, Chronol. Synops, prefixed to the Acts,

8. Ίησοῦς Χριστός κ.τ.λ.] Jesus Christ always the same—not changeable, like the Law.

9. μη παραφέρεσθε] be not ye carried aside. So the best MSS. -Elz, has  $\pi\epsilon\rho\iota\phi\epsilon\rho\epsilon\sigma\theta\epsilon$ .

οὐ βρώμασιν] not by meats; of the Levitical Law (see ix. 10. 1 Cor. viii. 8); and of the Levitical sacrifices.

- οὐκ ἀφελήθησαν] they were not profited by feeding on the Levitical sacrifices, who walked in them, and did not look by faith for something beyond them. See ix. 9. The true worshippers under the Law did not walk in them, but they travelled by them and through them toward a spiritual home in Christ.

10 1 Εχομεν θυσιαστήριον, έξ οδ φαγείν οὐκ ἔχουσιν έξουσίαν οἱ τῆ σκηνη h 1 Cor. 9. 13.  $^{8.10.18.}_{1\ Exod. 29.14.}$  λατρεύοντες.  $^{11\ i\ \circ}\Omega\nu$  γὰρ εἰσφέρεται ζώων τὸ αἷμα περὶ ἁμαρτίας εἰς τὰ ἄγια ε΄6.30.  $^{8.16.27.}_{1\ Num. 19.3.}$  διὰ τοῦ ἀρχιερέως, τούτων τὰ σώματα κατακαίεται ἔξω τῆς παρεμβολῆς. k John 19. 17, 18.  $^{12}$  k Διὸ καὶ Ἰησοῦς, ἴνα ἁγιάση διὰ τοῦ ἰδίου αἴματος τὸν λαὸν, ἔξω τῆς πύλης Acts 7. 58. ἔπαθε.

Acts 5, 41, m Mic. 2, 10, Phil. 3, 20. Ch. 11, 10, 16, n Lev. 7, 12, Ps. 50, 23, & 51, 19, Hos. 14, 2, Fpb. 5, 20 Eph. 5. 20. 1 Pet. 2. 5. o 2 Cor. 9. 12.

13 Ι Τοίνυν εξερχώμεθα πρὸς αὐτὸν έξω τῆς παρεμβολῆς τὸν ὀνειδισμὸν αὐτοῦ φέροντες, 14 m οὐ γὰρ ἔχομεν ὧδε μένουσαν πόλιν, ἀλλὰ τὴν μέλλουσαν έπιζητοῦμεν.

15 α Δι' αὐτοῦ οὖν ἀναφέρωμεν θυσίαν αἰνέσεως διαπαντὸς τῷ Θεῷ, τουτέστι καρπὸν χειλέων όμολογούντων τῷ ὀνόματι αὐτοῦ. 16 ° Τῆς δὲ εὐποιίας καὶ κοινωνίας μη ἐπιλανθάνεσθε, τοιαύταις γὰρ θυσίαις εὐαρεστεῖται ὁ Θεός.

10. θυσιαστήριον] an Altar. Cp. Ignat. Eph. 5. Trall. 7.
We have an Altar of bloodless and rational sacrifices.
Eusebius (Dem. Ev. i. c. 6).

This text is important, in regard to the use of the name

Altar in the Christian Church.

They which honour the Law as an image of the wisdom of God Himself, are notwithstanding to know that the same had an end in Christ. But what? Was the Law so abolished with Christ, that after His Ascension the office of Priests became immediately wicked, and the very name hateful, as importing the exercise of an ungodly function? No, as long as the glory of the Temple continued, and till the time of that final desolation was accomplished, the very Christian Jews did continue with their sacrifices and other parts of Legal service. That very Law, therefore, which our Saviour was to abolish, did not so soon become unlawful to be observed, as some imagine; nor was it afterwards unlawful so far, that the very name of Altar, of Priest, of Sacrifice itself, should be banished out of the world. For though God do now hate sacrifice, whether it be heathenish or Jewish, so that we cannot have the same things which they had but with impiety, yet unless there be some greater let than the only evacuation of the Law of Moses, the names themselves may (I hope) be retained without sin, in respect of that proportion which things established by our Saviour have unto them which by Him are abrogated. And so throughout all the writings of the ancient Fathers we see that the words which were, do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the letter is accomplished in the truth. Hooker, IV. x. 10. The following words are from Bp. Andrewes (vol. v. p. 66), on the names of Altar, Priest, &c. :

The Church of Rome hath her imaginations,-

First, in that she many times celebrateth this mystery of the Eucharist, sine fractione, without any breaking of bread' at all. Whereas, as hath been shown out of the tenth chapter of the first of Corinthians, the eighteenth verse, it is of the nature of an Eucharist or peace-offering (compare Lev. iii. 3; vii. 15), which was never offered but it was eaten, that both there may be a representation of the memory of that sacrifice, and together an application to each person, by partaking it.

Secondly, in that the Church of Rome hath indeed no breaking of bread' at all. For it being broken ever after it is consecrated, there is with them no bread remaining to break; and the body of Christ is now impassible, and cannot be broken; so that they are fain to say they break accidents, and indeed they well know not what. Contrary to St. Luke (Acts xx. 7; ii. 46), who calleth it fractionem panis, and to St. Paul, who saith, Panis quem frangimus (1 Cor. x. 16).

As these are their imaginations, so we want not ours.

For many among us fancy only a sacrament in this action, and look strange at the mention of a sacrifice; whereas we not only use it as a nourishment spiritual, as that it is too, but as a mean also to renew a "covenant" with God by virtue of that "Sacrifice," as the Psalmist speaketh (Ps. 1. 5). So our Saviour "Sacrifice," as the Psalmist speaketh (Ps. l. 5). So our Saviour Christ in the institution telleth us (Luke xxii. 20), and the Apostle (Heb. xiii. 10). And the old writers use no less the word sacrifice than sacrament, altar than table, offer than eat; but both indifferently, to show there is both.

And again, too, that to a many with us it is indeed so fractio panis, as it is that only, and nothing beside; whereas the "bread which we break is the partaking of Christ's" true body (1 Cor. x. 16), and not of a sign, figure, or remembrance of it. For the Church hath ever believed a true fruition of the true body of Christ in that Sacrament. Bp. Andrewes.

The title of Priest, although it did (as most certainly it doth not) properly and primarily signify a Jewish sacrificer (or slaughterer of beasts) doth yet nowise deserve that reproach, which is by some inconsiderately (not to say profanely), upon that mistaken ground, commonly cast upon it; since the Holy Scripture itself, we see, doth here (Ps. cxxxii. 16) even in that sense (most obnoxious to exception) ascribe it to the Christian pastors. And so likewise doth the Prophet Isaiah, And I will also take of them for Priests and for Levites, saith the Lord (Isa. lxvi. 21), speaking (as the context plainly declares) of the Gentiles, which should be converted and aggregated to God's Church. And the Prophet Jeremiah, Neither shall the Priests the Leviles want a man before me to offer burnt-offerings, and to do sacrifice con-tinually (Jer. xxxiii. 18). Which prophecy also evidently con-cerns the same time and state of things, of which the Prophet Malachi thus foretells: For from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the Gentiles; and in every place incense shall be offered to my name, and a pure offering (Mal. i. 11). It were desirable, therefore, that men would better consider, before they entertain such groundless offences, or pass so uncharitable censures upon either words, or persons, or things. Dr. Barrow (Sermons, i. p. 257).

And even Richard Baxter thus speaks; — Question. What think you of the names Sacrifice, Altar, and Priest?

Answer. The ancient Churches used them all, without exception from any Christian that ever I heard of. As the bread is justly called Christ's body, as signifying it, so the action described was of old called a sacrifice, as representing and commemorating it. And it is no more improper than calling our bodies, and our alms, and our prayers, sacrifices. And the naming of the table an altar, as related to this representative sacrifice, is no more improper than the other.

"We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat" (Heb. xiii. 10) seems plainly to mean the sacramental com-munion. Richard Baxter (in Christian Institutes, i. p. 304).

Christians have an Altar whereof they partake . . Christ performed His Sacrifice, in the active and transient sense, once for all, upon the Cross. He distributes it daily, in the passive and abiding sense of it, to all His true Servants, to every faithful Communicant. His Table here below is a secondary Altar in two views; first, on the score of our own Sacrifices of Prayers, Praises, Souls, and Bodies, which we offer up from thence; secondly, as it is the Seat of the consecrated Elements, that is, of the Body and Blood of Christ, that is, of the grand Sacrifice symbolically represented and exhibited, and spiritually there re-ceived,—received by and with the Signs bearing the Name of the Things. Dr. Waterland (Distinctions of Sacrifice, p. 69, ed.

— οἱ τῷ σκηνῷ λατρεύοντες] those who serve the Tabernacle, the Levitical Priests; those who remain within the Tabernacle, and do not go out of the camp to Jesus, Who is the true sacrifice.

He uses the word σκηνη, Tabernacle, and studiously avoids, for obvious reasons, the word Temple. It is remarkable that neither the word lepdy nor vads occurs once in this Epistle. The word σκηνή occurs nine times.

10—16.] The sense of these verses, which will be best considered collectively, is as follows: We Christians are charged by the Jews with having no Altar. But this is not true. Far from it. We have an Altar in a far higher and more glorious sense than they have. We have an Altar, of which they have no right to eat who remain within the confines of the Levitical Tabernacle, and do not go out of the camp to Jesus, the true Sacrifice; that is, who continue as Jews within the narrow precincts of the Levitical Law, and do not go forth as Christians to the larger liberty of the Gospel.

This great truth (says the Apostle) was prefigured even by $^{17}$   $^{p}$  Πείθεσθε τοῖς ἡγουμένοις ὑμῶν καὶ ὑπείκετε, αὐτοὶ γὰρ ἀγρυπνοῦσιν ὑπὲρ  $^{p}$   $^{Ezck. 3. 17.}$   $^{c}$   $^{c}$  στενάζοντες άλυσιτελές γάρ ύμιν τοῦτο.

 $^{18}$   $^{q}$  Προσεύχεσθε περὶ ἡμῶν πειθόμεθα γὰρ, ὅτι καλὴν συνείδησιν ἔχομεν ἐν  $^{q}$  Rom. 15. 30. πᾶσι καλῶς θέλοντες ἀναστρέφεσθαι.  $^{19}$   $^{\tau}$  Περισσοτέρως δὲ παρακαλῶ τοῦτο Acts 23. 1.  $^{r}$  Philem, 22. ποιήσαι, ίνα τάχιον ἀποκατασταθῶ ὑμῖν.

the Levitical Law itself. For the bodies of the sacrifices, whose blood was brought into the Holy Place, were not to be eaten within the Tabernacle, but were to be utterly consumed with fire which the laberhacte, but were to be utterly consident with the outside the camp. See Lev. vi. 30; ix. 11; xvi. 27. Or, if τὰ ἄγια means here the Holiest of all (as ix. 3. 12. 24, 25; x. 19), the same was true. Why this was, see on Lev. vi. 30; xvi. 26.

These Levitical Sacrifices for sin (περὶ ἀμαρτίαs), or sin-offerings, were figures of the One True Sacrifice offered by Christ, Who, as our Priest, offered Himself as our Victim, slain for the sins of the whole world without the Camp, being crucified on Calvary without the City-walls (see Matt. xxvii. 32); and Who, also, as our Priest, entered once for all into the true Holy of Holies with His own Blood. See above, ix. 8. 12. 25.

The Altar on which the sacrifice, typified by all other sacrifices, was offered, is the Cross of Christ on Calvary. There He offered Himself once for all; and thence He carried His own Blood within the Veil into the Heavenly Holy of Holies, and there He is ever pleading for us, as our High Priest, the all-prevailing efficacy of that sacrifice offered once for all.

They, therefore, who linger within the courts of the Levitical Law, and do not go forth to Calvary, have no part in the true Altar, and in the true Sacrifice.

But let us take up our Cross (v. 13), and follow Christ. us go forth from the Tabernacle, and from the Camp to Calvary. Let us go forth from the Altar of Aaron to that of Christ. us go forth from the earthly and perishable City, and ascend by faith to the heavenly and eternal (v. 14). Let us go forth from the region of Levitical shadows to the substantial blessings of the Gospel. Theodoret.

But what is our Altar? and what are its sacrifices? The Apostle answers this question in vv. 15, 16.

We Christians do not partake thereat of carnal meats and drinks, like those who serve the Tabernacle, and who, resting upon those shadowy ordinances, were not profited by them (v. 9) But yet we have an Altar at which we feed (v. 10), the Altar at which we partake of Christ's body and blood. (Theophyl., Priwhich we partage of christ's body and boods. (Theophys., Frimasius.) We are nourished there by divine grace, and are conforted thereby in our hearts (v. 9). We are more privileged than our fathers ever were. Not even the priests were permitted to taste their own offerings; but we are permitted and invited to feed on ours. Chrys.

We do not slay bloody Victims, as they do, but we there offer perpetually the sacrifice of praise to God through Christ. We do not there offer the produce merely of our corn and wine, but we offer the fruit of our lips (Hos. xiv. 2, as paraphrased for Greek readers by the LXX), praising His holy Name. We there offer alms to God through Christ. For with such sacrifices God is well pleased. Cp. Rom. xii. 1, where St. Paul says, I beseech you to present your bodies a living sacrifice, well pleasing to God.

On κοινωνία, see Gal. vi. 6. 2 Cor. viii. 4. Phil. iv. 15.

Compare also St. Peter's language: "To Whom, coming as a living Stone, ye also as lively stones are being built up a spiritual house, a holy Priesthood, to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. ii. 5.

On this subject of spiritual sacrifices, see Mede on the Christian Sacrifice; Waterland's Charge on Distinction of Sacrifice, § 10; and the authorities in Suicer, v. buola.

On this passage it may be observed-

(1) That if the Apostle had supposed Christ's Body and Blood to be offered as a sacrifice on the Christian Altar on earth, he would not surely have omitted to say so, in describing the Christian Altar and the Christian sacrifice,

(2) That he does speak of a right to eat at this Altar; not to eat carnally (v. 9), but in the heart, and for growth in grace

(3) That he has fully described elsewhere what that eating at the Christian Altar is. 1 Cor. x. 16; xi. 24.

(4) That he has also said, that therein we declare, announce (καταγγέλλομεν) the Lord's Death as an act already done; an expression inconsistent with the notion that we ourselves do that act, either by repetition or by continuation. (1 Cor. xi. 26.) Cp. above on Heb. x. 12.

St. Paul exhorts us to offer our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and well pleasing to God, which is our rational worship. (Rom. Vol. II.—PART III.

xii. 1.) And, again, Let us offer the sacrifice of praise, that is, the fruit of our lips. These offerings, indeed, are not according to the Levitical Law, the handwriting of which has been taken away by our Lord (Col. ii. 14), but they are according to the Spirit; for we must worship God in spirit and in truth. (John but spiritual, and therefore pure. For we offer to God the Bread and the Cup of Blessing, giving Thanks to Him for that He commanded the earth to bring forth these fruits for our nourishment. And when we have made this offering, then we invoke the Holy Spirit, in order that He would exhibit (ἀποφήνη) this sacrifice and this bread to be the body of Christ, and the cup to be the blood of Christ, in order that they who have partaken of these symbols (των ἀντιτύπων, cp. above, ix. 24) may receive remission of sins, and everlasting life. They, therefore, who bring these offerings in commemoration of the Lord, do not consent to the dogmas of the Jews, but, worshipping spiritually, shall be called the children of wisdom. S. Irenæus (fr. ii. ed. Pfaffii, Lug. Bat. 1743, p. 26). See above, x. 12.

17. Πεθεσθε τοῖς ἡγουμένοις] Obey your spiritual guides, and submit yourselves. A precept which seems to show, that the Author of this Epistle had not undertaken the task of writing it without the approval of their Pastors. He who gives this direction to others, would certainly have complied with it himself.

Perhaps he wrote the Epistle at their desire.

The writer of this Epistle appears to be very studious of showing his affection and deference to the Clergy of the Church at Jerusalem. See also below on v. 24.

This was what might be specially expected from St. Paul, for reasons which will be specified in the note on that verse. Besides, since he was the Apostle of the Gentiles, it might, perhaps, be objected by some of his adversaries (overlooking his claims to address the Hebrews, see Introduction, p. 369), that in writing to the Church at Jerusalem he was intruding into a province that did not belong to him. He might, therefore, be reasonably very desirous to obviate this objection, and to make all men understand that he was on terms of entire friendship with the Clergy of Jerusalem, and that, in writing to the Hebrew Christians there, he acted with their cognizance and concurrence.

On the succession of Bishops at Jerusalem after James, the brother of our Lord, see Euseb. iv. 5. He says, that from James to the siege by Hadrian there were fifteen in number, ους πάντας Έβραίους φασίν ὅντας . . . συνεστάναι γὰρ αὐτοῖς τότε τὴν πᾶσαν Ἐκκλησίαν ἐξ Ἑβραίων πιστῶν,—a passage which illustrates the title of this Epistle.

On the duty prescribed in this text, see Dr. Barrow's admirable Sermons, iii. pp. 107-169, entitled "Of Obedience to our Spiritual Guides and Governors.'

18. πειθόμεθα] So the best MSS.—Elz. πεποίθαμεν.

— καλην συνείδησιν έχομεν] we have a good conscience. This apologetic declaration was a very suitable one for St. Paul to make, when addressing himself, as here, to Hebrews, and may be compared with his language in Acts xxiii. 1; xxiv. 16. After his apprehension by Jews at Jerusalem (Acts xxi. 28), and his consequent imprisonment at Cæsarea and at Rome, he might well speak thus in self-defence. But such words as these would not have sounded well in the mouth of one who had not been accused. and who was not well known as an accused person to those whom he addressed. Therefore, here is another evidence in favour of the opinion which ascribes this Epistle to St. Paul.

19. Ίνα τάχιον ἀποκατασταθῶ δμῖν] that I may be restored to you more speedily. Another characteristic trait of St. Paul. The author of the Epistle expresses his desire of being restored to Je-He had, therefore, been formerly in that city; and (as the word here used appears to intimate) had been taken away from it, and taken away from it under such circumstances as made him desire to be restored to it. This was the case with St. Paul. He had been taken away from Jerusalem to Rome as a prisoner and a malefactor. How natural, therefore, was it that he should desire to be restored to it, in order that his innocence might be publicly manifested to the Jews and Christians there! Cp. v. 23.

If this reasoning is correct, then we are led by it to determine the date of the Epistle. He is now at liberty, for he speaks of coming to Jerusalem. He had been set at liberty from the im

Isa. 40. 11.
Ezek. 34. 23.
Zech. 9. 11.
John 10. 11.
1 Pet. 2. 25. & 5. 4. t 2 Thess. 2. 17. 1 Pet. 5, 10. Phil. 2, 13.

20 s 'Ο δε Θεος της εἰρήνης, ὁ ἀναγαγων εκ νεκρων τον ποιμένα των προβάτων τὸν μέγαν ἐν αἴματι διαθήκης αἰωνίου, τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν, 21 τ καταρτίσαι ύμᾶς ἐν παντὶ ἔργω ἀγαθῷ, εἰς τὸ ποιῆσαι τὸ θέλημα αὐτοῦ, ποιῶν ἐν ὑμῖν τὸ εὐάρεστον ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ διὰ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ῷ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰῶνας τῶν αιώνων αμήν.

23 Παρακαλώ δὲ ὑμᾶς, ἀδελφοὶ, ἀνέχεσθε τοῦ λόγου τῆς παρακλήσεως, καὶ γαρ δια βραχέων ἐπέστειλα ὑμιν. 23 Γινώσκετε τὸν ἀδελφὸν ἡμῶν Τιμόθεον απολελυμένον, μεθ' οὖ, ἐὰν τάχιον ἔρχηται, ὄψομαι ὑμᾶς. <sup>24</sup> ᾿Ασπάσασθε πάντας τους ήγουμένους ύμων, και πάντας τους άγίους. 'Ασπάζονται ύμας οί ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰταλίας. 25 Ἡ χάρις μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν ἀμήν.

prisonment which began at Jerusalem, was continued for two years at Cæsarea, and for two years more at Rome. Then he was acquitted and released; and he might well wish then to be restored as innocent to Jerusalem. Therefore the date of the Epistle cannot be earlier than A.D. 63, and was probably A.D. 64

20. O δè Θebs της είρηνης Now may the God of Peace, Who brought up again from the dead the Shepherd of the Sheep, that Great Shepherd,—greater even than Moses, the Shepherd of the bletter of the Sheep. the literal Israel, to whom these words are applied by Isaiah, Isiii. 11,—by the blood of the covenant that is everlasting (and not transitory like that of the Levitical Passover which delivered your fathers), the Lord of us  $(\hat{\eta}\mu\hat{\omega}\nu, \text{ of you as well as of me})$ , Jesus, perfect you in every work that is good, so as to do His Wilk This prayer seems to be suggested by what precedes.

He had desired them to pray to God, that he himself might be restored to them. He had been sent a prisoner to Rome, but God could restore him. He could restore the Apostle, the Christian Pastor, to Jerusalem. Such a restoration of St. Paul to Jerusalem, after so long an imprisonment caused by the Jews, would be like a resurrection from the dead. But God could effect it. He had brought again from the dead the Great Shepherd, through the blood-shedding of the Everlasting Covenant (Matt. xxvi. 28), not like the blood of the temporary Levitical Covenant, with which the Jewish High Priest went in often into the earthly Oracle; but through the blood of the Covenant which will last for ever. He had led Him, through the blood shed once for all, with which the True High Priest, the Great Shepherd, Who laid down His Life for the sheep (John x. 11), has entered once for all into the true Holy of Holies in the heavenly Jerusalem. Whether, therefore, He think fit to restore me to you or not, He can protect you, though I am absent from you.

On this text, see Bp. Andrewes, Serm. iii. 80. 21. τὸ εὐάρεστον] that which is well pleasing to God. A Pauline precept. See Rom. xii. 2. Eph. v. 10. 22.  $\Pi$ apaka $\lambda\hat{\omega}$ — $\lambda\nu\acute{e}\chi\acute{e}\sigma\theta\acute{e}$   $\tau$ .  $\lambda$ .  $\tau$ .  $\pi$ .] I beseech you, brethren, suffer the word of exhortation. The Author craves forbearance and indulgence for himself. How is this, when he was enabled to write in such a sublime strain of heavenly eloquence as pervades this Epistle? Should such a writer apologize for himself? Yes; if the writer is St. Paul, he may well do so. For he had been a persecutor of the saints at Jerusalem, and he was regarded as a renegade by the Jews; and he had been arrested as a malefactor at Jerusalem, and had been sent a prisoner to Rome. Besides, he was the Apostle of the Gentiles; and it might be alleged by some that in writing to the Hebrews he was usurping what did not belong to him, but to others. (Cp. v. 17.) See above, pp. 371, 372.

διὰ βραχέων] in few words; "paucis pro copiâ rerum et argumenti dignitate" (Bengel). Cp. 1 Pet. v. 12, δι' ὀλίγων.
 23. Γ.νώσκετε] Know ye; imperative. Syriac, Vulgate, Bengel, Lünemann, Delitz.

- τον ἀδελφον ἡμῶν Τιμόθεον] our brother Timothy. This - τον αδελφον ημών Τιμόθεον] our brother Timothy. This sentence also seems to point to St. Paul as the Author of the Epistle. (Cp. Bp. Pearson, Minor Works, ii. 359.) Timothy was St. Paul's fellow-labourer from the time of his second missionary journey (Acts xvi. 1) even to his death; and St. Paul calls Timothy his brother in various places of the Epistles (1 Thess. iii. 2. 2 Cor. i. 1. Col. i. 1. Philem. 1). 'Ημών is omitted by Elz, but is found in A, C, D*, M, and the Versions can relief and is required by Leah. Place De Hittle Lighter and is required by Leah. generally, and is received by Lach., Bleek, De Wette, Lünemann, Delitz. The Hebrew Christians would be well affected to Timothy because he was circumcised. Theophyl. Cp. Acts xvi. 3.

— ἀπολελυμένον] been set at liberty. This is evidently the true sense of the word—and not 'sent away,' as it has been rendered by some. The passive voice does indeed sometimes signify to be sent away, to depart, but only when this sense is made perfectly clear by the context (see Acts iv. 23; xv. 30); but when it is placed absolutely, as here, it signifies to be released. See Acts xxvi. 32.

- ἐὰν τάχιον ἔρχηται] if he comes more quickly than may possibly be the case. On this elliptical use of the comparative τάχιον, see on Acts xxv. 10. 2 Tim. i. 18.

Timothy was probably with St. Paul when he was arrested at Jerusalem (cp. Acts xx. 4), and it was natural that both of them should desire to revisit Jerusalem together again.

It is probable also that Timothy had now been sent by St. Paul to Philippi, according to the expressed intention of the Apostle in his Epistle to that Church (Phil. ii. 23), and had then been put in prison, and had been afterwards released, but had not yet returned to St. Paul.

These incidents also are of service in enabling us to ascertain the date of the Epistle. See on v. 19, and Introduction, p. 374.

— τψομαι δμᾶs] I will see you. If, therefore, the writer of this Epistle is St. Paul, it is clear that the Apostle had now been released from his two years' confinement at Rome. See note

24. ᾿Ασπάσασθε πάντας τοὺς ἡγουμένους ὑμῶν] Salute all your spiritual Guides. A remarkable message. The author claims acquaintance with all the Pastors at Jerusalem, and sends his salutations to them all.

This incident also is in harmony with the Pauline authorship. On the last previous occasion, when St. Paul had visited Jerusalem, the Bishop of Jerusalem, St. James, had convened a Synod of his Presbyters to meet him, and it is expressly recorded that all the Presbyters were then present, and that he saluted them (Acts xxi. 18); and he complied with the advice which they then tendered him. This compliance, it is observable, led to his arrest, and to his imprisonment at Cæsarea and Rome. He might, therefore, well send his greetings to them all, as being known to them all, and as desiring them to be assured of his perfect love towards them all. Cp. v. 17. There was something peculiarly appropriate and graceful in such an assurance from — 'Ασπάζονται ὑμᾶς οἱ ἀπὸ τῆς 'Ιταλίας] They who are from Italy salute you. It may be inferred as probable from these

(1) That this Epistle was not written at Rome. If it had been, the writer would have mentioned Rome, and not Italy.

(2) That it was written by St. Paul after he had been released from his first confinement at Rome (see v. 23), and had quitted that city.

(3) That it was not written from Italy. He could hardly take upon himself to convey to the Hebrews the greetings of those of so extensive a country as Italy generally; nor would be have described the Christians of Italy as those from Italy, but as the saints or brethren of Italy.

(4) That some friends had accompanied him from Rome, and from Haly, who were known to the Hebrews, and whose greetings, therefore, he sends to them, and whom he describes greetings, therefore, he sends to them, and whom he describes here as those from Italy.

(5) That, inasmuch as he had designed to pass by Rome to Spain (see on Rom. xv. 24. 28), this Epistle may have been written on his journey to or from Spain, or in it.

Compare (for the use of ἀπὸ) Matt. xv. 1. John xi. 1. Acts x. 23. 38; xvii. 13; xxi. 27. Gal. ii. 6. Winer, § 67, p. 554.

25. ἡ χάρις μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν] Grace be with you all. Another proof to the same effect. This Benediction is the characteristic token of $5$, Pau''s Epistles and was not used by any teristic token of St. Paul's Epistles, and was not used by any other writer in St. Paul's lifetime. It is observable also, that almost all the Epistles which were written by St. Paul at the period of his life (to which this Epistle is to be ascribed, namely, his later years) have this Benediction iz a brief form, as here. See above on 1 Thess. v. 28.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

EPISTLES TO TIMOTHY AND TO TITUS.

I. On the dates of St. Paul's Two Epistles to Timothy, and of the Epistle to Titus; and on the chronology and order of the events between the end of the Acts of the Apostles and the Death of St. Paul!.

1. St. Luke closes the Acts of the Apostles with the following words concerning St. Paul at Rome, to which he has been brought, at the conclusion of that History: "He abode two whole years in his own hired house, and received all who came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all boldness, no man forbidding him."

This specification of a term of two years appears to intimate, that St. Paul did not remain at Rome after that time, but was enabled to quit it for some other place.

This inference is confirmed by internal evidence.

The period of two years would have expired in the spring of A.D. 63.

At that time no persecution had as yet arisen at Rome against the Christians, on the part of the Imperial Government.

But on the 19th of July of the following year<sup>3</sup>, a great fire broke out at Rome, which raged for six days and seven nights, and burst out afresh, after a short interval, and almost consumed ten of the fourteen regiones of the capital 4.

The Emperor Nero, who was generally suspected to be the author of that conflagration, endeavoured to divert the popular obloquy from himself, by imputing the fire to the Christians. This was the occasion of the first persecution of the Christians by the Roman Government.

If St. Paul had remained at Rome fifteen months after the expiration of the two years specified at the close of the Acts, he would probably not have been released, but have perished in that persecution.

2. That he was liberated at the end of those two years, is, as has been observed, suggested by the specification of that time by St. Luke, and is also confirmed by the Apostle's own writings, and by external testimony.

A synoptical view of the events specified in these observations may be seen in the "Chronological Table" prefixed to this

On the subject here discussed, the reader may consult Tillemont's Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire Ecclésiastique. Bruxelles, tom. i. pp. 121-131. Basnage, Annales Politico-Ecclesiastici, Rotterdam, 1706, vol. i. p. 719. Bp. Pearson, Minor Works, ed. Churton, vol. ii. pp. 376. 385. Dr. Paley's Horæ Paulinæ, with the valuable additions of Mr. Birks, pp. 140-160. 284-316. Dr. Davidson's Introduction, iii. 1-153. Dean Alford's Prolegomena, vol. iii. chap. vii. viii. and ix. Professor Blunt's Early Church, chap. iii. Guerike's Einleitung, pp. 388-427. Huther's Einleitung, pp. 1-56; and the works of Hemsen, Wieseler, and Greswell, on St. Paul's personal history; and the Commentaries of Wiesinger and De Wette on these Epistles; and the xviith chap. of Conybeare and Howeon's Life of St. Paul; and also the Appendix ii. on the date of the Pastoral Epistles.

<sup>2</sup> See Chronological Synopsis prefixed to the Acts of the Apostles.

3 A.D. 64, the 10th of Nero, ending 12th October.

<sup>4</sup> Tacitus, xv. 38-41. Sueton. Nero 38. Dio, 1xii. 16, 17. <sup>5</sup> Tacitus, Ann. xv. 44. Sueton. Nero 16. Tertullian, Apol.

A disposition has shown itself in recent times to follow in the footsteps of Gibbon (chap. xvi.), and to dispute the statement of Tacitus, Suetonius, and of all Christian Antiquity, that the Christians were specially obnoxious to the Heathen, and as such were made the victims of the Neronian Persecution. It has been alleged by some, that the true objects of the heathen hatred and rage, and the real sufferers in that Persecution, were the Jews, and that History has confounded the Christians with them. But if this had been the case, the Jews would have had some Martyrs to show. Josephus was then at Rome, and he would have been glad to have been able to relate, that the subsequent rebellion of his countrymen against Rome had been provoked by her persecutions.

One of the many services rendered to Church History by the late Professor Blunt is that which he has performed in his Lectures on the First Three Centuries, where may be seen, in chap. viii., a satisfactory solution of the problem which has perplexed Gibbon and his followers.

In the Epistle to the Romans, written from Corinth before his arrival at Rome, he had expressed an intention to pass through Rome, and to go further westward to Spain.

In the Epistle to Philemon, written during his sojourn at Rome in this period of two years, he expresses a confident expectation of liberation. He desires him to "prepare for him a lodging," for he trusts that through his prayers he shall "be given unto him2."

Writing also to the Philippians, he deliberately considers the future issue of his trial, and compares the respective probability of the two alternatives, whether of life or death, and declares his full persuasion that he will be acquitted's. Accordingly he adds, that he hopes shortly to come to

To the Hebrews also he announces that their brother Timothy has been set at liberty; with whom, if he comes shortly, he will visit them 5.

3. The circumstances also of St. Paul's sojourn at Rome during the two years mentioned by St. Luke, were so different in many respects from those of his imprisonment there, when he wrote his Second Epistle to Timothy, which bears internal marks of being written just before his death 6, that a person who compares them carefully can hardly suppose that they belong to the same time.

For example. In the Epistles written in that two years' sojourn, he anticipates, as has been observed, a speedy release 7. But in the Second to Timothy he exults in the foresight of approaching Martyrdom 8.

In the former period Timothy was with him 9; but in the latter, Timothy is desired to come to him 10. In the former period, Demas was with him as a fellow-labourer 11; but in the latter, Demas has deserted him 12. In the former period, Mark was with him 13; but in the latter, Timothy is desired to bring Mark with him 14.

Before the former period, when St. Paul landed at Miletus, he had Trophimus with him, and took him to Jerusalem 15. But before the writing of the Second Epistle to Timothy, St. Paul had left Trophimus at Miletus sick 16.

Indeed, the whole character of the one period was different from the other. In the former period his friends came freely to him, and many were encouraged by his bonds to preach the Gospel 17. But when he wrote his Second Epistle to Timothy he was in close confinement, and Luke alone was with him 18; and St. Paul mentions, to the special praise of Onesiphorus, that when he came to Rome he sought him out very diligently, and found him 19.

In a word,—the former interval of two years had been characterized by consideration and kindness, on the part of the Roman authorities, for the person and character of the Apostle. But in the latter period, St. Paul is treated with that severity which might have been expected by the leading champions of the Gospel from the agents of Nero, after the excitement of the popular passions of the heathen multitude at Rome, who had been exasperated against the Christians by the Emperor 20.

- 1 Rom. xv. 24. 28.
- <sup>2</sup> Philem. 22.
- <sup>3</sup> Phil. i. 25.
- 4 Phil. i. 26; ii. 24. <sup>5</sup> Heb. xiii. 23.
- 6 See on 2 Tim. iv. 6, 7.
- 7 Philem. 22. Phil. ii. 24.
- 8 2 Tim. iv. 6-8. 9 See Col. i. 1. Phil. i. 1. Philem. I.
- 10 2 Tim. iv. 9. 21.
- 11 Col. iv. 14. Philem. 24.
- 2 Tim. iv. 10.
   Col. iv. 10. Philem. 24.
- 14 2 Tim. iv. 11.
- 15 Acts xx. 4; xxi. 29.
- 16 2 Tim. iv. 20.
- 17 Acts xxviii. 30, 31. Phil. i 13-15.
- 18 2 Tim. iv. 11.
- 19 2 Tim. i. 17.
- 20 The reader will peruse with satisfaction the following remarks on this subject from Bp. Pearson, De Successione Primorum Romæ Episcoporum, Dissert. i. cap. ix. Minor Works,
- " Quamvis ca quæ jam diximus sufficere videantur, adhuc tamen apertius et extra omnem controversiam ex Epistola Secunda ad Timotheum probatur Apostolum Paulum bis Romam venisse; et in ea urbe haud diu ante mortem suam secunda vincula et severiora passum esse.

" Nam Apostolus eam Epistolam scripsit, ut ex ipså patet, Romæ (i. 17), et quidem in vinculis quorum ipse mentionem facit (i. 8; ii. 9).

"Scripsit autem eam ad Timotheum tunc absentem desiderans eum videre (i. 4).

" Hæc autem vincula multum à prioribus differebant. Nam in prioribus vinculis prædicavit in conducto suo cum omni fiducia sine prohibitione. Notissima tunc fuit Pauli domus, in quâ per biennium habitavit et recepit omnes ingredientes ad eum. (Act. Taxviii. 30, 31.) In secundis vinculis, alia statim rerum facies fuit. Tunc enim Onesiphorus (inquit), cùm Rumam venisset, solicitè me quæsivit et invenit. (2 Tim. i. 17.) An opus erat, ut Onesiphorus  $\sigma \pi o \nu \delta \alpha i \delta \tau \epsilon \rho o \nu$ , et cum tanto studio ac solicitudine quæreret Paulum, et ex tam sedulà inquisitione inveniret, si Apostolus aut in eâdem domo, aut cum eâdem libertate, et non in arcta et abdita custodia prædicasset i

" De prioribus vinculis ad Philippenses scribit ea manifesta fuisse in prætorio et in cæteris omnibus; ut plures è fratribus in Domino confidenter in vinculis meis abundantiùs auderent sine timore verbum Dei loqui. (Phil. i. 13.) In posterioribus autem, omnes eum comites et συνεργοί præter unum dereliquerant, et in alias regiones transierant. (2 Tim. iv. 10.)

"Magnum certe discrimen inter biennalem Pauli custodiam

Lucâ memoratam, et hanc quam Apostolus in hâc secundâ ad Timotheum Epistolâ describit. Neque hujus disparitatis ulla ratio excogitari posse videtur, quam quod prior ante incendium, quod prædiis Tigellini Æmilianis proruperit, fuerit, posterior postea..." (Tacit. Ann. xv. 40.)

"Ex his, et ex iis quæ antè diximus, constat, S. Paulum prioribus vinculis solutum Romà exiisse; multas provincias peragrâsse; Corinthi, Mileti, Troade fuisse; Nicopoli hyemâsse; in Asiam et Macedoniam profectum esse; et in insula Creta prædicâsse; et denique Romam reversum esse; 'ubi denique martyrium passus est.''

4. Accordingly we find a clear testimony, dating from St. Paul's age, that the Apostle, who in his first confinement was at Rome for the first time, and had never reached any point beyond it, did not terminate his career there at that time, but went to some regions westward of Rome.

S. Clement, the Apostle's contemporary, affirms that St. Paul went, in his missionary journeys, to the extreme limit of the West 1.

S. Clement was then writing at Rome itself, in an age when Gaul, and Spain, and Britain, had been opened out by the Roman arms, and had been made subject to Rome. And he could not have said that St. Paul had reached the limit of the West, if he had never gone beyond Rome. But this would have been the case, if St. Paul had suffered martyrdom in the imprisonment described by St. Luke at the close of the Acts of the Apostles, and had not been liberated from it.

S. Clement therefore must be understood to affirm in this passage, that St. Paul was not put to death at this time at Rome, but was released, and was enabled to go to the limit of the West, as far as it was then known to the Romans. Thus, as S. Clement expresses it, he became "a herald of the Gospel to the Eastern and Western world."

This testimony harmonizes with St. Paul's previously declared intention of visiting Spain?

The ancient author of what is commonly called the Muratorian Canon 3, written (it seems) in the West about the middle of the second century, appears to take for granted that the Apostle went into Spain 4.

It is also affirmed by Eusebius, that the Apostle was released after the two years' sojourn at Rome, with which the History of the Acts of the Apostles ends; and that, after he had preached the Gospel for some time subsequent to that release, he came to Rome a second time, and then suffered martyrdom 5.

Eusebius adds, that when St. Paul was in this second imprisonment at Rome, he wrote his Second Epistle to Timothy.

The testimony of S. Jerome, who resided for some time at Rome, as Secretary to its Bishop. Damasus, and who had favourable opportunities of knowing the local traditions concerning St. Paul. says that the Apostle was released by Nero after the two years' sojourn mentioned by St. Luke; and that he preached the Gospel afterwards in regions of the West, and was afterwards imprisoned a second time at Rome, and then wrote his Second Epistle to Timothy, in immediate foresight of his martyrdom 6.

S. Jerome also affirms, that after his first imprisonment he preached the Gospel in Spain 7.

The same thing is stated by Theodoret, who says that St. Paul was liberated from his first imprisonment at Rome, and that he communicated the benefits of the Gospel to Spain, and other nations, and "to the islands lying apart in the high sea "."

5. On reviewing the above evidence, we may conclude that St. Paul was liberated from his confinement at Rome after the two years' sojourn mentioned by St. Luke at the close of the Acts of the Apostles, in the spring of A.D. 63.

The following results may also be stated as probable.

Having been released, he went to some countries west of Italy, perhaps Spain, and even Britain.

He probably afterwards fulfilled his intention of going to Jerusalem, perhaps with Timothy; and left Titus at Crete in his way thither 10.

He also executed his design of visiting Colossæ in Phrygia 11.

He also performed his promise of going to Philippi in Macedonia 12.

1 εἰς τὸ τέρμα τῆς δύσεως. Clem. R. ad Cor. c. 5.
2 See on Rom. xv. 24. 28. Cp. Abp. Ussher, Brit. Eccl. Ant. i.; and Bp. Stillingfleet, Orig. Brit. i., who suppose that his Apostolic travels at this time extended even to Britain.

Routh, R. S. i. 403.

<sup>4</sup> He says, "Acta omnia Apostolorum sub uno libro scripta sunt. Lucas optimè Theophilo comprehendit, quia sub præsentiâ ejus singula gerebantur: sicut et semotâ passione Petri evidenter declarat, sed et profectione Pauli ab Urbe ad Spaniam proficiscentis."

Some slight variations, suggested by critical conjecture, have been admitted here. See the original, with collations, in Mr. Westcott's valuable work on the Canon of the N. T. pp. 557-The writer's meaning seems to be, that the excellence of St. Luke's history may be inferred from the circumstance of his restricting himself to the narration of those events of which he was personally cognizant; and from his omission of other incidents in which he was not engaged. Compare note above on Rom. xv.

24—28.  $^5$  δεύτερον ἐπιβάντα τῆ αὐτῆ πόλει, τῷ κατ' αὐτὸν τελειωθῆναι μαρτυρίω. Euseb. ii. 22.

Hieron. Eccl. Script. 5.

7 In Amos v. 8.

8 ταῖς ἐν τῷ πελάγει διακειμέναις νήσοις. Theodoret in Ps. cxvi. and in 2 Tim. iv. 17.

Assertions also to a similar effect may be seen in Epiphan. Hær. xxvii. Chrysost. Hom. 26 in 2 Cor., and Hom. 9 in 2 Tim. Prolog. ad Epist. ad Hebr. See also Athanas. ad Dracont. p. 956. S. Jerome, in Isa. xi. S. Gregory, in Job xxxi.

c. 22. 9 Heb. xiii. 23

10 Titus i. 5. 11 Philem. 22.

12 Phil. ii. 24.

About this time, when setting forth for Macedonia, he commanded Timothy "to abide at Ephesus," as chief Pastor of that Church , and not long after he wrote his first Epistle to Timothy.

6. This last assertion requires some confirmation. The following considerations may serve that purpose:

In that Epistle St. Paul says that he exhorted Timothy "to abide at Ephesus when he himself was setting forth (πορευόμενος) to Macedonia 2."

This journey of St. Paul to Macedonia was subsequent to the period of history embraced in the Acts; and was therefore after his two years' sojourn at Rome.

This appears as follows:

Only three journeys of St. Paul into Macedonia are contained in the History of the Acts of the Apostles. In none of these three did he desire Timothy "to abide at Ephesus."

In his first journey to Macedonia he took Timothy with him 3.

Before he undertook the second journey into Macedonia he had sent Timothy into that country, and he rejoined Timothy in Macedonia.

In his third journey into Macedonia he took Timothy with him; and with him he sailed beyond Ephesus, in his way to Jerusalem 6.

Therefore in none of those journeys did he desire Timothy "to abide at Ephesus when he himself was setting forth into Macedonia."

7. It has indeed been alleged by some learned persons 7, that Timothy was placed at Ephesus by St. Paul at the time of some visit of his to Macedonia not mentioned in the Acts, but within the compass of its History.

But this is not probable in itself; nor has any sufficient proof been adduced in behalf of this assertion.

It is not likely in itself. Because, as long as the Apostle was in full vigour of body, and in the active discharge of his duties, he would in all probability reserve the chief superintendence of so important a Church as that of Ephesus to himself, and would not commit it to so young a man as Timothy.

Such a delegation of Apostolic authority to another, was only appropriate in a later period of St. Paul's career, when he had no expectation of being able to exercise such functions in his own person; and when, in anticipation of approaching dissolution, he would be desirous to commit them to another.

Besides, it is evident that when St. Paul passed by Ephesus in his way to Jerusalem, whence he was sent in bonds to Casarea and thence to Rome, where the history of the Acts leaves him, he had not settled Timothy as Chief Pastor at Ephesus.

This is clear from his last interview with the Presbyters of Ephesus at the time *.

He then takes leave of them in solemn and affecting terms. Assuredly, if Timothy had then been already appointed by him to be their Bishop, some notice of that relation between them and him could hardly have failed to be taken at such a time.

Timothy himself was present at that interview. But there is no charge given to him in that capacity, and no exhortation to the Presbyters of Ephesus to revere the successor of the Apostle. And Timothy was not then left behind at Ephesus. at that critical time when the Apostle was quitting it for ever, and when, if Timothy had been its Bishop, he would surely have remained there to defend the flock of Christ against the grievous wolves, who, as St. Paul warns them, would enter in after his departure.

Still further; St. Paul, when he afterward came to Rome, and was in the prison there, wrote his Epistle to the Ephesians, and Timothy was with St. Paul at that time <sup>12</sup>. But Tychicus is sent to the Ephesians with the Epistle, and not Timothy <sup>13</sup>. Timothy is not associated with St. Paul in writing his Epistle to the Ephesians, as he is to the Colossians and Philippians, although he was

```
1 1 Tim. i. 3.
```

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibid. <sup>3</sup> Acts xvii. 14; xviii. 5.

&lt;sup>4</sup> Acts xix. 22. 1 Cor. iv. 17; xvi. 10. Rom. xvi. 21.

&lt;sup>8</sup> 2 Cor. i. 1. <sup>6</sup> Acts xx. 4.

r e. g. by Mosheim, Schräder, and Wieseler, Dr. Davidson, and Paulus. See Guerike's Einleitung, § 48, p. 398. Davidson, iii. p. 12.

<sup>8</sup> Acts xx. 17-38.

<sup>9</sup> Acts xx. 4.

<sup>10</sup> Acts xxi. 1.

<sup>11</sup> See Acts xx. 29.

&lt;sup>12</sup> See Col. i. 1. Philem. 1. Phil. i. 1; and above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Ephesians, p. 278.

<sup>13</sup> Eph. vi. 21.

And in all the notices concerning him at that period, there is no indication whatever that Timothy ever performed any Episcopal act at Ephesus, or had as yet been advanced to so high and arduous an office as that of the chief pastorship of that Church.

Besides, if Timothy had been appointed to so important a post as the Episcopal See of Ephesus before St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, it is not at all probable that St. Paul would have retained him with him at Rome during that time, and have employed him in an embassy into More evidence might be adduced, to show that the appointment of Timothy to the Episcopate of Ephesus, and consequently the First Epistle of St. Paul to Timothy, are posterior to St. Paul's release from his two years' confinement at Rome 3.

8. The only argument on the other side that seems to deserve consideration, is derived from St. Paul's words to the Presbyters of Ephesus at Miletus, on that affecting occasion to which a reference has been made.

In that solemn farewell, he says that they will "see his face no more '."

This is tantamount to an assertion that he should never revisit Ephesus.

But in his Epistle to Timothy the Apostle expresses a hope that he should be able to come to him shortly 5.

Hence it has been inferred by some, that the first Epistle to Timothy could not have been written after the interview with the Ephesian Presbyters at Miletus.

What is to be said here?

Some have solved the supposed difficulty by answering confidently that the Apostle was mistaken in his anticipation; and that he did visit Ephesus after that farewell.

But the fact is, there is no evidence to show that he ever revisited Ephesus after that interview; or that he ever intended to do so.

It is worthy of remark, that in several Epistles written afterwards from Rome, he expresses an intention of revisiting those to whom he writes. Thus he mentions a design of seeing Philemon at Colossæ, and promises a visit to the Church at Philippi; and in the Epistle to the Hebrews he mentions a design of revisiting them.

But no such intention is expressed in his Epistle to the Church of Ephesus.

Indeed it has been too hastily assumed by some that St. Paul intimates such a design in his Epistle to Timothy, the Bishop of that City.

What he does say, is, that he hopes to see Timothy himself. But he does not say that he intends to see Ephesus?.

This intention of seeing Timothy, the Bishop of Ephesus, was probably fulfilled by him in a similar manner to that in which he had executed a like purpose with regard to the Presbyters of the same city.

When he was sailing by the coast of Asia, in his way to Jerusalem, he sent for the Ephesian Presbyters to the neighbouring city of Miletus, and gave them an Apostolic Charge and Benediction there, and bade them solemnly farewell 8.

If he did this in the case of a large body of persons, the Presbyters of Ephesus, he might well do it in that of a single individual, his own son in the faith, Timothy?.

Besides, after the Persecution of the Christians had broken out in the Roman Empire, St. Paul would not willingly incur such peril as must have awaited him in a city like Ephesus, where he had preached three years, and was well known, and where he was specially obnoxious to many 10.

<sup>1</sup> See 1 Cor. xvi. 10, written from Ephesus.

<sup>2</sup> See Phil. ii. 19-23.

3 This matter is clearly and fully argued by Bp. Pearson, Minor Works, ii. p. 382.

"Nos diù postea scriptam fuisse primam ad Timotheum Epistolam asserimus (i. e. after St. Paul's sojourn at Rome), et tam maturè scribi potuisse pernegamus.
" Verba quidem S. Pauli sunt 1 Tim. i. 3, Sicut rogavi te permanere Ephesi cum irem in Macedoniam.

" Ego verò ex iisdem verbis demonstro, neque illo tempore, neque quovis alio in Actibus denotato, Paulum rogâsse Timotheum ut Ephesi permaneret, aut ad illum scripsisse hanc Epistolam, in qua hæc verba continentur."

Bp. Pearson then proceeds to demonstrate that proposition, and thus concludes:

"Quamobrem pro certo haberi debet, nullâ ex his tribus profectionibus Paulum rogâsse Timotheum ut Ephesi permaneret; ac pariter certum est, circa illa tempora non fuisse scriptam primam ad Timotheum Epistolam.

"Unde clarè sequitur necessariò statuendum esse, Paulum quartò in Macedoniam profectum esse, antequam Epistolam scripsit ad Timotheum.

"Illa autem quarta profectio institui non potuit nisi post biennalem ejus Romæ custodiam."

Acts xx. 25, and see v. 38.

1 Tim. iii. 14.

See above, p. 336. Heb. xiii. 23.
 1 Tim. iii. 14.

Acts xx. 16-36.

<sup>9</sup> See p. 435, and note below, on 1 Tim. iii. 14.

10 See Acts xix. 28-31, and xxi. 29. 1 Cor xv. 32; xvi. 8.

St. Paul was ever ready to suffer gladly for Christ, but he would not willingly expose any one to the sin of being a Persecutor. He would, therefore, be disposed to shun Ephesus.

For a similar reason he would not, under existing circumstances, be eager to revisit Rome.

9. Thus then we are brought back to the conclusions already stated, viz.

After his release from his first detention at Rome, in the Spring of A.D. 63, and after a missionary journey to some countries to the west of Italy, perhaps to Spain, and even, it may be, to Britain, he went with Timothy to Jerusalem, as he had designed to do 1.

In his way from the west to Jerusalem, he would probably sail by Crete, and perhaps he left Titus there at that time, as Chief Pastor of that island?

From Jerusalem he went, according to his intention, into Phrygia to Colossæ'; and thence proceeded along the southern bank of the Mæander to the neighbourhood of Ephesus, perhaps to Miletus, and there besought Timothy to abide at Ephesus, when he himself set off to Maccdonia to pay his promised visit to Philippi's. From Philippi in Macedonia he perhaps passed over into Epirus, and wintered at Nicopolis, near Actium 6.

10. The First Epistle to Timothy, and the Epistle to Titus, were written about this time. seems probable that the First Epistle to Timothy was written before that to Titus; and that Titus would have a copy of that Epistle, in order that he might thence supply those directions which were not contained in the Epistle to himself.

Why, it may be asked, did St. Paul write an Epistle to Titus, as well as to Timothy, on Church-Regimen? Would not the Epistles to Timothy have served for Titus also?

The fact here specified deserves attention. Probably there were differences of character in St. Paul's two spiritual sons which required some difference of treatment. But the principal inference, and it is an important one, which is to be derived from this fact, seems to be this—that by writing to the two Chief Pastors of two places, so different in population and habits, as the polished capital of Asia, Ephesus, and the almost savage island of Crete, and by prescribing the same form of Church-Regimen to both—the Holy Spirit has taught the world by St. Paul, that this form of Church Government—which is no other than that of Diocesan Episcopacy—is designed by the great Head of the Church for all countries and ages of the world. This inference is confirmed by the constitution of the Church, as displayed in the Apocalypse of St. John (see on Rev. ii. 1) and throughout Christendom.

II. On the design of the Epistles to Timothy and to Titus.

1. The design with which these Epistles were written—their subject-matter—their phraseology

-all bespeak a date distinct from, and later than, that of any other Epistles of St. Paul.

The Apostle's declining years, the death of so many of his Apostolic brethren, the breaking out of the persecution of the Christians under Nero in A.D. 64, the foresight of his own Martyrdom not far distant, the anticipation also perhaps of the death of the Apostle of the Circumcision, St. Peter, for which that Apostle was looking, as our Lord Jesus Christ had showed him *, the foreboding of evil days at hand for the Church 9—these and other considerations would impress themselves on St. Paul's mind with great force and solemnity, after his release from his two years' detention at Rome, and would inspire him with earnest solicitude, and with a vehement desire, to provide for the future spiritual welfare of the Churches, which would soon be bereft of his personal presence and fatherly care.

2. He would, therefore, now bequeath to the Church an Apostolic Directory for her future guidance in Spiritual Regimen and Polity 10.

This he did by constituting the Churches of Ephesus and of Crete, and by setting Timothy and Titus over them respectively as chief Pastors of those Churches, which were thus presented to the eye of Christendom as specimens and models of Apostolic Churches; and by addressing to the Chief Pastors of those Churches these Epistles, which were designed to be to them, and to all Bishops and Pastors, like a sacred Manual and a heavenly Oracle for their guidance, how they πορευόμενος εἰς Μακεδονίαν. 1 Tim. i. 3.

&lt;sup>1</sup> See above, on Rom. xv. 24. Heb. xiii. 23.

<sup>2</sup> Titus i. 5.

<sup>3</sup> Philem. 22.

 Phil. ii. 24.

<sup>6</sup> Titus iii. 12.

<sup>7</sup> As, for instance, with regard to the qualifications of Deacons and Widows, 1 Tim. iii. 8-13; v. 3-16.

&lt;sup>8</sup> 2 Pet. i. 14. John xxi. 18.
<sup>9</sup> Acts xx. 29. 2 Tim. iii. 1.

<sup>10 (&#</sup>x27;p. Dr. Bentley on Freethinking, quoted below on 1 Tim. iii. 2.

"ought to behave themselves in the House of God, which is the Church of the Living God, the Pillar and the Ground of the Truth '."

3. It may also be remarked, that the form of religious error, against which St. Paul provides an antidote in these Epistles, is of a peculiar character, such as belonged to the last age of the Jewish Polity, and to the decay of the Jewish Ritual at Jerusalem.

It was not the rigid Pharisaism, and strict legal self-righteousness, which had been condemned by him in the Epistles to the Galatians and to the Romans. But it was a speculative Gnosticism, a theorizing profession of Faith, a spurious Religion of Words, vaunting, in boastful hypocrisy, its own spiritual illumination, but hollow, barren, heartless, profitless, and dead; not 'maintaining good works,' but rather disparaging them; explaining away the doctrine of the Resurrection of the Body 2 by an allegorical process of Interpretation, afterwards fraught with so much moral mischief to the world; and deluding its votaries with a specious show and empty shadow of godliness; and puffing them up with presumptuous notions of superior holiness, and tempting them to cauterize their consciences with a hot iron 3; and inveigling them to make compromises between God and Mammon, and enticing them with earthly allurements to make Religion a Trade, and to waste away their days in hypocritical unfruitfulness, and to live as liars to themselves, and indulging them in antinomian licentiousness, worldly lusts, carnal concupiscence, and sensual voluptuousness.

It was, in fact, that hypocritical form of Religion, which had incurred the stern censure of the Bishop of Jerusalem, St. James, foreboding the coming woes of Jerusalem'; and which is also denounced in the Catholic Epistles of St. Peter and St. Jude 5; and which afterwards developed itself in the full amplitude of its hideous deformity in the organized systems of the Gnostics, and particularly in the mystical allegories of Valentinus, and the moral oppositions of Marcion 6. subverting the foundations of Faith and Practice, and bringing disgrace on the Christian name by its moral profligacy and dissolute enormities 7.

This is the form of Judaizing Gnosticism that is presented to the eye by the Apostle St. Paul in these Epistles to Timothy and Titus, and evoked from him those solemn denunciations which characterize these Epistles concerning the moral guilt of Heresy, and on the necessity of shunning all profitless and barren speculations, and of teaching wholesome and sound Doctrine, fruitful in Good Works 8.

The Antinomian spirit, which was embodied in this form of Religion, brought discredit on the Gospel, and exposed it to the blasphemics of the Heathen, as if it encouraged Rebellion. It displayed itself in factious sedition, disloyal disaffection, and turbulent insurrection against Civil Rulers; and broke forth into licentiousness, under the specious and sacred name of Liberty, and of zeal for God's Glory, and of devotion to His service; it set itself up in opposition to the Heathen Masters of the World, who often abused their power in cruel and profligate acts of tyrannical and flagitious misgovernment.

The divine wisdom, patience, and charity of the holy Apostle, who himself suffered under the persecuting misrule of the Powers of this World, showed itself in teaching lessons of loyalty at that critical juncture when these Epistles were written, in striking contrast to this anarchical and rebellious temper. "I exhort therefore" (that is, on account of the errors of the antinomian Teachers), "that, first of all, Supplications, Prayers, Intercessions, and Giving of thanks, be made for all men; for Kings, and for all that are in Authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable

Prol. ad Titum.

<sup>1 1</sup> Tim. iii. 15.

The following words, from a writer of the third century, well describe the Apostle's design in writing the Pastoral Epistles: οὺ μόνον ὡς σοφὸς ἀρχιτέκτων θεμέλιον κατεβάλλετο, ἀλλὰ καὶ ἀρχιτεκτονικὰ οἱονεὶ βιβλία ἔγραψεν, πῶς δεῖ τὸν ἀρχιτέκτονα οἰκοδομεῖν οἰκίαν, ὁποῖον δεῖ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον εἶναι, πρεσβύτερόν τε, καὶ διακόνους, καὶ τὸ ὑπόλοιπον τῆς ἐκκλησίας πλήρωμα: ταῦτα γὰρ πάντα οἰονεὶ νόμοι ἀρχιτεκτονικοὶ ἦσαν.
Origen, in Catenâ, in I Cor. iii. p. 56.
See further below, the Introductory Note to the Third Chapter of the First Epistle to Timothy.

&lt;sup>2</sup> 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18. <sup>3</sup> 1 Tim. iv. 2.

&lt;sup>4</sup> James i. 22-27; ii. 14-26.
<sup>5</sup> See on 2 Pet. ii. 1-3. 13. 19. Jude 4. 10-12. 16. 19.
<sup>6</sup> On which account these three Epistles of St. Paul, or portions of them, were rejected by Marcion, - a proof of their existence at that time. See Tertullian, adv. Marcion. v. 21. Hieron.

VOL. II .- PART III.

But Tatian and the Encratites (says Jerome), and other earlier heretics (says Irenæus, iii. 12. 12) who are puffed up by a false pride of knowledge, own them as Scripture, but wrest them from their true sense by misinterpretation. The act of the one heresiarch Marcion in rejecting them, is an evidence of what the others of the same stamp would have done if they had been as venturous as he was. And thus the rejection of these Epistles by venturous as he was. And thus the rejection of these Epistles by one, and their reception by others, is a strong evidence of their Genuineness and Authority; and may be appealed to in confirmation of the general testimony of the Ancient Universal Church in behalf of these Epistles, and in opposition to the allegations of some critics (such as Eichhorn, Schleiermacher, De Wette, Baur, and Schwegler) who have impugned them in recent times life in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour; who will have all men" (even heathen Rulers, even the Neros of this world) "to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth." "Let as many servants" (slaves, bondsmen) "as are under the yoke, count their own masters" (even heathens) "worthy of all honour, that the name of God and His doctrine be not blasphemed," as if it gave countenance to insubordination. "If any man teach otherwise, and consent not to wholesome words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according to godliness; he is proud, knowing nothing," one of those who suppose that "godliness is a trade," and that it may be used as an instrument of lucre.

&lt;sup>7</sup> For a clear view of its distinguishing features in Faith and Practice, see Blunt on the Early Church, chap. ix.
8 See notes on 1 Tim. i. 10. Titus i. 16; iii. 8.

Again he says, "There are many unruly and vain talkers, especially they of the circumcision"—the Judaizers—"whose mouths must be stopped, who subvert whole houses"—or households, by their turbulent temper—"teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake '." Therefore "put them in mind to be subject to Principalities and Powers, to obey Magistrates, to be ready for every good work, to speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, showing meckness unto all men '." Exhort servants (slaves) to be obedient unto their own Masters . . . . Showing all good fidelity, that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. For "the Grace of God which bringeth salvation hath appeared unto all men," not that we should abuse God's grace and our freedom, as a cloke for licentiousness '; but teaching, that "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world'."

These lessons of loyalty, delivered in a calm and earnest tone of patient and quiet dignity, are the more solemn and impressive, because they came from the Holy Apostle at a time when he was about to suffer Martyrdom at the hands of the Roman Master of the World. Dictated, as they are, by the Holy Spirit at the close of the Apostle's career, and at a time when the passions of men and nations were inflamed and exasperated against their civil Rulers, they afford instructive warnings to Rulers, on the one hand, as accountable to Almighty God at the Great Day of reckoning, and to subjects on the other, as owing submission to Rulers, as God's Deputies and Ministers; and thus they may serve as a chart and compass to the Christian soul amid the winds and storms of popular Revolutions, which, as we know from the sure testimony of sacred Prophecy, will agitate the world in the latter days.

4. The peculiar phraseology of these Epistles also deserves notice, as illustrative of what has now been said concerning their design.

Their language has indeed been arbitrarily represented in recent times as an argument against their genuineness. But it may rather be adduced in confirmation of the statement, that they belong to a distinct period of their own, and this a late one, in the Apostle's career.

Some of the most remarkable features of this phraseology are

(1) πιστὸς ὁ λόγος, faithful is the saying, used to introduce a memorable saying; a formula peculiar to these Epistles, and very appropriate to a time when the Apostle would leave certain memorable sentences as "faithful sayings," to be like "nails fastened by the Masters of Assemblies, which are given by one Shepherd."—even by Christ Himself, the Chief Shepherd.

(2) δηιαίνουσα διδασκαλία, wholesome doctrine, λόγοι δηιαίνοντες, wholesome words, λόγος δηιης, wholesome speech, δηιαίνειν τῆ πίστει 10, to be healthful in the faith,—words equally proper to be sounded in the ears at a time when the Church was suffering from such spiritual diseases, as the Apostlo describes under such names as a canker, fables, profitless questions, idle talk 11.

(3) The same observation may be applied to the perpetual inculcation of the terms sound, sober, holiness, and such like, in these Epistles 12.

They are protests against that empty profession of religion, which was like a foul and deadly gangrene preying on the vitals of the Church.

- 1 See below, on 1 Tim. ii. 1-4.
- <sup>2</sup> See below, notes on 1 Tim. vi. 1-4.
- 3 See below, 1 Tim. vi. 6.
- See below, on Titus i. 10, 11.
- <sup>5</sup> Titus iii. 1, 2.
- <sup>6</sup> Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 16, the doctrine of which Epistle, written nearly about the same time as the Pastoral Epistles, happily harmonizes in this and other respects with them.
  - 7 Titus ii. 11.
  - 8 1 Tim. i. 15; iii. 1; iv. 9. 2 Tim. ii. 11. Titus iii. 8.
  - 9 Eccles. xii. 11.

- 10 1 Tim. i. 10; vi. 3. Titus i. 9. 13; ii. 1, 2. 8. 2 Tim. i. 13;
- 11 γάγγραινα, 2 Tim. ii. 17. μῦθοι, 1 Tim. i. 4; iv. 7. 2 Tim. iv. 4. Titus i. 14. ζητήσεις ἀνωφελεῖς, Titus iii. 9. Cp. 1 Tim. i. 4; vi. 4. 2 Tim. ii. 23. λογομαχίαι, κενοφωνίαι, ματαιολογία, 1 Tim. vi. 4. 20. 2 Tim. ii. 16.
- 12 σώφρων, σωφρονεῖν, σωφρονισμὸς, 1 Tim. iii. 2. Titus i. 8; ii. 2. 5, 6. 12. 2 Tim. ii. 7; and of εὐσέβεια and εὐσεβῶς, 1 Tim. ii. 2; iii. 16; iv. 7, 8; vi. 3. 6. 11. 2 Tim. iii. 5. 12. Compare Titus ii. 12. Cp. De Wette, p. 117. Davidson, iii. p. 119. Conybeare and Howson, ii. p. 663. Huther, Einleitung, p. 50. Alford, p. 82.

5. At, or soon after, the time when the Epistle to Titus was written, St. Paul was designing to winter at Nicopolis, in Epirus 1. He desired Titus to come to him there, as soon as Artemas or Tychicus should have arrived in Crete to supply his place2; and, perhaps, sent him thence on a mission to Dalmatia 3.

After wintering at Nicopolis the Apostle seems to have visited Corinth, where Erastus remained in charge 4, and thence he came to Miletus, where he left Trophimus sick 5.

Perhaps it was at Miletus that he had another interview with his son in the faith, the beloved Timothy; who was separated from him there, under some circumstances of peculiar distress. which after a loving and reverent association with his spiritual Father, St. Paul, during about fifteen years, and a fellowship of labour and of bonds for the sake of Christ, betokened the approach of the time of separation and spiritual orphanship, and brought from the eyes of Timothy a flood of tears, and made the sea-shore at Miletus to be a witness of a scene similar to that pathetic parting between St. Paul and the Presbyters of Ephesus, at the same place about ten years before.

Some reasons have been stated in the notes on the second Epistle to Timothy for the conjecture', which is there offered to the consideration of the reader, as to what the circumstances of this parting from Timothy were *.

St. Paul, it is probable, was then apprehended in the neighbourhood of Ephesus; and was carried as a prisoner by sea along the coast of Asia toward Rome.

In his voyage thither he touched at Troas, and deposited some of his property in safe custody with Carpus there '.

Thence he probably proceeded under a military guard to Neapolis and Philippi, and so by the Egnatian way toward Rome: from which he wrote his second Epistle to Timothy a little before his death 10.

He had associated the name of Timothy with his own in writing the two first Epistles that he addressed to any Christian Church, those to the Thessalonians. And now about thirteen years after the date of those two Epistles, he writes this, his last Epistle, to him.

Thus his sufferings for the Gospel were made more fully known. And finally he bore testimony to Christ, at the tribunal of Cæsar, and laid down his life for the Gospel in the Capital of the World.

St. Paul's Martyrdom was by the same manner of death " as that of John the Baptist, and of the first Apostolic Martyr, St. James. Some ancient authors assert that St. Paul was martyred, not only in the same city, Rome, but also in the same year and day as his brother Apostle, St. Peter, a little before the close of Nero's reign, who died on June 9th, A.D. 68, about the same time as the commencement of the War, which ended, after two years, in the destruction of Jerusalem, in August, A.D. 70.

1 See on Titus iii. 12.

Ibid.

3 2 Tim. iv. 10. 4 2 Tim. iv. 20.

5 Ibid.

<sup>5</sup> 2 Tim. i. 4.

7 It has been satisfactory to the Author to find, that he had been anticipated in this conjecture by Mr. Birks, in his valuable additions to Dr. Paley's Horæ Paulinæ, p. 306.

8 See on 2 Tim. i. 4. 15—17.

<sup>9</sup> See on 2 Tim. iv. 13.

10 2 Tim. iv. 8.

11 Tertullian, Scorpiace 5: "Orientem fidem Romæ primus Nero cruentavit. Tunc Petrus ab altero cingitur (Joan. xxi. 18), cum cruci astringitur. Tunc Paulus civitatis Romanæ consequitur nativitatem."

See also Tertullian, Præscr. Hæret. 36: "Romæ Petrus passioni Dominicæ exæquatur; Paulus Joannis (Baptistæ) exitu coronatur."

Dionysius, Bishop of Corinth, who flourished as early as the middle of the second century, affirms, in an Epistle to the Romans, that Peter and Paul suffered at Rome at the same season, κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν καιρόν. (Cp. Euseb. ii. 25.)

Caius, a Roman Presbyter at the end of the second century, asserts that St. Paul was buried near the road leading out of Rome toward Ostia, on the s.w. of the city. (Cp. Euseb. ii. 25.) S. Jerome, Scr. Eccl. 5, also mentions the same place, asserting Neronis xiv. Theodoret (in Philip. i.) says, that after his two years' detention in Rome, St. Paul went and preached in Spain, and then returned to Rome, where he was beheaded. Cp. Eusebius, Chron. Anno 2084; and Prudentius, de Martyr. xii. p. 145. S. Gregory I. Bishop of Rome (xii. Ep. 9, p. 1104), specifies the 'Aquas Salvias,' now called 'le tre Fontane,' on the Via Ostiensis, as the site of his martyrdom. The Chiesa di S. Paolo alle tre Fontane preserves the memory of the site. Nibby, Itinerario di Roma, p. 477.

ΠΡΟΣ TIMOΘΕΟΝ A.

n Acts 9. 15. & 26. 16—18. Col. 1. 27. Gal 1. 1. b Acts 16. 1. 1 Cor. 4. 17. 1 Thess 3. 2. Gal. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 2. c Acts 20. 1, 3. Gal. 1. 6, 7.

Ι. <sup>1 °</sup> ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, ἀπόστολος Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ, κατ' ἐπιταγὴν Θεοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν, καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τῆς ἐλπίδος ἡμῶν, <sup>2 <sup>b</sup></sup> Τιμοθέω γνησίω τέκνω ἐν πίστει, χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.

3 ο Καθώς παρεκάλεσά σε προσμείναι εν Έφεσω πορευόμενος είς Μακεδονίαν, Πρὸς Τιμόθεον Α.] So A, D, E, F, G, K.—D, E, F, G have ἄρχεται prefixed to  $\pi$ . T.  $\alpha'$ . A and K have ἄρχεται  $\pi$ . T.  $\alpha'$ .

CH. I. 1. ἀπόστολοs] an Apostle. In both his Epistles to Timothy, St. Paul introduces himself with the title of Apostle of Jesus Christ, and also in that to Titus. He thus commands, and authorizes with Christ's name, what he delivers in these Pastoral Epistles concerning the regimen of Christ's Church.

Epistles concerning the regimen of Christ's Church.

- Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ] So A, D*, F, G, Griesb., Scholz, Lach.,

Tisch., Huther, Alf., Ellicott.—Elz. has Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

- τῆς ἐλπίδος ἡμῶν] Christ our Hope. (See Col. i. 27.) In like manner Christ is called our Wisdom, Righteousness, and Sanctification (1 Cor. i. 30), and our Peace (Eph. ii. 14). Cp. Ignat. (ad Trall. 2), Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τῆς ἐλπίδος ἡμῶν.

2. Τιμοθέω] to Timothëus. On the History of Timothy, see Acts xiv. 6; xvi. 1. He was of Lystra in Lycaonia; his mother, Eunice, a Jewess, and afterwards a Christian. (2 Tim. i. 5.) Having been associated by St. Paul with himself at Lystra, he accompanied the Apostle in his missionary journey in Asia, and in his first visit to Macedonia; and being left by him temporarily in charge there, rejoined him with Silas at Corinth (Acts xvii. 14; xviii. 5), and is associated by St. Paul with Silas in his Epistles to the Thessalonians (1 Thess. i. 1. 2 Thess. i. 1), written from Corinth.

He was afterwards with St. Paul at Ephesus (1 Cor. iv. 17; xvi. 10); and having been despatched by him with Erastus to Macedonia, rejoined him there (Acts xix. 22. 2 Cor. i. 1), and accompanied him to Corinth (Rom. xvi. 21); and when he had quitted it for Macedonia, was one of those who went with him along the coast of Asia, touching at Miletus, where the Apostle addressed the Ephesian presbyters (Acts xx. 17—36) in his way to Jerusalem, with the collection of alms for the poor Christians there.

He was afterwards with St. Paul in his first imprisonment at Rome; and is associated with him in his Epistles to the Colossians, Philemon, and Philippians, written from Rome.

He was probably despatched by the Apostle to Philippi a little before St. Paul's release from his imprisonment (see Phil. ii. 18-20), and was afterwards put in prison and liberated; and after his release St. Paul expressed his hope to visit Jerusalem with him. (Heb. xiii. 23.)

Having made this trial of his faithfulness during a term of thirteen years, and having afforded him the benefit of near personal intercourse with himself, and of the experience of his own apostolical administration, St. Paul, now in his old age (Philem. 9), and not expecting ever to revisit Ephesus (Acts xx. 25. 38), settled him as Bishop in this great city, and writes to him the present Epistle, in order to instruct him further in his Episcopal duties. At the same time he expresses a hope to see him again shortly (1 Tim. iii. 14, 15); and it is probable that this hope was realized. (2 Tim. i. 4)

this hope was realized. (2 Tim. i. 4)

When St. Paul, after a few years' liberty, was again in prison at Rome, and foreknew that his martyrdom was near (2 Tim.

iv. 6), he addressed to him the Second Epistle (2 Tim. iv. 21), in which he desires him to endeavour to come to him quickly. (2 Tim. iv. 9.) He requests him to bring the cloak which he had left at Troas (2 Tim. iv. 13), by which place he would probably pass in his way from Asia to Rome. He informs him that he has sent Tychicus to Ephesus, probably to take Timothy's place in his absence. Perhaps, therefore, Timothy was occupied in visiting the Churches of Asia when St. Paul wrote the second Epistle. Timothy has always been regarded by the Church as the first Bishop of Ephesus. See Euseb. iii. 4, and the Acts of the Great Council of Chalcedon (Concilia General. iv. p. 699, Labbė).

It has been said, indeed, by some in recent times, that this assertion is inconsistent with the general tradition of St. John's residence and death in that City. But it may be remembered that St. John himself in the Apocalypse addresses a spiritual Pastor of the Church of Ephesus, whom he designates as its Angel, i.e. as its Chief Pastor. (Rev. ii. 1.)

Angel, i. e. as its Chief Pastor. (Rev. ii. 1.)

The residence, therefore, of Timothy at Ephesus, would not have been incompatible with that of St. John. The local tradition at Ephesus, and that of the Martyrologies, is, that he suffered death by stoning in that City. Bolland. Acta Sanct. 24 Jan.: the Greeks keep his festival on 22nd Jan. See the authorities in Tillemont, Mémoires, ii. p. 69.

— ἐν πίστει] in the faith; explained in Titus i. 4, κατὰ κοινὴν πίστιν. Timothy and Titus were St. Paul's children, not by nature, but by faith. Cp. Philem. 10.

by nature, but by faith. Cp. Philem. 10.
3. Καθώς παρεκάλεσα] As I besought thee then, so I beseech thee now. Winer, § 63, p. 503.

St. Paul uses a word of gentle exhortation, not of command, for he was writing to one who was not only his own son in the faith, but was also a Bishop of the Church. Theophyl. See ii. 1.

In reading this and the second Epistle to Timothy, it is to be borne in mind, that these two Epistles were designed to be not only a Directory to Timothy himself, for the regulation of his own practice, and to furnish him with a store of arguments against Judaizing and other opponents, but also to be a public, authoritative Commission, which Timothy might show to others as his credentials, delivered to him, as Bishop of Ephesus, by Christ, the Head of the Church, acting by the instrumentality of the Apostle, guided by the Holy Ghost; and sending his Epistles to Timothy, not to be reserved in his own private custody, but to be read publicly in the Church, as an integral portion of Holy Scripture.

If, then, there were any at Ephesus, who, on account of Timothy's youth, or other causes, might be disposed to disparage his Episcopal authority, he could appeal to these Epistles, dictated by the Holy Spirit, as his own official warrant; and show from them that it was not of his own choice that he abode at Ephesus, in order to reprove the false doctrine of some false teachers, especially the Judaizers, but that he had been there placed by St. Paul. Cp. v. 18, and Introduction to this Epistle, pp. 430-432.

- προσμείναι εν 'Εφέσφ] to abide still at Ephesus. St. Paul ίνα παραγγείλης τισὶ μὴ έτεροδιδασκαλείν, <sup>4 d</sup> μηδὲ προσέχειν μύθοις καὶ γενεα- d ch. 4.7. λογίαις ἀπεράντοις, αἴτινες ζητήσεις παρέχουσι μάλλον ἡ οἰκονομίαν Θεοῦ τὴν  $\frac{\% 6.4,20}{\text{Tit. }1.14.}$ έν πίστει.

5 ° Τὸ δὲ τέλος τῆς παραγγελίας ἐστὶν ἀγάπη ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας καὶ συνει- e Rom. 10. 4. δήσεως ἀγαθης καὶ πίστεως ἀνυποκρίτου, 6 1 ων τινὲς ἀστοχήσαντες έξετράπη- Gal. 5. 14, 22. σαν είς ματαιολογίαν, 7 θέλοντες είναι νομοδιδάσκαλοι, μη νοοῦντες μήτε α Rom. 1. λέγουσι, μήτε περί τίνων διαβεβαιουνται.

τοῦτο, ὅτι δικαίω νόμος οὐ κεῖται, ἀνόμοις δὲ καὶ ἀνυποτάκτοις, ἀσεβέσι καὶ & 5. 23.

had already written his Epistle to the Ephesians, and he now desired Timothy to remain in charge at Ephesus to watch over the Church there, and to inculcate what he had taught. Προσμείναι (a stronger word than μείναι) = to cleave to work.

St. Paul does not say to Timothy that he left him at Ephesus, as he says to Titus that he left him in Crete. (Tit. i. 5.) is no evidence that St. Paul ever revisited Ephesus after his first imprisonment at Rome. Perhaps on some occasion, when sailing by Asia toward Macedonia, he desired Timothy to abide at Ephesus. See on iii. 14, and Introduction to this Epistle, p. 430.

— πορευόμενος είς Μακεδονίαν] when I was on my journey to Macedonia. As to the time of this journey, see the Introduction to this Epistle, p. 430. Cp. Phil. ii. 24, where, writing at Rome, he expresses a hope to visit Philippi in Macedonia.

4. μηδέ] nor yet: they were to be charged μη έτεροδιδασκαλείν (cp. vi. 3), not to teach heresy, nor yet to attend to what was profitless and vain.

 γενεαλογίαις ἀπεράντοις] to interminable genealogies,—
 (1) Understood by some of the Fathers to refer to the emanations of Æons, in the speculations of Gnosticism. So Iren. i. 1. Cp. Iren. Frag. i. p. 3, ed. Pfaff.; and Tertullian, de Præscr. 33, and de Carne Christi, 24; and so Blunt on the Early Fathers, p. 640.

(2) Others regard these Genealogies as of Jewish origin, not the Genealogies of the Mosaic Law (see Augustine, refuting this allegation, c. Adversarium Legis, ii. 1), but the genealogies of the Jews, priding themselves on their hereditary descent from Abraham, and boasting themselves to be God's favoured race, to the exclusion of the Heathen world. (John viii. 33. 39. 44.)
Or (3) the Genealogies of the rabbinical schools, such as may be found in the Talmud. So Chrys., Aug., who exemplifies them by a specimen: "Deum primo homini dicunt duas creâsse mulieres, ex quibus texunt genealogias vere (sicut ait Apostolus), infinitas, parientes infructuosissimas quæstiones.

This opinion is confirmed by what St. Paul says to Titus, i. 14, μη προσέχοντες 'Ιουδαϊκοίς μύθοις: and iii. 9, γενεα-λογίας καὶ έρεις καὶ μάχας νομικάς.

These Genealogies might well be called interminable, as contrasted with the Genealogies of Holy Scripture, which serve the purpose of proving the descent of the Messiah, and particularly as compared with the two Genealogies of the Gospels, which have their πέραs, or terminus, in Christ. (Matt. i. 1—18. Luke iii. 23 - 38.)

- oikovoular] dispensation. The meaning is, These fables and interminable Genealogies, with which these heterodox Pastors feed their flocks, supply no wholesome diet to the soul, only controversial and thorny questions, which have no spiritual nourishment in them, and are no part of the divine dieting of God's dispensation in Christ, supplied from the storehouse of His

The word οἰκονομία, as here used, and expressing God's care in governing, guiding, ordering, and feeding His Household, especially by the ministry of Christ, the Incarnate Word, Whom He has appointed to be Head of the Church, the House of the Living God (1 Tim. iii. 15. Heb. x. 21), is explained by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Church and City where Timothy now was, Ephesus (Eph. i. 10; iii. 2), the best Commentary on this Epistle to its Bishop. See note there.

This olkovoula Ocov is here affirmed to be in faith, namely, to have its proper element in the sphere of faith, in opposition to the teaching of these seducing Judaizers at Ephesus, who placed God's Œconomy or Dispensation in the lower element of human works according to the Law, by which they supplanted the scheme of the Gospel, and sought to establish their own righteousness, and to obtain salvation as a debt due to their own deserts.

The reading οἰκοδομίαν (Elz.), edification, is found in D***, and οἰκοδομὴν in D*, but neither of these readings has any claim to be put in comparison with olkovoular, which is in A, F,

5. Το δε τέλος της παραγγελίας έστιν άγάπη] But the end of the precept is Love. Those Genealogies of which the Apostle had been speaking, have no end. But the Precept,-that is, the true, sound, wholesome system and body of Christian doctrine, which ought to be delivered by thee and by all Christian Pastors, and which is opposed by those έτεροδιδάσκαλοι,—has its end and consummation in Love.

Cp. Rom. xiii. 10, πλήρωμα νόμου ή άγάπη, and Gal. v. 13. Col. iii. 14. Eph. iv. 16; and Augustine, Serm. 350 and Serm.

358, and in Ps. xxxi.

 - ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας καὶ συνειδήσεως ἀγαθῆς καὶ πίστεως ἀνυποκρίτου] out of a clean heart, and good conscience, and faith unfeigned. The Love which the Apostle describes as the τέλος of the precept, springs from a clean Heart, one unsullied by carnal lusts and sordid cares; and from a good Conscience, regulated by God's Will, and not tampered with, but carefully obeyed; and from Faith unfeigned,—not a specious, hollow, hypocritical, inoperative, barren faith, such as is condemned by St. James (ii. 17, 18),-but a living, healthful, energetic, fruitful Faith. See Gal. v. 6.

The Love which the wife of Potiphar professed for Joseph was not out of a clean heart, but of impure lust. Cp. Augustine de Doctr. Christ. i. 5. A pure heart is that which loves nothing but that which ought to be loved. The love which Conspirators, and Pirates, and Robbers profess for one another is not from a good conscience. (Augustine, Serm. 90.) The love which Demas professed for St. Paul was not from a faith unfeigned; but his faith was a mere empty profession, like that of those who are sown "on the rock, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy, but have no root in themselves, and which for a while believe but in time of wall of the arm." [12] believe, but in time of trial fall away" (Luke viii. 13).

Faith is mentioned last, as the root of all, from which every other virtue springs and grows. Hence Ignatius (ad Eph. 14), referring probably to this passage, says, 'Αρχή μέν πίστις, τέλος δὲ ἀγάπη.

 δ. ἀστοχήσαντες] having missed the mark. The word ἀστοχεῖν is used of archers who shoot their arrows without skill.
 (Cp. vi. 21. 2 Tim. ii. 18.) Teachers of others ought to aim aright and to direct their arrows well, in order to hit the mark; but these have shot at random, and having missed love, and good conscience, and faith, have swerved aside to vain jangling. Chrys.,

The Apostle thus shows that the main source of Unbelief and Heresy is in an evil life; and therefore he speaks of the evil heart of unbelief. Heb. iii. 12. Cp. John vii. 17.

8. Οἴδαμεν δέ] But we know. A reply to the Judaizers at Ephesus, who charged the Apostle with disparaging the Mosaic He shows that they themselves were chargeable with the sin which they imputed to him.

san which they impute to him.

— ὅτι καλὸς ὁ νόμος, ἐἀν τις αὐτῷ νομίμως χρῆται] we know that the Law (of Moses) is good if a man use it lawfully. See Rom. vii. 12. We who preach "Christ, the end of the Law, to every one that believeth" (Rom. x. 4), we use the Law lawfully, and as the Law itself commands us to do, although we are accused by some of disparaging the Law; whereas they who treat it as an end, and not as the means to the end, Christ, treat it unlawfully, and, as far as in them lies, contravene and frustrate the Law. See Chrys. and Augustine (de Spiritu et Literâ, 16), who says, "Justus bonâ lege legitime utitur, et tamen justo lex non posita est; non enim ex eâ justificatus est, sed ex lege fidei, quâ credidit nullo modo posse suæ infirmitati, ad implenda ea quæ lex fac-torum juberet, nisi divina gratia sublevari."

9. δικαίφ νόμος οὐ κεῖται] Law is not enacted for a righteous an. "Justus non est sub lege, quia in lege Domini est voluntas ejus" (his delight), "qui enim in lege est, secundum legem agitur; ille ergo liber est, hic servus" (Augustine in Ps. i.

A Lapide).

Cp. S. Irenœus (iv. 16. 3) on the reason why the Decalogue was not given to the Patriarchs: "Quare Patribus non disposuit 11 Thess. 2. 4. 11 Thess. 2. 4. ch. 6, 15. k John 9, 39, 41. Acts 3, 17. & 8, 3, & 9, 1. & 22, 4, & 26, 9, 1 Cor. 15, 9. Gal. 1, 13. Phil 3, 6 Phil. 3, 6, άμαρτωλοις, ανοσίοις και βεβήλοις, πατραλώαις και μητραλώαις, ανδροφόνοις, 10 πόρνοις, ἀρσενοκοίταις, ἀνδραποδισταῖς, ψεύσταις, ἐπιόρκοις, καὶ εἴ τι ἔτερον τῆ ὑγιαινούση διδασκαλία ἀντίκειται, 11 ι κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιον τῆς δόξης τοῦ μακαρίου Θεοῦ, ὃ ἐπιστεύθην ἐγώ. 12 Καὶ χάριν ἔχω τῷ ἐνδυναμώσαντί με Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν, ὅτι πιστόν με ἡγήσατο θέμενος εἰς διακονίαν, 13 * τὸν πρότερον ὄντα βλάσφημον καὶ διώκτην καὶ ὑβριστήν. ᾿Αλλὰ ἡλεήθην, Deus testamentum? Quia lex non est posita justis, justi autem ! Patres viriutem Decalogi conscriptam habentes in cordibus . . . habebant in semetipsis justitiam Legis."

This may be predicated, not only of the Law of Moses, but of Law generally. Laws are not enacted for the sake of re-warding good men, but in order to coerce the evil. And this seems to be a preferable sense here, not only because Nous is without the Article, but because the Law of Moses, as far as it was a special code, promised rewards to good men. See Eph. vi. 2. Lev. xviii. 5. Ezek. xx. 11. 13. 21. Cp. Gal. v. 23, and Bp. Middleton here, and the line of Antiphon, δ μηδὲν ἀδικῶν οὐδενὸς δεῖται νόμου, and Ovid, Met. i. 90. Tacitus, Ann. iii. 25. (Wetstein.)

It is however true that St. Paul (as Wetstein has observed), in his enumeration of the sins which follow here, seems to have had his eye on the order of the Decalogue. Thus ἀσεβείς καl άμαρτωλοί, ἀνόσιοι και βέβηλοι are they who violate the commandments of the First Table; and they who are next specified, break the injunctions of the Second Table.

 πατραλφαις] strikers of fathers; αλοιαν, ψιλως τὸ τύπτειν (Ammonius). The word was applied to any outrage against parents. See Pollux, iii. 13.

10. ἀνδραποδισταίς] kidnappers of men, in order to make them slaves. Cp. Rev. xviii. 13.

Men-stealing is forbidden under pain of death. Exod. xxi. 16. Cp. Deut. xxiv. 7, where it is applied to the stealing of an Israelite. ᾿Ανδραποδιστής ἐστιν ὁ τὸν ἐλεύθερον καταδουλωσάμενος (Pollux, iii. 78). He was sometimes called σωματέμπορος, in Latin, 'plagiarius.'

A person who stole a slave from his master was also called ἀνδραποδιστής in Greek and Roman law. (Etymol. Cp. the Lex Fabia: Wetstein.)

 $-\tau \hat{\eta}$  ύγιαινούση διδασκαλία] the wholesome doctrine. It is observable that the word byialvw (to be in health) occurs nine times in the pastoral Epistles, and always in reference to doctrine. A striking proof of the importance of sound teaching. See above,

A striking proof of the importance of sound teaching. See above, Introduction to these Epistles, p. 434.

11. δ ἐπιστεύθην] which was committed to me. Observe ἐγὼ reserved for the last place, in order to be more emphatic. I, even I, was entrusted with it, so great was God's love and mercy. Cp. the position of ἐγὼ in v. 15. On the syntax, cp. Rom. iii. 2, ἐπιστεύθησαν τὰ λόγια. 1 Cor. xi. 17. Gal. ii. 7. 1 Thess. ii. 4. Tit. i. 3.

12. Kal  $\chi d\rho \nu \in \chi \omega \kappa.\tau.\lambda$ .] And I am thankful to Christ Jesus who enabled me. Another reply to the Judgizing false teachers mentioned above, vv. 4—7.

They charge me with-

(1) Either being a renegade now, or

(2) With having been a blasphemer formerly.

He is thus led to speak of his own Conversion and Apostleship, and shows how it is exemplary to them.

- πιστόν με ηγήσατο θίμενος είς διακονίαν] He judged a faithful, in that He put me into the ministry. See Theophyl.

It has been asked, How could Christ have judged St. Paul faithful, when he was a persecutor? and how could He have therefore put him into the Ministry?

This question is treated at length by A Lapide here, who argues, that miords does not mean faithful as a Christian, but only trusty, as a heathen, or unregenerate person might be.

But how could any one, who was only  $\pi \iota \sigma \tau bs$  in this sense, and so lately a blasphemer, be therefore judged to be meet to be advanced to the Apostleship?

Some of the Schoolmen (as Aquinas here) suppose that πιστός is said by anticipation of what Paul would become, and what God foreknew; and that God chose him "ex prævisis meritis;" but this opinion tends to Pelagianism and Armi-

But the supposed difficulty arises from an incorrect notion as to the time at which St. Paul was "put into the Ministry."

He was not ordained an Apostle till many years after his Conversion. See above on Acts xiii. 2.

St. Paul went through a term of probation of several years ofter his Conversion. And when he had approved himself to be wiords, through the grace which God had given him, and which he had cherished, and by which he had profited, then he was "put into the Ministry,"—then, but not till then, was he ordained to the Apostleship.

13. τον πρότερον] A, D*, F, G have το πρότερον, and so Lachm., Tisch., Ellicott, Alf. But the article τον gives force to the substantives, and increases the emphasis of his self-

It is a characteristic of St. Paul's manner in his latest Epistles to look back on God's first mercies, and to teach others to do so. A practical lesson on the true nature of Christian Thankfulness. See on 2 Tim. i. 3; iii. 11.

— βλάσφημον καὶ διώκτην καὶ ὑβριστήν] a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and outrageous. An accumulation of guilt. Not only a blasphemer of God, but a persecutor of His Son; with acts of insult, outrage, and violence. Theophyl.

St. Paul confesseth himself to have been a persecutor, &c., although he followed the guidance of his own Conscience (Acts xxvi. 9), and to have stood in need of mercy for the remission of those wicked acts, though he did them ignorantly, and out of zeal refor the Law. Cp. John xvi. 2. Bp. Sanderson, ii. p. 122.

- 'Αλλὰ ἡλεήθην] But nevertheless I obtained mercy, because I did it not knowing what I did, being yet in unbelief.

This sentence is best explained by our blessed Lord's prayer on the Cross, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do" (Luke xxiii. 34). Not as if they were not guilty of a heinous sin; for, if they were not guilty, they would not have needed forgiveness. But Jesus Christ, in His great mercy, pleaded for them a circumstance, which made their sin to be less sinful than might have been the case. Their sin was not against knowledge and conscience; it was not a wilful and presumptuous sin, but one of ignorance. They did not know that He Whom they crucified was the Son of God. Not that their ignorance excused them, for they might have known Him as such, and their only hope was in God's mercy; yet it did not, as it were, close the door to mercy, as Wilfulness and Presumption would have done.

So (as Bp. Sanderson says, iii. 233) though Saul was a persecutor, a blasphemer, and injurious, yet he obtained mercy, because he did it ignorantly. His ignorance was not enough to justify him; he stood in need of God's mercy, or he would have perished in his sins. But yet who can tell, whether he ever would have found mercy, if he had done the same things, and not in ignorance? Ignorance, then, though it do not deserve pardon, yet it often findeth it, because it is not joined with open contempt of Him that is able to pardon. But he that sinneth against knowledge doth not only provoke the Justice of God, but dam up His Mercy by his contempt, and doth his part to shut himself out for ever from all possibility of pardon. See also Bp. Sanderson, ii. 50, where he says that St. Paul here "leaves it questionable whether there be hope of mercy for such as blaspheme maliciously and against knowledge."

St. Paul's words here are, therefore, a solemn warning to all persons, such as open Infidels or profane Scoffers, who imagine that they have nothing to fear, provided they are sincere, and act according to their conscience; for there "is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death"

(Prov. xiv. 12).

The extenuating circumstance of ignorance was probably mentioned by the Apostle as a warning to the Jews, and to apostatizing Christians, Judaizers, and others of later days, who might be disposed to pervert his wonderful Conversion into an occasion for presumption on God's mercy.

St. Paul says, that he obtained mercy because he did it ἀγνοῶν. But this, be it observed, was at the commencement of the Gospel. At that time the evidences of Christianity were not fully displayed, as they were afterwards, and as they are now. St. Paul could not long have remained ἀγνοῶν after the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost had been poured out upon the Church, and after the working of so many miracles by the Apostles and others at Jerusalem, and after so many wonderful signs had attended the reception of the Gospel wherever it was preached.

Hence, therefore, we may derive a confirmation of the opinion, that St. Paul's Conversion followed soon after the Crucifixion, and Ascension, and Day of Pentecost.

ότι ἀγνοῶν ἐποίησα ἐν ἀπιστία. 14 Ὑπερεπλεόνασε δὲ ἡ χάρις τοῦ Κυρίου ήμων μετά πίστεως καὶ ἀγάπης τῆς ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ.

 $^{15}$   $^{1}$   $\Pi$ ιστὸς ὁ λόγος, καὶ πάσης ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος, ὅτι Xριστὸς Ἰησοῦς ἦλ $\theta$ εν  $^{1}$   $^{Matt. 9. 13.}$  εἰς τὸν κόσμον ἁμαρτωλοὺς σῶσαι ὧν πρῶτός εἰμι ἐγώ.  $^{16}$  'Αλλὰ διὰ τοῦτο  $^{Mark \ 2. 17.}$   $^{Luke \ 5. \ 32.}$ ηλεήθην, ινα εν εμοί πρώτω ενδείξηται Ίησοῦς Χριστὸς την απασαν μακροθυ- 8 19.10. μίαν, πρὸς ὑποτύπωσιν τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν ἐπ' αὐτῷ εἰς ζωὴν αἰώνιον.

— ἐν ἀπιστία] when I was yet in a state of unbelief, i. e. before I had been received into the Church by a profession of faith in Christ.

He guards against the abuse of the divine mercy shown in his particular case, into a plea for recklessness and apostasy in the case of those who have been baptized; such as was the case of Simon Magus, of whom it is said that he enlorevoe, i. e. made public profession of faith in Christ, and was baptized, and then committed the sin to which he has given his name. (Acts viii. 13-18, where see note.) And such was the case also with those Hebrew Christians to whom St. Paul had referred in his Epistle to the Hebrews, vi. 1-8.

The word πιστείω, to embrace the faith in Christ, as used there and below, v. 16, explains ἀπιστία. Cp. Heb. vi. 4—6, and Rom. xi. 23, where the spiritual state in which the Jews are, is called ἀπιστία. Cp. Tertullian, de Pudic. 18.

14. Υπερεπλεόνασε] was exceedingly abundant. The metaphor is derived from a stream. (See Bp. Sanderson on v. 13.) I by my sins obstructed the course of God's grace, but the Stream of His Mercy brimmed over, and overflowed the mounds and dams of my sinfulness, by the surpassing exuberance, copiousness, and power of its spiritual inundation.

- μετὰ πίστεως και ἀγάπης] with faith and love. The natural concomitants of the fertilizing current of divine Grace, duly received and cherished in the Soul.

The river Nile fertilizes Egypt by its 'pinguis arena,' Hermus and Pactolus bring their golden ore; the stream of divine Grace brought with it to me Faith and Love.

It is to be remembered, however, that St. Paul has taken care to inform us, that, at his Conversion, he was "not dis-obedient to the heavenly Vision." See on Acts xxvi. 19. And our Lord hath pointed to him at Damascus as a suppliant for grace, "Behold he prayeth," Acts ix. 11.

15. Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος] Faithful is the saying. A formula used by St. Paul in these Epistles to Timothy and Titus, in order to introduce some weighty and memorable truth. (1 Tim. iii. 1; iv. 9. 2 Tim. ii. 11. Tit. iii. 8.) See above, Introduction, p. 434. It is to him what Christ's preamble was to the Saviour Himself, but which no one else ever ventured to use, 'Αμην, 'Αμην, λέγω ὑμῖν,—" Verily, verily, I say unto you,"—uttered about twentyfive times by Him in the last Gospel, and in that alone. And this Apostolic preamble is found in these last Epistles, and in them only.

— ὧν πρῶτός εἰμι ἐγώ] chief of whom am I. The pronoun is reserved for emphasis to the last place of the sentence.

The word  $\pi\rho\hat{\omega}\tau\sigma s$ , first, is not to be understood first in time, but in guilt. Cp. Augustine, Serm. 175 and 176, on this text, and in Ps. lxx., and his recently discovered Sermon (299, vol. v. p. 1785), "Non quia prior peccavit, sed quia plus peccavit; nemo enim graviùs Ecclesiam est persecutus."

It is to be remembered that the person who utters these words is St. Paul, and that he is speaking of himself.

Being illumined by the Holy Ghost, he had a clear perception of the exceeding sinfulness of sin, especially of the sin of which he himself had been guilty, of blasphemy, persecution, and outrage against the Ever-Blessed Son of God. St. Paul thought of himself formerly breathing rage and slaughter against the Saints (Acts ix. 1), and making havoc of the Church (viii. 3) even in strange cities (Acts xxvi. 11), and stirring up the Chief Priests to shed the blood of the faithful (Acts ix. 2), and requesting letters from them, authorizing him to persecute the worshippers of that Adorable Redeemer, Who in His tender love had come into the world to save sinners, and was risen from the dead, and had ascended into Heaven, and was seated at God's right hand.

In this respect his own sin was greater than that of those who crucified Him, and who had not seen the evidence of His mighty working in His Resurrection, Ascension, and sending of the Holy Ghost

He is speaking of what was in the range of his own knowledge; and it was no exaggeration to say, that, as far as he knew, no one was a greater sinner than himself.

He had his eye fixed on his own sin, and on that only, he would not judge others; and being endued by the Holy Ghost not only with a clear sense of the heinousness of sin, but with the grace of humility and repentance, he speaks from the depth of his own self-abasement, and remorse, and shame, looking up to Him Whom he had pierced. (Zech. xii. 10.) "Faithful is the saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners—chief of whom am I." Compare the prayer of the Publican, O  $\Theta\epsilon \delta s$   $\delta \lambda \delta \sigma \theta \eta \tau i$   $\delta \mu \omega \tau \varphi$   $\delta \mu \omega \rho \tau \omega \lambda \varphi$  (Luke xviii. 13), "God be merciful to me the sinner."

16. [να ἐν ἐμοὶ πρώτφ] in order that in me, being the chief of sinners, He might show forth all His long-suffering.

As in a house where there are many sick, and one most sick of all, a Physician selects him for the exercise of his medical art, and restores him to perfect health, and thus gives hope of recovery to all, so did Christ, the good Physician, come to me, says the Apostle. He cleansed even me from sin, and poured out even on me all the riches of His grace and love, so that none might despair, but all may have hope in Him. Cp. Theodoret.

St. Paul acknowledges with thankfulness and joy that he has obtained the mercy of God, because he was first, that is, chief, of sinners; and yet, says he, I obtained mercy in order that all may say, If Paul was healed, why should I despair? Wherever the Physician comes, He asks for some sick man who may be deemed incurable, and He heals him. He does not look for reward, but He publicly commends His art to the World's esteem and acceptance. But do not therefore love sin. Love not the couch of sin. Arise, thou paralytic, from thy bed. Hear the voice of Paul himself, Surge qui dormis et exsurge à mortuis, et illuminabit te Christus (Eph. v. 14). Cp. Augustine (Serm. 175).

Elz. has here τὴν πᾶσαν. But A, F, G have τὴν ἄπασαν, which is received by Lach., Tisch., Ellicott, Alf. "Απας is rarely which is received by Lach., Tisch., Ellicott, Alf. "Aπas is rarely used by St. Paul, only once, certainly (Eph. vi. 13). But its very rarity makes it more emphatic here, and makes it less likely that it was substituted by copyists for πασαν.

The phrase τὴν ἄπασαν μακροθυμίαν, 'totam longanimitatem,' may be compared with Acts xx. 18, τὸν πάντα χρόνον, and Gal. v. 14, ὁ πᾶς νόμος. On the difference between ἄπας and πᾶς, see Christ chose me (says the Apostle), in order to show forth in me, as the chief of sinners, all His long-suffering. He poured forth upon me, in a copious effusion, all the showers of His grace; -He discharged upon me the whole cornu copiæ of His mercy and love,-not that He might encourage any one to sin, but for encouragement to all who should profess their faith in Him to life I, being the chief of sinners, needed not only a portion of His long-suffering; all His grace ὑπερεπλεόνασεν on me.

Observe the humility of the Apostle. God, being desirous

(he says) to assure all that He is ready to forgive all sin, chose me the most sinful of all men; and since I obtained mercy, no one need doubt that all are capable of obtaining it. Let no one despair of salvation, since I am saved. Chrysostom.

- πρὸς ὑποτύπωσιν] for a pattern. St. Paul does not mean that he himself in the abstract is a pattern for all who should believe; but he says that God has set forth in him all His own longsuffering, for a pattern to all who should embrace the Gospel. (See on v. 13.) They are not to look at him as their model, but they are to contemplate God's mercy in him as a pattern proposed for their encouragement, πρός προτροπήν και παράκλησιν (Chrys.), and as an assurance to them, that, if out of such untractable materials, as Saul the persecutor, the divine Artificer could mould Paul the Apostle, God's grace can also model them into vessels of honour fit for the Master's use (2 Tim. ii. 21), if they are also like Saul in being not disobedient to the heavenly call, and in praying for pardon and grace. See above on v. 14.

The word ὑποτύπωσις occurs below, 2 Tim. i. 13. See also the examples of it in Wetstein, p. 320.

It is shown by Wetstein's examples of the use of the word  $\dot{\nu}\pi \sigma \tau \dot{\nu}\pi \omega \sigma \iota s$ , that it not only signifies a model to be copied, but an adumbration or delineation, a primary draught or sketch, to be afterwards filled in; a cartoon, or sub-tracery  $(\delta\pi\delta)$ , to be afterwards painted over. In this view, the mercy of God shown in the case of St. Paul might very properly be called an ὑποτύπωσις, a primary sketch and delineation, to be afterwards filled up, and coloured over with the rich hues of the Divine Mercy shed forth over all the world.

- τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν] Of those who should be converted from unbelief like mine (ἀπιστία, v. 13), and embrace the Gospel, and so inherit everlasting life. An encouragement and m Rom. 16, 27, ch. 6, 16. Jude 25.

n ch. 6. 12. 2 Tim. 2. 3-5. & 4 7.

 $17 \, ^{\text{m}} \, T\hat{\omega} \, \delta \hat{\epsilon} \, Ba\sigmaιλεί των αἰώνων, ἀφθάρτω, ἀοράτω, μόνω Θε<math>\hat{\omega}$ , τιμ $\hat{\eta}$  καὶ δόξα είς τούς αίωνας των αίωνων άμήν.

18 η Ταύτην την παραγγελίαν παρατίθεμαί σοι, τέκνον Τιμόθεε, κατά τὰς προο ch 3.9. & 4.7.  $^{19}$  ° έχων πίστιν καὶ ἀγαθὴν συνείδησιν, ἣν τινὲς ἀπωσάμενοι περὶ τὴν πίστιν  $^{10}$  την  $^{10}$  εναυάγησαν,  $^{20}$   $^{10}$  ων ἐστιν  $^{10}$  Γμέναιος καὶ  $^{10}$  Αλέξανδρος, οῦς παρέδωκα τῷ Σατανᾳ  $^{10}$  ενα παιδευθώσι μὴ βλασφημείν.

ΙΙ. 1 Παρακαλώ οὖν πρώτον πάντων ποιεῖσθαι δεήσεις, προσευχάς, ἐντεύξεις, exhortation to all, especially to the Jewish teachers, of whom he has been speaking. See on v. 3.

17. τῶν αἰώνων of the ages, the countless ages of Eternity. μόνφ] Elz. adds σοφφ, not in A, D*, F, G, and cancelled by Griesb., Sch., Lün., Tf., Ell., Alf.

18. κατά τὰς προαγούσας ἐπὶ σὲ προφητείας] according to the prophecies going before on thee, or concerning thee (Syriac), and leading the way to thine Ordination. 'Secundùm præcedentes in te prophetias' (Vulg.).

Whether these prophecies, which guided St. Paul in his ordination of Timothy (iv. 14, and 2 Tim. i. 6), were directly from the Holy Ghost, with regard to Timothy (as is the opinion of Chrys., Theodoret, Theophyl., Ecumen.), or by the medium of Prophets, cannot be accurately determined.

It is probable, that before St. Timothy's ordination to the Episcopate of Ephesus, the Holy Spirit spake to the Prophets, and the Prophets declared to the Church the Holy Spirit's will, designating him to the Episcopate, as was done in St. Paul's own ordination to the Apostleship at Antioch. (Acts xiii. 2.)

This fact serves to account for the appointment of so young a man, as Timothy was (1 Tim. iv. 12), to so great a charge in so large a city as Ephesus; and St. Paul mentions the fact as justifying the appointment; for the sake of others, especially the Christians at Ephesus, who would read this Epistle, and thence learn to treat their Bishop with due respect. See above, v. 3.

- ἐν αὐταῖs] in them. In and by these prophecies as thy spiritual weapons, in the strength of which thou mayest go forth and war the good warfare. Cp. Winer, § 48, p. 346.
 - τὴν καλὴν στρατείαν] the good warfare. Observe the emphatic use of the article here, combined with the adjective καλδς, and in της καλης διδασκαλίας iv. 6, and in την καλην δμολογίαν vi. 12 twice, and in vi. 13, and in την καλην παραθήκην, 2 Tim. i. 14, and τον ἀγῶνα τὸν καλὸν ἡγώνισμαι, iv. 7,—marking the unique excellence of the warfare for Christ, and of the teaching of His Gospel, and of the confession of the Truth in Him, and of the deposit of doctrine laid up in His Church, and of the Christian combat for Him even unto death. The article ought in these cases to be expressed in the English Version.

19. ην τινές ἀπωσάμενοι] which some having thrust from them, made shipwreck of the faith; or, literally, concerning the faith. Heresy, therefore, and False Doctrine, is ascribed by St. Paul to lack of due regulation of the Conscience by God's will and word, and to sins wilfully committed against Conscience. See v. 6.

The root of impiety is an evil life. Theodoret. "Fons hære-seos mala conscientia." A Lapide.

 20. *Τμέναιος] Hymenæus, who said that the Resurrection was past. (2 Tim. ii. 18.)
 — ᾿Αλέξανδρος] Alexander. Cp. 2 Tim. iv. 14. The name of an Alexander is mentioned as a leader of the Jewish party at Ephesus. Acts xix. 33, where see note.

As to the inferences from names thus mentioned, it may surely be affirmed with Origen that "nibil otiosum in Sacra Scriptura;" and it may be reasonably inferred that the writers of Holy Scripture, being inspired by the Holy Ghost, were not without divine guidance in the mention of names; and that one of the ends they are designed to answer, is to show the harmony and truth of the different portions of Holy Scripture by means of slight and almost unnoticeable coincidences, which, though of little importance singly, yet, when taken together, afford a strong testimony to Christianity.

The mention of an Alexander in the Acts, where he is introduced without any apparent reason (as far as the narrative of that book is concerned), may have been suggested prospectively by the Holy Spirit in order to illustrate the mention to be made of him afterwards (supposing him to be the same person) by the Apostle St. Paul, and to account for, and justify, the severe sentence of excommunication pronounced upon him by the Apostle.

- οῦς παρέδωκα τῷ Σατανᾳ] whom I delivered to Satan, not whom I have delivered, but whom (as thou knowest) I deliveredby a solemn act of religious discipline at a particular time.

I here state to thee the reason of this act, in order that thou mayest communicate that reason to others on my authority; especially to the Church at Ephesus.

The reason was not, in order to gratify any private resentment on my own part; let no one harbour so uncharitable an imagination; but in order that they whom I delivered to Satan may be taught by wholesome discipline not to continue to blaspheme, and so may escape the terrible consequences of that deadly sin, which I, who "was formerly a blasphemer," well

This discipline, therefore, of Excommunication, is "medicinalis vindicta, terribilis lenitas, charitatis severitas." Augustine (ad Literas Petilian. iii. 4). See above on 1 Cor. v. 5, where the meaning of the phrase 'to deliver to Satan' is considered.

These persons of whom the Apostle speaks, being separated by Excommunication from the communion of the Church, and bereft of divine grace, were grievously tormented by their Ghostly Enemy with diseases and sundry afflictions. It might therefore be hoped that they would thus be brought to a better mind, when they felt the consequences of their blasphemy.... From this mention of Excommunication the Apostle naturally begins to deliver his directions to Timothy on Church-Regimen. See

As the Pillar of Cloud overshadowed the Tabernacle in the wilderness, and protected it from the heat; and they who were without the precincts of its shadow were scorched by the beams of the sun; so they who are put out of the Communion of the Church in their march through the wilderness of this world, are exposed to the fiery darts of the enemy, in order that they may be disciplined thereby. Cp. Chrys., Theoph.

Сн. II. 1. Паракада оду] I exhort therefore. 'Obsecto igitur,' Vulg. The ove, therefore, introduces an inference from the foregoing chapter. Since there are many false Teachers, who teach licentiousness under the name of Liberty, and stimulate men to revolt against rulers and masters, because they are heathen and perhaps oppressors, and because they who are Christians are freed by Christ's blood, I exhort therefore first of all, that prayers, &c. be made for all men, for Kings—even heathen rulers, even Neros. See the Introduction, pp. 433, 434.

— πρῶτον πάντων] first of all. In this Apostolic charge to the Bishop and Church at Ephesus, and to all Bishops and Churches of all place and time, the Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Paul, declares that the first duty of the Public Assemblies of the Faithful is Prayer, as He had said by Isaiah (lvi. 7), "My House shall be called an House of Prayer for all people." Cp. Matt. xxi. 13. Mark xi. 17. Luke xix. 46.

· δεήσεις, προσευχάς, εντεύξεις] δέησις expresses our needs (ἐνδείας); προσευχή shows that we look to God as our only helper; ἐντευξις is an urgent personal address (interpellatio) to Him as such.

As to δέησις, the etymology and true sense of the word is marked by Demosthenes and Eschines, δέομαι ύμῶν δικαίαν δέησιν, μετρίαν δέησιν. See Wetstein. I your suppliant in need present to you a humble petition.

Προσευχή denotes a reverent turning to God, and a devout meditation on and adoration of His Divine Majesty. Origen, de Orat. 44. It can only be applied to God. We cannot address προσευχή to a creature. Προσευχή is therefore more significant of the power of Him Whom we invoke, than δέησιs is; and δέομαι is used by St. Paul himself in addresses to men. (Acts xxvi. 3. Gal. iv. 12.)

Έντευξις is personal, earnest solicitation, made with a view of moving the person, who is the object of it, to some action, in defence of, or commiseration and pardon of, the person who makes it, or for whom it is made. See Acts xxv. 24. Rom. viii. 27. 34; xi. 2. Heb. vii. 25. 1 Macc. x. 61. 2 Macc. iv. 8. Έντυγχάνω is said of appeals to man, as well as to God.

εὐχαριστίας, ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων,  $\frac{2}{3}$  ὑπὲρ βασιλέων καὶ πάντων τῶν ἐν ὑπερ-  $\frac{1}{8}$  Jer  $\frac{29}{7}$ . οχ $\hat{\eta}$  ὄντων, ἴνα ἤρεμον καὶ ἡσύχιον βίον διάγωμεν ἐν πάση εὐσεβεία καὶ σεμνό-  $\frac{1}{6}$  Εκκ. 1. 1.  $\frac{1}{6}$  Εκκ. 1. 1.  $\frac{1}{6}$  Εκκ. 1. 1.  $\frac{1}{6}$  Εκκ. 1. 1.  $\frac{1}{6}$  Εκκ. 20.  $\frac{$ τητι 3 ο τοῦτο γὰρ καλὸν καὶ ἀπόδεκτον ἐνώπιον τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ, 4 ° ος Τετ. 29.7. τητι τουτο γαρ καλον και αποσεκτον ενωπιον του σωτηρος ηρων σεος,  $\frac{2 \, {\rm Pet. \, 3.9.}}{1000 \, {\rm John \, 3.16, \, 17.}}$  πάντας ἀνθρώπους θέλει σωθήναι, καὶ εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας ἐλθεῖν.  $\frac{5}{4} \, {\rm Eἶς}$  John  $\frac{1}{2}$  John γὰρ Θεὸς, εἶς καὶ μεσίτης Θεοῦ καὶ ἀνθρώπων, ἄνθρωπος Χριστὸς Ἰησοῦς,  $^6$  constant  $^6$  down 17. 3. 80. 81. 12. 161. 12. 12. 12. 16. Eph. 1. 7. Col. 1. 14. 2 Thess. 1. 10.

— ὑπὲρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων] in behalf of all men. The Christian Priest, in the execution of his priestly office, ought to regard himself as the father of all, and to pray for all, because Christ came to save all, and not to limit his prayers, as the Jews do, to his own people. Chrys., Theodoret.

2.  $5m\dot{\epsilon}\rho$   $\beta a\sigma ik\dot{\epsilon}\omega v]$  for Kings. This Apostolic direction is not only a charge to the Bishop and Church at Ephesus, but it is also designed as a reply to the allegations of the Jews, who charged the Apostle with disloyalty to the Roman authority, and thus stirred up the Heathens against the Gospel. See Acts xvii.

5. 7.

This Epistle, being publicly circulated and read in primitive times, served this excellent purpose; as is evident from Tertullian's Apology, where he rebuts the charge of civil disaffection, with which the Christians were charged, by reference to this passage of St. Paul. See Apolog. 31, where, it is observable, he calls these words of this Epistle, 'Dei voces,' the 'words of

This exhortation is also an evidence of the courage and divine commission of St. Paul. See on Titus iii. 1.

"Pray for kings," even for a Nero, even for a Decius, even for a Diocletian—persecutors of the Church: how much more for a Constantine! Cp. the language of Tertullian, Apol. c. 30. 32, ad Scap. 2. Origen, c. Celsum viii. Arnobius, c. Gentes iii. Euseb. iv. 26 (A Lapide); and see Dr. Barrow's excellent Estmon on this Text, vol. i. pp. 191—219.

— βίον διάγωμεν] "temporalia transigamus, quam vitam Græci non ζωὴν sed βίον vocant." Augustine (de Triu, xii. 11).

έν πάση εὐσεβεία] in all reverence of God (Syr.), shown by His worship and service.

- σεμνότητι] gravity, seen in external deportment, so as to overcome the prejudices of others, and to conciliate and win the Heathen to the faith, by the quiet gravity of your deportment, even inspiring them with respect and reverence for you and for your religion. This Text has ever been rightly regarded as a divine statement of the end and purpose for which Civil government exists; and, consequently, of the duties of those who are invested with civil power by God.

As Bp. Bilson says, "On Christian Subjection," p. 339,-Praiers must be made for kings and all that are in authority (1 Tim, ii. 2), in order that they may discharge their duties according to God's ordinance, which is, that their subjects, by their help and means, may lead an honest, godly, and quiet life; godliness and honesty being the chiefest ends of our praiers, and effects of their powers. And (p. 343),—

If their dutie stretch so far, their authority must stretch as far. Their charge ceaseth where their power endeth. God never requireth princes to do what He permitteth them not to do. If, then, godliness and honestie be the chiefest part of their charge, therefore they are likewise the chiefest end of their

Ibid. (pp. 179. 183.) If you deny that this is the prince's charge, to see the law of God fully executed, His Son rightly served, His Spouse safely nursed, His House timely filled, you must countervail that which Moses prescribed, David required, Esay prophesied, Paul witnessed, and Christ commanded, with some better and sounder authority than theirs is.

A gross error it is, to think that regal power ought to serve for the good of the body and not of the soul, for men's temporal peace, and not for their eternal safety. Hooker, VIII. iii. 2. Cp. V. lxxvi. 4; VIII. vi. 11.

Utinam considerare Principes vellent, aliud esse sacerdotem agere, ex umbone Scripturas interpretari, Sacramenta administrare, in nomine Christi ligare et solvere; aliud auctoritate suâ prospicere, ut quæ sunt sacerdotis agat sacerdos. Has partes in Ecclesia Dei pii Principes sibi semper vindicarunt. Nova, infanda, execranda Theologia est, quæ docet curam subditorum pertinere ad Principes tantum quatenus homines sunt, non quatenus Christiani. Isaac Casaubon (Dedicat. Exerc. Baron.).
We confess with S. Augustine (de Civ. Dei, v. 24), that the chiefest happiness for which we have some Kings in so great admiration above the rest, is not because of their long reign, but the reason wherefore we most extol their felicity is, if so be they have virtuously reigned; if the exercise of their power hath been service and attendance upon the Majesty of the Most High; if they have feared Him as their own subjects have feared them; Vol. II.—Part III.

and thus heavenly and earthly happiness are wreathed into one Crown, as to the worthiest of Christian Princes it hath by the Providence of Almighty God hitherto befallen. Hooker (V.

It doth certainly belong unto Kings, yea, it doth specially belong unto them, to have care of religion, yea, to know it aright, yea, to profess it zealously, yea, to promote it to the uttermost of their power. This is their glory before all nations which mean well; and this will bring unto them a far more excellent weight of glory in the day of the Lord Jesus. The English Translators of the Holy Bible, in their Preface to the Authorized Version,

This being the duty and happiness of "Kings and all in authority," it is consequently the bounden duty, and ought to be a chief happiness, of loyal subjects and good citizens to promote the exercise of that power by all good means.

3, 4. τοῦτο γὰρ καλὸν κ.τ.λ.] for this is good and acceptable in the eyes of God our Saviour, Whose will it is that all men should be saved. Imitated by S. Clement of Rome, c. 7: βλέπωμεν τί καλ δυ και τι τερπνδυ και προσδεκτου ένώπιου τοῦ ποιήσαν-τος ήμας ἀτενίσωμευ είς το αίμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ, ὅτι διὰ τὴν ἡμετέραυ σωτηρίαν ἐκχυθὲν παντι τῷ κόσμῷ μετανοίας χάριν ύπήνεγκεν-remarkable words, from a contemporary of the Holy Apostles, and clearly asserting, as the Apostle does here, the Universality of the Redemption effected by the Blood of Christ. Cp. Justin Martyr (De Resurrectione, p. 532, Otto), who quotes these words of St. Paul, "Do they represent God as envious?" But He is good; και θέλει πάντας σώζεσθαι. Imitate God. It is His will that all men should be saved  $(\sigma\omega\theta\hat{\eta}\nu\alpha)$ , therefore let it be thine also; therefore pray for all. Chrysostom. See the note above on Rom. viii. 30.

The words πάντας ἀνθρώπους, 'all men,' have special force and pertinency against the Judaizers, who would have limited

God's mercies to those who received the Levitical Law.

In opposition to that notion the Apostle teaches that God willeth all men to be saved, even the heathen, even persecutors and tyrants, even the Neros of this world. Men must pray even for them; yes, pray first of all for them. St. Paul himself had been a persecutor and blasphemer (i. 13); and St. Stephen had prayed for him (Acts vii. 60), and God had heard that prayer: and St. Paul was now saving himself and others by the Gospel which he once had persecuted and now preached.

4. ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας] a clear knowledge of the Truth-a knowledge much insisted on in these Pastoral Epistles, where this expression is repeated four times (see Titus i. 1. 2 Tim. ii. 25; iii. 7), and contrasted with the knowledge, yvwois, falsely so called,

7), and contrasted with the knowledge, γνωσις, fatsely so called, of the Antinomian Libertines, who professed godliness, but denied its power. (1 Tim. vi. 20. 2 Tim. iii. 5. Titus i. 16.)
5. Eîs γὰρ Θεός] For there is but One God, not many, as the heathens say (1 Cor. viii. 5). He is One and the same for all, the common Father of all; and therefore loves all,—even the heathen, and the evil—and wills all to be saved. Therefore pray ye for all.

- εls καl μεσίτης] and One Mediator for all, Who gave Himself a ransom for all (v. 6), and now prays in Heaven for all;

therefore, pray ye for all.

This doctrine of One Mediator for all, was a doctrine very necessary to be inculcated by Timothy in the Churches of Asia, where the false Teachers disseminated many erroneous notions on this subject, particularly that

(1) God was to be approached by the Mediatorship of Angels;

see on Col. ii. 18; and that

(2) Christ being man, is inferior in dignity to Angels. Hence in his Epistles to the Ephesians and Colossians, St. Paul had been careful to dwell on the doctrines,-

 Of Christ's Divinity and superiority to the Angels.
 Of His Incarnation.
 Of His Proper and exclusive Mediatorship, consequent on the union of the two Natures of God and Man in His One Person, and on His Headship of the Universal Church.

On the error and sin of raising up other Mediators, to the disparagement of His Divine Dignity, and proper Humanity, and Mediatorial Office, see on Eph. i. 10. Col. i. 15; ii. 18.

— ἄνθρωπος Χ. 'I.] a man, Christ Jesus. A man; not an Angel; Christ Jesus; Who became our Mediator, by becoming Man in time, being God from eternity. "In the beginning was f Acts 9. 15. ε 22. 21. δοὺς ε΄αυτὸν ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων, τὸ μαρτύριον καιροῖς ἰδίοις,  $\frac{7}{6}$  εἰς δ [ 9] 11.13. ἐτέθην ἐγὼ κήρυξ καὶ ἀπόστολος, ἀλήθειαν λέγω, οὐ ψεύδομαι, διδάσκαλος έθνων έν πίστει καὶ άληθεία.

Gal. 1. 16. & 2. 8. 2 Tim. 1. 11.

the Word" (John i. 1). The World was not, when the Word was. The Word made the World. When He made us men, He was The Word made the World. When the made us hell, the was not as yet made Man. That was a great grace; the grace of our Creation, by the Word; but we have received a greater grace than this, that of our second Creation by the Word made Flesh. This second and greater grace is extolled by the Apostle when he says, "There is One Mediator of God and men." He does not add simply, "Christ Jesus," lest you might imagine that he was speaking of 'the Word;' but he says, 'a Man.' For what is a Mediator? One by whom we are joined and reconciled to God. We were separated from Him by sin; and so were dead. Christ was not man when man was made; but he became Man, that man might live. Augustine (Serm. 26). See also Augustine in Gal. iii. 15—18, and in Ps. ciii., where he says, "Inter duos Mediator; ergo Christus Mediator inter hominem et Deum; non quia Deus, sed quia homo; nam quia Deus, æqualis Patri, non autem Mediator; ut autem sit Mediator, descendat ab æqualitate Patris, faciat quod ait Apostolus, 'semetipsum exinanivit, formam servi accipiens, in similitudine hominum factus, et habitu inventus est ut homo.'" (Phil. ii. 7.)

A Mediator is between two, and ought to have communion with both. Chrys., Theophyl.

Therefore He is united to the Father as God, and to us all as Man. Theodoret.

6. δ δοὺς ἐαυτὸν ἀντίλυτρον ὑπὲρ πάντων] Who gave Himself a ransom for all. He declares that Christ suffered death for all. Theodoret. Therefore we must pray for all. What does he mean by ransom? Mankind was guilty, and liable to the punishment of death, and He gave Himself in their stead (àvrl). Theoph.

The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many (Matt. xx. 28). A ransom is a price given to redeem such as are in any way in captivity. All sinners were obliged to undergo such punishments as are proportionate to their sins, and were by that obligation captivated and in bonds, and Christ did give his life a ransom for them, and that a proper ransom, if that his life were of any price, and given as such. For a ransom is properly nothing else but some thing of price given by way of redemption, to buy or purchase that which is detained, or given for the releasing of that which is enthralled. But it is most evident, that the life of Christ was laid down as a price; neither is it more certain that He died, than that He bought us: Ye are bought with a price, saith the Apostle (1 Cor. vi. 20; vii. 23), and it is the Lord who bought us (2 Pet. ii. 1), and the price which He paid was His blood; for we are not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ (1 Pet. i. 18, 19). And as that blood was precious, so was it a full and perfect satisfaction. For as the gravity of the offence of the sin is augmented according to the dignity of the person offended and injured by it, so the value, price, and dignity of that which is given by way of compensation, is raised according to the dignity of the person making the satisfaction. God is of infinite Majesty, against whom we have sinned, and Christ is of the same Divinity, Who gave His life a ransom for sinners: for God hath purchased his Church with His own blood (Acts xx. 28). Although therefore God be said to remit our sins by which we were captivated, yet He is never said to remit the price, without which we had never been redeemed; neither can He be said to have remitted it, because He did require it and receive it.

But Christ taking upon Him the nature of Man, and offering Himself a sacrifice for sin, giveth that unto God for, and instead of, the eternal death of man, which is more valuable and acceptable unto God than that death could be, and so maketh a sufficient compensation and full satisfaction for the sins of man: which God accepting becometh reconciled unto us, and, for the punishment which Christ endured, taketh off our obligation to eternal punishment. Thus man who violated, by sinning, the law of God, and by that violation offended God, and was thereby obliged to undergo the punishment due unto the sin, and to be inflicted by the wrath of God, is, by the price of the most precious blood of Christ, given and accepted in full compensation and satisfaction for the punishment which was due, restored unto the favour of God, who being thus satisfied, and upon such satisfaction reconciled, is faithful and just to take off all obligation unto punishment from the sinner; and in this act of God consisteth the forgiveness of sins. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. x. See also above on Matt. xx. 28, and on 1 Cor. vi. 20. Heb.

- το μαρτύριον καιροίς ίδίοις] the Testimony in His own season, that is, 'Christ gave Himself a ransom for all in the fulness of time '—when the long-expected season had arrived, and Christ came and fulfilled the Law, by offering Himself on the Cross for the sins of the world. (Eph. i. 10. Gal. iv. 4. Heb. ix. 11.)

This sentence does not seem to have been fully understood, in consequence of a non-apprehension of that to which the

St. Paul is vindicating himself and his Ministry from the charges of the false Teachers, especially the Judaizers (see i. 5-10), alleging that he disparaged the Levitical Law.

He shows, here and above, that the Gospel which he preaches is the fulfilling of the Law, and that they who did not receive it, and who opposed his preaching, did not understand the Law.

He now uses a word, Μαρτύριον, Testimony, familiar to Jewish ears, especially to readers of the Pentateuch in the LXX, where it is found about thirty times, and signifies the many where it is found about thirty times, and signifies the Firsty (edhnth), "Testimony," i. e. of the Holy of Holies. See Exod. xvi. 34; xxv. 16. 21, 22; xxvi. 33, 34. Lev. xvi. 13. Num. vii. 89. The Tables of the Law were "The Testimony." The Tabernacle was called "the Tabernacle of the Testimony," the Ark was "the Ark of the Testimony." See Acts vii. 44. Rev. xv. 5; and note above, on Exod. xv. 16. 2 Kings xi. 12.

This word, "the Testimony," added to these holy things, signified that they were Witnesses between God and the people, and have Testimont to come father. Placeting of which they were and bore Testimony to some future Blessing, of which they were shadows and types, and which testified of Christ, especially in His Mediatorial Office, fulfilling the Law, and reconciling God and Man, by a perfect Obedience, active, and passive, both in Life and Death. See 1 Cor. x. 1-11. Col. ii. 17; and cp. Mather on the Types, pp. 406-412.

The word Μαρτύριον would suggest to Timothy, by birth a Hellenistic Jew, and to Asiastic Jews and Jewish Christians, a view of the solemn scenery of the Holy of Holies, its Ark, its Mercy-seat, its Tables of the Covenant, its Aaronic Rod, the badge of the Levitical Priesthood.

The Apostle, therefore, here intimates that the Redemption made by the Blood of Christ was the True Testimony, which was reserved for its full revelation in its own appointed season, Kaiροις ίδίοις. Cp. Eph. i. 10, είς οἰκονομίαν τοῦ πληρώματος τῶν

The Doctrine of the Atonement made by the blood of Christ, the only Mediator between God and Man, the true High Triest, Who is gone into the Holy of Holies with His Own Blood (see Heb. ix. 11. 23, 24), having perfectly fulfilled both the Tables of the Commandments, and who is the Faithful and True Mάρτυs, or Witness (Rev. i. 5; iii. 14); this doctrine is not (as the Judaizers allege) any new doctrine, preached by me in contravention of the Law, or in-disparagement of it, but it is the very heart and kernel of the Law; it was enshrined within the Veil, in the inmost recesses of the Sacred Oracle where God's Presence rested, the Holy of Holies; it was acted typically, year by year, by the High Priest, entering into that Oracle on the Day of Atonement (Lev. xvi. 2), and is now declared by us, the Apostles, in its own appointed season to the World.

This truth was signified by the rending of the Veil of the Temple at the Crucifixion, which showed that the office of the typical "Testimony" was then finished. (Matt. xxvii. 51.)

The above Interpretation of the present text is confirmed by other passages in St. Paul's Epistles, where he teaches that the ministrations of "the Tabernacle of the Testimony," especially of the Holy of Holics and of "the Ark of the Testimony," were figurative witnesses of Christ. See below, Rev. xv. 5.

Thus he represents the Veil, through which the High Priest passed into the Holy of Holics, as a type of Christ's Flesh (Heb. x. 20); and in Rom. iii. 25 (a passage which illustrates the present text) he says, that we are justified freely through the απολύτρωσις, or redemption, that is, by Christ Jesus, Whom God set forth as an iλαστήριον, or Propitation, through faith in His Blood; and he says, that this plan of Justification was testified (μαρτυρουμένη) by the Law and the Prophets (Rom. iii. 21).

7. είς δ] to which Evangelical Testimony I was appointed a Procedure and an Apoctle.

Preacher and an Apostle. The Jewish Priests were appointed by God as Ministers of the Levitical Testimony, which was figurative and typical, manuductory and preparatory, to Christ; but I am appointed a Minister of the True Testimony, Christ Himself, ful filling the Law by His perfect Obedience and by the sacrifice of Himself.

8 8 Βούλομαι οὖν προσεύχεσθαι τοὺς ἄνδρας ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ, ἐπαίροντας ὁσίους g Ps. 134. 2. χείρας χωρὶς ὀργῆς καὶ διαλογισμοῦ· <sup>9 h</sup> ὧσαύτως καὶ γυναίκας ἐν καταστολῆ Mal. 1. 11. <sub>John 4. 21.</sub> κοσμίω μετὰ αἰδοῦς καὶ σωφροσύνης κοσμεῖν έαυτὰς, μὴ ἐν πλέγμασιν,  $\mathring{\eta}_{1}^{h \, { m Tit.} \, 2.3-5.}$ χρυσφ, ή μαργαρίταις, ή ίματισμώ πολυτελεί, 10 άλλα, δ πρέπει γυναιξίν έπαγγελλομέναις θεοσέβειαν, δι' έργων άγαθων.

λλομέναις θεοσέβειαν, δι' ἔργων ἀγαθῶν. <sup>11 i</sup> Γυνὴ ἐν ἡσυχία μανθανέτω ἐν πάση ὑποταγῆ· <sup>12</sup> γυναικὶ δὲ διδάσκειν οὐκ <sup>Eph. 5, 27</sup>. <sup>21 i</sup> Γυνὴ ἐν ἡσυχία μανθανέτω ἐν πάση ὑποταγῆ· <sup>12</sup> γυναικὶ δὲ διδάσκειν οὐκ <sup>Eph. 5, 27</sup>.  $\epsilon$ πιτρέπω, οὐδ $\epsilon$  αὐ $\theta$ εντεῖν ἀνδρ $\delta$ ς, ἀλλ' εἶναι ἐν ἡσυχία.  $\epsilon$  'Αδ $\epsilon$  'Αδ $\epsilon$  γὰρ πρ $\epsilon$  τος  $\epsilon$  2.18, 22.  $\epsilon$  τος 1.10, 8, 9 ἐπλάσθη, εἶτα Εὖα. 14 1 Καὶ ᾿Αδὰμ οὐκ ἠπατήθη, ἡ δὲ γυνὴ ἐξαπατηθεῖσα ἐν ½ Cor. 11. 3.

8. ἐν παντὶ τόπω] in every place, not only in synagogues and the Temple, but now, when the Veil has been taken away, and the "true Testimony" has been revealed, in His own due season, in the sacrifice of Christ,-in all places, according to His Own Prophecy. See John iv. 21-23; and as the Prophets themselves witnessed, Mal. i. 11. Cp. Chrys., Theodoret.

- ἐπαίροντας δσίους χεῖρας] lifting up holy hands. So St. Paul's contemporary, S. Clement, writes to the Corinthians (c. 29), προσέλθωμεν αὐτῷ ἐν δσιότητι ψυχῆς ἀγνὰς καὶ ἀμιάντους χεῖρας αἴροντες πρὸς αὐτόν.

Here is a haly work enjoined to all men the work of Here is a holy work enjoined to all men,—the work of Prayer. This is a function of that Priesthood which appertains to all, and which all ought to discharge. Cp. 1 Pet. ii. 5, and —  $\chi \omega \rho ls \ \delta \rho \gamma \hat{\eta} s$ ] without wrath. Matt. v. 23. Do not cherish wrath against the heathen because they are your enemies, and may be tyrants and persecutors-but pray for them. Christ died for them. He died for all.

διαλογισμοῦ] doubting and disputing. James i. 6.

9. &σαύτως και γυναικας] in like manner women also. Elz. has τὰς before γυναικας, but the preponderance of authority is against it. The sense is, As I have directed men to lift up holy hands in prayer in every place, putting aside wrath and doubting (which are internal affections of the mind, and putting on the inward ornaments of faith and love), so, in like manner, I command women to attire themselves in decent apparel, with modesty and self-control.

These directions for Women have special reference to their deportment in the public assemblies of the Church, as appears from vv. 11, 12; and are to be compared with the similar precepts in the first Epistle to the Corinthians. (1 Cor. xi. 3-10; xiv. 34-36.) Doubtless, the women of Ephesus needed such precepts no less than those of Corinth.

In the words ωσαύτως και γυναϊκας, in like manner women also, there is, further, a declaration of the blessed truth, that, in Christ Jesus, Women as well as Men are admitted to be fellowmembers, fellow-worshippers, fellow-heirs of salvation. no separate " Court of the Women" in the Christian Church, as there was in the Jewish Temple. In Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female, but ye are all one in Him. (Gal. iii. 28.)

But let not Woman presume on her newly acquired privileges in the Gospel. Rather let her show her thankfulness for them by reverence and modesty, especially in the public assemblies of the Church of Christ.

It is not easy to represent the several words here used by equivalent ones in English.  $K\alpha\tau\alpha\sigma\tau\delta\lambda\eta$  is 'vestitus compositus et demissus,' the staid and sober attire of modesty, as distinguished from the loose and flowing robes, the flimsy, fluttering costume which betrays the opposite character.

This word  $\kappa \alpha \tau \alpha \sigma \tau \sigma \lambda \eta$  is found only once in the New Testament, and once only in LXX, Isa lxi. 3, where it describes the robe of the redeemed. The uncompounded form  $\sigma \tau \sigma \lambda \eta$ , long robe, is found in Mark xii. 38, and is applied to the dress of Angels (Mark xvi. 5), and to the long white robe of Christ's Righteousness in which the Saints are invested. (Rev. vi. 11; vii. 9. 13.) The preposition κατὰ (in κατα-στολή) gives the sense of settled adjustment (compositio) of dress, and also of matronly demission of a long robe reaching down to the feet. See Horat. Sat. i. 1. 71 and 99, "Ad talos stola demissa." Cp. 1 Cor. xi. 4,  $\kappa \alpha \tau \dot{\alpha}$   $\kappa \epsilon \phi \alpha \lambda \dot{\eta} s \ \dot{\epsilon} \chi \omega \nu$ , and Theophyl. here, who says that the Apostle uses the word  $\kappa \alpha \tau \alpha \sigma \tau o \lambda \dot{\eta}$  to show that women should be covered by their attire, and not immodestly exposed.

Alδώs, never used by LXX, and only twice in N. T.-here and Heb. xii. 28, signifies that inner grace of reverence (ἐντροπὴ) 'verecundia,' especially self-reverence, which shrinks and recoils from any thing unseemly and impure.

Σωφροσύνη is that soundness of mind which regulates and

- λέγω] Elz. adds ἐν Χριστῷ, which is not supported by the controls all inordinate desires, and exercises a dignified restraint best authorities. on the actions and deportment, and is defined in I Macc. iv. 31 as ἐπικράτεια τῶν ἐπιθυμιῶν. Alδàs is to the heart and spirit what σωφροσύνη is to the mind, or intellectual faculty; hence Thucyd. (i. 84), ald as  $\sigma\omega\phi\rho\sigma\sigma\sigma\nu\eta s$  the force  $\mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\chi\epsilon\iota$ : and the Author of 1 Macc. iv. 31 says that the reasoning faculty  $(\lambda \sigma\gamma\iota\sigma\mu\delta s)$ restrains all appetites which interfere with σωφροσύνη: and Xenophon (Mem. ii.) speaks of the eyes being κεκοσμημένα αἰδοῖ, τὸ δὲ σχῆμα σωφροσύνη. Cp. Abp. Trench, Synonyms N. T. § xx. p. 81, and Wetstein here.

The word σωφροσύνη was rendered "shamefastnesse" (a word akin to stedfastness, and showing that genuine modesty does not merely cause a temporary blush in the face, but is fast rooted in the soul), by the English Translators, in the Original Edition of the Authorized Version of 1611, and that word has been altered in later editions into shamefacedness. This (as Dean Trench has observed, p. 81) is to be regretted. See also the

This present Chapter is read by the Church of England as an Evening Lesson of Nov. 14; and it is a remarkable coincidence, that the words shamefaced and shamefacedness (αἰσχύνη) occur three times in the Proper Lesson of the Morning of the same day; viz. Ecclus. xli. 16 bis, and 24, and in those places also the Original Edition of the Authorized Version, A.D. 1611, has "shame-fast" and "shame-fastnesse," which have been altered in our later copies, of that Version, to "shamefaced" and " shamefacedness."

- ἐν πλέγμασιν, ἡ χρυσῷ, ἡ μαργαρίταιs] Cp. 1 Pet. iii. 3; and Augustine, Serm. 161; and S. Jerome (Epist. Marcellæ): "Solent splendere gemmis, aurum portare cervicibus et auribus perforatis rubri maris pretiosissima grana suspendere."

This word πλέγμασιν is rendered by "broided hair" in the Original Edition of the English Authorized Version of 1611. In some later reprints of that Version the word "broided," i. e. plaited, has been supplanted by "broidered."

12. διδάσκειν οὐκ ἐπιτρέπω] I do not suffer to teach. See

13. 'Αδάμ γάρ πρώτος] For Adam was first formed, and then Eve. St. Paul, as usual, goes back to first principles. As in the First Epistle to the Corinthians, in his discourse on female attire in Church Assemblies, and in his correction of the abuses which prevailed at Corinth in this respect, he had reverted to the bistory of the Creation itself, and to the consequent relation of Man to Woman; and in that Discourse had proceeded to argue the question on the ground of the Second Creation in the Birth of the Second Adam. Cp. on 1 Cor. xi. 4-12. So here; On the spiritual sense of that history, see notes on Gen. ii. 21-23.

14. 'Αδὰμ οὐκ ἡπατήθη] Adam was not deceived by the Serpent, as Eve was (2 Cor. xi. 3), nor did he pluck the fruit from the tree, as she did; but she first ate it, and gave it to him, and he received it from her hand. (Gen. iii. 6.) Theodoret.

St. Paul, however, says, that, "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all, even over them who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression" (Rom. v. 12-14); but it is not without reason that the Apostle says that Adam was not deceived; for Eve received as true that which the Serpent said; but Adam would not be separated from partnership with his wife, even in sin, therefore he was not less guilty than she was; indeed, he sinned knowingly and willingly. Therefore St. Paul does not say that Adam did not sin,—but he says that Adam was not deceived, and so both were not "credendo decepti, sed ambo peccando sunt capti, et diaboli laqueis implicati." Augustine (de Civ. Dei, xiv. 11). See also Aug. in Ps. lxxxiii.

- ἐξαπατηθεῖσα] So A, D*, F, G, Lach., Tisch., Alf., Ellicott. Elz. has ἀπατηθεῖσα.

— ἐν παραβάσει γέγονε] hath become, and still is, in the transgression; facta est, et nunc manet, in prævaricatione. On the sense of the perfect tense, see v. 5.

m Tit. 2, 12, παραβάσει γέγονε. 15 Σωθήσεται δὲ διὰ τῆς τεκνογονίας, ἐὰν μείνωσιν ἐν πίστει καὶ ἀγάπη καὶ ἁγιασμῷ " μετὰ σωφροσύνης.

15. Σωθήσεται δὲ διὰ τῆς τεκνογονίας] Though woman was deceived by the Serpent, and plucked the fruit of the forbidden tree, and gave it to her husband, and so became involved, and is still involved, in transgression, yet she shall be saved by means of the child-bearing, if they (i.e. women generally) abide in faith

By the words 'the child-bearing' (observe the definite article "the"), we are to understand the child-bearing of Christ by the Blessed Virgin; for she, by giving birth to the Saviour, was the means of salvation to women.

It was objected by some, indeed by Theophylact himself, to this interpretation, that it was inconsistent with what follows,where the Apostle says, if they remain in faith; words which the objectors to the interpretation supposed erroneously to mean, if the children remain in faith.

But it is now generally allowed by the best Expositors, that the word they refers to women. From the yeneric singular  $\gamma \nu \nu \dot{\eta}$  (woman), the plural  $\gamma \nu \nu a \hat{\iota} \kappa \epsilon s$  (women) is to be supplied, as a the plant γυναίκες (women) is to be supplied, as a nominative, before μείνωσιν. See Winer, § 58, p. 458, who says that the whole sex, womankind, is contained in γυνή. Cp. p. 555; and Vorst. (de Hebrais. N. T. p. 367); and see a similar usage in this Epistle, v. 4, μανθανέτωσαν, which confirms this interpretation; and there is a like ramification from the singular into the plural in Rom. iii. 1, 2.

The ancient interpretation, therefore, mentioned by Theophylact, which seems to have suffered unjustly from the above objection, deserves to be reconsidered;

In the Ancient Catena (recently published by Dr. Cramer, p. 22) we find this early interpretation thus clearly stated: "The whole female sex, and even the whole race of mankind, is saved through Christ, born of a Woman, according to the flesh, if they (i. e. women) abide in faith and love, and in sanctification with modesty; πίστεύσασαι γὰρ εἶs τὸν Χριστὸν, καὶ ἔργων προνοη-σάμεναι ἀγαθῶν σωθήσονται."

This newly-recovered testimony is confirmatory of that interpretation, which appears to rest on strong and satisfactory grounds. For it is to be observed,

That St. Paul in this passage is speaking of the duties of Women, especially with regard to apparel and deportment in religious assemblies. He had already treated that subject in his First Epistle to the Corinthians (1 Cor. xi. 8—12), and there, as we have seen, he argues the matter, with a reference

(1) To the Creation, and (2) To the Incarnation.

Here, in this passage, he has referred, in v. 13, to the First Creation of Man in the First Adam. What would be more likely, than that he therefore should now proceed here also to speak of the Second Creation of Man in the Second Adam,- namely, the Incarnation of Christ?

He had spoken of the Fall of Man, and had stated that this was due to the subtlety of the Serpent, deceiving the Woman, and working the woe of all mankind by the instrumentality of the Woman. Therefore, it was very natural, that the blessed Apostle should next proceed to vindicate and assert God's power and love, and to show that God triumphs over Satan even by those means which Satan himself uses against God and man; and to minister some comfort to Woman in her sorrow and her shame, by referring to the primeval prophecy delivered at the Fall (to which he has just been referring), and pre-announcing that the seed of the Woman would bruise the Serpent's head (Gen. iii. 15); and by suggesting the consideration that Almighty God had used the same instrumentality, that of Woman, for overcoming Satan, which Satan had used for overcoming Man, and that in His infinite love, God had saved mankind, and would save even Woman berself, by the same agency as that by which the Tempter had worked her woe.

Thus (as the Apostle has just said), though Woman had been deceived by Satan, and had plucked the fruit of the forbidden tree, and had eaten it herself, and had also given it to her husband, and he ate it; and so Woman had brought sin and woe on her husband, herself, and her children; and though she had received as her punishment and curse for her sin, the sentence from God that she should bring forth children in pain and sorrow (Gen. iii. 16), yet by God's mercy, Woman, who had been chosen by Satan as his instrument for bringing ruin on man, had been chosen also by God as His instrument for vanquishing Satan and restoring Man. "Behold, a Viryin shall conceive and bear a Son, and call His name Emmanuel. To us a child is born, to us a Son is given, and His name shall be called the Mighty God, the Prince of Peace." (Isa. vii. 14; ix. 6.)

Here was comfort indeed; that Womankind should be saved even by that very thing which had been pronounced to be the means of her chastisement, -namely, by child-bearing, -that she should be saved through 'the child-bearing;' that is, through the blessed child-bearing of the promised Seed of the Woman, the Second Adam, Christ Jesus, conceived by the Holy Ghost, and the Saviour of Mankind,-the Child of the Virgin-Mother, and the Father of the New Race; if they do not yield to the allurements of the Serpent, their Ghostly Enemy, but abide stedfast in faith and love, with sanctification and modesty.

In support also of the above interpretation, we may cite the words of Irenæus (iv. 40); "Almighty God had compassion on mankind, and threw back the enmity of the Enemy, and abolished the enmity which existed between Man and Himself. As Scripture says, 'I will put enmity between thee and the woman,' &c. (Gen. iii. 15.) Our Lord absorbed this enmity into Himself by being made Man of the Seed of the Woman, and so bruised the Serpent's head." And Irenaus adds (v. 21): "The Enemy would not have been completely routed, unless He Who routed him had been born of a Woman. For the Serpent overcame Man at the beginning by means of Woman."

To which may be added the following, from a more recent

Expositor:

"The Woman, that is, Eve (v. 14), being deceived, was in the transgression; that is, was first guilty of eating the forbidden fruit, but rescued from the punishment by the promised Seed,that is, by her child-bearing,-by the Messias, which was to be born of a woman, and so to redeem that nature, which He assumed; but this not absolutely, but on condition of faith, and charity, and holiness, and sobriety, and continuing in all these; and this advantage belonging not only to the first Woman, Eve, but to all her posterity, in respect of whom it is that the number is changed from the Singular to the Plural, she, as the representative of all women, had the promise made to her (Gen. iii. 15); but the condition must be performed by all others as well as her, or else the benefit will not redound to them. And this is the most literal importance of the διά also, being saved by this, as by a means of all women's and men's redemption and salvation.' Dr. Hammond. See also Bp. Ellicott's note here.

Thus, in fine, where sin and sorrow abounded, grace and joy much more abound; thus Woman is restored in Christ to her blessed position as the helpmate of man, and she who in the hands of Satan had been made the means of Death to all, is made by God's overruling Love, to be the means of endless Life to all in Christ.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE to the THIRD and following Chapters of this Epistle.

I. THE Apostle now proceeds to give direction to Timothy concerning the Government of the Church at Ephesus; a Church planted by St. Paul himself in the capital of Asia, where he had preached for three years,—and where, according to the usage which St. Paul had followed from the beginning, ordaining Presbyters in every Church (Acts xiv. 23), many πρεσβύτεροι had already been ordained to be ἐπίσκοποι, or overseers of the flock of Christ, which He purchased with His own blood. (Acts xx. 17. 28.)

He first states to Timothy the qualifications requisite for those who are to be appointed by him to the office of  $\epsilon \pi l \sigma \kappa \circ \pi \circ \iota$

(vv. 2-7).

Secondly, he specifies the criteria which are to guide him in the choice and ordination of Διάκονοι (vv. 8-13). St. Paul tells him, that he sends him these directions in writing, in order that he may know how to demean himself in " the House of God, which is the Church of the Living God."

He next proceeds to deliver some instructions as to his own teaching and superintendence of the teaching of others (iv. 6-11); and assures him that, notwithstanding his youth (v. 12; cp. 2 Tim. ii. 22), if he follows these directions, and stirs up the spiritual grace which was conveyed to him by the laying on of the hands of the Presbytcry, and of those of the Apostle himself (v. 14; cp. 2 Tim. i. 6), and gives attendance to reading, to exhortation, and to doctrine, he will be a pattern to others, and will save himself and those who hear him (iv. 12-16).

He then offers some counsels as to the order which he is to pursue with regard to the Widows of the Church. He describes the qualifications of those who are to be admitted into the class of Widows maintained by the alms of the faithful; and specifies those who are to be rejected (v. 9-16). He instructs him in the measures he is to adopt in assigning stipends to Πρεσβύτεροι (v. 17), and in hearing accusations against them (v. 19), and commands him to pronounce public censures, in the presence of all, on those who are guilty of sin (v. 20); and sums up all with a solemn charge to Timothy to execute his office without partiality (v. 21, and see vi. 14. 20).

ΙΙΙ. 1 a Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος, εἴ τις ἐπισκοπῆς ὀρέγεται, καλοῦ ἔργου ἐπιθυμεῖ. a Acts 20. 28.

Here, then, we see Timothy invested with solemn spiritual functions in the Church of God in the city of Ephesus, the capital We behold him entrusted with authority to govern the Church, to regulate her affairs; to exhort and rebuke others, Laity and Clergy, and particularly to exercise a discretionary authority in the appointment of two distinct orders of Clergy, called respectively  ${}^{2}\text{E}\pi (\sigma \kappa \sigma \pi o \iota)$  and  $\Delta \iota d\kappa \sigma \nu o \iota$  (iii. 2—13).

Here, therefore, we have the following system of Church Regimen and Polity presented to us by the Holy Spirit, speaking by the Apostle St. Paul, for the government of the Church at Ephesus, in three grades and orders, as follows:

1st. Timothy, exercising authority over all;

2ndly. Ἐπίσκοποι, and 3rdly. Διάκονοι.

II. If we now proceed to St. Paul's Second Epistle to Timothy, we hear the Apostle exhorting him to stir up the spiritual gift which was in him by the laying on of the Apostle's hands (2 Tim. i. 6); and to confide to faithful men, who should be able to teach others, those things which he had received from the Apostle (2 Tim. ii. 2); and to preach the Word, and to reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine, and to do the work of an Evangelist, and to fulfil his ministry. (2 Tim. iv. 2. 5.)

III. If, also, we examine the Epistle to Titus, whom St. Paul placed at Crete, as he had placed Timothy at Ephesus, we find the same system of Church Regimen and Polity established there.

He reminds Titus that he had left him in Crete, that he might set in order the things which the Apostle himself had not been able to arrange; and that he should ordain Presbyters in every city, as the Apostle had directed him (Tit. i. 5); and then he gives him instructions as to the qualifications of these persons who were to be appointed as Επίσκοποι, or overseers, of others. (Tit. i. 7).

He tells him, that the mouths of false teachers, whom he describes, must be stopped (v. 11), and that it is his duty to rebuke them sharply (v. 13).

He gives him directions for the regulation of the conduct of old and young; and charges him to rebuke with all authority (ii. 15), and teaches how to deal with heretics (iii. 10).

IV. If we now take another step in advance, and proceed to the APOCALYPSE, or Book of Revelation, written by the last surviving Apostle, the beloved Disciple, St. John, we see there a view of the spiritual regimen of that Church over which Timothy was set by St. Paul, that of Ephesus.

In the Book of Revelation, Christ Himself appears, and speaks to a Person who is called the Angel of the Church of

Ephesus. (Rev. ii. 1-6.)

Christ, the Divine Head of the Church, recognizes that Person as the Representative of that Church, and addresses him as such. He regards him as responsible for it, and remonstrates with him, as having authority to try those who call themselves Apostles and are not; and he calls on him to repent, and to do his first works; and if he fails to do so, He threatens him with a removal of his candlestick. (Rev. ii. 1-5.)

V. If we extend our view to the other six Churches of Asia, as displayed in the Book of Revelation, we see each of them like Ephesus, which contained within it many Presbyters (Acts xx. 17. 28), having one Person set over them, and called an Angel (i. 20); and we find that in each case, Christ addresses that Person as the Representative of each Church respectively, and as accountable for its spiritual state. And it may be observed, as a striking proof of this personal responsibility of the Angel for the spiritual condition of his own Church, that in no instance does the epithet, good or bad, assigned to the Church by Christ in the Apocalypse, agree in gender with Church, but it is made to agree in all cases with Angel. (See Rev. iii. 15. 17.)

VI. On the whole, then, we see the following characteristics of the Regimen of the Apostolic Churches exhibited in Holy 1st, A single person, such as Timothy at Ephesus, and Titus in Crete, in St. Paul's age, appointed by the Apostle himself to govern the Churches founded at those places.

The concurrent testimony of all Christian Antiquity is expressed by Eusebius (iii. 4), when he says, "Timothy was the first who received the Bishopric of Ephesus, and Titus was the first who was appointed Bishop of Crete."

In like manner we see the Angel of Ephesus, and the Angels severally of each of the other six Asiatic Churches in St. John's age, holding the first place in the Church, with principal authority over all its members.

We see, 2ndly, Πρεσβύτεροι called also επίσκοποι, as being Overseers of their respective flocks. 3rdly, Διάκονοι, Deacons.

VII. It would be profitless to engage in verbal discussion concerning the name given to the office of the Person, who, as Timothy or Titus did, occupied the highest place in each of these Churches, having been put there by Apostolic Authority, and who is addressed as the Representative of that Church by Christ Himself in the Apocalypse. The thing itself is plainly apparent in Holy Scripture, and as such is to be revered as the Ordinance of God.

VIII. The consentient voice and concurrent practice of the Church of Christ, from the times of the Apostles for many centuries in succession, illustrates and confirms this result; and shows that Church Government by single Persons, each holding chief authority in his own particular Church, and having two distinct orders of Ministers under him, called Presbyters and Deacons, is that form of Ecclesiastical Regimen which is most agreeable to the Word of God.

On this subject the reader may consult the Preface to the Ordinal of the Church of England, in which it is said, that "it is evident unto all men diligently reading the Holy Scriptures and ancient Authors, that from the Apostles' time there ever have been these Orders of Ministers in Christ's Church, Bishops, Priests, and Deacons:" and Hooker, V. Ixxvii. 9; VII. v. 2-8, and VII. vi. Saravia, de Minist. Eccles. p. 29. Bp. Bilson, Perpetual Government of Christ's Church, chap. v. p. 89, and chap. xiii. p. 348 (ed. Oxf. 1842). Bp. Andrewes' Correspondence with Peter Moulin, Lond. ed. 1629. Dr. Barrow, Serm. i. vi. vol. iii. p. 112; and Bp. Pearson, Vind. Ign., part i. cap. xi., and part ii. cap. xiii.; and Minor Works, ed. Churton, vol. i. pp. 271-286, and vol. ii. pp. 369-385; where he says that "St. Paul, in his last Apostolic journey, after his first imprisonment at Rome, and shortly before his second imprisonment and martyrdom, set certain persons, severally, over the Presbyteries which he had established; and that he invested those persons with that authority and power which was afterwards claimed and exercised by the several Bishops who succeeded in the room of these several Thus Timothy was set over the Presbyters of Ephesus, with authority to govern that Church and rule the Presbyters, and rebuke them, if need were, and to ordain whom he might find needful and worthy to be ordained. Timothy had received spiritual grace by the laying on of St. Paul's hands, and was qualified thereby to perform this office of Ordination. The same remarks apply to Titus in Crete. Similarly, St. John, in the Apocalypse, writes to the seven Angels of the seven Churches in Asia. He addresses each Angel separately, and considers him accountable for all, whether good or bad, that exists in his own Church respectively. We assert, that these Angels of the Churches were individual persons, and special Rulers of their own several Churches. Each of these had been ruling his Church for some years before the date of the Apocalypse. And each of these is called a Star-the Star of his own Church. (Rev. i. 16-20.) The Angels, or Rulers of the Churches of Asia, were single Persons, and were not bodies of men; they were asteres, not asterismi" (Bp. Pearson). They were Apostolic Stars, and not Presbyteral Constellations.

See also the Treatises of Chillingworth and Dr. W. Hey on this subject, in the late Dr. Wordsworth's Christian Institutes, iii. pp. 186—221, where a translation will be found of Bp. Andrewes' Correspondence on Episcopacy with P. Moulin, iii. pp. 222—266; and Prof. Blunt, Early Fathers, Lect. vii. on the Testimony of the Ancient Church to Episcopacy.

Ch. III. 1.  $\hat{\epsilon}\pi\iota\sigma\kappa\sigma\hat{\eta}$ s] oversight. The word is chosen on account of its generality. St. Paul does not say  $\tau\hat{\eta}$ s  $\hat{\epsilon}\pi\iota\sigma\kappa\sigma\hat{\eta}$ s, and he uses the word  $\hat{\epsilon}\pi\iota\sigma\kappa\sigma\hat{\eta}$ ,—a general term, in a spiritual sense, to describe,

(1) The office of superintending a flock; and so applied, as here, to a Presbyter, or Pastor of a Church. Cp. Acts xx. 28. Phil. i. 1. Tit. i. 7. 1 Pet. v. 2.

(2) The office of superintending Pastors themselves; and characterizing the work of an Apostle. Acts i. 20, where see note.

Hence (3) though doubtless in the present passage St. Paul, in writing to Timothy, the Chief Pastor of the Church of Ephesus, and in pointing out to him the qualifications which he himself is to require in those persons who are to be ordained by him to the  $\ell\pi\iota\sigma\kappa\sigma\eta$ , or oversight of a flock,—and of whom, when ordained, he, Timothy himself, is to have the  $\ell\pi\iota\sigma\kappa\sigma\eta$ , or oversight,—is speaking of Overseers of a flock, yet St. Paul's language applies with not less force, but rather with greater cogency, to those who are raised from the ἐπισκοπή of a flock to the Apostolic Office b Tit. 1. 6. ch. 5. 9.

2 οδυ του επίσκοπου ανεπίληπτου είναι, μιας γυναικός ανδρα, νηφάλιου, (ἐπισκοπή, Acts i. 20) which Timothy himself held, viz. the ἐπισκοπή of Pastors as well as of their Flocks.

(4) It is, therefore, with no impropriety (as has been sometimes alleged) that the Church of England, in her Office for the Consecration of Bishops, adopts these words as containing suitable admonitions to those who are to be promoted from the ἐπισκοπή of a flock to the chief ἐπισκοπή in the Church.

Theodoret well says,-Although the Apostle applies these directions particularly here to the case of Presbyters, yet they who are Bishops should be the first to observe them, inasmuch as they have a higher place, and therefore greater responsibilities

Hence we see, that as early as in the third century these words were applied to describe the duties of Bishops; as in the following language of Archelaus (Bishop of Mesopotamia, A.D. 278, in Routh, R. S. iv. p. 185): "Appellati sumus ex Salvatoris desiderio Christiani, sicut universus orbis terrarum testimonium perhibet, atque Apostoli edocent; sed et optimus Architectus ejus, fundamentum nostrum, id est Ecclesiæ, Paulus, posuit, et legem tradidit, ordinatis Ministris, Presbyteris et Episcopis in ea; describens per loca singula, quomodo et qualiter oporteat Ministros Dei, quales et qualiter fieri Presbyteros, qualesque esse debeant qui Episcopatum desiderant : quæ omnia benè nobis et rectè disposita usque in hodiernum statum suum custodiunt, et permanet apud nos hujus regulæ disciplina." Where Dr. Routh says,—

"Locus notandus de Hierarchiæ Ecclesiasticæ ordine ab Apostolis instituto. Episcopatum, Presbyteros et Ministros tantùm nominat Archelaus, quod Ministrorum, hoc est Diaconorum, nomine omnes infra Presbyteratum ordines antiquisdrinus, lib. 6. Stromatum, p. 667. Tertullianus, de Baptismo, cap. 17. Origenes, Homil. 2, in Hierem. et in Matthæi cap. 19, p. 363". simi Patres comprehendere consueverint, ita Clemens Alexan-

See also next note, and on v. 2.

— καλοῦ ἔργου ἐπιθυμεῖ] he desireth a good work. The Apostle here explains what ἐπισκοπή is, viz. that it is a "nomen Apostle nere explains what  $\epsilon\pi i\sigma\kappa\sigma\pi\eta$  is, viz. that it is a "nomen operis, non honoris; it intelligat non se esse Episcopum, qui præesse dilexerit, non prodesse." And the word itself denotes that "he who is set over others, diligently watches over those over whom he is set." Augustine (de Civ. Dei, vii. 19).

2.  $\tau\delta\nu$   $\epsilon\pi i\sigma\kappa\sigma\sigma\nu$ ] the overseer: the man who is set apart to be an overseer, in the Church. On this use of the article, see John iii. 10; xviii. 10. Cp. Titus i. 7,  $\tau\delta\nu$   $\epsilon\pi i\sigma\kappa\sigma\sigma\nu$ .

This word  $(\epsilon\pi i\sigma\kappa\sigma\sigma\nu)$  is here applied to those who were to

This word (ἐπίσκοπος) is here applied to those who were to be ordained to vatch over a flock. And in this sense it is used Acts xx. 28. Phil. i. 1. Tit. i. 7.

These persons were also called Presbyteri by reason of their age and dignity, and Episcopi on account of this office and work of oversight. Therefore St. Peter says, Πρεσβυτέρους παρακαλῶ δ συμπρεσβύτερος, ποιμάνατε το ποιμνίον, ἐπισκο-ποῦντες μη ἀναγκάστως. 1 Pet. v. 2. See also Theodoret here, who says, that they who, after the death of the Apostles, succeeded the Apostles, and had the chief oversight of Pastors and Churches, did not arrogate to themselves the name of Apostles, although they succeeded to their place, but reverently reserved the name of Apostles for those who had been really Apostles of Christ; and they adopted for themselves the name of Επίσκοποι, and that name was generally assigned to them as their distinctive title in the next age to that of the Apostles.

The sum of the whole matter (says Dr. Bentley) is as

The word 'Επίσκοπος, whose general idea is overseer, was a word in use long before Christianity; a word of universal relation to occonomical, civil, military, naval, judicial, and religious matters. This word was assumed to denote the governing and presiding The Presbyters, therefore, while the persons of the Church. Apostles lived, were Έπίσκοποι, overseers. But the Apostles, in foresight of their approaching martyrdom, selected and approaching martyrdom, selected and approaching martyrdom. pointed their successors in the several cities and communities, as St. Paul did Timothy at Ephesus, and Titus at Crete.

What name were these successors (of the Apostles) to be called by? Not 'Απόστολοι, Apostles; their modesty, as it seems, made them refuse it: they would keep that name proper and sacred to the first extraordinary messengers of Christ, though they really succeeded them in their office, in due part and measure, as the ordinary governors of the Churches. It was agreed, therefore, over all Christendom at once, in the very next generation after the Apostles, to assign and appropriate to them the word Έπίσκοπος, or Bishop. From that time to this, that appellation, which before included a Presbyter, has been restrained to a superior order. Dr. Bentley on Freethinking, p. 136.

Compare the note above on Phil. i. 1.

It clearly appeareth by Holy Scripture that Churches Apostolic did know but three degrees in the power of Ecclesiastical Order; at the first, Apostles, Presbyters, and Deacons; afterwards, instead of Apostles, Bishops. Hooker, V. lxxvii.

"Habemus enumerare eos qui ab Apostolis instituti sunt Episcopi, et successores eorum usque ad nos." S. Iren. iii. 3.
"Edant (sc. hæretici) origines Ecclesiarum suarum, evolvant ordinem Episcoporum suorum ita per successiones ab initio decurrentem, ut primus ille Episcopus aliquem ex Apostolis vel Apostolicis viris habuerit auctorem et antecessorem." Tertullian, Præser. Hæret. 32.

" Episcopi sunt præpositi, qui Apostolis vicaria ordinatione succedunt." S. Cyprian, Ep. 66.

"Omnes Episcopi Apostolorum successores sunt." S. Hieron. Ep. ad Evag. "Apud nos Apostolorum Episcopi locum tenent." Ad Marcellam, Ep. 5. "Patres missi sunt Apostoli, pro Apostolis Filii nati sunt Ecclesiæ, constituti sunt Episcopi." S. Aug. in Ps. xliv. 'Εξ 'Ιακώβου καλ των προειρημένων 'Αποστόλων κατεστάθησαν διαδοχαὶ ἐπισκόπων καὶ πρεσβυτέρων. Epiphan. Hæres. 79.

- μιᾶς γυναικός ἄνδρα] the husband of one wife. (Cp. Tit. i. 6.) These words are best explained by those below in v. 9, Erds ανδρός γυνη, the wife of one husband.

(1) It is clear that those words (ένδς ανδρός γυνή) do not signify the wife of not more than one husband at a time, for they are spoken of a χήρα, or widow, who has no husband at all; but they mean a woman who has not been married more than once.

(2) Since, as we there see, it was required by St. Paul, in the case of women, who were candidates for inscription as Widows in the roll of the Church, that they should not have been married more than once, it need not be matter for surprise, that, in the case of men, who were to be promoted to an  $E\pi i \sigma \kappa o \pi \eta$  in the Church, they who had not contracted two marriages in succession were to be preferred.

(3) This passage was understood in this sense by Origen (3) This passage was understood in this sease by organ (Hom. 17 in Luc.), who says, "Neque Episcopus, nec Presbyter, nec Diaconus, nec vidua possunt esse digami." And in his book, c. Celsum (iii. p. 141), Origen says, that St. Paul, μονόγαμον μάλλον διγάμου αἰρεῖται. And Tertullian (ad Uxorem, c. 7), "Præscriptio Apostoli digamos non sinit præsidere." And so the Fourth Council of Carthage, c. 69, and Epiphan. Hær. 48, and de Fide, p. 465, and Canon. Apostol. xvi., and S. Jerome in Jovinian. I, "Digamus in clerum eligi non potest," and Ambrose, de Offic. i. 50. Cp. Suicer, v. Siyapos. Bingham, iv. 5, and Wetstein here.

But (4) the Church did not consider the words of the Apostle to contain a precept of perpetual and universal obligation. Indeed, in disciplinarian matters of this kind, the Church possesses a discretionary power, which she exercises with careful regard to time and place.

See the remarks of Hooker and Bp. Sanderson quoted above in the note on Acts xv. 20, concerning the Apostolic Decree prescribing abstinence from Blood.

Hence (5) we find it asserted in the recently discovered Treatise of S. Hippolytus, Bishop of Portus, near Rome (Philosophumena, p. 290), that in the time of Callistus, Bishop of Rome, at the beginning of the third century, persons who had married twice, and even three times, began to be admitted to the Diaconate, Priesthood, and Episcopate: Ἐπὶ τούτου ἤρξαντο ἐπίσκοποι, και πρεσβύτεροι, και διάκονοι δίγαμοι και τρίγαμοι καθίστασθαι εἰs κλήρουs. And similar passages may be seen, quoted from Tertulian, in the Editor's volume, "Hippolytus and the Church of Rome," p. 265.

(6) It must also be borne in mind, that there is a great difference between the rules to be observed with regard to the ordination of persons to the priestly office, and the rules to be observed with regard to the same persons when they have been ordained. No one is obliged to enter the priestly office; but no one is able to divest himself of it, when he has entered it. Ordination imprints a seal that is indelible.

Besides, one of the purposes for which Holy Matrimony was ordained by God is, that it should be "a remedy against sin, and to avoid fornication" (1 Cor. vii. 2. 9). It was instituted to be a cure for the passions of that fallen nature with which men are born into the world. And they who forbid Marriage, take away that remedy which is provided by God.

While, therefore, it was deemed requisite to prescribe, that no one who had been twice married should be admitted into the Holy Order of Priesthood, it would by no means follow, that any one, who had been admitted to the Priesthood, should be debarred from contracting a second Marriage.

St. Paul has not dealt with the case of those Ἐπίσκοτοι who σώφρονα, κόσμιον, φιλόξενον, διδακτικὸν, <sup>3 °</sup> μὴ πάροινον, μὴ πλήκτην, ἀλλ' ° 2 Tim. 2. 24. έπιεικη, αμαχον, αφιλάργυρον, 4 d τοῦ ίδίου οἴκου καλώς προϊστάμενον, τέκνα d Tit. 1. 6. έχοντα εν ύποταγή, μετά πάσης σεμνότητος 5 εί δε τις τοῦ ίδίου οἴκου προστήναι οὐκ οἶδε, πῶς ἐκκλησίας Θεοῦ ἐπιμελήσεται;  $6 \, ^{\rm e}$ μὴ νεόφυτον, ἴνα μὴ  $_{\rm e}$  Isa. 14. 12. τυφωθείς εἰς κριμα ἐμπέση τοῦ Διαβόλου. <sup>7 ε</sup> Δει δὲ αὐτὸν καὶ μαρτυρίαν ει cor. 5. 12. καλην έχειν ἀπὸ τῶν ἔξωθεν, ἵνα μη εἰς ὀνειδισμὸν ἐμπέση, καὶ παγίδα τοῦ Διαβόλου.

<sup>8 §</sup> Διακόνους ώσαύτως σεμνούς, μὴ διλόγους, μὴ οἴνω πολλῷ προσέχοντας, ε Αcta 6.3. μη αἰσχροκερδεις, 9 h ἔχοντας τὸ μυστήριον τῆς πίστεως ἐν καθαρᾳ συνειδήσει Εzek. 44. 21. 10 καὶ οὖτοι δὲ δοκιμαζέσθωσαν πρῶτον, εἶτα διακονείτωσαν, ἀνέγκλητοι ὄντες. 2 John 9, 10.

11 Γυναίκας ώσαύτως σεμνάς, μη διαβόλους, νηφαλίους, πιστάς έν πάσι.

12 Διάκονοι ἔστωσαν μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἄνδρες, τέκνων καλῶς προϊστάμενοι καὶ τῶν ἰδίων οἴκων  $^{13}$  ιοί γὰρ καλῶς διακονήσαντες βαθμὸν ἑαυτοῖς καλὸν  $\pi$ ερι- $^{1}$  Matt. 25. 21. Luke 16, 10–12.  $^{10}$  Μεστοῦς  $^{10}$ ποιοθνται, καὶ πολλὴν παρρησίαν ἐν πίστει τῆ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοθ.

lose their wives by death after their ordination to the office of | But it may be inferred from his words in iv. 3 what his judgment would have been concerning those who prohibit another marriage in such a case, and who even prohibit Marriage altogether to Christian Priests.

(7) There were doubtless special reasons for the restriction here imposed on Timothy's choice of persons to be admitted by him to the Priesthood.

The cares of a double family might disqualify a person for learning the duties of the sacred profession; and under the urgent necessities of those days (1 Cor. vii. 26), it was very desirable that the spiritual soldier should be as free as possible from earthly ties.

Besides, the Gentile Christians would be predisposed to expect such immunities in Christian Priests;

The Priests of the Heathen were married but once. "Inter Gentiles, etiam Flamen unius uxoris vir ad sacerdotium admittitur, Flaminissa quoque unius viri uxor eligitur; ad tauri Ægyptii sacra semel maritus assumitur." Jerome (ad Ageruchiam). Should Christians be less strict in their rules on this point than the

(8) On the whole, St. Paul's words may be regarded as an Apostolic precept to Timothy, necessary for those times (cp. Tit. i. 6), and as a prudential counsel for all times; but not as having the force of a command of universal obligation. And, accordingly, as the testimony of many of the Fathers shows, (see particularly Theodoret here, and others cited by Bingham and Suicer.) though they have been made the groundwork of disciplinarian canons of particular Churches, they have never been enforced by any Decree of a General Council of the Universal Church of Christ.

πάροινον] given to excess and violence in wine. Cp. Titus
 7. 'Vinolentum, et violentum.' Παροινία, ἡ ἐκ τοῦ οἴνου υβρις (Hesych.).

- μη πλήκτην] not a striker. Cp. Tit. i. 7. 'Non percussorem' (Vulg.). Τύπης = πλήκτης (Hesych.). ''Non manu promptus ad cædendum, et pugnax.'' Terlullian (de Monogam.

Hence the Emperor Justinian (Novell. 123) says, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ οἰκείαις χεροὶν ἔξεστιν ἐπισκόπω τινὰ πλήττειν. Cp. Coray (on Titus), Atakta ii. p. 300.

This word gives an instructive view of the impulsive vehemence of the Oriental character, by which St. Paul himself was a sufferer at the hands of the Asiatic Jews (Acts xxi. 27. 31), and of the difficulties with which Christianity had to contend in curb-of the difficulties with which Christianity had to contend in curbing its impetuosity. Elz. adds μή αἰσχροκερδῆ.

— ἐπεικῆ] equilable: tempering the rigour of strict Justice, correcting its inaccuracies, and supplying its defects, with the gentleness and fairness of Equily. Ἐπιείκειὰ ἐστιν ἡ δικαίων ἐλάττωσις (Phav.). Cp. Aristot. (Ethic. v. 10); and Phil. iv. 5.

It is not from εἴκω, cedo, but from εικὸς (ἔσικα), "quod decet," ἐπιεικès = πρέπον. (Suid.)

4. τέκνα ἔχοντα] having children in subjection. On the married state of Presbyters, see Polycarp (ad Phil. 12), and Dr. Jacobson's note. p. 526.

Jacobson's note, p. 526.
6. μη νεόφυτον] not a neophyte—a new convert. Cp. Suicer in v. ii. 395.

- τυφωθείς] puffed up like smoke; not burning with the bright pure flame of truth, love, and zeal; but elated, and swollen like a dark cloud of smoke, with vain glory and empty pride. See vi. 4, and note on 2 Tim. iii. 4.

— κρῖμα—τοῦ Διαβόλου] The sentence of condemnation incurred by the devil for pride. Cp. Isa. xiv. 12, and Höoker, I. let them be advanced to the Diaconate.

iv. 3, on the sin and punishment of the fallen Angels, as distinguished from the "elect Angels," v. 21. On the word  $\kappa\rho\hat{\imath}\mu\alpha$ , see Heb. vi. 2, and cp. below, v. 12.

This reference to the case of the fallen Angels, and in v. 21 to the "elect Angels," has a peculiar propriety in an Epistle to to the reference Angels, has a peculiar property in an Epishe to one who, like Timothy himself, filled an office which is called by Christ that of an "Angel of the Church" (Rev. ii. 1).

7. ὀνειδισμόν—καὶ παγίδα τοῦ Διαβόλου] In the former clause St. Paul had directed Timothy not to ordain a novice, lest he should be lifted up by arrogance, and fall into the punishment incurred by the Devil for pride.

He now instructs him that the person chosen ought to have a good report even from the heathen, lest he should sink into contempt, and, in a spirit of recklessness, as one who has no character to lose, should outrage men's opinions, and corrupt their manners, and fall into the snare laid for him by the Devil, namely, that of shameless infamy, by which the Devil entraps men (cp. 2 Tim. ii. 26), and makes them desperate.

8. σεμνούs] worshipful.

— μη αἰσχροκερδεῖs] not covetous of filthy lucre. An appropriate charge with regard to the office of the Deacons as almoners of the Church. See Acts vi. 1, 2.

11. Γυναϊκαs] women appointed to be Deaconesses, whether they be wives of Deacons or not. So Chrys., Theodoret, Theo-phyl., Œcum.

The insertion of this sentence, in the middle of his discourse concerning Deacons, shows (as Theoph. observes) that the Apostle is not speaking of Women generally: and the absence of the Article from yuvaikas indicates that he is not referring only to the wives of Deacons, but is speaking of Deaconesses generally, whether married (see on v. 12) or unmarried.

Such an office, as is here described, was held by Phabe, a deaconess of the Church of Cenchreæ; and therefore probably mentioned first in the list of names in Rom. xvi. 1, where see note. Perhaps Priscilla, the wife of Aquila, was also one of this

See note on Acts xviii. 18.

On account of the official character of these Women, holding, in some respects, a place in the Church co-ordinate to that of Deacons, St. Paul prescribes that their qualifications should cor-respond with those which he has already laid down for Deacons. Hence the word &σαύτως, in like manner, i. e. as I have directed in the case of the Deacons, so I now direct for the Deaconesses. He applies to these Deaconesses the epithets σεμνάς-πιστάς έν πᾶσι, with which we may compare those applied to the Deacons

He had not made any such official addition of Women in connexion with the ἐπίσκοποι mentioned above (vv. 1-7), because the functions of the Episcopi were of a purely spiritual and sacred kind. But the Deacons have a lay element blended with the ecclesiastical in their office (see note on Acts vi. 2); -- an important principle, which needs to be observed in the present times.

12. μιᾶς γυναικός ἄνδρες] husbands of one wife. See v. 2. There was also special need for such a charge in the case of Deacons, having the charge and distribution of the alms of the faithful, and who might be liable to suspicion, and to temptation, if they had large families dependent upon them. 13. of  $\gamma d\rho$  The  $\gamma d\rho$  (for) introduces the reason why he lays so much stress on the duties of Deacons.

βαθμὸν—καλόν] a good degree.
 He had said before (v. 10), let them first be proved, and then k 2 Tim. 2. 20. Eph. 2. 21.

1 John 1, 14. Matt. 3, 16. 1 Pet. 3, 18. Mark 16, 5 Eph. 3, 5, 6.

14 k Ταθτά σοι γράφω, ελπίζων ελθείν πρός σε τάχιον, 15 εαν δε βραδύνω, ίνα είδης πως δεί έν οίκω Θεού άναστρέφεσθαι, ήτις έστιν έκκλησία Θεού ζώντος, στύλος καὶ έδραίωμα τῆς ἀληθείας, 16 1 (καὶ ὁμολογουμένως μέγα ἐστὶ τὸ τῆς εὐσεβείας μυστήριον), δς έφανερώθη έν σαρκὶ, έδικαιώθη έν πνεύματι, ἄφθη άγγέλοις, ἐκηρύχθη ἐν ἔθνεσιν, ἐπιστεύθη ἐν κόσμω, ἀνελήφθη ἐν δόξη.

He now tells Timothy, that they who have served in the office of Deacon well, purchase to themselves a good degree; they have a claim for promotion at thy hand. So Chrys., Theophyl. The word βaθμόs hence became the vox solennis for a degree or order in the Church, whose practice and nomenclature, in this and many other respects, is the best Exponent of the Apostle's

Thus the General Council of Chalcedon (can. 39) says, 'Επίσκοπον είς Πρεσβυτέρου βαθμον φέρειν ίεροσυλία έστίν. See also the numerous examples in Suicer, v. βαθμός.

St. Paul does not call it a higher step, but a good one; for it is not the desire of advancement in honour, but in means of usefulness, that he propounds. So v. 1, καλοῦ ἔργου ἐπιθυμεῖ.

If it be said, as it has been, that the reference to ecclesiastical promotion would be at variance with the tenour of an Apostle's sentiments and language, the same objection might be taken more forcibly to the mention of double pay to the Presbyters in v. 17. But the fact is, St. Paul's language to Timothy, in both cases, is designed to instruct him what course he himself, as a Bishop, is to adopt in recognition of the just claims of meritorious Deacons and Presbyters; and is not intended to inform Presbyters and Deacons what they ought to desire.

Indeed, having stated their claims on their earthly spiritual Superior for his guidance, he directs their thoughts heavenward, and lifts up their eyes and minds to the Shepherd and Bishop of their souls (1 Pet. ii. 25), and bids them think of the heavenly crown which they will receive, when the Chief Shepherd shall appear. (1 Pet. v. 4.)

14.  $\tau \dot{\alpha} \chi i \nu i$  sooner than might be inferred from these written instructions. Cp. Acts xxv. 10, and 2 Tim. i. 18, as to this use of the comparative; and as to the sentiment, see 2 John 12. 3 John 13, 14.

It has been alleged, that this expression of a hope to visit Timothy is inconsistent with St. Paul's declaration to the Ephesian Presbyters at Miletus, that they "all, among whom he had gone preaching the Gospel, should see his face no more" (Acts xx. 25. 38).

But it may be observed, that St. Paul does not say here that he expected to come to Ephesus. Indeed, it is more probable, that having now in his old age (Philem. 9) appointed Timothy to the Apostolic office of Chief Pastor at Ephesus, he would rather abstain from personal interference there, lest he should seem to overshadow him to whom the highest position in that Church had now been confided by himself.

There is no evidence that St. Paul ever was at Ephesus after that visit to Miletus.

On a former occasion (mentioned in Acts xx. 15. 17) when going to Jerusalem, he determined to sail by Ephesus, and yet touched at Miletus on the coast, and sent for the Presbyters of Ephesus to come to have an interview with him at Miletus; so, perhaps, when touching at Miletus on subsequent occasions, he may have sent for the Chief Pastor of Ephesus, Timothy, and have seen him there. Cp. note above on Acts xx. 25, and on 2 Tim. i. 15-18; iv. 20; and the Introduction to these Epistles to Timothy, pp. 430, 431.

15, 16. Υνα είδης κ.τ.λ.] in order that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the Church of the Living God, the pillar and ground of truth (and confessedly the Mystery of Godliness is great), Who was manifested in the flesh, justified in His spirit, showed Himself to Angels, was believed on in the world, and was received up in

I. As to the reading of these two verses, Elz. has Oeds before έφανερώθη, and this reading is found in D***, I, K, and in most of the Cursive MSS.

But this reading, Θεδs, i. e. ΘΣ (God), seems to be derived from O∑ (Who).

The reading of A (the Alexandrine MS. in the British Museum) has been matter of much controversy. Dr. John Berriman, in his learned Dissertation on this text (1 Tim. iii. 16), Lond. 1741, affirms that the original reading of that MS. was "certainly  $\overline{\Theta\Xi}$ ."  $\Theta\epsilon\delta s$ , pp. 153-159; and that "the strokes added at the top and in the middle of the word by the corrector" (probably Patricius Junius, i.e. Patrick Young, Librarian to King Charles I.), "were not designed to corrupt and falsify, but to preserve and perpetuate, the true reading, which was in danger of being lost by the decay of time.

But, on the other hand, Professor Porson, who made a very diligent examination of the MS., pronounced his opinion that OE was the original reading. See his Tracts, collected by Kidd, Lond, 1815, p. 290. If I may venture to appeal to the results of my own inspection of the Manuscript, I may add that it has led me to the same result, which was also arrived at, after a minute scrutiny by Bishop Ellicott. See his remarks, p. 100 of his edition

O∑ is also the reading of X* (Cod. Sinait.) and of C* (see Tischendorf, Prol. Cod. Ephr. p. 39), and of F, G (see Tregelles, "Printed Text," p. 165, note), and of some Cursive MSS.

All the earlier Versions (before the seventh century), viz. the old Latin, Vulgate, Peschito, Harclean, Syriac, Memphitic, Thebaic, Gothic, Armenian, Æthiopic, represent here a relative pronoun, viz. &s, qui, or &, quod.

This united testimony, that Oeds did not belong to the passage in the days when those Versions were made, is very strong; and when it is remembered, that no Version of similar antiquity can be brought forward to counterbalance these witnesses from every part of Christendom, the preponderance of testimony is overwhelming. (Tregelles, p. 228.) S. Jerome (in Isa liii. 11) quotes the passage thus: "Qui apparuit in carne." Theodorus Mopsuest., Cyril Alex., and Epiphanius have also os (see Wetstein); and Augustine (Serm. 204) reads quod, agreeing with 'sacramentum,' but he interprets the passage as if it were qui; and the Latin Fathers generally follow the old Latin and Vulg., which have Quod.

D* has also the neuter pronoun O, which. It is said by Liberatus, the Deacon, in his Breviarium, cap. xix. (cp. Hincmar. Opusc. lv. c. 17), that Macedonius, the Bishop of Constantinople, was banished (A.D. 506) by the Emperor Anastasius for altering OS here in Manuscripts into OS: "Tanquam Nestorianus ergo culpatus expellitur per Severum Monachum."

See Dr. Bentley on Freethinking, p. 117, ed. 1743, or vol. iii. p. 366, ed. Dyce; and compare Bp. Pearson's note on the Creed, Art. ii. p. 240, who has anticipated Bentley's remarks, though Bentley does not seem to have been aware of it.

Whatever may have been the extent of this alteration, this incident may serve to remind us that the change of OZ into  $\Theta\Sigma = \Theta\epsilon\delta s$  is a very easy one; whereas, if the earliest MSS. had OEO∑ here, it is difficult to explain how the reading O∑ found its way into the most ancient MSS., e. g. A, C, F, G; particularly since the construction of ôs is not nearly so easy a one as that of Θεδs would have been; and therefore Θεδs was not so likely to have been exchanged for \$s, as \$s for Ocos.

For a similar reason the testimony of Jerome, reading Qui after the neuter word Sacramentum, is of more weight than that of the other Latin Fathers reading Quod.

II. On the whole, then, it may be concluded, that-(1) The evidence for a relative pronoun is far stronger than for the noun-substantive Ocos, God.

(2) The evidence for the masculine pronoun os is far stronger than for the neuter 3.

(3) The Masculine O∑, Who, has accordingly been preferred by Griesb., Lach., Tisch., Alf., Huther, Ellicott, and by Tregelles in his summary of the evidence on this subject.

III. As to the general construction and meaning of the Apostle's language here, it seems most probable, that the words καλ δμολογουμένως μέγα έστλ το της εὐσεβείας μυστήριον are to be regarded as a parenthesis; which is altogether in the manner of St. Paul. When some great argument presses itself on his mind, he declares its dignity by some expressions which break forth from him abruptly and vehemently into a parenthetical proposition, as here. See, for instance, Rom. ii. 13.

Next, the relative pronoun &s, Who, is to be referred to the antecedent Ocov, which is repeated twice in v. 15, so as to be impressed strongly on the reader's mind, and to prepare him for the relative os commencing the sublime declaration which sums up the whole, and proclaims the Church to be "the House of God, the living God, Who was manifested in the flesh, justified in His Spirit, seen of Angels, preached to the Gentiles, believed on in the World, received up in glory;" and that HE, who was thus

IV. 1 a Τὸ δὲ Πνεθμα ρητῶς λέγει, ὅτι ἐν ὑστέροις καιροῖς ἀποστήσονται τινὲς a Matt. 24. 23. τῆς πίστεως, προσέχοντες πνεύμασι πλάνοις καὶ διδασκαλίαις δαιμονίων, 2 b έν 2 Tim. 3. 3.

Jude 18. 1 John 2. 18. b Matt. 7. 15. Rom. 16. 18. 2 Pet. 3. 3.

manifested in the flesh, preached, and glorified, is no other than

GOD, the LIVING GOD, the Everlasting JEHOVAH.

The adoption, therefore, of the reading δs for Θεδs, while it improves the rhythm of the sentence, makes no change in the sense. The doctrine is the same as, and is something more than, that which is declared in the English Authorized Version, "Great is the Mystery of Godliness. God was manifest (or, rather, was manifested) in the Flesh." And this Text, as now read, remains, and ever will remain, an impregnable bulwark of the Catholic Verity of the Godhead and Manhood of Christ.

IV. As to the meaning of particular words in these two

(1) εκκλησία Θεοῦ ζώντος, the Church of the Living God. Therefore it is not the Church of Man, but is grounded on the Rock, namely, on Christ, confessed to be (1) the Living God, and also (2) to be God Incarnate; "God manifested in the flesh." See above on Matt. xvi. 18. 1 Cor. iii. 10, 11.

(2) στῦλος και έδραίωμα της άληθείας. The Church is the Pillar of Truth, because, like the Pillar of Cloud and Fire (always called στῦλος by LXX), it is visible far and wide, day and night, and is a guide to the wayfarers in the wilderness of the world on their march to Heaven.

It is έδραίωμα, the basis, the pedestal (not the Rock, which is Christ, on which the Truth rests, see Theodoret here, but) a firmamentum, settled, seated (έδρασθέν) on the Rock. And therefore the Gospel, in which the Doctrine of Christ is contained, is called the στῦλος και στήριγμα of the Church. (Irenæus, iii. 11.)

The Church is the pillar and base of the Truth,- lst. In supporting, maintaining, guarding, and visibly dis-playing to the World, the True Canon of Holy Scripture, particularly by the public reading of it.

2ndly. In maintaining, guarding, and promulging the True

Exposition of Holy Scripture, especially in her public symbols of Faith, called Creeds.

3rdly. In guarding and dispensing the Holy Sacraments pure and undefiled, for the new birth and continual renovation of the soul.

The Church of the Living God is the House of God, in contradistinction to the Jewish Temple, in which the Law, and Aaron's Rod, and the Pot of Manna were formerly enshrined in the Holy of Holies; which were only for a particular people, and were types and figures of future good things, now revealed in the Church, which contains the Word and Sacraments, and dispenses them freely to all.

(3) τὸ τῆς εὐσεβείας μυστήριον, the Mystery of godliness; of holy piety and reverent worship; as distinguished from the unholy Mysteries of heretical teaching and worship. See on Eph. iii. 9, 10. Col. i. 26, 27; ii. 2, where the word μυστήριον is employed in like manner to describe the great Mystery kept secret even from Angels, but now revealed to them and to the Heathen, as well as the Jews, by the Ministry of the Church of Christ, namely, the Incarnation of God the Son, in which great Mystery the Nature of Man is, as it were, espoused and married, in a holy and indissoluble wedlock, to the Nature of God: and therefore Marriage is a great Mystery, and represents the Union of God with us. See above on Eph. v. 32.

The doctrine of the Incarnation is here affirmed to be a Mystery. It is not, therefore, to be scanned and analyzed by man's Reason, but to be reverently received, on the testimony of God's Holy Word, by Faith. A warning against the speculations of those who venture to intrude with inquisitive and profane familiarity into "the secret things of the Lord our God;" and an encouragement to the humility, patience, faith, and hope of those who now, in this lower world, "see through a glass darkly," and are thus reminded of the imperfection of their present condition, and of all earthly things, and look forward to the fruition of that future felicity which will have no end, when they will "see face to face, and know even as they are known" (1 Cor. xiii. 12). Cp. Bp. Sanderson's Sermon on this text, i. pp. 224-247. It is also a Mystery of Godliness. Other Mysteries, such as those of Paganism, were accompanied with impure rites and orgies; and there is even in Christendom, what the Apostle describes as the "Mystery of Iniquity." (See on 2 Thess. ii. 7.) But the Mystery of the Incarnation is a Mystery of Godliness. Though the manner of it cannot now be apprehended by human Reason, yet the doctrine is clearly revealed in Scripture (Eph. i. 9, 10. Col. i. 26), and is to be firmly embraced by Faith. And this doctrine of the Incarnation of the Son of God is the very root of Godliness. It is the groundwork of all virtuous practice. affords the strongest motive to love of God, and to personal Holiness. In it Christ says, "Be ye holy, for I," Who have taken VOL. II .- PART III.

our nature and joined it to the Nature of the Holy One, "am Holy." (Cp. Eph. i. 2-6. Tit. ii. 11-13.) It is the strongest argument for Humility (see Phil. ii. 6), and for Universal Charity. See above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Ephesians, pp. 275

-278, and note on Eph. v. 5.

 (4) δs ἐφανερώθη ἐν σαρκὶ, Who was manifested in the flesh.
 Cp. Matt. i. 23. John i. 14. Tit. i. 3, and note. I John i. 2, ἡ ζωή ἐφανερώθη. So Barnabas, Ερ. 6, Ἐν σαρκὶ μέλλοντος φανεροῦσθαι καὶ πάσχειν, προεφανεροῦτο τὸ πάθος: and xii., νίδς τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐν σαρκὶ φανερωθείς. Ignat. Eph. 19, Θεοῦ ἀνθρωπίνως φανερουμένου. Ηiγροlyt. (c. Noet. 17), Θεδς ἐν σώματι ἐφανερώθη.

(5) ἐδικαιώθη ἐν πνεύματι, was justified in His spirit.
The Son of God, Who is God of God, the Living God, took our Nature, and thus assumed not only human flesh (σάρκα), in which He was manifested, but He took also a human soul, which, in its higher faculties, by which it is distinguished from its mere animal life  $(\psi v \chi \dot{\gamma})$ , is called  $\pi v \epsilon \hat{v} \mu a$ , or spirit, in Holy Scripture. (See above on 1 Thess. v. 23, and cp. 1 Pet. iii. 18.) And in this, His human spirit, He was justified, i. e. declared to be, what no other man ever was, perfectly just; and so, being truly man, as well as God, and being justified in that which He had from our nature (cp. Theodoret), namely, a human πνεθμα, He became "our Righteousness." (Jer. xxiii. 6; xxxiii. 16.) See on 1 Cor. i. 30. Rom. v. 21.

(6) ἄφθη ἀγγέλοις, He showed Himself to Angels. On the meaning of ἄφθη, see above, 1 Cor. xv. 5, 6, 7, 8, and John xvi. 16, 17, 19. 22. The Angels could not see the essential glory of His Divinity, which was Invisible (see 1 Pet. i. 12, and Col. i. 15), but they beheld Him when He became Incarnate. Theodoret, and

And then the Mystery of His Love to Men was revealed to Angels by the Ministry of His Church. Cp. note above on Eph.

CH. IV. 1. Τὸ δὲ Πνεθμα κ.τ.λ.] But the Spirit speaketh expressly. The connexion is as follows. But  $(\delta \hat{\epsilon})$ , notwithstanding the clearness of the witness of the Church to the truth (see above, iii. 15, 16), the Holy Ghost expressly saith that in the latter times some will fall away from the faith, and deny the great Mystery of Godliness, which has just been described. The form of this denial will be considered in the notes below on κωλυόντων γαμείν, and on ἀπέχεσθαι βρωμάτων, v. 3.

The word amooraala does not signify open profession of unbelief, but declension from the Truth-Heresy. See on 2 Thess.

The Prophecy of St. Paul reveals the future rise and prevalence of such Heresies as those of the Marcionites, Encratites, and Manicheans. Chrys., Theoph. And so Bp. Pearson in his Concio on this and the following verses. Minor Works, ii. 41-45.

But the Prophecy has doubtless a still wider scope, and extends to all forms of spiritual deceit and delusion which contravene the Mystery of Godliness. And so this Apostolic Prophecy is to be combined with that other prediction, delivered by St. Paul, describing the 'Mystery of Iniquity.' See above on 2 Thess. ii. 3-12.

This passage (vv. 1-5) is quoted with some very slight variations by S. Hippolytus in his recently discovered Philosophumena, p. 276, as "the words of the blessed Apostle St. Paul"—a fresh testimony from the beginning of the third century to the genuineness of this Epistle. He applies this prophecy to the Encratites.

— διδασκαλίαι δαιμονίων] doctrines suggested by Devils; doctrines engendered by the operation of Evil Spirits. Theodoret. "Omnis enim Hæreticorum doctrina Dæmonum arte composita est." Primasius. Cp. Bp. Pearson, l. c.

Similarly, in writing to the Churches of Asia, St. John speaks of assemblies of false teachers as Synagogues of Satan, συναγωγάς τοῦ Σατανᾶ (Rev. ii. 9; iii. 9), as opposed to the Church of Christ. See also Rev. xvi. 13, 14.

Justin M. refers to, and explains those words (Dial. c. Tryph. 7), τὰ τῆς πλάνης πνεύματα καὶ δαιμόνια δοξολογοῦσι ψευδοπροφῆται: and of some Heretics he says that they do not teach the doctrines of Christ, but τὰ ἀπό τῶν τῆς πλάνης πνευμάτων.

2. εν ὑποκρίσει ψ. κ. τ. l. σ.] with the hypocrisy of liars who are seared as to their consciences with hot iron. The sense of this passage has been obscured by placing a comma between ψευδολόγων and κεκαυτηριασμένων. the same as in S. Polycarp's Epistle to the Philippians (i. 6), ἀπεχόμενοι τῶν ψευδαδέλφων, καὶ τῶν ἐν ὑποκρίσει φερόντων c Gen. 9. 3. Rom. 14. 6. 1 Cor. 10. 30.

ύποκρίσει ψευδολόγων κεκαυτηριασμένων την ίδίαν συνείδησιν, <sup>3 c</sup> κωλυόντων γαμείν, ἀπέχεσθαι βρωμάτων, α ο Θεος ἔκτισεν εἰς μετάληψιν μετα εὐχαριστίας τοις πιστοις και έπεγνωκόσι την αλήθειαν. 4 ο ότι παν κτίσμα Θεού καλόν, καὶ οὐδὲν ἀπόβλητον, μετὰ εὐχαριστίας λαμβανόμενον 5 άγιάζεται γὰρ διὰ λόγου Θεοῦ καὶ ἐντεύξεως.

τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου, οἶτινες ἀποπλανῶσι κενοὺς ἀνθρώπους— a passage where he has St. Paul's words in his mind, as in many other places of the same Epistle.

St. Paul is speaking of a particular kind of Hypocrisy—towards a man's own self, and toward God—the Hypocrisy of liars who have wilfully cauterized their own consciences, and are, therefore, given over by God's judicial retribution to a reprobate

This was precisely the Hypocrisy of which we hear so much in the Gospels, as the sin of the Pharisees (Luke xii. 1. Matt. xxiii. 13); who were not only guilty of deceiving others by an outward show of religion, but were also guilty of insincerity towards God, and toward their own consciences. This last is, indeed, included in that general Hypocrisy, which, in the Gospels, is represented as their character. They were not men who did not believe in their religion; on the contrary, they were zealous for it: but their religion was hypocritical; it allowed them in immoral practices; they indulged in pride and uncharitableness under the cloak of zeal for God. See Matt. xv. 7—14; xxiii. 13. 16. 19. 24. 26, where hypocrite and blind are used interchangeably, as applicable to them. They tampered with their own Consciences, and allowed themselves in sin, known to be such; and therefore God, in His anger, blinded their eyes, and their hearts were hardened, and their consciences were made callous, and they loved darkness and lies more than light and truth, and rejected Him Who was the Light, and is the Truth. Hence we read in Scripture of the "deceitfulness of sin," viz. its deceiving those who are guilty of it, and who in their blindness act as men who have deceived themselves, and would fain deceive God. (Acts v. 3; xxviii. 27. Gal. vi. 7. James i.

This prophecy of St. Paul may, therefore, be compared in this respect with the awful words in that other prophecy already mentioned (2 Thess. ii. 11, 12), which is the best exposition of this passage, and where it is said, that because they would not receive the love of the truth, but would have pleasure in unrighteousness, therefore God would send them an inner-working (erepyerar) of delusion, so that they should believe the lie, which they would utter. See the note on that passage. Theirs would indeed be the hypocrisy of liars cauterized in their own con-

When any one is deluded through sin wilfully committed against his own Conscience, which, by habits of sin thus committed, becomes branded by a hot iron, this is Hypocrisy towards himself; and he who is guilty of it, acts as if he could deceive God, and this is Hypocrisy toward God; and this is the form of Hypocrisy here described by St. Paul. See Bp. Butler on I Pet. ii. 16, who has supplied some of the sentences of this note, and above on Matt. xxiii. 13.

It is unhappily too notorious, that a large portion of the Western Church has fulfilled this Prophecy, by its own practice in giving sanction to mendacious Legends, and to "lying wonders." and that it has even made, and is making, a traffic of fabulous Miracles, and has thus fallen away from the profession of a sound faith in the 'Mystery of Godliness,' which abhors what is false, especially in religion, and has initiated itself and others in the 'Mystery of Iniquity,' which receives not "the love of the truth," and is given over to "strong delusions," and "to believe a lie."

Speaking of these pious frauds, or rather impious impostures, authorized and propagated by the Papacy, a learned and pious Bishop of our own Church has said, that "wise men have thought that the authors of these romances in religion were no better than the tools and instruments of Satan (cp. St. Paul's words, doctrines of devils, v. 1), used by him to expose the Christian religion, and so to introduce Atheism." Bp. Bull (Serm. iv.).

A striking recent proof of the truth of this assertion may be seen in the facts described in "Notes at Paris," 1854,

pp. 144-152.

3. κωλυδυτων γαμεῖν] forbidding to marry. This was done by Marcion and Apelles, "ejus secutor" (Tertullian, Præs. Hær. 33), and before Marcion, by Saturnilus, the Scholar of Menander, "qui nubere et generare, à Satura dicebant esse." See Iren. i. 22. Theodoret, Hær. Fab. i. 3; and so Tatian. Iren. i. 28. Cp. Clemens Alex., Strom. iii. p. 462, who applies to them this prophecy, and cp. Bp. Pearson, l. c. p. 52.

This clause is introduced here in connexion with what precedes (iii. 15, 16), because the Heresy of "forbidding to marry," strikes at the root of the doctrine of "the great Mystery of Godliness," inasmuch as Christ is the Seed of the Woman (Gen. iii. 15), and has restored and sanctified Womanhood (see above, ii. 15); and by His Incarnation, the Son of God has married our Nature, and has espoused to Himself a Church, and so has sanctified Marriage, as St. Paul had fully declared to the has sanctined Marriage, as St. Paul had fully declared to the Church, of which Timothy was Chief Pastor, that of Ephesus. See on Eph. v. 23-32, and cp. Introduction to that Epistle, pp. 275-277.

The fact, that a Christian Church, in defiance of the language of the Holy Spirit, declaring here by St. Paul, that they who "forbid to marry" are doing the work of seducing Spirits, and are warring against the 'Mystery of Godliness;' and in defiance also of his words in this same Epistle, describing those who are to be ordained to the Holy Orders of Presbyters and Deacons as "Husbands of one wife," and as having their "children in subjection" (iii. 2-4)—has ventured to shut the door of Holy Orders against all who are married, and to forbid Marriage to those who have been admitted to Holy Orders, is a mournful proof, that men may still imitate the Jews, who fulfilled their own Scriptures by condemning Christ (Acts xiii. 27); and that when they love a lie, they may be so much blinded by the Father of Lies, as to accomplish the most awful predictions of the Scriptures of Truth, which describe those who accomplished them as identifying themselves with men who give heed to lying Spirits, and have their consciences seared by a hot iron.

ἀπέχεσθαι βρωμάτων] to abstain from meats. The word 'commanding' to be supplied from κωλυόντων. for the Heresy of the Manichæans, who forbad the use of meats, as created by the Evil One (Cyril Hieros. Catech. 63); and of the Severians (Epiphan. Hær. 45); and before them all, of the Ebionites (Epiphan. Hær. 30).

Observe the beauty of the connexion of this declaration with what had preceded—a connexion which is in some degree marred by the breaking off of the argument by the abrupt termination of the Third Chapter.

The Heresy of commanding to abstain from meats, is here condemned, because, like that of forbidding to marry, it had a direct tendency to subvert the 'great Mystery of Godliness' contained in

(1) the doctrine of the Incarnation, and

(2) the doctrine consequent on the Incarnation-that of Universal Redemption.

(1) Consider it first with regard to the Incarnation. If, as these false Teachers affirmed, adopting the dualistic theory (against which God Himself had delivered a solemn protest by Isaiah, which God rimself had delivered a solution principle; and if, therefore, it was necessary to abstain from meats, as polluted and unclean, then it would follow, that God could not have taken human flesh, and united it for ever to the Godhead.

(2) Consider it also with regard to the kindred doctrine of Universal Redemption.

Christ, by His Incarnation, becoming the Second Adam, re-covered for us the free use of all the creatures of God, and recovered for them their original benediction which they had received from God.

See Bp. Sanderson's Sermon on this text (vol. iii. pp. 144-211), and the remarks above in the notes in the present volume on 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23, and 1 Cor. vi. 12, which may serve for a comment on this and the following verse; and see below, on v. 5.

All that the Apostle here says will thus be seen to grow out by a natural sequence from what he has before declared concerning 'the great Mystery of Godliness,' "God manifested in the flesh."

4. οὐδὲν ἀπόβλητον nothing is to be rejected. "Meminimus gratiam nos debere Domino Creatori. Nullum fructum operum Ejus repudiamus. Planè temperamus, ne ultrà modum aut per-peràm utamur." Tertullian (Apol. 42).

A warning against those who take, or would impose, Vows of total abstinence from any of God's creatures. Such vows are an insult to God the Creator, God the Redeemer, and God the Sanctifier. See notes above on 1 Cor. iii. 22; vi. 12; viii. 13. Rom. xiv. 21; and cp. Theodorel here.

5. αγιάζεται δια λόγου Θεοῦ] it is sanctified by the Word of God. It is sanctified in various ways,-

6 · Ταῦτα ὑποτιθέμενος τοῖς ἀδελφοῖς καλὸς ἔση διάκονος Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ, e2 Tim. 3.14—17. έντρεφόμενος τοις λόγοις της πίστεως, και της καλης διδασκαλίας ή παρηκολούθηκας.  $7^{\circ}$  Τοὺς δὲ βεβήλους καὶ γραώδεις μύθους παραιτοῦ. Γύμναζε δὲ σεαυ-  $\frac{1}{8}$  ch. 1. 4. τὸν πρὸς εὐσέβειαν  $\frac{8}{9}$  ἡ γὰρ σωματικὴ γυμνασία πρὸς ὀλίγον ἐστὶν ὡψέλιμος  $\frac{2}{7}$  Tit. 1. 14.  $\frac{1}{1}$  Tit. 1. 14. ή δὲ εὐσέβεια πρὸς πάντα ἀφέλιμός ἐστιν, ἐπαγγελίαν ἔχουσα ζωῆς τῆς νῦν καὶ ਫ ζ. 2. 23. της μελλούσης.

 $^{9 \text{ h}}$  Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος καὶ πάσης ἀποδοχῆς ἄξιος·  $^{10 \text{ i}}$  εἰς τοῦτο γὰρ καὶ κοπιῶμεν  $^{\text{h ch. 1. 15.}}_{\text{ i 2 Cor. 6. 5.}}$  καὶ ὀνειδιζόμεθα, ὅτι ἡλπίκαμεν ἐπὶ Θεῷ ζῶντι, ὅς ἐστι σωτὴρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων  $^{\text{8. li. 28.}}_{\text{1. less. 3. 8.}}$ μάλιστα πιστών. 11 Παράγγελλε ταῦτα καὶ δίδασκε.

(1) by the Word of God in Creation, when He blessed the creatures, and sanctified them to the use of man, and when He blessed man, and gave him dominion over them. (Gen. i. 22. 28.

Cp. Gen. ix. 3. Ps. viii. 6.)

(2) by the word of God in Redemption, when He abolished the difference between clean and unclean meats; and said, What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common (Acts x. 15), words which were true in a literal sense as to meats, as well as in a figurative sense as to men. See Rom. xiv. 17-20. And thus the effect of the original Benediction (λόγος Θεού, His εὐλογία) pronounced at the Creation of Adam, was restored to Mankind in Christ. See I Cor. iii. 22, 23. And this Divine Benediction it is, this λόγος Θεοῦ, which gives to us the free and joyful use of the creatures, and makes them nutritive and comfortable to us; for "man liveth not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." (Deut. viii. 3. Matt. iv. 4.) It is not the creature itself which nourishes us, but it is God's benediction on the creature which makes it serviceable to the use of all, and sanctifies it to the use of the faithful.

St. Paul uses the present tense, αγιάζεται—it is ever being sanctified—because the original Benediction of God on the Creatures, and on Man as their Lord, takes effect toties quoties, and is applied effectually in every Christian meal by means of ἔντευξις, or Invocation. See the next note.

(3) In a still more recondite sense, a sense which may have been present to the mind of the Holy Ghost, inspiring the Apostle, a sense which has a special connexion with the Doctrine of the Incarnation, of which He is here treating, and a sense also which would have a peculiar propriety in this Epistle to the Bishop of Ephesus, which was afterwards to be the residence of St. John, and the place where he wrote his Gospel, Every creature is sanctified by the Word of God, even by the Incarnate Word, Who, by His incarnation, hallowed man, the recipient of the Creatures, and hallowed the creatures for man's use. See

That a word, as well as a prophecy, may have a manifold and a germinant meaning in Holy Writ (such is its fulness and fruitfulness), is a truth too much forgotten by modern Exegesis; and that the Name "The Word of God" is applied by St. John, and by no other writer of Holy Scripture, to Christ, the state of the stat is a proposition which has been too readily accepted by some. See Heb. iv. 12, and Titus i. 3. And it is worthy of remark, that the Holy Spirit, speaking by St. Paul in his Epistles to the Church of Ephesus, and to Timothy its Bishop, dwells specially on those Doctrines which concern the Divinity and Incarnation of Christ, and which the same Spirit asserted and maintained in all their fulness by the teaching of that Apostle who lived and died at Ephesus, namely, St. John. See above, p. 278, and on Acts xx. 32.

— ἐντεὑξεως] prayer, invocation. See 1 Tim. ii. 1. Thus it appears that in every rightly framed "Grace before meat," there are three things contained, viz.

1st. A thankful reference to the original Benediction proprimeval grant of Dominion over them, made to Man as their lord.

2ndly. A Thankful reference to the reiteration of that Benediction, and to the restoration of that Dominion, by God the 3rdly. Prayer to God, that He would send His Blessing on the creatures provided by Him for Man; and that He would sanctify them to the use of those who partake of them, and would sanctify those who partake of them, to His service.

6. διάκονος] An appropriate word in this discourse concerning the Tables of Christians, which were attended by the ministry of those whose office was instituted for the very purpose of διακονείν τραπέζαις. (Acts vi. 2.)

έντρεφόμενος] inwardly nourished with the words of faithanother appropriate word, intimating that the bodily nourishment derivable from the creature is of no avail without that inner sustenance of faith, which is the diet of the soul.

 βεβήλους καὶ γραώδεις μύθους] profane and old wives' bles. Such were the legends of Judaism (Chrys., Theodoret, Theoph.), of which abundant examples may be seen in the Cabala of the Talmud (cp. Hottinger, Thesaur. Philol. pp. 434—449), and by which the worship and religious offices of the Jews were corrupted, and especially by the introduction of the worship of Angels as Mediators (Col. ii. 18), undermining the foundations of that εὐσέβεια, which consists in the adoration of the One God, and of the One Mediator between God and Man. See ii. 5.

This Warning also has a natural connexion with what precedes, and has a prophetic application to later times, especially to the practice of that portion of Christendom, which withholds the use of the Holy Scriptures, in the vernacular tongue, from the people, and instead of satisfying their souls with the Bread of Life, feeds them with the husks of legendary fables.

παραιτοῦ] (1) properly, deprecate, ask off. See Acts xxv. 11. Heb. xii. 19.

(2) as here, decline, shun, refuse, reject, renounce. Cp. 2 Tim. ii. 23. Tit. iii. 10. Heb. xii. 25.

— Γύμναζε δὲ σεαυτὸν π. εὐ.] But exercise thyself unto god-liness. He had spoken of spiritual food, derived from the words of faith (v. 6); he now speaks of the need of spiritual exercise

(such as Prayer and Fasting) for spiritual health.

The word by which he describes these exercises, γυμνάζω, shows that the spiritual exercises are to be regular, and that they require effort, and suppose spiritual mortification and wrestling. The Apostle compares the Christian Life to training in a ghostly Gymnasium. Cp. 1 Cor. ix. 24, where he compares its religious oyunasıdır. Op. I contait, where compares its italian exercises to those of an athlete; and says (v. 27),  $\delta \pi \omega \pi i \delta (\omega \mu o \hat{v} \tau \delta \sigma \hat{\omega} \mu \alpha)$ , I beat under my own body  $(\mu o \hat{v} \tau \delta \sigma \hat{\omega} \mu \alpha)$ , not the body of another, as this world's athletes do; I contund myself, my own flesh, as if it were my enemy.

8. σωματική γυμνασία] gymnastic exercise of the body is profitable for little—for little time and for little benefit.

This expression is to be explained by reference to the use of gymnastic exercises for the training of the young to a vigorous habit of body, and also to the training of the Wrestlers and Runners for prizes, in the Games of Heathen Antiquity, and also to the regular gymnastic exercises which were a part of the habitual regimen of the daily life of the higher class of the Romans. See Bentley on Horat. Sat. i. 6. 126, "fugio campum lusumque trigonem;" and Martial's description of the Roman Day, "sufficit in nonam nitidis octava palæstris" (Epig. iv. 8. 5). The Romans had their hour (the eighth) for bodily gymnastics; so ought the Christian to have his hours for spiritual exercises.

What the Apostle means, therefore, is, that the Children of light should learn a lesson from the children of this world, who exercise themselves in physical gymnastics for the acquisition of the precarious health of this life, and for the attainment of ephemeral prizes on earth; and should take similar care to exercise themselves in the spiritual discipline of Prayer and Self-mortification, with a view not only to the promises of this life's joys, which wait upon Piety, but much more to spiritual and eternal health and Victory.

How much spiritual instruction might the young men of our own age derive from their own zeal, ardour, diligence, and selfdenial, in training themselves for bodily exercises; - such as boating, cricket, and rifle practice. If they do so much for their bodies, what ought they not to do for their souls !

The great Apostle of the Gentiles, the unwearied Athlete of the Gospel, the Xystarches of the Christian Palæstra, sends these directions to Timothy, as the Spiritual Gymnasiarch of Ephesus, in order that he may train himself and his people to receive the imperishable crown of glory from the hands of the Divine Agonothetes at the Great Day.

10. κοπιῶμεν] we labour—in our Christian gymnastics.

— σωτήρ πάντων] the Saviour of all. See ii. 4. God is the k 1 Cor. 11. 1. 1 Thess. 1. 6. & 2. 10. 2 Thess. 3. 7—9. Tit. 2. 7, 15. 1 Pet. 5. 3.

12 κ Μηδείς σοῦ τῆς νεότητος καταφρονείτω, ἀλλὰ τύπος γίνου τῶν πιστῶν, ἐν λόγω, ἐν ἀναστροφη, ἐν ἀγάπη, ἐν πίστει, ἐν άγνεία.

13 Εως έρχομαι, πρόσεχε τη ἀναγνώσει, τη παρακλήσει, τη διδασκαλία.  $^{1}$  Acts 6. 6.  $^{8}$  8. 17.  $^{8}$  13. 3.  $^{2}$   $^{1}$   $^{$ μενε αὐτοῖς τοῦτο γὰρ ποιῶν καὶ σεαυτὸν σώσεις καὶ τοὺς ἀκούοντάς σου.

a Lev. 19. 32, Deut. 33. 9, Gal. 2, 11—14.

V. 1 a Πρεσβυτέρω μη έπιπλήξης, άλλα παρακάλει ώς πατέρα· νεωτέρους, ώς άδελφούς, 2 πρεσβυτέρας, ώς μητέρας, νεωτέρας, ώς άδελφας έν πάση άγνεία.

b Matt. 15. 4 - 6. Mark 7, 10, 13. Eph. 6, 1, 3.

 $^3$  Χήρας τίμα τὰς ὄντως χήρας.  $^4$   $^6$  Εἰ δέ τις χήρα τέκνα  $\mathring{\eta}$  ἔκγονα ἔχει, μανθανέτωσαν πρώτον τον ίδιον οίκον εὐσεβείν, καὶ ἀμοιβὰς ἀποδιδόναι τοίς

Saviour of all men in will, and He is the Saviour of all who believe, not only in will, but in effect. See above, Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, p. 198, and on Rom. viii. 32.

12. Μηδείς σοῦ τ. ν. καταφρονείτω] Let no one despise thy youth. Cp. the words in 1 Cor. xvi. 11, written from Ephesus, concerning Timothy.

 $-\sigma o \bar{v} \tau \bar{\eta} s \nu \epsilon \delta \tau \eta \tau \sigma s$ ] Cp. the position of the pronoun in Col. iv. 18. Elz. adds  $\dot{\epsilon} \nu \pi \nu \epsilon \dot{\nu} \mu \alpha \tau_{\perp}$  after  $\dot{\epsilon} \nu \dot{\alpha} \gamma \dot{\alpha} \pi \eta$ .

13. "Εως ἔρχομαι] while I am coming, and till I arrive. The present tense indicative seems to denote that the Apostle is on the point of setting out to come to Timothy. See iii. 14. Cp. Luke xix. 13, εως ερχομαι, and John xxi. 22, and Winer, § 41. 3, p. 265, note.

 πρόσεχε τῆ ἀναγνώσει] give attendance to reading, not only to the public reading of the Holy Scriptures, of the Law, and the Prophets (Acts xiii. 15. 2 Cor. iii. 14), and of portions of the New Testament (see 1 Thess. v. 27), but also to private study (cp. Chrys., Theodoret), as one of the appointed means of stirring up spiritual grace. See below on 2 Tim. iv. 13.

14. διὰ προφητείαs] through prophecy. The gift of the Holy Spirit was bestowed on Timothy by means of the Prophecy by which the Spirit spake, and which pointed him out for Ordination, and with the laying on of the hands of the Presbyters, who had been already constituted by St. Paul in the principal cities of Asia Acts xiv. 23; xx. 17), and who joined with the Apostle in ordaining him. (2 Tim. i. 6; cp. 1 Tim. i. 18.)

It is not improbable that they by whose ministry the Holy Spirit delivered the prophecy were themselves Presbyters, who took part in the Ordination of Timothy. Cp. Acts xiii. 2.

We have evidence here of the means used by the Holy Ghost the Ordination of Timothy, who was a chief Pester of the for the Ordination of Timothy, who was a chief Pastor of the

It has been said by some ancient Expositors (Chrys., Theophyl.) that the Πρεσβυτέριον here mentioned was composed of Bishops, "because Presbyters would not have ordained a

But it may be observed -

(1) That it is not certain that St. Paul is referring to the Ordination of Timothy to the Episcopate. He may be speaking of his Ordination to the Priesthood at Lystra. Cp. Ellicott.

(2) Next, even if he is speaking of Timothy's Ordination to the Episcopate, then it is to be observed, that in Timothy's Ordination, as in St. Paul's own Ordination, the Holy Ghost Himself spake by the Prophecy here mentioned and that He pointed self spoke by the Prophecy here mentioned, and that He pointed Timothy out for Ordination; and therefore it was the Holy Ghost Himself, Who, by the ministry of Prophecy, of the Presbytery, and of the Apostle St. Paul, ordained Timothy.

We are tied to the use of the means which the Holy Ghost has sanctioned. But the Holy Ghost is not restrained to the use of any means, but has sovereign Power to act, either by means or without means, according to His own Divine Will. And He proves His own Sovereign Authority by certain extraordinary Exceptions, and thereby gives Divine sanction to the Rules instituted by Him, and obliges us to conform to them.

Therefore the operations of the Holy Spirit in this Ordination, where He vouchsafed a supernatural intervention, cannot afford any precedent for contravening, disparaging, or dispensing with the use of those regular ordinary means which have received the sanction of the Holy Ghost Himself, whose Divine Presence and perpetual indwelling have been assured to the Church by Christ Himself (John xiv. 16), and Who speaks and acts in the consent and by the practice of the Universal Church of Christ from primitive times in the ordination and consecration of her Chief Pastors.

Cp. the remarks above on the extraordinary case of Cornelius receiving the Holy Ghost before he was admitted to the Sacrament of Baptism. (Acts x. 47.)

CH. V. 1. Πρεσβυτέρω] An Elder. Not 'a presbyter' here, but any one advanced in years. (Theoph.) The use of this word in this sense, in this Epistle, where so much is said of Ecclesiastical persons, may serve to remind the reader, that the term Presbyter, applied in it to a Minister of the Church (as in this chapter, v. 17), is one which teaches the duty of reverence to him on the part of his flock; whereas the term Episcopus describes his duties of spiritual superintendence, and pastoral vigilance, toward those who are committed to his care.

3. Χήρας τίμα] Honour widows, if they are widows indeed, such as are described (in v. 5) as left solitary in the world, without any children or grandchildren, and can devote themselves entirely to the service of God, without neglecting (under pretence of piety) any duty to those of their own kindred. Honour such widows as these, for they are widows indeed.

Honour them by admitting them into the honourable class of Widows, enrolled by the Church, and making profession of Widowhood, and of devotion to the service of Christ.

Honour them, if need be, by providing a competent maintenance  $(\tau \mu \mu \eta \nu)$ , see v. 17) for them (Chrys., Theodoret, and Jerome on Matt. xv. 4), if they have no relatives, who ought to support them, and if they are above a certain age (v. 9). Timothy was Bishop of Ephesus, the Metropolis of Asia; and the Widows here spoken of by St. Paul, were poor aged women (see Jerome, ad Jovinian. i. vol. ii. p. 263), such as, in those times, on account of the services they were accustomed to perform to the Saints, were maintained out of the contributions of the Church and the common stock . . . that so there might be no cause at Ephesus of such complaint as had been made by the Grecians at Jerusalem, that their widows were neglected in the daily ministration. (Acts vi. 1; and compare Acts ix. 39. 41, concerning the Widows at Joppa.) See Bp. Sanderson, i. p. 58, and

ii. p. 186. On the condition and duties of the  $\chi \hat{\eta} \rho a$ , or Widows of the Church, see Ignat. Smyrn. 6. Polycarp, 6. Const. Apost. viii. 25. Cornelius (Bishop of Rome, A.D. 250), in Euseb. vi. 43, mentions, as existing in the Church of Rome, χήρας σύν θλιβο-μένοις (see v. 10) more than 1500 in number. Cp. Bingham, VII. iv. 7; and on their election also to the office of Deaconesses, ibid. II. xxii., and Suicer in v. Διακόνισσα; and Blunt, Church History, p. 29. On this verse, see also Jerome, Epist. iv. p. 729, ad Matrem et Filiam.

4. ἔκγονα] grandchildren, τέκνα τέκνων (Hesych.); used by LXX in that sense, Deut. xxix. 11. Isa. xlviii. 19, and by other Writers cited by Wetstein. The word nephews, in the Authorized Version, was often used for grandchildren (nepotes) in the age when that Version was made.

— μανθανέτωσαν] i.e. let such Widows learn. Some Expositors understand St. Paul to mean, "let the children and grandchildren learn."

But the former interpretation seems to be far preferable, (1) Because the Apostle is here speaking of the duties of Widows, and not of their Children or Grandchildren.

(2) Because, also, he says below, v. 16, "If any Christian have widows, let him maintain them." And he therefore does not inculcate that duty here; if he had done so, he would not have repeated the precept there.

(3) He applies the word μανθάνω to Widows below, v. 13, and so here. Cp. the use of μανθάνω, ii. 11; v. 13, and 2 Tim.

 iii. 7.
 (4) The plural verb μανθανέτωσαν is used, because the proposition is a general one; and the plural nominative χήραι, 'Widows,' is to be inferred from the collective words τις χήρα.

προγόνοις· τοῦτο γάρ ἐστιν ἀποδεκτὸν ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ. 5 ° Ἡ δὲ ὄντως χήρα ο Luke 2, 24, 37. καὶ μεμονωμένη ήλπικεν ἐπὶ τὸν Θεὸν, καὶ προσμένει ταῖς δεήσεσι καὶ ταῖς Ερh, 6.18. προσευχαις νυκτὸς καὶ ἡμέρας. 6 Ἡ δὲ σπαταλῶσα ζῶσα τέθνηκε. <sup>7</sup> Καὶ των οἰκείων οὐ προνοεῖ, τὴν πίστιν ἤρνηται, καὶ ἔστιν ἀπίστου χείρων.

9 Χήρα καταλεγέσθω μὴ έλαττον έτων έξήκοντα γεγονυία, ένδς ἀνδρὸς γυνὴ, <sup>10</sup> ° ἐν ἔργοις καλοῖς μαρτυρουμένη, εἰ ἐτεκνοτρόφησεν, εἰ ἐξενοδόχησεν, εἰ ἀγίων • Gen. 18. 4. πόδας ἔνιψεν, εἰ θλιβομένοις ἐπήρκεσεν, εἰ παντὶ ἔργω ἀγαθω ἐπηκολούθησε. Luke 7. 28, 44. 11 Νεωτέρας δὲ χήρας παραιτοῦ· ὅταν γὰρ καταστρηνιάσωσι τοῦ Χριστοῦ,

And so Winer, § 67, p. 556, and Huther; and see the similar structure above in ii. 15.

The words of the Apostle may therefore be paraphrased

If a Widow have children or grandchildren, let such Widows learn first to show piety towards their own household. Almighty God will accept such piety from them as piety towards His own House, the Church (iii. 15). And let them learn thus to requite their own Progenitors. Observe, the word used here is not Parents, but Progenitors, a word carrying their thoughts and affections far back to former Ages. Do not let them suppose that they have no duty to their own Parents and Grandparents, and even to their distant Progenitors, because those Ancestors are dead. The Fifth Commandment cannot be cancelled by death; it is one of perpetual obligation. They owe a duty of gratitude to the departed, and they ought to show it by affection to their posterity. This is acceptable to the Heavenly Parent of all. God will requite such service as done to Himself, and will reward it accordingly.

This interpretation is confirmed by Theodoret, Chrys., and Primasius. And Augustine, referring to this passage, says that such a Widow was his own mother, Monica, who was the wife of one husband, and requited her parents by governing her own thouse with piety. Confess. ix. 9. A Lapide.

There is a peculiar propriety also in the precept Honour widows, as compared with the fifth commandment, Honour thy father and thy mother (Eph. vi. 2). Honour those widows who are widows indeed. Be to them a son; and let Widows who have children or grandchildren honour their own Parents and Progenitors by cherishing their Posterity.

It is to be regretted, that so natural and so easy an Exposition of the Apostle's words, one which opens so clear, beautiful, and extensive a view of the Christian duty of reverential love and gratitude to the Departed, and shows that in the Church of Christ all successive Generations, being incorporated in the Incarnate Word, Who is Everlasting, partake of His Immortality, and are bound together, each to each, by sacred bands of dutiful affection and natural piety, should be censured by some Expositors as forced and extravagant! . . All true love of the Present, and of the Future, is grounded on gratitude and reverence for the Past.

After έστι Elz. has καλον καλ, which is not supported by the best authorities here. Cp. above, ii. 3.

5. μεμονωμένη] having been made desolate; i.e. not only without husband, but who has no children or grandchildren.

Such a widow is a widow indeed; her eye is fixed, and her hand leans, upon God, and upon Him alone. She ήλπικεν, she thath fixed her hope, and keepeth it fixed,  $\partial n = \eta \lambda^{n} Rev$ , she hath fixed her hope, and keepeth it fixed,  $\partial n = \eta \lambda^{n} Rev$ , upon God. As to this perfect tense, see John iii. 9. Cp. iv. 10; vi. 17. Winer, § 40. 4, p. 243; and on the accusative case with  $\partial n$ , cp. 1 Pet. iii. 5. It indicates an eager resort to God for refige as well as an eager explicit case. refuge, as well as an earnest reliance on Him for help.

This assertion confirms the Exposition just given of v. 4.

Those other widows, who have children and grandchildren, ought to please God by taking care of them. That is their first duty; let them learn that duty first of all, says the Apostle. And such Widows ought to be supported by their own relatives (v. 16), and not by the Church.

- προσμένει ταις δεήσεσι] she continually attends on the prayers, and on the supplications, particularly the public prayers of the Church. (See ii. 1.) She has an intercessory office. Cp. the striking words of S. Polycarp, 4, concerning the Widows, where he speaks of them as interceding continually for all men, and being like a holy Altar at which sacrifices of prayer and praise are offered to God:  $\chi \acute{\eta} \rho as \ldots \acute{\epsilon} \nu \tau \iota \gamma \chi \alpha \nu \iota \acute{\nu} \sigma as å διαλείπτως περὶ πάντων, γινωσκούσας ὅτι εἰσὶ θυσιαστήριον$

Such Widows may, in the eyes of men, seem to be desolate, but it is not so; they trust in God, and in Him alone, and therefore they are not alone. But other Women too often trust mainly on some earthly stay; and therefore those Widows, though they may seem desolate, are in fact stronger than other Women; for they have a stronger stay.

The Church herself, the Spouse of Christ, while She is in this Vale of tears, is a Widow; She appears to be left alone in this world; She trusts in God, and in Him alone. She is a Widow indeed, and therefore She is strong indeed. See Augustine in Ps. cxxxi.

6. 'Η σπαταλωσα] she that liveth in pleasure. St. Paul is here considering the case of wealthier widows;  $\sigma \pi \alpha \tau \alpha \lambda \hat{a} = \tau \rho \nu \phi \hat{\phi}$ , Hesych. James v. 5, ετρυφήσατε καὶ εσπαταλήσατε.

The word σπαταλάν properly signifies a careless and lavish waste of time and money squandered in self-indulgence. Cp. Aristoph. Nub. 56, & γύναι, λίαν σπαθά s.

— ζῶσα τέθνηκε] being alive she is dead. "Quod de viduâ deliciosá dixit Apostolus, etiam de animâ, si Deum suum amiserit, dei potest, vivens mortua est." Augustine (1 Joann. 47).

These wealthier widows, of whom the Apostle here speaks, are condemned for lavishing their money and their time on them-selves in luxury and dissipation, instead of providing for others. See the next verse.

8. Εὶ δέ τις - τῶν οἰκείων] But if any one, and here particularly, if a Widow wastes her means and her time idly and luxuriously, and does not take care of her own children or grandchildren (see above, v. 4), she has denied the faith, and is worse than a heathen. (1 Cor. xiv. 22.) Cp. the use of πιστδs = a Christian,

Doubtless, this is a general proposition applicable to all, and is to be understood as such. But here, as the context shows, it is specially applied to Widows. So Theodoret. Cp. v. 4, where Apostle propounds a general proposition, growing out, in a similar manner, of a particular case.

9.] The Apostle now proceeds to speak of those who may be admitted by Timothy, as Bishop of Ephesus, into the Church's Roll (κατάλογος) of Widows, and may be allowed to make profession of Widowhood, and of devotion to the service of God. Cp. Hooker, V. lxxviii. 11.

- γεγονυΐα] To be construed with μη ξλαττον έ. έ. 'non minus sexaginta annos nata.'

— ένδε ἀνδρδε γυνή] the Wife of one husband. Even the Heathen showed respect for Univiræ. Horat. Od. iii. 14. 5, "Unico gaudens mulier marito Prodeat." Servius (ad Virg. Æn. 111), "Flaminicam nonnisi unum maritum habere licet. Tertullian says (ad Uxor i. 7), "Sacerdotium vidultatis celebratum est apud Nationes. Disciplina Ecclesiæ, et præscriptio Apostoli Viduam adlegi in Ordinationem (al. ordinem) nisi univiram non concedit." And Tertullian says (de Veland. Virg. 9), "Ad quam sedem, præter annos sexaginta, non tantum univiræ, id est nuptæ aliquando, eliguntur, sed et matres, et educatrices filiorum." See above on iii. 2.

10. εὶ ἐτεκνοτρόφησεν] if she nursed children, i. e. her own. See 1 Thess. ii. 7. On the use of εἰ, if, specifying the qualification, cp. Titus i. 6, εἴ τις ἐστὶν ἀνέγκλητος.

Observe the acrists here, ετεκνοτρόφησεν, - εξενοδόχησεν, - ενιψεν, - επήρκεσεν, - επηκολούθησεν. Habits are here gathered up into acts, in order to show the normal condition of the widow's life and conversation.

11. παραιτοῦ] decline, refuse (see iv. 7); do not admit them on the roll of the Widows of the Church, referred to in v. 9.

 Θταν γὰρ καταστρηνιάσωσι τοῦ Χριστοῦ] (younger Widows) have waxed wanton against Christ, to Whom the Widows of the Church are supposed to make profession of entire devotion when admitted on the Roll of the Widows. See

v. 5, and Tertullian as quoted on v. 9. The word στρηνιῶν, to run riot, is explained by ἀτακτεῖν (Suidas), and by ὑβρίζειν διὰ τὸν πλοῦτον (Hesych.), and is connected with the Lat. strenuus, Engl. strain, and indicates that full γαμείν θέλουσιν, 12 έχουσαι κρίμα, ότι τὴν πρώτην πίστιν ἡθέτησαν. 13 6 Αμα f Tit. 2. 3. δὲ καὶ ἀργαὶ μανθάνουσι περιερχόμεναι τὰς οἰκίας, οὐ μόνον δὲ ἀργαὶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ φλύαροι καὶ περίεργοι, λαλοῦσαι τὰ μὴ δέοντα.

habit of body, which is shown by wantonness and excess, as it were, like the lusty restiveness of animals, who strain against the rein, and wax fat, and kick. (Deut. xxxii. 15.) Cp. Rev. xviii. 7. 9, εδόξασε και εστρηνίασε, πορνεύσαντες και στρηνιάσαντες.

So these younger Widows, when nourished by the alms of the Church, will use the strength which they thence derive against Him Who gives it; they will become impatient of restraint, and will not bear the yoke of Christ; and are not therefore to be invited, or allowed, to make profession of Widowhood, nor to be admitted into the roll of the Widows of the Church, lest they fall into a snare, and incur condemnation by contracting a second marriage, and by renouncing their pledges to Him. Theodoret.

12. ἔχουσαι κρίμα, κ.τ.λ.] having condemnation; sentence of condemnation. See iii. 6. These words are explained by Tertullian (de Monog. 13) by reference to the profession of undivided devotion to Christ, which Widows of the Church made on their admission to the roll of Widowhood, and which they cancel by the subsequent act of their will  $(\theta \in \lambda \eta \mu \alpha)$  resolving on a second marriage. "Juvenculæ viduæ (says Tertullian) in viduitate deprehensæ, et aliquamdiù affectatæ, nubere volunt, habentes judicium quòd primam fidem resciderunt: illam videlicet à quâ in viduitate inventæ, et professæ eam, non perseverant. Propter quod vult eas nubere, ne primam fidem susceptæ viduitatis posteà rescindant." And so Theodoret and Chrys., who says that Widows indeed are, as it were, "betrothed to Christ." And Augustine inaeu are, as it wele, de bono Viduitatis, 11), "Irritam fecerunt fidem, quâ priùs vo-verant quad perseverantià implere noluerunt;" and de sanctà verant quod perseverantia implere noluerunt;" and de sancta Virginitate, 34, "In eo, quod primo voverant, non steterunt;" and in Ps. 75, "Voverunt et non reddiderunt."

The words έχουσαι κρίμα, ότι are interpreted by most of the Fathers, Greek and Latin, 'having condemnation, because.' And so κρίμα is used Matt. xxiii. 13. Mark xii. 40. Luke xx. 47, and in this Epistle, iii. 6. And so Calvin, Beza, Erasmus, Luther, and the Authorized Version.

The pledge which they made to Christ is called πρώτη πίστις, their first pledge, in regard to the subsequent promise which they make by marriage to another husband.

Some learned Romanist Expositors here (e. g. Cornelius a Lapide) lay great stress on these words of St. Paul, as the groundwork of an argument that the Apostle would have approved, and by implication recommends, Vows of Celibacy.

On this it may be observed-

(1) That it is true the Apostle supposes the Widows of the Church, who are here described, to make a profession of Widowhood on their admission to their Ecclesiastical state as Widows.

(2) He also says, that they who marry after that profession are guilty of breaking their plighted troth to Christ.

(3) But it is also to be remarked, that St. Paul expressly commands Timothy not to admit any one into the class of Widows before sixty years of age (v. 9).

(4) And he states, as the reason of this prohibition, that younger widows, if they are admitted, may wax wanton against Christ, and desire to marry, and incur condemnation by violating their pledge of Widowhood.

(5) It is therefore evident, that St. Paul would not have permitted persons of tender years to take a vow of celibacy; and he would not have allowed Timothy to impose such yows. would have censured those persons as guilty of a heinous sin, who abuse their spiritual influence and pastoral authority in order to entangle young, inexperienced, and enthusiastic women in such vows, and allure them into a Cloister, under plea of espousing them to Christ; and so expose them to the peril of the condemnation, which they incur, if they afterwards desire to marry, and break their engagement to Him.

(6) It has been alleged by some, that St. Paul's argument here concerns only younger Widows, who, having experienced the joys and comforts of a married life, are to be dealt with in a different way on that account; and that his cautions and prohibitions are not to be extended to the case of other younger women who have never been married, and are ready to devote themselves to the service of Christ and His Church, and to take a vow of celibacy.

(7) But to this it may be said, that in verse 14 he says and not ταs νεωτέραs, the younger νεωτέρας, younger women, and not τας νεωτέρας, the younger widows. See note there.

(8) Next, the Apostle had already considered the case of such younger women, who were desirous of devoting themselves to the service of Christ and of His Church, and who were recognized by the Church as such, and who were, in fact, the Deacon-esses already mentioned by St. Paul, and concerning whom he had given precepts in chapter iii. 11 (where see note) in connexion with the office of Deacons.

(9) He does not say that these Deaconesses are to be required, invited, or permitted to take a vow of celibacy

He says nothing on this head; but he enables others to infer his mind in this respect, as to the Deaconesses, from what he says as to the Deacons.

The Deacons are described as husbands of one wife, ruling their children and their own houses well (iii. 12). St. Paul would not receive to the Diaconate those who have been married more than once. He does not, indeed, require marriage, but he does not impose celibacy.

This is his rule for young men who are to be ordained to the Diaconate.

We may thence gather, what his judgment was with regard to young women who are candidates for the office of Deaconess in the Church. He would not allow them to make a vow of celibacy, and he would not permit any to impose such a vow upon

Some reasons have been stated above for believing that Priscilla, the wife of Aquila, was a Deaconess of the Church. See on Acts xviii. 18.

One of the functions of Deaconesses would probably be to be assistants to the Presbyters in the Baptism of Women; and married women or Widows would be most eligible for this function of the Deaconess; while unmarried women would be preferable for other duties of the same office of Deaconess.

On the whole, on reviewing what the Apostle has said on the subject of Widows and Deaconesses,

(1) We are led to admire the divine wisdom and foresight by which he was enabled to thread his way through its intricacies, and to provide cautions against the evils which afterwards arose in the Church in connexion with it; and to prescribe rules for her guidance in this important and difficult matter in succeeding

(2) We may also be permitted to cherish a hope, that these Apostolic counsels may hereafter bear more abundant fruit than is now the case;

The offices of the Deaconess and of the Widow are here commended by the Holy Spirit to the reverent regard and affectionate use of the Church.

It is much to be regretted, that these offices have fallen almost into desuetude, by reason of the human corruptions by which the divine counsels of the Apostle have been marred; especially from the imposition of vows of celibacy. The abuses by which these offices have been blemished, have entailed on the Church a forfeiture of the benefits derivable from the offices

(3) But it is the part of true Reformation, to separate the abuses of things, from the things themselves that are abused. And it would be a blessed work of Christian Charity, to restore the offices of Widow and Deaconess in the Church to their primitive simplicity; and so to engage the affections and sympathies, and to exercise the quiet piety and devout zeal of Christian women, old and young, in the service of Christ, in a regular and orderly manner, under the guidance of lawful Authority, and with its commission and benediction, according to the Apostolic model prescribed by the Holy Ghost.

13. "Αμα δὲ καὶ ἀργαὶ μανθάνουσι] Moreover also being idle they are learners, running about from house to house. Here is an example of an oxymoron,-a common figure of speech with

St. Paul. See on Rom. xii. 11.

These Widows profess to be learners in the school of Christ, which is a school of diligence and fruitfulness, and yet they are apyal, idle and unprofitable, whereas the true Widow learns by labour, and is fruitful in good works. They profess to be learning their calling as Widows of the Church, in His service; but their life is a contradiction to their profession.

The emphasis is on the word μανθάνουσι, - they are learners and yet idle, and nothing but learners, and never taught. Idleness is their learning. Their scholarship is folly. Their industry is thriftless bustle and silly talk.

Many learned Interpreters render these words, " they learn to be idle;" and the construction is defended by Winer, § 45, p. 311, from Plato, Euthyd. 276, οἱ ἀμαθεῖς ἄρα σοφοὶ μανθά-

But it can hardly be said, that they could learn to be idle; they were idle, and showed their idleness by what they did and said.

14 g Βούλομαι οθν νεωτέρας γαμείν, τεκνογονείν, οἰκοδεσποτείν, μηδεμίαν g 1 cor. 7. 9. ἀφορμὴν διδόναι τ $\hat{\omega}$  ἀντικειμέν $\hat{\omega}$  λοιδορίας χάριν $^{15}$  ήδη γάρ τινες έξετράπησαν  $^{\rm h.\, ver.\, 3.}_{\rm h.\, mom.\, 12.\, 8.}$ οπίσω τοῦ Σατανα.

fίσω τοῦ Σατανᾶ.  $\frac{16 \text{ h}}{16 \text{ h}}$ Εἴ τις πιστὸς ἢ πιστὴ ἔχει χήρας, ἐπαρκείτω αὐταῖς, καὶ μὴ βαρείσθω  $\mathring{\eta}^{8 \text{ l} 2.28}_{\text{Gal. 6. 6.}}$ γλησία, ἴνα ταῖς ὄντως χήρας ἐπαρκέστη έκκλησία, ίνα ταις όντως χήραις έπαρκέση.

17 · Οἱ καλῶς προεστῶτες πρεσβύτεροι διπλῆς τιμῆς ἀξιούσθωσαν, μάλιστα οἱ Κρυι. 24. 14. πιῶντες ἐν λόγῳ καὶ διδασκαλία: 18 κ λένει νὰο ἡ νιοσκὸ Βοῦς ἐλ. 25. 4. κοπιῶντες ἐν λόγω καὶ διδασκαλί $\alpha$  <sup>18 k</sup> λέγει γὰρ ἡ γραφὴ, Bοῦν ἀλοῶντα  $\frac{\tilde{c}$  cev. 19. 13. Matt. 10. 10.  $\tilde{c}$  οὐ φιμώσεις καὶ,  $\tilde{A}$ ξιος ὁ ἐργάτης τοῦ μισθοῦ αὐτοῦ.  $\frac{\tilde{c}$  Luke 10. 7.  $\tilde{c}$  1 cor. 9. 9.

The word  $\mu\alpha\nu\theta d\nu\omega$  is often put absolutely in the New Testament. Thus Matt. xi. 29,  $\mu d\theta\epsilon\tau\epsilon$   $d\pi^{\prime}$   $\epsilon\mu\sigma\rho$ . 2 Tim. iii. 14, ἔμαθες, and is used in a similar sense in this Epistle, ii. 11, γυνη έν ήσυχία μανθανέτω, 'let a woman be a learner in quietness' and by quietness; the very opposite of what is predicated of these widows who are idle, and yet always running about from house to house, doing nothing, and prating much  $(\phi \lambda \delta a \rho a)$ ; not working (ἀργαὶ, ἀεργοὶ), and yet περί-εργοι, meddlers, busy-bodies. Cp. 2 Thess. iii. 11, μηδὲν ἐργαζομένους ἀλλὰ περιεργαζομένους.

The Christian Widow, says the Apostle, ought to be a learner of piety (μανθανέτω εὐσεβεῖν, v. 4); but these are silly women, ever learning (πάντοτε μανθάνουσαι), but never coming to the knowledge of the truth. 2 Tim. iii. 7.

- φλύαροι] praters. 3 John 10, λόγοις πονηροῖς φλυαρῶν s. The word is explained by ληρῶν and μωρολογῶν in Hesych.

14. νεωτέρας] younger women generally, and younger widows particularly.

This is a general proposition arising from the particular case under consideration (as in v. 8), and is connected with what pre-

This proposition is to be compared with what St. Paul says, 1 Cor. vii. 7—9. 26. 29, θ έλω δὲ πάντας ἀνθρώπους εἶναι ὡς καὶ ἐμαυτὸν . . . . λέγω δὲ τοῖς ἀγάμοις καὶ ταῖς χήραις, καλὸν αὐτοῖς, έὰν μείνωσιν ως κάγω.

But how, it may be asked, is that expression of the Apostle's will  $(\theta \dot{\epsilon} \lambda \eta \mu a)$ , that all were, like himself, unmarried, and his declaration there that it is good for them so to remain, consistent with what he says here, βούλομαι νεωτέρας γαμείν, I desire that younger women should marry?

The answer to this question seems to be,-

In the former case, the Apostle uses the word θέλω, in the latter he says βούλομαι.

(2) These two words have different significations. words  $\theta \dot{\epsilon} \lambda \omega$ ,  $\theta \dot{\epsilon} \lambda \eta \mu \alpha$ , express his own personal inner will; that which his own Reason, enlightened by Grace, led him to choose as best in the abstract for the attainment of the end of man's existence, union with God, as the greatest good.

(3) But βούλομαι represents that which he desires relatively, taking into consideration all the external circumstances of the case; and what, after a careful survey of those circumstances, he deems to be most expedient, rebus sic stantibus, and considering mankind as they are in themselves, and the temptations from Satan, the world, and the flesh, by which they are beset; and what therefore he gives as his counsel, βούλευμα, and his βούλημα,

(4) His abstract θέλημα is for celibacy; but his relative βούλημα, in the case of younger women, is for Marriage.

(5) This conclusion is confirmed by what he says at the beginning of the chapter just referred to, 1 Cor. vii. 1: "It is good (καλὸν abstractedly) for a man not to touch a woman; but relatively, on account of the fornications which abound (διὰ τὰs πορνείαs), let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband."

(6) Thus, while the Apostle maintains the dignity of the single state, with a view, where it is possible, to entire devotion of bedra and could be the country of the state.

of body and soul to the service of God (1 Cor. vii. 32. 34), he also, like a wise guide, carefully surveys the dangers of the road, and considers the infirmities of the traveller, and gives his directions accordingly.

This is well expressed by an ancient Bishop and Father of the Church, who had a high appreciation of the dignity of celibacy, as his writings show; but yet applies the word νεφτέρας to virgins as well as widows, and says, "His verbis intelligamus eas quas nubere voluit meliùs potuisse continere quam nubere; sed melius nubere qu'am retro post Satanam ire, id est ab illo excellenti virginitatis vel viduitatis proposito in posteriora respiciendo cadere et interire." Augustine (de bono Viduitatis, c. 11). See also the next note.

- τεκνογονείν ] to bear children.

This precept may at first perhaps cause surprise.

But this word τεκνογονείν, as well as γαμείν, οἰκοδεσποτείν, are to be taken in connexion with their context; and are to be understood as containing a solemn warning against the deadly sins to which the illicit unions of which he speaks give occasions. Those unions were not  $\gamma \dot{a} \mu \omega_i$ , Marriages, but Adulteries; and they had not their fruit in the birth and life of children, but were often attended with deliberate acts of abortion or infanticide. "Nam, quæ de adulterio concipiunt mulieres frequenter occi-dunt." Primasius. A warning to our own age.

dunt." Primasius. A warning to our own age. The dark picture drawn by S. Hippolytus in his recently discovered work (as may be seen in "S. Hippolytus and the Church of Rome," p. 269), affords a striking illustration of the wisdom and truth of this Apostolic precept. This might well be called "a following of Satan," v. 15. A similar remark may be applied to οἰκοδεσποτεῦν. Here also is a warning for our times.

15. ὀπίσω τοῦ Σατανᾶ] The younger widows followed after Satan by breaking their plighted troth to Christ; and other younger women did so by falling into temptations, against which a remedy and a safeguard has been provided by God in Holy a remedy and a safeguard has been provided by God in Holy Matrimony. See the preceding note.

17. Οἱ καλῶs—πρεσβύτεροι] He now passes on to treat of the Discipline to be exercised towards Presbyters, and this subject is continued to the end of the chapter.  $-\delta_i \pi \lambda \hat{\eta} \hat{s} \tau \iota u \hat{\eta} \hat{s}]$  double pay. See Joseph Mede's Discourse, xix. pp. 70–73; and Dr. Barrow's Consecration Sermon, xii. p. 177, ed. 1683. Prof. Blunt, on the Church History of the First Three Centuries, chap. ii. p. 28, and note above on Matt. xv. 4; and Occasional Sermons by the Editor, No. xxxviii.

18. Βοῦν ἀλοῶντα] the ox while treading out the corn. See 1 Cor. ix. 9. Mark, "the Law is spiritual;" see on Deut. xxv. 4.
— 'Αξιος δ ἐργάτης] Worthy is the labourer of his pay. Luke x. 7. It has been alleged here (e. g. by Wieseler, Chronol. p. 303, note), that St. Paul never applies the word Scripture to the New Testament, and that these words cannot be a quotation from St. Luke's Gospel.

This is a bold assertion.

St. Peter combines all St. Paul's Epistles with the Scriptures of the Old Testament; and says, "that unlearned and un-stable men wrest them as they do the rest of the Scriptures," τάς λοιπάς γραφάς (2 Pet. iii. 16), and therefore St. Peter regarded St. Paul's Epistles as an integral part of Scripture.

If St. Peter in his Epistle called St. Paul's Epistles Scripture, may not St. Paul in those Epistles have called some of the Four Gospels Scripture?

Especially, may not St. Paul have done so in his last Epistles?

Now it is almost certain that the present Epistle was one of St. Paul's last Epistles; and it is most probable, that St. Luke's Gospel had been published and circulated several years before the present Epistle was written (see on 2 Cor. viii. 18); and it is also certain, that St. Luke's Gospel was received and read as Holy Scripture as soon as it was written, and delivered to the Church. It is certain also, that St. Luke's Gospel contains the words here quoted by St. Paul, and introduced by him, together with a quotation from the Old Testament (Deut. xxv. 4), with the preamble by which St. Paul is accustomed to introduce quotations from Scripture, λέγει ή Γραφή. (Rom. iv. 3; ix. 17; x. 11; xi. 2.

May we not therefore be permitted to believe, that St. Paul is here quoting from St. Luke's Gospel? and that by combining a quotation from that Gospel with a quotation from the Book of Deuteronomy, the Apostle purposely designed to teach the important truth, that the Gospels are inspired by God no less than the Books of Moses are; and that the Gospels are to be received as Scripture by all, as the Books of Moses were received by the ancient people of God, and by the Apostles and Evangelists, and by the Son of God Himself.

See also the note on Luke x. 7.

1 Deut. 19, 15. Tit. 1, 13. Deut. 13, 11.

19 | Κατὰ πρεσβυτέρου κατηγορίαν μὴ παραδέχου, ἐκτὸς εἰ μὴ ἐπὶ δύο ἡ τριῶν μαρτύρων. 20 Τους άμαρτάνοντας ενώπιον πάντων έλεγχε, ίνα καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ φόβον έχωσι.

21 Διαμαρτύρομαι ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ καὶ τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν άγγέλων, ίνα ταθτα φυλάξης χωρίς προκρίματος, μηδέν ποιών κατά πρόσκλισιν. 22 π Χειρας ταχέως μηδενι ἐπιτίθει, μηδὲ κοινώνει ἁμαρτίαις ἀλλοτρίαις.

m Acts 6. 6. & 13. 3. 1 Tim. 3. 10. 2 John 11. n Ps. 104. 15, Σεαυτον άγνον τήρει 23 ημηκέτι ύδροπότει, άλλ' οίνω όλίγω χρώ, δια τον στόμαχόν σου καὶ τὰς πυκνάς σου ἀσθενείας.

20. Τουs αμαρτάνοντας Those Presbyters who sin and continue in sin, and are known to continue in sin; rebuke them

This seems to be the meaning of the words. For,

(1) He does not say άμαρτόντας, but άμαρτάνοντας: and this present participle with the article prefixed expresses the character and habit. So δ πειράζων, δ βαπτίζων, οἱ στρατευόμενοι, δ κλέπτων, and other examples. See Winer, § 18, p. 99, and § 45, p. 316, and below on 1 John iii. 6. 9.

(2) He is speaking specially of Presbyters, whose sins, particularly in doctrine, are public and notorious. And this exposition is confirmed by the application of the word  $\alpha\mu\alpha\rho\tau(a)$  to them here, and in v. 24, and Tit. iii. 11, where he says of a heretical teacher, that he άμαρτάνει ων αὐτοκατάκριτος.

St. Paul, by the use of the word ἀμαρτάνω thus applied to unsound teaching, declares the moral guilt of false doctrine. Cp. Mark xvi. 15, 16.

In his charge to the Ephesian Presbyters at Miletus, he had already delivered a solemn warning against the perverse doctrines which would manifest themselves among them after his own departure. (Acts xx. 29, 30.) Cp. the words of Christ to the Angel of the Church of Ephesus. (Rev. ii. 4, 5.)

(3) Hence S. Augustine (Serm. 82), in considering the question propounded by some, how this precept concerning rebuke is to be reconciled with our Lord's command, Matt. xviii. 15-18, says,-" If our brother sins against us privately, he is to be rebuked privately; but if a man sins publicly, he is to be rebuked publicly;" "corripienda sunt secretius, que peccantur secretius; corripienda sunt coram omnibus, quæ peccantur coram omnibus;" and this is the case of unsound teaching. Cp. 2 Tim. iv. 2-4, where St. Paul uses the word ἔλεγξον with special reference to false teachers; and see note on v. 22.

21. Διαμαρτύρομαι] I solemnly protest and adjure thee. This charge concerns what precedes (vv. 17-20), and also what follows to the end of the chapter, and marks the Apostle's deep sense of the solemn importance of the functions of the Episcopal Office, especially in the Ordinations to the Priesthood, and in the conduct of a Bishop to his Presbyters.

— ἐκλεκτῶν ἀγγέλων] the elect Angels. Those who have "kept their first estate." (Primas.) See above, 1 Tim. iii. 6, 7; and Bp. Bull's Sermon on the Office of Angels, i. p. 321.

This reference to the elect Angels has a special beauty and propriety in this solemn Apostolic Charge to the Bishop of Ephesus. Timothy was the Angel of that Church. (See Rev. i. 20; ii. 1.) If then Timothy desires to be a companion and fellow-worshipper for ever with the elect Angels in the Church glorified in heaven, let him do the work of a faithful Angel in the Church militant. Angels are present in Churches; see 1 Cor. xi. 10.

Here also, in the use of this word Angel, may perhaps be another instance in which St. Paul's language in his Epistles to the Bishop of Ephesus seems to have a prelusive and prophetic connexion with that of the last Apostle and Evangelist who lived and died at Ephesus, and wrote his Gospel there, and ruled the Churches of Asia from his see in that city. See above on iv. 5.

κατὰ πρόσκλισιν] by partiality: properly by a bias, inclination, or leaning towards. So Clemens R. (c. 21) speaks of άγάπη μή κατά προσκλίσεις.

22. Xeîpas r. p. êmir[6ei] lay hands suddenly on no one. In ordination. (Theodoret, Chrys., Primas.) And so Bp. Pearson (Minor Works, ii. p. 385): "Accepit Timotheus ab Apostolo auctoritatem exercendi censuras in tota Ecclesia Ephesina. Peccantes coram omnibus argue; eademque auctoritas speciatim ad Presbyteros in officio continendos extendebatur, que eò nobis evidentior proponitur, quòd cum certa limitatione proponitur; Adversus Presbyterum accusationem noli recipere nisi sub duobus vel tribus testibus (v. 19). Idem etiam de potestate sacros ordines conferendi observandum est, quæ ideò magis fit conspicua, quia cum cautione proponitur, Manus citò nemini imposueris, neque communicaveris alienis peccatis." And so the Church of Eng-land in her First Collect for the Ember Weeks.

- αμαρτίαις άλλοτρίαις] with other men's sins. See v. 20.

If you admit them to Holy Orders, knowing them to be unfit, or if you neglect to rebuke them, you are a partaker of their sins.

Hence Christ imputes to the Angels of the Church of Ephesus, and of the other Churches of Asia, the unsoundness of doctrine, and other sins, which prevailed there. (Rev. ii. 4, 5.

"Unumquemque Angelum uniuscujusque Ecclesiæ separatim alloquitur, et unicuique sua bona aut mala opera imputat."

 Bp. Pearson, ii. p. 387.
 — Σεαυτὸν ἀγνὸν τήρει] Keep thyself pure, in order that thou mayest be a pattern to others, especially to thy Presbyters (iv. 12), and mayest be able to exercise spiritual discipline over them, and others, with courage and a good conscience, and without being liable to the charge of committing the sins, which thou art bound to punish in others. And yet do not suppose, that this precept of purity is intended to oblige thee to a rigid and ascetic regimen, which may injure thy health, and incapacitate thee for the active discharge of thy episcopal duties. Therefore with this precept of purity the Apostle couples the following;—

23. μηκέτι ὑδροπότει] be no longer an ὑδροπότηs, a water-drinker; showing that hitherto Timothy had been such. Thus St. Paul bears testimony, and (as this Epistle was read in the Church), a public testimony, to the temperance of the Bishop of Ephesus. Cp. iii. 8.

Observe the prudent caution of the Apostle's language. He does not say μηκέτι ὕδωρ πίνε, but μηκέτι ὑδροπότει: nor does he say οἶνον πῖνε, but οἴν $\omega$  ὀλίγ $\omega$  χρ $\hat{\omega}$ : nor does he say διὰ τὴν γαστέρα, but διὰ τὸν στόμαχόν σου. Cp. Libanius (Epist. 1578 apud Wetstein): πέπτωκε ημίν δ στόμαχος ταις συνεχέσιν ύδροποσίαις, τόνου δὲ στερηθεὶς τὰ σιτία διὰ τὴν ἀσθένειαν διαλύει. Plin. H. N. xxiii. 22, "Vino modico stomachus recreatur."

— τὰς πυκνάς σον ἀσθενείας] thy frequent infirmities, or sicknesses. S. Gregory (Moral. in Evang. p. 1449. Hom. iv. in Matth.) suggests the inquiry, why St. Paul, who had restored Eutychus to life (Acts xx. 10), and had healed the sickness of the father of Publius, and others, at Malta (Acts xxviii. 8), did not preserve the health of his beloved son Timothy, who was his companion and coadjutor in preaching, and was placed by him as Bishop at Ephesus.

He observes that those miracles were done in the presence of unbelievers, and that miracles are a sign, not to those who believe. but to those who believe not (1 Cor. xiv. 22). "Ille foris per miraculum sanandus erat, qui interiùs vivus non erat, ut per hoc, quod exterior potestas ostenderet, hunc ad vitam interior virtus animaret. Ægrotanti autem fideli socio exhibenda foris signa non fuerunt, qui salubriter intus vivebat."

Bodily health was to be given miraculously to those who were sick in soul, in order that by the cure of the body, the soul might be saved also; but they who were sound in soul needed not a bodily cure; in their case, the sickness of the body might even promote the health of the soul.

Timothy was to be an example to others of Christian virtue, by patience in suffering, as well as by energy in action; and his zeal in the discharge of active duties would be more exemplary to others, and more fruitful in future glory to himself, because he was subject to frequent bodily infirmities.

Almighty God, in order to show His love and power in the body, healed men by means of St. Paul's handkerchiefs and aprons (Acts xix. 12). But also to show His love and power in dear son in the faith to suffer bodily pain, and enabled him by His grace to win eternal glory by suffering.

He thus teaches all how they may be enabled to suffer; and that none should be staggered and perplexed when they see good men afflicted with severe physical sufferings.

For another reason of the mention of these infirmities by St. Paul, see note above on Phil ii. 26.

As to the causes of the non-exertion of the miraculous power of the Apostles, in order to heal their own infirmities, see note above on 2 Cor. xii. 9.

24 Τινών ανθρώπων αι άμαρτίαι πρόδηλοί είσι, προάγουσαι είς κρίσιν τισί δὲ καὶ ἐπακολουθοῦσιν. 25 Ὠσαύτως δὲ καὶ τὰ ἔργα τὰ καλὰ πρόδηλά εἰσιν, καὶ τὰ ἄλλως ἔχοντα κρυβηναι οὐ δύνανται.

 $\overline{
m VI.}$   $^{1-a}$   $^{\sigma}O\sigma$ οι εἰσὶν ὑπὸ ζυγὸν δοῦλοι, τοὺς ἰδίους δεσπότας πάσης τιμῆς  $^{a}$  Eph. 6, 5–8,  $^{c}$   $^{$ άξίους ἡγείσθωσαν, ἴνα μὴ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ ἡ διδασκαλία βλασφημῆται. Tit. 2.5, 8, 9. 2 Οἱ δὲ πιστοὺς ἔχοντες δεσπότας, μὴ καταφρονείτωσαν ὅτι ἀδελφοί εἰσιν, ἀλλὰ μαλλον δουλευέτωσαν, ότι πιστοί είσι καὶ άγαπητοὶ οἱ τῆς εὐεργεσίας ἀντιλαμβανόμενοι. Ταῦτα δίδασκε καὶ παρακάλει.

 $^{3\ b}$  Εἴ τις έτεροδιδασκαλεῖ, καὶ μὴ προσέρχεται ὑγιαίνουσι λόγοις, τοῖς τοῦ  $^{b\ Gal,\ 1.\ 6,\ 7.}$ μηδεν επιστάμενος, αλλά νοσων περί ζητήσεις και λογομαχίας, εξ ων γίνεται 2 Tim. 2. 23.

24, 25. Τινῶν ἀνθρώπων—δύνανται] These two verses are connected with what precedes (vv. 20. 22) concerning Timothy's Episcopal duties, particularly towards Presbyters.

Observe the indication of this connexion in the repetition of the word άμαρτία. See on v. 20. The Apostle had been speaking of Ordination, and of the guilt of partaking in other men's sins by too much facility in laying on of hands. Hence Timothy might be supposed to inquire of St. Paul, How am I to judge of other men's sins? And what if I am not cognizant of them?

St. Paul, therefore, propounds a general proposition in reply, which is to be applied by Timothy to the special circumstances before him. Cp. vv. 8. 14, where general principles are laid down for application in particular cases.

The sins of some men are manifest, going before them to the act of judging on your part (εἰs κρίσιν): so that you may readily discern what sort of men they are; and you may not admit to Ordination such persons as are thus self-condemned (αὐτοκατάκριτοι, Titus iii. 11).

Other men's sins are also evinced after trial. They will show themselves by trial. The office will show the man.

The conjunction καὶ indicates that Timothy will be able to discern them also. The former you must reject; the latter you must rebuke. Do not make yourself an accomplice in either, by carelessness in admitting the one to the Priesthood, or by connivance at the sins of the others who have been admitted by you

So for the most part, Chrys., Theodoret, Severian (in Catena), and Œcumenius, and Theophylact expound the passage.

25.  $\Omega \sigma a \acute{o} \tau ws]$  In like manner you may easily determine, in some cases, whether a man may be admitted by you to the Priesthood. His sound doctrine and good deeds will be manifest; they will speak for him before admission. And if his sound doctrine and good deeds are not manifest then, yet they will soon be proved by trial, after his admission to the office. If he is a faithful and zealous Priest, his doctrine and works cannot be hid.

Thus you may really discern between the evil and the good, and exercise discipline accordingly.

The reading of this passage is somewhat various in the MSS., but the varieties are of little importance, and do not affect the sense. Elz. has  $\tau \grave{a}$  καλὰ έργα, and έστι and δύναται, but A, D, F, G have  $\tau \grave{a}$  έργα  $\tau \grave{a}$  καλὰ, and D, F, G have  $\epsilon \grave{i}$ σι, and A, D have δύνανται.

CH. VI. 1. Ίνα μὴ τὸ ὄνομα τ. Θ.—βλασφημῆται] in order that the Name of God and the doctrine of the Gospel may not be evil spoken of by the heathen. See Rom. ii. 24, and Clemens R. c. 47. St. Paul here combats and condemns that false Teaching, which, under colour of preaching the doctrines of Universal Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity in Christ, enlisted the passions of Slaves against Masters, and Subjects against their Rulers, and thus exposed the Name of God and the doctrine of the Gospel to reproach and blasphemy from the Heathen, as if it were a Religion of Anarchy and Sedition, and ministered to man's evil appetites and love of lucre (v. 5), under the name of Piety and Godliness. We may compare what he says to Titus concerning those false teachers "subverting whole families by their doctrines for the sake of filthy lucre" (Titus i. 11; and see there, ii. 10). On the historical results of the working of this false teaching in ancient and modern times, see Bp. Sanderson's Sermon, vol. iii. p. 273, on 1 Pet. ii. 16, "As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God."

These anarchical doctrines were a natural product of a

These anarchical doctrines were a natural product of a diseased Judaism. The Jews, supposing themselves to be the favoured people of God, resented all secular rule as an usurpation on the prerogatives of Jehovah. See on Matt. xxii. 16-21. Vol. II.-Part III.

Luke xx. 22-25. Their Rabbis taught that it was a sinful thing to own any mortal Master, and to be Bond-servants to Heathens. See Lightfoot on 1 Cor. vii. 23.

They might, therefore, in hatred to Christianity, maliciously pervert the doctrines of the Gospel to purposes congenial to their own notions; or they might, even unwittingly, so misunderstand and misinterpret them, as to render them hateful to Society, and subversive of civil government and of domestic peace. See below on Titus i. 10, 11.

The great Apostle had, therefore, a difficult task to perform, in vindicating and maintaining, on the one side, the great doctrine of Christian liberty against some of the Judaizers; and in asserting and upholding the duty of Christian subjection, on the other hand, against those of the same class who abused the sacred name of Liberty into a plea for Licentiousness.

How beautifully does the divine wisdom, charity, and courage, with which the holy Apostle was endued, shine forth in the execution of this difficult work, in his Epistles!

In the Epistle to the Galatians he had pleaded the cause of Christian Liberty (see Gal. v. 1—13, and note at the end of the Second Chapter). In his Epistle to the Corinthians he had defined the limits of its use (see on 1 Cor. vi. 12). In his later Epistles, he has guarded against its perversion. See his precepts to Slaves here, and Eph. vi. 5, and Col. iii. 22, and the Epistle to Philemon, and Introduction to that Epistle, pp. 334-336; and to this Epistle, p. 434. God grant that, in this great question concerning Slavery, America may listen to St. Paul,—and be united indeed!

2. ὅτι πιστοί ϵἰ.—ἀντιλαμβανόμενοι] because they (i. e. the Masters) who take part in the mutual good offices (between Master and Slave), are believing, and beloved, that is, are brethren in

The word ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι is used here in its most proper sense. Persons who take hold of a weight (e.g. a piece of timber at its two extremities) with a view of helping one another in carrying it, are said respectively ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι. Thus Thucyd. ii. 61, τοῦ κοινοῦ τῆς σωτηρίας ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι, and Diodorus S. xviii. 9, ἀντιλαμβάνεσθαι τῆς ἐλευθερίας.

The relative duty of Master and Slave is of this kind. It is to be borne by both parties. Each of the two takes hold of it at his own end, and, like the fruitful cluster of the grapes of Eschol (Num. xiii. 23), it is to be carried on the shoulders of both. And, like that cluster, this burden is also a benefit  $(\epsilon i \epsilon \rho \gamma \epsilon \sigma (\alpha))$ . St. Paul will not flatter Masters at the expense of their Slaves, nor Slaves at the expense of their Masters. Each is to be an  $\epsilon i \nu \epsilon \rho \gamma \epsilon \gamma \delta \gamma$ , or benefactor, to the other. The Master owes food and wages to the Slave; the Slave owes faithful service to the Master.

The force and wisdom of this Apostolic teaching will be more evident and impressive, when it is borne in mind that these words of St. Paul, addressed to the Bishop of Ephesus, would be listened to by Masters and Slaves, gathered together in the Church, and hearing this Epistle publicly read in the religious congregations at Ephesus and other great cities of the world.

3. Εί τις έτεροδιδασκαλεί] If any man, under colour of Christian Liberty, teacheth otherwise, and would exempt Slaves from obe-dience to their Masters, St. Paul, in holy indignation, inveighs dience to their Masters, St. Paul, in holy indignation, inveighs against such a man, as one that is proud and knowth nothing, but doteth about questions and strife of words. Bp. Sanderson, iii. 163, on 1 Tim. iv. 4, and cp. iii. pp. 275. 290.

3—5.] Compare the fragment of S. Irenæus (ed. Pfaffii, p. 1), έστι μèν οῦν ἡ γνῶσιs ἡ ἀληθινὴ ἡ κατὰ Χριστὸν σύνεσιs, ἡν ὁ Παῦλος καλεῖ τὴν σοφίαν Θεοῦ ἐν μυστηρίῳ τὴν ἀποκεκρυμμένην (1 Cor. ii. 7) ἡν ὁ ψυχικὸς ἄνθρωπος οὐ δέχεται (1 Cor. ii. 14), ὁ λόγος τοῦ σταυροῦ (1 Cor. i. 18) οὖ ἐἀνπερ τις γεύσηται (Heb. vi. 4) οὺ μὴ παρελεύσεται ταῖς παραδιατριβαῖς καὶ λογομαχίαις τῶν τετυφωμένων καὶ ψυσιουμένων. καὶ φυσιουμένων. 3 N

2 Tim. 3. 5, 8. 2 Pet. 2. 3. 2 John 10. e Prov. 15, 16, ch. 4, 8, Heb. 13, 5, Heb. 13. 5. f Job 1. 21. & 27. 19. Ps. 49. 18. Prov. 27. 24. Eccles. 5. 14, 15. g Eccles. 29, 28 Matt. 6, 25. James 5, 1 i Prov. 1. 19. & 15. 16. Isa. 1. 23.

φθόνος, έρις, βλασφημίαι, υπόνοιαι πονηραί, 5 d διαπαρατριβαί διεφθαρμένων άνθρώπων τον νούν, καὶ ἀπεστερημένων της άληθείας, νομιζόντων πορισμόν είναι την εὐσέβειαν. 6 ε*Εστιν δὲ πορισμὸς μέγας ή εὐσέβεια μετὰ αὐταρκείας· 7 το ο δεν γαρ είσην έγκαμεν είς τον κόσμον, δήλον ότι ο δε εξενεγκείν τι δυνάμεθα. 8 ε έχοντες δε διατροφάς και σκεπάσματα τούτοις άρκεσθησόμεθα.

9 η Οί δε βουλόμενοι πλουτείν εμπίπτουσιν είς πειρασμόν καὶ παγίδα, καὶ έπιθυμίας πολλάς ἀνοήτους καὶ βλαβεράς, αἴτινες βυθίζουσι τοὺς ἀνθρώπους εἰς  $f_{1} = \frac{1}{1} + \frac{1}{$ τινες όρεγόμενοι ἀπεπλανήθησαν ἀπὸ τῆς πίστεως, καὶ έαυτοὺς περιέπειραν όδύναις πολλαίς.

& 56. 11. Jer. 5. 27, 28.

5. διαπαρατριβαί κ.τ.λ.] continued janglings of men depraved in their mind; and, consequently, by an act of divine retribution, bereft of the truth. See on iv. 2.

The preposition δια in διαπαρατριβαl gives to the word the Els. has παραδίατριβαl, but the reading in the text is authorized by A, D, F, G, I, and is received by Gb., Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Huther, Ellicott, Alford.

- νομιζόντων πορισμόν είναι την ευσέβειαν supposing that Godliness is a traffic for gain.

The false Teachers ingratiated themselves with Slaves, and other dependents, by flattering them, that because all men are equal and brethren in Christ, therefore they need not be subject to their Masters; or that, if they were subject, they had a claim to greater temporal advantages than they enjoyed; and thus they excited Slaves to disobedience, and made the profession of the Gospel to be a matter of secular traffic and worldly lucre.

St. Paul commands Masters to give to their Slaves what is just and equal (Col. iv. 1), but he also teaches Slaves this lesson: "if a man have food and raiment, let him be therewith content"

These passages seem to have been in the mind of Clement of Rome when he wrote (frag. iii.), μὴ ταρασσέτω τὴν καρδίαν ὑμῶν, ὅτι βλέπομεν τοὺς ἀδίκους πλουτοῦντας, καὶ στενοχωρουμένους τους του Θεου δούλους. Οὐδείς γὰρ δικαίων ταχὺν καρπόν ἔλαβεν, ἀλλ' ἐκδέχεται αὐτόν εἰ γάρ τὸν μισθον τῶν δικαίων ὁ Θεὸς εὐθέως ἀπεδίδου, ἐμπορίαν ἃν ἡσκοῦμεν, καὶ οὐκ εὐσέβειαν, οὐ διὰ τὸ εὐσεβὲς ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸ κερδαλέον διώκοντες.

Compare the Epistle of the Bishops against Paul of Samosata in Euseb. vii. 30, ήγούμενος πορισμόν είναι την θεοσέ-

Elz. has άφίστασο των τοιούτων after εὐσέβειαν, against the preponderance of the best authorities.

6. "Εστιν δέ πορισμός μέγας κ.τ.λ.] Observe the order of these words. "Eστιν is it is, put first, and emphatically rectifies a wrong notion, which might have been suggested by what had just been said. These false Teachers imagine that Godliness is Gain. No; in their sense it is not Gain. But (δè) yet it is (ἔστιν put emphatically, see Heb. xi. 1) great gain, if joined with contentment. Est autem quæstus magnus pietas. Quæstus est acquisitio lucri. Audite, pauperes. Communem habetis divitibus mundum; commune cœlum. Sufficientiam quærite, plus nolite. Cætera gravant, non sublevant; onerant, non honorant. Augustine (Serm. 85).

Aug. and Vulg. render αὐτάρκεια by sufficientia, i. e. competency, and this is its sense in 2 Cor. ix. 8, but here it means that frame of mind which St. Paul describes as his own, Phil. iv. 11, ξμαθον, εν οίς είμι, αυτάρκης είναι. See here v. 8, άρκεσ-

7. οὐδὲν γὰρ εἰσηνέγκαμεν] On this text see Augustine, Serm. 14 and Serm. 177.

- δηλον Omitted by A, F, G, and 17, and by Lach., Alf., but the preponderance of authority is in its favour, and it is received by Tisch.

The word δηλον here seems to signify a manifest token. The fact, which we all know, that we brought no earthly wealth with us into this world, is a manifest token that we shall not be able to carry any thing out of it. Cp. Job i. 21. Ps. xlix. 17. Eccl.

St. Paul speaks of the adnadorns of wealth, v. 17. Wealth is uncertain, and yet by its very uncertainty it may certify us that we may not put our trust in it; for it soon leaves us, or we must soon leave it. We must have, therefore, some other stay-the treasure of heaven.

8. αρκεσθησόμεθα] Τοῖς ἐφοδίοις τοῦ Θεοῦ αρκεσθησόμεθα. Clem. R. 2.

10. βίζα γὰρ πάντων τῶν κακῶν ἐ. ἡ φιλαργυρία] for the love of money is the root of all evil. Some learned Expositors and Critics would render bifa a root, and not the root; and would qualify the assertion of the Apostle into a declaration that the love of money is a root from which all evil may come. But this dilution of the phrase does not seem requisite or admissible. St. Paul does not assert that evil may not arise from some other cause besides love of money. But he has before his eyes certain evils, which professed to spring from εὐσέβεια or godliness. He affirms, on the contrary, that the root of them all is sordid love of lucre. And, as all writers are accustomed to do, he generalizes the proposition, and says that the love of money is the root of all evil-leaving it to the reader to apply the proposition specially to the evil before him.

Thus S. Polycarp, Bishop of Smyrna, and Martyr, imitating this passage (ad Phil. 4), says, 'Αρχὴ πάντων τῶν χαλεπῶν φιλαργυρία εἰδότες οὖν ὅτι οὐδὲν εἰσηνέγκαμεν εἰς τὸν κόσμον, ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ἐξενεγκεῖν τι ἔχομεν... διδάξωμεν ἑαυτοὺς πρῶτον πορεύεσθαι ἐν τῷ ἐντολῷ τοῦ Κυρίου. And even Heathen writers say, "Aviditas materia omnium malorum" (Ammian. Marcellin. xxxi. 4): ἡ φιλοχρηματία μήτηρ κακότητος ἀπάσης (Phocyl. 38. 41, ap. Athen. vii. p. 230). Wetstein. Cp. Juvenal, Sat. xiv. 173, "Inde ferè scelerum causæ," &c. Cp. Bp. Sanderson, i. 116; ii. p. 343.

Cp. Bp. Sanderson, 1. 116; ii. p. 343.

Tertullian, quoting this passage (de Patient. 7), ascribes it to the Holy Spirit of God. "Cupiditatem omnium malorum radicem Spiritus Domini per Apostolum pronuntiavit."

- ηs τινès ορεγόμενοι κ.τ.λ.] which certain persons reaching after and grasping at, strayed away from the right road of faith, and pierced themselves in different parts with many pangs.

As to the word περιπείρω, see examples in Wetstein, p. 350. It does not signify to pierce through, but to wound in different places, by the application  $(\pi \epsilon \rho l)$  of the person or thing to the object which inflicts the wound, as here; or by the impact of the instrument for wounding on the person or thing that is wounded. See the examples in Welstein, p. 350, particularly Gregory Nyssen (contra Usurarios), τοις άγκίστροις των τόκων έαυτους περιπείροντας, and (contra Fornicarios) δ πόρνος αὐτὸς έαυτῷ τὸ τῆς ἀτιμίας περιπείρει βέλος.

But whence is the metaphor, which is used here, derived?

(1) It may have been taken from a traveller journeying along a road, and tempted by fruit which he sees, to quit the path, and make his way through brambles and briars, and to clutch at it; by which action he wounds himself. So the man who covels an evil covetousness (Hab. ii. 9) pierces himself with thorns, which are compared by our Lord to the riches, and cares, and pleasures of this life (Luke viii. 14). Cp. Chrysostom and Theophyl. here.

(2) It has indeed been said by some, that there is an incorrectness of expression here, inasmuch as love of money implies a desire, and no one can be said to reach after a desire.

(3) But to this it may be said, that φιλαργυρία does not so much mean a desire of money to be gotten (ndeovetla), as a love of money already gained. It is rather avarice than covetousness. See Trench, Synonyms N. T. § xxiv.

The φιλαργυρία for which the Pharisees, who were most in esteem among the Apostle's fellow-countrymen, were proverbial (Luke xvi. 14), did not disqualify them for exercising a commanding influence, and for being, in the popular mind, patterns of sanctity, and objects of general admiration.

These sectaries, building on the temporal promises of the Ancient Law, made it an article of faith, that riches are a proof of divine approbation. Wealth was another name for Piety. Love of wealth was a Love of God's favour. Thus they sanctified

They were φιλάργυροι, and were known to be φιλάργυροι, and were admired as such. Even their φιλαργυρία was an object

11 ½ Σὰ δὲ, ὦ ἄνθρωπε τοῦ Θεοῦ, ταῦτα φεῦγε δίωκε δὲ δικαιοσύνην, εὐσέ- k 2 Tim. 2. 22. βειαν, πίστιν, ἀγάπην, ὑπομονὴν, πραϋπάθειαν· 12 1 ἀγωνίζου τὸν καλὸν ἀγῶνα 11 cor. 9. 25, 26. της πίστεως, ἐπιλαβοῦ της αἰωνίου ζωης, εἰς ην ἐκλήθης, καὶ ὡμολόγησας την ch. 1. 18. ver. 19. καλήν δμολογίαν ένώπιον πολλών μαρτύρων.

13 m Παραγγέλλω σοὶ ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ τοῦ ζωοποιοῦντος τὰ πάντα, καὶ m Deut. 32. 30. Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ μαρτυρήσαντος ἐπὶ Ποντίου Πιλάτου τὴν καλὴν ὁμολογίαν, Matt. 27. 11. John 18. 37. 14 τηρῆσαί σε τὴν ἐντολὴν ἄσπιλον, ἀνεπίληπτον, μέχρι τῆς ἐπιφανείας τοῦ ch. 5. 21. n. ch. 1. 11, 17. Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ,  $^{15}$  η ἡν καιροῖς ἰδίοις δείξει ὁ μακάριος καὶ μόνος  $^{8}$  5. 11. 14. Δυνάστης, ὁ Βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλευόντων, καὶ Κύριος τῶν κυριευόντων,  $^{16}$  ο ὁ  $^{8}$  19. 16. Ο Εχοί, 33. 20. Δυναστης, ο Βαστικεύς των ραστικεύς των ραστικεύς των μόνος έχων ἀθανασίαν, φῶς οἰκῶν ἀπρόσιτον, ὃν εἶδεν οὐδεὶς ἀνθρώπων, οὐδὲ John 1. 18.

1 John 4. 12, 20.

p Job 31. 24. ίδειν δύναται, ῷ τιμὴ καὶ κράτος αἰώνιον, ἀμήν.

 $^{17}$   $^{\rm p}$   $^$

of popular imitation. Covetousness was consecrated into a virtue, and appeared to be desirable as such.

In accordance with these statements, we find in the LXX Version of the Old Testament, that φιλαργυρία is represented as something which is an object of pursuit to men. Thus Jerem. viii. 10, πάντες φιλαργυρίαν ἀποδιώκουσι. And even πλεονεξία is described as something to which the heart may be inclined,—κλίνον την καρδίαν μου είς τὰ μαρτύριά σου, καί μη είς πλεονεξίαν. Ps. cxix. 36.

And (4), perhaps the Genitive  $\hat{\eta}$ s may be connected with  $\hat{\rho}\hat{\iota}\hat{\xi}\alpha$ , in the following manner;—

Coverbousness (says the Apostle) is the Root of all evil. It is represented by him as a Root. It is a Root which seems to many to promise much worldly pleasure, profit, and delight; a Root which attracts the eye, and is therefore an object of desire. It is a Root which men see growing by the wayside of life, which they quit the path to gather, and grasp at it, and in clutching it wound themselves.

It may therefore be asked,-Is there any such Root in nature which may have suggested this picture to the Apostle?

The traveller in Italy, Sicily, Greece, and Asia, will readily answer that there is. It is that of the prickly pear, which is in itself both Root and Fruit. It attracts by its appearance and by its sweetness; it appears to be a Root productive of gratification to the appetite, but when clutched by the hand of one eager to plack it, he finds that it is fenced with prickles, and it wounds him with many thorns. It is thus described by Pliny, xxi. 17: "Est homini dulcis, mirumque è folio ejus radicem fieri, ac sic eam nasci." See also Theophrastus, Hist. plant. i. 12; iv. 5. It is called by Linnœus "ficus Indica ramis radicantibus." Billerbeck, Flora Classica, p. 116. 248.

Covetousness is such a Root as this; it seems to bear the fruits of worldly joy and profit, but when it is grasped by one who leaves the path of faith in order to gather it, it pierces him with many sorrows; it is a Root of thorns and briars both to body and soul.

11. Σὰ δὲ, ἄ ἄνθρωπε τοῦ Θεοῦ-φεῦγε δίωκε Βut thou, O man of God, flee these things, but follow after righteousness. He man of Goa, free these things, but follow after righteousness. He follows up the metaphor; fly from the allurements of covetousness, and keep the path of Faith (v. 10), and follow after Righteousness. Hunger after that, and thou shalt be filled. (Matt. v. 6.) Thou man of God! Thou hast been received into His family by His grace. Miserable indeed would it be, if the love of money kept thee down to earth, who criest to Him, Our Father which art in Heaven! All earthly wealth is vile in comparison with Him. Thou art going on a journey to Him Who is the Fether and Who dealest the journey to Him Who is thy Father, and Who dwells at thy Home. Use thy wealth as an inn, not as a house. Refresh thyself and pass on. Love not the world, but love Him Who made it. Thou canst take nothing out of the world, but He can take thee to Himself. Thou, O man of God, therefore flee these things. Flee them as a foe. Pursue after Righteousness as a friend. This will make thee rich indeed. See Augustine, Serm. 177.

- πραϋπάθειαν] meekness of heart. So A, F, G, Scholz, Lach., Tisch., Huther, Ellicott, Alf.—Elz. πραϋτητα. The word is used by Ignatius, Trall. 8.

12. ἐπιλαβοῦ] lay hold of that fruit which grows in the path of Faith, which will not wound thy hand, but will feed thee with eternal joys,—the fruit of the Tree of Life. (Rev. xxii. 2.)

- τη καλην δμολογίαν] the good confession, which thou madest before many witnesses at thy Baptism (Chrys., Theophyl.), when thou madest a public renunciation of the pomps of the world and the lusts of the flesh. Cp. 1 Pet. iii. 21. Heb. vi. 1. Tertullian (Coron. Mil. 3): "Aquam adituri contestamur nos renuntiare Diabolo, et pompæ, et angelis ejus." Cyprian (Ep. renuntiare Diabolo, et pompæ, et angelis ejus." Cyprian (Ep. 81): "Sæculo renuntiavimus cum baptizati sumus;" and Ep. 7. See also Hooker (V. lxiii.). Bingham (xi. chap. vii.), where he applies this passage to the Renunciation at Baptism. Blunt (Early Church, p. 37). On the emphatic use of the article  $\tau \eta \nu$  here, see above, i. 18.

13. τοῦ μαρτυρήσαντος—τὴν καλὴν ὁμολογίαν] Christ witnessed the good confession not by words only (John xviii. 36, 37. Matt. xxvii. 11), but by deeds, when He showed Himself to be the Saviour of the world, and died for it on the cross. As Theodoret says: "St. Paul calls the Salvation of the world the Good Confession of Christ, for He endured His Passion for it." Christ when crucified by the power of Heathen Rome, Christ when dying on the cross, at the great city of Jerusalem, at the time of its great Festival the Passover, when two Millions of people were present, witnessed that Good Confession, which has inspired, and will ever continue to inspire, the hearts of all Martyrs and Confessors with faith and courage, and peace and joy, even to the Day of His Second Advent to judge the world. the faithful Witness (Rev. i. 5; iii. 14), the glorious Protomartyr, the High Priest of our Profession (Heb. iii. 1), made that Good Confession which gives power to all other Good Confessions, when He was baptized in the Baptism of His own Blood, which imparts divine efficacy to all other Baptisms administered in His Name.

The phrase μαρτυρεῖν δμολογίαν is similar to μαρτυρεῖν μαρτυρίαν, 1 John v. 10. Rev. i. 2.

14. την εντολήν] the Commandment, of Faith and Duty, to which thou madest a vow of obedience at thy Baptism.

15. δείξει] will show. God will show that Appearing of Christ; will make it visible, and manifest to all: God Himself inhabits light inaccessible, and no man ever saw Him, or can see. But every eye will see the JUDGE (Rev. i. 7). Indeed, it is most equitable and just that all should see the face of Him by Whom they are to be judged. But only the pure in heart will see God (Matt. v. 8). Only they will be admitted to the beatific vision, and have the fruition of His glorious Godhead. Therefore, though the Father is the Judge of all the earth (Gen. xviii. 25), yet in His own Divine Person He judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son, literally, hath committed the act of judging entirely (την κρίσιν πασαν), because He is the Son of Man (John v. 22); and He has done this, in order that all may honour Him, Who is Son of Man as well as Son of God, even as they honour the Father (John v. 23). Cp. Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. vii. Barrow's Sermons, Serm. xxxiii. vol. v. p. 136.

— δ Βασιλεύς—κυριευόντων] the King of kings and Lord of lords. It is carefully to be observed, that in Rev. xvii. 14; xix. 16, this title, which is here given to the Father, is expressly ascribed to Christ: a proof of His consubstantiality and co-equality with the Father; and that Christ is the μόνος Δυνάστης, the only Potentate, the everlasting Jehovah,—Who alone hat importality.

mortality. Pray for earthly kings (ii. 2), adore the King of kings.

17. ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι] rich in this present life. For Lazarus may become Dives, and Dives may become Lazarus in that life which is to come.

which is to come.  $-\frac{\eta}{\lambda}\pi\iota\kappa\acute{\epsilon}\nu a\iota$  to have their hopes fixed. See above, v. 5.  $-\tau \acute{\varphi} \Theta \epsilon \acute{\varphi}$  A, F, G omit  $\tau \acute{\varphi}$  ( $\acute{\omega}\nu\tau\iota$ , not received by Lach., Tisch., Huther, Ellicott, Alford: but ( $\acute{\omega}\nu\tau\iota$  is found in D, E, I, 3 N 2 πάντα πλουσίως είς ἀπόλαυσιν, 18 9 ἀγαθοεργείν, πλουτείν έν ἔργοις καλοίς, q Luke 12. 21. James 2. 5. εὐμεταδότους εἶναι, κοινωνικούς, 19 τ ἀποθησαυρίζοντας έαυτοῖς θεμέλιον καλὸν r Matt. 6, 20. είς τὸ μέλλον, ἵνα ἐπιλάβωνται τῆς ὄντως ζωῆς. & 16. 9.

νετ. 12.  $^{\circ}$  αch. 1. 4. & 4. 7.  $^{\circ}$   $^{\circ}$

Ή χάρις μετὰ σοῦ.

K, and in Origen, Chrys., Theodoret, and many Latin Fathers, Vulg. and Syriac, and it gives force to the sentence, "Let them not trust in what is fleeting, but in Him Who is Eternal."

17-19.] On this text see Bp. Andrewes' Sermons, vol. v.

19. ἀποθησαυρίζοντας—θεμέλιον καλόν] treasuring up a good foundation; a bold metaphor, but happily bespeaking by its very boldness that the act here described cannot be done on earth, but may be done in heaven. Here on earth men may lay up treasure, but that treasure has no foundation. He who builds any thing upon it, builds on the sand. But they who are rich toward God, and lay up treasure in heaven, treasure up for themselves a good foundation for the future; and they will dwell hereafter in a house which God builds for them on that foundation which He permits them, when on earth, to lay up in heaven; if they build in faith on the merits and mercy of Christ. Cp. Augustine, Serm. 177.

Elz. has alwelov for ovrws, which is supported by the best authorities, and clearly intimates that this present life does not really deserve to be called Life (ζωή), but that there is a Life which is Life indeed.

20. την παραθήκην] Cp. 2 Tim. i. 14, the precious deposit of sound Faith,—the Faith once for all delivered to the saints (Jude 3), which the great Householder has committed to thy trust. Guard that, hold it fast. See Rev. iii. 3.

A warning against those who either take from it or add to it. See on Acts xx. 27, where St. Paul declares to the Presbyters of Ephesus that he had declared to them "the whole counsel of God."

This is the choice jewel whereof the Lord Jesus Christ has made His Church the depository. Every man in the Church ought earnestly to contend for its maintenance. "O Timothee, depositum custodi." St. Paul more than once calleth upon Timothy to keep that which was committed to his trust. (1 Tim. vi. 20. 2 Tim. i. 14.) He meaneth it in respect of the Christian Faith, which he was bound to keep entire as it was delivered to him, at his peril, and as he would answer it at another Day. Bp. Sanderson (iii. 279). Cp. Tertullian, Præscr. Hær. 25.

— βεβήλους κενοφωνίας] profane vain-babblings: iv. 7. 2 Tim. ii. 16. See Vincent, Lerin. Common. § 27 (reading καινοφωνίας) on heresies as novel.

- αντιθέσεις της ψευδωνύμου γνώσεως oppositions of the γνῶσις, or knowledge, falsely so called; that of the Judaizing teachers of Talmudical fables, and the so-called mystic senses of the Cabala. See on i. 4, and Col. ii. 18, 19; and Tit. i. 14;

iii. 9; and Buxtorf, in v. בכלה או יו. 9. S. Irenœus (ii. 14) applies these words also to the heretical teaching of the Gnostics; and so Chrys., Theodoret, and Theophyl. (who reckons the Nicolaitans among the Gnostics); and Ecum.; and so Hammond, and other later Expositors. And since the Gnostic speculations were in some respect an upgrowth from a corrupt Judaism, this application may be admitted, especially since it must be remembered, that St. Paul was enabled by the Holy Ghost to descern future evils, and to pronounce warnings against them. (See on Col. ii. 18, 19.) At the same time, it will be borne in mind that the schools of the Gnostics, properly so called, belong to an age subsequent to this Epistle.

This precept has also a wider application. "The nature of such Controversies (says Lord Bacon), where the matter in dispute is great, but is driven to an over great subtlety and obscurity, is excellently expressed by St. Paul in the warning and precept that he giveth concerning the same: 'Devita profanas vocum novitates, et oppositiones falsi nominis scientiæ.'- 'Men create oppositions which are not, and put them into new terms, so fixed, as, whereas the meaning ought to govern the term, the term in effect governeth the meaning." Lord Bacon (Essay iii.

on Unity in Religion).

21. ἡν τινès ἐπαγγελλόμενοι] which some professing and promising: as the Tempter did to Eve, and so wrought the fall of Man. (Gen. iii. 5.) Primasius.

ΠΡΟΣ TITON.

Ι.  $^{1}$   $^{a}$  ΠΑΥΛΟΣ, δοῦλος Θεοῦ, ἀπόστολος δὲ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ κατὰ πίστιν  $^{a\,1\, {\rm Tim}\, 1.\, 4.}_{\&\, 3.\, 16.\, \&\, 6.\, 3.}$  ἐκλεκτῶν Θεοῦ κατ ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας τῆς κατ εὐσέβειαν,  $^{2}$   $^{b}$  ἐπ ἐλπίδι ζωῆς  $^{Rom,\, 1.\, 2.}$  αἰωνίου, ῆν ἐπηγγείλατο ὁ ἀψευδὴς Θεὸς πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων,  $^{3}$   $^{c}$  ἐφανέρωσε δὲ  $^{E}$   $^{6.\, 25.}$   $^{Col.\, 1.\, 26.}$ καιροῖς ἰδίοις τὸν λόγον αὐτοῦ ἐν κηρύγματι, ὁ ἐπιστεύθην ἐγὼ κατ' ἐπιταγὴν ετίω. 1.9, 10. 1 Pet. 1. 20. c Acts 20. 24. 2 Cor. 2, 12. & 7. 14. & 8. 6, 16. Gal. 1. 1. & 2, 3. 1 Thess. 2, 4, Πρός Τίτον] So A, D, E, F, G, K.—D, E, F, G have ἄρχεται prefixed.

For prefatory remarks on this Epistle, see above, Introduction, pp. 432-434; and concerning the personal history of Titus, see below on v. 4.

CH. I. 1. δοῦλος Θεοῦ] a servant of God. On all other occasions St. Paul calls himself δοῦλος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ,-an evidence, as Ellicott observes, of the genuineness of this Epistle.

Perhaps he adopts this title, servant of God, in this Epistle, where he inveighs so strongly against the Judaizers (i. 10; ii. 9), who, on the plea of being servants of God, subverted the foundations of obedience to men, and so exposed the name of God to blasphemy (see on 1 Tim. vi. 1), and in order that he might declare more fully the principle of the Gospel, that service to lawful superiors is service to God.

- ἀπόστολος] an Apostle. See on 1 Tim. i. 1. - κατὰ πίστιν] with a view to the faith of the elect of God, that is (as Theodoret and Theophyl. explain it), in order that by my Apostleship the elect of God may believe and know the truth, which is according to godliness. Cp. Rom. i. 5; and on this use of κατά, see Winer, § 49. 62, pp. 356. 499; and note above on Acts xxvii. 12.

 - ἐκλεκτῶν Θεοῦ] the elect of God. See on Rom. viii. 33.
 πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων] before all time, and therefore anterior to the Levitical Law. An answer to Jewish objectors, who alleged that the Gospel was a new doctrine.

He calls these times alwylous, because there was no such thing as Time before them. See Augustine's disquisition on the word aldruos, "Ad Orosium contra Priscillianistas et Origenistas," vol. viii. p. 941.

3. ἐφανέρωσε] He manifested. See 1 Tim. iii. 15, 16, and the next note but one.

- καιροῖς ἰδίοις] in His own appointed seasons. See on Eph. i. 10. 1 Tim. ii. 6.

— τὸν λόγον αὐτοῦ] His Word,—namely, His co-eternal Son. Jerome, and (it seems) Theodoret and Œcumen.: so also Augustine (de Civ. Dei, xii. 16), "Ipsum Ejus Verbum co-æternum."

It is indeed alleged by most modern Expositors, that neither here nor in any other passage of Holy Scripture, is the Second Person of the Ever-Blessed Trinity called & Adyos, the Word, or Λόγος Θεοῦ, the Word of God, except in the writings of St. John.

But this assertion seems to have been made too hastily. It is certain, that the phrase, the Word of God, in this sense, was not invented by St. John, but was applied to the Messiah, in the Chaldee Paraphrases of the Old Testament, long before any of the Gospels were written. See the authorities quoted above on Indeed, 'the Word of God' was a title already prepared and consecrated by the ancient Church of God for Evangelical use.

It is therefore evident, that the title 'Word of God' might be, and very probably would be, used by St. Paul, who was very conversant with the Rabbinical writers; and that it might be, and probably would be, claimed by him for Christ, -especially in his controversies with Jewish Teachers. See above on Heb.

We should therefore expect to find it occurring in such Epistles of St. Paul as those to the Ephesians, Timothy, and Titus, and to the Hebrews, in which the Apostle is arguing against Judaizers, who disparaged the divine dignity of Christ, and in which he dwells specially on the great Mystery of the Incarnation of the Everlasting Word of God.

It has been said, indeed, that St. John in his Gospel calls Christ "the Word," but does not call Him the "Word of God."

This is true; but in the Apocalypse St. John expressly declares that "His Name is called the Word of God" (Rev. xix. 13); and he never calls Him there the Word, as he does in his Gospel (John i. 14); and in his first Epistle he calls Him the Word of Life (1 John i. 1).

These circumstantial variations in St. Johu's own usage, grounded on essential unity of doctrine, afford sufficient evidence that there might also be some slight differences in expression between him and other Writers of Holy Scripture in this respect, and yet unity of substance.

It certainly is a novel assumption, one at variance with the faith and teaching of Ancient Christendom, but one which has been very confidently propounded in modern times, that the title "Word of God" is never ascribed to Christ by any Writer of Holy Scripture except St. John.

If this theory is erroneous, it is a very pernicious one. has an evident tendency to subserve the purposes of those who take low views of the character and office of the Writers of Holy Scripture.

All parts of Scripture, from Genesis to Revelation, are dictated by ONE SPIRIT. They form one Book. The persons, by whose instrumentality they were penned, lived in different ages and countries, but He Who wrote by them is One, and ever the Same.

The disposition, too prevalent in modern times, to regard the Writers of Holy Scripture as independent, isolated individuals, and to represent them as speaking severally a different phraseology, and as teaching different doctrines, or similar doctrines with dissimilar phases, cannot fail to lead the popular mind to regard the Doctrine of Holy Scripture as not objectively the same, but as subjectively modified by the peculiar temperaments and personal idiosyncracies of men.

It tends also to degrade the Writers themselves from their high station, "as holy men of God moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Pet. i. 21), to individuals actuated by their own private imaginations; and to reduce them from their proper dignity of Prophets, Evangelists, and Apostles, to the lower level of ordinary

If these theories of modern Exegesis are applied to the cri-

d Eph. 1 2. Col. 1. 2. 1 Tun. 1. 2. 2 Tim. 1. 2. 1 Pet. 1. 2. e Acts 14. 23. 2 Tim. 2. 2. τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ, 4 τίτω γνησίω τέκνω κατὰ κοινὴν πίστιν, χάρις καὶ εἰρήνη ἀπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ Κυρίου Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Σωτήρος ἡμῶν.

5 ° Τούτου χάριν ἀπέλιπόν σε ἐν Κρήτη, ἴνα τὰ λείποντα ἐπιδιορθώση, καὶ tical exposition of the Text of the written Word, and even to the philological treatment of the Titles of the Incarnate Word, it is evident that Christ Himself may be deprived (as far as human power can rob Him) of some of His divine prerogatives, and that Christendom may be despoiled of some of the most precious treasures of its sacred inheritance.

Let it therefore be referred to the learned reader's consideration, whether it be true, that "Christ is never called 'the Word of God' by any Writers of Scripture but St. John."

Let him examine the following texts:—
(1) Luke i. 2, see note, "Eye-witnesses and Ministers of the Word." Does not "the Word" here bespeak a Person? and what Person but Christ?

(2) Acts xx. 32, St. Paul's farewell benediction to the Elders of Ephesus, "I commit you to God, and to the Word of His Grace, Who (viz. His Word) is able to build you up, and give you an inheritance among all that are sanctified."

A mere abstract thing cannot build up, and give an eternal inheritance, but a Person can build us up; and there is One Person Who can do this, and can give us an everlasting inheritance in heaven, and that Person is Christ, the Incarnate Word.

This Benediction is the more remarkable as addressed to the Presbyters of Ephesus, a Church which St. Paul had founded, and to which he had preached for three years, and to which he wrote fully in his Epistle, as already instructed in the great doctrine of the Incarnation of the Eternal Word (Eph. i. 3iii. 19), and which was committed to the care of Timothy, and was afterwards governed by St. John. And that Church would see something very appropriate and convincing in the fact that the same title was given to Christ by the two Apostles, St. Paul and St. John.

(3) Heb. iv. 12, a very remarkable passage. See the note there.

(4) 1 Tim. iv. 4, 5. "Every Creature of God is good, for it is sanctified by the Word;" a declaration from St. Paul to the Bishop of the same Church, Ephesus, Timothy, and to the Ephesian Church itself, that the creatures of God are now sanctified to the free use of the faithful, and that they are sanctified by the

(5) Tit. i. 3, the present passage, 'Εφανέρωσε δὲ καιροῖς ἰδίοις τὸν λόγον αὐτοῦ, i. e. " He manifested, in His own appointed season, His Word."

What is made manifest (φανεροῦται) must be pre-existing, in order to be manifested. And if by "Word" here we merely understand with modern interpreters the Gospel, we have, it would seem, a feeble tautology. He manifested forth a manifestation.

And this tautology seems to become still more insipid, when we connect it with what follows, viz. èν κηρύγματι, in the word preached. See note on 1 Cor. i. 21. St. Paul can hardly have said that God manifested His Spoken word in the word preached.

But, if with S. Jerome, S. Augustine, and other earlier Expositors, we understand by  $\Lambda \delta \gamma os$  a Person pre-existent from eternity, the Co-eternal Word of God, we gain a full and forcible declaration in entire harmony with the context, and very appropriate as an introduction to this Epistle, where the Apostle is contending against the erroneous doctrines of the Rabbinical Teachers, who were familiar with the phrase 'Word of God' as applied to the Messiah (see on John i. 1), and who required to be taught that this title was due to Jesus Christ, and to Him alone.

In confirmation of this Exposition we may remark, that the word ἐφανέρωσε, here used, 'lle manifested,' is specially applied, and, as it were, consecrated, by the Writers of Holy Scripture, to describe the Manifestation of the Godhead in the Incarnation of Thus St. Paul says of the Eternal Son, that He was manifested in the flesh, δs έφανερώθη ἐν σαρκί (I Tim. iii. 16). Thus also St. John, speaking of the Incarnation, says, ἡ ζωὴ ἐφανερώθη, 'the Life was made manifest' (I John i. 2. Cp. ϵφανερώθη, 'the Life was made manifest' (1 John i. 2. Cp.

 1 John iii. 5). Thus also St. Peter, speaking of the same Divine Person, says, ὰμνοῦ ἀμιόμου Χριστοῦ προεγνωσμένου μὲν πρό κατα-βολῆς κόσμου φανερωθέντος δὲ ἐπ' ἐσχάτου τῶν χρόνων δι' ὑμᾶς (1 Pet. i. 20). So also S. Ignatius (ad Magnes. cap. 8), ἐφανέρωσεν ἑαυτόν διὰ Χριστοῦ, υἰοῦ αὐτοῦ ὅς ἐστι Λόγος αὐτοῦ See note on 1 Tim. iii. 16.

(6) James i. 18, ἀπεκύησεν ἡμῶς λόγω ἀληθείας, ' He begat us by the Word of Truth; a passage which may be compared with 1 John i. 1, τοῦ λόγου τῆς ζωῆς, said of Christ, and with 1 Pet. i. 23, where St. Peter is speaking of our Regeneration, "We were born anew (he says) not from corruptible seed, but through the Word of the Living God.'

In both these passages the work of Regeneration is ascribed to the Word of God.

It is certain, that our Baptismal New-birth is a consequence of the Incarnation of the Eternal  $\Lambda \delta \gamma \sigma s$ , without which, as far as we know, it would never have been effected, and of our engrafting into the mystical Body of Christ. And it is so described by St. John (i. 11-14), and by St. Paul (Col. ii. 9-12).

Further; the remarkable word πλήρωμα, signifying the absolute fulness of the Godhead in Christ, the Co-eternal Word, and the communication of that fulness to mankind by the Incarnation of the Word, is employed alike by St. Paul (Col. i. 19; ii. 9. Eph. iv. 13), and by St. John (i. 16). Why not the word Aóyos also?

In the language of the Apostle of the Gentiles, especially in his Epistle to the Ephesians, and in his Epistle to the Bishop of Ephesus, we may recognize that teaching concerning the Incarnation which prepared the way for the last Evangelist, St. John, writing at Ephesus, and enabled him to break forth, without any fear of not being understood, in that divine preamble to his Gospel, "In the beginning was the WORD;" see above, pp. 275-278.

— ἐν κηρύγματι] in the thing preached, viz. in the Gospel: ἐν κηρύγματι is not to be translated 'by preaching.' See the preceding note, and above on 1 Cor. i. 21.

- δ έπιστεύθην] which was committed to me: literally, with which I was entrusted. Gal. ii. 7. 1 Tim. i. 11. 4.  $T(\tau \varphi)$  to Titus. On the history of Titus, a Gentile by extraction, and associated with St. Paul at Antioch, the Metropolis of Gentile Christianity, as his companion to the Council of Jerusalem (see Gal. ii. 1—3), and afterwards employed by him in missions to Greece, especially Corinth, see 2 Cor. ii. 12, 13; vii. 6. 13, 14; xii. 18; and in the collection for the poor saints at Jerusalem, see 2 Cor. viii. 16. 23. He appears to have been placed in Crete by St. Paul soon after his liberation from his first Roman imprisonment, and to have been with St. Paul in his second imprisonment at Rome, and to have been sent by him to Dalmatia (2 Tim. iv. 10), which he had probably visited with St. Paul when the Apostle went to Illyricum. Acts xx. 2. Rom. xv. 19. 2 Cor. ii. 13.

On the non-occurrence of his name in the Acts of the Apostles, see on 2 Cor. viii. 18.

Apostes, see on 2 Cot. viii. 16.

On his subsequent history, see the encomiastic oration of one of his successors, Andreas Crelensis, p. 155 (in Amphilochii Opera, ed. Paris, 1640), εἰς πανεύφημον τοῦ Χριστοῦ ᾿Απόστολον (on St. Titus' Day, Aug. 24, among the Greeks; Jan. 4, among the Latins), in which he calls him, p. 166, τὸ θεόκτιστον τῆς Κρητῶν ὙΕκκλησίας προπύργιον. Cp. Tillemont, Mémoires, p. 64, and notes.

καί] So C*, D, E, F, G, and Tischendorf's MSS. fragments, called by him I. Elz. ἔλεος, with A, C**, I, K. ἀπέλιπον] So A, C, D, F, G, Lach., Tisch., Ellicott, Alf.

-Elz. κατέλιπον.

— Ίνα τὰ λείποντα ἐπιδιορθώση] that thou mightest set in order in addition the things that are wanting. A proof of the Apostolic authority committed to Titus. He, as Bishop of Crete, had been appointed by St. Paul to succeed in the discharge of the ordinary functions of his office in the place of the Apostle Paul, θώσηs corrigeres, sed super-corrigeres; ut quæ à me correcta sunt, nedum ad plenam veri lineam retracta, à te corrigantur et normam æqualitatis accipiant." Jerome.

This could not have been said to a Presbyter. And one of the things which Titus is commanded to perform, in his successive and supplementary character, is to ordain and to govern Presbyters. (v. 5; ii. 15.)

It may therefore be said, in the words of a learned English Prelate, "Titus and Timothy were charged by Paul to 'require and command' the pastors and preachers to refrain from false and command the pastors and preachers to retrain from hash doctrine, and 'to stop their mouths' or 'reject' them that did otherwise; 'to ordain elders' according to the necessity of the places, and 'receive accusations against them;' and 'sharply' and 'openly to rebuke' them if they sinned, and that 'with all authority.' (1 Tim. i. 3; v. 19, 20. Tit. i. 5. 11. 13; ii. 15; iii. 10.) These things the Apostle earnestly requireth, and, hefere Christ and His elect appeals, chargeth Timothy and Titus before Christ and His elect angels, chargeth Timothy and Titus to do. It is, then, evident they might so do: for how vain and frivolous were all those protestations made by St. Paul, if καταστήσης κατὰ πόλιν πρεσβυτέρους, ώς έγω σοὶ διεταξάμην, 6 f εἴ τις έστὶν 11 Tim. 3.2. ἀνέγκλητος, μιᾶς γυναικὸς ἀνὴρ, τέκνα ἔχων πιστὰ, μὴ ἐν κατηγορία ἀσωτίας, ή ανυπότακτα.

ανυπότακτα.
<sup>7 ε</sup> Δεῖ γὰρ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον ἀνέγκλητον εἶναι, ὡς Θεοῦ οἰκονόμον, μὴ αὐθάδη, <sup>1 Cor. 4</sup>, 1. 1. 18. 18. 18. 18. 18. μὴ ὀργίλον, μὴ πάροινον, μὴ πλήκτην, μὴ αἰσχροκερδῆ,  $^{8}$  ἀλλὰ φιλόξενον,  $^{1}$  Tim. 3. 3, 15. φιλάγαθον, σώφρονα, δίκαιον, ὅσιον, ἐγκρατῆ,  $^{9}$  ἱ ἀντεχόμενον τοῦ κατὰ τὴν ἱ Tim. 1. 10. διδαχὴν πιστοῦ λόγου, ἴνα δυνατὸς  $\hat{\eta}$  καὶ παρακαλεῖν ἐν τ $\hat{\eta}$  διδασκαλία τ $\hat{\eta}^{\frac{2.6.3}{2.7}}$  Τim. 1. 13. ύγιαινούση, καὶ τοὺς ἀντιλέγοντας ἐλέγχειν.

10 k Είσὶ γὰρ πολλοὶ καὶ ἀνυπότακτοι, ματαιολόγοι καὶ φρεναπάται, μάλιστα 1 Tim. 1.6. οί ἐκ περιτομής, 11 1 οὺς δεῖ ἐπιστομίζειν, οἴτινες ὅλοις οἴκους ἀνατρέπουσι, 2 Tim. 3.6.

Timothy and Titus had only voices amongst the rest, and nothing to do but as the rest!" Bp. Bilson on the Perpetual Government of Christ's Church, chap. v. (p. 89, ed. Oxford, 1842.)

— lua—καταστήσης κατά πόλιν πρεσβυτέρουs] that thou mightest establish presbyters city by city. Compare the important statement of St. Paul's contemporary, S. Clement, concerning the primitive foundations of Church-Polity (Epist. ad Corinth. i. 42), 'Απόστολοι ἡμῖν εὐηγγελίσθησαν ἀπὸ τοῦ Κυρίου 'Ίησοῦ Χριστοῦ, 'Ἰησοῦς ὁ Χριστὸς ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ· ἐξεπέμφθη ὁ Χριστὸς οῦν ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ, καὶ οἱ 'Απόστολοι ἀπὸ τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐγένοντο οῦν ἀμφότερα εὐτάκτως ἐκ θελήματος Θεοῦ. Παραγγελίας οὖν λαβόντες, καὶ πληροφορηθέντες διὰ τῆς ἀναστάσεως τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, καὶ πιστωθέντες ἐν τῷ λόγω τοῦ Θεοῦ, μετὰ πληροφορίας Πνεύματος Αγίου, ἐξῆλθον εὐαγγελιδεου, μετα πληροφοριας του Θεοῦ μέλλειν ἔρχεσθαι κατά χώρας δύν καὶ πόλεις κηρόσσοντες καθέστανον τὰς ἀπαρχὰς αὐτῶν, δοκιμάσαντες τῷ Πνεύματι, εἶς ἐπισκόπους καὶ διακόνους τῶν μελλόντων πιστεύειν.

 ω ἐγὼ σοὶ διεταξάμην] as I enjoined thee. Cp. the similar words of St. Paul to the Bishop of Ephesus, 1 Tim. i. 3. He takes care that it shall be known, that Timothy and Titus had not appointed themselves to their respective Sees, but had received an Apostolic Commission from him.

On the Episcopal office of Titus in Crete, see Euseb. iii. 4, and Chrys. here, and note above, v. 4. The local tradition in Crete is, that his residence was at Gortys, and that he died in that Island at the age of ninety-four. (Tillemont, ii. p. 64.) The Cathedral Church of the Island is dedicated to him.

6. εἴ τις κ.τ.λ.] See on 1 Tim. iii. 1..

— μιᾶς γυναικός ἀνήρ] See on 1 Tim. iii. 2.

7. Δεῖ γὰρ τὸν ἐπίσκοπον—είναι] For he who has the oversight of others ought to be &c. Cp. 1 Tim. iii. 2. St. Paul is giving directions to Titus, the Chief Pastor of Crete, concerning the qualifications of those who are to be ordained Presbyters in every city by him. The persons who, on account of their age and dignity, are called Presbyters, are here called Episcopi, in relation to the flock, of which they had the oversight. See Theodoret here, and the Preliminary Note above on 1 Tim. iii., p. 444. These Presbyters of Crete are called Episcopi; but there was one person set over them by St. Paul as their Overseer, namely, Titus. He is not called Presbyter or Episcopus by St. Paul; he is commanded by the Apostle to ordain and rule Presbyters, and to set them as spiritual Overseers over their pastoral charges in the several cities of Crete.

It would be of no use to dispute about the name by which Titus himself, and such as Titus, who were entrusted by the Apostles with the ordination and government of Presbyters, were called. The fact is certain, that Titus and Timothy were placed by St. Paul at Crete and Ephesus, and were invested with chief spiritual authority over Presbyters, Deacons, and People; and that in this respect they stood in the place of the Apostle St. Paul himself in their respective spheres. (See v. 5.) And ever since that time, those persons, who have been and now are thus law-fully placed as Chief Pastors in their several Dioceses, are the proper successors of the Apostles. And it certainly ought not to be made a matter of complaint against them, but the contrary, that they have not arrogated to themselves the name of Apostles, but are content with a humbler title, that of Episcopi, which is indeed very expressive of their duties, inasmuch as they have the oversight of Christ's flock, both Clergy and Laity, but was originally applied by the Apostles to the second order of Ministers in the Church.

The universal consent of the Church, in and from Apostolic times, in the acknowledgment of Episcopal Government, and the universal establishment of that Government in all parts of the world, are facts which cannot be gainsaid; and they afford the best practical exposition of the language of St. Paul on the subject of Church Government in this Epistle, and in the Epistle to Timothy.

The argument in this respect has been stated, with his usual clearness and vigour, by Dr. Barrow, as follows: "The primitive general use of Christians most effectually doth back the Scripture, and interpret it in favour of this distinction of Episcopal Government. For how otherwise is it imaginable, that all the Churches founded by the Apostles in several most distant and disjoined places (at Jerusalem, at Antioch, at Alexandria, at Ephesus, at Corinth, at Rome) should presently conspire in acknowledgment and use of it? How could it without apparent confederacy be formed? Could it be admitted without considerable opposition, if it were not in the foundation of those Churches laid by the Apostles? How is it likely that in those times of grievous persecution falling chiefly upon the Bishops (when to be eminent among Christians yielded slender reward, and exposed to extreme hazard; when to seek pre-eminence was in effect to court danger and trouble, torture and ruin), an ambition of irregularly advancing themselves above their brethren should so generally prevail among the ablest and best Christians? How could those famous Martyrs for the Christian truth be some of them so unconscionable as to affect, others so irresolute as to yield to, such injurious encroachments? and how could all the holy Fathers (persons of so renowned, so approved wisdom and integrity) be so blind as not to discern such a corruption, or so bad as to abet it? How, indeed, could all God's Church be so weak as to consent in judgment, so base as to comply in practice with it? In fine, how can we conceive, that all the best monuments of antiquity down from the beginning (the Acts, the Epistles, the Histories, the Commentaries, the writings of all sorts coming from the blessed Martyrs and most holy Confessors of our faith), should conspire to abuse us? the which do speak nothing but Bishops; long Catalogues and rows of Bishops succeeding in this and that city; Bishops contesting for the faith against Pagan Idolaters, and Heretical corrupters of Christian doctrine; Bishops here teaching, and planting our religion by their labours, there suffering, and watering it with their blood?"

Dr. Isaac Barrow (Works, London, 1686. Folio. Serm. xxiv. vol. iii. p. 273). See also Bp. Pearson (Minor Works, i. pp. 271—286).

It may be concluded, therefore, from Holy Scripture, and from the universal practice of the Church of Christ, from its foundation for more than fifteen hundred years without interruption, that Church-Government by Bishops is of divine institution. "Exitus variâsse debuerat error. Cæterum quod apud multos unum invenitur, non est erratum sed traditum; et id Dominicum est et verum, quod priùs traditum, id extraneum et falsum, quod posteriùs immissum." Tertullian (Præscr. Hæret.

– μὴ πάροινον, μὴ πλήκτην] See on 1 Tim. iii. 3.

9. ἀντεχόμενον] taking firm hold of: holding himself on to, so as to help, serve, maintain, support. Cp. Matt. vi. 24. 1 Thess. v. 14, ἀντέχεσθε ἀσθενῶν, and 1 Tim. vi. 2, ἀντιλαμβανόμενοι. ἀντέχεται = ἀντιλαμβάνεται, Hesych.

τοὺς ἀντιλέγοντας ἐλέγχειν] to confute the gainsayers.
 Sec S. Augustine's Sermon 178, on this text.

10. ἀνυπότακτοι] insubordinate. "Quam prono in seditiones animo fuerint Judæi, magno numero Cretam habitantes, ex historiâ satis constat." Wetstein (376).

 μάλιστα οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς] specially they of the Circumcision, to whom Titus might be particularly obnoxious. See on Gal. ii. 1. 3. As to their ἀνυποταξία, or insubordination, and patronage of it, see on v. l, and Introduction above, and on l Tim. ii. l; vi. l. These false Teachers were Judaizers of Crete. Jews of Crete are mentioned as coming up to Jerusalem, Acts ii. 11.

11. ἐπιστομίζειν] φιμοῦν, to muzzle. (Hesych.) κατασιγάζειν.

Jude 4.

διδάσκοντες ἃ μὴ δεῖ, αἰσχροῦ κέρδους χάριν. 12 Εἶπέν τις ἐξ αὐτῶν ἴδιος αὐτῶν προφήτης,

Κρητες ἀεὶ ψεῦσται, κακὰ θηρία, γαστέρες ἀργαί·

m Isa. 29. 13.
Matt. 15. 9.
Col. 2. 22.
1 Tim. 1. 4.
& 4. 7. & 6. 20.
n Matt. 15. 11.
Luke 11. 39, 41.
Acts 10. 15.
Rom. 14. 14, 20.
1 Cor. 6. 12.
& 10. 23, 25.
1 Tim. 4. 3. 4.
0 2 Tim. 3. 5.
Jude 4. 13 ή μαρτυρία αυτη έστιν άληθής. δι' ην αιτίαν έλεγχε αυτούς αποτόμως, ίνα ύγιαίνωσιν έν τῆ πίστει 14 m μη προσέχοντες 'Ιουδαϊκοῖς μύθοις, καὶ ἐντολαῖς ανθρώπων αποστρεφομένων την αλήθειαν.

15 η Πάντα καθαρά τοις καθαροίς, τοις δε μεμιασμένοις και απίστοις οὐδεν καθαρον, άλλα μεμίανται αὐτῶν καὶ ὁ νοῦς καὶ ἡ συνείδησις. 16 ° Θεὸν ὁμολογοῦσιν είδέναι, τοῖς δὲ ἔργοις ἀρνοῦνται, βδελυκτοὶ ὄντες καὶ ἀπειθεῖς, καὶ πρὸς παν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἀδόκιμοι.

Schol. Aristoph. Equit. 480,-a proof of the Apostolic power of Titus. See ii. 15, μετὰ πάσης ἐπιταγῆς.

— ὅλους οἴκους ἀνατρέπουσι] they subvert whole families, particularly by their anarchical doctrines, setting inferiors against Particularly by their anarchical noterines, setting fine to its against their superiors. See on v. 1, and on 1 Tim. vi. 1. 5.

12. Τοιος αὐτῶν προφήτητε] a prophet of their own, counted as such by themselves,—Epimenides, a priest and poet (vates) of Crete. See Augustine, contra Adversarium Legis, ii. 13.

On the use of the word Prophetes in this sense, see Varro, L. L. vi. 3. 10. Epimenides, who visited Athens about B.c. 596, is described by Plutarch (Solon, p. 84) as θεοφιλής και σοφός περί τὰ θεῖα, την ἐνθουσιαστικήν και τελετικήν σοφίαν. Wetstein.

— Κρῆτες ὰεὶ ψεῦσται] The Cretans are always liars. This verse is from the χρησμοl of Epimenides. (Jerome.) The first half of it was adopted by Callimachus (Hymn. Jov. 4), alleging as a proof of their mendacity that they claimed to have in their island the grave of Jupiter, the king of gods! Chrys.

This popular boast of the Cretans, mentioned by St. Paul's countryman Callimachus, is a striking proof of the tendency of Heathenism and Idolatry to propagate falsehood, and to do the work of the Father of Lies. No wonder, that the Apostle here speaks as he does of the false and treacherous character of the inhabitants of Crete, which had become proverbial. See the authorities in Wetstein, p. 370; and Koray's Atakta, ii. p. 304.

On St. Paul's citations from Heathen Poets, even from an Heathen Altar, see Chrys. here, and notes on Acts xvii. 23. 28, and 1 Cor. xv. 33.

The Apostle St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, declares to the Jews their guilt, and consequent need of Repentance and of a Redeemer,—not on his own authority, but by quotations from their own Prophets (Rom. iii. 10—18), against whose testimony they could make no exception. So he here adduces against the Cretans the witness of one whom they regarded with reverence as a Prophet of their own, and who also was held in universal estimation by the Gentile World, Epimenides,—a proof of his prudence and wisdom in administering rebuke.

Not less observable is the evidence thence derivable of St. Paul's confidence in his own divine mission, and in that of Titus, set as Bishop by him over the people of Crete.

What impostor would have dared to use such strong language as this concerning that nation, to whom he sent a spiritual Envoy, in order that he might reside among them and govern them? If St. Paul had been a mere secular Teacher, he would have perhaps quoted some smooth saying to flatter the national vanity of the Cretans; and he would not have cited this verse of Epimenides. But he was armed with divine power, and God gave similar gifts to Titus by his means. God had not given him the spirit of fear, but of power and of love, and of a sound mind.

The design of this severe censure is stated in v. 13. The moral disease of the Cretans is discovered and probed to the quick, "in order that they may be sound in the faith," rescued from the errors of those false teachers who would destroy them, by smooth speeches, in body and soul (vv. 13, 14; ii. 1).

Observe also the result. This Epistle, in which this severe censure is contained, has ever been received and read in the Churches of Christendom as a part of Holy Scripture. doubtless read in the Churches of Crete itself; and Titus, to whom it is addressed, is at this day honoured there as the Apostle of Crete. (Cp. on v. 4.)

These results would never have been produced, if the Cretans had not been convinced of the inspiration of St. Paul, and of the Apostolic Mission of St. Titus.

On this important topic compare note on Gal. iii. 1, & ανόητοι Γαλάται.

Yet this wise speech, so fruitful in profitable teaching, is now denounced by some critics as "eine harte und ungerechte Bestätigung!" De Wette, p. 10.

- κακά θηρία] evil beasts, on account of their savage disposition. Joseph. A. xvii. 5. 5. Cp. the proverb,  $K\rho\eta\tau$ es,  $K\alpha\pi\pi\delta$ -δοκεs,  $K(\lambda$ iκεs,  $\tau$ ρία κάππα κάκιστα. On the words  $\theta\eta$ ρίον and bestia applied to persons, see Wetstein.

— γαστέρες ἀργαί] sluggish bellies; that is, given up to sloth and gluttony. "Vivite lurcones, comedones, vivite ventres."

Lucilius.

A barren soil for a Christian Bishop to cultivate! The Apostle does not conceal its untractable character from him whom he has appointed to break it up, and to bring it, by Christian tillage, into spiritual fertility. Another proof of his godly sin-tillage, into spiritual tertility. Another proof of his goal, succerity and courage.

14. '1ουδαϊκοΐς μύθοις] to Jewish fables. See on 1 Tim. i. 4; iv. 7; and Ignatius (ad Magnes. 8), μη πλανᾶσθε μυθεύμασιν τοῖς παλαιοῖς, ἀνωφελέσιν οὖσιν' εἰ γὰρ κατὰ '1ουδαΐσμὸν (ῶμεν, ὁμολογοῦμεν χάριν μὴ εἰληφέναι.

— ἐντολαῖς] human ordinances concerning abstinence from certain meats as unclean, and other ceremonial matters. See

Eph. ii. 15, and Col. ii. 21-23.

15. Πάντα (Elz. μέν) καθαρά τοις καθαροίς, κ.τ.λ.] Το the clean all things are clean; viz. all creatures, because created good by a good God, and because blessed by Him, and sanctified by Christ, and because restored to man for his free use by Him. those persons who are not sanctified by spiritual indwelling in the mystical body of Christ, and by faith in the Incarnation of Him Who is the Eternal Word, but are defiled by evil lusts which war against the soul, all things are unclean.

See above on 1 Tim. iv. 4; and Augustine contra Faustum Manichæum, xxxi. 4; and Bp. Sanderson, quoted above, on 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23.

- δ νους καὶ ή συνείδησις] their Mind and their Conscience. The word vovs, Mind (mens,  $\mu \epsilon vos$ ), has a very comprehensive sense in the New Testament, and signifies not only the Understanding and Reason, but also the Will and the Affections. See Rom. i. 28. Eph. iv. 17. 1 Tim. vi. 5; and the note in Prof. Ellicott's edition of this Epistle.

The vovs, Mind, is clearly distinguished from the Conscience; e. g. in that it takes cognizance of external objects, and considers and reasons concerning the attributes and will of God, as revealed in Nature and Revelation; and according as it is rightly regulated or no, and is in a healthful or diseased condition, determines and governs the practice, and forms the habits of man. But the Conscience (as the word is used in the New Testament),  $\dot{\eta}$ συνείδησις, the Conscience, or moral sense, given to man by God, is His voice in the human heart, and does not necessarily suppose any active energy of the intellectual faculty, but pronounces, as it were, by a spiritual instinct or moral inspiration on the character of human actions, and often speaks most clearly, articulately, and powerfully, as in children and women, where the vous, or reasoning faculty, may not be deliberately exercised. See Rom. ii. 15.

At the same time it is a necessary part of our moral disci-pline, to bring all the faculties of the vovs, or Mind, to bear upon the Conscience, and to inform and regulate it by the will of God.

See above on Acts xxiii. 1.

The false Teachers here mentioned are censured, not only as depraving their understanding and will, but as having desecrated and polluted, if we may so speak, that divine oracle, and moral Shechinah, which God Himself had enshrined in their heart, their Conscience. See on 1 Tim. iv. 2.

16. ὁμολογοῦσιν] they acknowledge, they own that they know God; that they are not ignorant of the truth; and yet they practically deny it by their lives. As the Apostle says (Rom. i. 18), "they hold the truth in unrighteousness," and thus they sin wilfully against their own conscience.

The sense seems to have been misunderstood by some, on account of the ambiguity of the meaning of the word 'profess' in the English Version,—a word which is now more commonly employed in the sense of 'pretend.'
— βδελυκτοί ὔντες καὶ ἀπειθεῖς] being abominable and dis-

ΙΙ. 1 Σὺ δὲ λάλει ἃ πρέπει τῆ ὑγιαινούση διδασκαλία. 2 πρεσβύτας νηφαλίους είναι σεμνούς, σώφρονας, ύγιαίνοντας τῆ πίστει, τῆ ἀγάπη, τῆ ὑπομονῆ. 3 · Πρεσβύτιδας ώσαύτως εν καταστήματι ίεροπρεπείς, μη διαβόλους, μη οίνω al Tim. 2.9. πολλώ δεδουλωμένας, καλοδιδασκάλους, 4 ίνα σωφρονίζωσι τὰς νέας φιλάνδρους 1 Pet. 3. 3.

πολλώ δεδουλωμενας, καλουτούο καλους, είναι, φιλοτέκνους, δ σώφρονας, άγνὰς, οἰκουροὺς, ἀγαθὰς, ὑποτασσομένας τοῖς b Gen. 3. 16. 15 cor. 14. 34. Eph. 5. 22. ίδίοις ἀνδράσιν, ἴνα μὴ ὁ λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ βλασφημῆται.

6 Τους νεωτέρους ώσαύτως παρακάλει σωφρονείν, 7 ο περί πάντα σεαυτον 1 παρεχόμενος τύπον καλών έργων, έν τη διδασκαλία άφθορίαν, σεμνότητα, 8 ο λόγον ύγιῆ, ἀκατάγνωστον, ἵνα ὁ ἐξ ἐναντίας ἐντραπῆ, μηδὲν ἔχων περὶ ἡμῶν [  $^{\circ}$  ερh. 6. 6. Col. 3. 22.  $^{\circ}$  Θ Δούλους ἰδίοις δεσπόταις ὑποτάσσεσ $\theta$ αι, ἐν πᾶσιν εὐαρέστους εἶναι,  $\mu \mathring{\eta}$   $^{\circ}$   $^{\circ}$  Γ τet. 2. 18. λέγειν φαῦλον.

ἀντιλέγοντας, 10 μὴ νοσφιζομένους, ἀλλὰ πίστιν πᾶσαν ἐνδεικνυμένους ἀγαθὴν, 11 Tim. 2.4.

ίνα την διδασκαλίαν την του Σωτήρος ήμων Θεου κοσμώσιν έν πάσιν.

α τὴν διδασκαλίαν τὴν τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Θεοῦ κοσμῶσιν ἐν πᾶσιν.  $\stackrel{\text{ch. 3. 4.}}{}_{\text{g. Eph. 1. 4.}}^{\text{ch. 3. 4.}}$  $^{11}_{\text{f.}}$   $^{\text{E}}$   $^{\text{E}}$   $^{\text{E}}$   $^{\text{E}}$   $^{\text{Col. 2.2.25.}}$   $^{\text{Col. 2.2.25.}}$   $^{\text{Col. 1. 22.}}$ δεύουσα ήμας ΐνα ἀρνησάμενοι τὴν ἀσέβειαν καὶ τὰς κοσμικὰς ἐπιθυμίας σω- ½ Tim. 1.9. φρόνως καὶ δικαίως καὶ εὐσεβῶς ζήσωμεν ἐν τῷ νῦν αἰῶνι,  $^{13 \text{ h}}$  προσδεχόμενοι  $^{\text{h 1 Cor. 1. 7.}}_{\text{Phil. 3. 20.}}$ τὴν μακαρίαν ἐλπίδα καὶ ἐπιφάνειαν τῆς δόξης τοῦ μεγάλου Θεοῦ καὶ Σωτῆρος Ερh. 2.10. & 5.2. ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, 14 i ος ἔδωκεν ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν, ἴνα λυτρώσηται ἡμᾶς Heb. 9.14.

Tim. 6. 1. Pet. 3. 1. 1 Tim. 4. 12. Pet. 5. 3.

obedient. On the tendency of the denial of the doctrine of the Incarnation to produce immoral practice, see on Col. ii. 22, 23.

— ἀδόκιμοι] reprobate. See Rom. i. 28. 2 Tim. iii. 8. Contrast with this sentence iii. 1, πρὸς πᾶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἔτοῦμοι.

CH. II. 1. Σὐ δέ] However great may be the moral disease of the population of Crete, and however corrupt the teaching of these Judaizers (i. 10-16), yet do not thou be silent, but speak those things which beseem the wholesome doctrine. See on 1 Tim.

πρεσβύταs] aged men. See 1 Tim. v. 1. Philem. 9.
 σεμνούs] reverend, worshipful.

 Πρεσβύτιδαs] aged women. See 1 Tim. v. 2.

— ἐν καταστήματι] in deportment. "Composito gressu, habitu, incessu," &c. "Incessus, motus, vultus, sermo, silentium, quandam decoris sacri præferant dignitatem." Jerome. Cp. Simplicius in Wetstein, p. 372, κατάστημα αὐτοῦ σεμνὸν, στα-θερὸν, i. e. 'compositum.' S. Ignatius (ad Trall. 3) says of the Bishop of Tralles that his "very κατάστημα (deportment, car-riage) was a sermon (μαθητεία), and his very meekness was power "—like that of a late most reverend Primate of the Church of England in our own age. — ἱεροπρεπεῖs] θεοπρεπεῖs (Hesych.), worshipful, 'augustæ'— 'beseeming holiness'—a word applied by Plato, Xenophon, Josephus, and others, to characterize what is in accordance with the reverential solemnity and holy dignity of the public offices of religious worship. See Wetstein. Cp. 1 Tim. ii. 10. Eph.

 Υνα σωφρονίζωσι] in order that they may train the young women in sober discipline, and be to them like the Σωφρονισταί, who were set over the youth of Athens to regulate and order their behaviour. (Etym. M.) The inculcation of the word σώφρων in this Epistle (i. 8; ii. 2. 5) intimates the character of those with whom Titus had to deal. A, F, G, H have σωφρονίζουσι here, in the Indicative mood, and so Lach., Tisch., Alf. But C, D, E, I, K have the conjunctive σωφρονίζωσι, and so Huther, De Wette, Bloomf., Ellicott. See on Gal. iv. 17. 1 Cor. i. 31.

 5. οἰκουρούς] keepers at home. And something more; viz. keepers of home. See Hesych. in v. οἰκουρία ἡ κατ' οἶκον φυλακή.

The dignity and freedom given by Christianity (Gal. iii. 28) to the Women of Greece, might easily be abused into an occasion of licence, and bring a reproach on the Gospel. Hence the greater importance of this precept—" that the word of God might not be evil spoken of."

7. τύπον] a pattern. 1 Thess. i. 7. 2 Thess. iii. 9. 1 Tim. iv. 12. "Doctor aliorum debet esse instar conchæ (the basin,

10. 12. "Doctor allorum debet esse instar concine (the ossin, into which water flows, in a fountain, and at which men drink), quæ priùs ipsa impletur, quàm in alios redundet." S. Bernard (Serm. 18, in Cantica. A Lapide).

— ἀφθορίαν] uncorruptness. So the major part of the best authorities. Elz. ἀδιαφθορίαν. Cp. Eph. vi. 24. Mill and Bloomf. add ἀφθαρσίαν after σεμνότητα, with D**, G** (perhaps), and I, K. Elz. has ὑμῶν for ἡμῶν.
Vol. II.—Part III.

9, 10. Δούλους] Slaves. See i. l, and l Tim. vi. l.
11. 'Επεφάνη] it dawned; 'illuxit' (Jerome), or 'apparuit.'
The saving Grace of the Gospel of God was like the bright and glorious Light of a beautiful Day-spring, and joyful Day-break which dawned on the world, sitting in the shadow of death. Up. iii. 4. Note the aorist, -- it dawned at Christ's birth.

— πᾶσιν ἀνθρώποις] to all men; to Gentiles as well as Jews, to Women as well as Men, to Slaves as well as to Freemen.

12. παιδεύουσα] Mark, Grace παιδεύει: so far from encouraging men in sin, Grace schools them to shun it. Cp. Rom. vi. 1, 2.

13. ἐπιφάνειαν τῆς δόξης] the Epiphany, or Manifestation of the Glory of Christ, coming to Judgment with Power and Great Glory, and sitting on the Throne of His Glory. See Matt. xix. 28; xxiv. 30; xxv. 31. 2 Thess. i. 9; ii. 8.

τοῦ μεγάλου Θεοῦ καὶ Σωτήρος ἡμῶν 'Ιησοῦ Χριστοῦ] of our Great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. So Theodoret, who says, "St. Paul here calls Christ the Great God; and thus rebukes the sostom here asks, "What can those persons say, who allege that the Son is inferior to the Father?" And Theophylact, "Let such men listen to the Apostle, who declares that the Son is God and Mighty;" and in his note on Phil. ii. 6, "Hear," he says, "Paul affirming that the Son is the Great God," and he then quotes this verse. So likewise S. Jerome, who says, "Our Saviour Jesus Christ is here called the Mighty God." And again, "Christus Jesus, Magnus Deus atque Salvator noster, redemit nos sanguine suo, ut sibi Christianum populum peculiarem faceret." So also Primasius here, "He calls Christ the Great God, concerning Whom the Angel said to Mary, He shall be Great." (Luke i. 32.)

Indeed there is a continuous chain of authorities, reaching from the Apostolic age to the present, showing that this text has been generally applied to God the Son by the best writers.

S. Ignatius (ad Ephes. i.) appears to have had it in his mind, and certainly expresses its sense, when he says,  $\epsilon \nu \, \theta \epsilon \lambda \dot{\eta} \mu a \tau \iota$ Πατρός καὶ Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν.

It was so understood by Clem. Alexand. (Cohort. ad Gentes, p. 7), where he says, that the manifestation here spoken of is the manifestation of the Divine Logos, God and Man.

manifestation of the Divine Logos, God and Man. It was so understood by S. Hippolylus, the disciple of S. Irenæus, and the Author of the Little Labyrinth in Euseb. v. 28, who says, δ γὰρ εὐσπλαγχνος Θεδς καὶ Κύριος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς οὐκ ἐβουλεύετο. See Routh, Rel. Sacr. ii. pp. 26. 151. So Athanasius, ad Adelphium i. p. 915, and in his Treatise on the Essence of the Father, and Son, and Holy Spirit, sect. 27, μέγας Θεδς ἐκλήθη δ υἰός. And Cyril Hieros. (Catech. xv.) applies this manifestation also to Christ, coming to judgment. Other quotations to the same import from Epiphanius (adv. Hæres. p. 887), S. Basil (in Ps. i. and c. Eunom. iv. p. 294), and S. Gregory Nyssen (c. Eunom. x. p. 265), and from S. Chrysostom passim, may be seen in the late Dr. Wordsworth's Six Letters to Granville Sharp, pp. 66—84. S. Chrysostom passim, may be seen in Six Letters to Granville Sharp, pp. 66—84.

See also Dr. Routh, Reliq. Sacr. ii. 26, who observes that άπὸ πάσης ἀνομίας, καὶ καθαρίση έαυτῶ λαὸν περιούσιον, ζηλωτὴν καλῶν k 1 Cor. 16. 11. 1 Tun. 4. 12.

15 κ Ταῦτα λάλει καὶ παρακάλει, καὶ ἔλεγχε μετὰ πάσης ἐπιταγῆς μηδείς σου περιφρονείτω.

a Rom. 13, 1, &c. 1 Pet. 2, 13. ΙΙΙ. 1 - Υπομίμνησκε αὐτοὺς ἀρχαῖς καὶ έξουσίαις ὑποτάσσεσθαι, πειθαρχεῖν, b Phil. 4. 5. 2 Tim. 2. 14 25. c 1 Cor. 6. 11. Eph. 2. 1, &c. & 5. 8. Col. 3. 7. προς παν έργον αγαθον έτοίμους είναι, 2 μηδένα βλασφημείν, αμάχους είναι, έπιεικείς, πάσαν ενδεικνυμένους πραότητα πρός πάντας άνθρώπους.

3 ο Ημεν γάρ ποτε και ήμεις ανόητοι, απειθείς, πλανώμενοι, δουλεύοντες έπιθυμίαις καὶ ήδοναις ποικίλαις, ἐν κακία καὶ φθόνω διάγοντες, στυγητοὶ, μισουντες άλλήλους.

d ch. 2. 11. e John 3. 3, 5. Acts 15, 11. Rom. 3. 20, 28. & 4. 2, 6. & 9. 11. & 11. 6. 4 α Θτε δὲ ή χρηστότης καὶ ή φιλανθρωπία ἐπεφάνη τοῦ Σωτήρος ήμῶν Θεοῦ,  $\frac{\text{Epb. 1.4.}}{\frac{8\cdot 2.\cdot 4.9}{\text{Gal. 2. 16}}}$  οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων τῶν ἐν δικαιοσύνη ὧν ἐποιήσαμεν ἡμεῖς, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὸ αύτοῦ  $\frac{1}{3}$ ἔλεος ἔσωσεν ήμᾶς διὰ λουτροῦ παλιγγενεσίας, καὶ ἀνακαινώσεως Πνεύματος

S. Cyprian, in the third century, often uses the title "Dominus et Deus noster Jesus Christus," and so other Bishops in the Third Council of Carthage, and the Synodic Epistle of the Council of Antioch (Euseb. vii. 30), and Didymus, the Master of S. Jerome

It is certain also, that the Apostle in other places ascribes to our Saviour the title of God. See Rom. ix. 5. Col. ii. 2. Heb. i. 8. Acts xx. 28. And it is probable that St. Paul had here in his mind the prophecy of Isaiah (ix. 6) where Christ is called "the Mighty God." Cp. below on Rev. xix. 17.

The word Ἐπιφάνεια, or Manifestation, here used, is emiled.

ployed by St. Paul in five other places in his Epistles, and in every one of them to describe the manifestation of Christ, and in four of them to designate the future Manifestation of His Coming to Judgment, as here. See 2 Thess. ii. 8. 1 Tim. vi. 14. 2 Tim. i. 10; iv. 1. 8, where see note.

On this text, see also the important remarks of Dr. Water-

On this text, see also the important remarks of Dr. Waterland, Moyer Lectures, vi. vol. ii. p. 129, and below, the note on 2 Pet. i. 1, τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡμῶν καὶ Σωτῆρος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

14. λαὸν περιούσιον] α peculiar people. So Clemens Rom.
58, ὁ Θεὸς ὁ ἐκλεξάμενος ἡμᾶς δι' αὐτοῦ (Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ) εἰς λαὸν περιούσιον. As S. Jerome observes here, this phrase is derived from the LXX, Deut. vii. 6; xiv. 2; xxvi. 18. Exod. xix. 5; and is equivalent to the Hebrew τίξιρ. Cp. Ps. cxxxv. 4. Eccles. ii. 8, where περιουσιασμὸς is used to signify a peculium, a περισούσιος, 1 Pet. ii. 9. The words περιούσιος, περιποίησις mark something more than acquisition and vossession: the premark something more than acquisition and possession; the preposition περl gives to these words an idea of speciality and superiority. Thus the Jews were a λαδς περι-ούσιος, because in the distinctions of God's favour, a habs example to the people, in the distinctions of God's favour, a habs example here explains the word. So those who are in Christ are a habs περι-ούσιος, separate from, and superior to, those who do not receive and obey the Gospel.

- (ηλωτήν] zealous of good works. (ηλωτήν, σπουδαστήν, eych. Let us, therefore, not only do good works, but have zeal for the doing of them, rivalling one another, vying with one another in doing them, and provoking one another to do them.

Chrys. See below on iii. 8.

15. μετὰ πάσης ἐπιταγῆς] with all authority. A proof of the pre-eminence of Titus as Chief Pastor of Crete. See i. 5.

 μηδείς σου περιφρονείτω] let no one despise thee. Cp.
 1 Tim. iv. 12. Nolo te talem exhibeas, ut possis ab aliquo contemni. Nemo, te segniter agente, sic vivat, ut sese te putet esse meliorem; qualis enim ædificatio discipuli, si se intelligat magistro esse majorem ! Jerome.

CH. III. 1. άρχαις και εξουσίαις ύποτάσσεσθαι] to submit themselves to rulers and authorities. Another proof of the Apostle's courage, truthfulness, and divine commission.

The Cretans were noted for their turbulence and unruliness, in which they were abetted and encouraged by the Jews and Judaizers of the island (see on i. 10. 12), and they had now lost their independence, and were subject to a foreign rule, that of Rome, to which they were subjugated by Metellus Creticus, B.C. 67; and Crete was annexed to Cyrene as a Roman Province (Vcll. Paterc. ii. 34. 38. Dio Cass. xxxvi. 2), under a Propretor, with the title of Proconsul (Strabo, p. 840. Orelli, Inscr. 3658. Long, in Smith's Dict. p. 704).
Yet St. Paul charges Titus to inculcate loyalty to the authority of Rome, 1 Tim. ii. 1—3.

If the Apostle had been merely a secular Teacher of human knowledge, or a Champion of a human sect, and had not been endued with divine wisdom, he would not have ventured to inculcate these lessons of subordination to a foreign authority, now wielded by a Nero; but he would either have been silent on the subject, or, perhaps, have flattered the vanity, and inflamed the passions, of the Cretans, and have courted their favour, by following the example of those Teachers, who excited them to throw off the yoke of Roman rule, and to recover their ancient Liberty.

A, C, D*, E*, F, G omit καὶ here: perhaps ἀρχαῖs may be a πρὸς πῶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐτοίμους] ready for every good work.

 Quoted by Clement of Rome, 2.

2. ἐπιεικεῖs] equitable, fair, forbearing. See 1 Tim. iii. 3.

3. Hmer yap note kal hmeis] for we also were formerly foolish. A modest reply from the Apostle to the censure of those who might condemn him as severe and uncharitable, for speaking so sternly of the vices of the Cretans, and of the necessity of salutary discipline in order to amend them. See i. 10-13; ii. 15.

Let not the Cretans imagine that we are thus arrogantly claiming any superiority to ourselves. We also once were, what they now are; and our moral change is not due to ourselves, but to Divine Grace. Let them receive that, and then they will be-

Thus the Apostle is led to speak of Regeneration, v. 5; and he opens out a glorious view, that of the New Birth of the World.

Then follows the Lesson fitly chosen for Christmas Day.

4. ἡ χρηστότης] the kindness. See on Eph. ii. 7. These words are adopted by Justin Martyr, c. Tryphon. c. 47.

 - ἐπεφάνη] dawned upon us. See ii. ll.
 5. οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων τῶν ἐν δικαιοσύνη] not by works (as a cause) wrought in righteousness, which (i. e. works) we did (antecedently to our adoption into Christ, and to which some men, i. e. the Judaizers, pretend, and on which they rely); but according to His own mercy He saved us.

He uses the article των before δικαιοσύνη, because he is citing a phrase which others applied to themselves, but which he altogether repudiates in his own case.

When those false Teachers were asked, What was their ground of hope of salvation, they would reply, τὰ ἔργα τὰ ἐν δικαιοσύνη ὰ ἐποιήσαμεν ἡμεῖs. But St. Paul would answer, Θεοῦ ἔλεοs.

— ἔσωσεν ἡμᾶs] He saved us. As far as He is concerned, we are already saved; for He has done on His part all that was requisite for our salvation; and He has given us a good hope of salvation, if we persevere in the state of salvation in which He placed us at our Baptism. See above on Rom. viii. 24, 29, 30.

 — διὰ λουτροῦ παλιγγενεσίας] by means of the laver of Regeneration. The merciful God delivered us from our former miseries by means of His only-begotten Son, having freely given us forgiveness of sins in the saving waters of Holy Baptism; and having created us again and formed us anew, and having vouchsafed us the gift of the Holy Ghost, and opened to us the path of Righteousness. Theodoret.

The same God, Who created us originally, has now created us ancw. This is the grace and efficacy of Baptism. And as we consist of body and soul,—the one visible, the other invisible,—so Baptism consists of two things, viz. the Water and the Spirit, the one visible and received by our bodies, the other invisible and incorporeal, concurring with the former; the one typical, the other cleansing the inmost soul. Greg. Nazian. Orat. xl. p. 695.

On the doctrine of Regeneration in Baptism, see above on John iii. 5; and Justin Martyr, Apol. i. 61; Irenæus, iii. 17; v. 15. Tertullian, de Baptismo, 1, 20, and de Animâ, c. 20, "Nos άγίου, 6 οδ εξέχεεν εφ' ήμας πλουσίως δια Ίησου Χριστου του Σωτήρος ήμων, t Ezek. 36. 25. 7 ε ΐνα δικαιωθέντες τῆ ἐκείνου χάριτι κληρονόμοι γενηθῶμεν κατ' ἐλπίδα ζωῆς Acts 2.33. αίωνίου.

8 Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος, καὶ περὶ τούτων βούλομαί σε διαβεβαιοῦσθαι, ἵνα φροντί-in aqua nascimur;" Theophyl. ad Autolyc. ii. 16, who imitates St. Paul's words, and says, that all men who resort to the Truth receive remission of sins "by water and the laver of Regeneration, and by being born anew, and receiving a benediction from God." See also the eloquent homily of S. Hippolytus in Theophania, c. 8; and of S. Gregory Nazianzen, xxxix. and xl.; and Dr. Waterland's Sermons, vi. 343. 346; Bp. Bethell, General View of Regeneration in Baptism, Lond. 1850; and Blunt, Early Fathers, Series ii. Lecture xi.; and the excellent observations of Dean Trench, Syn. N. T. § xviii. pp. 74, 75.

The following remarks on this text are from Dr. Waterland.

A learned writer has well proved that the Greek and Latin Fathers not only used the word Regeneration for Baptism, but so appropriated it also to Baptism as to exclude any other conversion, or repentance, not considered with Baptism, from being signified by that name (Wall, Infant Baptism, Part i. xev. pp. 22.

25. 28-30; Defence, pp. 12. 34. 41. 277. 318. 323. 327. 329.

333. 343; Append. pp. 4. 6. Comp. Archbishop Sharpe, vol. iii. Serm. xiii. p. 280, &c. Suicer, Thesaur. tom. i. pp. 243. 396.

339. 1352; tom. ii. pp. 273. 549. 554. Gangius, Glossar. Greec. p. 1084. Bingham, xi. 1. 3, p. 462); so that, according to the ancients, Regeneration, or new birth, was either Baptism itself (including both sign and thing) or a change of mart's entired and including both sign and thing). (including both sign and thing), or a change of man's spiritual state, considered as wrought by the Spirit in or through

This new birth, this Regeneration, could be but once in a Christian's whole life, as Baptism could be but once: and as there could be no second Baptism, so there could be no second new-birth.

Regeneration, with respect to the regenerating agent, means the first admission; and with respect to the recipient, it means the. first entrance into the Spiritual or Christian life. And there cannot be two first entrances or two admissions, any more than two spiritual lives, or two Baptisms.

The analogy which this new spiritual life bears to the natural, demonstrates the same thing. "Cum ergo sint duæ nativitates-una est de terra, alia de cœlo: una est de carne, alia de spiritu; una est de mortalitate, alia de æternitate; una est de masculo et fœminâ, alia de Deo et Ecclesiã. Sed ipsæ duæ sin-gulæ sunt; nec illa potest repeti, nec illa. Jam natus sum de Adam, non me potest iterum generare Adam; jam natus sum de Christo, non me potest iterum generare Adam; Jam natus sum de Christo, non me potest iterum generare Christus. Quomodo uterus non potest repeti, sic nec Baptismus." Augustin. in Johan. Tract. xi. p. 378, tom. iii. part 2, edit. Bened. Conf. Prosper. Sentent. 331, p. 246, apud Augustin. tom. x. in Append. Aquinas, Summ. part 3, qu. 66, art. 9, p. 150.

There are in all, three several lives belonging to every good Christian, and three Births, of course, thereto corresponding. Once he is born into the natural life, born of Adam; once he is once also into a life of glory, born of the Resurrection at the last day. Dr. Waterland (Regeneration stated and explained, vol. vi.

p. 346, on Titus iii. 5).

- καὶ ἀνακαινώσεως Πνεύματος ἁγίου] and by the Renovation of the Holy Spirit.

The παλιγγενεσία, or new Birth, just mentioned by the Apostle, takes place once in the laver of Baptism; but the subsequent work of ἀνακαίνωσις, i. e. renovation, or renewal, is habitually needed by us, and is performed daily by the Holy Spirit. As the Apostle says (2 Cor. iv. 16), "The inner man is being renewed (ἀνακαινοῦται, present tense) day by day."

Observe the word ἐξέχεεν, He poured forth from a spring; and observe the word λουτρον, a laver, into which what is poured forth from the form.

forth flows.

These words, combined with the context here, and with our Lord's own declaration (in John iii. 5), on the necessity of being born again of Water (ἐξ ΰδατος) and of the Spirit, display the true doctrine of Regeneration;

All the spiritual Blessings of the New birth, and of the New life, are therein represented as flowing down to us from and out of the one fountain and well-spring of the Love of God the Father; and are all derived to us through God the Son, God and Man, Who is the sole Channel of all grace to men; and are applied to us personally by the agency of God the Holy Ghost. See note above on 2 Cor. xiii. 13.

All these Blessings come to us through the Incarnation of God the Son, Who took our nature and died for us, and washed us from our sins by His blood. And the Incarnation is, as it were, the point of contact, at which the channel of Filial Grace joins on to the Well-spring of Paternal Love, which opens out the way for the effusion of Grace to all the family of Man, whose nature God took in Christ. And the point of contact, at which the living Water of Grace, which flows from the Well-spring of Paternal Love through the Filial Channel of Grace, is poured forth into our souls, is in the laver of our New Birth in Baptism.

Thus, then, the Baptismal Font is the receptacle, into which the Grace flowing from the spring of God's love, and streaming down to us through Christ, God and Man, dying for us on the Cross, is poured forth as water conveyed by an aqueduct from a secret source in the distant hills, and gushing out into a pool; and is applied to the cleansing of our souls from original sin, and to the quickening of them in the spiritual Siloam of the laver of Christ was born once by the operation of the Holy Ghost, and He lives for evermore.

He was born once in us by the operation of the Holy Ghost. And if we are truly His, He is daily renewed in us by the working of the same Spirit, and will dwell for ever in us.

Hence we see the wisdom of the Church in choosing the present passage of St. Paul for a proper Lesson on the Festival of Christ's Nativity, and in teaching us to pray, in her Collect for that Day, to God, Who has given His only-begotten Son to take our nature upon Him, that we, who have been born again and made God's Children by adoption and grace in Christ, may daily be renewed by the Holy Spirit, through the same Jesus Christ our Lord.

The reader will not have failed to observe the evidence afforded by this passage on the Doctrine of the distinct personality and several operations of the Three Persons of the Ever-Blessed Trinity. Cp. 2 Cor. xiii. 13.

7. γενηθώμεν] So A, C, D*, F, G, Lach., Tisch., Ellicott, Alf.—Elz. γενώμεθα.

8. Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος—διαβεβαιοῦσθαι] Faithful is the saying; a formula introducing a solemn asseveration. 1 Tim. i. 15; iii. 1;

iv. 9. 2 Tim. ii. 11.
The saying thus prefaced is that which declares the practical character of the doctrine of Regeneration by Baptism.

This doctrine, therefore, of Baptismal Regeneration, is not (as it has been vainly misrepresented by some) a mere empty formality, a barren and unfruitful speculation, but it is the very root of virtuous practice.

The Apostle teaches, and commands Titus to teach, that they who have been engrafted into Christ by Baptism, must be careful to promote good works. They who have been born anew in Baptism have entered into a solemn covenant with God, by which they obliged themselves to a new and holy life; and therefore all who are baptized, are bound to keep their hearts with diligence. Prov. iv. 23. See Greg. Nazian. Orat. xl.

We who are baptized were baptized into Christ's death (says

St. Paul, Rom. vi. 3); that is, into a conformity to it, as well as into a participation of its benefits, that we should be dead to sin; and as He was raised up from the dead, we should not continue we were baptized into His body. (1 Cor. vi. 13.) Our bodies were made members of Christ (1 Cor. vi. 15), and were united in Him to God, and became Temples of God the Holy Ghost (1 Cor. iii. 16; vi. 19. 2 Cor. vi. 16); and we are therefore pledged thereby to be holy as He is holy (1 Pet. i. 15), to walk worthy of our holy vocation (Eph. i. 4-6; iv. 1), and to bring forth the fruits of the Spirit in our lives. (Gal. v. 22.) See above on Eph. v. 5, and 1 Tim. iii. 16.

The teaching of St. Paul in this passage, and in many others of the Pastoral Epistles, where he dwells specially on the necessity of good works (1 Tim. ii. 10; v. 10; vi. 18. 2 Tim. ii. 21. Tit. i. 16; ii. 7. 14; iii. 14), is a protest and safeguard against a form of religion, and particularly of Judaism, which contented itself with a specious profession of Knowledge which it dignified with the name of Faith, but which was not productive of good fruits.

These passages are very important, as showing St. Paul's concurrence in the teaching of St. James, who wrote his General Epistle with a special view to this hypocritical form of nominal

See above, the Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, 204-206, and above, p. 433; and the Introduction to the Epistle of St. James.

3 0 2

ch. 1. 14. i Matt. 18. 15—17. Rom. 16. 17. 2 Cor. 13. 2. 2 Thess. 3. 6. 2 Tim. 3. 5. 2 Tim. 3. 5. 2 John 10. k Acts 20. 4. Eph. 6. 21. Col. 4. 6. 2 Tim. 4, 12, $^{h\ 1\ Tim.\ 1.\ 3-7.}_{&\ 4.\ 7.\ &\ 6.\ 20.}$  ζωσι καλῶν ἔργων προΐστασθαι οἱ πεπιστευκότες Θε $^{0}$  ταῦτά ἐστι καλὰ καὶ  $^{2\ Tim.\ 2.\ 23.}$ ώφέλιμα τοις ανθρώποις. 9 h Μωρας δε ζητήσεις και γενεαλογίας, και έρεις και μάχας νομικάς περιίστασο, είσι γάρ άνωφελείς και μάταιοι.

10 ι Αίρετικον ἄνθρωπον μετὰ μίαν καὶ δευτέραν νουθεσίαν παραιτοῦ, 11 εἰδὼς ότι έξέστραπται ὁ τοιοῦτος, καὶ άμαρτάνει ὢν αὐτοκατάκριτος.

12 κο Όταν πέμψω 'Αρτεμάν πρός σε, ή Τύχικον, σπούδασον έλθειν πρός με είς

- καλῶν ἔργων προΐστασθαι] to promote good works; more than to do them; to be, as it were, "præfecti operum bonorum," to be foremost in them, and to lead others to them. The verb προίστασθαι, with a genitive of persons, signifies to stand before them as their chief, ruler, protector, and patron, npostatron, (1 Thess. v. 12. 1 Tim. iii. 4. 12.) And it is coupled with things, as here: προΐστασθαι τέχνης, Athen. p. 612; ἐργασίας, Plut. Pericl. p. 151 (Wetstein), where it means to drive on, and zealously to promote, aid, and urge on a work or trade, and not to allow the trade or work to stand still, but to drive on the workman. The overseer of the workmen who built a house or temple was called προστάτης ξργων, ξργοδιώκτης, "Præfectus operum," "Clerk of the works."

Such is a Christian's duty in this life, to be a προστάτης καλῶν ἔργων, or, as he calls it, ii. 14, to be a ζηλωτής καλῶν ἔργων. The meaning is well illustrated by the opposite declaration of Scripture concerning false teachers, who have an active tongue and lazy hand; who bind heavy burdens upon other men's shoulders, but will not come forward and reach out so much as one of their fingers to move them. (Matt. xxiii. 4.) Koray.

 οἱ πεπιστευκότες Θεῷ] They who have made public profession of faith in God; they who have been baptized and engrafted into the company of the faithful, or visible Church. On this sense of  $\pi \iota \sigma \tau = \iota \omega$ , see Acts viii. 13; xiii. 48, where see note. Rom. xiii. 11. Elz. has  $\tau \hat{\varphi}$  before  $\Theta \epsilon \hat{\varphi}$ , and has  $\tau \hat{\alpha}$  before  $\kappa \alpha \lambda \hat{\alpha}$ , but it is not found in the best authorities.

9. γενεαλογίαs] genealogies of the Judaizers. See 1 Tim. i. 4, and Koray here, p. 323.

 $-\pi\epsilon \rho \iota \hat{i} \sigma \tau a \sigma o]$  avoid, by going round about, purposely out of the way, to shun. 2 Tim. ii. 16,  $\pi\epsilon \rho \iota \hat{i} \sigma \tau a \sigma o = \mathring{a} \nu \mathring{a} \phi \epsilon \nu \gamma \epsilon$  (Hesych.),  $\pi\epsilon \rho \iota \hat{i} \sigma \tau a \sigma \theta a = \mathring{\epsilon} \kappa \kappa \lambda \mathring{\epsilon} \nu \epsilon \iota \nu$ ,  $\phi \epsilon \acute{\nu} \gamma \epsilon \iota \nu$  (Suid.). Cp. Wetstein, p. 358, and Koray, Atakta, ii. p. 323.

10. Αίρετικόν] one who makes αίρέσεις or parties; a sectary, whether in doctrine or discipline. (See on 1 Cor. xi. 19.) The essence of Heresy lies in the exercise of the will or choice. "Hæresis (alpeois) Græcè ab electione dicitur, quòd scilicet unusquisque id sibi eligat, quod ei melius esse videatur."

It has pleased God, in the exercise of His own Sovereign Counsel and Will (Eph. i. 5), to make certain Revelations to man. He has consigned those Revelations to the Holy Scriptures, which are inspired by Him, and may be proved so to be, and which may also be shown to be a full and perfect exposition of His Will as to all supernatural Truth necessary for everlasting He has committed those Scriptures to the keeping of His Church, the Pillar and Ground of Truth (1 Tim. iii. 15), the Body of Christ, to which He has promised His presence and His Spirit to guide her into all truth. (John xiv. 16; xvi. 13. Matt. xxviii. 20.) Whosoever, then, after this act of God's sovereign Counsel and Will, does not set himself carefully to ascertain the Will of God, and dutifully to conform himself to it in matters of Doctrine and Discipline, but voluntarily chooses for himself some opinion, or adopts some practice in contravention of the Divine Will, as expressed in Holy Scripture and as interpreted by the consent, and embodied in the practice, of the Universal Church; whosoever introduces some new Article of Faith not found in Scripture, and unknown to the primitive Catholic Church, - and much more, whosoever introduces some Article of Faith contradictory to Scripture and to the Sense of the primitive Universal Church,—that man is an aiperikos, a Heretic, and is to be avoided as such.

See Irenous, i. 16, who says, "Quotquot absistunt ab Ecclesia, verè à semet ipsis sunt damnati, quos Paulus jubet devi-tare." And the clear statement of Tertullian (de Præser. c. 7), "Paulus hæreses inter carnalia crimina numerat, scribens ad Galatas (Gal. v. 20), et Tito suggerit, hominem hæreticum post primam correptionem recusandum, quod perversus sit ejusmodi, et delinquat ut à semet ipso damnatus. Sed et'in omni penè Epistolà de adulterinis doctrinis fugiendis inculcans, hæreses taxat, quarum opera sunt adulteræ doctrinæ, hæreses dictæ Græcâ roco ex interpretatione electionis, qua quis sive ad instituendas sive ad suscipiendas cas utitur. Ideo et sibi damnatum dixit hæreticum, quia et in quo damnatur, sibi elegit. Nobis verò nihil ex nostro arbitrio indulgere licet, sed nec eligere quod ali-quis de arbitrio suo induxerit. Apostolos Domini habemus auctores, qui nec ipsi quicquam ex suo arbitrio, quod inducerent, elegerunt, sed acceptam à Christo disciplinam fideliter nationibus adsignaverunt. Itaque etiam si angelus de cælis aliter evangelizaret, anathema diceretur à nobis." (Gal. i. 8.)

- παραιτοῦ] See 1 Tim. iv. 7.

11. ἐξέστραπται] is perverted; properly, has been turned inside out, like a garment,—ἐκστρέψαι ἰμάτιον, τὸ ἀλλάξαι τὸ πρὸς τὸ ἔσω μέρος ἔξω. Schol. Aristoph. Nub. 88. Wetstein,

p. 378.

A very expressive description of an alperinds. Man's duty is to ascertain the will of God (see on v. 10); to clothe himself with it, to wear it, and exhibit it publicly in his life. But the  $\alpha i \rho \epsilon - \tau \iota \kappa \delta s$ , or sectary, turns the garment inside out. He walks with the lining of his coat turned outside; he hides God's will, as if it were not fit to show, and perversely parades, and egotistically protrudes, his own will, in the eyes of men, as if it alone were beautiful and worth seeing. Thus he makes himself ridiculous in the sight of thoughtful men. St. Paul therefore calls him self-condemned; he stands forth in public view as convicted by his own self-love and self-adulation, and by his contempt of God's Will and Word. Cp. 1 Tim. v. 24.
 — ἀμαρτάνει] sinneth. On the moral guilt of αῖρεσις seo

1 Tim. v. 20.

12.  $^o O \tau a \nu \pi \epsilon \mu \psi \omega$ ] When I shall have sent Artemas to thee, or Tychicus. Titus was not to quit his post in Crete, till the Apostle had sent some one, Artemas or Tychicus, to watch over the Church there.

It was very fitting (says S. Jerome) that the Apostle, who had preached the Gospel from Jerusalem round about unto Illyricum (Rom. xv. 19), should not suffer the Cretans to be left desolate, both by his own absence and by that of Titus at once, but should send to them in his own stead and that of Titus, Artemas, or Tychicus, to comfort them by teaching and consolation.

In like manner, when St. Paul sent for Timothy to come to him at Rome, he took care to inform him, that he had sent Tychicus to Ephesus to take charge of affairs there. 2 Tim. iv. 12.

It is probable, therefore, that Artemas was the person sent to Crete by St. Paul; and that Tychicus remained with the Apostle till he was sent to Ephesus; or, if Tychicus was the person sent, he afterwards returned to St. Paul.

— σπούδασον έλθεῖν πρός με είς Νικόπολιν] do thy diligence to come to me to Nicopolis; probably the Nicopolis in Epirus, built by Augustus after the battle at Actium, and thence deriving its name,—' the City of Victory.' Sueton. Aug. 18. Strabo, xii. 325. Howson, ii. p. 481. So Jerome, who says (in Prolog. ad Epistolam): "Scribit Apostolus de Nicopoli, quæ in Actiaco litore sita est, præscribitque Tito, ut, cùm è duobus Artemas seu Tychicus Cretam fuerit appulsus, ipse (Titus) Nicopolim veniat.

It is probable that St. Paul passed over from Macedonia into Epirus after his promised visit to Philippi. See Introduction, p. 435.

Nearly ten years before this Epistle was written, when St. Paul left Ephesus for Macedonia (A.D. 57, Acts xx. 1), he found Titus there (2 Cor. vii. 5, 6), and in all probability Titus then went with St. Paul on his missionary tour into Illyricum. (See on Acts xx. 1, 2. Rom. xv. 19.)

We find also, that after the date of this Epistle, and soon before St. Paul's death, Titus had gone, probably by St. Paul's command, into the neighbouring country of Dalmatia. (2 Tim.

If this Epistle was written, as is most likely, a little before St. Paul's second Imprisonment and Martyrdom, then the intention of sending Titus into Dalmatia, as a person already acquainted with the Churches there planted by St. Paul, would harmonize very well with this command to come to the Apostle to Nicopolis, in Epirus, which would be on the route of Titus from Crete to Dalmatia.

A description of Nicopolis may be seen in the Editor's Work on Greece, pp. 313-315, ed. 1858.

Νικόπολιν, ἐκεῖ γὰρ κέκρικα παραχειμάσαι. 13 1 Ζηνᾶν τὸν νομικὸν καὶ ᾿Απολλὼ 1 Λοτε 18, 24, σπουδαίως πρόπεμψον, ίνα μηδεν αὐτοῖς λείπη. 14 Μανθανέτωσαν δε καὶ οἱ ήμέτεροι καλων έργων προΐστασθαι είς τὰς ἀναγκαίας χρείας, ἵνα μὴ ὧσιν ἄκαρποι.

 $^{15}$  'Ασπάζονταί σε οἱ μετ' ἐμοῦ πάντες ἄσπασαι τοὺς φιλοῦντας ἡμᾶς ἐν πίστει.  $^{\text{m 1 Cor. 16. 28.}}_{\text{Eph. 6. 24.}}$   $^{\text{m '}}$ Η χάρις μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν.  $^{\text{m bl. Cor. 16. 28.}}_{\text{Eph. 13. 25.}}$ <sup>m</sup> Ή χάρις μετὰ πάντων ὑμῶν.

— ἐκεῖ γὰρ κέκρικα] for I have determined to winter there. St. Paul therefore was now at liberty. This Epistle was written, as is most probable, in the interval between his two imprisonments at Rome. See above, Introduction, p. 492.

13. Ζηνῶν] Zenodorus. On the abbreviations of names, see above, Introduction to St. Luke, p. 157.

— τον νομικόν] the lawyer, acquainted with the Levitical Law, and who will be of use to thee in dealing with the Judaizing Teachers, and in refuting their errors. See v. 9. Do not therefore imaging that I discovered the second secon fore imagine that I disparage the Law; no, I revere the Law, which is from God; and therefore I would have thee to confute those who pervert the Law, by arguments from the Law,-as St. Paul himself has done in his Epistles to the Galatians and Romans

The same observation applies to Apollos. (Acts xviii. 24

-26.

These names,— $Z\eta\nu\hat{a}s$ , derived from Ze $\hat{b}s$ , the heathen deity whose tomb was shown in Crete; and  $^{3}A\pi\delta\lambda\lambda\omega s = ^{3}A\pi\delta\lambda\lambda\omega\nu is$ , from  $^{3}A\pi\delta\lambda\lambda\omega s$ ; and  $^{3}A\eta\tau\epsilon\mu\hat{a}s = ^{3}A\eta\tau\epsilon\mu\hat{a}\delta\omega\rho\sigma s$ , from  $^{3}A\eta\tau\epsilon\mu s$  the root reddees of February pages now home by friends of the great goddess of Ephesus,-names now borne by friends of the Apostle, and here honourably mentioned by him, -are suggestive of reflections on the blessed change wrought silently by the Gospel on the nomenclature, language, and household words of the world. See above on Rom. xvi. 14.

14. οἱ ἡμέτεροι] ours as well as thyself. A precept to those who would hear this Epistle read in the Church.
 — χρείαs] wants. Eph. iv. 28, 29.

ПРО∑ TIMOOEON B.

Ι. Ι ΠΑΥΛΟΣ ἀπόστολος Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ διὰ θελήματος Θεοῦ κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν ζωής τής ἐν Χριστώ Ἰησοῦ, Τιμοθέω ἀγαπητώ τέκνω, χάρις, ἔλεος, εἰρήνη άπὸ Θεοῦ Πατρὸς καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν.

s Acts 22. 3. & 23. 1. & 24. 14. Rom. 1. 8, 9. Eph. 1. 16. 1 Thess. 1. 2, 3. & 3. 10. b Acts 16. 1. c Acts 6. 6. & 8. 17. & 13. 2. & 19. 6. 1 Tim. 4. 14.

$ 5. 22.

3 α Χάριν ἔχω τῷ Θεῷ, ῷ λατρεύω ἀπὸ προγόνων ἐν καθαρᾳ συνειδήσει, ὡς άδιάλειπτον έχω την περί σοῦ μνείαν έν ταις δεήσεσί μου νυκτός και ήμέρας, 4 ἐπιποθῶν σε ἰδεῖν, μεμνημένος σου τῶν δακρύων, ἵνα χαρᾶς πληρωθῶ, 5 τ ὑπόμνησιν λαμβάνων της έν σοι άνυποκρίτου πίστεως, ήτις ένώκησε πρώτον έν τη μάμμη σου Λωΐδι, καὶ τῆ μητρί σου Εὐνίκη, πέπεισμαι δὲ ὅτι καὶ ἐν σοί.

6 ο Δι' ην αιτίαν αναμιμνήσκω σε αναζωπυρείν το χάρισμα του Θεου, ο έστιν Πρός Τιμόθεον Β] So, A, D, E, F, G, K.-D, E, F, G have άρχεται πρός Τ. β.

For prefatory remarks to this Epistle, see above, Introduc-tion, pp. 432-435.

CH. I. 1. κατ' ἐπαγγελίαν] in order to proclaim the promise of everlasting life in Christ. (Theodoret.) On this use of κατὰ see Tit. i. 1.

3.  $τ\bar{\phi}$  Θε $\bar{\phi}$ ,  $\bar{\phi}$  λατρεύω ἀπὸ προγύνων] to the God whom I serve from my forefathers. The Apostle in his old age dutifully records his obligations, and reverently expresses his thankfulness, to his progenitors, and sets an example to others of similar gratitude (cp. 1 Tim. v. 4); and also defends himself against the imputation that he was an apostate from the faith of his forefathers. He shows his gratitude to them, by preaching the promise (v. 1) made to Abraham in Christ.

- ἐν καθαρᾳ συνειδήσει] in a pure conscience. On the sense of these words see on Acts xxiii. 1, and compare Heb. xiii. 18. A defence of himself against those who alleged his example in persecuting the Church, as an argumentum ad hominem in their own behalf. He had acted in that respect with a view to no personal advantage, but in zeal for God's glory; and though he condemns himself as a blasphemer, and injurious for so doing (1 Tim. i. 13. 15), yet his case was very different from theirs, who had seared their consciences with a hot iron, and whose mind and conscience were deprayed (1 Tim. iv. 2. Tit. i. 15), and who had the full evidence of the Gospel displayed before their eyes; which at that time he had not. See on 1 Tim. i. 13.

4. μεμνημένος σου των δακρύων remembering thy tears, shed on the occasion of St. Paul's departure from him. (Theodoret.)

Compare the affecting description Acts xx. 37.

In his first Epistle to Timothy, St. Paul had signified his inthe his here. Episte of Timony, 3t. Patr had signified his intention of coming to him. (I Tim. iii. 14.) Probably that intention had been fulfilled, and the severance, of which he now speaks, was the close of that visit. Concerning the probable circumstances of that severance, see below on vv. 15—18.

— Ίνα χαρῶς πληρωθω] in order that I may be filled with joy. To be construed with iδεῖν. Theoph.

5. ἐν τῆ μάμμη σου Λωΐδι] in thy grandmother Lois. Why does the Apostle go back so far in his affectionate recollections of Timothy? Probably for similar reasons to those which led him Timothy? Probably for similar reasons to those which led him to speak of his own progenitors (v. 3). He would cheer Timothy with the reflection, that his own faith was not, as his adversaries alleged, a falling away from the faith of his grandmother, a holy woman under the Law, but was the same faith as hers. She had believed in Christ to come; he had been baptized in Christ come. There was one faith, and one Saviour for both.

A beautiful picture of dutiful reverence for the household piety of departed relatives is seen in this touching reference to Lois, on the part of the great Apostle, now full of years and honour, at the commencement of this farewell Epistle to the Bishop of Ephesus.

On St. Paul's habit of looking back with thankfulness to past blessings, see below on iii. 11, and above on Phil. iv. 15.

6. ἀναζωπυρεῖν] to stir up the flame. σφοδρότερον το πῦρ ἐργάζεσθαι (Theoph.): ἀνεγεῖραι (Hesych.), the opposite of σβεννύναι, 1 Thess. v. 19. ζωπυρεῖν, κυρίως τοὺς ἀνθρακας φυσῶν (Suid.). The word is found used intransitively. Clem. Rom. i. 27, ἀναζωπυρησάτω ἡ πίστις αὐτοῦ ἐν ὑμῖν. Cp. Ignat. ad Ephes. 1.

Almighty God in His wisdom permits His truth to be assailed by Satan, as a rich occasion for those, whom He hath gifted for it, &va(ωπυρεῖν, to awaken their zeal, to quicken their industry, to muster up their abilities for the defence and rescue of that παραθήκη, that precious Truth whereof they are depositories, and wherewith He hath entrusted them. Bp. Sanderson (ii. p. 48).

The word ἀναζωπυρεῖν, as already observed, signifies to quicken a flame and keep it alive. The sacred flame of Divine Grace and Truth which comes down from heaven, and is kindled on the Altar of the Church, is committed to the vigilant custody of those who are ordained to be Bishops and Pastors of His Church. They are to take care that it is not bedimmed or sullied Their office is like that of Christian Vestals watching the heavenly fire, that sacred παραθήκη committed to their trust. Their duty is to quicken it (ava (ωπυρείν), and to take care that it may not languish, and never be quenched. To them, in a Christian sense, may be addressed the solemn words of the Roman Law, "Custodiant ignem foci publici sempiternum." (Cicero, de Leg. ii. 8.) The failure of that flame, by the negligence of those who were appointed to watch it and keep it alive, was regarded by the Romans as foreboding the extinction of the Republic; and that negligence was visited by the severest penalties. Here the emblem is instructive. Was it in the mind of St. Paul?

έν σοὶ διὰ τῆς ἐπιθέσεως τῶν χειρῶν μου. 7 d Οὐ γὰρ ἔδωκεν ἡμῖν ὁ Θεὸς a Rom. 8. 15.

πνεθμα δειλίας, άλλα δυνάμεως, καὶ ἀγάπης, καὶ σωφρονισμοθ.

αὐτοῦ· ἀλλὰ συγκακοπάθησον τῷ εὐαγγελίω κατὰ δύναμιν Θεοῦ, 9 <sup>f</sup> τοῦ σώ- Phil. 1.7. σαντος ήμᾶς καὶ καλέσαντος κλήσει ἁγία, οὐ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα ἡμῶν, ἀλλὰ κατ ὶ Tim. 2.6. ταντος ημας και κακεσαντος κκησει αγία, ου κατά τα εργά ημών, ακκά και είναι 2.3. είδιαν πρόθεσιν, καὶ χάριν τὴν δοθείσαν ἡμιν εν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ πρὸ χρόνων Philem. 1, 9, 13. Rom. 8, 29. αἰωνίων, 10 5 φανερωθεῖσαν δὲ νῦν διὰ τῆς ἐπιφανείας τοῦ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Ερh. 1. 4. & 2. 8 Χριστοῦ, καταργήσαντος μὲν τὸν θάνατος φωτίσαντος δὲ ἴωὸν καὶ ἀφθαρσίας & 3. 11.

ματος άγίου τοῦ ἐνοικοῦντος ἐν ἡμῖν.

15 m Οἶδας τοῦτο, ὅτι ἀπεστράφησάν με πάντες οἱ ἐν τῆ ᾿Ασία ὧν ἐστι Φύγελος ch. 4. 10, 16.

- διὰ τῆς ἐπιθέσεως κ.τ.λ.] through the laying on of my hands. See 1 Tim. iv. 14, and Acts xiv. 23; xiii. 3. word παραθήκη in v. 12, seems designed to remind Timothy that we can have no reasonable hope of our finding our own παραθήκη kept for us in God's hands, unless we keep His παραθήκη carefully in our hands.

- διὰ Πνεύματος άγίου] through the Holy Spirit, not by means of thine own strength, but seeking for, and relying on, the means of thine own strength, but seeking for, and relying on, the aid of the Holy Ghost to enable thee to guard it.

15.  $d\pi\epsilon\sigma\tau\rho d\phi\eta\sigma d\nu$   $\mu\in ]$  they turned away from me at some particular time, when I needed, and expected, their help.

15. -17.  $\pi d\nu \tau \epsilon s$  of  $\ell \nu$   $\tau \bar{\eta}$  'Aofa  $\kappa.\tau.\lambda.$ ] all in Asia turned away from me. This cannot mean all in Asia who were at Rome. Such an interpretation is a very forced one. The words can only mean that 'all in Asia turned away' from him, not indeed all the Christians there. For Openiapowe did not desert him nor Timothy. Christians there; for Onesiphorus did not desert him, nor Timothy, nor Aquila and Priscilla (iv. 19); but all of that party to which Phygelus (so the best MSS.) and Hermogenes belonged, turned away from me.

He adds that Onesiphorus often refreshed him, and was not ashamed of his chain.

Nor was this all. Onesiphorus also afterward when he came to Rome, still more diligently sought for him, and found

These words imply, that St. Paul had been exposed to some special peril when in Asia, and that thus the stedfastness of his friends there was then put to the test.

Then it was, that Phygelus and Hermogenes deserted him: then, probably, it was, that Alexander the Coppersmith, an ancient enemy (Acts xix. 33), in revenge for St. Paul's disciplinarian severity towards him (1 Tim. i. 20), did him much evil (2 Tim. iv. 14). Then it was, that Onesiphorus, who dwelt at Ephesus (2 Tim. iv. 19), stood firmly by him, and was not ashamed of his chain (v. 16), i. e. of the chain by which he was bound in Asia. Nor was this all; but when, subsequently, Onesiphorus came from Asia to Rome, he carefully sought for, and found out, the Apostle, and ministered to him. Onesiphorus is thus put in striking contrast to that other party in Asia which betrayed St. Paul in his need.

If this interpretation of this passage is correct, we are led to the following inference, viz. that St. Paul was in Asia a short time before he wrote this his final Epistle; and that he was then made a victim of the malice of the Asiatic Jews, who had formerly united with Demetrius the Silversmith at Ephesus against him (Acts xix. 23. 33), and had put forth Alexander against him, but had been disappointed of executing their designs against him, at that time, by the interference of St. Paul's friends (Acts xix. 31), and had afterwards pursued him with their rancour even to Jerusalem, and had stirred the multitude against him there, and had arrested him in the Temple. (Acts xxi. 27-29.)

Such persons as these would have been greatly exasperated against him after his release from his first Roman imprisonment, which they doubtless had hoped would end in his death; and they would probably be cognizant of his severe language against the Judaizers, in his recent Epistles to the Philippians and to Titus, and in the first Epistle to Timothy.

These Asiatic Jews, his unrelenting and inveterate foes and persecutors, would gladly seize any opportunity for wreaking their

8. τον δέσμιον αὐτοῦ] his prisoner, now a second time at Rome. See iv. 16. As to the phrase itself, see Eph. iii. 1.

In his former Epistle he had expressed his design of coming to see Timothy. He was then at liberty. (1 Tim. iii. 14.) But now he is again in chains, and therefore desires him to come to him. (2 Tim. iv. 21.) Cp. Euseb. ii. 22, and the Introduction above, pp. 428-435.

- συγκακοπάθησον] suffer afflictions with the Gospel. Some Expositors render this, 'be a sharer of suffering with me in the Gospel.' But the construction is more natural, and the image is much more striking, if the Gospel is regarded as a living sentient thing, and the words are rendered as above, Be thou a partner with the Gospel in its sufferings, and so thou shalt be a sharer of its glory. Cp. 1 Tim. vi. 1. Tit. ii. 5, where the Word of God is said to suffer blasphemy.

— κατὰ δύναμιν Θεοῦ] according to the power of God. Since God's power to support, save, and reward us who suffer for Him, is infinite, our willingness to suffer ought to be in proportion to (κατά) His power.

9. τοῦ σώσαντος ἡμᾶς—οὐ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα] who saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to His own purpose, and grace that was given us in Christ Jesus before all ages. See on Tit. iii. 5.

— πρὸ χρόνων αἰωνίων] before times which extend back till there was no Time. See on Tit. i. 2.

10. καταργήσαντος — θάνατον] who destroyed Death, and shed light on Life and Immortality by the Gospel. Not first revealed them; but made them more clear. (Prof. Blunt.)
12. την παραθήκην μου] that treasure which I have laid up in heaven, by spending, and being spent, for His sake. Matt. vi. 20.
Mark x. 21. Luke xii. 33. This is my comfort and joy in all my sufferings for His sake, that whatever I spend, even if it be my life itself will be restred to me with abundant interest at the Great itself, will be restored to me with abundant interest at the Great Day; for whosoever loseth his life for Christ's sake shall find it, and keep it unto life eternal. Matt. x. 39; xvi. 25. Luke ix. 24; zvii. 33. John zii. 25.

The sense is well expressed by A Lapide: " Depositum vocat thesaurum laborum et passionum pro Evangelio à se obitorum, quem Paulus patiens et moriens quasi apud Deum deposuit, ut in illo die magno illum recipiat, et coram toto mundo declaretur falsò fuisse traductus, incarceratus, verberibus et contumeliis affectus, tanquam impostor, publiceque proclametur verus fuisse veri Dei et Evangelii Apostolus et Doctor." See the appropriate Lesson appointed for St. Paul's Day, Book of Wisdom, chap. v.

13. 'Υποτύπωσιν ἔχε] Hold fast the pattern (1 Tim. i. 16),— the archetype and exemplar of sound words which thou art bound the truth from thy precept and practice.

14. την καλην παραθήκην] the good deposit. So the best authorities.—Etz. has παρακαταθήκην. See above on v. 6, and Tertullian (Præscr. Hæret. cap. 25, 26), who hence well argues, that a definite 'depositum fidei,' from which nothing is to be detracted, and to which no addition can be made, was well known n Acts 29, 20. Eph. 6, 20, ch. 4, 19.

καὶ Ερμογένης. 16 ° Δώη έλεος ὁ Κύριος τῷ 'Ονησιφόρου οἴκω, ὅτι πολλάκις με ἀνέψυξε, καὶ τὴν ἄλυσίν μου οὐκ ἐπησχύνθη, 17 ἀλλὰ γενόμενος ἐν 'Ρώμη σπουδαιότερον εζήτησε με καὶ ευρε 18 δώη αυτώ ὁ Κύριος ευρείν έλεος παρά Κυρίου ἐν ἐκείνη τῆ ἡμέρα καὶ ὅσα ἐν Ἐφέσω διηκόνησε βέλτιον σὰ γιa 1 Tim. 3. 2, 9. & 4. 6. Tit. 1. 5—9. b ch. 1. 8. & 4 5. c 1 Cor. 9. 25.

23. Heb. 10. 36. e 2 Sam. 7. 12. Ps. 132. 11. Acts 2, 30 Rom. 1. 3.

ΙΙ. 1 Σὺ οὖν, τέκνον μου, ἐνδυναμοῦ ἐν τῆ χάριτι τῆ ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ, 2 α καὶ α ήκουσας παρ' έμου δια πολλών μαρτύρων, ταθτα παράθου πιστοις ανθρώποις, οίτινες ίκανοὶ ἔσονται καὶ έτέρους διδάξαι. 3 Συγκακοπάθησον ώς καλὸς στρατιώτης Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ. 4 ° Οὐδεὶς στρατευόμενος έμπλέκεται ταῖς τοῦ βίου αι Cor. 9. 7-11, πραγματείαις, ίνα τῷ στρατολογήσαντι ἀρέση. 5 Ἐὰν δὲ καὶ ἀθλη τις, οὐ στεφανοῦται ἐὰν μὴ νομίμως ἀθλήση. 6 d Τὸν κοπιῶντα γεωργὸν δεῖ πρῶτον τῶν καρπῶν μεταλαμβάνειν. 7 Νόει ὁ λέγω δώσει γάρ σοι ὁ Κύριος σύνεσιν έν πᾶσι.

8 ° Μνημόνευε Ἰησοῦν Χριστὸν ἐγηγερμένον ἐκ νεκρῶν, ἐκ σπέρματος Δαυτό, vengcance upon him. Such an opportunity would have presented itself to them on the occasion of a visit of the Apostle to Asia; a short time before the date of this Epistle.

Then the persecution of the Christians had been set on foot by the Emperor Nero; and then, it is probable, the Jews resorted to their ancient stratagem of enlisting the passions and the power of the Heathen Magistrates (see on Acts xvii. 5, 6) against the Apostle; and then, perhaps, it was, that St. Paul was arrested a second time, and sent a second time a prisoner to Rome.

In confirmation of this statement, it will be remembered that at the Martyrdom of S. Polycarp, in another great Asiatic city, Smyrna, the Jews were the leaders of the Heathen against that Apostolic Father and Bishop of the Church (Martyr. Polycarp. 12). In his execution, it is expressly recorded that the Jews were specially eager and forward, as their custom is, is έθος αὐτοῖς (c. 13; see also c. 17 and c. 18).

Besides, it is evident from the Epistles of St. Peter, written about this time, that a fiery trial of Persecution was now raging against the Christians in Asia. See 1 Pet. i. 7; iii. 14; iv.

12. 16; v. 10.

Perhaps it was under such circumstances as these that the Apostle took leave of Timothy at that affecting farewell mentioned in v. 4. See above, the Introduction to these Epistles, p. 435; and below on iv. 13-19.

16. ἀνέψυξε] " refrigeravit, recreavit;" refreshed me, as a weary, thirsty, and hungry traveller, in a hot day. Wetstein.

17. γενόμενος εν 'Ρώμη] they (Phygelus and Hermogenes) turned away from me when I was with them in Asia; but Onesiphorus, who had not been ashamed of my chain in Asia, when he afterwards came to Rome, sought me out in my prison there, and found me. May God reward him and his! Cp. Theodoret

- σπουδαιότερον] more diligently; his zeal was quickened by the difficulty of finding me.

A proof that the imprisonment in which this Epistle was written, was of a very different kind from the former confinement of the Apostle, described Acts xxviii. 30, 31. See Bishop Pearson, Minor Works, ii. 383, quoted above in the Introduction to

18.  $\delta \epsilon \eta$  adr $\hat{\varphi} = \ell \nu$  ekeky  $\tau \hat{\eta}$  half  $\eta$  May the Lord grant to him to find mercy from the Lord in that day. "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy." Matt. v. 7. Onesiphorus showed me mercy, may be obtain it at the last day!

It has been inferred from chap, iv. 19, where the household of Onesiphorus is saluted, that Onesiphorus was now dead; and that the present wish for him is therefore a prayer for the dead. But not to dwell on the circumstance that it cannot justly be called a prayer, it is probable that St. Paul knew that Onesiphorus was not now at Ephesus. Indeed he seems to have been now at Rome (v. 17). As to the lawfulness of "Prayers for the dead," see the note above on Jerem. vii. 31.

- δσα ἐν Ἐφέσφ διηκόνησε] Probably at the earlier period of St. Paul's three years' residence in Asia. (Acts xix. 1—20;

- βέλτιον] better than I can express. See on Acts xxv. 10. Winer, p. 217.

CH. II. 1. Id odv Thou therefore-stimulated by the testimony of my sufferings, and by the example of Onesiphorus; and by a consideration of the power of God (i. 8-10).

2. διὰ πολλῶν μαρτύρων] through the intervention of many witnesses, whose presence was requisite, in order to attest what I delivered to thee publicly, as the deposit of faith; and what thou wast charged by me to deliver to others in succession after

This precept appears to imply that the Doctrine of Christ was even then embodied in some "well-known form of sound words" (2 Tim. i. 13), constituting a public Symbol of Faith, or Creed. See i. 14.

We have clear intimations of the existence of such symbols of Faith, in the writers of the Second Century (Iren. i. 10. tullian, de Virg. vel. c. 1; Præscr. Hæret. c. 13; c. Prax. 2. Trainian, de virg. vel. c. 1; Frascr. Raffel. c. 15; c. Fras. 2. Origen, περί dρχῶν, præfat.), and also statements of their substance, which coincides very nearly with that of what is commonly called 'the Apostles' Creed.' Cp. Cyprian, Epist. ad Magnum 69. Greg. Thaumaturg. p. 1; and Hooker, iii. 1. 5.

This public delivery of a definite παραθήκη at Ordination, was accompanied in the Ancient Church by holding the Gospel over the head of the person to be ordained Bishop (see Concil. Carth. iv. can. 2. Bingham, ii. 11. 8), and is represented by the delivery of the Bible in our own Church.

This Apostolic committal of a deposit of faith to chosen faithful men, with a view to its successive delivery to others in succession, is thus described by St. Paul's contemporary, S. Clement of Rome, v. 44: οί ᾿Απόστολοι . . . κατέστησαν τοὺς προειρημένους (i. e. the above-named Presbyters and Deacons), καὶ μεταξὺ ἐπινομὴν δεδώκασιν, ὅπως ἐὰν κοιμηθῶσιν (i. e. the said Presbyters and Deacons), διαδέξωνται έτεροι δεδοκιμασμένοι άνδρες την λειτουργίαν αυτών τους οῦν κατασταθέντας ὑπ' ἐκείνων, ἡ μεταξὺ ὑφ' ἐτέρων ἐλλογίμων ἀνδρών, συνευδο-κησάσης τῆς ἐκκλησίας, οὺ δικαίως νομίζομεν ἀποβαλέσθαι της λειτουργίας.

3. Συγκακοπάθησον] So A, C*, D*, E*, F, G, Lachm., Tisch., Huther, Ellicott, Alf.—Elz. σὸ οὖν κακοπάθησον.
5. ἐὰν μὴ νομίμως ἀθλήση] unless he have striven lawfully. They who transgressed the laws of the Ancient Games were fined: the six statues of Jupiter at Olympia, called Zâνes, were made from the fines levied on Athletes who had not contended lawfully. Pausanias, lib. v. 21.

6. Τον κοπιώντα γεωργόν] It is meet that the labouring husbandman should first be a sharer in the fruits. The Apostle here alludes to that system of husbandry, according to which the  $\gamma \epsilon \omega \rho \gamma \delta s$  (métayer), or Tenant, who tilled the ground, was allowed to participate with the Landlord in the fruits of the soil, such as wine, oil, corn—and paid a portion to the Landlord as Rent (Matt. xxi. 34). See on Luke xvi. 6, and Heb. vi. 7.

Almighty God is the Great Landlord of all, and will take care that the good husbandman who industriously tills the soil of His field, the Church, shall first be a partaker with Him in the fruits of the harvest raised by his labour; and according to his κόπος so will his καρπός be.

7.] Elz. has & for δ, and δώη for δώσει, which is the reading authorized by the preponderance of the best testimonies, A, C*, D, E, F, G.

St. Paul commands Timothy to understand what he (the Apostle) says; for, he adds, the Lord of all will enable him so to do, and to regard himself as a soldier fighting under his banner, an athlete wrestling in His arena, a husbandman tilling his field.

8. ἐγηγερμένον ἐκ νεκρῶν] risen from the dead. A warning against the heresies of those who denied the Resurrection of the body, and asserted that the Resurrection was only to be understood spiritually (ii. 18. Iren. ii. 31. Tertullian, de Res. 19. κατὰ τὸ εὐαγγέλιόν μου, 9 ε εν ῷ κακοπαθῶ μέχρι δεσμῶν, ὡς κακοῦργος ἀλλὰ ερμ. 3.1, 13. ό λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ οὐ δέδεται. 10 g Διὰ τοῦτο πάντα ὑπομένω διὰ τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς, col. 1. 24.  $^{11}$  h Πιστὸς ὁ λόγος, εἰ γὰρ συναπεθάνομεν, καὶ συζήσομεν,  $^{12}$  i εἰ ὑπομένομεν,  $^{12}$  h Rom. 6. 8, &c. καὶ συμβασιλεύσομεν, εἰ ἀρνούμεθα, κἀκείνος ἀρνήσεται ἡμᾶς·  $^{13}$  k εἰ ἀπιστοῦ-  $^{2}$  Cor. 4. 10. Per. 4. 13. μεν, έκεινος πιστός μένει, άρνήσασθαι γάρ έαυτον οὐ δύναται.

μεν, εκείνος πίστος μενεί, αρνησασθαί γαρ εαυτού ου συναταί.

Mark 8.38.

14 1 Ταῦτα ὑμομίμνησκε διαμαρτυρόμενος ἐνώπιον τοῦ Κυρίου μὴ λογομαχεῖν, Rom. 2.9.
εἰς οὐδὲν χρήσιμον, ἐπὶ καταστροφῆ τῶν ἀκουόντων.

15 Σπούδασον σεαυτὸν Phil. 3.10. δόκιμον παραστήσαι τῷ Θεῷ, ἐργάτην ἀνεπαίσχυντον, ὀρθοτομοῦντα τὸν λόγον  $\stackrel{1}{k}$  Rom. 3. 3.  $\stackrel{1}{k}$  Rom. 3. 5. της ἀληθείας.  $^{16}$   $^{\text{m}}$  Τὰς δὲ βεβήλους κενοφωνίας περιϊστασο, ἐπὶ πλεῖον γὰρ  $^{1}$   $^{\text{Eph. 4.17.}}$   $^{\text{Eph. 4.17.}}$   $^{\text{προκόψουσιν}}$  ἀσεβείας,  $^{17}$   $^{\text{n}}$  καὶ ὁ λόγος αὐτῶν ὡς γάγγραινα νομὴν ἔξει, ὧν  $^{1}$   $^{\text{Tim. 6.4.}}$   $^{\text{Εστιν}}$   $^{\text{τημέναιος}}$  καὶ Φίλητος,  $^{18}$   $^{\text{ο}}$  οἴτινες περὶ τὴν ἀλήθειαν ἠστόχησαν, λέγοντες  $^{\text{m}}$   $^{\text{I Tim. 6.4.}}$   $^{\text{εξειν}}$   $^{\text{προκόψουσιν}}$   $^{\text{προκόψουσιν}}$   $^{\text{προκόψουσιν}}$   $^{\text{προκόψουσιν}}$   $^{\text{προκόψουσιν}}$   $^{\text{εξειν}}$   $^{\text{ημέναιος}}$   $^{\text{εξειν}}$   $^{\text{εξειν}}$   $^{\text{εξειν}}$   $^{\text{προκόψουσιν}}$   $^{\text{εξειν}}$   $^{\text{ε$ Præscr. Hæret. 33), or a mere succession of generations (Theodoret), and denied the Incarnation of Christ, and did not acknowledge His Royalty, and that He is the promised Messiah.

Simon Magus had already disseminated these doctrines, affirming that the human body of Christ was a mere phantom (φάντασμα). The Apostle, therefore, insists specially on the doctrines of the Incarnation of Christ, His Passion, His Resurrection from the dead, and his generation from the seed of David. Theodoret.

— ἐκ σπέρματος Δαυίδ] from the seed of David. St. Paul appears to affirm expressly here that our Lord sprung by natural derivation from the seed of David, and that therefore his mother Mary was of that lineage. Cp. Rom. i. 3. Heb. vii. 14. Acts ii. 30.

The Genealogies of our Lord in the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. Luke, are, doubtless, genealogies of Joseph. See above on Matt. i. 1. Luke iii. 23.

But there can be no difficulty in accepting a statement, in itself so probable, and resting on so high authority, that both Joseph and Mary were of the same lineage—the royal lineage of David. See on Matt. i. l.

Some of the Talmudists assert, that Mary was the daughter of Eli (see Lightfoot on Luke iii. 23, vol. ii. p. 400), and it has been supposed by some (Hofmann) that Jacob, the natural father of Joseph, died early, and that Eli, the father of Mary, and Jacob's kinsman, adopted Joseph; and that so Joseph's lineage is traced from Eli, who was the natural father of Mary; and that Joseph's genealogy in St. Luke is that of Mary also. Delitzsch, Hebr. vii. 13, p. 290.

9. ωs κακούργος] as a malefactor—and not as the world's benefactor by preaching Christ. The term κακοῦργος intimates also that his treatment now was more severe than in his former imprisonment (Acts xxvi. 30, 31), when he was not treated as such; but was allowed to enjoy many privileges and comforts (see Acts xxviii. 30, 31. Phil. i. 13; iv. 22), which were now denied to him.

— ἀλλὰ ὁ λόγος—οὐ δέδεται] I, a preacher of the Word, am now in chains for preaching the Word, but the Word itself of God which I preach hath not been chained with me. None can bind that. Indeed, the Word of God flew forth from St. Paul's prison-house on the wings of his Epistles, written in his prison, and sent into all lands, and their flight will never cease till the Trumpet of Judgment sounds, and the wicked who believe not the Gospel are cast into prison for ever. 2 Thess. i. 7-9. His imprisonment gave him leisure to write, and diffused the Gospel.

15. δρθοτομοῦντα] ploughing the furrows of spiritual tillage in a straight line (Theodoret), "non prævaricantem." Cp. Hesiod, O. and D. 433. Theocrit. x. 2, οὐδὲ τὸν ὀγμὸν ἄγειν ὁρθὸν δύνα, ὡς τὸ πρὶν ἄγες: v. 6, δς νῦν ἀρχόμενος τᾶς αὔλακος οὐκ ἀποτρώγεις. Cp. Euseb. iv. 3, ὀρθοτομία ἀποστολική.

Or the metaphor may be derived from cutting a road straight.

Thucyd. ii. 100, όδους ευθείας έτεμε. See other examples in Perhaps this latter may be the preferable sense, inasmuch as ὀρθοτομεῖν in a theological signification is often opposed to καινοτομεῖν, viz. to cut out a new path, by an heretical or schismatical deviation, instead of going forward in a right direction. See Hooker, V. lxxxi.

16. κενοφωνίαs] hollow professions of piety with the lips, without any solid substance of good works wrought by the hand (see 1 Tim. vi. 20. James ii. 20, &  $\delta u \rho \rho \omega \pi \epsilon \kappa \epsilon \nu \epsilon$ ): fitly, therefore, called profane. Vol. II.—Part III.

 περιτστασο] shun. See Titus iii. 9.
 17. ως γάγγραινα] a cancer; which eats its way, and corrupts the sound part of the body. Theodoret. He could not have given a more frightful picture of the foulness of false doctrine than by comparing it to this deadly and loathsome disease.

– νομὴν ἔξει] pastionem habebit,—will have free pasture, until it devour the flesh of those on whom it fixes its fangs. Noun is the proper medical term, expressing the gradual, corrosive action the proper medical term, expressing the gradual, of the gangrene. Welstein.

— Φίλητος] Philetus. As to the accent, see on Acts xx. 4.

18. ἡστόχησαν] missed the mark. 1 Tim. i. 6; vi. 21.

— ἀνάστασιν ἤδη γεγονέγαι] that the Resurrection hath taken place already. See on 1 Cor. xv. 12; and above, v. 8.

- την τινών πίστιν] the faith of certain persons, whom he has in his eye, but spares their names.

19. <sup>(0</sup> μέντοι στερεδε θ.] Notwithstanding this, the firm foundation of God standeth, having this gravure upon it, "The Lord knoweth them that are His," and "Let every one that nameth the Name of Christ depart from iniquity."

The solid foundation of God's spiritual house, the Church The solid foundation of God's spiritual house, the church The solid foundation of God's spiritual house, the church The solid foundation of God's spiritual house, the church The solid foundation of God's spiritual house, the church The solid foundation of God's spiritual house, the church The solid foundatio

(1 Tim. iii. 15), has these two mottoes inscribed upon it: "The Lord knoweth them that are His" (Numb. xvi. 5. Nah. i. 7. John x. 14. 27). He seeth, loveth, and will preserve them from all peril. Here is a comfortable assurance of His favour to us. And "Let all who name the name of the Lord (Κυρίου, so the best MSS.; Είz. Χριστοῦ) depart from iniquity" (Numb. xvi. 26. Isa. lii. 11). Let all who profess to know the Lord, and to worship Him, and who bear His Name, into which they have been baptized, eschewall things contrary to their profession, and follow such things as are agreeable to the same. Here is a salutary memento of our duty to Him.

Examples of a σφραγls, or gravure, on a foundation-stone, may be seen in Zech. iii. 9, and Rev. xxi. 14.

As to the first of these notes, the Apostle declares that the Lord, Who knoweth all things, knoweth those who are His; but we men do not know, either as to ourselves or others, whether we or they are His, and whether we or they shall persevere to the end. The fan is not in our hand to winnow the chaff from the wheat. The Lord only knoweth who are His, by those secret characters of grace, and perseverance, which no eye of man is able to discern in another, nor perhaps in himself infallibly. We are, therefore, for the most part, to look at the Brotherhood, so far as it is discernible to us by the plain and legible characters of Baptism and outward profession. So that whosoever abideth in area Domini, and liveth in the communion of the visible Church, being baptized into Christ, and professing the Name of Christ, let him prove, as it falleth out, chaff, or light corn, or wheat, when the Lord shall come with His fan to purge His floor, yet in the mean time, so long as he lieth in the heap and upon the floor, we must own him for a Christian, and take him as one of the Brotherhood, and as such an one love him. For so is the duty, Love the Brotherhood. (1 Pet. ii. 17.) Bp. Sanderson (iii. p. 71). Cp. Hooker, III. i. 1—14.

As to the second note of our profession, here mentioned, "Let him that nameth the Name of the Lord depart from iniquity," it is to be observed, that in this mixed state of the visible Church the Fril are miscaled with the Conductive. visible Church, the Evil are mingled with the Good, and so they will continue to be till the great Day of Harvest. (Matt. xiii. 30-39.) And therefore what an ancient Father says is true, "Ab iniquis recedere non potes, quia mixta est palea tritico usque dum ventiletur. Necesse est ut, si proficis, inter iniquos vivas.

*Εγνω Κύριος τοὺς ὄντας αὐτοῦ· καὶ, ἀποστήτω ἀπὸ ἀδικίας πᾶς ὁ ὀνομάζων τὸ όνομα Κυρίου.

n Rom. 9, 21,

r ch. 3. 17.

20 9 Έν μεγάλη δὲ οἰκία οὐκ ἔστι μόνον σκεύη χρυσα καὶ ἀργυρα, ἀλλὰ καὶ ξύλινα καὶ ὀστράκινα καὶ ἃ μὲν εἰς τιμὴν, ἃ δὲ εἰς ἀτιμίαν. 21 τ' Εὰν οὖν τις έκκαθάρη έαυτον άπο τούτων, έσται σκεύος είς τιμήν, ήγιασμένον, καὶ εὔχρηστον τῶ δεσπότη, εἰς πῶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἡτοιμασμένον.

s 1 Cor. 1. 2. I Tim. 6. 11. t 1 Tim. 1. 4. & 4. 7. & 6. 4, 5. Tit. 3. 9. u 1 Tim. 3. 2, 3. Tit. 1. 9.

22 · Τὰς δὲ νεωτερικὰς ἐπιθυμίας φεθγε, δίωκε δὲ δικαιοσύνην, πίστιν, ἀγάπην. εἰρήνην μετὰ τῶν ἐπικαλουμένων τὸν Κύριον ἐκ καθαρᾶς καρδίας. 23 t Τὰς δὲ μωρας καὶ ἀπαιδεύτους ζητήσεις παραιτοῦ, εἰδως ὅτι γεννῶσι μάχας. 24 " δοῦλον δὲ Κυρίου οὐ δεῖ μάχεσθαι, ἀλλ' ἤπιου εἶναι πρὸς πάντας, διδακτικὸυ, ἀνεξίκακου, <sup>25 ×</sup> έν πραύτητι παιδεύοντα τους αντιδιατιθεμένους, μήποτε δώη αυτοίς ό Θεὸς μετάνοιαν εἰς ἐπίγνωσιν ἀληθείας, 26 καὶ ἀνανήψωσιν ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Διαβόλου παγίδος έζωγρημένοι ὑπ' αὐτοῦ εἰς τὸ ἐκείνου θέλημα.

x Acts 8 22. Gal. 6. 1. 1 Tim. 2. 4.

ΙΙΙ. 1 α Τοῦτο δὲ γίνωσκε, ὅτι ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις ἐνστήσονται καιροὶ χαλεποί ε ἔσονται γὰρ οἱ ἄνθρωποι φίλαυτοι, φιλάργυροι, ἀλαζόνες, ὑπερήφανοι, a 2 Pet. 3. 3. 1 John 2. 18. Jude 17.

Ab iniquis recedere non potes; ab iniquitate recede." Augustine (in Ps. xcii.). In this world we cannot altogether depart from evil men (1 Cor. v. 10), but we must depart from their iniquity.

Remark also, that no man may flatter himself with a secret persuasion that God has predetermined him to salvation, and that therefore, whatever his course of life may be, he cannot fall away. For the Apostle here says, "Let him that nameth the name of the Lord depart from iniquity."

To put any man in hope that what is not ordinarily revealed in the Gospel may yet be laid up for him in the cabinet of God's that are His, as if they might be His still in God's acceptation which walk most contrarily to Him, this may prove a most dangerous snare of souls. And it is strange it should seek shelter in that text (2 Tim, ii. 19), which was most expressly assigned to the contrary, as is evident by the notation of the θεμέλιον in the beginning of the verse, which must assure us that there is no Salvation to be expected but according to the contents of that great indenture, once for all sealed in the blood of Christ; of which as that indeed is one part, which is inscribed on one side of the seal, The Lord knoweth those that are His, i.e. He will never fail to own those that continue faithful to Him; so the other, on the other side, is most emphatical, Let every man that nameth the Name of Christ depart from iniquity, which, if he do not, he hath forfeited all the privileges of his Christianity. Dr. Hammond (in Sanderson's Works, v. p. 334).

By these words also, "Let him depart from iniquity," the Apostle delivers a prophetic protest against the Heresy which affirms that man has no free will of his own, and that human nature is only like inert and lifeless clay (see v. 20). He also condemns the false notion that man can fathom the inscrutable counsel of God, and can determine whether he himself will finally be saved or no; a notion which opens a wide door for Antinomian licentiousness, by encouraging presumption on one side, and producing desperation on the other.

The present paragraphs (vv. 19-21) are therefore of great importance for settling the controversies concerning Election, Rerobation, Free Will, Divine Grace, and Final Perseverance. See above on Rom. ix. 21—23. That Epistle is explained by this.

20. Έν μεγάλη δὲ οἰκία] But do not thou be perplexed by the imperfections and blemishes which exist in the Visible Church on mperfections and diemisnes which exist in the visible Church on earth, for in a great house there exist not only vessels of gold and silver, but also of wood and clay (see 2 Cor. iv. 7), and some to honour and others to dishonour. So it is in the Visible Church of God upon earth. See 1 Tim. iii. 15. "In congregatione Christiana." Aug. (Serm. 15). On the moral lessons to be derived from this mixed and imperfect condition of the Church on Earth, see above on Matr. iii. 3, 4,6,70 Earth, see above on Matt. xiii. 3. 26. 30.

21. Έλν οδν τις ἐκκαθάρη ἐαυτόν] Whosoever shall have cleansed himself. On êdν τις, and et τις = quicunque, whosoever, see John iii. 3. 5; vi. 50, 51. 1 Cor. iii. 12. 14, 15. 17, 18; viii. 3. — àπὸ τούτων] from these; i.e. from the number and condition of the vessels to dishonour.

A very instructive expression, declaring that a man may at one time of his life be numbered among vessels to dishonour, and yet may become a vessel to honour, by cleansing himself out from their number and condition. Mark this assertion of Free Will.

St. Paul does not mean that a man, considered as a vessel, is to cleanse himself from the society of other vessels. A Christian man may not go out of the great house which is the Visible Church of God; for, if he does this, he is guilty of schism (see on v. 19). But the evil will be mingled with the good as long as this world lasts. He cannot separate himself wholly from sinners, but he must cleanse himself from them as sinners; that is, he must not communicate with them in their sins. His day is to labour and pray for grace to deliver himself by repentance and holiness of life from the number, predicament, and future destiny of such vessels as are unclean and remain unclean to the end. (Rev. xxii. 11.)

23. παραιτοῦ] shun. 1 Tim. iv. 7.
25. ἀντιδιατιθεμένους] setting up themselves contentiously (διὰ) in opposition (avrl).

in opposition (αντι).

— μήποτε] if perchance at any time; 'si forte aliquando.' On the use of μήποτε in a dubitative and expectative sense, see Luke iii. 15, προσδοκώντος τοῦ λαοῦ... καὶ διαλογιζομένων ἐν ταῖς καρδίαις μήποτε αὐτὸς εἴη ὁ Χριστός. Hence, by a natural consequence, μήποτε suggests an hypothesis, as here. This use consequence, μήποτε suggests an hypothesis, as here. This use of μήποτε may best be illustrated from the LXX, who often employ the conjunction μήποτε in this sense. See Gen. xxiv. 5. 39; xxvii. 12, μήποτε ψηλαφήση με δ πατήρ καὶ ἔσομαι ἐναντίον αὐτοῦ ὡς καταφρονῶν.

For examples of μήποτε in the New Testament, see Matt. iv. 6; v. 25; xxv. 9. Mark iv. 12. Heb. iii. 12; iv. 1. 26. ἀναμήψωσιν] return to sobriety: 'veluti ex crapulâ.' Cp. Pseud.-Ignat. ad Phil. 4, Παρακαλώ δμᾶς ἐν Κυρίφ ὅσοι ἃν μετανοήταντες ἔλθωσιν ἐπὶ τὴν ἐνότητα τῆς ἐκκλησίας, προσδέχεσθε αὐτοὺς μετὰ πάσης πραότητος, Ίνα διὰ τῆς χρηστότητος, καὶ τῆς ἀνεξικακίας ἀνανήψαντες ἐκ τῆς τοῦ διαβόλου παγίδος ἄξιοι Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ γενόμενοι σωτηρίας αἰωνίου τύχωσιν.

Cm. III. 1. ἐν ἐσχάταις ἡμέραις] in the last days. The times of the Gospel dispensation, extending to the end of the world. See v. 5, where he speaks of Timothy himself as living in these days. Cp. Acts ii. 17. 1 John ii. 18. St. Paul writes for all.

2. φίλαντοι] lovers of themselves, not of God.

The Apostle places this word at the beginning of this long catalogue, because where the Love of God is not, and Self-love is, the couls have compensated naturally arise. Having mon-there the evils here enumerated naturally arise. Having mentioned the root, he proceeds to speak of the branches. Theophyl. See Augustine, in Joann. Tract. 123, where, expounding this passage, he says, "Hee enim vitia ex illâ radice quodammodo pullulant cum sunt homines se ipsos amantes. Quod vitium rant non quæ Jesu Christi," This φιλαυτία is 'caput mali,' as Aug. calls it (Serm. 330), and is, as he observes (in Joan. 123, cp. Serm. 96), the first link of a regular chain of succession of vices continued onward from its commencement in Love of self, as distinguished from the Love of God. This picture, therefore, of the workings of φιλαυτία, or Self-Love, may be set in oppoof the workings of φιλαντια, or Self-Love, may be set in opposition to that of 'λγάπη, True Love, in 1 Cor. xiii. 4—8. It is well said by Augustine (de Civ. Dei, init.), in his description of the two opposite Cities into which the world is divided, the City of God and the City of the Devil, that the City of God begins with, and is built upon, the Love of God; but the City of the Devil begins with, and is built on, the love of Self, and rises upwards through disdain of our neighbour into hatred of God.

This progress is thus tread by St. Paul. 1 The foundation

This progress is thus traced by St. Paul. 1. The foundation of the Civitas Diaboli in φίλαυτοι. 2. There is an ascent from βλάσφημοι, γονεύσιν ἀπειθείς, ἀχάριστοι, ἀνόσιοι, ³ ἄστοργοι, ἄσπονδοι, διάβολοι, ακρατείς, ανήμεροι, αφιλάγαθοι, 4 προδόται, προπετείς, τετυφωμένοι, φιλήδονοι μαλλον ή φιλόθεοι, 5 δ έχοντες μόρφωσιν ευσεβείας, την δε δύναμιν b Matt. 7. 15. αὐτῆς ἡρνημένοι καὶ τούτους ἀποτρέπου. 6 ° Έκ τούτων γάρ εἰσιν οἱ ἐνδύ- Rom. 16. 17. νοντες εἰς τὰς οἰκίας, καὶ αἰχμαλωτίζοντες γυναικάρια σεσωρευμένα ἁμαρτίαις, ch. 2.16. & 3.10. αγόμενα επιθυμίαις ποικίλαις, <sup>7</sup> πάντοτε μανθάνοντα, καὶ μηδέποτε εἰς ἐπίγνω- c Matt. 23. 14. σιν άληθείας έλθειν δυνάμενα. 8 4 Ον τρόπον δὲ Ἰαννής καὶ Ἰαμβρής ἀντ- 1 Εκοά. 7. 11. έστησαν Μωϋσεί, ούτω καὶ οὖτοι ἀνθίστανται τῆ ἀληθεία, ἄνθρωποι κατεφθαρ- Τίι 1. 16. μένοι τὸν νοῦν, ἀδόκιμοι περὶ τὴν πίστιν. 9 'Αλλ' οὐ προκόψουσιν ἐπὶ πλεῖον ή γαρ ἄνοια αὐτῶν ἔκδηλος ἔσται πασιν, ὡς καὶ ἡ ἐκείνων ἐγένετο.

 $^{10}$   $^{\circ}$  Σ $\grave{v}$  δ $\grave{\epsilon}$  παρηκολού $\theta$ ηκάς μου τ $\hat{\eta}$  διδασκαλία, τ $\hat{\eta}$  ἀγωγ $\hat{\eta}$ , τ $\hat{\eta}$  προ $\theta$ έσει, τ $\hat{\eta}$   $^{\circ}$   $^{\circ}$ φιλάργυροι to βλάσφημοι, i. e. from love of money to blasphemy . 3. Another, from γονεῦσιν ἀπειθεῖς to ἀνόσιοι, i. e. from disobedience to Parents to irreverence and profaneness. 4. From άστοργοι through a long series of sins, till all is summed up in φιλήδουοι μᾶλλου ἡ φιλόθεοι, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; and this last word confirms the meaning assigned to θεοστυγεῖs above, Rom. i. 30.

It is a solemn consideration, that the Apostle here describes men in large numbers apostatizing from Christianity, and re-lapsing into the sins of the Heathen World. See above on Rom. i. 26, 27. The Antichristianism of the last days is here described.

4. προπετείs] rushing headlong, precipitate. Προπίπτων πρό τοῦ λογισμοῦ (Hesych.). Cp. Acts xix. 36.

- τετυφωμένοι] See 1 Tim. iii. 6; vi. 4. This word is sometimes said to signify 'blinded by the fumes and mists of pride.' But this does not seem to be the accurate interpretation of the word as used here.

The signification rather is, swelling and puffed up, like smoke issuing from a fire, and dilating itself with a vain-glorious and empty cloud of spiritual pride, which makes a great show, but is nothing but misty and murky vapour.

Hence the ancient Lexicographers interpret the word by επαρθείs, and τῦφος is επαρσις, κενοδοξία, ὑπερηφάνεια.

The idea is excellently expressed by Augustine. "Fumus, à loco ignis erumpens, in alto extollitur et in globum magnum intumescit; sed quantò fuerit globus ille grandior, tantò fit vanior; ab illà enim magnitudine non fundatà et inflatà it in auras, atque dilabitur, ut videas ei ipsam obfuisse magnitudinem. Quantò enim plus erectus est, quantò extensus, quantò diffusus undique in majorem ambitum, tantò fit exilior et deficiens. Sic et isti inflatione tumoris sui euntes in ventos, extollentes se quasi justos et magnos, ultra non proficient." Augustine (in Ps. xxxvi.).

— φιλήδονοι κ.τ.λ.] Φιλήδονον καὶ φιλόθεον τὸν αὐτὸν ἀδύνατον είναι. Demophil. (Pythag, p. 624). So Philo (de Agriculturâ, i. p. 313), speaking of the debasement of the soul by bodily self-indulgence, Μήποτε τον λαον άπαντα είς Αίγυπτον την τοῦ σώματος χώραν ἀποστρέψη, και φιλήδονον και φιλοπαθη αᾶλλον ή φιλάρετον και φιλόθεον ἐργάσηται. (Wetstein.)

5. μόρφωσιν] Not a form, μορφήν, but an efformation, σχηματισμόν (Lex. MS.), and dressing-up of godliness. See Philo (de Plant. 340), καὶ νῦν εἰσὶ τινὲς τῶν ἐπιμορφαζόντων εὐσέ-

Belav. (Wetstein.)

This hypocritical pretence, and artificial fiction of godliness, is that form of Judaistic Gnosticism which is specially condemned in these Pastoral Epistles. See above, Introductions to the Epistle to the Romans, p. 206, and to the Epistles to Timothy and Titus, p. 433.

6. αἰχμαλωτίζουτες γ.] So the major part of the best authorities. Elz. has αἰχμαλωτεύοντες τὰ γ.

- γυναικάρια] 'mulierculas,' silly women. Observe the neuter gender as well as the termination -άρια, both significant of the degradation and degeneracy into which such women fall. The Evil Spirit, who tempted Adam by Eve (2 Cor. xi. 3. 1 Tim. ii. 13, 14), and endeavoured to beguile Job by means of his wife (Job ii. 9, 10), and the Israelites by the Midianitish women (Numb. xxv.), led women captive by his emissaries, the teachers of Heresy, and then associated those women with the Heresiarchs themselves in their evil work. This characteristic of Heresy, here pointed out by St. Paul, has uniformly marked its history in every age of the Church. "Simon Magus hæresin condidit adjutus auxilio Helenæ meretricis. Nicolaus Antiochenus omnium im-munditiarum conditor choros duxit fœmineos. Marcion quoque Romam præmisit mulierem ad majorem lasciviam. Apelles Philumenam comitem habuit. Montanus Priscam et Maximillam primum auro corrupit, deinde hæresi polluit. Arius ut orbem deciperet, sororem Principis antè decepit. Donatus Lucillæ opibus adjutus est." Jerome (Epist. ad Ctesiphontem). A Lapide.

It is observed by Hooker (Pref. iii. 13), that those persons who took the lead in the sixteenth century in subverting the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England, and in setting up that of Geneva, showed "eminent industry in making proselytes of that sex which they deemed apter to serve as instruments and helps in the cause."

7. ἐπίγνωσιν] perfect knowledge of the truth, as distinguished from the empty knowledge, the knowledge (γνῶσις), falsely so called (1 Tim. vi. 20), which made profession of knowing God, but in works denied Him (Tit. i. 16), and which made an outward show of godliness, but denied its power (v. 5). See on

8. 'Ιαννη̂s καl 'Ιαμβρη̂s] Jannes and Jambres. One or both are mentioned even by heathen writers (Pliny, H. N. xxxii., Apu-leius, Apol. 2, and Numenius ap. Euseb. Præp. Evan. ix. 8), as skilled in magic; and by Jewish writers as Magicians of Pharaoh skilled in magic; and by Jewish writers as Magicians of Frairaon (Exod. vii. 11; ix. 11), and also as sons of Balaam. See Buxtorf, Lex. Talmud. col. 945, and Targum Jonathan in Exod. i. 15. Wetstein here. Winer, R. W. B. p. 535.

9. 'Αλλ' οὐ προκόψουσιν ἐπὶ πλεῖον] Notwithstanding they shall not be able to advance further, but shall be arrested and confounded by the power of Christ, as Jannes and Jambres were have they had been remitted to make every large that they had been remitted to make every large.

by Moses, after that they had been permitted to work some wonderful works, in order to show their antagonism, and also to prove eventually the greater power of God, defeating them.

He will confound the Antichristianism of the last days.

There is a remarkable harmony between this prophecy of St. Paul and that of St. John in the Apocalypse (Rev. xvi. 13), compared with the working of the Egyptian Magicians, as described by Moses (Exod. vii. 11. 22). See below on Rev. xvi. 13, and Augustine (Epist. 55), who says, "Animositas harreticorum semper inquieta est, quos Magorum Pharaonis habere conatum declarat Apostolus, Sicut enim Jannes, etc. Quia enim per ipsam corruptionem mentis inquietissimè fuerunt, in signo tertio defecerunt (οὐ προέκοψαν ἐπὶ πλείον) fatentes sibi adversum esse acycerum (ου προκούμν επί πλείον) latentes sin adversum esse Spiritum sanctum qui erat in Moyse. Nam deficientes dixerunt, Digitus Dei est hic!" (Exod. viii. 19.)

— ἄνοια] wicked folly; 'dementia' (Aug.).

10. παρηκολούθηκας] thou hast followed by the side, and art following, as a faithful companion, by personal knowledge, and also by sharing in my bonds and afflictions. Cp. Heb. xiii. 23. Phil. ii. 21, 22. See on Luke i. 3. The perfect tense seems preferable to the agoist adonted by some Editors from D. E. I. K ferable to the acrist adopted by some Editors from D, E, I, K.

This testimony to Timothy's stedfastness and faithfulness to the Apostle is made more forcible by its contrast with what is said of others who deserted the Apostle in his troubles (i. 15; iv.

This statement could very fitly be applied to Timothy, and (as far as appears) to no one else; for he, and he alone, had been almost in constant attendance on, or in communication with, St. Paul since the Apostle's second Missionary Journey in A.D. 51, to the date of the present Epistle.

 $-\tau \hat{\eta}$  ἀγωγ $\hat{\eta}$ ] my course or tenour of life; my mode of leading my life, τρότφ, ἀναστροφ $\hat{\eta}$  (Hesych.),  $\tau \hat{\eta}$  τοῦ βίου πολιτεία (2 Macc. iv. 16).

 τῆ πίστει, τῆ μακροθυμία, τῆ ἀγάπη, τῆ ὑπομονῆ] Compare iv. 7, 8, where St. Paul speaks in similar terms of himself, as guided, strengthened, and supported by divine Grace.

This mode of viewing himself is in perfect harmony with his present position; and these expressions concerning his own life afford striking though silent evidence of the genuineness of this farewell Epistle.

He has now arrived at the end of his career, and is about to quit the world: he scarcely seems to belong to it; he looks back f Ps. 34, 19. Acts 13, 50. & 14, 2, 19, 22 2 Cor. 1, 10. g Matt. 16. 24. Matt. 16. 24 Luke 24. 26. John 17. 14. Acts 14. 22. 1 Thess. 3. 3.

i Rom. 15. 4. 2 Pet. 1, 19, 20.

πίστει, τη μακροθυμία, τη αγάπη, τη ύπομονη, 11 τοις διωγμοίς, τοις παθήμασιν, οξά μοι έγένετο έν 'Αντιοχεία, έν 'Ικονίω, έν Λύστροις, οξους διωγμους ύπήνεγκα, καὶ ἐκ πάντων με ἐρρύσατο ὁ Κύριος. 12 g Καὶ πάντες δὲ οἱ θέλοντες εὐσεβῶς ζῆν ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ διωχθήσονται. 13 Πονηροὶ δὲ ἄνθρωποι καὶ γόητες προκόψουσιν έπὶ τὸ χείρον, πλανώντες καὶ πλανώμενοι.

h ch. 2. 2.

 $^{14}$  h  $\Sigma \hat{v}$  δ $\hat{\epsilon}$   $\mu \hat{\epsilon} \nu \epsilon$   $\hat{\epsilon} \nu$  οἷς  $\hat{\epsilon} \mu \alpha \theta \epsilon$ ς καὶ  $\hat{\epsilon} \pi \iota \sigma \tau \omega \theta \eta$ ς,  $\hat{\epsilon} \iota$ δ $\hat{\omega}$ ς  $\pi \alpha \rho \hat{\alpha}$   $\tau \iota \nu$ ος  $\hat{\epsilon} \mu \alpha \theta \epsilon$ ς,  $^{15}$  καὶ ότι ἀπὸ βρέφους τὰ ἱερὰ γράμματα οἶδας τὰ δυνάμενά σε σοφίσαι εἰς σωτηρίαν διὰ πίστεως της ἐν Χριστῷ Ἰησοῦ. 16 ΙΠᾶσα γραφη θεόπνευστος καὶ ἀφέλιμος upon his past life, as it were, from without, and from above. therefore now uses words which might otherwise have been chargeable with ἀφροσύνη (2 Cor. xi. 1-17), and which he would hardly have employed before, or, at least, not without some qualification, as in 1 Cor. xv. 10.

11. ἐν ᾿Αντιοχείᾳ] in Antioch, of Pisidia (Acts xiii. 14. 44. 50), the first place in which St. Paul preached after his ordination to the Apostleship, from which he dates his sufferings here.

Another proof of truth. A forger would not have begun at this early stage in St. Paul's history, but would have commenced the recital of persecutions at a later period, viz. at St. Paul's sojourn at Philippi and Thessalonica, when, as is recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, Timothy, of whom nothing had been said before, had been actually associated with the Apostle as a fellow-labourer in preaching of the Gospel. (Acts xvi. 1, 2.) Cp. Dr. Paley, H. P. p. 152, ed. Birks.

Besides, it may be remarked, a forger would not have used the word Antioch, thus placed by itself, to designate Antioch in Pisidia. In common language the name Antioch would only mean the great capital city generally known by that name, Antioch of Syria. But it was very natural for St. Paul, in writing to Timothy, to use the word Antioch in speaking of Antioch in Pisidia, as will be obvious to any one who will refer to Acts xiii. 14;

xiv. 21; xvi. 1, 2.

It is requisite to recall the reader's attention to such evidences as these; because unhappily the genuineness of these Epistles to Timothy and Titus has in the present age been controverted by some (e.g. Schleiermacher, De Wette, and Baur). Their allegations, however, which have been ably refuted by Dean Alford (Prolegomena, chap. vii.), have tended on the whole only to bring out more clearly the evident marks of their truth and Apostolic

On St. Paul's characteristic habit of looking back with pious thankfulness to past blessings received at the beginning of his career, see above, Phil. iv. 15. Cp. note above, i. 3.

— ἐν Ἰκονίω, ἐν Λύστροις] in Iconium, in Lystra. Observe the order of these words here as compared with Acts xvi. 2. Iconium is placed before Lystra, because St. Paul came to Iconium before he came to Lystra (Acts xiv. 1—6). But there Lystra is placed before Iconium, because Timothy lived at Lystra. (See on Acts xvi. 1.) But Timothy was well known at Iconium. it is probable that he had been cognizant of St. Paul's sufferings there before he was taken into his company at Lystra.

13. γόητες] μάγοι, περίεργοι (Hesych.), seducers, probably not only by sophistry, but also by sorcery, like Jannes and Jambres, and Simon Magus (Acts viii. 9). Such persons abounded at Ephesus, where Timothy now was. See on Acts

xix. 12-19.

14. ἐπιστώθης] wert assured of. ἐπληροφορήθης. (Hesych.) πιστωθέντες έν τῷ λόγῳ τοῦ Θεοῦ μετὰ πληροφορίας πνεύματος άγιου έξηλθον. Clemens R.~42.

15. 871] that, not because. The Apostle means to say, that when Timothy bears in mind that he has the privilege of knowing the Holy Scriptures, even from his infancy, he will feel a deep sense of gratitude to Almighty God, and of his own consequent responsibilities, and be stimulated thereby to remain stedfast in the profession, and teaching of the Truth.

— ἀπὸ βρέφους—οἶδας] thou knowest from a child. βρέφος bespeaks an earlier age than παῖς. See Luke i. 41; ii. 12. 16; xviii. 15. Acts vii. 19. 1 Pct. ii. 2. βρέφος = νήπιον. Hesych.

The Jewish children, as soon as they were able to speak, were taught to commit to memory certain portions of the Law. See Rabbi Salomo, ad Deut. xi. 19, "As soon as a child is able to speak, his father ought to teach him the Law; otherwise he will seem to be burying him alive;" and other passages from the Rabbis (in Wetstein, p. 364; and cp. Deut. iv. 9; vi. 7. Ps. lxxviii. 4, 5, 6), who mention the age of five years as the time at which the Jewish children were to begin to read the Law.

- τὰ ἰερὰ γράμματα] the sacred Scriptures, of the Old Testa-

The word lepà, sacred, is to be distinguished from ayia, holy, sancta. The former word, ίερὰ, expresses the reverence with which these Writings were regarded. It bespeaks the sacredness which these writings were regarded. To be peaks the sacreaness of the Scriptures, in the general esteem and veneration of the Jewish and Christian Churches; and as separated from all common writings. Cp. Horat. A. P. 397, "secernere sacra profanis." The words ἀγία γραφὴ denote the essential holiness of Scripture, as given by the "Αγιον Πνεύμα, the Holy Ghost. Cp. Hävernick, Einleitung in das A. T. i. p. 79.

The word γράμματα, writings, is limited here by the words prefixed (τὰ ἱερὰ), and specifies the writings which alone were regarded as the Holy Writings by Timothy and the Jews; viz. the Law, the Prophets, and the Chethubim or Hagiographa; and these collectively were called by them כָּחָבֵּי הַקְּרָשׁ, rendered here by St. Paul τὰ ἱερὰ γράμματα (Hottinger, Thesaur. p. 98), and commonly known as "the Holy Writings" by the Hellenistic Jews. I Macc. xii. 9. Joseph. Ant. procem. 3. Philo, v. Mosis ii. p. 179. 21.

- τὰ δυνάμενά σε σοφισαί] which are the things that are able to make thee vise unto salvation; i.e. without the addition of the oral traditions of the Talmudists, or of other false teachers, against which the Apostle had delivered a warning, 1 Tim. iv. 1.

Observe the article before δυνάμενα. A strong prophetic protest against the Romish dogma, that her unwritten Traditions are necessary to be added to Holy Scripture, in order to make us wise unto salvation. Concil. Trident. Sess. iv.

- διὰ πίστεως] through faith that is in Christ Jesus. Lest any one should pervert this text into a statement that the Scriptures which Timothy knew as a child (viz. those of the Old Testament) were the things that were sufficient to make him wise unto salvation, now that he had become a man, and now that the Gospel of Christ had been preached to the world and committed to writing, St. Paul adds two assertions,

(1) that the Old Testament could make him wise unto salvation through faith in Christ, and not otherwise;

(2) that every Scripture, being inspired of God, is profitable, &c.

As to the first of these positions, see the note on v. 16. As to the second, we may say with Hooker, that "when the Apostle affirmeth unto Timothy, that the Old was able to make him wise to salvation, it was not his meaning that the Old alone can do this unto us which live sithence the publication of the New. For he speaketh with pre-supposal of the doctrine of Christ, known also unto Timothy; and therefore, first, it is said (2 Tim. iii. 14), 'Continue thou in those things which thou hast lcarned and art persuaded, knowing of whom thou hast been taught them.' Again, those Scriptures he granteth were able to make him wise to salvation; but he addeth (2 Tim. iii. 15), 'through the faith which is in Christ.' Wherefore, without the doctrine of the New Testament, teaching that Christ hath wrought the redemption of the world, which redemption the Old did foreshow he should work, it is not the former alone which can on our behalf perform so much as the Apostle doth avouch, who presupposeth this, when he magnifieth that so highly. And as his words concerning the Books of Ancient Scripture do not take place but with pre-supposal of the Gospel of Christ embraced; so our own words also, when we extol the complete sufficiency of the whole entire body of Scripture, must in like sort be understood with this caution, that the benefit of Nature's light be not thought excluded as unnecessary, because the necessity of a divine light is magnified."

At the same time it is to be borne in mind, that in articles of supernatural truth, which transcend the powers of human Reason, and are the proper objects of Faith, and are necessary to be believed, the Holy Scriptures alone are the things which can make us wise unto salvation. "Propriùs Scripturæ finis est σοφίσαι els σωτηρίαν, sapientes nos reddere ad salutem æternam per fidem quæ est in Christo Jesu. Est ergò Scriptura, quoad supernaturaliter credenda, sola et adæquata Fidei Regula." Bp. Sanderson, Prælect. iv. 15, and so Hooker, II. v. 4, "To urge any thing upon the Church as part of that celestially revealed Truth which God hath taught, and not to show it in Scripture, this did the Ancient Fathers evermore think unlawful, impious, execrable.'

This truth has thus been expressed by S. Athanasius, referring to St. Paul's words (cont. Gentes, tom. i. p. 1, ed. Bened.), αὐταρκεῖς μὲν γάρ εἰσιν αἰ ἀγίαι καὶ θεόπνευστοι γραφαὶ πρὸς τὴν τῆς ἀληθείας ἀπαγγελίαν: and (ex festali Epistolâ xxxix., tom. ii. p. 962) ταῦτα [βιβλία] πῆγαι τοῦ σωτηρίου, άστε τον διψώντα εμφορείσθαι των εν τούτοις λογίων εν τούτοις μόνον το της εὐσεβείας διδασκαλεῖον εὐαγγελίζεται μηδείς τούτοις επιβαλλέτω, μηδε τούτων άφαιρείσθω.

Cp. S. Aug. de Doct. Chr. ii. p. 9, "In iis, quæ apertè in Scriptura posita sunt inveniuntur illa omnia quæ continent fidem moresque vivendi;" and S. Aug. c. Liter. Petil. iii. p. 6, "Si angelus de cœlo vobis annuntiaverit præterquam (παρ' δ, Gal. i. 8) quod in Scripturis Legalibus et Evangelicis accepistis, Anathema sit;" and Origen, Hom. v. in Lev. t. ii. p. 212, "In hoc biduo puto duo Testamenta posse intelligi, in quibus licet omne verbum quod ad Deum pertinet requiri et discuti, atque ex ipsis omnem rerum scientiam capi. Si quid autem superfuerit, quod non Divina Scriptura decernat, nullam aliam tertiam Scripturam debere ad auctoritatem scientiæ suscipi;" and S. Hieron, in Aggeum, "Quæ absque auctoritate et testimoniis Scripturarum, quasi Traditione Apostolica, sponte reperiunt atque confingunt, percutit gladius Dei." See also the testimonies from the Ante-Nicene Fathers, concerning the authority of Holy Scripture as the Rule of Faith, collected by Dr. Routh, Rel. Sacr. v. 335.

16. Πάσα γραφή θεόπνευστος και ἀφέλιμος] Every Scripture, being inspired of God, is also profitable.

As to the interpretation of the several parts of this important assertion,-

(1) πᾶσα γραφὴ means 'every Scripture,' i. e. every portion of Scripture. Πᾶς thus placed means 'every.' See Luke iii. 5, πᾶσα φάραγξ. Acts xv. 21, πᾶν σάββατον. Rom. iii. 19, πᾶν στόμα: xiv. 11, πάσα γλώσσα. Phil. ii. 10, πάν γόνυ. Cp. Winer, § 18,

Or,—if γραφή be considered as equivalent to a proper name, which it may be, as an Appellative (see Bp. Middleton on Matt. xiii. 6, and Winer, § 19, p. 108, and note on 1 Cor. xi. 20. Cp. the use of ἐκκλησία 1 Cor. xiv. 4. 19, and 3 John 6),—then πᾶσα γραφὴ signifies "tota Scriptura," the whole Scripture, as πᾶσα Ίεροσόλυμα Matt. ii. 3, πᾶs οἶκος Ἰσραὴλ Acts ii. 36. Cp. Lee on Inspiration, Lect. vi. p. 258, note.

(2) Γραφή (Graphé) always in the New Testament signifies Holy Scripture, i. e. that which has been received by the Church of God, and read as a writing dictated by God, and distinguished as such from all other writings in the world.

This word Γραφή occurs about fifty times in the New Testament; but it is never applied in any one of these fifty passages to any other Writings than those of the Old and New Testament.

Thus it serves the double purpose of declaring,

(1) that the Writings of the Old and New Testament stand by themselves, as distinguished from all other Writings of the World; and

(2) that the Books of the New Testament are of equal authority with, and from the same origin as, those of the Old Testament, which had been received not only by the Jews, but by CHRIST Himself, as the unerring Word of God.

(3) This meaning of the word  $\gamma\rho\alpha\phi\eta$  leads at once to the true interpretation of this passage, which has been sometimes made matter of question;

Since the word γραφη itself always signifies in the New Testament a divinely-inspired writing, it would be an unmeaning tautology to assert that every  $\Gamma\rho\alpha\phi\eta$  is divinely inspired. The true rendering of the passage is this: "Every portion of Scripture being inspired (i. e. because it is inspired), is also pro-

(4) This interpretation has already been given by Origen (Hom. xx. in Joshuam. Philocal. c. 12), and so Vulg. and the Latin Fathers, "Omnis Scriptura divinitàs inspirata utilis est," &c., and the Syriac, and many of the best modern Expositors.

— θεόπνευστος] inspired by God: in-breathed by God. The Scripture itself is here described as animated by, and filled with, the breath of God. For the examples of the epithet θεόπνευστος, given to living persons, see Wetstein.

The examples cited by some Expositors, where the epithet  $\theta \epsilon \delta \pi \nu \epsilon \nu \sigma \tau \sigma s$  is coupled with mere qualities or lifeless things, e.g.

with σοφία or ὄνειρον, are not relevant here.

In those examples, the wisdom or the dream, to which the epithet is annexed, are said to be breathed by God into the person who receives them; but this cannot be predicated of the Scriptures. They are not breathed into us by God. But they themselves are filled with the breath of God. In fact, St. Paul predicates of Scripture what St. Peter predicates of the Writers of Scripture, whom he calls "holy men moved by the Spirit of God." (2 Pet. i. 21.)

(2 Pet. i. 21.)

This is in perfect harmony with the true view which God has given us of the Holy Scriptures. St. Stephen calls them Advia Corra, living oracles (Acts vii. 38). And the Living Creatures—(ζω̃α) in Ezekiel (i. 15—21; cp. x. 9—22) and in St. John (Rev. iv. 6), full of eyes, winged, and filled with the Spirit, and ever moving, as the Spirit carries them,—are heavenly representations of the divine Life and Power of the Everlasting Gospel. See below on Rev. iv. 4-6.

This assertion of St. Paul that πασα γραφη, i. e. every portion of Scripture being inspired of God, is also profitable, &c., is of inestimable value and importance.

(1) Consider the time and place in which this declaration is made, viz. about A.D. 67, at the close of this Epistle, the last Epistle written by St. Paul, and written a short time before his Martyrdom, and in immediate prospect of it (iv. 6).

(2) At that time all his own Epistles had been written.

(3) Also, it is most probable, that the Gospels of St. Matthew. St. Mark, and St. Luke had then been written and published to the world. See above, Introduction to those Gospels, and on 2 Cor. viii. 18, and 1 Tim. v. 18.

(4) Also the Epistle of St. James, who died A.D. 62, and, probably, the First Epistle of St. Peter, had then been written.

(5) All these are here included in the term Γραφή. St. Paul's brother Apostle, St. Peter, in a passage written also at the close of his life, and at the end of his last Epistle (2 Pet. iii. 16), a passage which forms a happy counterpart to the present text, designates all St. Paul's Epistles as Γραφάς, Scripture; and combines them with other Books known by that name, as belonging to the same class and of the same authority with them.

(6) This passage, therefore, of St. Paul, proclaims to the world the divine Inspiration of every one of these Writings-and of St. Paul's own Epistles among the number-which were then known and received as Tpapal by the Church.

As to the few other Books of the New Testament, which were written after this period (such as the Revelation and Gospel of St. John), they would never have been admitted into the number of Tpapal by the Church, if she had not been convinced that they were of equal authority with those which had been received by her as ypapal from the hands of Christ, and of St. Peter and St. Paul.

(7) Therefore this text will ever remain as a testimony of the Holy Ghost speaking by the divine Apostle, now about to shed his blood for Christ, and asserting the Inspiration of all the Books of the New Testament, as well as of the Old, and will serve as a holy safeguard against all the assaults made upon them by those who deny their divine origin or impugn their unerring veracity.

— καὶ ἀφέλιμος] is also profitable. There is no harshness or awkwardness in the conjunction kal here, as has sometimes been alleged. On the contrary, it serves to introduce a necessary caution and a salutary truth;

It propounds a caution against the writings of false teachers and fanatical enthusiasts, who claimed for themselves and their preaching divine inspiration. Such, for instance, was Simon Magus (Acts viii. 10) and other Gnostic γόητες (v. 13), who, on account of their sorceries, as well as their resistance to the truth, are compared to the Egyptian Magicians, Jannes and Jambres. and against whom the Apostle is specially contending in the Pastoral Epistles.

His often repeated denunciation of them and their doctrine in these Epistles is grounded on the fact that their teaching is not ὡφέλιμος, or profitable, but is κενή, ἀνωφελής, μάταιος, εἰς οὐδὲν χρήσιμος, empty, vain, and unprofitable (see 1 Tim. vi. 20. 2 Tim. ii. 14. 16. Tit. iii. 9), and that it only makes a show of goddiness, but denies the power. (2 Tim. iii. 5. Tit. i. 16.)

On the other hand, St. Paul lays special stress in these Epistles on the necessity of profilable teaching, wholesome doctrine, sound words (1 Tim. i. 10; vi. 3. 2 Tim. i. 13; iv. 3. Tit. i, 9, 13; ii. 1, 8), and of that γνῶσίs, or knowledge, which is not ψευδώνυμος, falsely so called (1 Tim. vi. 20), but is in fact the ἐπίγνωσις, or perfect knowledge of the Truth, an expression four times repeated in these Epistes (1 Tim. ii. 4. 2 Tim. ii. 25; iii. 7. Tit. i. 1), and of that Faith which is fruitful in good works. (1 Tim. vi. 18. 2 Tim. ii. 21; iii. 17. Tit. i. 16; ii. 7. 14; iii. 8. 14.)

Thus, then, his assertion here is twofold; it refutes a danger of the state of the state gerous error, and affirms necessary truth. It declares that "every portion of Scripture, being inspired of God" (and because it is inspired of God) "is also profitable," &c., "in order that the man of οσύνη, 17 ίνα ἄρτιος ἢ ὁ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἄνθρωπος, πρὸς πῶν ἔργον ἀγαθὸν ἐξηρτισμένος.

a Rom. 1. 9. a Rom, 1, 9, & 9, 1, 2 Cor. 1, 23, & 11, 31, Gal. 1, 20, Phil. 1, 8, 1 Thess. 2, 5, 1 Tim. 5, 21, & 6, 13, 1, 20, 7 b Acts 20. 7.

c 1 Tim. 1. 4. & 4. 7.

d Acts 21. 8. Eph. 4. 11. ch. 1. 8. & 2. 3. e Phil. 1, 23. & 2, 17. 2 Pet, 1, 14.

ΙΥ. 1 * Διαμαρτύρομαι ενώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ καὶ Χριστοῦ Ἰησοῦ τοῦ μέλλοντος κρίνειν ζώντας καὶ νεκρούς, καὶ τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ, καὶ τὴν βασιλείαν αὐτοῦ, 2 6 κήρυξον τον λόγον, ἐπίστηθι εὐκαίρως ἀκαίρως, ἔλεγξον, ἐπιτίμησον, παρακάλεσον έν πάση μακροθυμία καὶ διδαχή. 3*Εσται γάρ καιρὸς ὅτε τῆς ὑγιαινούσης διδασκαλίας οὐκ ἀνέξονται, ἀλλὰ κατὰ τὰς ἰδίας ἐπιθυμίας ἑαυτοῖς έπισωρεύσουσι διδασκάλους κυηθόμενοι την ακοήν, 4 ° καὶ από μεν της αληθείας την ακοην αποστρέψουσιν, έπι δε τους μύθους εκτραπήσονται.

5 α Σὰ δὲ νῆφε ἐν πᾶσι, κακοπάθησον, ἔργον ποίησον εὐαγγελιστοῦ, τὴν διακονίαν σου πληροφόρησον.

6 ε Έγω γαρ ήδη σπένδομαι, και ο καιρος της έμης αναλύσεως έφέστηκε

God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works;" whereas, on the other hand, whatever the pretensions of the false teachers might be to divine enthusiasm, the very fact that their doctrines were not profitable, but the contrary, and did not train men to good works, but allowed them in unholiness of life, was a practical proof that they were not inspired of God.

proof that they were not inspired of God.  $-\frac{\partial \nu}{\partial \nu} \delta_{\nu} \alpha_{\nu} \delta_{\nu} \delta_$ who would soon be deprived of his personal presence and advice, refers him to the Holy Scriptures as a never-failing counsellor and guide, which would comfort him after his departure, and make amends for his absence. And if the diligent study of the Holy Scriptures is thus commended by St. Paul in this solemn manner to Timothy, who was himself endued with spiritual gifts of the Holy Ghost, how much more needful is that study to us! (Chrys., Theophyl., Œcumen.)

The force of this observation is strengthened by what has been already remarked, that St. Paul here speaks of Holy Scripture, not as an inanimate thing, but as  $\theta\epsilon\delta\pi\nu\epsilon\nu\sigma\tau\sigma$ s, a living Being, filled with the Spirit of God. The Apostle himself was about to die, and Timothy was to be deprived of his personal presence, but the Word of the Lord endureth for ever (1 Pet. i. 25). The Apostle dies, but the Holy Spirit ever lives in his Epistles, and comforts Timothy and the Church after his departure, even to the end of time.

Well, therefore, might the Apostle, in this farewell Epistle to Timothy and to the Church, endeavour to fix his and her mind on the abiding presence of the Holy Ghost the Comforter, ever breathing and ever speaking in the Word of God.

CH. IV. 1. Διαμαρτύρομαι] I conjure thee. (See I Tim. v. 21. 2 Tim. ii. 14.) Elz. adds οδν έγὼ, not in the best authorities; also Elz. has τοῦ Κυρίου after καί.

— καὶ τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν] and His appearing. So A, C, D, F, G, and Griesb, Lach., Tisch., Huther, Ellicott, Alf.—Elz. κατά.

This restoration of καὶ is a happy one. It indicates that the Apostle has a clear view of Christ's Coming, and of His Kingden, and has really expensed a procede for them see Witnessee.

dom; and, by a noble prosopopæia, appeals to them as Witnesses; I conjure thee in the sight of God, and the Future Judge of all, by His Coming, and by His Kingdom. This mode of speech had been suggested by the Hebrew Scriptures, especially in the LXX Version (Deut. iv. 26), where Moses calls Heaven and Earth to witness: Διαμαρτύρομαι ὑμῖν σήμερον τόν τε οὐρανὸν καὶ τὴν γῆν. See also Deut. xxx. 19; xxxi. 28, where this phrase introduces solemn appeals to the Elements as God's Witnesses of His dealings with His people, and as Remembrancers of their duties to Him. On this text cp S. Aug., Serm. 46.

On the word 'Επιφάνεια, Εριριλαη, as describing Christ's Second Advent, see below on v. 8.

3. "Εσται γάρ καιρός— δ. δ.] This prophecy is now fulfilled in the modern impatience of Creeds, and Catechisms, and forms of Faith. - κατά τὰς ἐδίας ἐπιθυμίας - ἐπισωρεύσουσι] according to their own lusts will heap up to themselves Teachers, having itching ears; i. e. because they, the hearers, have itching ears.

Instead of receiving those Teachers who are authorized by Christ to instruct them, and have a regular call and mission from Him to execute their sacred office, and preach by the Rule of Faith, they will stray away from their Pastors, and from their own proper Fold, and will raise up for themselves a confused heap of Teachers, as Jeroboam did, who made a promiscuous multitude of Priests, not of the sons of Levi, but whosoever would be consecrated by him. (1 Kings xii. 31; xiii. 33.)

The word ἐπισωρεύω, aggero (from ἐπὶ and σωρὸς, a mound), is sometimes employed to describe an action by which a person heaps up something injurious to himself, so as to overwhelm himself by that very thing which he has heaped up. So Chrys. (Ep. 92), ξαυτοῖς ξπισωρεύοντες κόλασιν, and ξαυτοῖς ξπισωρεύοντες κόλασιν, and ξαυτοῖς ξπισωρεύοντες Lalso describes the work of an Enemy, raising up a mound capital (2) a City in order to execute it.

against (enl) a City in order to assault it. Cp. Isa. xxxvii. 33.

In the Song of Solomon, Symmachus has ἐπισωρεύσατέ μοι άγάπην, "raise Love as a mound with a banner against me," where the LXX have τάξατε.

Hence it appears, that the Apostle regards this promiscuous multitude of teachers as an offensive outwork thrown up by hostile hands to beleaguer the Church of God. His words may also intimate, that this outwork will prove injurious to those who raise it, as the Tower of Babel, the type of all works of Confusion, Pride, and Aggression against God and His Church, did to its builders; or, as in heathen mythology (in the pagan paraphrase of the Scriptural History of Babel), the Mountains heaped up by the Giants against the Powers of Heaven did to those who raised them.

- κνηθόμενοι την ακοήν] having itching ears. It would seem that the Apostle now adopts another metaphor, and is comparing these persons,-who have lost their healthful relish for sound doctrine, and who, in their prurient craving for something new, to stimulate and gratify their diseased appetite, accumulate to themselves a promiscuous heap of self-chosen Teachers,—to animals, especially unclean ones, who raise up for themselves a heap against which they scrape the distempered surface of the skin, particularly their ears. The metaphor is found in Greek and Latin Authors, who describe sophistical Teachers, and others who sought to flatter and gratify their hearers by novelties, as κνήθοντας sought to flatter and gratify their hearers by novelties, as κνήθοντας τὰ ὧτα. (See Wetstein.) Such go to Sermons to scratch their ears at them; not to have their hearts and lives improved by them.

4. μύθους] fables. See l Tim. i. 4; iv. 7. Tht. i. 14.

6. σπένδομαι] I am being poured out as a σπονδή, a libation or drink-offering to God. See Gen. xxxv. 14, έσπεισεν Ίακωβ ἐπ' αὐτῆ σπονδήν. Εχοd. xxix. 40. Numb. xxviii. 7. And compare St. Paul's words (Phil. ii. 17), εἰ καὶ σπένδομαι ἐπὶ τῆ θυσία καὶ λειτουργία τῆς πίστεως ὑμῶν, where see note, and the Introduction to that Epistle, p. 341.

S. Ignatius, in his desire for martyrdom, imitates the language of St. Paul, πλέον μοι μὴ παράσχησθε τοῦ σπονδισθῆναι guage of St. Paul, πλέον μοι μή παράσχησθε τοῦ σπονδισθῆναι Θεφ. Tertullian (contra Gnosticos, 13), referring to this pas-snge, says, "Vides, quam martyrii definiat felicitatem, cui de gaudio mutuo acquirit solennitatem, ut proximus denique voti sui factus est, qualiter de prospectu ejus exultans scribit Timotheo, Ego enim jam libor.

This triumphant exultation of the Apostle at the prospect of death was doubtless designed, among other reasons, to show the Heathen that they had not conquered him, or injured the Gospel which he preached, by putting him to death. They might be inclined to imagine that his claims to miraculous powers, and to supernatural aid for himself and his Cause, were illusory, or he would have exerted them in his own behalf. He shows them that Death to him was Victory. He would also assure the Christians, who might be perplexed and staggered by his sufferings, that their Apostle regarded death as a blessed release, and as the appointed Aposto regarded death is a blessed release, and as the appointed passage to Everlasting Glory, and that it had no bitterness for him, but that he was enabled by God's grace to rejoice in it.

— δ καιρδ τῆς ἐμῆς ἀναλύσεως ἐφέστηκε] the season of my departure is come. ᾿Ανάλυσις is departure (Luke xii. 36) from life. (Phil. i. 23.) The καιρδς ἀναλύσεως is the season of loosing the cable from this earthly shore, on a voyage to the eternal har-bour of heavenly peace. Hence Clemens R. 44, says of the faith ful departed,  $\tau \epsilon \lambda \epsilon la\nu \ \epsilon \sigma \chi o \nu \ a \nu d \lambda \nu \sigma \iota \nu$ . Cp. note above on St. Paul's words in his first imprisonment (Phil. i. 23),  $\tau \dot{\eta} \nu \ \epsilon \pi \iota$ θυμίαν έχων είς τὸ ἀναλῦσαι, and see the Introduction to that Epistle, above, p. 341. 8. ἀπόκειταί μοι ό τῆς δικαιοσύτης στέφανος] there is laid up

7 του ἀγῶνα του καλου ἡγώνισμαι, του δρόμου τετέλεκα, τὴυ πίστιν τετήρηκα 11 Cor. 9. 24, 25. 8 κ λοιπὸν ἀπόκειταί μοι ὁ τῆς δικαιοσύνης στέφανος, ὃν ἀποδώσει μοι ὁ Κύριος 1 Tim. 6. 12. ἐν ἐκείνη τῆ ἡμέρᾳ, ὁ δίκαιος κριτὴς, οὐ μόνον δὲ ἐμοὶ, ἀλλὰ καὶ πᾶσι τοῖς  $\frac{g \ 1 \ Cet. \ 9}{1 \ Pet. \ 5. \ 4.}$ James 1, 12. ήγαπηκόσι την ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ.

 $^9$  Σπούδασον ἐλθεῖν πρός με ταχέως:  $^{10~h}$  Δημᾶς γάρ με ἐγκατέλιπεν ἀγαπή-  $^{h}$  Col. 4. 14. σας τὸν νῦν αἰῶνα, καὶ ἐπορεύθη εἰς Θεσσαλονίκην· Κρήσκης εἰς Γαλατίαν, Τίτος Col. 4. 10. Philem. 24. εἰς Δαλματίαν· 11 Ι Λουκᾶς ἐστι μόνος μετ' ἐμοῦ. Μάρκον ἀναλαβὼν ἄγε μετὰ Ερh. 6. 21. σεαυτοῦ, ἔστι γὰρ μοὶ εὔχρηστος εἰς διακονίαν. 12 κ Τύχικον δὲ ἀπέστειλα εἰς Τίι. 3. 12.

8. αποκειταί μοι ο της δικαιουνης στέφανος] incre is that ap-for me the crown of righteousness. St. Paul was now on the eve of Martyrdom. He did not speak in these terms of confident assurance before. See 1 Cor. ix. 27. Phil. iii. 11. The crown of victory (στέφανος) was laid up for the Christian racer and athlete, and was to be given to him now that he had run the race, and fought the good fight. On the metaphor, see above, 1 Cor. ix. 24. Phil. iii. 13. 2 Tim. ii. 5; below, Rev.

 ii. 10;
 iii. 11, and note on Rev. vi. 2.
 — πῶσι τοῖς ἡγαπηκόσιν τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν αὐτοῦ] to all those who have loved His Appearing. This word Ἐπιφάνεια, Ερίphany, as used by Holy Scripture and by the Christian Church, is very expressive.

First, it describes Christ's human Manifestation, His Epiphany, when He was displayed as an Infant at Bethlehem to the Gantiles brought to Him by the leading of a star (Matt. ii. 2–11). Next, it describes His Manifestation in His Childhood in the Temple (Luke ii. 41–52). Next, His Baptism, when He was manifested to Israel (John i. 31), and was anointed by the Holy Ghost (Matt. iii. 16); when the "Grace of God dawned  $(\partial \pi \epsilon \phi d \nu \eta)$ upon all men" in Him (Tit. ii. 11), "and the Kindness and Love of God our Saviour toward man appeared " (ἐπεφάνη), Tit. iii. 4. Next, it describes the Manifestation of His Godhead at Cana in Galilee (John ii. 11); and, finally, it describes the future Manifestation of the Great Day when He, the Everlasting King and Judge of all, will destroy His enemies with the Epiphany of His Coming (2 Thess. ii. 8), and when all His Saints will appear and shine with the Epiphany of His Glory. See 1 John iii. 2, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is, and ye know that He was manifested to take away our sins: So (v.5) for this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the Devil (v. 8). And every man that hath this hope in Him (Christ) purifieth himself even as He is pure" (v. 3). There is a joyful assurance to all "who wait for the blessed hope and Epiphany of the glory of the Great God our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Tit. ii. 13), and "have loved His Epiphany," and have kept His command-ments without spot until His Epiphany. (1 Tim. vi. 14.)

These stages of Christ's Manifestation are happily presented to the view in succession by the Church in the Collects, Gospels, Epistles, and Lessons of the EPIPHANY; and the consummation of all is displayed in the Services of the Sixth Sunday of that season.

9.  $\tau \alpha \chi \epsilon \omega s1$  quickly. Before winter (v. 21), when the voyage would be dangerous. (Acts xxvii. 9.)
10.  $\Delta \eta \mu \hat{\alpha} s1$  Demas, who had remained faithful to St. Paul in his first imprisonment at Rome (Philem. 24. Col. iv. 14), had now been alarmed by the greater severity, and more perilous prospects of the second, following on the savage Neronian persecution of the Christians, and forsook the Apostle.  $-\Delta \eta \mu \hat{n} s \gamma \hat{a} \rho \mu \epsilon \hat{\epsilon} \gamma \kappa \alpha \epsilon \lambda m \epsilon \nu] For Demas deserted me in (\hat{\epsilon} \nu) the crisis of my suffering. The arrist intimates that the act was occasioned by some special danger which threatened the Apostle;$ and that Demas, terrified by it, deserted him in the hour of peril. A, C, D\*\*, E, F, G, L have the imperfect tense here, i. e. was forsaking me. This may, perhaps, be the true reading; but the forsaking me. confusions of et and t are so common in MSS. on account of the identity of sound in ancient pronunciation, that not much stress can be laid on this variation. The sense will not be affected by The same variation is found in v. 16, and even in v. 13, where A, C, F, G, I have ἀπέλειπον, which can hardly be the true reading.

- ἀγαπήσας τὸν νῦν αἰῶνα] loving this present world. His love of this world, and fear of losing its pleasures, and of encountering pain for the Gospel, was the cause of his desertion of me Cp. S. Polycarp (ad Phil. 9), who says, Obey the word of righteousness which ye beheld with your eyes in the blessed Iguatius, and Zosimus, and Rufus, and in Paul himself, and the other Apostles; being persuaded that they have not run in vain, and are now with the Lord in the place prepared for them; for they loved not this present world, οὐ γὰρ ἡγάπησαν τὸν νῦν Observe the solemn contrast between him who "loves this present World" and those "who love Christ's Appearing" (v. 8).

— Θεσσαλονίκην] Thessalonica, where St. Paul had many enemies, especially among the Jews. (Acts xvii. 5. 13.)

 Κρήσκης εἰς Γαλατίαν] Crescens to Galatia, to confirm the Church there. Observe the disinterested and paternal solicitude of the great Apostle, in his chains, for the distant Churches. He consented to be left alone by Titus, Crescens, and Tychicus (vv. 10. 12), in order that he might comfort them, and he would not send for Timothy from Ephesus without providing him a substitute (v. 12).

Titus to Dalmatia, perhaps de-- Τίτος είς Δαλματίαν] spatched thither by St. Paul on a missionary journey after his visit to Nicopolis in Epirus, where St. Paul probably passed a winter, perhaps the winter preceding the date of the present Epistle.

(See Tit. iii. 12.)

11. Λουκας ἐστι μόνος μετ' ἐμοῦ] Luke is alone with me. Alone of his usual fellow-travellers; for other friends were with him now. (See v. 21.) Luke is alone, being left by his companions.

On the testimony hence accruing to St. Luke's historical veracity, see Irenœus, iii. 14.

This mention of St. Luke, as still present with St. Paul at Rome at the close of his life, and probably remaining with him till his Martyrdom, suggests the inquiry—

Why did not St. Luke, the Historian of the Acts of the Apostles, the faithful friend and fellow-traveller of St. Paul, whose doings occupy so large a portion of that Book, continue his narrative even to that glorious consummation of the great Apostle's career? This question has been considered above in the Introduction to the Acts of the Apostles, pp. 6, 7, and see on Acts xxviii. 30, 31.

Μάρκον-διακονίαν] Take Mark and bring him with thyself, for he is profitable to me for the ministry. On the interesting and important character of this commendation of Mark, as profitable for ministering to the Apostle, see above, Acts xv. 39, on Col. iv. 10.

And on St. Mark's history see Introductory Note to St. Mark's Gospel, and below on 1 Pet. v. 13, where he is mentioned as St. Peter's son, and as present with that Apostle.

ĕστι] he is—observe the emphatic force of ĕστι thus placed (cp. Heb. xi. 1. 1 Tim. vi. 6)-whatever might formerly have been the failings of Mark, he now is useful to me for the ministry; therefore do thou take care and bring him to me. Observe also μοl, to me, placed emphatically before εὕχρηστος,—to me whom he once forsook (Acts xiii. 13; xv. 38).

Here is a clear proof of St. Paul's confidence in St. Mark's firmness at this time. The Apostle now sends for him to Rome at this perilous crisis, when Mark would be exposed to severe temptations, and his courage would be put to the most searching test. Demas had forsaken the Apostle in his trials, and had fled away in fear to Thessalonica. But Mark was to be brought to Rome by Timothy. What a noble testimony to both !

12. Τύχικον—είς Έφεσον] I send Tychicus (perhaps with this letter) to take thy place at Ephesus during the time in which thou wilt be absent from thy post there in order to come to me at Rome (vv. 9. 21). Be therefore at ease on that account, and come quickly. Cp. above on Tit. iii. 12.

This public mention of Tychicus as sent by the Apostle to Ephesus, was doubtless designed to serve a double purpose.

(1) To protect Tychicus from the charge of having forsaken the Apostle at Rome, as Demas had done. Mark St. Paul's kind consideration for him. Cp. below, v. 20. Col. iv. 12.

(2) To commend him to the reverent reception and regard of the Exherica Charge.

of the Ephesian Church.

Tychicus, a native of Asia (Acts xx. 4), had already been employed and approved by St. Paul in the execution of important commissions to the Churches of Asia, particularly to Ephesus, Εφεσον. 13 Τον φελόνην, ον απέλιπον εν Τρωάδι παρα Κάρπω, ερχόμενος φέρε, 1 Acts 19. 33, 31. καὶ τὰ βιβλία, μάλιστα τὰς μεμβράνας. 14 1 'Αλέξανδρος ὁ χαλκεὺς πολλά μοι Rev. 6. 10. κακὰ ἐνεδείξατο ἀποδώσει αὐτῶ ὁ Κύριος κατὰ τὰ ἔρνα κὐτοῦ 15. 6, 20. φυλάσσου, λίαν γὰρ ἀντέστη τοις ἡμετέροις λόγοις. 16 Έν τη πρώτη μου ἀπολογία οὐδείς μοι συμπαρεγένετο, ἀλλὰ πάντες με ἐγκατέλιπον μὴ αὐτοῖς λογισθείη· 17 π ὁ δὲ Κύριός μοι παρέστη καὶ ἐνεδυνάμωσέ με, ἵνα δι ἐμοῦ τὸ κήρυγμα m Ps. 22. 21. Acts 23. 11. & 27. 23. πληροφορηθή, καὶ ἀκούσωσιν πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, καὶ ἐρρύσθην ἐκ στόματος λέοντος. 18 ° καὶ ρύσεταί με ὁ Κύριος ἀπὸ παντὸς ἔργου πονηροῦ, καὶ σώσει εἰς n Pa. 121. 7. o Acts 18. 2. την βασιλείαν αὐτοῦ την ἐπουράνιον ῷ ἡ δόξα εἰς τοὺς αἰώνας τῶν αἰώνων αμήν. p Acts 19. 22. & 20 4. & 21. 29. 19 ο Ασπασαι Πρίσκαν καὶ 'Ακύλαν, καὶ τὸν 'Ονησιφόρου οἶκον. 20 P Epaoand the neighbouring Church of Colossæ. (Eph. vi. 21. Col. |

13. φελόνην κ.τ.λ. ] the cloak which I left at Troas with Carpus, bring with thee when thou comest, and the books, especially the parchments. The φελόνη, 'pænula,' is a cloak with long sleeves, especially for winter use, "such as travellers wore to defend themselves with from the cold or bad weather." Bull.) Cp. v. 21; and Horat. 1 Ep. xi. 18. Juvenal, Sat. v. 79. Schol. in Pers. Sat. 68, "pallium cum fimbriis longis;" and for journeys, and in rain. Lamprid. in Alex. Sever. p. 366. Wetstein.

The other meaning assigned to the word, "a chest for books," has little to support it here.

This text, especially in relation to the books and parchments, may serve to illustrate the uses of human Learning to Religion. See Bp. Bull's Sermon x. on "human means useful to inspired persons." Vol. i. p. 240.

Besides, the mention of these minor details, the cloak, the books, and the parchments, here specified, soon after those glowing aspirations for martyrdom, and those fervent anticipations of glory in the verses immediately preceding (vv. 6-8), is very affecting, interesting, and instructive, as showing that those aspirations and anticipations were not a result of fanatical enthusiasm, but were the words of truth and soberness. Cp. Acts xxvi. 25.

These minor matters give a beautiful relief of quiet serenity to the stirring scene of the great Apostle's Martyrdom.

— δν ἀπέλιπον ἐν Τρωάδι παρὰ Κάρπω—μεμβράνας] which I left at Troas with Carpus. St. Paul, a short time before this Epistle was written, had been at Miletus. (See v. 20.) It is probable that he was then apprehended, or already in custody, and was sent as a prisoner to Rome for trial, and, if convicted, for execution. See above on i. 15, and below, vv. 14-16.

The case of the Apostle seems to have found afterwards a parallel in that of S. Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, in the Persecuparatier in that of S. Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch, in the Previous of Syria, at Antioch. (Mart. Ignat. § 2, p. 560, ed. Jacobson.) He was there tried before the Emperor Trajan, and thence sent to Rome. And when he was condemned to this deportation he exclaimed, "I thank Thee, O Lord, that Thou hast honoured me by Thy Love, in binding me in iron chains with Thy Apostle Paul." From Antioch he went along the coast of Asia by Ephesus, from which he had received a deputation in the person of its Bishop Onesimus (ad Eph. i.), to Smyrna, where he had an interview with the Bishop of Smyrna, Polycarp, the disciple of St. John; and thence he sailed along the coast of Asia to Troas. From Troas, Ignatius came to Neapolis, and so by Philippi through Macedonia to Epidamnus on foot, and thence by sea to Puteoli; and he desired to go from Puteoli by land in the footsteps of St. Paul. But he was carried by sea to Portus Romanus, near Ostia, and so came to Rome, where he was martyred (§ 6).

It seems probable, that the occasion and circumstances of St. Paul's last journey from Asia to Rome bore much resemblance to those of the voyage of S. Ignatius from Antioch to the Indeed, there is a remarkable passage in the Epistle of Ignatius to the Ephesians, in which he compares himself in this respect to St. Paul, and seems to intimate that St. Paul as well as himself was a prisoner when he passed by Ephesus to Rome. "Ye (he says) are the πάροδος, or passage, of those who are being killed for God; ye are the fellow-votaries of Paul in the mysteries of the Gospel, the sanctified, the attested, the blessed Paul, under whose footstep may I be found when I attain to God!

Ignatius received a deputation from the Ephesian Church by Onesimus, its Bishop; so, probably, did St. Paul by Timothy. Both sailed along the coast of Asia, and both touched at Troas.

If this was the case, then we may suppose that St. Paul, now in custody, deposited his cloak and books and parchments with Carpus, in order that they might be in safe keeping; and that now, in foresight of martyrdom, he asks Timothy, his faithful friend, to call for them at Troas, in his way from Ephesus to Rome, in order that St. Paul might have the disposal of them .not only for his own use, but as bequests to his friends, perhaps to Timothy himself.

Hence the transition is very natural to the circumstances mentioned in the seven following verses, which refer (it would seem) to what had occurred to him in Asia, just before he was sent to Rome.

14-18.7 Alexander the coppersmith at Ephesus was probably exasperated by the same motives as stirred Demetrius the silversmith in the same city against St. Paul, viz. because his preaching hurt their trade in idols. See on Acts xix. 24.

At my first defence, no one stood by me; but all men for-sook me (as to the reading see v. 10),—may it not be laid to their the Gospel But the Lord stood by me, and strengthened me, that the Gospel might be fully preached, and that all the Gentiles might hear; and I was delivered from the mouth of the Lion. He here speaks of the malignant treatment he had received from Alexander the coppersmith, who did him much evil, ἐνεδείξατο = 'fecit publicè.' Cp. Augustine, iii. 540. Probably this occurred in the neighbourhood of Ephesus, and therefore St. Paul here charges Timothy, the Bishop of Ephesus, to beware of him. See on 2 Tim. i. 15.

This seems to have been on the critical occasion of his πρώτη απολογία, the 'first defence' (specified in v. 16), when no man stood by him, and when many thirsted for his blood.

Some indeed have supposed, that he meant thereby his first defence at Rome, when sent thither from Casarea. (Acts xxviii. 16.) But as Chrys. observes (Prol. ad Philip.; cp. Tillemont, i. 129), this is not probable. He is speaking of some more recent peril in Asia.

Then, perhaps, not figuratively, but actually, he was delivered from the mouth of the Lion; as seems to have been the case with him on a former occasion in Asia, at Ephesus (see on 1 Cor. xv. 32), and as S. Polycarp afterwards was, in the persecution of the Asiatic Christians at Smyrna. It is recorded of Polycarp, that the multitude of the Gentiles and Jews (who were foremost in the outrage against him) clamoured to the Asiarch Philip, Ίνα ἐπαφῆ τῷ Πολυκάρπῳ λέοντα, 'that he would let loose on Polycarp a Lion.' (Martyr. Polycarp. 12.) And the popular cry of the Heathen in times of persecution was "Christianos ad Leonem." Tertullian, Apol. 40.

The phrase the Lion's mouth is used in another place by St. Paul, and there it is not figurative, but literal. (Heb. xi. 33.) Perhaps the Apostle St. Paul had the comfort of being able to compare himself in this respect with the Prophet Daniel.

The Apostle was delivered from the Lion's mouth, and was sent on to Rome, in order to suffer there. And thus his testimony to Christ, first by his public defence in Asia, and subsequently by his public trial and glorious Martyrdom in the great Metropolis of the Heathen world, was made subservient to the consummation of the Gospel, and to the diffusion of a knowledge of the truth "to all nations" of the World.

In v. 14, A, C, D*, E*, F, G have ἀποδώσει.—Elz. has ἀποδώη, and v. 17, ἀκούση.

18. καὶ βύσεται—βασιλείαν—ἀμήν] Apparently an adaptation of the final sentences of the Lord's Prayer. See on Acts xxi.

of the final sentences of the Lord's Prayer. See on Acts XXI.

14. Was the Doxology also then used in the Church?

19. 'Ασπασαι Πρίσκαν—'Ονησιφόρου οίκου'] Salute Prisca and Aquila and the household of Onesiphorus. His mind is still in Asia. See i. 16; and as to Priscilla and Aquila, see above on

20. "Εραστος-Τρόφιμον] Erastus remained at Corinth, but τος ξμεινεν εν Κορίνθω. Τρόφιμον δε ἀπέλιπον εν Μιλήτω ἀσθενοῦντα. <sup>21</sup> Σπούδασον πρὸ χειμῶνος ελθεῖν.

'Ασπάζεταί σε Εὔβουλος, καὶ Πούδης, καὶ Λίνος, καὶ Κλαυδία, καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ πάντες.

 $^{22}$  Ο Κύριος Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς μετὰ τοῦ πνεύματός σου. Ἡ χάρις μεθ' ὑμῶν.

Trophimus I left at Miletus sick. Here are two other touching instances of the tender thoughtfulness of the great Apostle for his friends, and their good name, at the time of his own imminent peril, and severest sufferings, in imitation of the Great Exemplar.

(John xviii. 8; xix. 26.)

After his mention of his perils, and of his desertion by Demas and others (iv. 10. 16; i. 15), it might perhaps have been inferred by some, that others who had been his chosen fellowworkers, and were now absent from him, had also forsaken him. Therefore he takes care to protect them against such an imputation. He mentions first the faithfulness of Luke, and next accounts for the absence of Titus and Tychicus (vv. 10. 12), and he now explains the reason also of the absence of Erastus and Trophimus. Erastus, thy former companion in Greece (Acts xix. 22; cp. Rom. xvi. 23), abode at Corinth. He remained at his post in that great city where are many adversaries (Acts xviii. 6), and where he is exposed to many dangers as my friend. This word μένω here expresses courageous firmness and patient endurance under trial, as in other places. See iii. 14. Cp. προσμένω in 1 Tim. i. 3; v. 5. And the aorist probably intimates, that when St. Paul quitted Corinth on some recent visit to that city, he left Erastus in charge there; and that he tarried there, in obedience to the Apostle's injunction. It was St. Paul's habit to leave some persons behind him to water what he had planted. See on Acts xix. 6.

So likewise Trophimus. He was an Ephesian, and was specially obnoxious to the Ephesian Jews (Acts xxi. 29; cp. Acts xx. 4). They would have rejoiced to be able to allege that he had deserted St. Paul. After the Apostle's death, which was now near at hand, some calumnious persons would have alleged, that if Trophimus had not seen cause to separate himself from St. Paul, he would not have stayed behind at Miletus, but would have accompanied the Apostle to Rome. St. Paul, therefore, obviates such aspersions as these; and it was a happy thing for Trophimus, the Ephesian, that Timothy, the Bishop of Ephesus, received these words from St. Paul's own hand, which enabled him to clear Trophimus from any such detractions, and to show that the stay of Trophimus at Miletus was necessitated by sickness, perhaps caused by sufferings and labours in the cause of the Gospel, and that he had not left St. Paul, but that St. Paul had left him at Miletus.

21.  $\Pioi\delta\eta_3$ ] Pudens. See the Essay of Archdeacon Williams, in which he endeavours to prove that the Pudens and Claudia here specified are the same persons as those mentioned in Martial (iv. 13; xi. 34), and that Claudia was daughter of Cogidunus, a British Chief, and that having come to Rome, she was converted to Christianity, and was married to Pudens, and afterwards returned with her husband to Britain, where he held lands under her father Cogidunus. (See Williams's Discourses and Essays, pp. 132—190, Lond. 1857, and also Dean Alford's Excursus, iii. p. 104.) If this was so, this Epistle was written before their marriage; otherwise, the name of Linus would hardly have been inserted between them. Cp. Lightfoot, in Journal of Class, and Sacred Philol. vol. iv. pp. 73—76.

— Λ(νos] Linus, of whom Irenæus thus speaks: After that the blessed Apostles (Peter and Paul) had founded the Church (at Rome), they committed the Bishopric of that city to Linus. This Linus is mentioned by St. Paul in his Epistles to Timothy. He was succeeded by Anacletus. And in the third place from the Apostles, Clement received the Episcopate of that city, a person who had beheld the blessed Apostles, and had enjoyed intercourse with them, and had their preaching still sounding in his ears. S. Irenæus (iii. 3. 3). See above, note on Phil. iv. 3.

CODEX SINAITICUS,

COLLATED WITH THE TEXT OF STEPHENS 1550, AS REPRINTED BY THE REV. F. H. SCRIVENER, 1867.

N.B. Itacisms, ν εφελκυστικα, σ appended, clerical errors, are all noted \( \sigma. \)—Readings placed within brackets [ ] agree with the text of Stephens.—Readings of the original scribe are indicated by \( p.m. \), those of subsequent correctors by \( s.m. \).

προσ ρωμαιουσ

Cap. I. 1.  $[iv \ \chi \overline{v}]$ . 2. προεπηγγιατον. 3.  $\overline{\delta a \delta}$  passim ν. 4. δυναμιν. 5. πασινν (sic v. 7). 6. νμισν. 8.  $-\delta \iota \iota \iota v \ \overline{\chi} \upsilon$  (habet A). περι (pro υπερ). 9. μνιανν. 10. ευοδωθησομεν. ελθινν (sic v. 13). 11.  $\overline{\iota \delta \iota v }$ ν. 12. εστινν. συνπαρακληθηναι  $\overline{\epsilon }$ |ν (initio lineae); sic p.m. 13. τινα καρπον. 14. ελλησινν. οφιλετησν. 15. (ουτωσ C, ουτω p.m.ν). 16.  $-\tau ου \ \chi \rho \iota \overline{\sigma } \tau \upsilon v$ .  $\overline{\iota \delta \iota v } \tau v$  π. ( $\overline{\iota \delta \iota v } \tau v$ ). 18. αληθιανν (sic v. 25). 19. ο  $\overline{\sigma \sigma} \tau \alpha \rho v$ . εφανερωσενν. 20. ποιημασινν. καθορατεν. 21. η $\overline{\iota \iota v } \chi v$  αρρενες εν αρρεσι (ρσ bis A). 28. επιγνωσιν.  $-\sigma \iota v$  θεος (addit A). 29.  $-\pi \iota v$  νεια. πονηριάν κακια πλεονεξια. κακοηθιασν. 30. απιθεισν. 31.  $-\alpha \sigma \pi \upsilon v \delta \upsilon v$  (addit C). 32. [ποιονσιν]. συνευδοκουσινν. πρασσυσινν.

ΙΙ. 1.  $\iota$  (pro εί)ν. -ρινις bisν. 2. γαρ (pro δε). εστινν. 4. καταφρονισν. 5. (C addit και post -ψεωσ.). 7. ζητουσινν. 8. απιθουσινν. -μεν (-σιν μεν C). αληθιαν. πιθομενοισν. 'οργη' και θυμοσ. 11. εστινν. προσωπολημμια. 13. - του bis. [τω]. ποιωσιν. [ουτοι]. εισινν. 15. ενδικνυνταιν. καρδιεσ (C -αισ)ν. συνμαρ. 16. [οτε].  $fin. \overline{\chi v}$  iv (sine δια) p.m. (δια  $\overline{\iota v}$   $\overline{\chi v}$   $\Lambda$ ). 17. init. ει δε. -τω. 18. γινωσκισν. 19. σκοτιν. 21. κλεπτιν κλεπτισν. 22.  $\overline{\iota b}$  αλαν. 24. βλασφημιταιν. εθνεσινν. 25. ωφελιν. -βυστια p.m., at -βιστια  $prim \delta v$ . 26. ουχ. 29.  $[\alpha \lambda \lambda]$ .

ΙΙΙ. 1. —  $\eta$  (habet C). ωφελιαν. 2. [γαρ]. 4. καθαπερ. γεγραπτεν. νικησεισ. 5. συνιστησινν. + αυτου (post οργην): delet C. 6. κρινν. 7. δε (pro γαρ). αληθιαν. 8. φασινν. λεγινν. εστινν (sic vv. 10. 18. 23). 11. [sic]. 12. ηχρεωθησαν. εστιν ο ποιων. fin. αινοσν 13. χιλην. 14. [στομα αρασ]. 17. ιρηνησν. 19. λαλει (pro λεγει): C λεγει. 21. νυνειν. 22. — και επι παντασ (addit C). 25. — τησ prim. ενδιξινν. 26. + την (ante ενδιξιν). [fin.  $\overline{\imath}$ ν]. 27. εξεκλισθην. 28. γαρ (pro ουν). δικαιουσθαι πιστι (πισ. δικ. C). 29. — δε. 30. ειπερ (επειπερ C). 31. μη (μ rescript.)ν.  $\overline{\imath}$ στανομεν ( $\overline{\imath}$ στωμεν C).

IV. 1. ευρηκεναι αβρααμ τον προπατορα ημων (sic etiam C: πρα A). 2. - τον. 3. + γαρ (post τι) erasum, sequente γαρν. επιστευσεν (sic v. 17)ν. 4. - το. οφιλημαν. 5. ασεβην. 8. ου (pro ω) p.m. [sic Cod. B] (ω C). 9. - οτι. 11. σημιον ελαβενν. [δι].-και (ante αυτοισ): habet C.-την. 12. - τοισ ουκ εκ περιτομησ (όμοιοτελ.: habet A). στοιχουσινν. ζχνεσινν,-τη.-πιστεωσ (habet A). 13. - η (habet η A).-του. 15. δε (pro γαρ: γαρ C). εστινν (sic vv. 16. 21). 16. ειναν. 17. τεθικαν. 18. [επ]. κατα eras. ante καταν. 19. πιστιν (sic v. 20).-ου. κατενοησενν. [ηδη]. 21. init. [και], sic v. 22. 24. λογιζεσθεν. εγιρανταν. 25. δικεωσινν.

V. 1. εχωμεν (εχομεν A). 2. (A habel εν ante τη, af eras.).  $\pi$ ιστιν. [επ]. 3. χαυχωμεθαν. 5. καρδιεσν. "υμων p.m. (ημων C). 6. [init. ετι] + ετι (ante κατα). απεθανενν (sic "ν. β). 7. μογισ μολισ A). αποθανιταιν. αποθανινν. 8. συνιστησινν. [εισ <math>"ν. β. ο. θ.].

9. Post δικαιωθεντεσ p.m. habet  $\tilde{\epsilon}$  (eras, p.m.) $\checkmark$ . 12. [ $\eta$  αμ.  $\epsilon$ ισ τ. κ.]. [ο θαν.]. 13. ενελογειτο (A marg. ελλογαται: at C ενελογειται). 14. [αλλ]. μωϋσεωσ. εστιν $\checkmark$ . 15. ουτωσ $\checkmark$  (sic vv. 18. 19. 21). επερισσευσεν $\checkmark$ . 16. αμαρτητοσ $\checkmark$  (-σαντος C). 17. [τω του ενοσ]. εβασιλευσεν $\checkmark$ . [τησ. δωρ.]. βασιλευσουσιν $\checkmark$ . 18. + ανθρωπου (ante παραπτωματος), delet C.

VI. 1. επιμενομέν. 2. [ζησομέν]. 4. ουτωσ $\sqrt{(sic \ v. \ 11)}$ . ημισ $\sqrt{(sic \ v. \ 11)}$ . απέθανεν bis  $\sqrt{(sic \ v. \ 11)}$ . ουκέτι (pro ου prim. Delet ουκέτι C). αλλα (sic  $\sqrt{(sic \ v. \ 13)}$ ) p.m. αλλ s.m. 15. αμαρτησωμέν. 18. ουν (pro δέ): C habet δέ. 19. ασθένιαν $\sqrt{(sic \ v. \ 15)}$  p.m. εκινών $\sqrt{(sic \ v. \ 15)}$  21. επέσχυνεσθέ $\sqrt{(sic \ v. \ 15)}$  εκινών $\sqrt{(sic \ v. \ 15)}$  εξεινών $\sqrt{(sic \ v. \ 15)}$  εξεινών το εξεινών εξεινώ

VII. 1. γινωσκουσινί. 2. [sic]. 3. εταιρω bis/ (non v. 4). 4. και  $\ddot{\nu}$ μεισ αδελφοι μου. ( $\chi \rho \nu p.m. \chi \nu$  C). 6. [-τεσ]. [ημασ]. 7. ηδινί. 8. [κατειρ.]. (+ η ante αμαρτια secund. C). 11. εξηπατησενί. απεκτινενί. 13. εγενετο (pro γεγονεν). [αλλα]. 14. [γαρ]. σαρκινοσ (-κοσ C). 15. αλλα. 16. συνφημι. 17. [αλλ η] ενοικουσα. 18. θελινί. κατεργαζεσθεί. fin. ου (pro ουχ ευρισκω). 19. αλλα. 20. [θελω εγω]. αλλα. 23. μελεσιν bisί. + εν (post με). 25. (A habet χαρισ δε pro ευχαριστω).—μεν (habet C).

VIII. 1. - μη κατα σαρ. ad fin. vers. p.m. (habet C). 2. ηλευθερωσεν√. σε (pro με). 3. εαυ ?: sic Tischendorf., at deest annotatio. [ $\kappa$ atekpive]. 7. ουναται (δυναται C) $\sqrt{.}$  9. αλλα. 10. [δι]. 11.  $\epsilon \gamma \iota \rho \alpha \nu \tau \sigma s \sqrt{\cdot + \tau \sigma \nu}$  (ante  $\overline{\iota \nu}$ : non C).  $\sigma \epsilon \gamma \epsilon \iota \rho \alpha \sigma$  (sic)  $\epsilon \kappa \nu \epsilon \kappa \rho \omega \nu$  $\overline{\chi v}$   $\overline{iv}$  (C cum Steph.).—και. του ενοικουντοσ.  $\overline{\pi v \sigma}$ . 12. οφιλεται $\sqrt{.}$ 13. πραξισ√. 14. ΰιοι θυ εισιν. 15. δουλιασ√ (sic v. 21). αλλα. 16. συνμαρτυρει. 17. συνκληρονομοι. συνπασχομεν. 21. init. εφ. διοτι (pro οτι). 22. [συστ]. 23. εχοντεσ ημεισ και αυτοι. 24. και ϋπομενει (pro τι και ελπιζει: C habet τι και ελπιζι). 26. τη ασθενεια. [-ξωμεθα]. αλλα.—υπερ ημων (habet C). 27. εραυνων. οιδεν $\sqrt{.}$  εντυγχανι $\sqrt{.}$  28. αγαπωσιν $\sqrt{.}$  [-γει εισ]. 29. προωρισεν $\sqrt{.}$ συνμορφούσ. 30. προωρισεν  $\checkmark$ . εκαλέσεν  $\checkmark$  bis. εδικαιωσεν  $\checkmark$  bis. έδοξασεν $\checkmark$ . 32. εφισατο $\checkmark$ . αλλα. 34.  $+i\sigma$  (post  $\overline{\chi}\sigma$ .) μαλλον δε εγερθεισ εκ νεκρων οσ εστιν (— και prim. et secund.):  $\mathbf{C}$  — εκ νεκρ. et +και (post or prim.). 35.  $\overline{\theta v}$  (pro  $\overline{\chi v}$ ) solum in lined. Cod. B addit τησ εν χω iv: cf. vv. 1. 5. 36. ενεκεν. 38. πεπισμαιν. ουτε δυναμεισ ponit post μελλοντα. 39. [τω κω].

IX. 2.  $\epsilon \sigma \tau \iota \nu \checkmark$ . αδιαλιπτοσ $\checkmark$ . 3.  $\epsilon \iota \nu \alpha \iota$  αναθέμα αυτοσ  $\epsilon \gamma \omega$ . 4.  $\epsilon \sigma \nu$ . (sic  $\tau$ . 27 bis.  $\tau$ . 31). 7.  $\epsilon \iota \sigma \iota \nu \checkmark$ .  $\epsilon \sigma \kappa$  (C  $\epsilon \sigma \alpha \kappa$ , sic  $\tau$ . 10 p.m.). 8. (+ οτ  $\epsilon \sigma \kappa$  cores.). (πμων C). (πμω λεγιν. 26. ω (ου Α?) ερρεθη αυτοισ. 27. ϋπολιμμα (καταλιμμα Α). 23. — εν δικ. οτι λογον συντετμημενον (C εν δικ. οτι λογον συν.). 29. σαβαωθ' ενκατελιπεν. [ωμοι.]. 30. κατελαβενν. 31. — δικαισσυνησ secund. (addit C). εφθασενν. 32. — νομου (addit C). προσεκοψεν (-αν C). — γαρ (addit C). 33. — πασ. κατεσχυνθησεταιν.

Χ. 1. — η tertium (προσ τον  $\overline{\theta \nu}$  p.m. super ras.). αυτων (pro του  $\overline{\eta}\lambda$  εστιν: C habet αυτων εστιν). 3. [sic]. 5. μωυσησ. οτι transfert in locum post γραφει (at C cum Steph.).—του.—αυτα (habet C). fin. αυτη (C αυτοισ). 6. ουτωσν. [τη]. τουτεστινν (sic τν. 7. 8). 9. [κ̄ν  $\overline{\psi}$ ]. 11. κατεσχυνθησεταιν. 12. εστινν. 14. επικαλεσωνται. πιο τευσωσιν. ακουσονται (C ακουσωσιν). 15. κηρυξωσιν. αποσταλωσινν. ωρεοιν—των ευαγγ. ειρηνην (habet C των ευ.  $\overline{\iota}$ ρ.): [τα αγ., at  $-\tau$ α C]. 16.  $+\varepsilon$ ν απίε τω ευ. (... p.m.). επιστευσενν. 17.  $\overline{\chi}\overline{\nu}$  (pro  $\overline{\theta}\overline{\nu}$ :  $\Lambda$  et C  $\overline{\theta}\overline{\nu}$ ). 19.  $\overline{\imath}\eta\lambda$  ουκ εγνω. μωνσησ. (αυτουσ C bis in versu, pro υμασ). εθνι bisν. 20. [ευρεθην τοισ et εγενομην τοισ]. επερωτωσινν. 21.  $\lambda$ εγιν. απιθουνταν.

XI. 1. (C habet ον προεγνω ante μη γεν.). ϊσδραηλειτησ√ βενιαμειν $\sqrt{.}$  2.  $(-\lambda \epsilon \gamma \omega \nu C)$ . 3. απεκτιναν $\sqrt{.}$ -και prim. (habet C). υπελιφθην√. ζητουσιν√. 4. βααλ'√. 5. λιμμα√. 6. επι prim.√. γεινεται. - ει δε εξ εργ. ad fin. vers. (habet C: at εστιν bis). 7. τουτο. 8. καθαπερ (pro καθωσ). ο οθσ√. .10. συνκαμψον. 11. πεσωσιν $\sqrt{.}$  13. δε (pro γαρ). + ουν (post μεν). 15. προσλημψισ. 17. αγριελεοσ√. συνκοινωνοσ.—και secund. (habet C). ελεασ√. 18. αλλα. 19. ερισ $\sqrt{.}$  — οι. ενκεντρισθω. 20. πιστι $\sqrt{.}$  υψηλα φρονει. 21. ει γαρ in rasura p.m. εφισατον. - μηπωσ. φισεται. 22. αποτομια p.m. (pro -av secund.: C -av, v deleto). χρηστοτητοσ  $\overline{\theta v}$  εαν επιμενήσ. 23. κακείνοι. επιμενωσίν (επιμείνωσιν C). ενκεντρισθησονται (sic  $\nabla$ . 24). ενκεντρισαι. 25. θελω γαρ.  $[\pi\alpha\rho]$ . 26.  $\lceil ουτω \rceil$ .—και secund. ασεβιασ√. 28. πρασ (α supplet A?)√. 30. Deest vers. p.m. (supplet A, omisso kai, quod supplet C). 31. ουτωσ . ηπιθησαν . [υμετ.]. νυν (pro αντοι), at A αυτοι νυν. ελεηθωσιν $\sqrt{.}$  32. συνεκλισεν $\sqrt{.}$  απιθιαν $\sqrt{.}$  33. ανεξεραυνητα. 35. ανταποδοθησετεν.

ΧΙΙ. 1.  $\tau\omega$   $\theta\overline{\omega}$  ευαρεστου (C cum Steph.).  $\lambda$ ατριαν $\sqrt{\cdot}$  2. συνσχηματιζεσθε. μεταμορφουσθαι. [υμων]. 3. δοθισησ $\sqrt{\cdot}$  υπερφρονιν $\sqrt{\cdot}$  φρονιν $\sqrt{\cdot}$  έις. σωφρονιν $\sqrt{\cdot}$  εμερισεν $\sqrt{\cdot}$  4. πολλα μελη. 5. το (pro o). καθισ $\sqrt{\cdot}$  6. δοθισαν $\sqrt{\cdot}$  προφητιαν $\sqrt{\cdot}$  7. (C ειτ ο διακονων pro ειτε διακονιαν). 8. προιστανομενοσ $\cdot$  ελαιων $\sqrt{\cdot}$  11. κω (pro καιρω). 12. θλιψι $\sqrt{\cdot}$  υπομενοντεσ (sic p.m.) $\sqrt{\cdot}$  13. χριαισ. 14. [υμασ]. 15. - και. 16. ταπινοισ $\sqrt{\cdot}$  γινεσθαι. 17. [sic]. 19. εκδικησεισ $\sqrt{\cdot}$  20. αλλ εαν πινα (-ουν).

ΧΙΙΙ. 1.  $\ddot{v}\pi o$  (pro απο).—εξουσιαί.—του (habet C). 2. λημ-ψονταί. 3. εισιν $\checkmark$ . τω αγαθω εργω. τω κακω. φοβεισθε $\checkmark$ . εξισ $\checkmark$ . 4. εστιν $\checkmark$ . εισ οργην εκδικοσ (εκδ. εισ ορ. C). 5. συνιδησιν $\checkmark$ . 6. λιτουργοι $\checkmark$ . 7. —ουν [πασι] at C ουν πασιν habet. οφιλασ $\checkmark$ . 8. οφιλοντεσ (οφιλητε C). αλληλουσ αγαπαν. πεπληρωκεν $\checkmark$ . 9. μοιχευσισ $\checkmark$ . ψευδομαρτυρησισ. + εστιν (ante εντολη: non C). τω λογω τουτω. [εν τω] αγαπησισ $\checkmark$ . σεαυτον. 11. ηδη  $\ddot{v}$ μας (ημ. pro υμ. C). 12. — και (ante ενδυσ: C addit και). [οπλα]. 13. ασελγιαισ $\checkmark$ . [εοιδι]. 14. [αλλ]. ποιεισθαι.

ΧΙV. 1. πιστιν. 2. φαγινν. 3. εξουθενιτων. ο δε (pro και οτ C cum Steph.). 4. δυνατι γαρ ο κσ (pro δυν. γαρ. εστιν ο  $\overline{\theta}\sigma$ ). 5. + γαρ (post μεν: non C). νοειν. πληροφορισθων. 6. — και ο usque ad φρονει. + και (ante ο εσθιων). ευχαριστιν bis. 7. ουδισ bisν. αποθνησκιν. 8. αποθνησκωμεν ter in vers. 9. — και prim. (habet C). — και ανεστη (habet C). εξησεν. 10. εξουθενισν. fin.  $\overline{\theta}$ υ (χυ C cum Steph.). 11. [sic]. 12. [sic]. 14. πεπισμαιν. 15. γαρ (pro δε). απεθανενν. 16. βλασφημισθων. 18. τουτω (C cum Steph. τουτοισ). [τω χω]. [δοκιμοσ]. 19. διωκομεν. 20. απολινε (C καταλνε). (+ τοισ καθαροισ post καθαρα C). 21. fin. λυπειται (loco προσκ. ad fin. vers. p.m. A habet προσκ. pro λυπειται. C addit η σκαν. η ασθενι). 22. + ην (post πιστιν). σεαυτον.— ενωπιον του θυ (habet Λ). 23. — παν δε ο ουκ εκ πιστεωσ (addit Λ) οδ δηριοτελευτον.

XV. 1. οφιλομέν  $\sqrt{.}$  ημισ $\sqrt{.}$  αρέσκιν  $\sqrt{.}$  2.  $-\gamma$ αρ.  $-\epsilon$ ισ το αγαθον (habet A). 3. ονιδισμοιν. ονιδειζοντωνν. επεπεσαν. 4. εγραφη secund. ( $\pi po \in \gamma$ . C). +  $\delta \iota a$  (ante  $\tau \eta \sigma \pi a pa \kappa$ .). 5.  $\phi po \nu \iota \nu \sqrt{.} \ \overline{\iota \nu} \ \overline{\chi \nu}$ . 7. προσλαμβανεσθαι√. ϋμασ (pro ημασ). + του (ante  $\overline{\theta v}$ ). 8. γαρ  $(pro \delta \epsilon)$ .—iν. [γεγενησθαι]. αληθιασ√. 9. δια του προφητου p.m. (Λ δια τουτο 'φητου' uncinis incluso). εθνεσιν  $\sqrt{.-}$ κα: p.m. (habet C). 11. και παλιν αινειται παντα τα εθνη τον  $\overline{\kappa \nu}$ : επαινεσατωσαν. 12. λεγει ησαΐασ. ανιστανομενοσ. 13. δυναμι $\sqrt{}$ . 14.  $\pi \epsilon \pi \iota \sigma \mu \alpha \iota \sqrt{1 + \tau \eta \sigma}$  (ante  $\gamma \nu \omega \sigma \epsilon \omega \sigma$ ). 15.  $-\alpha \delta \epsilon \lambda \phi \circ \iota$  (habet C). δοθισαν $\sqrt{}$ . απο (pro υπο: C  $\ddot{v}$ πο). 16. λιτουργον  $\overline{\chi v}$   $\overline{v}$ . 17.  $+ \tau o \nu$  (ante  $\overline{\theta \nu}$ ). 18. ( $\tau o \lambda \mu \omega$  C).  $\tau \iota \lambda a \lambda \iota \nu$ . [ $\kappa a \tau \epsilon \iota \rho$ .]. 19. [ $\overline{\theta \nu}$ ].  $\overline{i\eta\lambda\mu}\sqrt{(sic \, \forall v. \, 25, \, 26)}$ . 20. ουτωσ $\sqrt{.}$  [-μενον]. 21. ανηγγελλη $\sqrt{.}$ ακηκοασιν συνησουσιν $\checkmark$ . 22. [τα πολλα].  $\epsilon \lambda \theta \overline{\iota} \checkmark$ . 23. [κλιμασι] $\checkmark$ . [του]  $\epsilon \lambda \theta \iota \nu$ . [πολλω]. 24.  $\alpha \nu$  (pro  $\epsilon \alpha \nu$ ).— $\epsilon \lambda \epsilon \upsilon \sigma \sigma \mu \alpha \iota \pi \rho \sigma \sigma \nu \mu \alpha \sigma$ (habet C). [υφ]. 25. διακονησων (C διακονων). 26, 27. ηϋδοκησαν. 26. μακαιδονιαν. 27. οφιλεταιν. εισιν αυτων. οφιλουσινν. λιτουργησαι $\checkmark$ . 28. σφραγισαμένοισ (ob αυτοισ seq.) $\checkmark$ .—την (habet C). 29. -του ευαγγελιου του (habet C). 30. [αδ.]. 31. απιθουντων√. — ινα secund. (habet C). [διακονία]. ισ ιερουσαλημ (plenè)√. τοισ αγιοις γενηται. 32. ελθω εν χαρα (C cum Steph.).  $\overline{v}$   $\overline{\chi v}$  et −και (pro  $\overline{\theta v}$  και: C cum Steph.). 33.  $\overline{v}$   $\overline{v}$ το χυ ει -και (ρτο σο και: C ταια Sιερια).

33. ερηθον. [αμηθ].

ΧΥΙ. 1. [ημων]. (+ και απίε διακονον C). κεχραιαισ. 2. fin. και αυτου και εμου [caelera cum Steph.]. 3. ασπασασθαιν (sic vv. 5. 7, 8. 12 bis). πρισκαν. 5. ασιασ (pro αχαϊασ). 6. [-αμ]. fin. υμασ. 7. συνεχμαλωτουσν.—οι (C οι addit). γεγοναν. 8. αμπλιατον. 9. [χω]. 11. πρωδιωνα. 12. τρυφενανν. [ασπ. περσ. κ.τ.λ. cum Steph.]. 14. ασυνκριτον. ερμην πατροβαν ερμαν. 15. [sic]. 16. +πασαι (post εκκλησιαι). 17. εκκλινετε (-ατε C). 18. -iv. [-τωσι]. 19. εφ υμιν ουν χαιρω (-το: C cum Steph.). [μεν]. ακαιρεουσν. 20. συντριψιν ταχιν.—χυ. [αμην deest]. 21. ασπαζεται. 23. ολησ τησ εκκλησιασ. ασπαζετε secund. 24. Deest versus. 25.  $\overline{κυ}$  (pro το κηρυγμα: A cum Steph.). 27 +των αιωνων (ante αμην).

Subser. προσ ρωμαιουσ.

προσ κορινθιουσ α.

Cap. I. 1. [sic:  $\overline{v}$  p.m. at av primd]. 2. —  $\tau \epsilon$  (habet C: caetera cum Steph., etiam  $\pi \alpha \sigma i$ ). 4. —  $\mu o v$  p.m. (habet A). δοθισην. 5.  $\epsilon v$   $\epsilon v$  (...p.m.) primumν. 7.  $\overline{v}$  στερισθαιν. 8. Bis scriptus hic tersus, ob  $\overline{v}$   $\overline{v}$   $\overline{v}$   $\overline{v}$  7: delet Aν. 11. εισινν. 13. [ $\overline{v}$   $\overline{v}$   $\overline{v}$  17. 4. —  $\tau \omega$   $\overline{\omega}$  (habet C).  $\pi \rho i \sigma \kappa o v$  (κρ. C). 15. εβαπτισθητε. 17. απεστιλενν. αλλα. εναγγελιζεσθεν. 18. εστιν bisν. σωμενοισν. 20. συνζητητησ. — τουτου (addit C). 21. επιδην (non  $\overline{v}$ . 22). 22. σημια αιτουσινν. 23. εθνεσιν (pro ελλησι). 24. ελλησινν. 25. εστιν prim.ν. fin. — εστι (at εστιν C). 26. βλεπεταιν. ευγενισν. 27. κατεσχυνη τουσ σφφουσ. κατεσχυνη secund. [caetera cum Steph.]. 28. ασθενη (pro αγενη:  $\Lambda$  cum Steph.).—και tert. (habet C). 29. [-σηται]. του  $\overline{\theta v}$  (pro αντου: at αν  $\overline{\theta v}$  C, αν cras.). 30. σφια ημιν.

ΙΙ. 1. μυστηριον (pro μαρτυριον: C cum Steph.). 2. — του, [ειδ. τι]. 3. καγω. ασθενιαν. 4. πιθοισν.—ανθρωπινησ (habet C). λογοσ (-οισ  $\Lambda$ ?? C)ν. 5. δυναμιν. 6. τελιοισν. 7.  $\overline{\theta}$ υ σοφιαν. 9. ειδενν. ηκουσενν. 10. [δε] απεκαλυψεν ο  $\overline{\theta}$ σ.—αυτου (habet C). εραυνα. 11. ουτωςν. εγνωκεν (pro οιδεν). 12. ημισν. 13. (λογοισ α rescript. p.m.).—αγιου. συνκρινοντεσ. 14. εστινν. 15. Deest versus οδ δμοιοτελ. (habet  $\Lambda$ , etiam μεν). 16. [συμβ. et  $\overline{\chi}$ υ].

ΙΙΙ. 1. καγω. σαρκινοισ. 2. — και. εδυνασθε. ουδε [ετι]. 3. [σαρ. εστε]. — και διχοστασιαι. 4. ουκ ανοι (pro ουχι σαρκικοι: C cum Steph.). 5. τι ουν εστιν απολλωσ' τι δε εστιν παυλοσ (τισ C bis). — αλλ η. 6. αλλα. 7. εστιν. ουδε (pro ουτε secund.: C cum Steph.). 8. λημψεται (sic v. 14). 10. δοθισαν. εθηκα (C τεθικα).

[Rom. ix. 25-1 Con. iii. 10.]

11.  $i\sigma \chi \sigma$  (-0). 12.  $-\tau$ ουτον (habet C). χρυσιον. αργυριον. 13.  $\epsilon \sigma \tau \iota \nu \vee$  (sic v. 19; caetera cum Steph.). 14.  $\epsilon \pi$ οικοδομησ $\epsilon \iota \nu \wedge$ . 15.  $\iota \nu \tau \omega \sigma \wedge$ . 17.  $[\tau \iota \nu \tau \nu]$ .  $\bar{\nu} \iota \iota \nu \wedge$ . 19.  $[\tau \omega]$ . 20.  $\gamma \iota \nu \omega \sigma \kappa \iota \wedge$ .  $\epsilon \iota \sigma \iota \nu \wedge$ . 21.  $\iota \iota \tau \wedge \sigma \wedge$ . 22.  $fin. -\epsilon \sigma \tau \iota \nu$ .

IV. 2. ωδε (pro ο δε). + τι (post λοιπον: non A?? C). ζητειτεν. 4. γαρ (pro δε: C cum Steph.). 5. κρινεταιν. 6. - δε (habet A). απολλων (ν delent A?? C). α (pro ο). γεγραπτεν. - φρονειν (φρονιν C). φυσιουσθαιν. 8. ημισν. συνβασιλευσωμεν. 9. - οτι (habet C). απεδιξενν. 11. πινωμενν. γυμνιτευομεν. 12. χερσινν. 13. δυσφημουμενοι (βλασφ. C). 14. νουθετω. 17. + αυτο (post τουτο: delet C). εστινν. μου τεκνον. +  $\overline{\iota}\overline{\nu}$  (post  $\overline{\chi}\omega$ ). 20. δυναμιν. 21. Γπραοτ.].

V. 1. ακουετε√. πορνια√ bis.—ονομαζεται (habet C). εχιν√. 2.  $\ddot{\nu}\mu$ ισ√. αρθη, πραξασ. 3. —ωσ prim. ουτωσ√. 4. —ημων prim.  $[\chi v]$  primo loco]. δυναμι√. [ημων secund.].— $\overline{\chi}v$  secund. 5. [v]. 7. —ουν (habet C).—υπερ ημων (habet C). [ετυθη]. 8. [-ζωμεν]. είλικρινιασ√. αληθιασ√. 10. init.—και (habet C). και (pro η secund.: C η). ωφιλετε√. εξελθυ√. 11. [νυν ι p.m., at νυν C].

12.  $-\kappa \alpha i$ .  $\kappa \rho i \nu \epsilon i \tau \epsilon$  (A  $\kappa \rho i \nu \epsilon \tau \epsilon$ ). 13.  $-\kappa \alpha i$ .  $\epsilon \xi \alpha \rho \alpha \tau \epsilon$ .

VI. 2. init.  $+\eta$ .  $\kappa \rho i \nu o v i \nu$ . 5.  $[\lambda \epsilon \gamma \omega]$ .  $\epsilon \nu i$  ( $p \tau o \epsilon \sigma \tau i \nu$ ).  $o \nu$ .  $\delta \epsilon i \sigma$  σοφοσ.  $\alpha \nu \alpha \kappa \rho i \nu \alpha$  (C  $\delta i \alpha \kappa \rho$ .). 7.  $-o v \nu$  ( $\hbar abet$  C).  $-\epsilon \nu$ .  $\kappa \rho i \mu \alpha$ . 8.  $\tau o v \tau o$ . 9.  $\overline{\theta v}$  βασιλείαν.  $\kappa \lambda \eta \rho \rho \nu o \mu \eta \sigma o v \sigma \nu$  (sic  $\tau$ . 10).  $\pi \lambda \alpha \nu \alpha \sigma \theta \alpha i$  10. o v  $\mu \epsilon \theta v \sigma o$  ( $p \tau o v \tau \epsilon$   $\mu$ .). -o v ult. 11.  $[\alpha \lambda \lambda \alpha]$ .  $\alpha \lambda \lambda \alpha$   $\epsilon \delta i \kappa$ .  $\overline{\kappa v}$   $\overline{vv}$   $\overline{\chi v}$ . 13.  $\pi o \rho \nu i \alpha \nu$ . 14.  $\eta \gamma \epsilon i \rho \epsilon \nu$ .  $[\eta \mu \alpha \sigma$   $\epsilon \xi \epsilon \gamma \epsilon \rho \epsilon i]$ .  $\delta v \mu \epsilon \omega \sigma \nu$  (\* in MS.). 15.  $\eta \mu \omega \nu$  (C  $v \mu \omega \nu$ ). 16.  $[\eta]$ . 17.  $\epsilon \sigma \tau i \nu \nu$  18.  $\pi o \rho \nu i \alpha \nu \nu$   $\alpha \mu \alpha \rho \tau \alpha \nu i \nu$  19.  $o i \delta \alpha \tau \alpha i$ . ( $+\tau o v$  [ante  $\overline{\theta v}]$  C). fin.  $\alpha v \tau \omega \nu$  ( $\epsilon \alpha v \tau \omega \nu$  C). 20.  $-\delta \eta$  ( $\hbar abet$   $\Lambda$ ).  $-\kappa \alpha i$   $\epsilon \nu$   $\tau \omega$   $\overline{\tau \nu i}$  ad fin,  $v \epsilon \tau s$ .

VII. 1.  $-\mu$ οι. 2. πορνιασ $\sqrt{.}$  3. οφιλην (pro οφ. ευνοιαν). [ $\delta\epsilon$ ]. 4. alla bis. 5. aposterite.  $\sigma$  colashte.— $\tau\eta$  unstein και (C τη νηστια και). ητε (pro συνερχησθε). πιρα $(η \checkmark . 6. [\gamma \gamma].$  δε (pro γαρ: C cum Steph.). [αλλ]. εχει χαρισμα. ο (pro οσ bis: C cum Steph.). 8.  $-\epsilon \sigma \tau i \nu$ .  $\mu i \nu \omega \sigma i \nu \sqrt{.}$  9.  $\kappa \rho i \tau \tau \sigma \nu$ .  $\epsilon \sigma \tau i \nu$ γαμιν (γαμησαι C) η πυρουσθε√. 10. γεγαμηκοσιν√. αλλα. [-ρισθηναι]. 12. λεγω εγω. [αυτη]. 13. ει τισ (pro ητισ). ουτοσ (pro αυτοσ). fin. αυτον ανδρα (.. p.m.? et C). 14. απι[στος Λ] secund. √. αδελφω (pro ανδρι: C cum Steph.). εστιν√ bis. 15. χωριζετε√.—η inter η et αδελ. (habet C). "υμασ" (C ημασ). 16. σωσισ prim.√. 17.  $μεμερικεν ο κσ (εμερισεν <math>C: deest \overline{θσ}). \overline{θσ}$  (pro κσ sequente). πασαισ ταισ εκκλησιαισ. 18. κεκληται τισ secund. 19. εστιν bis√. 22. -και. fin. χυ εστιν (C cum Steph.). 23. γεινεσθεν. 21. -τω. 27. δεδεσεν. ζητιν bis. 28. γαμησησ. [η]. ημαρτεν. φιδομαι. 29. συννεσταλμενος εστί τολοιπον. [οι  $\epsilon_{\chi}$ .].  $\omega \sigma_{i\nu} \sqrt{.}$  31.  $\tau \sigma_{\nu} \kappa_{0} \sigma_{\mu} \sigma_{\nu} (-\tau_{0} \tau_{0} \tau_{\omega})$ , at C cum Steph. 32. αρεση (sic vv. 33. 34). 34. init. και μεμερισται και + η αγαμοσ (post γυνη). και τω σωματι και τω πνι. 35. συμφορον (C cum Steph.). ευπαρεδρον. 36. ασχημονίν. οφιλει γινεσθεν. γαμι--ωσαν√. 37. εν τη καρδια αυτου εδραιοσ (C εδρ. εν τη καρ. αυτ.). ιδια καρδια τηριν (-αυτου του). fin. ποιησει. 38. γαμιζων την εαυτου παρθενον (pro εκγαμιζων). και ο (C et Steph. ο δε). γαμιζων secund. (C et Steph. εκγαμιζων). κρισσον ποιησει. 39. -- νομω (habet C). [deest και]. -- αυτησ. 40. ουτωσ μινη√.

VIII. 1. ϊδωλοθυτων (ποπ  $\mathbf{v}$ , 4). 2.  $-\delta \epsilon$ , εγνωκεναι ( $pro \epsilon \mathbf{i} - \delta \epsilon \mathbf{v} \mathbf{a}$ ), ουπω εγνω (-ουδεν). 3. -υπ αυτου (habet  $\mathbf{C}$ ). 4. ουδισν.  $-\epsilon \mathbf{v} \epsilon \mathbf{p} \mathbf{o}$  (habet  $\mathbf{C}$ ). 5. εισινν bis,  $-\tau \eta \sigma$ . 6.  $[a\lambda\lambda]$ ,  $-\theta \overline{\sigma}$  (habet  $\mathbf{A}$ ), ημισν bis. 7. συνηθια (pro συνειδησει: at  $\mathbf{C}$  συνϊδησει). εωσ αρτι του είδωλου, εστιν (pro εσθιουσιν quod legit  $\mathbf{A}$ ), συνιδησεισν (sic  $\mathbf{v}$ . 10). 8. υμασ ( $\eta \mu \alpha \sigma$   $\mathbf{C}$ ) ου παραστησει (πορϊστησιν  $\mathbf{C}$ ).  $-\gamma \alpha \rho$ ,  $[caetera\ cum\ Steph,] 9. <math>\alpha \sigma \theta \epsilon \nu \epsilon \sigma i \nu$ , 10.  $\gamma \nu \omega \sigma i \nu$   $\epsilon \chi \sigma \nu \tau \alpha$  ( $\epsilon \chi$ ,  $\gamma \nu$ ,  $\mathbf{C}$ ).  $i\delta \omega \lambda i \omega \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \tau \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \partial \upsilon \alpha \sqrt{}$ ,  $i\delta \omega \lambda \omega \Delta \omega \Delta \omega$

ΙΧ. 1. ουκ ειμι ελευθεροσ ουκ ειμι αποστολοσ.  $\overline{\chi}\nu$ . εορακα. 2. μου τησ αποστολησ. 3. εστιν αυτη. 4. πιν (C πιν). 6. -του. 7. τον καρπον (-εκ: C cum Steph.). [ $\eta$ ]. 8. και ο νομοσ ταυτα ου. 9. μωϋσεωσ. [-σεισ]. 10. οφιλει επ ελπιδι (C cum Steph.). επ ελπιδι του μετεχειν (-τησ ελπιδοσ αυτου: C cum Steph., praeter μετεχιν). 11. ημισ bis $\sqrt{}$ . εσπιραμεν $\sqrt{}$ . [-σομεν]. 12.  $\ddot{\nu}$ μων εξουσιασ. (ουχι pro ου C). ημισ $\sqrt{}$ . τινα εκκοπην. 13. +τα (ante εκ). παρεδρευοντεσ (προσεδ. C). [μμ]. 14. ουτωσ $\sqrt$  (sic τ. 15). διεταξεν $\sqrt$ . 15. ου κεχρημαι ουδενι (ουκ εχρησαμην ουδενι C). αποθανι $\sqrt$ . ουδισ κενωσει (—ινα τισ: C ινα τισ κενωσει). 16. χαρισ (ρτο καυχημα: A cum Steph.). γαρ (ρτο δε: C cum Steph.). [-ζωμαι]. 18. μου (ρτο μοι: C cum Steph.). ευαγ: rescript. $\sqrt$ . ε deest p.m.?—του  $\overline{\chi}v$ . + εν (ante τη εξουσια: .. p.m.?). 19. πλιονασ $\sqrt$ . 20. + μη ων αυτοσ ῦπο νομον (ante ινα secund.). 21.  $\overline{\theta}v$ .  $\overline{\chi}v$ . κερδανω τουσ (C κερδησω sine τουσ). 22. —ως (habet C). [πασι: πασιν C].—τα. 23. παντα (ρτο τουτο). [γκ]. 24. λαμβανι $\sqrt$ . βραβιον $\sqrt$ . ουτωσ $\sqrt$  (sic τ. 26 bis). 25. fin. αφθ (a minutum, at p.m.). 27. [υπωπια-].

X. 1. γαρ (pro δε: C cum Steph.). 2. [μωσην] εβαπτισθησαν. 3. —το αυτο prim. (habet C). πνικον βρωμα (C cum Steph.). πνικον επιον πομα. 4. πετρα δε. 5. [ευδ.]. 7. ωσπερ (pro ωσ). πιν. πεζιν√. 8. επεσαν.—εν (habet C). εικοσιτρισ√. 9. εκπιραζωμεν√.  $\overline{κν}$  (pro  $\overline{χν}$ ).—και prim.—αυτων (habet C). εξεπιρασαν. απωλλυντο (non v. 10). 10. γογγυζωμεν καθαπερ.--και prim. 11. παντα δε ταυτα. τυπικωσ συνεβαινεν. εισ (pro προσ: C cum Steph.). κατηντηκέν. 13. πιρασμοσ√. πιρασθηναί√. δυνασθαί√. πιρασμων.-υμασ tert. (habet C). 14. ϊδωλολατριασν. 15. υμασ (υμεισ A. Steph.). 16. κοινωνιασ prim. (-ια A). [του αι. του  $\overline{\chi v}$ ].  $\epsilon \sigma \tau \iota \nu \sqrt{.}$  [caetera cum Steph.]. 18.  $\epsilon v \chi$  (C cum Steph.). εισιν√. 19. τι ουν φημι οτι ειδωλοθυτον εστιν tantum. (Α ειδωλοθυτον τι εστιν η οτι ειδωλον τι εστιν). 20. α θυουσιν τα εθνη δαιμονιοισ και ου  $\overline{\theta\omega}$  θυουσιν.  $\gamma$ εινεσθαι $\checkmark$ . 21.  $\pi$ ινιν $\checkmark$ .  $\mu$ ετεχιν $\checkmark$ . 23. -μοι bis (habet C). 24. - εκαστοσ. 25. συνϊδησιν√ (sic νν. 27. 28. 29). 26. κυ γαρ. 27. -δε. θελεται πορευεσθε√. 28. ϊεροθυτον (pro ειδωλ.). εστιν√ (τιν μη rescripsit p.m. vel A).του γαρ κυ ad fin. vers.  $30. - \delta \epsilon$ . 32. και ϊουδαιοισ γεινεσθε (C γειν. και ϊου.). ελλησιν. 33. συμφορον (C cum Steph.). σωθωσιν.

XI. I. Jungit σωθωσιν cum μιμηται. γεινεσθαι $\sqrt{2}$ . 2. — αδελφοι. μεμνησθαι $\sqrt{.}$  παραδεδωκα. 3. εστιν $\sqrt{(sic vv. 5. 13. 14. 20). + του}$ (ante  $\overline{\chi v}$ ). 5. auths (pro eauths). 7. opikei (sic v. 10). (C habet η ante γυνη). 11. ουτε γυνη χωρισ ανδρος ουτε ανηρ χωρισ γυναικοτ. 12. ουτωσ $\checkmark$ . 14. init.—η. η φυσισ αυτη. + γαρ (post μεν) delet forsan p.m. 15. [sic]. 16. φιλονικοσ $\checkmark$ . συνηθιαν $\checkmark$ . 17.  $[-\lambda\lambda\omega\nu$  ουκ  $\epsilon\pi$ αινω]. κρισσον.  $\alpha\lambda\lambda^{\alpha}$  ( $\alpha$  minut. p.m.) $\checkmark$ . ησσον. 18. -τη. 19. αιρεσισ√. [ινα οι]. 20. διπνο√ (sic v. 21). φαγει (-ειν C alii?) √. 21. φαγιν√. πινα√. 22. πινιν√. καταφρονιτε√. κατεσχυνετεν. ειπω  $\ddot{v}$ μιν. [-νεσω]. 23. παρεδιδετο. 24. εκλασεν $\sqrt{.}$  ειπεν $\sqrt{.}$  —λαβετε φαγετε. εστιν $\sqrt{.}$  —κλωμενον (addit C). ποιειται. 25. διπνησαι. εαν (pro av), sic v. 26 prim. 26. -τουτον (habet C), at habet τουτο και το ποτηριον πινητε (C cum Steph.).  $\alpha \chi \rho i$ .— $\alpha \nu$  secund.  $(\alpha \chi \rho i \sigma \ o \nu \ a \nu \ C)$ . 27. — $\tau o \nu \tau o \nu$ .  $[\eta]$ . + του  $\overline{\kappa}$ υ (post του  $\overline{\kappa}$ υ αναξιωσ). εστεν. + του (ante αιματοσ). 28. [ανθ. εαν.].  $(+\pi ρωτον post εαυτον in C)$ . 29. - αναξιωσ(habet C). πινιν. - του κυ (habet C). 30. ασθενισ√. 31. δε (pro γαρ: C cum Steph.). 32. +του (ante κυ). 33. φαγιν√. 34. -δε (habet C). πινα√. [-ξομα.].

XII. 2. + οτε (ante εθνη). ιδωλαν. 3. ουδισν bis. ισ prim. κσ ισ. 4, 5. εισινν. 6. διερεσεισν hic tantum. [ο δε]. -εστι (habet εστιν C). 9. -δε prim. (habet C). [αυτω secund.]. 10. [δε secund. et tert.]. προφητιαν. διακρισισν. -δε quart. (habet C). ερμηνιαν. 11. ενεργιν. 12. εστιν bisν. πολλα εχει. μεληλη secund.ν. -του ενοσ (habet C). ουτωσν. 13. -εισ secund. 15. εστιν (ν p.m., στ rescript: forsan ab Λ: primd ειμι)ν. 18. [νυνί δε] p.m.? νεί νυν ιδε. 19. [τα]. 20. [μεν]. 21. + ο (post δε). ειπινν. χριαν bisν (sic ν. 24). -το (habet C). υστερουμενω (C cum Steph.). 23. σχισματα. [μεριμνωσι]. 26. [είτε bis]. συνπασχει. -εν secund. (habet C). [συγχ.]. 28. δυναμισν (sic ν. 29). επείτα (pro είτα). αντιλημψείσ. κυβερνησίσν. -γενη (habet Λ). 30. λαλουσινν. διερμηνευουσινν. 31. μίζονα (pro κρείττονα). δικνυμίν.

XIII. 1, 2. δμοιοτέλ.— γεγονα usque ad μη έχω ν. 2 (supplet A: legens προφητιαν. μεθισταναι, at αλαλαζον και έαν). 2. [ουθέν]. 3. [και έαν bis]. καυχησωμαι (pro καυθ.). ουθέν (pro ουδέν). 4. [sic]. 5. ζητιν. 6. συγχαιριν. αληθιαν. 8. πιπτει (C cum Steph.). προφητιαιν. [γνωσισ]. καταργηθησονται. 9. [γαρ]. 10. τέλιονν.— τοτέ. 11. έλαλουν ωσ νηπιοσ· εφρονουν

[1 Cor. iii. 10-xiii. 11.]

ωσ νηπιοσ' ελογιζομην ωσ νηπιοσ.—δε (habet C). 12. το<sup>τe</sup> δε (τε A: το δε p.m.). 13.  $\mu$ ιζων $\sqrt{.}$  (Jungit διωκετε την αγαπην XIV. 1, cum cap. XIII.)

XIV. 2. ουχ .- τω (habet C). ουθισ (pro ουδεισ). 5. λαλιν. δε (pro γap: C cum Steph.). 6. νυν. - η prim. προφητιαν (sic v. 22).-εν ult. (habet C.). 7. [sic]. 8. σαλπιγξ φωνην. 9. ουτωσ√ (sic v. 12). υμισ√. 10. εισιν.—αυτων (habet C). 12. επι√. ζητιτε√. 13. διο (διοπερ C). 14. [γαρ]. 14, 15. εστιν√. 15. προσευξωμαι prim. [-ομαι secund.]. [ψαλω δε και τω]. 16. ευλογησ (+ εν C).—τω. οιδεν $\sqrt{}$ . 17. ευχαριστισ $\sqrt{}$ . 18. — μου. γλωσση λαλω. 19. -αλλ [habent A? C]. τω νοῖ (-δια). 20. γεινεσθεν. φρεσιν bis/. 21. + τι (ante γεγραπται: improbat C). ετερων. 22. σημιον $\sqrt{.}$  23. [συνελθη]. π. λαλωσιν γλωσσαισ. εισελθωσιν $\sqrt{.}$ 25. - και ουτω. γεινεται. ουτωσ secund. οντωσ  $\overline{\theta}\sigma$  (-0: habet C). εστιν. 26. -υμων (habet C). αποκαλυψιν εχει γλωσσαν εχει. ερμηνιαν $\sqrt{}$ . γινεσθω. 27. λαλι $\sqrt{}$ . πλιστον τρισ $\sqrt{}$ . 28. [διερμ.]. 29. τρισ. 30. οπαθημενω (p.m. omnia). 31. μαν. θανωσινν. 33. αλλα. 34. -υμων. επιτρεπεται. αλλα ϋποτασσεσθωσαν. 35. μανθανειν (μανθειν C). εστι γυναικι (εστιν γυναιξι C) λαλειν εν εκκλησια. 37. -του. εντολη εστιν (εστιν εν. C). 38. αγνοειται (-τω C). 39. +μου (post αδελφοι). μη κωλυετε γλωσσαισ. 40. + δε (post παντα).

XV. 1. γνωριζω α (α p.m.)  $\checkmark$ . 4. τη ημέρα τη τριτη. 5. επειτα (pro ειτα). ιβ. 6. πλιονέσ.—και (habet C). 7. επειτα (pro ειτα: C cum Steph.). 9. ιμι secund.√. 10. απαντων (α eras.). αλλα secund. -η ult. (habet C). 11. ουτωσ bis/. πιστευσατε (επισ. C). 12. κηρυσσετεν. [ οτι εκ ν.]. λεγουσιν εν υμιν τινεσ. 13. - ει δε usque ad εστιν (δμοιοτ. supplet A). 14. + και (pro apa: improbat C). καινη. -δε secund. 15. ηγειρεν√ bis. + αυτου (post χν: improbat C). εγιρονται hic√.
 υμω και ετι (και improbat C).
 εν χω ηλπικότε $\sigma$  εσμέν. 20.  $-\epsilon$ γένετο. 21. επιδη $\sqrt{.-}$ ο. 22. υσιν p.m. in rasura.-addito ad explendum spatium. Tisch. ν. ουτωσ ν. 23.  $\frac{\partial e}{\partial t}$  supra, p.m. + του (ante  $\overline{\chi v}$ ). 24. παραδίδω. βασιλιανν. του

 $\overline{\theta v}$  ( $\tau \omega \ \overline{\theta \omega} \ C$ ). 25. axpl (axple C).—av (habet C). [-pour  $\overline{v}\pi o$ ]. 27. -παντα γαρ usque ad ποδασ αυτου (habet C: in A transfertur in locum ante v. 26). ειπ. οτι τα παντα. 28. - οταν δε υπ. αυτ. τα παν. (δμοιοτ.: habet A). [τοτε και]. [τα π. tert.]. 29. εγιρονται√. αυτων (pro των ν. secund.). 30. ημισ√. 31. υμετεραν. + αδελφοι (ante ην). 33. πλανασθαιν. χρηστα. 34. εχουσινν. λαλω (pro λεγω). 35. [αλλ]. ερι $\sqrt{.36}$ . αφρων. σπιρεισ $\sqrt{.+ειστην}$ (ante εav: ... p.m.) √. 37. σπιρεισ prim. √. — σπειρεισ secund. (habet A). 38. διδωσιν αυτω, ηθελησενν.—το (habet C). 39. -σαρξ tert. αλλη δε σαρξ πτηνων αλλη δε ϊχθυων. 40. [αλλ]. 42. ουτωσ√ (sic v. 45). σπιρεται et εγιρεται (non v. 43)√. 43. ασθενιαν. δυναμιν. 44. ε' εστιν prim. (ε' p.m.? instauravit C). fin. εστιν και πνικον (-σωμα quart.). 45. [ανθρωποσ]. 47. -οκσ (habet C). 42. φορεσωμεν. 50. δυναται. [-νομει]. 51. παντεσ. μεν κοιμηθησομεθα ου π. δε. 52. [ριπη]. [εγερ.]. 54. -το φθαρτον usque ad αφαρσιαι και (habet C: at και το, superante το). + την (ante αθανασιαν). 55. κεντρον et νικοσ transferuntur: θανατε (pro αδη). (C improbat που σου θ. το νικ.: at post κεντρον addit που σου αδη το νικοσ, prorsus cum Steph.) 57. νεικοσ√. 58.  $\gamma \epsilon i \nu \epsilon \sigma \theta \epsilon \sqrt{.}$   $\epsilon \sigma \tau i \nu \sqrt{.}$

ΧΥΙ. 1. γαλατειασ√. ουτωσ√. υμισ√. 2. σαββατω (ου Α, ων C). (ευοδοθη C). 3. [εαν]. δοκιμασηται $\sqrt{ }$ . απενεγκιν $\sqrt{ }$ . ισ ιηλμ.ν. 4. (αξιον η C). 5. μακαιδονιαν bis.ν. 7. ειδιν.ν. γαρ (pro δε), επιτρεψη. 9, ανεωγεν $\sqrt{}$ , αντικιμενοι $\sqrt{}$ , 10,  $βλεπεται<math>\sqrt{}$ , καγω. 11.  $-\delta \epsilon$  (habet C).  $\iota \rho \eta \nu \eta \sqrt{.} \quad [\mu \epsilon].$  12.  $-\alpha \pi \delta \lambda \omega$  (habet A). + δηλω υμιν οτι (ante πολλα: improbat C). ευκερηση√. 13. πιστιν. - (εσθε κρατεουσθαιν. 15. — δε (habet C). (+και φορτουνατου post στεφανα C). 17. φορτουνατου (ρ instaurat C).  $[\ddot{v}\mu\omega\nu]$ . [ουτοι]. 18. επιγινωσκεται $\sqrt{.}$  19. ασπα $\sqrt{(c)}$ εται (pro ασπα-(ovtal secund.).  $\pi \rho l \sigma \kappa \alpha$ . 22.  $-i \nu \chi \nu$  (habet C). 23.  $-\chi \nu$ (habet C). [aunv].

Subscr. προσ κορινθιουσ a

προσ κορινθιουσ β.

CAP. I. 1.  $\overline{\chi v}$  iv.  $\pi \alpha \sigma i \nu \sqrt{}$ . 5.  $o v \tau \omega \sigma \sqrt{}$  (sic v. 7).  $+ \tau o v$  (post  $\delta i a$ ). 5. ειτε παρακαλουμεθα usque ad παρακλησεωσ transfert in locum ante τησ ενεργουμενησ κ.τ.λ. -- και σωτηριασ secund. ημισ. [ fin. και η ελπισ κ.τ.λ.]. 7. ωσ (pro ωσπερ). 8. περι (pro υπερ). ημιν (habet C). υπερ δυναμιν εβαρηθημεν. 9. αλλ. εγιροντιν. 10. [ρρ]. ρυσεται (pro ρυεται). [οτι και ετι]. 11. υμων (η etiam p.m., pro ημων prim.). fin. [ημων]. 12. εστιν√. ημων secund. p.m. at υ primò. αγιοτητι (pro απλοτητι: C cum Steph.). ειλικρινιαν. +του (ante  $\overline{\theta v}$  prim. · · eras.). 13. [αλλ]. αναγεινωσκεται√. [επιγινωσκετε]. - και secund. 14.  $\overline{v}$ μισ√. + ημων (ante  $\overline{v}$ ). fin. (+χυ C, at eras.). 15. (+προτερον A, post εβουλομην).  $[\pi \rho. \ νμ. \ ελθ.].$   $-\pi ροτ ερον. (χαραν <math>ν ro \ χαριν \ C). \ σχητ ε. 16.$ διελθιν. μακαιδονιαν. μακαιδονιασ. 17. βουλομενοσ. 18. εστιν (pro eyeveto: C cum Steph.). 19. του  $\overline{\theta \nu}$  γαρ.  $\overline{\chi \sigma}$   $\overline{\iota \sigma}$  (C  $\overline{\iota \sigma}$   $\overline{\chi \sigma}$ ). 20. διο και δι αυτου (pro και εν αυτω).-το secund. (habet C). 21.  $\chi \rho \epsilon i \sigma a \sigma \sqrt{.}$  22. -o (habet C).  $\alpha \rho \alpha \beta \omega \nu \alpha$ .  $\kappa \alpha \rho \delta i \epsilon \sigma$  (- $\alpha i \sigma$  C) $\sqrt{.}$ 24. πιστιν.

II. 1. εν λυπη προσ  $\ddot{v}$ μασ ελθειν. 2.  $\dot{v}$  γαρ εγω ο ( $\dot{v}$  et  $\dot{v}$   $\dot{v}$   $\dot{v}$ ).  $-\epsilon \sigma \tau \iota \nu$  (habet C). 3.  $-\nu \mu \iota \nu$  (habet C).  $\sigma \chi \omega$  ( $\epsilon \chi \omega$  C). 5. αλλα. 10. καγω ( $C^a$  και εγω), ο κεχαρισμαι ει τι κεχαρισμαι. 13. του μη ευριν (at τω C). μακαιδονιαν $\sqrt{14. \tau \eta^{\sigma}}$  ( $\sigma$  p.m.? vel  $\Lambda$ ). 16.  $+ \epsilon \kappa$  (ante θανατου).  $\epsilon \kappa$  ζωην  $\epsilon \iota \sigma$  ( $\sigma$  p.m.). 17.  $\lceil \pi ο λλοι \rceil$ .  $\iota λι$ .

Ψρινιασ√. κατεναντι  $\overline{θυ}$  (C ενωπιον του  $\overline{θυ}$ ).

111. 1. συνιστανιν $\checkmark$ . η (pro ει). [ωσ τινεσ].—συστατικων secund. 2. ενγεγ. καρδιεσ  $\ddot{v}$ μων γινωσ. 3. διακονηθισα $\checkmark$ . ενγεγ. πλαξιν√ bis. [αλλ]. καρδιαισ. 5. αφ εαυτων ϊκανοι εσμεν λ. τι. [  $\epsilon a \upsilon \tau \omega \upsilon$ ]. G.  $a \pi o \kappa \tau \epsilon \nu \upsilon \iota$ . 7.  $\tau o \upsilon \theta \upsilon p.m$ . ( $\tau o \upsilon \theta \upsilon \alpha \tau o \upsilon \Lambda$ ). [γραμμασιν] .- ev secund. (habet C). δυνασθεν. τηλ ν. μωϋσεωσ. αυτου προσωπου αυτου ( $^-p.m.$ )√. 8. ουδι (χ p.m. vel Λ). εστε√. 9. τη διακονια prim. δικεοσυνησ. δοξα (pro εν δοξη: C cum Steph.). 10. ου (pro ουδε). εινεκεν. 13. μωϋσησ. [εαυτου]. 14. + ημερασ (post σημερον). επει√. 15. αν αναγεινωσκηται μωύσησ. 16. δε εαν (C δ' αν). 17. — εκει (εκι C). 18. μεταφορμορφουμεθα  $(\ldots p.m.).$

IV. 1. εγκακουμεν. 2. αλλα. αληθιασ $\sqrt{}$ . συνισταντέσ. συνιδησιν√. 3. εστιν√ bis. 4. ετνφλωσεν√. [αυγασαι].—αντοισ. fin. (+του αορατου C). 5.  $\overline{\iota\nu} \overline{\chi\nu}$ . ημων (pro υμων).  $fin. \overline{\iota\nu} (\Lambda \overline{\chi\nu})$ . ο ειπων ο (· p.m.)√. λαμψει (-αι C). [του θυ]. [ιν]. 10. -κν. τοισ σωμασιν (pro τω σωματι secund.). 12. ωστ $e^{\circ}$  (o p.m.?)μεν. 13. + και (post διο prim.). ημισν. 14. συν (pro δια: C cum Steph.). ὶ τυ√. 16. εγκακουμεν. διαφθιρεται√. εσω ημων (pro εσωθεν). 17. -εισ υπερβολην (habet A: δμοιοτ.).

V. 1. επιγιοσ  $\sqrt{ }$ . αχιροποιητον  $\sqrt{ }$ . 3. [ειγε]. [ενδυσ.]. 4. σκηνι√. εφ ω (pro επειδη). αλλα. 5. ο θσ ο δουσ (- και: θσ ο και δ. C). αραβωνα. 8. θαρρουντέσ (pro θαρρουμέν).  $-\epsilon \kappa$  ( $\epsilon \kappa$  C). 10. εκομισηται (· p.m.)√. [δια]. φαυλον (pro κακον). 11. συνιδησεσιν√. 12. -γαρ.  $\ddot{υ}μων$  (pro ημων). μη εν (pro oυ secund.). 15. -ει (habet C). απεθανεν (pro -νον: C cum Steph.)√. 16. ημισ√.—δε (habet C). 17. γεγονεν√.—τα παντα. 18. -iv. 19. καταλασσων√. 21. — γαρ (habet C). ημισ√. γενωμεθα.

VI. 1. καινον $\checkmark$ . fin. ημασ ( $\ddot{\upsilon}$ μασ A C). 2.  $\delta \epsilon [κτω]$  (κτω Λ) $\checkmark$ . 4. συνισταντέσ (συνϊστωντέσ C). 5. νηστιαισ $\sqrt{}$ . 6. γνωσι $\sqrt{}$ . 7. αληθιασ. δυναμι. 11. ανεωγεν. υμων (pro ημων secund.). 12. στενοχωρισθαι secund. √. 13. τμισ√. 14. η τισ (pro τισ δε). 15. [συμφ]. χυ. [βελιαρ]. 16. συγκαταθεσεισ. ημεισ γαρ ναοι  $\overline{\theta}v$  εσμέν (υμεισ γαρ ναοσ έστε  $\overline{\theta}v$  C). [έμπ]. μου (pro μοι). 17. εξελθαταιν.

VII. 2. εφθιραμεν. 3. προσ κατακρισιν ου. + εστε (post οτι: ..., p.m.).  $\ddot{v}_{\mu\omega\nu}$  (ημων C). συναποθανιν $\sqrt{}$ . συνζην. 4. παρακλησι $\sqrt{}$ .

[1 Con. xni. 11-2 Con. vii. 4.]

(non vv. 7. 13). 5. μακαιδονιαν  $\sqrt{}$ . [ $\epsilon \sigma \chi$ . ανεσ.]. 6. ταπινουσ  $\sqrt{}$ . 7.  $\ddot{\upsilon}$ μιν (pro ημιν: C cum Steph.). 8. [ $\gamma \alpha \rho$ ]. εκινη  $\sqrt{}$ . 9.  $-\alpha \lambda \lambda$  στι ελυπηθητε (habet A obliq.: όμοιστελ.). 10. εργαζεται (κατεργ. C) prim. 11. -υμασ (habet C). [κατειρ]. (+εν απε  $\ddot{\upsilon}$ μιν C). ανακτησιν (C αγανακτησιν). επιποθιαν (C επιποθησιν). αλλα εκδικησιν. -εν ult. 12. ουκ. ενεκεν ter. ( $+\alpha \lambda \lambda$ ) post αδικησαντοσ C).  $\ddot{\upsilon}$ μων την  $\ddot{\upsilon}$ περ υμων. 13. +δε (post επι).  $\ddot{\upsilon}$ μων (pro  $\upsilon$ μων). -δε (ante μαλλον). 14. αυτώ (pro -τω). [ $\pi$ . εν αλ. ελ.] $-\ddot{\upsilon}$ μιν ( $\Lambda$  obliq. habet). ουτωσ $\sqrt{}$ . ημων επι ( $-\eta$ : habet C). 15.  $-\pi$ αντων (habet C). εδεξασθαι $\sqrt{}$ . 16. [deest ouv].

VIII. 1. μακαιδονιασ√. 2. το πλουτοσ (C cum Steph.). 3. παρα (prο υπερ). αυθερετοι√. 4. - δεξασθαι ημασ. 5. [αλλ]. 6. ουτωσ√ (sic v. 11). 7. εν πιστι (improbat εν C). 8. [υμετερασ]. 9. επτωχευσεν√. πτωχια√. 11. επιτελεσαται√. επιτελεσε√. εχιν√. 12. αν (pro εαν'). - τισ. 13. - δε (habet C). 14. το εκεινων ( $\tau$  p.m.)√. επλεονασεν√. ηλαττονησεν√. 16. (C habet δοντι). 17. εξηλθεν√. 18. τον αδελφον μετ αυτου (C cum Steph.). 19. [συν]. [αυτου]. fin. ημων. 21. init. προνοουμεν γαρ. - ενωπιον secund. (habet C). 24. την ουν ενδιξιν ( $^{\nu}$  p.m. vel A). ενδιξασθαι√. - και secund.

ΙΧ. 1. εστινν. 2. παραεσκευασται (\* p.m.)ν. το υμων ζηλοσ ( $-\epsilon \xi$ ). [ηρεθισε]. 3. μεριν. ελεγον p.m. ( $-\epsilon \nu$  primò)ν. 4. ελθωσινν. μακαιδονεσν. $-\tau$ ησ καυχησεωσ (habet C). 5. [εισ et  $-\sigma$ ωσι]. προεπηγγελμενην.-και secund. (habet C). ωσ (pro ωσπερ). 6. σπιρων bisν. φιδομενωσ secund. tantum. 7. προηρηται. 8. δυνατει. 9. εδωκενν. 10. [σπερμα]. χορηγησει ( $-\alpha$ ι C). πληθυνει ( $-\alpha$ ι C). αυξησει ( $-\alpha$ ι C). γενηματα. 11. [τω  $\theta$ ω]. 12. λιτουργιασν, εστινν. 14. υπερ ημων ( $\nu$  p.m.). (C habet ιδιν additum ante δια). 15.  $-\delta \epsilon$  (habet C).

Χ. 1. πραϋτητοσ (C cum Steph.). επιεικιασν. ταπινοσν. 4. στρατιασν. καθερεσινν. 7. εφ (pro αφ). ουτωσν. ημισν. fin.  $-\overline{\chi}\nu$ . 8. -και prim. (habet C). καυχησομαι. -ημιν (habet C). 9. εκφοβινν. 10. επιστολαι μεν (C cum Steph.). φησινν. [-ουθεν-]. 12. [εγ- et συγ- bis]. τισινν. -εαυτουσ tert. (habet A obliq.). fin. συνισασιν (A et C συνιασιν). 13. ουκ (pro ουχι). 14. [ου γαρ ωσ].  $\ddot{v}$ περεκτινομενν. -γαρ secund. (habet A). 15.

υμων  $(pro \ \eta \mu \omega \nu)$ . περισσιαν $\sqrt{18}$ . 18. 0 γαρ εαυτον συνιστανων  $(v \ o \ p.m.)$ . δοκιμοσ εστιν  $(εστ. \ δοκ. \ C)$ . [αλλ].

XI. 1. [aνειχεσθε]. +τι (post μικρον).—τη. αφροσυνησ. aνασχεσθε (pro ανεχ.). 3. εξηπατησεν  $\ddot{v}μιν$  (ευαν p.m.? evidentius C).—ουτω. + και τησ αγνοτητοσ (post απλοτητοσ): uncis in-clusit C.—τον. 4. ετερον 'ετερον' ('' p.m. vel A)  $\checkmark$ . fin. ανεινχεσθε. 5. [γαρ]. 6. φανερωσαντεσ (C cum Steph.). 7. τανπινων 8. εκλησιασν. ουθενοσ. 9. μακαιδονιασν. εμαυτον υμιν (C cum Steph.). 10. φραγησεται. [κλιμασι]. 12. ευρεθωσινν. ημισν. 13. αποστ.  $\overline{\chi}$ υ p.m., at rescript.  $\checkmark$ . 14. θαυμα. 16. καγω μικρον τι. 17. κατα  $\overline{\kappa}$ ν λαλω. 18. — την (habet C). 20. εισ προσωπον υμασ δερι. 21. ημισ ησθενηκαμεν.—λεγω secund. (habet A obliq.). 22. εβρεοιν. εισινν ter.  $\overline{\iota}$ σδραηλιται. 23. εισινν. εν πληγ. περισσστερωσ εν φυλ. υπερβαλλοντωσ (C cum Steph.). 24. τεσσερακοντα. 25. τρεισ bisν. εραβδισθην. 27. init.—εν (habet C, forsan A). λειμων. νηστιαισν. ψυχιν. 28. επιστασισ. μοι (C μου). 29. ασθενιν. σκανδαλειζεταιν. 31. — ημων.— $\overline{\chi}$ ν. 32. εφρουριν. πολιν δαμασκηνων. [θελων]. 33. τιχουσν. χιρασν.

XII. 1. (init. + ει C). καυχασθαι δε ου συμφερον μεν ελευσομαι δε ( $-\gamma$ αρ). 2. [του]. τρυτου (p.m., at primò του pτο τρυ) $\checkmark$ . 3. [cum Steph.]. 4. παραδισον $\checkmark$ . 5. εμαυτου καυχησομαι (ου p.m.?). ασθενιαισ μου. 6.  $-\tau$ ι (habet C). 7.  $-\psi$ εων $\cdot$ . + διο (ante  $\tilde{\imath}$ να). σατανα (C cum Steph.). $-\tilde{\imath}$ να μη υπεραιρωμαι (habet C). 9. ειρηκεν $\checkmark$ .  $-\mu$ ου secund. (habet C). ασθενια $\checkmark$ . τελειται (C τελειονο ται). ασθενιαισν (sic v. 10). 10. και εναγκαισ (α p.m.?: C habet εν pro και). και στενοχ. (εν pro και C). 11. — καυχωμενοσ. 12. [κατειρ.] — εν tert. (τε pro εν C). σημιοισν. +τε (post σημιοισ: punctis notavit A). [τερασι]. δυναμεσινν. 13. ησσωθητε (ηττηθητε C). 14. + τουτο (post τριτον). —υμων prim. αλλα prim. οφιλειν. [γονευσι]. αλλα οι γονισ. 15. — και secund. (habet C). αγαπω ησσον αγαπ. (C cum Steph.). 16. κατεναρκησα  $\overline{\nu}$ μων αλλα (pro κατε $\overline{\mu}$ . υμασ αλλ). 18. συναπεστιλαν.  $\overline{\nu}$ χνεσινν. 19. παλαι (παλιν C). κατεναντι. —του (habet C). 20. ερισ. [ζηλοι]. εριθιαιν. 21. ελθοντοσ μου (C cum Steph.). ταπινωσην. + με (post ταπ.). πορνιαν.

XIII. 1. (init. + ιδου C). + ϊνα (ante  $\epsilon \pi \iota$ ): delet C.  $\eta$  (pro και). 2.  $-\gamma \rho \alpha \phi \omega$ . προημαρτηκοσιν., φισομαίν. 4.  $-\epsilon \iota$  (habet C). [ $-\epsilon \iota \alpha \sigma$ ]. [και  $\gamma \alpha \rho$   $\eta \mu$ .]. συν (pro  $\epsilon \nu$ ). [ $\gamma \sigma \sigma \iota \omega \nu$ . 5. πιραζετεν. πιστιν.  $-\eta$  (habet C).  $\overline{\chi \sigma}$   $\overline{\iota \sigma}$ . [ $\epsilon \sigma \tau \iota \nu$ ]. 6.  $\eta \mu \iota \sigma$   $\epsilon$  ουκ ( $^{\iota} p$ .m.). 7.  $\epsilon \nu \chi o \mu \epsilon \theta \alpha$ .  $\eta \mu \epsilon \iota \sigma$  (pro  $\nu \mu \epsilon \iota \sigma$ : emendant  $\Lambda$ ? C).  $\overline{\iota}$ . ποιειτεν. 8. αληθιασ bisν. αλλα. 9.  $-\delta \epsilon$  (habet C). 10.  $\sigma$   $\overline{\iota \sigma}$   $\epsilon \delta \omega \kappa \epsilon \nu$   $\mu \iota \iota$ . 11. καταρτιζεσθαιν.  $\overline{\iota}$   $\rho \eta \nu \epsilon \nu \epsilon \tau \epsilon \sqrt{\epsilon}$ .  $\overline{\iota}$   $\overline{\iota}$

Subscr.  $\pi \rho o \sigma \kappa o \rho \iota \nu \theta \iota o \upsilon \sigma \beta$ .  $\sigma \tau \iota \chi \omega \nu \overline{\chi \iota \beta} s.m$ .

προσ γαλατασ.

Cap. I. 1. εγιραντοσ αυτων (ο A vel p.m.). 3. Transfert ημων in locum post πατροσ plenè scriptum. 4. περι (pro υπερ: C cum Steph.). του αιωνοσ του ενεστωτος (C cum Steph.).—το (habet C). 6. ουτωσν. μετατιθεσθαιν. 7. — και θελοντεσ (habet A obliq.). 8. ευαγγελισηται.—υμιν prim. (habet C). 9. προειρηκα (C cum Steph.). 10. πιθων. αρεσκινν.—γαρ secund. 11. (γαρ A, δε p.m., C, Steph.). εστινν. 12. ουδε (pro ουτε). 14. γενιν. 15. [ο  $\overline{\theta\sigma}$ ]. 17. [ανηλθον]. αλλα. 18. τρια ετη. κηφαν (pro πετρον: C cum Steph.). 19. ιδονν. 21. — τησ secund. (habet A obliq.).

C cum Steph.). 19. 100νν. 21. - τησ secural. (habet A obliq.). II. 1. συνπαραλαβων. 2.  $\epsilon$ θνεσινν. δοκουσινν. 4. παρισακτουσν. καταδουλωσουσιν. 5. αληθιαν. [διαμεινη]. 6. ποτ (ποτε C). διαφεριν. + ο (ante  $\overline{\theta}\sigma$ ). 7.  $\epsilon$ ιδοντεσν. 8. - ο γαρ  $\epsilon$ ν. usque ad περιτομησ (όμοιστ.: supplet  $A^a$ ).  $\epsilon$ νηργησενν. [και  $\epsilon$ μοι]. 9. [νν]. (A obliq. +  $\mu$ εν post  $\eta$ μεισ). 11.  $\eta$ λθεν κηφασ (-πετροσ). αντιοχιανν. 12.  $\epsilon$ λθινν.  $\eta$ λθεν.  $\ddot{\upsilon}$ πεστελλενν. 13. + παντεσ (ante ωστε: improbat C). (συνυπ. C partim scriptum pro συναπ.).  $\ddot{\upsilon}$ ποκρισιν. 14. [-δουσι]. κηφα (pro  $\pi$ ετρω].  $\epsilon$ θνικωσ και  $\sigma$ υχιονδικωσ ( $\sigma$ σο (συχει C).  $\sigma$ σωσ (pro τι). 15.  $\sigma$ συδεοιν. 16. +δε (post  $\sigma$ είδοτεσ). [ $\sigma$ νν].  $\sigma$ μισν. [ $\sigma$ νν  $\sigma$ ν) οτι  $\sigma$ ε  $\sigma$ εργων νομου ου δικαιωθησεται. 18. συνιστανω. 20. νυν  $\sigma$ ςω ( $\sigma$ ν), πιστιν. [ $\sigma$ υν  $\sigma$ υν του θεου του αγ.].

ΙΙΙ. 1. εβασκανεν.—τη αληθεια μη πειθεσθαι,—εν υμιν. 3. επιτελεισθαιν. 5. δυναμισν. 6. επιστευσενν. 7. ΰιοι εισιν (C cum Steph.). 8. τα εθνη δικαιοι. -ααμ². [ενευλογ.]. 10. εισινν bis. +στι (ante επικατ.).—εν prim. (habet C). πασινν. 12. αλλα.—ανθρωποσ. 13. [cum Steph.]. 14. εν ιιν  $\overline{\chi}$ ν sic (i eras.). 15. ουδισν. αθετιν. 16. ερρεθησαν. εστινν. 17. — εισ  $\overline{\chi}$ ν. τετρακοσια και τριακοντα ετη. 19. χιριν. 21. [habet του  $\overline{v}$ υ]. εκ νομου ην αν. δικεοσυνην. 22. συνεκλισενν. [ $\overline{v}$ πο]. πιστευουσινν. 23. ελθινν. συνκλιομενοι. 26. +οι (ante  $\overline{v}$ υ:  $\overline{v}$ ν viv ("  $\overline{v}$ ) at  $\overline{v}$ 0 con  $\overline{v}$ 1 at  $\overline{v}$ 2 con εστε εν  $\overline{\chi}$ 2 con ενν. απαντεσ. εν  $\overline{v}$ 2 viv ("  $\overline{v}$ 3 con  $\overline{v}$ 4 con  $\overline{v}$ 5 con  $\overline{v}$ 5 con  $\overline{v}$ 6 con  $\overline{v}$ 7 con  $\overline{v}$ 7 con  $\overline{v}$ 9 c

IV. 1. διαφεριν. 2. [εστι]. 3. οντωσν. ημισν. στοιχιαν (sic v. 9). ημεθα. (pro ημεν secund.). 4. ηλθενν. εξαπεστιλενν (sic v. 6). 6. ημων (pro υμων). 7. αλλα. fin. -νομοσ δια  $\overline{\theta v}$  ( $\overline{\theta v}$  δια  $\overline{\chi v}$  C, Steph.). 8. φυσει μη ουσι. 9. δουλευσε (i. e. -σαι). 12. υμισν. ηδικησαταιν. 13. οιδαταιν. ασθενιανν. 14. πιρασμον υμων εν (C -μον τον εν, υμων improbato).—ουκ (habet A obliq.)ν. [αλλ]. 15. που (pro τισ).—ην.—αν (habet C). 17. εκκλισαι υμασ. 18. — το. ζηλουσθεν. 19. τεκνα (τεκνια C). μεχρισ (αχρισ C). 21. [cum Steph.]. 23. [μεν]. ελευθεριασ. δι.—τησ tert. 24. [habet ai: improbat C]. δουλιαν. 25. — αγαρ. εστιν  $\overline{o}$  εν  $(sic) \checkmark$ . [συστ.].  $\overline{i}\lambda\eta\mu$  ( $\overline{i}\lambda\eta\mu$  v. 26). γαρ (pro δε secund.). 26. — ητισ εστι. —παντων (at ητισ εστιν A, παντων C). 27. στιρα $\checkmark$ . 28.  $\overline{i}$ σακ (C cum Steph.). [caetera cum Steph.]. 29. [εδιωκε]. ουτωσ $\checkmark$ . 30. κληρονομησει. —του υιου (habent A C). 31. διο (pro αρα). πεδισκησ $\checkmark$ .

V. 1. — ουν η, ημασ  $\overline{\chi\sigma}$  (C cum Steph.), ηλευθερωσεν  $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  στηκετε ουν. δουλιασ $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$ . 2. — παυλοσ (habet A obliq.). 3. — οτι (habet C). οφιλετησ $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$ . 4. κατηργηθηται $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$ . —του. [ $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  απέκ.  $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  ξ. εκτδεχομεθα (απέκ. C). 7. ενεκοψεν. —τη (habet C). αληθια $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  πιθεσθαι $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$ . 8. πισμονη $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  καλουντασ $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$ . 10. [ $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  αν ( $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  το αν). 13. δουλευεται $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$ . 14. πεπληρωται σεαυτον. 15. καταισθιετε $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  ( $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  αν). [ $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  ( $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  γρο  $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  ( $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  αν). [ $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  ( $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  αν). 18. (ουκετι  $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  ουκ C). 19. εστιν $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  εμοχεία (μοιχια C). πορνια $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  ασελγια $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$ . 20. φαρμακια $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  ερισ, [ $\sqrt{\sqrt{3}}$  ηλι]. αιρεσισ.

21. — φονοι. κωμαιν. ά p.m. καθωσ είπου (— και: C cum Steph.) βασιλιανν. 23. πραϋτησ. εστινν. 24. κυ  $\overline{\chi}$ υ  $\overline{\nu}$ υ (κυ improbant  $\Lambda$  C). [- $\mu$ ασι]. 26. [cum Steph. - $\mu$ ενοι rescr.  $\Lambda$  vel p.m.].

VI. 1. προλημφθη.  $\ddot{v}$ μισ√. πραυτητοσ, πιρασθησ√. 2. βαστασετε (C - ζετε). [-σατε]. 3. φρεναπατα εαυτον. 7. μυκτηριζετε√. [εαν σπειρη]. 8. σπιρων√ bis. θερισισει prim. (σι delet A: τησ σαρκ. rescript.)√. θερισι secund.√. 9. εγκακωμεν. θερισωμεν. 10. εχωμεν. 12. περιτεμνεσθε√. τω σταυρω (sic) του  $\overline{\chi v}$  μη διωκωνται. 13. [περιτεμν.]. 14. [καυχασθαι].—τω secund. 15. εστιν (pro ισχυει: praecedentia cum Steph.): (εισχυϊ C). 16. [στοιχησουσιν].  $\ddot{v}$ ρηνη√. 17. μηδισ√.  $\overline{\kappa v}$   $\overline{v}$ ν. 18. — ημων. [αμην].

Subscr.  $\pi \rho o \sigma \gamma \alpha \lambda \alpha \tau \alpha \sigma$ .  $\sigma \tau \iota \chi$ .  $\overline{\tau \iota \beta} s.m$ .

προσ εφεσιουσ.

Cap. I. 1.  $[iv \overline{\chi v}]$ .  $[ov\sigma\iota]$ .  $= \epsilon v \epsilon \phi \epsilon \sigma \omega' (habet C: etiam πασιν post αγιοισ addito)$ . 3.  $+ \kappa \alpha\iota$  σωτηροσ  $(post \overline{\kappa v}: improbat C)$ . - ημασ (habet A).  $+ \epsilon v$   $(ante \overline{\chi \omega})$ . 6. ησ  $(pro \epsilon v η: C cum Steph.)$ . 7.  $\epsilon σχομεν$   $(\epsilon χομεν C)$ . το πλουτοσ (non v. 18: C cum Steph.). 10.  $\epsilon i\sigma$   $\epsilon i\sigma$  (v p.m.). ανακεφαλαιωσασθεν. τα  $\epsilon πι$  (τα τε εν C cum Steph.). 11.  $[\epsilon κληρωθημεν]$ . 12. - τησ. 13.  $\bar{v}μισ$  (η pro v C primò)ν. αληθιασν. 14.  $[o\sigma]$ .  $[\rho\rho]$ . - τησ tert. 15. - την αγαπν  $(C \epsilon i\sigma την αγαπ. την <math>\epsilon i\sigma$ ). 16. μνιανν. - υμων secund. 18. καρδιασ (pro διανοιασ). -και (habet C). τησ κληρονομιασ τησ <math>δρξησ. 19. ενεργιανν. 20. [ενηργησεν]. καθισασ (pro εκαθισεν). + αντον (ante εν δεξια). [επουρ]. 22. εδωκενν. 23. εστινν. + τα (ante παντα). πασινν.

ΙΙ. 1. παραπτωμασιν $\checkmark$  (sic v. 5). fin. +  $\overline{v}$ μων. 2. απιθιασ $\checkmark$ . 3. ημισ $\checkmark$ . ημεθα. [τεκ. φυ.]. fin. -ποι ο ο (ο leviter abstersum) $\checkmark$ . 4. — εν (habet C). 5. συνεζωοποιησεν τω. 6. συνηγειρεν $\checkmark$ . 7. Deest versus ob δμοιοτελ. (habet A: αιωσιν: το  $\overline{v}$ περβαλλον πλουτοσ: caelera cum Steph.). 8. — τησ. 10.  $\overline{\theta}$ υ (pro αυτου: A cum Steph.). 11. ποτε  $\overline{v}$ μεισ (C cum Steph.). 12. — εν. επαγ. (π p.m., at λ prim $\overline{d}$ ) $\checkmark$ . 13. εγενηθητε εγγυσ. 15. δογμασιν $\checkmark$ . αυτω (pro εαυτω: C cum Steph.). ιρηνην $\checkmark$ . 16. αποκτινασ $\checkmark$ . 17.  $\overline{v}$ ρηνην $\checkmark$ . +  $\overline{v}$ ρηνην (ante τοισ εγγυσ). 18. + 'οι αμφοτεροι εν ενι' (ante εχομεν: '' λ) $\checkmark$ . (λ εσχομεν). 19. αλλα εστε συνπολιται. 20. — αυτου. του  $\overline{\chi}$ υ (pro  $\overline{v}$ υ  $\overline{\chi}$ υ: λ habet αυτου  $\overline{\chi}$ υ  $\overline{v}$ υ). 21. — η (habet λ). 22.  $\overline{v}$ μισ $\checkmark$ .

III. 1. -iv (habet A). 2. δοθισησν. 3. [στι]. εγνωρισθη. προεγραψα (α p.m.). 5. -εν prim. 6. συνκληρ. συνσω. συνμετ. -αυτου.  $fin. εν <math>\overline{χω}$  iv. 7. εγενηθην. τησ δοθισησ. 8. -των. -εν. το ανεξ. πλουτοσ (C cum Steph.). 9. [init. και]. -παντασ (habet C). οικονόμια (pro κοινωνια). -εν (habet C). -δια iv  $\overline{χυ}$ . 11. (+ τω ante  $\overline{χω}$  A: delet C). 12. -την secund. (habet C). 13. εγκακιν. θλιψεσιν. εστιν. 14. -του  $\overline{κν}$  ad fin. vers. (habet C). 16. δω. το πλουτοσ. δυναμιν. 18. εξισχνσηταιν. [πασί]. [β. και  $\overline{υ}$ ψ.]. 21. + και (post εκκλησια).

ΙV. 1.  $\overline{\chi\omega}$  (pro  $\overline{\kappa\omega}$ ). εκληθηται $\checkmark$  (non v. 4). 2. ταπινοφροσυνησ $\checkmark$ . πραϋτητοσ. 3. τηριν $\checkmark$ . 6. fin.—υμιν. 7. [η]. 8. — και (habet C). εδωκεν $\checkmark$  (sic v. 11). 9. — πρωτον (habet C). 10. εστιν $\checkmark$ . 13. τελιον $\checkmark$ . 14. κυβια $\checkmark$ . μεθοδιαν. 15. — ο (habet C). 16. συνβιβ. ενεργιαν $\checkmark$ . αυτου (pro εαυτου). 17. — λοιπα (habet C). 18. εσκοτωμένοι. 21, 22.  $\overline{\iota\nu}$  απ rescript. p.m. super rasuram. 22. φθιρομένον $\checkmark$ . 23. [ανανεουσθαι δε]. 24. ενδυσασθε. οσιστητι και δικαιοσυνη (C cum Steph.). 25. λαλειτε $\pi$ .)  $\checkmark$ . 32.  $\gamma$ εινεσθε $\checkmark$ . [δε]. [fin. υμιν]. V. 1.  $\gamma$ εινεσθε $\checkmark$ . μιμητε $\checkmark$ . 2. ϋμασ (ημασ C). [ημων]. θυσιαν кан троофоран. 3. торина√. акадарона таба. 4. [init. кан]. п (pro και secund. A cum Steph.). ευτραπελεια√. α ουκ ανηκεν. 5.  $""" \sigma \tau \epsilon \ (pro \ \epsilon \sigma \tau \epsilon)$ . o  $(pro \ o \sigma)$ . 6.  $"" \kappa a "" voi \sigma . — \gamma \alpha \rho \ (habet \ A ? min.)$ . απιθιασ $\sqrt{.}$  7. γεινεσθαι $\sqrt{.}$  συν $\mu$ . 9. φωτοσ (pro  $\overline{\pi\nu\sigma}$ ). 10. δοκειμαζοντεσ. 11. συνκ. ελεγχεται. 12. εστιν. (sic v. 13). 14. λεγι $\sqrt{.}$  εγιρε $\sqrt{.}$  επιφαυσι $\sqrt{.}$  15. ακριβωσ πωσ (C αδελφοι πωσ ακρ.). 16. εισιν $\sqrt{.}$  17. συνιέτε τι το φρονημα του  $\overline{κυ}$  (θέλημα C). 18. μεθυσκεσθαι √. πληρουσθαι √. 19. [-τοισ ψαλ-]. κα πνικαισ $(\cdot \cdot p.m.).$  -εν (C εν ταισ καρδιαισ). 20. -ημων. 21.  $\overline{χυ}$  (pro  $\overline{\theta v}$ ). 22.  $\overline{v}\pi o au a \sigma \sigma \epsilon \sigma \theta \omega \sigma a v$ . 23. — o prim.  $\epsilon \sigma \tau v p r i m \sqrt{-\kappa a v}$ secund. (habet C). + o (ante σωτηρ plenè: improbat C). - εστι secund. (habet C). 24. [all].  $\omega\sigma$  (pro  $\omega\sigma\pi\epsilon\rho$ ). out $\omega\sigma\sqrt{.-\iota\delta\iota\iota\iota\sigma}$ . 25. — εαυτων. ηγαπησεν $\sqrt{.}$  27. αυτοσ αυτω (pro αυτην εαυτω: C εαυτω).—η τι (habet  $\Lambda$  obliq.). 28. οφιλουσιν οι αν. τεκνα (pro σωματα: C cum Steph.). 29. ουδισ√. την σαρκα αυτου (C cum Steph.). [all].  $\overline{\chi}\sigma$  (pro  $\overline{\kappa}\sigma$ ). 30. —  $\epsilon\kappa$  τησ σαρκοσ ad fin. vers. (forsan ob δμοιοτ.: habet C). 31. καταλιψι. [τον πατ.].-αυτον prim. (habet C). [ $\tau\eta\nu \mu\eta\tau$ .].  $\tau\eta \gamma \nu\nu\alpha i\kappa i$  ( $-\pi\rho\sigma\sigma$  et  $\alpha\nu\tau\sigma\nu$  secund.): (τη γυν. αυτου A, at C κολλ. προσ την γυν. αυτ.). 32. [εισ την]. 33. ΰμισ√. (ϊνα εκαστ. C).

(ε in ει p.m., ι primò). εκαστοσ αληθειαν (C cum Steph.). προσ τον  $\pi\lambda$ . (μετα του  $\pi\lambda$ . Α C). 26.  $-\tau\omega$  (habet C). 27. μηδε (pro μητε). 28. ταισ ϊδιαισ χερσιν το αγαθον (-ιδιαισ C). εχητα. (εχη C). χριανν. 29. [αλλ]. χριασν. ακουουσινν. 31. συμπαση (pro συν  $\pi$ .)ν. 32. γεινεσθεν. [δε]. [fin. υμιν].

Subscr.  $\pi \rho \sigma \sigma \epsilon \phi \epsilon \sigma \iota \sigma \sigma$ .  $\sigma \tau \iota \chi \omega \nu \overline{\tau \iota \beta} s.m$ .

[GAL. iv. 24-EPHES. vi. 24.]

προσ φιλιππησιουσ.

CAP. I. 1.  $\chi v i v$ .  $[\pi \alpha \sigma i]$ . 4.  $+ \tau \eta$  (ante  $\delta \epsilon \eta \sigma \epsilon i$ : improbat C). 5.  $+ \tau \eta \sigma$  (ante  $\pi \rho \omega \tau \eta \sigma$ ). 6.  $\epsilon \pi \iota \tau \epsilon \lambda \epsilon \sigma \iota \sqrt{.}$  axpi.  $[\iota \upsilon \overline{\chi} \upsilon]$ . 7.  $\epsilon \sigma \tau \iota \nu \checkmark$ .  $+ \epsilon \nu$  (ante  $\tau \eta$  a  $\pi \circ \lambda \circ \gamma$ .).  $\sigma \nu \nu \kappa$ . 8.  $- \epsilon \sigma \tau \iota \nu$  (habet C: instaurator μοι? pro μου). χυ ιυ. 9. [περισσευη]. 10. - υμασ (habet C). alikpiveis (ei pro a p.m. vel A) $\sqrt{.}$  11. kappov. Tov. 12. γεινωσκινν. 13. + τω (ante  $\overline{\chi}\omega$ : improbat C). γεγονεναι  $(\gamma \epsilon \nu \epsilon \sigma \theta \alpha \iota A? C)$ . πασινν. 14. + του  $\overline{\theta \nu}$  (ante λαλί). 15. (— και prim. C). fin. κηρυσσειν (A minut. κηρυσσουσιν). 16. οι μεν εξ αγαπησ κ.τ.λ. e vers. 17. 17. οι δε εξ εριθείας κ.τ.λ. e vers. 16 (ad τον puncta apposita sed rursus erasa). εγειρειν (pro επιφερειν). 18. + στι (post  $\pi \lambda \eta \nu$ ). ειτε ε αληθεια (\* p.m.?). 23. δε (pro γαρ). (A obliq. addit γαρ post πολλω). κρισσον. 24. επιμενιν√. - εν. 25. παραμενω. +  $\ddot{v}μων$  (post πιστεωσ: improbat C). 27. — του  $\overline{\chi}$ υ (habet A). πολιτευεσθαι  $\checkmark$ . ειδων  $\checkmark$ . — ειτε απων (habet A obliq.). ακουω (ακουσω A obliq.). πιστιν. 28. εστιν αυτοισ ( $-\mu \epsilon \nu$ ).  $\epsilon \nu \delta \epsilon \iota \xi \epsilon \iota \sigma \sqrt{.}$  απωλιασ $\sqrt{.}$  ϋμων (pro υμιν). 30.

ΙΙ. 1. τισ (pro τινα). 2. [συμψ.]. αυτο (pro εν: C cum Steph.). 3. κατ εριθιαν μηδε κατα κενοδ. (κατα improbat C). ταπινοφροσυνην. 4. εκαστοσ σκοπουντεσ.—εκαστοσ secund.: at  $\mathbf{v}$ . 5 init. εκαστοι τουτο φρονειτε (— γαρ: τουτο γαρ C). 7. αλλα. εκενωσεν/. 8. εταπινωσεν/. + του (ante σταυρου plenè). 9. ϋπερυψωσεν. + το (ante ονομα prim.). 10.  $+\overline{\chi}v$  (post  $\overline{v}v$ : delet C). επινώνν. 11. εξομολογησητεν. 12. (C improbat  $\epsilon v$  prim.). 13. — ο prim. 15. [γενησθε]. ακαιρεοιν. αμωμα μεσον (—  $\epsilon v$ ). 16. εχοντεσ (επεχοντεσ A). 17. [αλλ]. λιτουργιαν.—και συγχαιρω (A habet και συνχ.)· δμοιοτελ.? 18. δε.  $\overline{v}\mu$ ισν. [συγχ.]. 19. [κω]. 21.  $\overline{v}v$  ( $\overline{v}v$  ( $\overline{v}v$  ( $\overline{v}v$  ( $\overline{v}v$  )). 3. αφιδω. 24. ( $\overline{v}v$  ). λιτουργονν. 26.  $\overline{v}v$  ( $\overline{v}v$  ) ( $\overline{v}v$  ) ( $\overline{v}v$  ). 17. [αλλ]. λιτουργονν (sic  $\overline{v}v$  ). 27. (θανατου C). αλλα. ηλεησεν αυτον. λυπην (pro λυπη). 28.

ειδοντεσ $\checkmark$ . 29. προσδεξασθαι $\checkmark$ . 30. κυ (pro του  $\overline{\chi v}$ ). ηγγισεν $\checkmark$ . παραβολευσαμενος. αναπληρωσει. εμε (με C). λιτουργιασ $\checkmark$ .

11Ι. 1. ταυτα (τα αυτα C cum Steph.). [δε ασφ.]. 3.  $\overline{\theta v}$  ( $\overline{\theta w}$  C cum Steph.). 4.  $\pi \epsilon$  (pro  $\epsilon \gamma \omega$  secund.: corrigit A). 5. βενιαμειν. 6. ζηλοσ (C cum Steph.). 7.  $-\alpha \lambda \lambda$  (habet C). [ην μοι]. 8.  $-\kappa \alpha \iota$  prim. (habet C). [ $-\epsilon \omega \sigma \ \overline{\chi v}$ ]. [ $\overline{\kappa v}$  μου].  $-\epsilon \iota \nu \alpha \iota$  secund. (habet C). 9. δικαιοσυνην  $\epsilon \mu \eta \nu$  (C cum Steph.).  $\pi \iota \sigma \tau \iota \nu$ . 10.  $\gamma \nu \omega \sigma \epsilon \omega \sigma$  (pro αναστασεωσ: A obliq. cum Steph.). και κοινωνιαν παθηματων (habet την et των C). συνμορφίζομενοσ (συνμορφουμενοσ C). 11. την  $\epsilon \kappa$  (pro  $\tau \omega \nu$ ). 12.  $\tau \epsilon \tau \epsilon \lambda \iota \omega \mu \alpha \iota \nu$ .  $-\kappa \alpha \iota$  prim. (habet C).  $\epsilon \iota$  (pro  $\kappa \alpha \iota$  secund.. corrigit A). κατελημφθην.  $\vec{u} \tau \sigma \overline{\chi v}$   $\iota v (-\tau \sigma v)$ . 13. ουπω (pro  $\sigma \iota$ ). 14.  $\epsilon \tau \epsilon \kappa \tau \iota \nu \omega \mu \epsilon \nu \sigma \iota \nu$ .  $\epsilon \iota \sigma$  (pro  $\epsilon \pi \iota$ ). βραβιον  $\epsilon \iota$ . 15.  $\tau \epsilon \lambda \iota \iota \iota \nu$ .  $-\sigma \iota \nu$  (ante φρονουμεν [sic]: improbat C). 16.  $-\kappa \alpha \iota \nu \iota \nu$  ad fin. vers. forsan ob όμοιοτελ. (C  $\kappa \alpha \nu$ . το αυτο φρον  $\iota \nu$ ). 17. συνμμητεν. [ουτω]. 19. απωλιαν.  $\epsilon \tau \iota \nu \iota \iota \nu$ . 20. [ $\sigma \omega \tau \eta \rho \mu \iota \nu \iota \nu$ ]. 21.  $\tau \iota \iota \iota \iota \nu \iota \nu$ .  $\epsilon \iota \iota \nu \iota \nu$   $\epsilon \iota \iota \nu$   $\epsilon \iota \nu$

IV. 1. κ αγαπητοι (κ notat. p.m.) ν. ουτωσ ν. 2. ευοδιαν. φρονιν ν. 3. ναι (pro και prim.). γνησιε συζηγε sic edit. min. (at in not. et editt. mai. et 1865 συζυγε: C συνζυγε). συνλαμβανου. και των συνεργων μου και των λοιπων (C cum Steph.). 6. μετ. 8. επενοσν. 9. ϊρηνησν. 10. φρονιν ν. ηκαιρισθεν. 12. και (pro δε). ταπινουσθαιν. πασιν ν. πιναν ν. ϋστερισθαι ν. 13.  $-\overline{\chi}\omega$  (habet C). 14. [συγκ.]. 15. οιδαται ν. ϋμισ ν bis. μακαιδονιασ ν. λημψεωσ. 16. [εισ]. χριαν ν. (sic v. 19). 17. [αλλ]. 18. παρα (A απο) επαφροδείτου. 19. το πλουτοσ (C cum Steph.). -εν prim. (habet A obliq.). 20. +ω (ante  $\eta$  δοξα: delet C). 21. ασπασασθαι ν. 23. -ημων. του πνσ (pro παντων: C cum Steph.). [αμην].

Subscr. προσ φιλιππησιουσ. στιχοι ω (i. e. σ) s.m.

προσ κολοσσαεισ.

Cap. I. 1.  $\sqrt{\nu}$   $\overline{\nu}\nu$ . 2. κολοσσαισ.  $[\sqrt{\omega} \chi \alpha \rho \iota \sigma]$ . [και  $\overline{\kappa}\nu$   $\overline{\nu}\nu$   $\overline{\chi}\nu$ ]. 3. [cum Steph.]. 4.  $\overline{\kappa}\omega$   $\overline{\nu}\nu$   $(\chi\omega$   $\overline{\nu}\nu$  C).  $\eta\nu$  εχετε ( $\rho ro$   $\tau \eta\nu$  tert.). 5. αληθιασ. 6. — και secund. εστιν (sic v. 7). + και αυξανομενον (ante καθωσ). αληθια. 7. — και. εμαθατε.  $\eta \mu \omega\nu$  ( $\rho ro$   $\overline{\nu}\mu \omega\nu$ : C cum Steph.). 9.  $\eta \mu \iota \sigma$ . 10. —  $\nu \mu \alpha\sigma$  (habet C). αρεσκιαν.  $\tau \eta$  επιγνωσει (εν  $\tau \eta$  επ. C). 12. +  $\overline{\theta}\omega$  (ante πατρι).  $\overline{\nu}\mu \alpha\sigma$  ( $\rho ro$   $\eta \mu \alpha\sigma$ ). 13. [ $\rho \rho$ ]. 14. — δια του αιματοσ αυτου. 16. — τα secund. et tert. (habet C). 17. εστιν (sic v. 27).  $\sigma$  συνεστηκεν. 18. — εκ (habet C). 19. ενδοκησεν ( $\nu$   $\rho$ .m.). 20. [δι αυτου]. 22. [αποκατηλλαξεν]. + αυτου ( $\rho sst$  θανατου). 23. πιστι. —  $\tau \eta$  secund. (habet C). κηρυξ και αποστολοσ ( $\rho ro$  διακονοσ: C cum Steph.). 24. παθημασιν  $\nu \mu \omega\nu$  ( $\nu \mu \omega$ )  $\nu \tau \varepsilon \rho$ : C cum Steph.: A omittit  $\mu \omega$  tantum). [ο]. 25. + παυλοσ ( $\rho ro$  διακονοσ: C cum Steph.). 26.  $\nu \nu \nu$ . 27. [ $\tau \tau \sigma$  ο]. τον ( $\rho ro$  τουτον: C cum Steph.). [ $\sigma$ ]. 28.  $\nu \nu$  29. ενεργιαν.

II. 1.  $\overline{v}\pi\epsilon\rho$  (pro  $\pi\epsilon\rho i$ ).  $\lambda$ αοδικιαν.  $\epsilon$ ορακαν (-κασιν C).  $-\epsilon$ ν σαρκι (habet C). 2.  $\sigma$ νμβιβασθεντεσ (-ων C, sed rursus abstersit).  $\pi$ αν πλουτοσ (C cum Steph.). fin. του  $\overline{\theta}\overline{v}$  πατροσ  $\overline{\chi}\overline{v}$  (C και πατρ. του). 3.  $\epsilon$ ισινν.  $-\tau$ ησ secund. (habet C).  $\gamma$ νω rescript. ab A vel p.m. 4.  $-\delta\epsilon$  (habet C).  $\mu$ ηδείσ (C  $\mu$ ητείσ) pro  $\mu$ η τίσ. 7.  $-\epsilon$ ν αυτω (habet A).  $[\epsilon v$  τη  $\pi$ .].  $-\epsilon v$  αυτη ( $\epsilon v$  αυτω legit C). 8. βλεπεταιν.  $\epsilon$ σται  $\bar{v}$ μασ.  $\bar{v}$ υλαγων (- $\gamma$ ωγων C)ν.  $\bar{v}$ στοιχιαν. 10.  $[\sigma\sigma]$ .  $+\tau$ ησ (ante αρχησ).  $\epsilon$ κκλησιασ (pro και εξουσιασ: C  $\bar{v}$ ανε Steph.). 11.  $-\tau$ ων αμαρτίων (habet C).  $[-\mu$ ματι  $\bar{p}$ .  $\bar{v}$ .  $\bar{v}$  αραπτωμω C]. 12.  $[\bar{v}$ υνηγερθητε].  $-\tau$ ων. 13.  $-\epsilon v$  (habet A). παραπτωμασινν.  $\bar{v}$  τοισ  $(\bar{v}$ μασ improbat C).  $[\eta \mu \nu$ , at C  $\bar{v}$ μν]. 14.  $\epsilon$ ξαλιψασν. τοισ  $(\bar{v}$   $\bar{p}$ m. in ras.)  $\bar{v}$ .  $\eta$ μων (pro  $\eta$ μιν:  $\bar{v}$  cum Vol. II. Part III. -7.

Steph.). 15.  $\epsilon \delta i \gamma \mu \alpha \tau i \sigma \epsilon \nu \sqrt{16}$ .  $\beta \rho \omega \sigma i \sqrt{16}$ .  $[\nu \sigma u \mu^{-}]$ . 17.  $[\alpha]$ .  $\epsilon \sigma \tau i \nu \sqrt{16}$ .  $(-\tau \sigma u C)$ . 18.  $\mu \eta \delta i \sigma \sqrt{16}$ .  $(-\tau u \Delta C)$ .  $(\tau u \Delta C)$ . 18.  $\mu \eta \delta i \sigma \sqrt{16}$ .  $(\tau u \Delta C)$ .  $(\tau u \Delta C)$ .  $(\tau u \Delta C)$ . 19.  $[\sigma u \mu \Delta C]$ .  $(\tau u \Delta C)$ . 19.  $[\sigma u \mu \Delta C]$ .  $(\tau u \Delta C)$ . 19.  $[\sigma u \mu \Delta C]$ .  $(\tau u \Delta C)$

III. 1. εν (pro τω: A cum Steph.). θσ (pro χσ primò: χ A vel p.m.)  $\checkmark$ . — εστιν (habet A). 4. υμων (pro ημων). υμισ (sic  $\checkmark$ . 7)  $\checkmark$ . 5. — υμων (habet C). πορνιαν  $\checkmark$ . πλεονεξειαν  $\checkmark$ . ειδωλολατριαν. G. απιθιασν [caetera cum Steph.]. 7. τουτοισ (pro αυτοισ). 8. — και  $\ddot{v}$ μεισ (habet A). 10. επενδυσαμενοι (ενδ. C). 11. [-λοσ ελευ-]. - τα (habet C). πασιν√. 12. [του]. οικτιρμου. ταπινοφροσυνην  $\sqrt{.}$  πραυτητα. 13.  $\overline{\theta \sigma}$  ( $\overline{\chi \sigma}$  A? C cum Steph.). (C correcturus ημιν pro υμιν, rursus η abstersit). ουτωσν. υμισν. 14.  $[\pi \alpha \sigma i]$ . or  $(pro \ \eta \tau i \sigma)$ : C cum Steph.). 15.  $\overline{\chi \nu}$   $(pro \ \overline{\theta \nu})$ : C cum Steph.). 16. κυ (pro χυ: C cum Steph.). ενοικιτων.-και secund. et tert. (C habet τη ante χαρ.). ταισ καρδιεσ. fin. θω (pro  $\overline{\kappa\omega}$ ). 17.  $[\alpha\nu]$ .  $\overline{\kappa\nu}$   $\overline{\iota\nu}$   $\overline{\chi\nu}$  (+  $\tau\sigma\nu$  ante  $\overline{\kappa\nu}$  C).— $\kappa\alpha\iota$  secund. 18. ϋποτασσεσθαι $\sqrt{.}$ —ιδιοισ. 19. (+ εαυτων ante γυν. C). πικρενεσθε $\sqrt{.}$ 20. γονευσιν. ευαρεστον εστιν εν κω. 21. παροργίζεται (pro ερεθιζετε). 22. οφθαλμοδουλιαισ $\sqrt{.}$  fin.  $\overline{κν}$  (C  $\overline{θν}$ ). 23. — και παν (C habet  $\pi \alpha \nu$ ). o (pro o  $\tau \iota$ ). 24.  $\alpha \pi \circ \lambda \eta \alpha \psi \in \sigma \theta \in (\lambda \eta \mu \psi, C)$ . —  $\gamma \alpha \rho$ . 25. γαρ (pro δε). (C κομισεται). ηδικησενν. εστινν. προσωπολημψια.

υμιν]. 14. IV. 1.  $[\pi \alpha \rho \epsilon \chi \epsilon \sigma \theta \epsilon : (-\theta a \iota C)]$ . ουρανω  $(-o \iota \sigma C)$ . 2.  $\pi \rho \sigma \sigma \alpha \rho - \iota \nu$ : A cum  $\tau \epsilon \rho \iota \tau \epsilon \checkmark$ .  $-\epsilon \nu$  αυτη  $(hab \epsilon t \Lambda)$ . 3. αμα  $(i \nu \ prim \dot{o} : \alpha \mu \alpha \ vi x \ p, m.) \checkmark$ . [Phil. i. 1—Col. iv. 3.]

[ $\delta\iota$  o]. 4.  $\delta\iota$  (non  $\nabla\iota$  6)  $\checkmark$ . 6.  $\epsilon\nu\epsilon\iota$   $\checkmark$ . 7. +  $\delta\epsilon$  (ante  $\kappa\alpha\tau$ ; improbat C). - και συνδουλοσ (habet C). 8. γνω τε (sic Tischendorf.: γνω C). [ $\ddot{v}\mu\omega\nu$  prim.: C  $\eta\mu$ . sed abstersit].  $\tau^{\alpha}\sigma$  ( $\alpha$  p.m.?) $\checkmark$ . 9. [ $v\mu\omega\nu$ : C ημ. sed rursus abstersit]. γνωριουσιν (C γνωρισουσιν). 12. ασπαζετε√. + iv (post χυ). ημων (pro υμων secund .: υμ. C post στιχων scriptorem). σταθητε (C στητε). τελιοι $\sqrt{}$ . πεπληροφορημενοι (ρτο πεπλ.). 13. πολυν πονον (ρτο ζηλον πολυν). λαοδικια (sic v. 15)√. 15. αυτων (pro αυτου). 16. λαοδικαιωὖ√. λοοδικιασ . υμισ . 18. - αμην (habet C)

Subscr. προσ κολασσαεισ (sic Tisch. 1863, at κολοσσαεισ 1865). στιγων τ. 8.m.

προσ θεσσαλονικεισ α.

CAP. I. 1. [cum Steph.]. 2. μνιαν τ. — υμων secund. (habet C). 3. αδιαλιπτωσν. 4. + του (ante  $\overline{\theta v}$ ). 5. + του  $\overline{\theta v}$  (ante  $\eta \mu \omega \nu$ ).  $\lceil \epsilon i \sigma \rangle$ υμ.]. δυναμι√. -εν quart. -εν quint. 6. μιμητε√. 7. [τυπουσ]. πασιν√. μακαιδονια (sic v. 8)√. + εν (ante τη αχ.). 8.  $-\gamma$ αρ (habet A). θυ (pro κυ: C cum Steph.). + εν τη (ante axaia). αλλα  $\overline{\epsilon}$  ( — και:  $\epsilon$  addunt  $\Lambda$ ? C: αλλα p.m.). χριαν  $\epsilon$ χιν ημασ. 9.  $\epsilon\sigma\chi o\mu\epsilon\nu$ . 10.  $\alpha\nu\alpha\mu\epsilon\nu\nu\nu\sqrt{.} + \tau\omega\nu$  (inter  $\epsilon\kappa$  et  $\nu\epsilon\kappa\rho\omega\nu$ ).  $\epsilon\kappa$  (pro  $\alpha\pi\sigma$ ).

II. 1. οιδαται (sic v. 2) √. 2. - και prim. 3. ουδε (pro ουτε). 4. ουτωσ√. -τω prim. (habet C). 5. κολακιασ√. (- εν secund. C). 7. alla.  $\nu\eta\pi$ 101 ( $\eta\pi$ 101 C). ( $\epsilon$ a $\nu$  pro a $\nu$  C). 8. o $\mu$ 6100 $\mu$ 6201. εγενηθητε. 9. — γαρ secund.  $\overline{v}$ μιν (μτο εισ  $\overline{v}$ μασ:  $\Lambda$  cum Steph.). 11.  $\mu$  aptupo $\mu$  evol. 12.  $\pi$  epi $\pi$  at eiv.  $\kappa$  ale  $\sigma$  avto $\sigma$ . 13.  $init. + \kappa$  at. αδιαλιπτωσ√. — αληθωσ (habet A ante εστιν√). ημιν (pro υμιν). υμισ√ (bis in vers.). Post θυ propter όμοιοτ, addit p.m. εδεξασθε κ.τ.λ. ν. 13 . λ. καθωσ εστιν λ.... ενεργιται ... ημιν ... ν. 14 μιμηθητε usque ad του  $\overline{\theta \nu}$  v. 14: improbat A. τα αυτα. 15. αποκτιναντων $\sqrt{.}$ -ιδιουσ. ημασ (pro υμασ). 16. εθνεσιν $\sqrt{.}$  εφ- $\theta a \sigma \epsilon v \sqrt{.}$  18.  $\delta \iota o \tau \iota$ . 19.  $-\eta \ tert$ . (habet C).  $-\overline{\chi} v$ . 20.  $\epsilon \sigma \tau \alpha \iota \sqrt{.}$ n secund. (habet C).

III. 1. ηυδοκησαμεν. καταλιφθηναι. 2. [διακ.].—και συνεργον ημων.—υμασ secund. υπερ (pro περι). 3. init. το. Γμηδενα σαινεσθαι εν τ. θλιψεσι]. 6. + υμων (ante πιστιν: νπ separat  $\mathbb{C}$ ??). μνιαν $\sqrt{.}$  7. αναγκη και θλιψει. 8. (C στηκετε). 9.  $\overline{\kappa}\omega$  (pro  $\overline{\theta\omega}$ : C cum Steph.).  $\overline{\kappa v}$  (pro  $\overline{\theta v}$ : C cum Steph.). 11.  $-\chi \sigma$ . υμων (pro ημων tert.: C cum Steph.). 13. - χυ. fin. + αμην (improbat C).

IV. 1.  $-\tau o. + \tau \omega$  (ante  $\kappa \omega$ ). [iv  $\kappa \alpha \theta \omega \sigma$ ].  $+ \kappa \alpha \theta \omega \sigma$   $\kappa \alpha i$   $\pi \epsilon \rho i$ πατειτε (post  $\overline{\theta}\omega$ ). 2. δεδωκαμεν. 3. εστιν. [-ιν  $\theta$ ελ-]. (πασησ pro  $\tau \eta \sigma$  C). 4. [ $\epsilon \kappa \alpha \sigma \tau \sigma \nu$ ].  $+ \epsilon \nu$  (ante  $\tau \iota \mu \eta$ : improbat C). 6. - o (habet C). [caetera cum Steph.]. 7. [αλλ]. 8. και διδοντα το πν. αυτ. (C δοντα). fin.  $\ddot{v}$ μασ. 9. (εχομεν pro εχετε C). 10. υμων (pro τουσ secund.: C cum Steph.). [μακεδ-]. 11. ( - ιδιαισ C). ϋμιν παρηγγιλαμεν√ (παρηγγ. ϋμιν C). 13. θελομεν. κοιμωμένων. [ $\lambda$ υπησθέ]. (ωσ pro καθωσ C). 14. επιστευομέν (C cum Steph.). απεθανεν√. ουτωσ (είς ν. 17)√. 17. περιλιπομενοι√.

V. 1. του γραφεσθαι υμιν (του improbat C). 2. ακρειβωσ√.  $-\eta$ . 3.  $-\gamma$ αρ (at δε C). επισταται. ωδειν $\sqrt{}$ . 4. εσται $\sqrt{}$ . [η ημ. υμ.]. [κλεπτησ]. 5. + γαρ (post παντεσ). εσται (e p.m.)  $\checkmark$ . 6. - και prim. (habet C). 7. καθευδουσιν√. 8. - και αγαπησ (post πιστεωσ: habet C). 9. αλλα. 10. περι (pro υπερ: C cum Steph.). 12. προϊστανομενουσ. 13. + και (ante ειρην.: improbat C). fin. avτοισ. 15. αποδοι (-δω C). - και prim. (habet C). 17. αδιαλιπτωσ√. 18.  $[\gamma \alpha \rho \ \theta \epsilon \lambda.]$ . +  $\tau o \nu$  (ante  $\overline{\theta \nu}$ : improbat C). 19.  $[\sigma \beta \epsilon \nu \nu \nu \tau \epsilon]$ . 21. [sic, cum Steph .: at C παντα δε]. 25. [και deest]. 27. [ $opki(\omega)$ ]. [ $\pi a \sigma i$ ]. —  $a \gamma i o i \sigma$  (habet C). 28. [ $a \mu \eta \nu$ ].

Subscr. προσ θεσσαλονικεισ α.

προσ θεσσαλονικεισ β.

CAP. I. 1. + kai (ante  $\pi \rho i$ : improbat A, forsan p.m.). 2. [ $\eta\mu\omega\nu$ ]. 3. οφιλομεν $\sqrt{.-\nu\mu\omega\nu}$  tert. (habet C). 4. αυτουσ  $\eta\mu\alpha\sigma$ . εγκαυχασθαι. [πασι, sic v. 10]. 5. ενδιγμα√. 7. υμων (pro ημων: C cum Steph.). 8. [πυρι φλ.]. [ειδοσι]. (+ τον ante θν, C).  $\overline{v}$ πακουουσιν√.  $[\overline{\chi}v]$ . 9. [ολεθρον]. 10. πιστευσασιν. 12.  $-\overline{\chi}v$

II. 1.  $(\epsilon \rho \omega \tau \omega \mu [\epsilon \nu] p.m. super ras.) \checkmark$ . 2.  $\mu \eta \delta \epsilon (pro \mu \eta \tau \epsilon prim.)$ . fin.  $\overline{\kappa v}$  (pro  $\overline{\chi v}$ ). 3. avomias (pro amaptias). 4. —  $\kappa ai \ v\pi \epsilon \rho$ αιρομένοσ (habet A obliq.) οδ δμοιοτ. —ωσ  $\overline{\theta \nu}$ . αποδικνυντα $\sqrt{}$ . εστιν  $\checkmark$ . 6. οιδαται  $\checkmark$ . αυτου (εαυτου C). 7. + γαρ (post ηδη: improbat C). 8. κσ ισ αναλοι (C ανελοι). 9. ενεργιαν. δυναμιν. σημιοισν. τερασινν. 10. — τησ prim. (habet C).—ενsecund. (habet C). 11. πεμπει (-ψει C). 12. κριθωσιν απαντεσ. αλλα.  $-\epsilon \nu$  (habet C). αδικεια $\sqrt{.}$  13. οφιλομεν $\sqrt{.}$  ευχαριστιν $\sqrt{.}$ + του (ante κυ). ειλατο. ημασ (pro υμασ: C cum Steph.). [απ αρχησ].  $\pi$ ιστι $\sqrt{.}$  14. + και (ante εκαλεσεν). [ $\ddot{v}$ μασ].  $\ddot{v}$ μων (pro ημων prim.: A C cum Steph.). 16. τσ χσ κ ο θσ ο πατηρ (Ν p.m.: C delet o ante πατηρ). - ο αγαπησασ ημασ (addit A). 17. τασ καρδιασ ϋμων. -- υμασ. εργω και λογω.

III. 1.  $\pi\rho o\sigma\epsilon v\chi\epsilon\sigma\theta a v$ . 3.  $o\kappa\sigma\epsilon\sigma\tau v$  ( $\epsilon\sigma\tau v$   $o\kappa\sigma$  C). 4. - υμιν. - και prim. (habet C). 5. + την (ante υπομονην). 6. [ημων]. παρελαβοσαν (παρελαβον C). 7. οιδαται $\checkmark$ . μιμισθαι (sic  $\checkmark$ . 9) $\checkmark$ . 8. αλλα. νυκτοσ και ημερασ. 10. — τουτο (habet C). εργαζεσθεν. 12. εν κω ιυ χω (C cum Steph., δια κ.τ.λ.). 13. 14. σημιουσθαι. - και. συναναμιγνυσθαι. 15. νόυθετιται $\sqrt{.}$  16. [τροπω]. 17. εστιν σημιον $\sqrt{.}$  ουτωσ $\sqrt{.}$  18. — αμην (addit C aunv').

Subscr. προσ θεσσαλονικεισ.

στιχων ρπ. ε.m.

προσ εβραιουσ.

Cap. I. I. πατ super ras. 2. εσχατου. εθηκεν $\sqrt{}$ . εποιησεν τουσ αιωνασ. 3. — δι εαυτου. των αμαρτιων ποιησαμενοσ (- ημων: atυμων C). 4. κριττων. 5. ειπεν. - αυτω (habel A). 7. λιτουργουσ√. 8. + και (post αιωνοσ). — ραβδοσ ευθυτητοσ (habet Λ η ραβδοσ τησ ευθυτητοσ ραβδοσ τησ  $\beta$ .)  $\sqrt{}$ . fin. αυτου (pro σου).

+ ωσ "ματιον (post αυτουσ). + και (ante o autos: \* \* p.m.). εκλιψουσιν $\checkmark$ . 13. ειρηκεν $\checkmark$ . 14. εισιν $\checkmark$ . λιτουργικα $\checkmark$ .

ΙΙ. 1. περισσοτερωσ δει. προσεχιν ημασ. ακουσθισι√ (-σιν С). παραρυωμέν. 3. λαλισθαίν. 4. σημιοίσν. [τερασί]. θερισμοίσ (A  $\mu\epsilon\rho\iota\sigma\mu\circ\iota\sigma$ ). 5.  $\bar{\nu}\pi\epsilon\tau\alpha\xi\epsilon\nu\sqrt{}$ . 6.  $[\tau\iota]$ . 7.  $\sigma\alpha\sigma$  auto secund. in 9. αδικιαν (pro avoular). εχρισεν√. 12. αλλαξεισ (ειλιξεισ C). , rasur. rescript. p.m.? vel A√. [Habet και κατεστησασ ad fin.

[Col iv. 3-18. I. H. Tuess. Heb. i. 1-ii. 7.]

vers.]. 8.  $\ddot{v}$ πεταξα<sup>σ</sup> (σ forsan p.m.). τω γαρ. [αυτω prim.]. 10. επρεπεν  $\checkmark$ . τελιωσαι  $\checkmark$ . 14. κεκοινωνηκεν  $\checkmark$ . αιματοσ και σαρκοσ. μετεσχεν  $\checkmark$ . τουτεστιν  $\checkmark$ . 15. δουλιασ $\checkmark$ . 17. ωφειλεν  $\checkmark$ . 18. — πειρασθεισ (habet πιρασθισ C). πιραζομενοισ  $\checkmark$

III.  $1. - \overline{\chi \nu}$ . 2.  $[\mu \omega \sigma \eta \sigma]$ . 3. ουτοσ δοξησ.  $\mu \omega \bar{\nu} \sigma \eta \nu$ . 4.  $- \tau a$ . 5.  $\mu \omega \bar{\nu} \sigma \eta \sigma$ . 6. καν  $(pro \epsilon \alpha \nu \pi \epsilon \rho)$ : • i.e.  $\epsilon \alpha \nu p.m.$ : C cum Steph.).  $[\mu \epsilon \chi$ .  $\tau \epsilon \lambda$ .  $\beta \epsilon \beta$ .]. 8. πιρασ $\mu \omega$ : non v. 15  $(pro \pi \alpha \rho \alpha \pi i \kappa \rho)$ . πιρασ $\mu \nu \nu$ . 9. επιρασαν  $\nu$ .  $-\mu \epsilon prim$ . (habet C).  $\epsilon \nu$  δοκιμασια  $(pro \epsilon \delta \kappa i \mu \alpha \sigma \alpha \nu)$ .  $-\mu \epsilon prim$ . (habet C).  $\epsilon \nu$  δοκιμασια  $(pro \epsilon \kappa \epsilon i \nu \eta)$ .  $[\epsilon \iota \pi \sigma \nu]$ . 12.  $\epsilon \sigma \tau \epsilon \nu$ . 13.  $[\tau \iota \sigma \epsilon \epsilon \nu \mu \nu \nu]$ . 14.  $\tau \iota \nu \chi \nu \gamma \epsilon \gamma \nu \alpha \mu \epsilon \nu$ . 16.  $\epsilon \gamma \nu \nu \nu \nu \nu$ .  $(sic \nu \tau 18) \nu$ .  $\delta \epsilon \pi \rho \nu \sigma \kappa \nu \nu$ . 16.  $\epsilon \nu \nu$ . 18.  $\epsilon \nu \nu \nu \nu$ .  $\epsilon \nu \nu$ . 19.  $\epsilon \nu \nu$ . 19.  $\epsilon \nu \nu$ .

1V. 1. καταλιπομενησν. 2. συνκεκερασμενοσ. πιστιν. 3. ουν (ρτο γαρ). 4. ειρηκενν. ουτωσν. 6. [δι] απιστιαν (απιθιαν C). 7. οριζει τινα (τινα οριζει C). δαυειδ. προειρηται. σκληρυνηταιν. 8.  $\overline{\iota\sigma}$  (sic). 9. Deest versus (habet A, legens απολιπεταιν). 10.  $\pi\alpha$  των (πα C scripsit et abstersit: i. e. παντων ρτο των prim.). 11. ειναν.  $-\tau$ ισ (habet C). ϋποδιγματιν. απιθιασν. 12.  $-\psi$ υχησ (supplet forsan p.m.).  $-\tau$ ε prim. [ενθυμησεων]. 13. εστινν. 14. διεληλυθαν. 15. συνπαθ. ασθενιαισν. πεπιρασμενονν. 16. ελεοσ.

V. 1. [ $\tau\epsilon$ ]. 2. [ $\alpha\gamma\nu00\nu\sigma$ ι].  $\alpha\sigma\theta\epsilon\nu\iota\alpha\nu\sqrt{.}$  3. δι αυτην. ουτωσ (sic v. 5) $\sqrt{.}$  [ $\epsilon\alpha\nu\tau\sigma\nu$ ].  $\pi\epsilon\rho\iota$  (pro  $\nu\pi\epsilon\rho$ ). 4. — ο bis. καθωσπερ (C cum Steph.). 5.  $\epsilon\delta\delta\epsilon\alpha\sigma\epsilon\nu\sqrt{.}$  8.  $\epsilon\pi\alpha\theta\epsilon\nu\sqrt{.}$  9.  $\pi\alpha\sigma\iota\nu$  τοισ  $\bar{\nu}\pi$ -ακουουσιν αυτω. 12. χριαν prim. $\sqrt{.}$  στοιχια $\sqrt{.}$ — και ultim. (habet C). 13.  $\epsilon\sigma\tau\iota\nu\sqrt{.}$

VI. 2. [διδαχησ], [τε bis]. 3. [ποιησομεν]. 6. παραδιγματιζοντασ $\checkmark$ . 7. ερχομενον πολλακισ. 9. αδελφοι (pro αγαπητοι: C cum Steph.). κρισσονα $\checkmark$ . ουτωσ (sic v. 15) $\checkmark$ . 10. — του κοποσ. ενεδειξασθαι $\checkmark$ . 12. μειμηται $\checkmark$ . 13. επαγγιλαμενοσ $\checkmark$ . ειχεν $\checkmark$ . ωμοσεν $\checkmark$ . 14. ει (pro η). 15. επετυχεν $\checkmark$ . 16. — μεν. ομνυουσιν $\checkmark$ . 18. + τον (ante  $\overline{θv}$ : improbat C). προκιμενησ $\checkmark$ . 19. [ασφαλη]. 20. μελχεισεδεκ (non v. 6. 10; vii. 10. 11. 17; at sic vii. 1. 15).

VII. 1. σαλημ' (non  $\mathbf{v}$  2). [του υψ-]. οσ (pro o secund.). 2. εμερισεν απο παντων. εστινν. 3. [αφωμοι.]. 4. [και]. 5. [υιων] λευει (sic  $\mathbf{v}$ . 9)ν. ϊερατιανν. [αποδεκατουν]. τουτεστινν. 6. δεδεκατωκεν (—τον prim.: habet C). ευλογηκενν. 7. κριττονοσ (sic  $\mathbf{v}$ . 19)ν. 9. [ειπειν]. δι. λευει (C -εισ). 10. ετι γαρ inter lineas p.m.ν. — ο. 11. λευειτικησν. επ αυτησ νενομοδετηται. 13. προσεσχηκενν. 14. περι ϊερεων μωυσησ ουδεν ελαλησεν (ουδ. μωυσ. C). 16. σαρκινησ. 17. μαρτυρειτε [i.e.-αι]. 19. [-ζομεν]. 21. (C μετ'). ωμοσενν.—εισ τον αιω. al fin. vers. (habet C in marg., legens μελχισεδεκ'). 22. τοσουτο και (C τοσουτον sine και). κριττονοσν. 23. εισινν. [γεγ. ϊερ.]. 26. [ημιν επρ-]. 27. fin. προσενεγκασ.

VIII. 2. λιτουογοσ√.—και secund. 3. τι  $^{\kappa_3}$   $^{(\kappa_3)}$  p.m. vel  $\Lambda$ ). 4. ουν (pro γαρ). — των ιερεων. — τον (habet C). 5. ϋποδιγματι√. λατρευουσιν √. μωϋσησ. φησιν √. ποιησισ. 6. [νυνι]. τετυχε (C τετευχε). λιτουργιασ √. — εστι διαθ . . . επι κρειττοσ (οb δμοιοτ.). Supplet  $\Lambda$  διαθηκησ εστιν μεσειτησ ητισ επι κοιττο(σ deest): textus p.m. procedit ιν επαγγ. 8. αυτουσ (-τοισ C).  $\overline{ισ}\Lambda$  ( $\overline{ιη}\Lambda$  γ. 10). οικον secund. κον supplet C). √. 9. [-μενου μου]. ενεμιναν √. 10. [-θηκη ην]. εκινασ √. καρδιαν (-ασ C). μοι p.m., at primò μου, απιε εισ λαον. 11. πολιτην (pro πλησιον). ειδησουσιν √. — αυτων prim. 12. — και των ανομιων αυτων (habet C) οb όμοιοτ. 13. κενην √ (non γ. 8). [πεπαλαιωκε].

ΙΧ. 1. [ειχε]. — σκηνη. λατριασν. 3. τα αγια των αγιων. 5. χερουβιν. ενεστιν (pro εστι: εν eras.). 6. ουτωσν. 9. ην (pro ον). συνιδησιν τελιωσαιν. 10. βρωμασινν. πομασινν. δικαιωματα (— και: habet και C). 11. [μελλ.]. 12. εισ τα αγια εφαπαξ εισ τα αγια (εισ τα αγια prim. improbat A)ν. [ευραμ-]. 13. τραγων και ταυρων. 14. (C αγιου pro αιωνιου). [p.m. omnino cum Steph.]. 17. τοτε (pro ποτε: C cum Steph.). εισχυϊν. 18. [ουδ]. ενκεκενισται. 19. (+ τον ante νομον C). + των (ante τραγων: improbat C). εραντισεν (sic v. 21). 20. ενετιλατον. 21. λιτουργιασν. 23. ϋποδιγματαν. κριττοσιν. 24. χιροποιηταν. εισηλθεν αγια. — ο. 25. (+ των αγιων post αγια C). 26. νυνι. + τησ (ante αμαρτιασ). 28. + και (post οντωσ).

Χ. 1. + αυτων (ante ασ). δυνανται. τελιωσαιν. 2. [συκ]. εχινν. συνιδησινν. κεκαθαρισμένουσ. 4. τραγων και ταυρων. αφεριν (ρ p.m., λ primò)ν. 6. [ευδ., sic  $\mathbf{v}$ . 8]. 7.  $-\eta \kappa \omega$  (habet A). 8. θυσιασ και προσφορασ (C cum Steph.).  $-\tau o \nu$ . 9.  $-\sigma \overline{\theta \sigma}$  (habet C). 10.  $-\sigma \iota$ .  $-\tau o \nu$  secund. 11. [ξερευσ]. εστηκέν λιτουργων καθ ημέραν (έστ. καθ ημ. λιτ. C). 12. ουτοσ (pro αυτοσ). εκ δεξια (εν δ. C)ν. 14. τετελιωκένν. 15. ειρηκέναι. 16.

την διανοιαν. 17. μνησθησομαι (C  $\cdot$ σθω). 18. αφεισ ( $^{\sigma}$  p.m.? C). - τουτων (habet C). 20. τουτεστιν $\cdot$ . 22. ρεραντισμένοι (C ερραν-). συνιδησεωσ $\cdot$ . 23. λελουσμένοι. + ημων (post ελπίδοσ: improbat C). 25. εγκαταλιποντέσ. αυτων (C εαυτων). οσον (C οσω). 26. τησ (pro την: C την) $\cdot$ . επιγνωσιαν (α delet A). απολιπεται $\cdot$ . 28. μωϋσέωσ. τρισιν $\cdot$ . 30. εκδικησεισ $\cdot$ . -λεγεί κσ (C λεγί κσ). κρινεί κσ (C cum Steph.). 31. εμπεσιν $\cdot$ . χιρασ $\cdot$ . 32. (C habet αναμιμνησκέσθαι). αμαρτία ϋμων (pro ημέρασ: A C ημέρασ: -υμων C). 33. ονιδισμοίσ $\cdot$  θλίψεσιν $\cdot$ . 34. [δεσμοίσ μου]. γινωσκο $\cdot$  (sic). εαυτούσ κρισσονα (- εν  $\cdot$   $\cdot$   $\cdot$   $\cdot$   $\cdot$   $\cdot$   $\cdot$   $\cdot$  ενουρανοίσ (habet C). 35. μεγαλην μισθαποδοσίαν. 36. χρίαν εχέτε (έχ. χρ. C). κομισασθαί. 37. χρόνισει ( $\cdot$  είτ C). 38. + μου (post δίκαιος). ϋποστίληται $\cdot$ . 39. απωλίασ ( $\cdot$ λίαν  $\cdot$  C).

XI. 1. εστιν√. 3. πιστι (non vv. 5. 7. 27; at sic vv. 4. 8. 9. 11. 21. 22. 23. 24. 28. 29. 30. 31) V. φαιν[ομενω supplet A] V. το βλεπομενον. 4. προσηνεγκεν $\sqrt{}$ . τω  $\overline{\theta}$ ω (pro του  $\overline{\theta}$ υ: C cum Steph.). fin. λαλει. 5. ηθρισκετο. οτι (pro διοτι: A C cum Steph.).  $\mu \epsilon \tau \epsilon \tau \epsilon \theta \eta \kappa \epsilon \nu \ (\mu \epsilon \tau \epsilon \theta \eta \kappa \epsilon \nu \ A? \ C). - autou \ (habet \ C). \ [ \epsilon \upsilon \eta \rho. ].$ 6.  $-\tau\omega$  (habet C).  $\epsilon\sigma\tau\iota\nu\sqrt{.}$   $\gamma\epsilon\iota\nu\epsilon\tau\alpha\iota\sqrt{.}$  7.  $\kappa\alpha\tau\epsilon\sigma\kappa\epsilon\nu\alpha\sigma\epsilon\nu\sqrt{.}$   $\lceil\kappa\alpha\tau$ - $\epsilon \kappa \rho \iota \nu \epsilon$ ]. 8. [- $\tau \iota \kappa \alpha \lambda$ -]. —  $\tau \circ \nu$  (habel C).  $\eta \mu \epsilon \lambda \lambda \epsilon \nu \kappa \lambda \eta \rho \circ \nu \circ \mu \iota \alpha \nu$ λαμβανιν (-εισ: supplet post ημ. A vel p.m.: at C. λαμ. εισ κλ.). εξηλθεν. 9. - την. συνκλ. - τησ ult. (Α τησ αυτησ επαγγ. C τησ  $\epsilon\pi$ .  $\tau\eta\sigma$  aut $\eta\sigma$  cum Steph.). 11.  $\epsilon\lambda\alpha\beta\epsilon\nu$ .  $-\epsilon\tau\epsilon\kappa\epsilon\nu$  (habet C). 12. [-εννη-]. ωσ η (pro ωσει). χιλοσ $\sqrt{}$ . 13. κομισαμένοι (pro λαβοντεσ: C cum Steph.). - και πεισθεντεσ. 14. [εμφ.]. επιζητουσιν√. 15. μνημονευουσιν (C cum Steph.). εξεβησαν (εξηλθον C cum Steph.). 16. νυν. κριττονοσ . επεσχυνεται. ητοιμασεν. 17. πειστι (sic v. 20)√. ϊσακ (sic v. 18). πιραζομενοσ√. 19. εγιρειν δυνατοσ. 20. πειστι περι. ευλογησεν (-ισαακ: A supplet ϊσακ, C ϊσαακ). 21.  $\"{ι}ωσηφ'$  (non v. 22).  $ευλογησεν√. 22. <math>\overline{\iotaσηλ}√.$  εμνημονευσεν $\sqrt{.}$  ενετιλατο $\sqrt{.}$  23. μωϋσησ (sic  $\sqrt{.}$  24). αστιον $\sqrt{.}$  [διαταγμα]. 25. συνκακουχισθαι $\sqrt{.}$  26. μιζονα $\sqrt{.}$  αιγυπτου (-εν). απεβλεπεν. 27. εκαρτερησεν. 28. πεποιηκεν. [ολοθρευων]. 29.  $+ \gamma \eta \sigma$  (post  $\xi \eta \rho \alpha \sigma$ ). 30.  $\ddot{\epsilon} \rho \epsilon i \chi \omega \epsilon \pi \epsilon \sigma \alpha \nu$ . 31.  $\rho \alpha \alpha \beta' \sqrt{.} + \epsilon \pi i$ λεγομενη (ante πορνη: improbat C). απιθησασιν. 32. επιλειψι. με γαρ. -τε και prim. -και tert.  $δαυειδ' <math>\sqrt{}$ .  $-ουηλ' \sqrt{}$ . 33. ηργασαντο (ειργ- C). 34. μαχαιρησ (sic v. 37). εδυναμωθησαν (C ενεδ.). 35. γυναικασ (C cum Steph.). κριττονοσ . 36. ενπεγμων . πιραν $\sqrt{.}$  37. επιρασθησαν επρισθησαν. αιγιοισ $\sqrt{.}$  38. επι (pro εν). [ορεσί]. 39. [την επ.]. 40. κριττον $\sqrt{\ }$ . τελιωθωσιν $\sqrt{\ }$ .

ΧΙΙ. 1, ημισ $\sqrt{.}$  τηλικουτον (C τοσουτον cum Steph.). 2.  $\ddot{v}$ πεμινεν $\sqrt{.}$  — του  $\overline{\theta v}$  (όμοιοτ.). κεκαθικεν. 3. εαυτουσ (pro αυτον:

αυτουσ C). 4. [αντικ-]. ανταγωιζομενοι ( et αγω in litura scripsit A, ut videtur). 5. εκλελησθαι. παιδιασ. 7. εισ παιδιαν  $\ddot{v}$ πομενετε $^{\circ}$  (— ει). — εστιν (habet C). 8. παιδιασ√. [γεγονασι]. και ουχ' ϋϊοι εστε. 9. [ενετρ.]: πολυ (pro πολλω). (+ δε post πολυ C). 10. init. ο (C οι)√. ∈ π∈δ∈νον√. — <math>∈ισ το (habet C). 11. μεν (pro δε prim.: δε C). παιδια/. ϊρηνικον/. αποδιδωσιν/. 12. χιρασ. 13. ποιειτε. 14. ουδισ. 15. [δια ταυτησ]. μιανθωσιν οι π. 16. [απεδοτο]. fin. εαυτου (αυτου C cum Steph.). 17. ευρεν $\sqrt{.}$  18. — ορει. ζοφω (pro σκοτω: C cum Steph.). 19. — μη (habet C). 20. init. ουκ (primò θ loco o?)√. - η βολιδι κατατοξευθησεται. 21. [ουτω, ουτωσ C]. η (pro  $\eta \nu$ ). μωϋσησ.—ειμι (habet C). fin. εκτρομοσ. 22. τηλμ. 23. απογεγραμμενων εν ουρανοισ. [πνασι (ν C)]. τελιων δεδικαιωμενοισ (C δικαιων τετελιωμενων). 24. κριττον. [τον αβ.]. 25. εξεφυγον επι γησ (-τονet τησ: C habet εφυγον τον). + τον (ante χρηματιζοντα: improbat C). πολυ (pro πολλω). 26. εσαλευσεν. σισω (pro σειω).

27. την των σαλευομένων μεταθέσιν (την supra C). μινην. 28. εχομέν. λατρειομέν. fin. μέτα ευλαβίασ και δέουσ (C αίδους pro δέουσ, sed restitutum δέουσ).

ΧΙΙΙ. 2. την φιλοξενιαν (τησ -ιασ C). 3. μιμνησκεσθαιν. 4. πασιν (sic v. 18)  $\checkmark$ . γαρ (pro δε). κρινιν. 5. εγκαταλειπω. 6. — και (habet C). 7. μιμεισθαιν. 8. εχθεσ. 9. παραφερεσθε. βεβαιουσθεν. περιπατουντεσ (C cum Steph.). 10. [εξουσιαν]. 11. [αιμα περι αμαρτιασ]. 12. (επαθεν C marg.). — επαθε p.m. 15. — ουν (habet C). τουτεστινν. 16. ευαρεστιταιν. 17. (C + αυτοισ ante αυτοι). ποιωσινν. 18. Loco πεποιθαμεν (quod habet C) p.m. legit errore στι καλή θα: sequente γαρ κ.τ.λ. Constat autem exemplar, quod describebat p.m., legisse πειθομεθα cum Codd. A

C D M. συνϊδησινν. 19. ταχειονν (non v. 23). 21.  $-\epsilon \rho \gamma \omega$ . + αυτω (ante ποιων: improbat C). ημιν (pro υμιν). [των αιωνων]. 22. [ανεχεσθε].  $-\gamma$ αρ (habet C).  $\epsilon \pi \epsilon \sigma \tau \iota \lambda \alpha v$ . 23.  $\gamma \epsilon \iota \nu \omega \sigma \kappa \epsilon \tau \epsilon v$ . + ημων (post αδελφον: improbat C).  $\epsilon \rho \chi \eta \sigma \theta \epsilon$  ( $\epsilon \rho \chi \eta \tau \alpha \iota$  C cum Steph.). 24. ασπασασθαιν. 25. fin. - αμην (habet C)

Subscr. προσ εβραιουσ.

στιχοι ψν ε. m.

προσ τιμοθέον α.

Cap. I. 1.  $\chi v$  iv. επαγγελιαν (pro επιταγην).  $\overline{opo}$  (ii. 3)  $\checkmark$ .  $[\overline{\kappa v}$  iv  $\chi v]$ . 2.  $\pi \iota \sigma \tau \iota \checkmark$  (non v. 4). "iρηνη. — ημων prim. (habet C). 3.  $\mu$ ακαιδονιαν $\checkmark$ .  $\pi aραγγιλησ<math>\checkmark$ .  $\tau \iota \sigma \iota v \checkmark$ . ετεροδιδασκαλιν $\checkmark$ . 4. εκζητησεισ.  $[\pi aρεχουσι]$ . [οικονομιαν]. 7. λεγουσιν $\checkmark$ . 8.  $[\chi ρηται]$ . 9. κιται $\checkmark$ . [ασεβεσι].  $πατρολωαισ. <math>\mu$ ητρολωαισ. 12. init. — και. ενδυναμουντι (— $\mu$ ε: at - $\mu$ ωσαντι  $\mu$ ε C). 13. init. το (pro τον). [-τα βλ-]. αλλα. 14.  $"iπερεπλεονασεν<math>\checkmark$ . 15. — τον. 16. ενδιξηται $\checkmark$ . [iσ  $\chi σ$ ]. απασαν. + 'αγαθων' (ante πιστευειν: ''p.m.?). 17. — σοφω (habet C). 18. στρατευση (C cum Steph.). 19. συνιδησιν. 20. "iμενευσ. [παιδευθωσι]. βλασφημιν.

II. 2. ευσεβιαν. 3. — γαρ (habet C). 4. ελθινν. 5. μεσειτησν. 6. και μαρτυριον (το pro και C). 7. κηρυξ'ν. (εν  $\overline{\chi}\omega$  improbat C). γνωσι (pro  $\pi$ ιστει). 8. χιρασν. [διαλογισμου p.m., σμων C). 9. — και prim. (habet C). — τασ. (C κοσμωσ). κοσμινν. και χρυσω (—  $\eta$  prim.). 12. διδασκιν δε γνναικι. [αλλ]. 14. εξαπατηθεισα (C cum Steph.). γεγονενν. 15. μινωσινν.  $\pi$ ιστιν.

III. 2 διν. ανεπιλημπτον. νηφαλιον (C -λαιον). 3. — μη αισχροκερδη. αλλα. 4. προϊστανομενον (non v. 12). 5. οιδενν. 7. — αυτον. εχινν. ονιδισμονν. 8. — σεμνουσ (habet C). 9. και καθαρασ συνειδησεωσ (pro εν κ. σ.: C cum Steph., at καθαρασ C errore). 10. δοκειμαζεσθωσανν. διακονιτωσανν. 11. νηφαλιουσ. πασινν. 13. πιστιν. 14. ελθινν. [ταχιον]. 15. αληθιασν. 16. εστινν. οσ (pro  $\theta \sigma$ : at θεδσ sic plenè E [XII cent.] antiquissimd scripturά salvå: cf. ed. maj. tab. xvii). ανελημφθη.

ΙV. 1.  $[\pi \nu a \sigma i]$ . διδασκαλείασ (-λείαισ C). 2. κεκαυστηρίασμενων. συνιδησίν $\sqrt{\cdot}$  3. μεταλημψιν.  $[\epsilon \pi \epsilon \gamma \nu \omega \kappa \sigma i]$ . αληθίαν $\sqrt{\cdot}$  6.  $\overline{\chi} \nu$   $i \nu$ .  $[\pi a \rho \eta \kappa o \lambda o \nu \theta \eta \kappa a \sigma]$ . 7. ευσεβίαν $\sqrt{\cdot}$  8. — προσ p r i m. (habet C). 9. — πασησ (habet C). 10. — και p r i m. αγωνιζομέθα (C ονιδιζομέθα: Steph. ονείδ.). εστιν $\sqrt{\cdot}$ . 12. μηδίσ $\sqrt{\cdot}$ . καταφρονίτω —  $\epsilon \nu$ πνευματι. πιστι $\checkmark$ . αγνια $\checkmark$ . 14. πρεσβυτερου (-τεριου  $^{\circ}$  C cum Steph.). 15. — εν secund. 16. fin.— σου (habet  $^{\circ}$ C).

V. 1. — ωσ πατερα (habet C). 2. αγνιαν΄. 4. ευσεβινν΄. εστιν. — καλον και. 5. επι  $\overline{\kappa\nu}$  (C cum Steph. επι τον  $\overline{\nu}$ ν). δεησεσινν΄. 6. τεθνηκενν΄. 7. init. (και improbat C). ανεπιλημπτοι. 8. — των secund. οικιωνν΄. προνοείται (C cum Steph.). 10. επηκολουθησενν΄. 11. καταστρηνιασωσινν΄. γαμιν (sic v. 14)ν΄. 13. μανθανουσινν΄. 14. οικοδεσποτινν΄. 15. [τινεσ εξετραπησαν]. 16. — πιστοσ  $\eta$ . επαρκείσθω. 18. γραρ (· p.m.)ν΄. [β. α. ον φ.]. ου μισθου rescripsit A: "Non dubito quin antea [i. e. p.m.] τησ τροφησ scriptum fuerit, licet prorsus rasum sit" Tischend. 20. [τουσ αμαρ-]. εχωσινν΄. 21.  $\overline{\chi\nu}$   $\overline{\nu}$   $\overline{\nu}$

VI. 1.  $\dot{\pi}$  τουσ (\* p.m.)  $\checkmark$ . 2. καταφρονιτωσαν  $\checkmark$ . — οτι αδελφοι εισιν (habet C). εισιν secund,  $\checkmark$ . 3. προσεχετε (C cum Steph.). [ϋγιαινουσι]. ευσεβιαν (sic v. 5)  $\checkmark$ . 4. [ερισ]. 5. διαπαρατριβαι. — αφιστασο απο των τοιουτων. 6. εστιν  $\checkmark$ . 7. — δηλον (habet C). 8. [αρκεσθησομεθα]. 9. πλουτιν  $\checkmark$ . πιρασμον  $\checkmark$ . [βυθιζουσι]. απωλιαν  $\checkmark$ . 10. ποικιλαισ (pro πολλαισ: C cum Steph.). 11. — του (habet C). — ευσεβείαν (C habet ευσεβιαν). fin. πραυπαθιαν (C πραυτητα). 12. — και prim. 13. — σοι (habet C). — του prim. [ζωσποι-].  $\overleftarrow{\imath}$   $\overleftarrow{\imath}$   $\overleftarrow{\imath}$  14. ανεπιλημπτον.  $\overleftarrow{\imath}$   $\overleftarrow{\imath}$   $\overleftarrow{\imath}$  15. διξει  $\checkmark$ . 16. + το (ante κρατοσ). 17. καιρω (pro αιωνι: C cum Steph.).  $\overleftarrow{\imath}$   $\overleftarrow{\imath}$  ψηλα φρονιν. επι (pro εν secund.). — τω secund. — τω ζωντι. ημιν παντα πλουσιωσ. 18. πλουτιν  $\checkmark$ . 19. οντωσ (pro αιωνιου). 20. παραθηκην. 21. μεθ υμων (pro μετα σου). — αμην (habet C).

Subser. προσ τιμοθέον α.

στιχω Qν 8. m.

προσ τιμοθέον β.

Cap. I. 1.  $\chi v$  iv. επαγγελιασ. 2.  $\tilde{\iota}\rho \eta \nu \eta \sqrt{\cdot}$  κυ iv  $\chi v$  του κυ (at C  $\chi v$  iv του κυ). 3. συνιδησιν. μνιανν. δεησεσινν. 5. λαβων (C λαμβανων cum Steph.). ενωκησενν. ευνικη. πεπισμαιν. 6. θελημα (pro χαρισμα: C cum Steph.). χιρωνν. 8. επεσχυνθησν.  $-\eta \mu \omega v$  (habet A). συνκακ. 9. κατα Ιδιαν. δοθισανν. αιωνιων (-ιων C cum Steph.). 10.  $\chi v$  iv (iv  $\chi v$  vult C). 11.  $-\epsilon \theta v \omega v$  (habet C). 12.  $-\kappa \alpha v$  prim. (habet C). πεπισμαιν. εστινν. [παραθηκην]. εκινηνν. 14. παραθηκην. 15. εστινν. φυγελοσ. 16. ανεψυξενν. [επησχυνθη: at C primò επαισ.]. 17. σπουδαιωσ. εξητησενν. ευρενν. 18. διηκονησενν.

ΙΙ. 3. συγκακοπαθησον (- συ ουν).  $\overline{\chi v}$   $\overline{\iota v}$ . 4. εμπλεκετεν. τραγματιαισν. 6. πρωστερον ( $\cdot$  p.m.: at πρωτον C). μεταλαμ-Βανινν. 7. σ (pro  $\alpha$ : C cum Steph.). δωσει. πασινν. 8. δαδ. 9. αλλα. - ου (habet C). 10. τυχωσινν. 11. συνζησομεν. 12. συνβασιλευσομεν. αρνησομεθα (C cum Steph.). 13. εκινοσν. + γαρ (post αρνησασθαι: improbat C). 14.  $\overline{\theta v}$  (pro  $\overline{\kappa v}$ ). [λογο-10 μαχειν]. επ (pro εισ: C cum Steph.). 15. ανεπεσχυντον. 17. εξιν. 18. αληθιαν ν. — την secund. ανατρεπουσιν. την πιστιν τη τινων (την π. τινων C). 19.  $\overline{\kappa v}$  (pro  $\overline{\theta v}$ : C cum Steph.). 19. + παντωσ (ante τουσ οντασ: improbat C). fin.  $\overline{\kappa v}$  (pro  $\overline{\chi v}$ ). 20. εστιν. 21. — εσται σκενοσ (habet A). — και (habet C). 22. [μετα  $\tau \omega v$ ]. 23. απεδευτουσν. ζητησισν. [γεννωσι]. 24. αλλα. 25. πραϋτητι. πεδευονταν. δωη (δω C cum Steph.). — μετανοιαν (habet C).

ΙΙΙ. 1. [γινωσκε]. 2. -οι. απιθεισ $\sqrt{\cdot}$  3. - αστοργοι (δμοιοτ.). 5. ευσεβιασ $\sqrt{\cdot}$  6. αιχμαλωτιζοντεσ.-τα. 7. αληθιασ $\sqrt{\cdot}$  (non v. 8). 3. ουτωσ $\sqrt{\cdot}$  9. εκινων $\sqrt{\cdot}$  10. παρηκολουθησασ. πιστι $\sqrt{\cdot}$  11. αντισχια $\sqrt{\cdot}$  είκονιω $\sqrt{\cdot}$  [ερρυσατο]. 12. ζην ευσεβωσ. 14. τινων (proτινοσ). 15. -τα prim. 16. ελεγμον. παιδιαν $\sqrt{\cdot}$

ΙV. 1. - ουν  $\epsilon \gamma \omega$ .  $\overline{\chi} \overline{v}$   $\overline{v}$   $(-\tau v \overline{\kappa} v)$ .  $\kappa \rho i \nu i \nu \sqrt{\epsilon}$ . καὶ  $(pro \kappa \alpha \tau \alpha \epsilon)$  C cum Steph). 2. παρακαλέσον επιτιμησόν (C cum Steph).  $\mu \alpha \sigma \eta$   $(pro \pi \alpha \sigma \eta) \sqrt{\epsilon}$ . 3.  $\tilde{\epsilon} \delta i \alpha \sigma \epsilon \pi i \theta \nu \mu i \alpha \sigma$   $(pro \epsilon \pi \epsilon \tau \alpha \sigma \epsilon \delta \epsilon)$ .  $\epsilon \pi i \sigma \omega \rho \epsilon v \epsilon \tau$  1 Tim. 2 Tim. i. 1—iv. 3.

τουσιν. 4. αληθιασ. 5. πασιν.— κακοπαθησον (habet C). 6. τησ αναλυσεώσ μου. εφεστηκεν. 7. τον καλον αγωνα. 8. εκινη. [πασι:  $\mathbf{C}$  -ιν]. — τοισ ηγαπηκοσι ( $\mathbf{C}$  habet τοισ ηγαπηκοσιν). 9. ελθιν. 10. [-λιπεν]. γαλλιαν ( $\mathbf{pro}$  γαλατιαν). [δαλμ.]. 11. εστιν.  $\mathbf{bis}$ . [αγε]. 12. απεστιλαν. 13. φελουην. [απελιπον]. 14. ενεδίξατον. αποδωσει.  $\mathbf{fin}$ . — αυτου (habet C). 15. αντεστη ( $\mathbf{C}$  ανθεστηκεν). 16. παρεγενετο ( $\mathbf{C}$  συνπαρ.). ενκατελιπον. λο

Subscr. προσ τιμοθεον.

στιχων ρπ ε.m.

προσ τιτον.

Cap. I. 1.  $[iv \overline{\chi}v]$ . 3. εφανερωσενν. 4. και  $(pro \epsilon \lambda \epsilon o \sigma)$ ,  $\overline{\chi}v \overline{\iota}v$   $(-\kappa v)$ . 5. απελιπον  $(\kappa \alpha \tau \epsilon \lambda \iota \pi o v C \ cum \ Steph.)$ . λιποντα.  $[-\theta \omega \sigma \eta]$ . 6. ανήεγκλητος  $(*p.m., \eta \ eras.)$ ν. 7. ως  $\overline{\theta}v$  οικονομον  $p.m. \ vel \ A$  rescripsit. 9. ελεγχινν. 10. εισινν.  $-\kappa \alpha\iota \ prim. \ [-\sigma \tau \alpha \ ol]$ .  $+\tau \eta \sigma \ (ante \ \pi \epsilon \rho \iota \tau o \eta \sigma)$ . 11. ανατρεπουσινν. διν. 12. ειπενν.  $+\delta e \ (ante \ \tau \iota \sigma : \ improbat \ C)$ . 13.  $-\epsilon v \ (habet \ A)$ . πιστιν. 14. αληθιανν. 15.  $-\mu \epsilon v \ (habet \ C)$ .  $\mu \epsilon \mu \iota \mu \mu \nu \iota o \iota \sigma$ . 16. απιθεισν.  $-\kappa \alpha\iota \ (ante \ \pi \rho o \sigma : \ habet \ C)$ .  $-\alpha \gamma \alpha \theta o v \ (habet \ A, \ \alpha \gamma \alpha \theta \ in \ litur a \ scribens)$ .

II. 1. α λαλει α (sic). πρεπιν. 2. [-λιουσ]. πιστιν. 3. ῖεροπρεπισν. μηδε (pro μη secund.: C cum Steph.). 4. σωφρονιζουσι (-ζωσι C). 5. οικουργουσ (C cum Steph.). ϋποτασσομεναι p.m. (-ασ s.m.). 7. τυπον παρεχομενοσ (C cum Steph.). αφθοριαν (αδιαφθ. C cum Steph.). — αφθαρσιαν. 8. εχων (ν p.m.?)  $\sqrt{}$ . λεγειν περι ημων (non υμων). 10. — πιστιν (C habet post πασαν). ενδικνυμενουσ $\sqrt{}$ . την του σρσ ημων (non υμων). 11. — η secund.

σωτηροσ (C cum Steph.). 12. πεδευουσαν. 13.  $\overline{\chi v}$   $\overline{\iota v}$  ( $\overline{\iota v}$   $\overline{\chi v}$  C) [caetera cum Steph.]. 14. αυτον (pro εαυτον: C cum Steph.]. 15. μηδισν.

III. 1. — και. πιθαρχινν. αγαθουσ (C cum Steph.). 2. βλασφημινν. ενδικνυσθαι. σπουδητα (sic p.m., diversas lectiones σπουδην et πρα... τα intermiscens: Tischend. Proleg. p. xxiii: C ενδικνυμενουσ πραστητα). 3. απιθεισν. + εν (ante επιθυμιαισ: improbat C). στυγηται (-τοι C). μεισουντεσν. 5. α (pro ων). το αυτου ελεοσ. παλινγενεσιασ. 7. δικαιωθεντοσ (sic). γενηθωμεν (C cum Steph.). 8. διαβεβεουσθαιν. φροντιζωσινν.— τω. εστινν.— τα. 9. ζητησισν. εριν (C ερισ). εισινν. ανωφελισν. 10. [και δευ. νουθ.]. 12. νεικοπολινν. παραχιμασαιν. 13. απολλω. λιπη. 14. χριασν. 15. πιστιν.— αμην (habet C).

Subscr. προσ τιτον. στιχων q= s.m.

προσ φιλημονα.

Ver. 2. αδελφη (pro αγαπητη). συνστρατιωτη (συ: et p.m. et C  $^-$ ). 3. — ημων (habet C). 4. μνιανν. [προσ τον  $\overline{\kappa \nu}$ ]. 6. διακονια (pro κοινωνια). επιγνωσιν. [του εν υμιν]. —  $\overline{\iota \nu}$  (habet C). 7. init. χαραν. πολλην εσχον. — και παρακλησιν. 8. επιτασσινν. 9.  $\overline{\chi \nu}$   $\overline{\iota \nu}$ . 10. fin. — μου (habet C). 11.  $^+\nu \nu$  νιν. + και (ante σοι secund.: delet C, sed rursus restitutum). 11, 12. ανεπεμψα σοι ( $^-$ δε: C cum Steph.). 12. τουτεστινν. — προσλαβου (habet C). 13. ηβουλομην. κατεχινν. μοι διακονη. 16. αλλα.—αδελφον (habet C). 17. με (pro εμε). 18. ηδικησενν. οφιλειν. ελλογα (C? ελλογι, at a iterum restitutum). 19. προσοφιλεισν. 20. fin.  $\overline{\chi}\omega$  (pro  $\overline{\kappa}\omega$  secund.). 21. α (pro o). 23. ασπαζεται. 25. — ημων. [αμην].

Subscr. προσ φιλημονα. στιχων [deest numerus] s.m.

In Epistulis Paulinis longè plurimas secundae manus correctiones praebet C, ad textum receptum praecipuè accommodatas. A post C creberrimus est: A obliq. rarò occurrit; A2 et C2 bis terve; E tantum ad 1 Tim. iii. 16; B D haud semel.

[2 Tim. iv. 3-22. Titus. Philemon.]

CONTENTS.

PREFACE							PAGE V
CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE FROM THE BIRTH OF CHRIS							ix
INTRODUCTION TO THE EPISTLE GENERAL OF							1
GENERAL EPISTLE OF St. JAMES	•		•				13
INTRODUCTION TO THE FIRST EPISTLE GENE	ERAL OF S	St. PETH	ER				36
FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. PETER .		• •		•			46
INTRODUCTION TO THE SECOND EPISTLE GEN	NERAL OF	Sr. PET	EŖ				70
SECOND EPISTLE GENERAL OF St. PETER .		• . •	٠				82
INTRODUCTION TO THE FIRST EPISTLE GENE	RAL OF ST	r. JOHN					98
FIRST EPISTLE GENERAL OF St. JOHN .		•	٠				107
INTRODUCTION TO THE SECOND EPISTLE OF	St. JOHN						127
SECOND EPISTLE OF St. JOHN		•					131
INTRODUCTION TO THE THIRD EPISTLE OF S	T. JOHN						133
THIRD EPISTLE OF ST. JOHN	•	•					134
INTRODUCTION TO THE EPISTLE GENERAL OF	ST. JUD	Ε.					136
GENERAL EPISTLE OF St. JUDE							140
INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF REVELAT	CION						147
THE BOOK OF REVELATION	•						166
INDEX of WORDS	•	• •	•		•		1
INDEX of MATTERS	•	• •	•				14
INDEX of AUTHORS							48

NOTICE.

A collation of the Codex Sinaiticus (8), as published by Tischendorf in 1863, has been added to this edition. As a guarantee for the accuracy of this collation, it may suffice to mention, that it has been made by the Rev. F. H. SCRIVENER, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, Rector of Gerrans, Cornwall, Editor of Codex Augiensis, 1859, and Author of a Plain Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament, Cambridge, 1861.

With regard to the collation of the Apocalypse, Mr. Serivener states, as the result of his examination, that "out of the 405 verses of the Apoc., Cod. c is extant in but These 239 verses contain 993 various readings in the four uncials NABC, excluding all itacisms, clerical errors, and the like.

"The 993 various readings may be classed as follows:—

Peculiar to s, with or without the support of cursives, 310, or nearly one-third of the whole.

All the uncials NACB agree in 188 places.

MA in only 24. ℵB in S9.

NAB in 64. 8AC in 170.

NC in 52.

SEC in 96.

"On the whole & is most united with AC, rarely with A alone, most with B alone, but seldom in very peculiar readings: most with c in places where c is nearly alone. On the whole oftener with c than with B, with B oftener than with A.

"My inference is that & is quite an independent witness, frequently confirming the best cursives (e.g. 38. 95) against ABC united."

The pages of this collation will be supplied gratuitously to purchasers of former impressions of the present edition of the General Epistles and Book of Revelation, on application to the Publishers.

Cloisters, Westminster, May 2, 1864.

PREFACE.

THE CATHOLIC OF GENERAL EPISTLES,—probably so called because they are not inscribed to any particular Churches ',—have an intimate connexion with the Epistles of St. Paul, and with each other.

The Epistles of St. Paul, as has been already observed 2, eaght not to be regarded as separate compositions without mutual coherence, but as connected together, and as forming an harmonious system of Apostolic instruction in Christian Faith and Practice.

Accordingly, those Epistles will be studied with the greatest profit, when read in chronological order.

The Epistles of St. Paul receive also additional light from the Catholic Epistles, and reflect much light upon them.

The Epistles of St. Paul to the Galatians and Romans, for example, cannot be duly understood, unless they are viewed in connexion with the General Epistle of St. James; and on the other hand, the Epistle of St. James may perhaps be liable to misapprehension, unless set in juxtaposition with the Epistles of St. Paul to the Galatians and to the Romans.

But when those Epistles of the two holy Apostles are placed together, they will be found to be adjusted to each other, and to fit in to each other with nice accuracy and exact precision; and, when thus combined, they form a complete body of Apostolic doctrine on the great article of Justification; and they afford a sufficient safeguard against erroneous teaching from two opposite sides, by which that doctrine has been assailed. This will be more fully demonstrated in the Introduction to the Epistle of St. James <sup>3</sup>.

In like manner, the two General Epistles of St. Peter have a near relation to the Epistles of St. Paul. They add strength and support to them, and are strengthened and supported by them.

St. Peter's First General Epistle bears a remarkable resemblance to St. Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians; and St. Peter's Second General Epistle occupies a similar place to that which is filled by St. Paul's Epistle to the Colossians. In the doctrinal substance of his teaching, and in the practical application of the great principles of the Christian Faith to moral and social Duty, St. Peter, in his First Epistle to the Jewish Christians, exhibits his perfect agreement with the Apostle of the Gentiles in his exhortations to the great Gentile Church of Ephesus. In his Second General Epistle, St. Peter adds force and solemnity to the warnings of St. Paul to the Churches of Phrygia, concerning the immoral consequences arising from heretical denials or perversions of those Christian doctrines, which were propounded by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Ephesians, and by St. Peter himself in his First General Epistle.

<sup>1</sup> Œcumenius, Proleg. in Epist. Jacobi. Leontius de sectis, c. 2.

3 See below, pp. 1-3.

&lt;sup>2</sup> See above, the Preface to St. Paul's Epistles, p. vii, and the Introduction to the First Epistle to the Thessalonians, p. 5.

Thus the two great Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul, are seen standing side by side teaching the same divine verities, and uttering the same cautions against corruptions of the Faith.

The proof of this statement will be submitted to the reader's consideration in the Introduction to the Second Epistle of St. Peter.

On one grave question St. Peter had, upon one occasion, differed from St Paul. That difference arose in a discussion concerning the terms and conditions upon which the Gentile converts were to be received into the Christian Church.

The circumstances of that controversy between the two Apostles have been narrated by St. Paul in one of his Epistles, the Epistle to the Galatians<sup>2</sup>.

St. Peter addressed his First Epistle to the Asiatic Christians; and he particularizes the Galatians as among those to whom he writes<sup>3</sup>.

It is remarkable, that in this Epistle St. Peter adopts the very words which are used by St. Paul in his Epistle to the Galatians, concerning that same question which had formerly been an occasion of altercation between them <sup>4</sup>.

It is also observable, that St. Peter, in his Second Epistle, written to the same parties as the first?, and written also a little before his own death?, and, consequently, a little before the death of his brother Apostle, St. Paul, who suffered martyrdom at Rome about the same time as St. Peter?, declares his own affectionate regard for his "beloved brother Paul," and commends "all his Epistles" as "Scripture."

Thus the Holy Spirit, speaking by the mouth of St. Peter a little before his decease, declares the divine Inspiration of St. Paul's Epistles; and by the gifts and graces of faith and love, peace and joy, patience and courage, poured into St. Peter's heart, He enabled him to unite with his brother Apostle, St. Paul, in preaching the same Faith, and in sealing that testimony with his blood.

The Catholic or General Epistles possess also a peculiar interest in their relation to each other.

&lt;sup>1</sup> See below, pp. 70-72.

<sup>2</sup> See Gal. ii. 11-21, and the Review of that chapter in the notes at the end of it.

&lt;sup>3</sup> 1 Pet. i. 1.

&#x27; See below, Introduction to St. Peter's First Epistle, and note on 1 Pet. ii. 16.

<sup>5 2</sup> Pet. iii. 1.

<sup>6 2</sup> Pet. i. 13, 14.

&lt;sup>7</sup> See below, Introduction to St. Peter's First Epistle, p. 44.

&lt;sup>5</sup> See note below on 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16.

vii

The writer of the first of these Epistles is St. James, the Lord's brother, the first Bishop of Jerusalem, who died a Martyr to the faith in that city <sup>1</sup>.

St. James, as we have seen, connects the Catholic Epistles with St. Paul's; and St. Peter in his First Epistle often adopts the language of St. James".

The Holy Spirit, writing by St. Jude, the brother of St. James, frequently reiterates the language of St. Peter's Second Epistle; and displays the fulfilment of the prophecies which had been delivered in that Epistle of St. Peter.

There is also good reason to believe, that the Second Epistle of St. John has an intimate relation, of a very interesting kind, to the First Epistle of St. Peter '.

Thus the Catholic Epistles are connected together in a sacred network, and are woven together in a beautiful texture of substance and expression.

Each of these General Epistles performs also its appointed and appropriate work.

St. James confutes the errors of those who imagined that a speculative knowledge of religion and theoretical profession of belief, is acceptable to God, irrespectively of practical piety; and he exhibits Christian Faith in its true character as the essential energizing principle of Christian Life.

St. Peter, in his First Epistle, follows St. James, and builds up, as it were, a systematic structure of moral duty on the solid foundation of Christian Faith. He applies the doctrines of the Gospel to the social and domestic relations of Rulers and Subjects, Husbands and Wives, Masters and Servants.

In his Second Epistle, St. Peter condemns the erroneous tenets of heretical Teachers, who denied the doctrines of Christ's Godhead and Incarnation, and of the Atonement made by Him on the Cross, and he exposes the immoral consequences of those tenets, and displays the licentious profligacy of those Teachers and their adherents.

St. Jude in his Epistle completes the work of St. Peter. He recalls the attention of the Church to St. Peter's prophetical warnings, and points out the fulfilment of St. Peter's Apostolic forebodings <sup>5</sup>.

St. John also, in his Epistles, had a special work to perform.

His brother Apostles, St. Peter and St. Jude, had denounced the proud presumption, the anarchical lawlessness, and the carnal sensuality of heretical Teachers. St. John deals with the Heresies concerning the Manhood and Divinity of Christ<sup>6</sup>, in their theological bearings on the whole body of Christian Doctrine. He shows that those Heresies corrode and fret away, like a canker, the very vitals of Christian Theology, and destroy the very essence of Christian Faith, Hope, and Charity.

"Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father?." "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life." "This is His commandment, that we should believe on the name of His Son Jesus Christ, and love

&lt;sup>1</sup> A.D. 62. See below, Chronological Table, p. xi, and Introduction to St. James, p. 12, and Chronological Synopsis prefixed to the Acts of the Apostles, p. 25, new edit., or p. xxxvii, 1st edit.

&lt;sup>2</sup> See below, p. 12, note, and on 1 Pet. i. 16.

&lt;sup>3</sup> See the Introduction to St. Jude's Epistle, p. 136.

<sup>4</sup> See below, Introduction to St. John's Second Epistle, p. 127

<sup>5</sup> Jude 17.

Described below, in the Introduction to St. John's First Epistle, pp. 98-101.

&lt;sup>7</sup> 1 John ii, 23.
8 1 John v. 12.

viii PREFACE.

one another '." "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent His Son to be a propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another '." Here is the strongest motive to Christian holiness. "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is. And every one that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself, even as He is pure '."

The Catholic Epistles, thus contemplated, in relation to St. Paul's Epistles, and to each other, are recognized as mutually auxiliary and suppletory to each other; and minister salutary cautions to every age, against heretical error, sectarian divisions, and antinomian licence; and constitute a divinely-organized system of instruction in Christian Doctrine and Practice; and approve themselves to be works of the same Divine Spirit, "dividing to every one severally as He will *."

Thus the Holy Apostles of Christ are seen standing together like beautiful statues, each in its own niche, on the front of some venerable Minster; and join together in the harmonious consent of one Faith, and in grateful ascriptions of glory to God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabaoth; Heaven and Earth are full of Thy Majesty. The glorious Company of the Apostles praise Thee."

The further elucidation of this subject in detail is reserved for the Introductions prefixed to the several Epistles.

The relation of the Apocalypse, or Revelation of St. John, to the other parts of Holy Scripture, will be considered in the Introduction and Notes to that Book 5.

Passing events appear to be imparting a fresh interest of solemn importance to some portions of the Apocalypse. "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy "."

The Editor now reverently commits this last portion of his labours on the New Testament to the gracious favour and blessing of the Divine Author of Holy Scripture, with a devout tribute of thankfulness to Him for His great mercy and goodness in enabling him to bring the work to a close, and with fervent and earnest supplication and prayer, that He would vouchsafe to accept it as an offering of praise, and that He would be pleased to make it subservient and ministerial to His own glory, and to the salvation of souls, through Jesus Christ our Lord. AMEN.

<sup>1 1</sup> John iii. 23.

&lt;sup>2</sup> 1 John iv. 10, 11.

&lt;sup>3</sup> 1 John iii. 1—3.

<sup>4 1</sup> Cor. xii. 11.

&lt;sup>5</sup> Below, pp. 147—162.

&lt;sup>6</sup> Rev. i. 3.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

From the Birth of Christ to the End of the First Century.

Birth of Jesus Christ probably A.u.c. 749, four years before the common era. See on Matt. ii. 20.

Our Lord's Presentation in the Temple, forty days after the Nativity.

Visit of the Wise Men.

Flight into Egypt.

Herod's death, a little before the Passover, A.U.C. 750.

Settlement at Nazareth.

On the sequence of these events, see above on Matt. ii. 9.

A.D.

- 8. Jesus is catechized in the Temple at the Passover (Luke ii. 42—49).
- 14. Death of the Emperor Augustus (19th August). Tiberius succeeds.
- 26. Jesus Christ begins His Ministry (Luke iii. 23; cp. notes on Matt. ii. 9. 20).
- 30. The Crucifixion of Christ at the Passover.

His Ascension, forty days after His Resurrection.

The Descent of the Holy Spirit at the Feast of Pentecost fifty days after the Passover.

31, 32. The Events described in Chapters iii.—vi. of the Acts of the Apostles.

33. St. Stephen's Martyrdom (Acts vii.). Saul was then a young man, νεανίας (vii. 58). St. Philip's Missionary Journey (Acts viii. 5—40).

St. Peter and St. John at Samaria. Simon Magus (Acts viii. 14-24).

34. Saul's Conversion (Acts ix. 1—22): cp. Euseb. II. E. ii. 1; and see note below on 1 Tim. i. 13.

Saul retires to Arabia (Gal. i. 17).

- 36. Pontius Pilate is recalled from his procuratorship in Judæa (Joseph., Ant. xviii. 4. 2). Damascus occupied by Aretas, who appoints an Ethnarch there.
- 37. "After many days" (ix. 23), Saul escapes from Damascus.

Goes up to Jerusalem; where he remains fifteen days, and sees Peter and James (Gal. i. 18, 19. Acts ix. 26, 27); and disputes with the Grecians; Saul is sent to Tarsus (ix. 30).

The Emperor Tiberius dies 16th March; Caligula succeeds.

38-41. "Rest of the Churches" (Acts ix. 31).

St. Peter's Missionary Journey (ix. 32—43). He tarries at Joppa many days (ix. 43). Conversion and Baptism of Cornelius and other Gentiles at Cæsarea (Acts x. 1—48).

41. The Emperor Caligula dies 24th January, and is succeeded by Claudius.

- St. Matthew's Gospel written probably about this time (cp. Introduction, pp. xlix—lii, and note on Acts i. 4).
- 43. Euodius, first Bishop of Antioch (Euseb. Chron. ii. p. 269. Clinton, F. R. App. ii. p. 548). The Disciples first called Christians at Antioch (Acts xi. 26).
- 44. The Apostle St. James, the brother of John, is killed with the sword (Acts xii. 2), and St. Peter is imprisoned by Herod Agrippa, before Easter (xii. 4). Peter is delivered; and Herod is smitten by an Angel, and dies at Cæsarea (xii. 23).

St. Peter departs from Jerusalem "to another place" (xii. 17).

A.D.

- 44. Saul and Barnabas having been deputed by the Christians at Antioch (xi. 27—30) to bring supplies to the brethren in Judæa, on account of the anticipation of the famine foretold by Agabus, which "came to pass in the reign of Claudius Cæsar" (xi. 28), i. e. after January, A.D. 41, returned from Jerusalem to Antioch, with John Mark, who was connected with Peter (xii. 12), and with Barnabas. (See on xv. 39.)
- The Ordination of Saul and Barnabas, at Antioch, to the Apostleship of the Gentiles. (See on xiii. 1.) Saul is henceforth called Paul. (See Acts xiii. 9.) St. Paul's "Visions and Revelations of the Lord" seem to have been vouchsafed to him about this time. (See on 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3.)
  - Their first Missionary Journey to Cyprus (Paphos), and Pisidia, and Perga in Pamphylia (xiii. 4—13), whence Mark returns to Jerusalem. They visit Antioch in Pisidia, Iconium, Lystra; return to Perga in Pamphylia, and thence come back to the place of their ordination, Antioch, where they remain a considerable time with the disciples (Acts xiv. 26—28).
- 49. A controversy arises at Antioch concerning the obligation of the Ceremonial Law (xv. 1, 2).
  - Paul and Barnabas, and some others, are deputed to go from Antioch to Jerusalem, "to the Apostles and Elders," concerning this matter (xv. 2, 3).
- 50, 51. Council of Jerusalem, at which Peter and James, Paul and Barnabas, are present (xv. 6-29).
  - Paul and Barnabas return to Antioch, where they remain some time (xv. 35, 36). Dispute of St. Paul and St. Peter at Antioch, concerning the Ceremonial Law. St. Peter is rebuked by St. Paul (Gal. ii. 11—13).

The altercation and separation of Paul and Barnabas (Acts xv. 39).

- Paul takes Silas (xv. 40) on his second Missionary Journey, and afterwards Timothy also at Lystra (xvi. 1).
- 52-54. St. Paul passes through Phrygia and Galatia to Troas (xvi. 6, 8). Thence crosses over to Philippi (xvi. 12), Thessalonica (xvii. 1), Berœa (xvii. 10); thence to Athens (xvii. 15).
  - St. Luke's Gospel written probably about this time. See the Introduction to that Gospel, p. 168, and notes on 1 Thess. v. 2, 27, and 2 Cor. viii. 18; and ep. Clem. Alex. in Euseb. vi. 14.
  - St. Paul comes to Corinth, where he spends a year and six months (xviii. 1. 11).

Aquila and Priscilla come to Corinth.

- St. Paul writes his two Epistles to the Thessalonians. See the Introduction to those Epistles, pp. 1, 2, and 25.
- St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians written probably about this time from Corinth. See the Introduction to that Epistle, pp. 36—41.
- St. Paul sets sail from Cenchreæ in the spring for Ephesus, on his way to Jerusalem, for the Feast, probably Pentecost (xviii. 18, 19).

The Emperor Claudius dies (13th October, A.D. 57), and Nero succeeds.

After a short visit at Jerusalem (xviii. 21),

- St. Paul returns by way of Antioch, where he spends some time (xviii. 22), and Galatia and Phrygia, where he confirms all the disciples (xviii. 23), and by the upper regions of Asia Minor (xix. 1) to Ephesus; where he spends three years (xx. 31)—three months in the Synagogue, and two years in the school of Tyrannus (xix. 8—10).
- 57. St. Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians. See Introduction to that Epistle, pp. 75-77.

St. Paul, after three years' stay at Ephesus, quits it for Macedonia (xx. 1).

- St. Paul's second Epistle to the Corinthians. See Introduction to that Epistle, p. 143. Comes into Hellas, and spends three months there (xx. 3).
- St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, written at Corinth or Cenchree. See Introduction to it, p. 203. St. Paul returns to Macedonia in the Spring, and arrives at Philippi for Easter (xx. 6)
  - Passes over to Troas (xx. 6). Touches at Miletus, where he bids farewell to the Presbyters of Ephesus, and gives them an Apostolic charge (xx. 17), and Tyre (xxi. 3), and lands at Cæsarea (xxi. 8). Comes to Jerusalem after several years (xxiv. 17), for the Feast of Pentecost (xx. 16; xxi. 17), and brings with him the alms (Acts xxiv.) which he had been collecting in Asia and Greece for the poor saints at Jerusalem. (Rom. xv.

A.D.

61.

25, 26. 1 Cor. xvi. 1; see on 2 Cor. viii. 18; ix. 1—12.) He is accompanied by St. Luke now and till his arrival in Rome, A.D. 61; see also below on A.D. 67.

58. St. Paul is arrested by Jews at Jerusalem in the Temple (xxi. 28).

Is conveyed to Cæsarea (xxiii. 23—33).

58-60. Remains two years in detention at Cæsarea (xxiv. 27).

Epistle General of St. James. See below, p. 12.

St. Paul is sent by Festus, in the Autumn of A.D. 60, by sea toward Rome (xxvii. 1); is accompanied in his voyage by St. Luke and Aristarchus.

Winters at Malta (xxviii. 11).

Spring; St. Paul arrives, with St. Luke, at Rome.

62. Martyrdom of St. James the Bishop of Jerusalem, at the Passover. See below, p. 12, and Chronological Synopsis prefixed to the Acts, p. 25.

62, 63. St. Paul is at Rome, where he writes the Epistles to the Ephesians, Colossians (see Introduction to Ephesians, p. 269), and to Philemon, in which he calls himself "Paul the aged" (Philem. 9. See above on A.D. 33), and that to the Philippians at the close of his imprisonment, A.D. 63.

Is detained at Rome for "two whole years," till the Spring of A.D. 63 (xxviii. 30); where the History of the "Acts of the Apostles" concludes: cp. Euseb. ii. 22.

64. St. Paul, after his liberation from his first imprisonment at Rome, goes probably to Spain, and perhaps even to Britain. See on Rom. xv. 24. 28, and the Introduction to the Pastoral Epistles, pp. 418—421.

Writes the Epistle to the Hebrews. The great burning of Rome by Nero, July 19.

In the Summer of A.D. 64, the first Persecution of the Christians at Rome under the Emperor Nero begins. See Introduction to the Epistles to Timothy, p. 417, note.

St. Peter, at Babylon, writes his First General Epistle; and soon afterwards travels westward towards Rome. See the Introduction to St. Peter's First Epistle below, pp. 36—44. St. Mark and Silvanus, or Silas, are with him, when he writes his First Epistle. See on 1 Pet. v. 12, 13, and pp. 43, 44.

65-67. St. Paul returns from the West in his way to Jerusalem, probably with Timothy (Heb. xiii. 23). Perhaps leaves Titus at Crete in his way to Jerusalem; and after his visit to Jerusalem performs his promise of visiting Colossæ in Phrygia (Philem. 22).

On his way to Macedonia, to visit Philippi, according to his promise (Phil. ii. 24), he commands Timothy to "abide at Ephesus" as chief Pastor there (1 Tim. i. 3).

St. Paul's first Epistle to Timothy, Bishop of Ephesus. See the Introduction to that Epistle, p. 420.

St. Paul's Epistle to Titus, Bishop of Crete.

St. Paul passes a winter at Nicopolis in Epirus (Tit. iii, 12).

Probably visits Corinth, where Erastus was left in charge (2 Tim. iv. 20).

Comes to Asia, where he left Trophimus at Miletus (2 Tim. iv. 20).

Perhaps saw Timothy at Miletus. Cp. 2 Tim. i. 3.

St. Paul is arrested, probably near Miletus, and is sent a prisoner to Rome. See the Introduction to the Pastoral Epistles, and notes on 2 Tim. i. 4. 13; iv. 13—17.

Touches at Troas (2 Tim. iv. 13) in his way to Rome.

St. Paul, in close custody at Rome, writes the Second Epistle to Timothy. St. Luke is with him, and he sends for St. Mark (2 Tim. iv. 11).

St. Peter's Second General Epistle written about this time. See below, p. 69.

St. Mark's Gospel written probably about this time. See Introduction to that Gospel, p. 112.

68. Martyrdom of St. Peter and St. Paul at Rome. See the Introduction to the Epistles to Timothy, pp. 423, 424.

The Emperor Nero dies on the 9th of June, in the thirty-first year of his age; is succeeded by Galba.

69. The Emperor Galba dies on the 15th January, and is succeeded by Otho.

The Emperor Otho dies on the 20th April, and is succeeded by Vitellius.

The Emperor Vitellius dies on the 24th December, and is succeeded by Vespasian.

70. Jerusalem taken by Titus, the son of Vespasian; the Temple burnt. Cp. notes on Luke xix. 43, 44; xxi. 20.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLE.

***

- 71. Triumph of Vespasian and Titus for the conquest of Judæa.
- 79. The Emperor Vespasian dies on the 23rd June, and is succeeded by his son Titus.
- 81. The Emperor Titus dies on the 13th September, and is succeeded by his brother Domitian.
- 81-94. St. Jude's General Epistle, and St. John's Gospel and Epistles written probably in this interval of time.
- 95. Second Roman Persecution of the Christians.
  - St. John writes the Apocalypse, or Revelation. See Introduction below, pp. 156-158.
- 96. The Emperor Domitian dies on the 18th September, and is succeeded by Nerva, who rescinds many of his predecessor's acts. See Introduction to St. John's Gospel, p. 267.
- 98. The Emperor Nerva dies at the end of January, and is succeeded by Trajan.
- 100. The Apostle and Evangelist St. John dies about this time.

INTRODUCTION

TO

THE EPISTLE GENERAL OF ST. JAMES.

I. On the Design of the Epistle.

It is asserted by S. Augustine<sup>1</sup>, that this Epistle is in some respects supplementary to the Epistles of St. Paul to the Galatians, and to the Romans.

This opinion appears to be well-grounded, and has been adopted by many later theologians?.

St. Paul's design in those two Epistles had been to prove from the Hebrew Scriptures, that the hopes of Justification, which were built by many of the Jews on a presumption of their own obedience to the works of the Mosaic Law, and their own righteousness in the eye of God, were illusory and vain; and that the only meritorious cause of Justification is the Death of Christ; and that the proper organ on our side, by which the merits of that Death are to be laid hold on, and applied, is Faith; and that we are justified and accepted as righteous by God, on account of Christ's Death, through Faith in Him, apart from the works of the Law 3.

Thus St. Paul had confuted the notions of those, who sought "to establish their own righteousness';" and he had asserted the virtue of Faith in the merits of the sacrifice of Christ, as opposed to all human pretensions; and had shown the futility of all human claims, as contrasted with God's free grace in Christ 5.

But, on the other hand, a different form of error prevailed among some Judaizing Christians, and required correction; and they who propagated it, may have endeavoured to derive some pleas on its behalf, from the arguments of St. Paul, asserting the justifying efficacy of Faith in the merits of Christ.

Many among the Jews relied on their descent from Abraham, as entitling them to God's favour 6; and boasted their own superior knowledge of spiritual things, and trusted in that knowledge, as sufficient to salvation.

They were instructed in the Will and Word of God; they had faith in His Revelation; and they contrasted their own intelligence and faith with the ignorance and unbelief of the Gentile world'; and they flattered themselves, that God would accept and reward them on account of their knowledge and faith.

Many of the Jews, who passed from the Synagogue into the Church, were infected with these notions; and their acceptance of the Gospel as a Revelation from God, considered merely in a speculative light, as increasing their knowledge of divine things, and as enlarging the sphere of their faith, but not as influencing their practice, served to foster their pride and hypocrisy, and to cherish a vain and presumptuous conceit, that they could commend themselves to God, and attain everlasting salvation, by a formal profession of faith, unfruitful in good works.

It has been affirmed by ancient writers, that these theorists in religion appealed to the authority

&lt;sup>1</sup> S. Augustine, de Fide et Operibus, vol. vi. pp. 307-310, and in Psalm xxxi., vol. iv. p. 245.

<sup>2</sup> Among our own Divines, may be mentioned Dr. Barrow, Serm. v., on Justifying Faith, vol. iv. p. 123, and Bp. Bull on Justification, Diss. ii. ch. iv., and Strictures i. § 4.

&lt;sup>3</sup> See the texts quoted above in the Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 198-200.

<sup>4</sup> Rom. x. 3.

Compare Bp. Bull, Harmonia Apostolica, Diss. ii. chap. vi.
 Matt. iii. 9. John viii. 33, and compare Bp. Bull's remarks on this notion, and on what he calls their "Solifidianism," in his Harmonia Apostolica, Diss. ii. chap. xvii. Both these errors are refuted by St. James.
 Vol. II.—Part IV

<sup>7</sup> Compare St. Paul's own statement of their case as compared with that of the Gentiles, "Thou art called a Jew, and restest in the Law, and makest thy boast of God, and knowest His Will, and approvest the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the Law;" and his remonstrance with them on their hypocritical profession, apart from moral practice, Rom. ii. 17—29. St. Paul has there anticipated the argument of St. James.

of St. Paul, asserting that we are justified by Faith in Christ, apart from the works of the Law1; and that they took advantage of his arguments, in order to fortify themselves in their assumption. that they might claim an eternal reward from God on the ground of the clearness of their knowledge, and the orthodoxy of their faith, irrespectively of holiness of life, and of fruitfulness in good Works.

It was also supposed by some in early times, that St. Peter alludes to this antinomian perversion of St. Paul's doctrine, when, referring to St. Paul's Epistles, he says that there are "some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest unto their own destruction ?."

The notions just described were current in Apostolic times, especially among the Jewish Christians 3; and this presumption of the sufficiency of a speculative faith, independently of practical holiness and charity, developed itself, even in the first century of the Christian Church, into the moral lawlessness of the Gnostic Teachers, such as Simon Magus, Cerinthus, and the Nicolaitans; who, under the plea of superior knowledge and illumination in spiritual mysteries, dispensed with the practice of Christian virtue, and indulged themselves and their votaries in voluptuous and riotous excesses of libertinism and debauchery, and provoked the severe censure and stern condemnation, with which they are denounced by the Holy Spirit in the Second Epistle of St. Peter, and in the Epistle of St. Jude, and the Apocalypse, or Book of Revelation.

The Epistle of St. James holds a middle place between the Epistle of St. Paul to the Romans and those just mentioned, of St. Peter, St. Jude, and the Apocalypse.

It does not deal, as they do, with those monstrous extravagances of doctrine and manners, which exhibited themselves afterwards in their hideous deformity in the deadly heresies and foul practices of the Gnostics. But St. James exposes the unprofitableness of a dry barren faith. He does not refute the errors of heterodoxy, but condemns the sin of hypocrisy 4. Thus the present Epistle occupies a place of its own. It warns the Church of every age against the delusive notion, that it is enough for men, to have religious emotions, to talk religious language, to have religious knowledge, and to profess religious belief, without the habitual practice of religious duties, and the daily devotion of a religious life.

In modern times, it has been sometimes said, that some ingenuity is required, in order to reconcile St. Paul and St. James.

Such was not the language of Christian Antiquity. St. Paul and St. James do not disagree; and therefore they do not need to be reconciled. The Holy Spirit of God speaks by each of them; and provides a remedy against two different spiritual maladies by the instrumentality of both; and the work done by St. James completes the work done by St. Paul.

If we attend to the mode of the working of the Spirit by means of the two Apostles, we shall recognize the proper uses of the doctrine of both.

This has been well stated by S. Augustine<sup>5</sup>, whose words may be adopted here;

"Many persons boast of their good works; and some decline to become Christians on this A good life is necessary. 'Yes,' they say, 'it is; but I already lead a good life. What will Christianity teach me? I do not commit murder. I do not steal, I do not covet. I am not guilty of adultery. Let any one find any thing in my life to reprove, and let him, who reproves me, make me a Christian.' The man who speaks thus has glory, but not in the eyes of God. Not so Abraham. He was not justified by works. For what saith the Scripture? 'Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness o.' Abraham therefore was justified by Faith.

"But here" (adds Augustine) "is a whirlpool, in which we may be swallowed up, if we are not on our guard. Abraham was not justified by Works, but by Faith. Another man listens to this statement, and says, 'Well, then, I will live as I like; and then, although I have not good Works, and only believe in God, yet it will be counted to me for righteousness.' If a man speaks thus, and makes up his mind to live thus, he will be drowned in the whirlpool.

"I therefore take the case of Abraham, and cite concerning him what I read in the Epistle of another Apostle, who desired to set those right, who had misunderstood the Apostle St. Paul, I refer to St. James, and his Epistle, which he wrote against those who presumed on their faith, and siarchis ævi Apostolici," p. 37, "Jacobi Epistola non tam contra Simonem quam contra Pseudo-Christianos scripta est, qui doctrina de justificatione sinistre accepta Justitiæ opera contemnebant. Non cnim Jacobus fidem heterodoxam sed tantum hypocriticam et bonis operibus vacuam impugnat."

<sup>1</sup> Rom. iii. 28; iv. 6. <sup>2</sup> See note below, 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16.

S. Augustine, in Ps. xxxi. For brevity's sake, some sentences are abridged or omitted in the above translation.

by saying, that although they are sinners, yet if they know God, He will not impute sin unto them."

As is well observed by Ittig in his excellent work "De Hære-would not do good Works; and in which he commends Abraham's Works, as Paul had commended Abraham's Faith.

<sup>6</sup> Rom. iv. 3. Gen. xv. 6.

"The two Apostles are not opposed to each other. St. James commends Abraham's work-a work known to all—the offering of his son Isaac'. 'Magnum opus, sed ex Fide.' A great work indeed that was, but it was a work growing out of Faith. I praise the superstructure of the work, but I see the foundation of Faith. I praise the fruit of the work, but I recognize the root of it in Faith. If Abraham had done this work without a sound Faith, it would have been of no use, whatever the work might be. On the other hand, if Abraham had faith in such a sort, that when God had commanded him to offer up his son, he had said, 'No, I will not do it, and yet I believe that God will save me, although I slight His commands,' then his Faith, being without Works, would have been dead, and would have remained barren and dry, like a root without fruit.

"Abraham, then, was justified by Faith; but although Works did not go before Faith, yet they came after it. Shall your Faith be barren? No; it will not be barren, unless you yourself are barren. 'Tene ergo fidem.' Have therefore Faith; have faith, as one who is about to work. But you may say, This is not St. Paul's doctrine. Yes, I reply, it is. I do not appeal from St. Paul to St. James; but I appeal from St. Paul to St. Paul. What does he say? He says, 'In Christ Jesus neither Circumcision availeth any thing, nor Uncircumcision; but Faith which worketh by Love?.' And again he says, 'The end of the Law is Charity's.' And again, 'Although I have Faith, so that I could remove mountains, but have not Charity, it profiteth me nothing '.' And yet he says, 'that a man is justified by Faith without the works of the Law.' And why? Let the Apostle himself reply. On the one hand I would teach thee (he says) not to presume on thy works, as if thou hadst received the free gift of faith through any merit of thy own; therefore rely not on thy works done before faith. Let no one boast of his works done before faith. On the other hand, let no one be slothful in good works, after he has received faith. 'Nemo jactet bona opera sua ante fidem; nemo sit piger in operibus bonis, acceptâ fide 5.' Good works do not go before him who is yet to be justified by Faith, but they follow him who has been justified 6. And the Faith which is described by St. Paul is not any sort of Faith, by which we believe in God; but it is that healthful, evangelical Faith, whose Works spring from Love. And therefore St. Paul teaches that the Faith which some men deem sufficient for salvation, profiteth nothing, because it is without Love?.

"St. Paul therefore agrees with the rest of the Apostles in asserting that eternal life is given only to those who live well. But St. James is vehemently indignant against those who imagine that Faith without works is sufficient to salvation; and he even likens them to the devils themselves. 'Thou believest that God is one; thou doest well; the devils also believe and tremble.' And he affirms that Faith without works is dead's. How great therefore is the delusion of those who rely on dead faith as the means of eternal life "!"

Thus the teaching of each of the two Apostles, St. Paul and St. James, illustrates and confirms that of the other.

St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, had refuted all presumptuous notions of human merit, and had established the doctrine of God's free grace to all, and the plenary virtue of Christ's sufferings endured once for all on the Cross.

St. James vindicates the true character and genuine functions of Faith, as the energetic principle and vivifying spring of a holy life; and strips off the disguises, and detects the delusions, of empty professions of belief, and of speculative spiritual knowledge, and declares that such professions of faith and knowledge are hypocritical and vain. He teaches that the propitiatory sufferings of Christ's meritorious Death are availing only to those who follow the blessed steps of His holy life; and that those sufferings were endured, in order to redeem us from the power, as well as from the guilt and penalty, of sin; and will only aggravate the punishment of those, who pervert them into a plea for neglect of His grace, and for violation of His laws.

Thus the two Apostles lend their aid in establishing the doctrine, that the Faith by which we are justified is that living principle of the soul, which fixes its eye on God's power and love in His dear Son, and lays its hand on Christ; and lives and moves in constant harmony with His revealed Will and Word 10.

<sup>2</sup> Gal. v. 6.

<sup>1</sup> James ii. 21.

<sup>3</sup> Rom. xiii. 10.

<sup>4 1</sup> Cor. xiii. 2. S. Augustine in Ps. xxxi.

<sup>6 &</sup>quot;Sequantur justificatum, non præcedunt justificandum." S. Augustine, De Fide et Operibus, xiv. I Cor. xiii. 2.

<sup>8</sup> James ii. 19, 20.

<sup>8</sup> James ii. 19, 20.
9 S. Augustine, De Fide et Operibus, xiv.
10 In the Epistle to the Hebrews (as Theodoret has remarked on Heb. xiii. 7), St. Paul appears to be referring to St. James, after his decease; and it is not unworthy of remark that he there uses the words "whose faith follow." See note on Hebrews.

B 2

II. In another respect the Epistle of St. James holds a peculiar place.

At first, perhaps, a reader may be surprised, that it contains so little of explicit statement of the peculiar doctrines of Christianity, as distinguished from natural religion, or from the Mosaic Law.

But, on further consideration, the reason of this will appear.

St. James was writing an Epistle, not only for the use of Christians, but of Jews 1; and of Jews who at that time were exasperated against Christianity.

In this respect the Epistle of St. James may be compared to the speech of St. Stephen, pleading the cause of Christ before the Sanhedrim at Jerusalem.

That holy Martyr had the love of Jesus in his heart; but the name of Jesus never broke forth from his lips, till the close of his speech, when his murderers were stoning him, and he cried, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit 2."

So St. James. He has the faith of Christ in his heart; and writes from a deep inner feeling of love to Christ; and inculcates those Christian virtues, which are genuine fruits of faith working by love. He has also, like St. Stephen, a solemn message to deliver to the Jews, who did not believe.

Hence he practises a holy and reverential reserve; and like that blessed Martyr, he will not expose that holy Name to contumelious blasphemy 3.

"Ye killed the Just One, He no longer He has a warning to speak to them from Christ.

resisteth you 4." "The Judge standeth at the door 5."

Almighty God gave to the Jews a period of forty years for repentance, after the Crucifixion of Christ. That period was now near its end. Doubtless many of the Jews, who came to Jerusalem for the three Annual Festivals, had heard and received the Gospel from the Apostles and other Preachers of Christianity. And many at Jerusalem itself, even of the Priests themselves, had become 'obedient to the faith 6.' But the Jewish Nation, as represented by its Rulers, remained obdurate. They had imprisoned Peter and John, and murdered Stephen, and persecuted the Church? and had slain James the brother of John, and endeavoured to kill Peter's, and to destroy St. Paul's, and in a short time they would conspire against and kill this other James, the writer of this Epistle 10.

In the last century of its existence, especially in the period of forty years after the Crucifixion, the City of Jerusalem was the scene of the worst crimes. It was torn by intestine factions, agitated by tumultuous riots, maddened by the wild fanatical phrenzy of false Christs and false Prophets, and deluged by blood shed by the hands of assassins 11. There St. James dwelt; like Lot in Sodom.

Amid such circumstances as these, he, the Apostle and Bishop of Jerusalem, wrote this Epistle; an Epistle of warning to Jerusalem; the last warning it received from the Holy Spirit of God. He thus discharged the work of a Hebrew Prophet, and a Christian Apostle. He came forth as a Christian Jeremiah, and a Christian Malachi 12. A Jeremiah in denouncing woe; a Malachi, sealing up the roll of Divine Prophecy to Jerusalem: and not to Jerusalem only, but to the Jews throughout the world, who were connected with Jerusalem, by religious worship, and by personal resort to it on its great festal anniversaries. The Epistle of St. James is the farewell voice of Hebrew Prophecy.

It has been well said by some 13, that its intrepid language of stern rebuke exasperated the leaders of the Jews, and hastened the writer's Martyrdom. And ancient authors were of opinion, that the shedding of the blood of St. James was the filling-up of the sins of Jerusalem, and made its cup of guilt to overflow 14.

Its short and impassioned sentences, darted forth with vehement ejaculations, and almost with sobbings of grief, and throbbings of indignation, express the anguish of his soul 15, as he beholds the obstinate ingratitude, and malignant virulence of the Rulers of Jerusalem against the Just One, who had shed His blood to save them, and whom they still persecuted in His Church 16; and as he looks forward to the tremendous chastisement which would soon be inflicted by God's retributive justice on the guilty City. "Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them

10 See below on chap. v. G.

9 Acts xxiii. 13-22; xxv. 2, 3.

11 The sicarii. See on iv. 1, 2, and notes on Matt. xxi. 13; xxiv. 15. 24, and the account of the insurrections, in Acts v. 36;

xxi. 38.

xiii. 7. And St. Paul strongly inculcates in his last Epistles the same doctrine concerning good works, as that taught by St. James. See the Introduction to the Pastoral Epistles, p. 422, and compare also what has been said above on the same subject in the Introduction to the Epistle to the Romans, pp. 200-202.

<sup>1</sup> See chap. v. 6.
2 Acts vii. 59. See note above on Acts vii. 1, 2, and below on James v. 6.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Cp. James ii. 7.

Y Acts vii. 59; viii. 1.

<sup>4</sup> James v. G.

<sup>6</sup> Acts vi. 7. 8 Acts xii. 1-3.

<sup>12</sup> See note on iv. 3. 13 E. g. by Lardner, chap. xvii.

<sup>14</sup> Hegesippus, Euseb. ii. 23. Origen, c. Celsum, i. c. 48; ii. c. 13. Jerome, Scr. Eccl. c. 2.

<sup>15</sup> See iv. 4-9.

<sup>16</sup> Cp. Acts ix. 4.

shall be a witness against you, and shall cat your flesh as fire: ye heaped treasure together for the last days 1."

Perhaps there is not a nobler specimen of heroic courage and holy cloquence, and of poetical fervour, sublimity and pathos, in the range of Hebrew Prophecy, than is to be found in the last chapter of this Epistle. There the writer, having declared the indignation of God against His people, who had rebelled against Him, suddenly changes his tone, and turns with an aspect of love and gentleness, and comforts those who were obedient, and suffering under persecution for His sake. "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Be ye patient, stablish your hearts: for the Coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Behold, we count them happy which endure 2."

III. Viewed in this light, the Epistle of St. James possesses a special interest and importance for Christian nations and Christian citizens, even to the end of time.

The last days of Jerusalem are, as we know from Christ Himself, prophetical and typical of the last days of the World. The sins of the last days of Jerusalem will be the sins of the last days of the World. Hollow professions of religion 4, empty shows and shadows of Faith, partiality and respect of persons 5, slavish idolatry of riches, observance of some of God's commandments, together with open and impious defiance of others 6; arrogant assumption of the office of religious teaching, without due call and authority; encouragement and patronage of those who set themselves up to be spiritual guides 7; sins of the tongue, evil speaking against man and God 8; envying and strife, factions and party feuds, wars and fightings 9; adulteries 10, pride, and revelry 11; sordid worldliness, and presumptuous self-confidence; a Babel-like building up of secular plans and projects, independently of God's will, and against it 12; vainglorious display of wealth; hard-heartedness towards those by whose industry that wealth is acquired 13; self-indulgence and sensuality 11; an obstinate continuance in that evil temper of unbelief which rejected and crucified Christ 13; these were the sins of the last days of Jerusalem as described by St. James: for these she was to be destroyed by God; for these she was destroyed; and her children were scattered abroad, and have now been outcasts for near two thousand years.

Here is a prophetic picture of the World's state in the last days. Here is a prophetic warning to men and Nations, especially to wealthy commercial Nations in the last times.

Here also is instruction and comfort for those who endure patiently, and look beyond the transitory things of this world, like husbandmen waiting for the harvest <sup>16</sup>; and who live in habitual preparation for the second Coming of the Lord, to judge the quick and dead.

IV. Concerning the Author of this Epistle.

The writer calls himself James.

No ancient author ascribes this Epistle to James the son of Zebedee, and brother of John, who was martyred by Herod Agrippa, about fourteen years after the Ascension <sup>17</sup>.

It is generally agreed, that the writer of this Epistle was James, "the brother of our Lord," and Bishop of Jerusalem 18.

That a James was our Lord's brother is evident from Holy Writ <sup>19</sup>; that James the Lord's brother was appointed Bishop of Jerusalem soon after the Ascension, is affirmed in the early records of the Church <sup>29</sup>; that a James was Bishop of Jerusalem appears from Holy Scripture itself, especially from the Acts of the Apostles <sup>21</sup>, as elucidated and confirmed by the consent of Christian Antiquity; and the concurrent tradition of early ecclesiastical writers ascribing this Epistle to James the Lord's brother, Bishop of Jerusalem, called also James the Less <sup>22</sup> and James the Just <sup>23</sup>, and also Oblias <sup>24</sup>,—is confirmed by the internal evidence of the Epistle itself, which is addressed to

```
¹ This unique character of the Epistle of St. James, as distinguished from all the other twenty Epistles in the New Testament, shows itself in this particular respect, that it alone (with the exception of the first Epistle of St. John, which has no Epistolary address) has no Benediction or Message of Peace, either at the beginning or end. He was writing, not only to Christians, but to Jews; he was writing at Jerusalem, and to Jerusalem; and though her name was the City of Peace, yet since she had killed the true Melchizedek, the King of Righteousness, and King of Peace (Heb. vii. 2), and would not repent of her sins, "the things belonging to her peace were now hid from her eyes." Luke xix. 42.
```

&lt;sup>2</sup> James v. 7—11.

&lt;sup>3</sup> See notes above on Matt. xxiv. 8-30.

&lt;sup>4</sup> James i. 22-27; ii. 14-26.

<sup>5</sup> ii. 1—9,
6 ii. 10—13.
7 iii. 1.
8 iii. 2—13; iv. 11.

<sup>9</sup> iv. 1—3.
11 iv. 6—10.
13 v. 1—4.
14 v. 5.
15 v. 6.
17 Acts xii. 2.

<sup>18</sup> Euseb. ii. 23. S. Hieron. Script. Eccl. c. 2.

Matt. xiii. 55.
 Euseb. ii. 1; ii. 23.

<sup>21</sup> See Acts xii. 17; xv. 13, and particularly xxi. 18; and cp. Gal. i. 19; ii. 12.

Mark xv. 40. Cp. note below on i. 9.
 Clemens Alex. in Euseb. ii. 1, and Euseb. ii. 23.

<sup>24</sup> A word which Hegesippus (in Euseb. ii. 23) interprets as equivalent to περιοχή τοῦ λαοῦ. The word περιοχή is often used by the Septuagint for a strong fortress and rock (see Ps. cvii. 11. 2 Kings v. 9. 1 Chron. xi. 7); and Oblias is probably derived from 'p'y (ophel), hill, or fortress (Isa τxxii. 14. Micah iv. 8), Jews and Jewish Christians of the dispersion, and pre-announces in prophetic language the woes coming on Jerusalem.

There remain, however, two questions to be considered in regard to the Author of this Epistle.

- I. Was the writer the same person as the James who is described in the Gospels as son of Alphaus, and who was one of the Twelve Apostles 1?
- II. What is the meaning of the appellation by which James is distinguished as the "Lord's Brother?"
  - I. As to the first of these questions, it seems most probable that he was an Apostle.
- (1) The Apostle St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Galatians, when asserting his own claims to be received as an Apostle of Christ, on a par with the other Apostles, relates that after his Conversion he did not go up to Jerusalem, to those who were Apostles before him, but went to Arabia; and thence returned to Damascus, and after three years went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and remained with him fifteen days, but that he saw none other of the Apostles, "save James, the Lord's brother 2,"

The whole drift of St. Paul's argument here is to show, that he himself "was an Apostle not of men, or by men," and had learnt nothing from any other Apostle: that he had indeed gone up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and had remained with him a short time, but had not seen any other Apostle there, but James the Lord's brother.

The natural inference from these words, especially when taken in connexion with the context, is this; that James, the Lord's brother, was an Apostle; and that he was an Apostle in the same sense as St. Peter was an Apostle, namely, as one of the Twelve.

(2) This inference is confirmed by the terms in which this same James is mentioned by St. Paul. He says that "James, Cephas, and John" were pillars of the Church; he places James before Peter and John; which he hardly would have done, if James had not been one of the Apostles as well as Bishop of Jerusalem.

(3) The Apostolic Catalogues in St. Luke's Gospel and in the Acts of the Apostles mention James the son of Alphæus, and mention "Jude", brother of James." And in several places of the Acts of the Apostles, a James is presented to us in the character of a Chief Pastor at Jerusalem 5. But no intimation whatever is given in that History, that this James is a different person from James the son of Alphæus, who had been specified in the same book as one of the Twelve, and as having a brother called Jude.

(4) St. Jude in his Epistle calls himself the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James. Since there was a Jude who was an Apostle, and had a brother called James, it seems most probable, that the Jude who wrote the Epistle would have added some discriminating token by which his own brother James might be distinguished from the Apostle bearing the same name, if the James, whose brother Jude was, was not the same as James the Apostle.

(5) In the catalogue of the Apostles we find this combination, "Jude brother of James "." And if we refer to the beginning of the Epistle of St. Jude, we there read "Jude brother of James."

The Jude who wrote that Epistle is called an Apostle by ancient writers', and by the Church of England in the title to her Collect for his festival<sup>s</sup>; and he would hardly have designated himself as "brother of James," if the James whose brother he was, had been a different person from that James, who, when St. Jude wrote, was celebrated in Christendom as the Lord's brother, and Bishop of Jerusalem, and a blessed Martyr for Christ. That James was the James who was best known in the Church. Since therefore St. Jude designates and distinguishes himself as "the brother of James," therefore the James whose brother he styles himself, was the most conspicuous person of all who bore that name; viz. the brother of our Lord, and Bishop of Jerusalem; and if Jude was an Apostle, as is also asserted by ancient testimony, then since Jude the Apostle had a brother called James, who was also an Apostle; therefore the James who was Bishop of Jerusalem, and is claimed as a brother by St. Jude, was also one of the Apostles.

tower (2 Kings v. 24. 2 Chron xxvii. 3), and Dy (am), people. Cp. Neander, Pflanzung, &c. ii. p. 486, and the remarkable passage of Eusebius, ii. 23, quoted below in the note on chap. v. 3. And if this is the true etymology, it is worthy of remark, that he who, for his sanctity and eminence, was called a bulwark of the people, and was a pillar of the Church (Gal. ii. 9), was called also, probably by his own modest desire, "James the Less."

&lt;sup>1</sup> Matt. x. 3. 2 See Gal. i. 16-19, and the note there.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Luke vi. 16. Acts i. 13.

<sup>4</sup> This appears to be the correct interpretation of the words Ἰούδας Ἰακώβου. See note on Acts i. 13.

<sup>Yoύδas 'laκώβου. See note on Acts 1. 13.
See Acts xii. 17, 18; xv. 13; xxi. 18.
Luke vi. 16. Acts i. 13.
See Tertullian, de cult. fem. 3. Origen in Rom. lib. v. p. 549. De Princ. iii. 2. Epiphan. Hær. 26. Hieron. in Tit. c. 1.
"St. Simon and St. Jude Apostles." See on Acts i. 13, 2nd edit., and below, Introduction to the Epistle of St. Jude.</sup>

- (6) James the Apostle is described by St. Matthew as "son of Alphæus'." Alphæus is the same name as Cleophas2, or Clopas. The wife of Clopas was called Mary3; and that Mary was άδελφή of Mary the mother of Jesus 4; and 5 we find that this Mary, the wife of Clopas, was mother of James called the Less, and Joses; and James and Joses and Simon and Jude are mentioned as the names of our Lord's ἀδελφοί in the Gospels ; where our Lord is called the ἀδελφὸς of James and Joses and Jude and Simon. Hence we may infer, that James the ἀδελφὸς of our Lord and Bishop of Jerusalem, who had a brother called Jude, and who was son of Clopas, which is the same name as Alphæus, was the same person as James who is called the Son of Alphæus by St. Matthew and St. Mark 8, and who had a brother called Jude 9, and who was an Apostle.
- (7) These inferences are confirmed by the testimony of Papias, supposed by some to be the disciple of John, but probably a different person. He says that there are four Marys mentioned in the Gospel, namely,

1. "Mary the Mother of our Lord."

2. "Mary the wife of Cleophas or Alphæus; and mother of James the Bishop and Apostle, and of Simon, and Thaddæus (Jude) 10."

3. "Mary Salome, the wife of Zebedee."

4. "Mary Magdalene."

- "These four," he adds, "are mentioned in the Gospel. James, and Jude, and Joseph (or Joses) were sons of our Lord's Mother's sister "1."
- (8) In the Gospel according to the Hebrews, which was of very early date, the following incident was recorded: "Soon after His Resurrection from the Dead, the Lord went to James and appeared to him. For James had sworn that he would not eat bread from the hour in which he had drunk the Cup of the Lord, until he could see Him rising from among them that sleep. . . . And the Lord took bread and blessed and brake it, and gave it to James the Just, and said to him, 'My brother, eat thy bread, for the Son of Man is risen from among them that sleep 12."

It is evident, that the writer of this narrative believed James the Just to be an Apostle; for the first Holy Eucharist was administered to the Twelve alone.

(9) In the Acts of the Apostles 13, we have the following list of names among the Twelve; "James the son of Alphæus, and Simon Zelotes, and Jude the brother of James;" and the same list of names thus arranged occurs in the catalogue of Apostles in St. Luke's Gospel 14.

In the Gospels of St. Matthew 15 and Mark 16 we have the following three names of "our Lord's brethren;" "James, Simon, and Jude;" arranged in this order.

The name Simon is only another form of Symeon 17. We learn also from Ecclesiastical History, that Symcon (or Simon) the son of Clopas (or Alphaus), and one of the Lord's brethren, succeeded his brother James in the Bishopric of Jerusalem 18: and the ground on which he was appointed to that office appears to have been, that he was a brother of our Lord.

These circumstances are confirmatory of the opinion, that "James, Simon, and Jude," who are mentioned in the Apostolic Catalogue, are the same as "James, Simon, and Jude" who are mentioned as "our Lord's brethren 19."

We arrive therefore at the conclusion that James, the Author of this Epistle, and brother of our Lord, and Bishop of Jerusalem, was also an Apostle.

Against this opinion it has been objected 20,

1 Matt. x. 3. <sup>2</sup> See note on Matt. x. 3.

3 John xix. 25. 4 John xix. 25.

- <sup>5</sup> On comparing John xix. 25 with Matt. xxvii. 56, and Mark xv. 40.
  - 6 In Matt. xiii. 55. Cp. Mark vi. 3.
  - 7 x. 3.
  - <sup>9</sup> Luke vi. 16. Acts i. 13.

10 The same name as Jude. See on Matt. x. 3, compared with Luke vi. 16. Acts i. 13.

11 This fragment of Papias may be seen in Grabe, Spicilegium ii. pp. 34, 35. Routh, Reliq. Sacr. i. p. 16, and above in the note on Matt. xii. 46. See also Dr. W. H. Mill "On the Brotherhood of Jesus," p. 238. Compare the authorities cited in the notes above, on Matt. x. 3; xiii. 55; xxviii. 1. Mark iii. 18. John xix. 25. Acts xii. 17; xxi. 18. 1 Cor. ix. 5, and on Gal. i. 19, and Bishop Ellicott's note there. The genuineness of the fragment has been questioned by some, and it would not be safe to lay much stress upon it; see note above on Matt. xii. 46 (fifth edition).

12 Jerome, Scr. Eccl. 2.

<sup>13</sup> i. 13. 14 vi. 15, 16. 16 vi. 3. 15 xiii. 55.

17 See Acts xv. 14.

18 See Euseb. iii. 11, and iii. 22.

19 See further on this subject, in the Introduction to St. Jude's Epistle.

20 The objections hereinafter recited may be seen in the critical observations on this question by Herder, Mayerhoff, Credner, Schaaf, De Wette, Neander, Kern, and others, cited by Winer, R. W. B. i. p. 527. See also Davidson, Intr. vol. iii. pp. 302—307. Alford, Proleg. to this Epistle, sect. i. Huther, Einleit.

On the other hand, the identity of James the son of Alphæus, the Apostle, with James the Bishop of Jerusalem, has been maintained in recent times by other continental critics, such as Baumgarten, Semler, Gabler, Pott, Bertholdt, Guericke, Schnecken-

1. That St. John records the following speech of St. Peter to Christ, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life; and we have believed (πεπιστεύκαμεν) and know (ἐγνώκαμεν) that Thou art the Christ." Jesus answered, "Did I not choose you Twelve, and one of you is a Devil?" He was speaking of Judas Iscariot, for he was about to betray Him, being one of the Twelve '.

In the next Chapter to this, St. John narrates, that 'the Feast of Tabernacles was at hand;' and "His brethren said to him, Depart hence and go into Judea, that Thy disciples also may behold Thy works which Thou doest; for no one doeth any thing in secret, and seeketh to be himself in public; if Thou doest these things, manifest Thyself to the world; for not even were His brethren believing (επίστευου) on Him."

Here then the question arises—How could it be said by St. Peter, in the name of the Twelve, that they believed in Christ, and yet be asserted by the Evangelist, that "not even His brethren were believing on Him,"—if two of His brethren were of the number of the Twelve?

This objection has been considered by some in recent times to be decisive against the opinion that James, the brother of our Lord, was one of the Twelve.

But it does not seem of sufficient force to invalidate the arguments above adduced.

Peter says—"we have believed and know that Thou art the Christ," and he was speaking of the Twelve. But he was not aware what was in the hearts of those, concerning whom he was speaking. Our Lord Himself corrected his assertion. "One of you is a devil." Judas was one of the Twelve, and betrayed Christ; Peter himself denied Him; the rest of the Twelve forsook Him and fled; they did this, after they had seen many more of His mighty works than they had seen at the time of St. Peter's speech; and they did this in about twelve months after that speech was uttered.

Besides, although it is said by St. John a few verses only after this speech of St. Peter, that our Lord's brethren were not then believing on Him, yet the fact is, that nearly half a year elapsed between St. Peter's speech, and that of our Lord's brethren. The one was spoken at a Pussover's, the other was not spoken till the approach of the Feast of Tabernacles, that is, after an interval of nearly six months.

If now it was true, that notwithstanding Peter's profession of belief on the part of the Twelve, all of them were very weak in faith 4, one of the Twelve betrayed Him, and another denied Him, and the rest deserted Him, in about twelve months' time after that profession was made, is there any great reason for surprise, that at a particular time, at a period of six months after that profession, some of that number were not believing on Him? Besides, it might be quite possible for persons to believe Him to be the Christ, and yet not have that belief in His true character as a suffering Messiah, whose kingdom was not of this world, which alone could justify the Evangelist in saying that they were believing on Him 5.

2. It has been said that none of our Lord's brethren—and therefore not James—could have been Apostles; because we read in Acts i. 14, "These all" (the eleven Apostles) "were continuing with one accord in prayer with the women, and with Mary the mother of Jesus, and with His brethren."

But to this it may be replied,—we do not say, that all our Lord's ἀδελφοί were Apostles; and the assertion of the Sacred Historian communicates the fact, that those of that number, who were not Apostles, were then gathered together with the Apostles. And even if all of them had been Apostles, this specification of them would not create any difficulty. We here read of Mary, in addition to the women; and in another place we read "the rest of the Apostles, and the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas 6," who certainly was an Apostle.

3. It has been alleged, that if we suppose that St. James, who was placed as Bishop at Jerusalem, was also one of the Twelve, we are adopting an hypothesis which is not consistent with the general commission to the Apostles, to go and teach all nations 7.

But to this it may be replied, that the Apostles were first to be witnesses to Christ at Jerusalem , and that they remained at Jerusalem many years after the Ascension 9; and that, as far as we know, James, the other Apostle of that name, the son of Zebedee, never left Jerusalem 10.

burger, Kern, Meier, Steiger, and others. See Winer, R. W. B. Guericke, Einleit. p. 483.

- 1 John vi. 68-71.
- επίστευον, the imperfect tense, which is to be noted.

3 See John vi. 4.

- 4 See concerning Thomas, John xiv. 5, and Philip, 8-11, and of Jude, John xiv. 22, 23, and the question of the Apostles after the Resurrection, Acts i. 6.
- <sup>5</sup> Cp. Westcott, Introduction to the Gospel, p. 122.
- 1 Cor. ix. 5.
- Matt. xxviii. 19.
- Acts i. 8.
- See note on Acts viii. I.
- 10 Acts xii. 2. Compare Hooker, VII. iv. 2, who notices this point, and declares his own opinion, that St. James the Bishop of Jerusalem was also an Apostle.

It is probable, that Peter was placed, for a time at least, as Bishop at Antioch, as Origen (hom. in Luc. vi.), Eusebius (iii. 36), and others affirm; and St. John seems to have resided, as Metropolitan, at Ephesus; and the Apostles would have been acting in accordance with the long-suffering of Christ towards Jerusalem, if they had placed one of their own number there, as Chief Pastor "of the lost sheep of the House of Israel 1."

Besides, we find notice of the ordination of St. Matthias to the Apostolic office, in the Acts of the Apostles 2. We find, in the same book, a notice of the ordination of Saul and Barnabas to the same office 3. And in like manner, if James, Bishop of Jerusalem, had not been already ordained to the Apostolic office, we might reasonably expect to find, in the Acts of the Apostles, some notice of his ordination to that office at Jerusalem, of which he is already exercising the functions, when he is presented to us in the Acts of the Apostles'. But there is no notice of any such ordination. Therefore we may presume that he had been already ordained to that office, i. c. that he was already an Apostle at the time when the history of the Acts begins.

4. It has been alleged, that if James, the brother of our Lord, had been an Apostle, and Jude, his brother, an Apostle, then we should not have the names of the sons of Cleophas and Mary arranged in the following order by two Evangelists, in the New Testament. "James, and Joses, and Simon, and Jude';" and again, "James, and Joses, and Jude, and Simon';" but that Jude would have been placed before Joses.

But to this it may be answered, that those Evangelists are citing the names as spoken by the people of Nazareth, who were disparaging the credit of Christ, and would care little, and perhaps did not know, who among His brethren were Apostles, and who were not.

It is true, that the Evangelists themselves sometimes describe Mary, the wife of Cleophas, or Clopas, as the mother of "James, and Joses," who was not an Apostle, to the omission of Jude " and she is sometimes described as the mother of James only s. Perhaps Jude was the youngest of her sons; and however this may be, the allegation in question does not affect the claim of James, the brother of our Lord, who is always placed first in the list o, to be recognized as an Apostle.

5. It is also true, that the testimonies of the writers of the second, third, and fourth centuries are not uniform and consistent on this question.

Some were of opinion that James, the Lord's brother, was not the same as James the son of Alphæus, and was not an Apostle 10. But after passing through a period of doubt and discussion, the Western Church seems to have been settled in the opinion that James the Lord's brother, the author of the Epistle, was also an Apostle 11; and this opinion has been adopted in many Ancient Versions 12 of this Epistle, and is embodied by the Church of England in her Liturgical offices for the Festival of St. Philip and St. James 13.

1 Matt. xv. 24.

<sup>2</sup> Acts i. 26.

4 Acts xii. 17; xv. 13; xxi. 18. Church, p. 70.) 3 Acts xiii, 1, 2.

<sup>5</sup> See Matt. xiii. 54. 6 Mark vi. 3.

<sup>7</sup> Matt. xxvii. 56. Mark xv. 40. 8 Mark xvi. 1. Luke xxiv. 10.

9 See below, Introduction to St. Jude's Epistle.

10 So Gregory Nyssen. de Resurr. orat. ii. vol. iii. p. 413. Chrysost. in Matt. hom. 5, and in Act. hom. 33. Jerome, in Isa.

xvii., and in Gal. i. 19.

11 He is called an Apostle by Clement of Alexandria, Pædag. ii. c. 2, quoted by Tillemont, i. p. 283, and in Eusebius ii. 1. Clement is quoted as saying, that there were two persons called James, one the James who was beheaded (i.e. the son of Zebedoe), the other, James the Just, the Bishop of Jerusalem, and he is called 'an Apostle' by Origen, in Rom. lib. iv. pp. 535, 536, and by Athanasius, c. Arian. iii. p. 511, and by Theodoret, in Gal. i. 19.

See also Jerome ad Paulin. ep. 50, "Jacobus, Petrus, Joannes, Judas, Apostoli," and c. Helvid. c. 7. He is constantly called Apostolus by S. Augustine.

12 E. g. the Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, and Æthiopic, where this Epistle is entitled the Epistle of James the Apostle.

this Epistle is entitled the Epistle of James the Apostle.

<sup>13</sup> See the Collect and Epistle for that day. Compare Bp.

Pearson in Act. Apostolorum, Lect. iv. p. 350, ed. Churton, where he expresses himself in favour of the opinion that St. James the Bishop of Jerusalem was an Apostle. It is also maintained with force and clearness by the late Editor of an Analysis of Bp. Pearson's Work on the Creed, Dr. W. H. Mill, in his dissertation on the Brotherhood of Jesus, p. 240; and by one of Bp. Pearson's worthiest successors in the Chair of the Lady Margaret's Professorship of Divinity at Cambridge, the Rev. J. J. Blunt, whose borship of Divinity at Cambridge, the Rev. J. J. Blunt, whose Vol. II.—Part IV.

words may be cited here. (Lectures on the History of the Early

"St. James, another of the Apostles of the greatest distinction, was yet more circumscribed in the range of his personal services, Jerusalem itself being the compass within which they were confined. There were two of this name amongst the Apostles: the one, the son of Zebedee and brother of John, sufficiently distinguished from any other by his parentage and relationship, and soon ceasing to create any confusion in the Annals of the Twelve by disappearing from the scene altogether, being killed of Herod by the sword (Acts xii. 2); the other, presented to us in the Sacred History under several designations, but still the identity of the individual under them all probably admitting of being proved. Among the women who stood watching the crucifixion, were, according to St. Mark, 'Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the Less' (Mark xv. 40). According to St. John, 'Mary Magdalene, and Mary the wife of Cleophas' (John xix. 25); therefore we conclude that Mary the mother of James the Less was the same as Mary the wife of Cleophas, or, in other words, that James the Less was the son of Cleophas. But James the Apostle, according to St. Matthew, was the son of Alphæus (Matt. x. 3), which is merely another pronunciation of the same Hebrew name; so that James the Apostle and James the Less were one and the same person, the son of Mary the wife of Cleophas, who is further described in the passage of St. John already referred to, is further described in the passage of St. John already reterred to, as Jesus' mother's sister, and accordingly St. James is discovered to be the cousin of our Lord, or, as he is elsewhere called in the language of the Hebrews, 'The Lord's brother' (Gal. i. 19); a circumstance which perhaps secured to him the primacy of the Church of Jerusalem, as episcopal chairs were afterwards assigned to the grandsons of St. Jude, related in the same degree to our Lord, for a similar reason. (Hegesipp. apud Eus. iii. c. 20.) In II. On the designation of St. James as "the Lord's brother."

What is the relationship to Christ, which is indicated by this title?

On this point there were two opinions in ancient times, viz.;-

1. That "the Lord's Brethren" were children of Joseph by a former marriage 1.

2. That they were children of Cleophas and Mary the ἀδελφη of our Lord's mother; and so were ἀδελφοι of Christ; and that the word ἀδελφοι, as applied to them, does not mean children of the same parent or parents, but near kinsmen or cousins<sup>2</sup>.

It has been alleged by some, that this opinion is not earlier than the age of S. Jerome. But the testimony cited above from Papias, shows that it is of a more ancient date.

3. A third opinion has been adopted by some in recent times 3, viz. that James and his brothers, Jude, Joses, and Simon, and also his sisters, mentioned Matt. xiii. 56, Mark vi. 3, were children of Joseph and Mary the Mother of our Lord; and so were literally brothers and sisters of our Lord.

This third opinion, however, has no ground in the testimony of primitive Christian Antiquity. Not a single Christian writer who lived in the Apostolic age, or for two hundred years after the Apostles, can be cited as saying that James the Bishop of Jerusalem, or any of those who are called our Lord's brothers and sisters in the New Testament, were children of Mary the Mother of our Lord. And when the opinion, that they were her children, was first broached, as it was by Helvidius in the fourth century, it was condemned as novel and erroneous by S. Jerome 4, who wrote a Treatise against it, and it has been proscribed by the general consent of the Eastern and Western Churches 5, and by the most learned and judicious divines of our own Church 6; and this notion of Helvidius, and of those who were called Helvidians, was even included by S. Augustine in a catalogue of heresies 7.

Besides, if the blessed Virgin had several children living at the time of the Crucifixion, and one of them, St. James, of such approved piety as to be called James the Just, and to be appointed Bishop of Jerusalem,—and all of them were united in prayer with the Apostles and Blessed Virgin on the day of the Ascension of Christ's,—it seems improbable, that our Lord should not have commended His Mother to the care of St. James, or to that of any other of her children, His own brothers by blood; and that He should have said to His Mother, "Woman, behold thy son," meaning thereby St. John; and that from that hour she should have been taken by him to his own home."

Jerusalem, then, he exercised his high functions, and from Jerusalem he wrote his Catholic Epistle, the internal evidence of which indicates a date later than the death of St. James the brother of St. John, to whom some have ascribed it, an event which must have occurred as early as A.D. 43 or A.D. 44. For that Epistle deals with errors and defects of the Church as if they were already chronic, and, moreover, anticipates, from no great distance it may be thought, the calamity which was coming on the country in the downfall of Jerusalem,—'Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain: whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow;' and again yet more significantly, 'The coming of the Lord draweth nigh.' Still, however far the decrees established at Jerusalem might reach, and whatever might be the circulation of his Epistle, in Jerusalem, as I have said, he constantly abode, and thus gave still more vital force to the action of that heart of Christendom, till death, in his case a violent one, overtook him. For the Jews, incensed at the progress of Christianity, and profiting by the anarchy of the moment, when, Festus dead, and his successor not yet appointed, they could do what seemed good in their own sight, urged St. James to address the people of Jerusalem at the Passover, numbers being assembled, and a riot apprehended, and inform them rightly concerning Jesus, disabusing them of their confidence in Him, and allaying the feverish expectation of His advent. In order that he might be the better heard, they set him on a wing of the temple; but when the reply of James to their violent and importunate appeal proved to be, 'Why question ye me concerning Jesus the Son of Man? He is now sitting in the heavens at the right hand of power, and is about to come in the clouds of heaven,' they put him effectually to silence, by casting him down headlong, and afterwards despatching him with a fuller's club." Euseb. Eccl. Hist. ii. c. 23.

1 Origen in Matt. xiii., in Johann. ii. Euseb. ii. 1, ὅτι δἡ καὶ αὐτὸς τοῦ Ἰωσὴφ ἀνόμαστο παῖς. Epiphan. hæres. 28 and 38. Hilary in Matt. i. Compare Lardner, ch. xvi., and Dr. W. H. Mill, pp. 260—269, who supposes that this opinion took its origin from Apocryphal Gospels; as also the other opinion that St. James, the brother of our Lord, was not an Apostle.

<sup>2</sup> This is the statement of St. John's disciple Papias (see on Matt. xii. 46), and of Jerome c. Helvid. c. 7 and c. 8, and in Matt. xii., and Script. Eccl. 4, and of Theodoret in Galat. i. 19, who says that James was the son of an ἀδελφὴ of the Blessed Virgin, and was an ἀνεψιὸ of Jesus Christ. Cp. S. Augustine in Joann. Tract. 28, contra Faustum xxii. 45.

See also the authorities cited above in the notes on Matt. x. 3; xiii. 55. Mark iii. 18. John xix. 25. Acts xii. 17. Gal.

i. 19. 2 Cor. ix. 5.

<sup>3</sup> E. g. Herder, Credner, Meyer, De Wette, Wiesinger, Huther, Einleitung, p. 7. Alford, Proleg. to St. James, sect. i. The opinion that they were cousins of our Lord has been

The opinion that they were cousins of our Lord has been defended by many recent continental writers, Schneckenburger, Olshausen, Glöckler, Kühn. See Winer, R. W. B. i. p. 566.

4 S. Jerome adv. Helvidium, tom. iv. p. 130.

<sup>5</sup> In the words of Lardner, chap. xvi., "It has been the opinion of all Christians in general, that Mary never had any children by Joseph."

<sup>6</sup> It may suffice to refer to Bp. Pearson on the Creed, Art. iii. pp. 328-333, and Hooker, V. xlv. 2, and Dr. W. H. Mill's Dissertation on the Brotherhood of Jesus, pp. 221-316.

7 S. Augustine, hær. 84, "Helvidiani exorti sunt ab Helvidio; ita Virginitati Mariæ contradicunt, ut eam post Christum alios quoque liberos de viro suo Joseph peperisse contendant." Sce also Prædestinat. de hær. 84.

8 Acts i. 13

<sup>9</sup> John xix. 27. This argument has been already stated by ancient Christian writers. S. Hilary in Matt. i., writing against some whom he condemns in strong language for saying that James was the son of Mary, the mother of our Lord, thus speaks, "Verum homines pravissimi hine præsumunt opinionis suæ auctoritatem, quod plures Dominum nostrum fratres habuisse traditum est; qui si Mariæ filli essent, nunquam in tempore passionis Joanni Apostolo transcripta esset in matrem." The same argument is urged by S. Chrysostom in Matt. hom. 5, and S. Epiphanius, Her. 78.

Again, we know from the Gospels that-

(1) Mary the wife of Cleophas, or Clopas, was the ἀδελφη of Mary the mother of Christ;

(2) and that Mary the wife of Cleophas had sons whose names were James and Joses; and probably also Jude2;

(3) and that three of our Lord's ἀδελφοί were also named James, Joses, and Jude 3.

It is therefore highly probable from this identity of three names, and from the relationship between Mary the mother of our Lord, and Mary the wife of Cleophas, that the James, Joses, and Jude, who were sons of Mary the wife of Cleophas, were no other persons than the James, Jude, and Joses, who are called "brethren of the Lord."

But here it may be said, it is not likely that two sisters should both be called by the same name Mary, and therefore James and our Lord could not have been first cousins.

If this be allowed, it may be suggested, that when Mary the wife of Clopas is called the άδελφή of Mary the Blessed Virgin, as she is by St. John', the word ἀδελφή is not to be taken in its literal acceptation of sister in blood, but according to Scripture use, means a cousin, or near relative.

This is probable; and this use of  $\dot{\alpha}\delta\epsilon\lambda\phi\dot{\gamma}$  in her case, would also explain the use of the word άδελφοι in the case of her children James, Joses, and Jude. They are called in Scripture ἀδελφοι of our Lord; she is called in Scripture the ἀδελφη of His mother. Perhaps Mary their mother was the cousin of the Virgin Mary His mother: and they were second cousins of her Ever-blessed Son.

V. The questions which have been now examined (namely, whether St. James the Less was an Apostle, and what is the precise relationship which is expressed by his appellation "the Lord's brother "), exercised the ingenuity of many learned writers in the earlier ages of the Church, who possessed ancient documentary aids for the solution of them, which are not now extant.

It would therefore be presumptuous to dogmatize upon these two points.

Rather we may reasonably believe, that a providential purpose may be subserved even by the uncertainty which surrounds them. The Holy Spirit, if He had been so pleased, might have made them perfectly clear by a few additional words in Holy Scripture; but He has not done so. He foreknew the doubts which would arise in the Church in regard to these questions. There is therefore a moral in His reserve; there is a meaning in His silence.

And what is that? Perhaps by such difficulties as these He designed to make us more thankful for those essential verities of saving doctrine, which are fully revealed to us in Holy Writ. There seems also to be a special lesson to be learnt from the particular questions which have now passed under review. The Holy Spirit has thrown a veil over the personal history of the Blessed Virgin. He has not clearly disclosed to us the precise nature of the relationship which is indicated in Holy Scripture by His own words "the Lord's brethren," "the Lord's sisters." And why was this? Might it not be, in order to wean our hearts from laying too much stress on carnal relationships even to Christ Himself? Might it not be, for the purpose of reminding us of the high and holy nature of our own privileges as brethren and sisters of Christ, by virtue of our own incorporation in His mystical body, and our relation to our heavenly Father by filial adoption in His Everblessed Son? Might it not be, for the sake of inculcating more forcibly that holy and joyful truth, which Christ Himself vouchsafed to declare to us, when He said, "Who is My Mother? and who are My Brethren? And He stretched forth His hand toward His disciples, and said, Behold My mother and My brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of My Father which is in heaven, the same is My brother, and sister, and mother 6."

This divine truth—that brotherhood to Christ consists in obedience to His heavenly Father, is the sum and substance of this Epistle written by St. James, the Lord's Brother.

VI. Concerning the Authority and Inspiration of the Epistle of St. James. The canonical authority, and Divine Inspiration of this Epistle, are abundantly attested by with Jude 1.

<sup>1</sup> John xix. 25.

<sup>3</sup> Matt. xiii. 55. Mark vi. 3.

<sup>4</sup> xix. 25

&lt;sup>5</sup> Since this Introduction was written, the author has had the <sup>2</sup> Matt. xxvii. 56. Mark xv. 40. Luke xxiv. 10, compared pleasure of finding its statements and reasonings confirmed in an excellent article on St. James by the Rev. F. Meyrick, in Dr. W. Smith's Dictionary of the Bible.

6 Matt. xii. 48-50. See also His saying in Luke xi. 27, 28.

early Christian writers', and by the consent of the ancient Church Universal<sup>2</sup>; and the fact that many sentences of it were adopted and incorporated by St. Peter in his first Epistle<sup>3</sup>, is a sufficient proof of the esteem in which it was held by the Apostles.

VII. On the date of the Epistle.

The date of the Epistle must be placed before the Passover of A.D. 62, when St. James was martyred by the rulers of the Jews, who were disappointed and exasperated by the escape of St. Paul from their hands, A.D. 61, and turned their rage against St. James, who remained at Jerusalem; and it was posterior to St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, which was written A.D. 58; and it is not unlikely that the fury of the Jews, which vented itself in the murder of St. James, was excited by the publication of this Epistle; and it bears internal evidence of having been written at a time when the sins of Jerusalem were being filled up to the brim, and the period of her probation was drawing near to its close, and the day of her destruction at hand. It was probably written about A.D. 60 of the common era. The events of that period may be seen in the Chronological Table prefixed to this Volume, p. xi, and in the Chronological Synopsis prefixed to the Acts of the Apostles.

<sup>1</sup> See the references to it more or less clear by Clemens Romanus, Hippolytus, Hermas, Clemens Alexandrinus, Origen, Eusebius, cited by Lardner, Athanasius, Jerome, and others. Kirchhofer, pp. 258-367. Guericke, pp. 495-497. Davidson, Introd. p. 331. Huther, Einleitung, § 4. Alford, Prolegsect. v.

<sup>2</sup> After some hesitation in some quarters,—a circumstance which gives greater force to the subsequent universal consent. On this point, which is of great importance for the complete establishment of the proof of the Canonical Authority of the Epistles of St. James, St. Peter, St. John, and St. Jude, more will be said below, in the Introduction to the Second Epistle of St. Peter.

<sup>3</sup> See note below on 1 Pet. i. 16.

Compare	James i.	1				1 Pet. i. 1.
-	i.	2		۰		i. 6.
	i.	10,	11			iv. 12.
	i.	18				i. 3.

Compare James i. 21				1 Pet.	{i. 23. ii. 1, 2.
ii. 7			0		iv. 14.
iii. 13	} .				ii. 12.
. iv. 1					ii. 11.
iv 6		٠			v. 5, 6.
iv. 7					v. 9.
iv. 10					v. 6.
v. 20					iv. 8.

&lt;sup>4</sup> When, it seems, Judæa was without a Roman Governor. "Such a season left the Jews at liberty to gratify their licentious and turbulent dispositions, and they were very likely to embrace it. We may therefore very reasonably place this event at that juncture." Lardner, chap. xvi. See above, Chronological Tables prefixed to the Acts of the Apostles, and to St. Paul's Epistles.

<sup>See Euseb. ii. 23.
Cp. below, v. 10.
See v. 1—6. 8, 9.</sup>

ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΑΙ ΚΑΘΟΛΙΚΑΙ.

ΙΑΚΩΒΟΥ ΕΠΙΣΤΟΛΗ.

 $I. \ ^{1} \ ^{a} \ ^{3}IAKΩΒΟΣ, Θεοῦ καὶ Κυρίου <math>^{3}Iησοῦ \ Χριστοῦ δοῦλος, ταῖς δώδεκα <math>^{a}$   $^{3}John \ ^{7. \ 35.}$   $^{Acts \ 2. \ 5. \ & \ 8. \ 1.}$ φυλαίς ταίς έν τῆ διασπορά χαίρειν.

ολαις ταις εν τη οιασπορά χαιρειν.
<sup>2 b</sup> Πᾶσαν χαρὰν ἡγήσασθε, ἀδελφοί μου, ὅταν πειρασμοῖς περιπέσητε ποι- b Matt. 5. 11, 12.
Rom. 5. 3. Heb. 10. 34. 1 Pet. 1. 6.

1. 'Iάκωβοs] James, a servant of God, and of the Lord Jesus Christ. Concerning the Author of this Epistle, see above, Introduction, pp. 5-11; and on the date, see p. 12.

He does not call himself an Apostle. Neither does St. Paul, in his Epistles to the Thessalonians, Philemon, and the Philippians (see on 1 Thess. i. 1, and Phil. i. 1). Nor St. John, in his Epistles, or Apocalypse.

It cannot, therefore, be hence inferred, that James, the author of this Epistle, was not an Apostle. He might be induced to forego the Apostolic title by feelings of modesty, a grace which specially characterizes the writer, "James the Less" (Mark xv. 40), who does not speak to his readers as his children, but as his brethren, see below on v. 2.

He might also be induced to withhold the Apostolic title, because he did not go forth as an Apostle, to preach to those whom he addresses, but remained stationary at Jerusalem until his death in that city.

He also foregoes two other titles, which belonged to him, viz. "the Lord's brother" (cp. Jude 1) and "Bishop of Jerusalem"

(see Acts xxi. 18).

- ταις δώδεκα φυλαις] to the twelve tribes that are in the dispersion. On the various διασποραί, or dispersions of the Jews, see above, note on Acts ii. 9-11.

The address is general to the twelve tribes; not only to the Jewish Christians, but to the Jews also, to whom some of the latter portions of the Epistle are specially applicable, see iv. 1. 4. 8, v. 1-6, and above, Introduction. As is observed here by Bede, "James writes not only to those who suffered persecution for righteousness' sake, nor only to them who believed in Christ, but were not careful to maintain good works: but he writes also to those who persecuted the believers; and he exhorts the unbelieving Jews to repent of their guilt in crucifying Christ, and in their other criminal acts, in order that they may escape the Divine Vengeance now hanging over their heads." So Estius, Grotius, Hammond, Lardner, and others. Hence in the beginning of this Epistle there is no announcement of Grace, Mercy, and Peace, nor is there any such expression at its close. In this respect this Epistle stands alone in the New Testament. See above, Introduction, pp. 4, 5.

James the "brother of the Lord,"—who came to the lost sheep of the house of Israel (Matt. x. 16), and Bishop of Jerusalem, had a special labour of love to perform to the twelve tribes. "Jure Jacobus circumcisionis Apostolus his qui ex circumcisione sunt scribit" (Didymus). The reader may observe throughout this Epistle many points of resemblance to the Gospel of St. Matthew (see below, i. 26, 27; ii. 13; iii. 1. 18; iv. 9; v. 6. 12, 13), the Gospel specially designed for the Jews, see above, Introduction to the Four Gospels, p. xli, and to St. Matthew, pp. xlix-lii. In the Synopsis Scripturæ inserted in the works of S. Athanasius (tom. ii. p. 55), there is mention of a tradition that "Evangelium secundum Matthæum bebraicâ dialecto conscriptum et editum Hierosolymis, et interpretante Jacobo fratre Domini secundum carnem expositum, qui et primus à sanctis Apostolis Herosoly-marum Episcopus constitutus est."

The Epistle is addressed to the twelve tribes in the dispersion. How,-it may be asked,-could copies of it be transmitted to those twelve tribes, scattered abroad throughout the world? See John vii. 35.

The answer is, By God's good providence, the Temple at Jerusalem was allowed to stand for forty years after the Crucifixion. Jews and Jewish Christians resorted to it year after year for the great annual Festivals (cp. Acts xviii. 21). St. James remained at Jerusalem as Bishop of that city (Acts xxi. 18). Thus he could communicate with them; and they could carry copies of the Epistle to their several homes throughout the world; and so in this respect, as in many others, the pilgrim tribes of the Law became preachers of the Gospel. See above on Acts ii. I.

— xaipew] salvere; greeting. This form of salutation is used in the apostolic decree of the Council of Jerusalem, framed, probably, by St. James, Bishop of Jerusalem (Acts xv. 23), and is not employed by any other writer of the N. T.

2. πᾶσαν χαρὰν ἡγήσασθε] count it all joy. Do not deem it sorrow, but regard it rather as joy-joy unmixed with sorrow; "merum gaudium existimate;" like a vessel containing pure and agreeable beverage, and filled up to the brim; count even sorrow to be joy, and only joy, as the Apostles did, Acts v. 41, and as St. Paul did, Col. i. 24, and as our Lord commands his disciples to do, Luke vi. 22, 23.

On this use of mas, see Huther here, who quotes Homer, Od. xi. 507, πᾶσαν ἀλήθειαν μυθήσομαι, and cp. Winer, § 18, p. 101. So merus in Latin: "accipies meros amores" (Catull. xiii. 9), and "mera libertas," "ærugo mera," "sermo merus" (Horat.).

This precept, inculcating patience under trial, was suggested by the circumstances of the Jewish Christians to whom St. James was writing, and who were exposed to peculiar hardships and sufferings from the malice of their Jewish fellow-countrymen, treating them as Apostates; and were thus tempted to faint and falter in the faith. This their condition has been already presented to our view in the Acts of the Apostles, see on ii. 44, and in the first Epistle to the Thessalonians (1 Thess. ii. 14, 15), and in the Epistle to the Hebrews. See Heb. iv. 1; vi. 1—10; x. 34, and Introduction to that Epistle, toward the end.

Besides,-the Twelve Tribes in the dispersion, who were without home, or nation, and were soon about to witness the destruction of the Temple and City of Jerusalem, to which they had hitherto resorted at stated times, needed special consolation. They were to be cheered by the assurance that, wherever they were, they might find a home in Christ, and a Jerusalem in the Christian Church,—"ipsis debuit consolatio præstari, qui maxime videbantur affligi." Cassiodorus.

Hence St. James begins with inculcating the duty of patience; and the blessedness of endurance under temptation.

St. James says, Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, or trials; but he also warns them against the notion that they are at liberty to run into temptation, or that temptation is from God (see below, v. 13). No, they must pray that He would not lead them into temptation (see on Matt. vi. 13), and no temptation is directly from God (see below, v. 13). But God sometimes allows His servants to be tempted, as He did Job (i. 12; ii. 5), and St. Paul (2 Cor. xii. 7), in order that His grace may be magnified in them and by them, and that they may

c Rom. 5. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 7. d Prov. 2. 3. Matt. 7. 7. & 31. 22. Mark 11. 24. & 5. 14. e Matt. 21. 22. Mark 11, 22, 24, 1 Tim. 2, 8, κίλοις, 3 ο γινώσκοντες ότι τὸ δοκίμιον ύμων της πίστεως κατεργάζεται ύπομονήν. 4 ή δε ύπομονη έργον τέλειον έχέτω, ίνα ητε τέλειοι καὶ ὁλόκληροι, ἐν μηδενὶ λειπόμενοι.

John 14. 13. & 15. 7. & 16. 23. 5 d Ei δέ τις ύμων λείπεται σοφίας, αἰτείτω παρὰ τοῦ διδόντος Θεοῦ πᾶσιν 1 John 3. 22.άπλως, καὶ μη ὀνειδίζοντος, καὶ δοθήσεται αὐτω. 6 · Αἰτείτω δὲ ἐν πίστει, μηδεν διακρινόμενος ό γαρ διακρινόμενος ξοικε κλύδωνι θαλάσσης ανεμιζομένω attain an increase of glory by overcoming the Tempter, as Christ And therefore they may well count it all joy when they fall into divers temptations, for these trials are the occasions of their triumphs: they are the leaves and flowers of which their heavenly crown is to be woven.

χαίρειν—χαράν] One of the characteristics of the style of this Epistle is, that, after the introduction of a leading word, the Author follows it up by some precept growing out of that word; a mode of writing called by grammarians anadiplosis; see here the repetition of the word  $\delta \pi \omega_{\mu} \omega_{\nu}^{\dagger}$ , v. 3; and cp.  $\lambda \epsilon_{ii} \delta_{\mu} \epsilon_{\nu} \omega_{i}$ , v. 4 and 5; and  $\delta_{ii} \omega_{\nu} \epsilon_{\nu} \omega_{\epsilon} \omega_{\nu}$ , v. 4, cp. v. 13, and following; and v. 19. 21, 22. 26, and Bengel's note.

άδελφοί μου] my brethren; an address occurring oftener in this Epistle than in any other of its size: i. 16. 19; ii. 1. 5. 14; iii. 1. 10. 12; iv. 11; v. 7. 9, 10. 12. 19; in three of which places (viz. i. 16. 19; ii. 5) it is joined with ἀγαπητοί, beloved. The Jews were addressed as ἀδελφοί by the Apostles (see Acts xxii. 1, and note xxii. 5). And this address is very suitable in an Epistle like the present, characterized by the language of stern rebuke; inspired, like the reproof of St. Stephen, by the Spirit of Love. James the "Lord's brother," having the spirit of the Lord, addresses even them as brethren: for they were "beloved for the fathers' sake." Rom. xi. 28. Cp. Rom. ix. 1—5.
3. γινώσκοντες] since ye know. Such an appeal to the knowledge of believers is characteristic of this and the other Catholic Epistles, designed to correct the errors and presumption of the knowledge falsely so called (I Tim. vi. 20) of the Gnostic false Teachers, and also of those who relied on knowledge apart from practice, see below, ii. 20; iii. 13; iv. 4. 17; v. 20; 2 Pet. i. 20;

 iii. 3. 1 John ii. 3-5. 13.
 - τδ δοκίμιον] the trial. Herodian ii. 10, δοκίμιον στρατιωτών κάματος, that which is grievous in opere, is joyous in fructu. See Heb. xii. 11, and cp. Prov. xvii. 3; xxvii. 21. δοκίμιον is a word specially applied to metals, cp. 1 Pet. i. 7. See also below, v. 12, where another metaphor is used.

4. ή δε ὑπομονή] but let patience have her perfect work, in firm endurance unto the end, for "he that endureth to the end shall be saved," Matt. xxiv. 13; an exhortation necessary for those whom St. James addressed, cp. Heb. iii. 6. 14; vi. 11. On this text see the sermon of S. Augustine, Serm. 159, and compare the treatises of Tertullian and S. Cyprian "De Patientia."

 - δλόκληροι] A word properly applied to those who are heirs to the whole inheritance (κλήροs), and thence applied in a moral sense to what is sound and entire in all its parts. Hence it is used by Josephus (Ant. iii. 12. 2) to describe the sacrificial victims which must be without blemish; and so Philo ap. Loesner, p. 452; and the ancient lexicographers interpret it by σωσ and δγιής, sound and healthful. Cp. Acts iii. 16; and 1 Thess. v. 23.

5. εὶ δέ τις] but if any of you lacketh wisdom, namely, is deficient in that moral wisdom, which may qualify you to bear up patiently and thankfully under your sufferings, and to refute the cavils of your adversaries, who gainsay the truth as it is in Christ: such was the σοφία of St. Stephen. Acts vi. 10.

See the treatise of Lactantius "on true and false Wisdom," and the distinction drawn between yvwois (mere theoretical knowledge) and σοφία (practical wisdom) by Etym. Mag. Every man needs wisdom, and εἴ τις is not to be understood as if there were any exceptions to this statement; but the hypothetical conjunction "if" is often used, not as if the supposition were doubtful, but to introduce a precept built on an acknowledged fact. 'If I am a Father, where is My honour?' Malachi i. 6, and εἴ τις, ἐἀν τις, ἐἀν μή τις, are often employed, where quieunque would be used in Latin, and in English 'whosoever.' See John iii. 3. 5, and on Phil. iv. 8.

This text (as Bede observes) contains a warning against the erroneous notion of Pelagianism, that men may obtain wisdom by their own free will, without Divine grace. Cp. v. 16, 17.

The word λείπομαι occurs only in this Epistle in the New Testament, see v. 4, and 11, 12.

 — alτείτω, κ.τ.λ.] let him ask it from God (as Solomon did, 1 Kings iii. 11; cp. Proverbs ii. 6) who giveth to all men, not as the Jews give, only to their own nation, but to all; and who giveth  $\delta\pi\lambda\hat{\omega}s$ , liberally, that is, sinu laxo, expanding the lap of His bounty, and pouring forth its contents 'good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over' into your bosom. Luke vi. 38. Cp. 2 Cor. viii. 2; ix. 11, and the use of the word  $\frac{\delta}{m}\lambda o \hat{\nu}_r$ , dilatare, by the LXX in Isaiah xxxiii. 23; and therefore the word  $\frac{\delta}{m}\lambda \hat{\omega}s$  is rendered affluenter here by the Vulgate, and copiously by the Syriac Version.

A second sense of åπλῶs, sincerely, when a gift is given with a single eye, and without any sinister view to self, may also be admitted here. Cp. note above on Rom. xii. 8. God gives άπλως, and they who pray, must pray ἀπλῶs.

The description of the Divine bounty is like a summary of our Lord's words, exhorting to prayer. Matt. vii. 7—12.

— καl μὴ ὀνειδίζοντοs] and upbraideth not. And in this respect also God is not like human benefactors, who often upbraid the recipients of their bounty by an humiliating and invidious commemoration of the benefit ("exprobratio benefic"," Terent. Andr. i. I) conferred by them, and of the inadequate returns which they receive for them. "After thou hast given, upbraid not," says the son of Sirach (Ecclus. xli. 22), μετὰ τὸ δοῦναι μὴ ονείδιζε.

This text presents the strongest motives to genuine liberality, as Bishop Andrewes says to the wealthy of his own age. concerneth your homage, which is your trust in God, that you trust Him with your service of body and soul, Who hath trusted you with His plenty and store, and hath made you in that estate that you are trusted with matters of high importance both at home and abroad. For it is the argument of all arguments to the true Christian, because God hath given him, saith St. James, "without exprobration;" and given "all things," without exception of any; and that "to enjoy," which is more than competency; and that "plenteously," which is more than sufficiency; therefore, even therefore, to trust in Him only. If there be in us the hearts of true Christians, this will show it, for it will move us to place our trust in that God Who beyond all our deserts giveth; if we respect the quantity, "all things;" if the manner, very "plenteously;" if the end, "to joy" in them; yet so, that our joy and repose end in Him-a very blessed and heavenly condition. Bp. Andrewes (Sermons, v. p. 31).
6. αἰτείτω δὲ ἐν πίστει] but let him ask in faith. Το adopt the words of Bp. Sanderson, "If any man lack wisdom," saith St. James, "let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally: and it shall be given him." A large and liberal promise; but yet a promise most certain, and full of comfortable assurance, provided it be understood aright, viz. with these two necessary limitations: if God shall see it expedient, and if man pray for it as he ought. Thou mayest pray with an humble and upright affection, and put to thy best endeavours withal, and yet not obtain the gift thou prayest for, because, being a common grace, and not of absolute necessity for salvation, it may be withheld by the wisdom of God, who best knoweth what is best, and when not expedient for thee, or not for His Church, at that time, and in that manner, or measure. Necessary graces, such as are those of sanctification, pray for them absolutely, and thou shalt absolutely receive them.

But if it be expedient, it will not yet come for asking, unless it be asked aright. But let him pray in faith, saith St. James. Whoso doth not, let not that man think to receive any thing of the Lord. Now, that man only prayeth in faith, who looketh to receive the thing he prayeth for, upon such terms as God hath promised to give it; for Faith ever looketh to the promise. And God hath not made us any promise of the end, other than conditional; viz. upon our conscionable use of the appointed means. And the means which He hath ordained both for the obtaining and the improving of spiritual gifts, are study and industry, and diligent meditation.

To make all sure, then, here is your course. Wrestle with God by your fervent prayers; and wrestle with Him too by your faithful endeavours: and He will not, for his goodness sake, and for His promise sake He cannot, dismiss you without a blessing. But omit either, and the other is lost labour. Prayer without study is presumption, and study without prayer is Atheism. Bp.

Sanderson (Serm. ii. p. 92).

— μηδέν διακρινόμενος] nothing doubting; for he that doubteth is like a wave of the sea driven by the wind and tossed. At one time he is raised aloft by hope, at another he sinks downwards, in καὶ ῥιπιζομένω. 7 Μὴ γὰρ οἰέσθω ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἐκεῖνος, ὅτι λήψεταί τι παρὰ τοῦ fch. 4. 8.

Ματ. 6. 22, 24.
2 Pet. 2. 14. Κυρίου, 8 ' ἀνὴρ δίψυχος ἀκατάστατος ἐν πάσαις ταῖς ὁδοῖς αὐτοῦ.

 $^9$  Kavχ $\acute{a}$ σ $\theta$  $\omega$   $\acute{o}$ è  $\acute{o}$   $\acute{a}$ δ $\acute{o}$ ελ $\phi$  $\acute{o}$ ς  $\acute{o}$  auα $\pi$ ειν $\acute{o}$ ς  $\acute{e}$ ν τ $\acute{\omega}$   $\mathring{v}$ ψει  $\mathring{a}$  $\mathring{v}$ το $\mathring{v}$ ,  $^{10}$   $^g$   $\acute{o}$   $\acute{o}$ è  $\acute{o}$   $\acute{o}$ λον $\acute{o}$ τος,  $\acute{e}$ ν  $^g$   $^{Job}$ 4. 2. 18  $^{IO}$ 2. 18  $^{IO}$ 3. 10  $^{IO}$ 3. 10  $^{IO}$ 5. 10  $^{IO}$ 5. 10  $^{IO}$ 6.  $\acute{o}$ 7  $\acute{o}$ 8  $\acute{o}$ 8  $\acute{o}$ 9  $\acute{o}$ τη ταπεινώσει αὐτοῦ· ὅτι ὡς ἄνθος χόρτου παρελεύσεται· 11 ἀνέτειλε γὰρ ὁ & 103.15. ήλιος σὺν τῷ καύσωνι, καὶ ἐξήρανε τὸν χόρτον, καὶ τὸ ἄνθος αὐτοῦ ἐξέπεσε, καὶ ἱ cor. 7. 31. ἡ εὐπρέπεια τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ ἀπώλετο· οὕτω καὶ ὁ πλούσιος ἐν ταῖς ὶ Pet. 1. 24. ὶ John 2. 17. πορείαις αὐτοῦ μαρανθήσεται. 12 h Μακάριος ἀνὴρ δς ὑπομένει πειρασμόν ὅτι h Job 5.17. τοῖς ἀγαπῶσιν αὐτόν.

ις αγαπωσιν αυτον.

11et, 12.5. 4.

13 Μηδεὶς πειραζόμενος λεγέτω, ὅτι ἀπὸ Θεοῦ πειράζομαι ὁ γὰρ Θεὸς ἀπεί- 1 Pet. 5.4.
1 1 Pet. 5.4.

the abysses of despair; as St. Peter did in the storm, when he | doubted. See Matt. xiv. 30, 31. Then the Apostolic Petros or stone became like a wave of the sea; but afterwards he was settled in faith, and was set for ever as a foundation-stone of the Church. Rev. xxi. 14.

The word διπιζόμενος is applied, as here, to the sea agitated by winds, by Philo, de Mundo, § 18, and by Dio Chrys. xxxii.

7, 8. μη γαρ οἰέσθω] for let not that man suppose that he will receive any thing of the Lord—being, as he is,—a two-minded man, unstable in all his ways. On the construction, see Winer, § 59. 10, p. 472. A similar apposition is in 1 Cor. v. 7. 2 Cor.

vii. 6. Rom. viii. 24; and so Wiesinger and Huther.

This exhortation of St. James to faith in prayer, and this warning against double-mindedness, appear to have been before the eyes of a primitive writer, the author of "The Shepherd," Hermas, in his Mandates viii.-xi. (referred to in the Ancient Catena here, p. 4), where he says, "Cast away from thyself double-mindedness (διψυχίαν); be not in any wise two-minded (μὴ διψυχήσης) in asking of God; say not, how can I ask of God, and obtain it, when I have sinned so much against Him? but rather turn with thy whole heart to the Lord, and ask of Him without hesitation, and thou shalt feel the abundance of His mercy, for He is not like men, who remember injuries; but if thou doubtest in thy heart, thou wilt receive nothing from Him, for they who doubt concerning God, are the double-minded men, and obtain none of their requests." Hermas, Pastor, Mandat. ix. p. 596, ed. Dressel. The whole of that and the following chapter appears to be an expansion of the precept of St. James in this place. Compare also the words of the Apostolic Father S. Clement, c. 23, where the word  $\delta(\psi\nu\chi\sigma)$  is used in the same sense as here, and below, iv. 8; and so Barnabas, Epist. c. 19.

9. καυχάσθω] let the brother of low degree glory in his exallation; having been made a son of God by adoption in Christ (John i. 12), and an heir of His glory and kingdom, which are promised to the meek and lowly of heart (Matt. v. 3; xxiii. 12. Luke vi. 20); and which raise the lowliest of earth above the princes of this world, and make them Kings and Priests to God.

This is an appropriate exhortation from St. James, who had been exalted to the high dignity of Bishop of Jerusalem, and was called Oblias (or "high fortress of the people," see above, Introduction, p. 5), and was a pillar of the Church, Gal. ii. 9, and took the title 'the Less' (Mark xv. 40), not only to distinguish himself from the other James, but as a moral memento to himself that he should not be elated by his exaltation, but remember that he "that humbleth himself shall be exalted." Matt. xxiii. 12; cp. below, iv. 6, and on Acts xiii. 9, on the name of Paul. Cp. 1 Cor. xv. 9. Eph. iii. 8.

10. δ δέ πλούσιος] but let the rich man glory in his abasement; let him not be grieved by it, as too many are; let him not be distressed, because as a Christian he suffers ignominy and reproach from Jewish friends and relatives, and from the world; and is shunned and hated, and reviled by them, and perhaps is spoiled of his goods (Heb. x. 34), and endures violence and persecution (Heb. x. 32), and is thus debased and brought low in the eyes of No, let him glory in his low estate; let him rejoice and be exceeding glad in his humiliation; for he is thus delivered from the snares of wealth and worldliness, and from placing his trust in what is fickle and fleeting (v. 11), and from perishing as Dives did, who despised Lazarus (Luke xvi. 19), and is led to look up to God, and to trust in Him alone; and he is made like to Christ in suffering, and will be made like to Him hereafter in glory.

Some Expositors render δ δέ πλούσιος κ.τ.λ., but the rich man rejoiceth in that which is his debasement; i. e. his affluence and luxury; but this interpretation seems to be forced and un-

- ότι ωs ανθος] because he will pass away as the flower of grass, that is, the rich man, as such, will fade away. See v. 11.

11. ἀνέτειλε γὰρ ὁ ήλιος] for the sun arose. The aorists here give liveliness to the picture, and signify that no sooner the sun arose than the flower suddenly faded. See Winer, § 40, p. 248, who compares Cæsar's words veni, vidi, vici: ibid. p. 417, note.

σὺν τῷ καύσωνι] with the burning heat. See Matt. xx. 12. Luke xii. 55. Some interpreters suppose καύσων to mean the dry parching east-wind (קָרָים), as in Job xxvii. 21. Jonah iv. 8; but this does not seem to be the sense here, for St. James is speaking of what is usual, and not of what is partial and casual, as the rise of a particular wind. Accordingly, in the Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, and Æthiopic Versions, the word is rendered burning heat, as in the English Bible.

- δ πλούσιος-μαρανθήσεται] the rich man will fade away. He does not mean that the rich brother, i. e. Christian, will fade away; no, he οὐ μαρανθήσεται, but will have an amaranthine crown (1 Pet. v. 4); he will himself bloom for ever as a spiritual amaranth; for he will lay up treasure in heaven (Matt. vi. 20), and make to himself friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, who will receive him into the bosom of Abraham, who was a rich man and vet "the friend of God" (see Luke xvi. 22. 25, note), and into the everlasting habitations of heaven. (Luke xvi. 9.) But the rich man, as far as he is rich in this world, and trusts in his earthly riches, will fade away like the flower of the field. Compare Wisdom v. 3, 9. 1 Pet. i. 24, and especially Mark x. 23, 24, the best comment on this text. With ὁ πλούσιος here compare τον πτωχον, the poor, as such, ii. 6.

- ἐν ταῖς πορείαις αὐτοῦ] in his ways—another lively picture: he will fade away in his ways; when actively engaged in some worldly pursuit or pleasure, when hastening eagerly in the course after some wished-for prize, he will suddenly be cut off.

12. δόκιμος γενόμενος] when he has become approved, like an athlete or racer. This allusion was not strange to the Jewish mind. Cp. 1 Cor. ix. 24—27, and Phil. iii. 14. The idea of perfection through temptation had been realized in Abraham.

See above on Gen. xxii. 1.

- τὸν στέφανον τῆς ζωῆς] the crown of life. Observe the The rich man, as such, is only a fading flower (v. 10) withered by the sun; but he who stands the scorching heat of trial, shall receive the crown of life, which never fadeth away. (Rev. ii. 10. 1 Pet. v. 4.) Earthly trials are the flowers of which the heavenly garland is made. The worldly man is suddenly cut off in his earthly course after his earthly prize, but the Christian will reach the heavenly goal, and will receive a heavenly crown. Therefore, blessed is he who endureth trial, for when he is approved, he shall receive the crown of life. Cp. Wisdom v. 17.

— δ Κύριος] the Lord: these words are not found in A, B, nor in N.

13. μηδείς πειραζόμενος λεγέτω] let no man, being tempted, say, I am being tempted of God; ἀπὸ marks the immediate cause of temptation. Cp. Matt. iv. 1, and Huther here.
St. James here anticipates and answers an objection which might be raised on his previous declaration, that they were to consider it all joy, when they fell into divers temptations (v. 2).

If this is so, then, it might be rejoined, that temptation is a good thing, and from God; or, if it is an evil thing, then God is the author of evil. No, says the Apostle, no one is tempted of God, for God is neither tempted nor tempts.

 $-\delta$  γὰρ Θεὸs ἀπείραστός ἐστιν κακῶν] for God is not capable of being tempted, as the Devil is, by evil things, whether moral, such as pride and envy; or physical, such as pain; and being not affected by these things in Himself, but being perfectly and eternally holy, and infinite in wisdom and love and felicity, He is not

I Hos. 13. 9. Matt. 5. 28. & 15. 18, 20. k Job 15. 35. Ps. 7. 14.

ραστός έστι κακῶν, πειράζει δὲ αὐτὸς οὐδένα<sup>ι 14 ί</sup> ἔκαστος δὲ πειράζεται, ὑπὸ της ίδιας επιθυμίας εξελκόμενος και δελεαζόμενος 15 k είτα ή επιθυμία συλλαβοῦσα τίκτει άμαρτίαν ή δὲ άμαρτία ἀποτελεσθεῖσα ἀποκυεῖ θάνατον.

 $\frac{1 \text{ Prov. 2. 6.}}{\text{John 3. 27.}}$   $\frac{16}{1 \text{ Cor. 4. 7.}}$  Mal. 3. 6. Rom. 11. 29.

16 Μη πλανᾶσθε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοὶ, 17 1 πᾶσα δόσις ἀγαθη καὶ πᾶν like the Tempter. He tempteth no one. Abrds, Ipse, is emphatic. He is not tempted by any thing, and He Himself tempt-

This is the sense given to the word  $\delta\pi\epsilon l\rho\sigma\sigma\tau\sigma s$  in the Syriacand Arabic Versions, and by the ancient Greek Expositors, such as Œcumenius and Theophylact, who cite the saying of an ancient heathen writer to this effect, that το θείον ούτε πράγματα έχει, οὕτε ἄλλοις παρέχει, the Divinity neither is troubled nor troubles any one. Compare Ecclus. xv. 11, "Say not thou, It is through the Lord that I fell away; for thou oughtest not to do the things that He hateth; say not thou, He hath caused me to err;" and v. 20, "He hath commanded no man to do wickedly. ' and v. 20, "He hath commanded no man to do wickedly, neither hath he given any man licence to sin." And so Bp. Andrewes, "God is not tempted with evil, and He doth not tempt to evil. Ascribe it not to the Father of lights, but to the Prince of Darkness. But ascribe all good, from the smallest spark to the greatest beam, from the least 'good giving' to the best and most perfect gift of all, to Him, the Father of Lights." (Bp. Andrewes, Serm. iii. pp. 363. 373.) And so Theile and other modern Expositors.

Some interpreters render anelpagros unversed in, inexperienced in; that is, God does not make experiments in evil things. This sense is consistent with grammatical usage (see Winer, p. 175), and St. James may perhaps refer to the false tenet of some of the heretics of the early Church, who said that it was the duty of men to have experimental knowledge of all evil, in order to the attainment of perfection. See below on I John i. 6. But the other sense seems best to suit the context, and there is evidently a connexion between the words ἀπείραστος and πειράζει; and the fundamental sense, that of temptation, is to be preserved throughout. On the form of the word  $a\pi\epsilon i\rho\alpha\sigma\tau os$ , intentatus, or intentabilis, see Winer, § 16. 3, p. 88; and on the structure with the genitive, see ibid. § 30, p. 175, where he compares Soph. Antig. 817,  $\&\kappa\lambda$ autos  $\phi(\lambda\omega\nu)$ : so Eurip. Hippol. 962,  $\&\kappa\lambda$ patos κακῶν. Cp. Kühner, Gr. Gr. § 513.

Thus St. James delivers a caution against errors which afterwards showed themselves in the heresies of Apelles, Hermogenes, Valentinus, Marcion, and the Manichæans, which represented God as the author of evil, or as subject to evil, and unable to resist and overcome it.

S. Augustine raises a question on this passage. If God tempts no one, how is it that he is said in Scripture to tempt Abraham (Gen. xxii. 1)? To which he replies that St. James is speaking of temptations arising from evil motives, with a view to an evil end. No such temptations are from God. But God is said to have tempted, that is, to have tried Abraham, from a good motive and for a good end. He tried him in love to him and to all men, in order that he might become the Father of the faithful, and be an example of obedience to all ages of the world. See also Tertullian de Orat. c. 8, who says, "God forbid, that we should imagine, that He tempts any one, as if He were ignorant of any man's faith, or desired to make any one fall. No; such ignorance and malice belong not to God, but to the Devil. Abraham was commanded to slay his son, not for his temptation, but for the manifestation of his faith, as a pattern and proof to all, that no pledges of love, however dear, are to be preferred to God. Christ, being tempted by the Devil, showed who it is that is the author of temptation, and who it is that is our Guardian against it." Cp. Augustine, Tractat. in Joann. 43; and de Consensu Evang. ii. 30; and Bp. Andrewes, Sermons, vol. v. pp. 443-447.

14. ξελκόμενος καὶ δελεαζόμενος] being drawn away from doing good, and lured, as a fish, by a bait (δέλεαρ) to evil. Cp. Philo de Agric. p. 202, πρός ήδονης δελεασθέν είλκυσται, and p. 888, Ε, πρός ἐπιθυμίας ελαύνεται, ἡ ὑφ' ἡδονης δελεάζεται. (Loesner.) Cp. Aristot. Polit. v. 10, παρὰ τῆς γυναικός ἐξελκυσθείs, and in Test. xii. Patrum. Joseph says of Potiphar's wife, πρὸς πορνείαν με ἐφειλκύσατο. (Kypke.)

If temptations prevail against us, St. James tells us where to lay the blame-not on God, for He tempteth no man; nor even on the Devil, for though he can tempt us to evil, he cannot compel us. But every man, when he is tempted cum effectu, so as to be overcome by temptation, is tempted of his own lust; drawn away by affrightments from doing good, or enticed by allurements to do evil. The common saying holdeth most true in temptations, "no man taketh harm but from himself." Bp. Sanderson, i. p. 408. No man is tempted by God; but "sibi cuique Deus fit dira cupido." Virgil, Æn. ix. 185.

15. τίκτει ἀμαρτίαν] bringeth forth sin. Concupiscence is here personified, as doing the work of an unchaste woman, soliciting  $(\pi \epsilon \iota \rho d \zeta o \nu \sigma a : \text{cp. } Ruhnken, \text{Tim. } v. \ \pi \epsilon \iota \rho \hat{\omega} \nu \tau a$ , p. 210) man to sin, and inducing him to comply with her allurements (cp. Prov. vii. 7-23), and giving birth to sin, the offspring of their illicit

St. James traces the progress of Temptation, which has three steps. "1. Suggestio, 2. delectatio, 3. consensus: suggestio est hostis; delectatio autem, vel consensus, est nostræ fragilitatis." Bede, who says, "Si delectationem cordis partus sequitur pravæ actionis, nobis jam mortis reis victor hostis abscedit." Joseph was tempted by Potiphar's wife, but he did not give way to the "suggestio hostis," and gained glory from his temptation. David was tempted, and yielded to the temptation, and became guilty before God. Temptation may be the occasion of death, but blessed is he who endureth it, for he shall receive a crown of ἀποκυεί θάνατον] bringeth forth death. The word ἀποκύω, or ἀποκυέω, is "propria prægnantium, quæ fætum maturum emittunt." Schleusner, see also Welstein, p. 662; and below,

16. μη πλανᾶσθε] be not ye deceived. The formulas μη πλανῶ, 'be not thou deceived,' and μη πλανασθε, 'be not ye deceived,' are the preambles used in Scripture and by ancient Fathers, in order to introduce cautions against, and refutations of, some popular error, as here. Cp. 1 Cor. vi. 9; xv. 33. Gal. vi. 7. S. Ignat. Ephes. 16. Phil. 3. Smyrn. 6. S. Hippol. Phil. p. 286, with notes by the present Editor.

 πᾶσα δόσις ἀγαθή] every giving that is good, and every gift that is perfect, is from above, coming down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, nor shadow of turning. It would seem as if St. James designed to give more currency to this sacred axiom, by presenting the first portion of it in the form of an Hexameter verse, the last syllable in δόσις being lengthened by the arsis, as Winer remarks, § 68, p. 564. Cp. note above on Heb. xii. 13-15, for similar examples of metrical structure in the New Testament.

Δόσις may perhaps be distinguished here from δώρημα.  $\Delta \delta \sigma is$  may mean donatio or giving (cp. Phil. iv. 5),  $\delta \omega \rho \eta \mu a$  is donum or gift; and so the Geneva Bible and Bp. Andrewes, who has two Sermons on this text, iii. 361, and v. 311, and observes (v. 313) that δόσις ἀγαθή, donatio bona, or good giving, represents rather that act of giving which bestows things of present use for this life, whether for our souls or bodies, in our journey to our heavenly country; but δώρημα τέλειον, or perfect gift, or invaluable boon, designates those treasures which are laid up for us in Eternity. They all come from one source. They are from above, and come down from the Father of Lights. There are divers stars, and one star differeth from another in glory. (1 Cor. xv. 41.) So there are diversities of gifts (1 Cor. xii. 4), but God is the Author of them all. Philo makes a distinction between δόσις, δόμα, and δώρον, δωρεά, which may be applicable here; the latter being more perfect than the former: see Philo, Cherub. § 25, Leg. Alleg. iii. 70; accordingly the stronger epithet τέλειον is assigned by St. James to δώρημα.

Observe the present participle καταβαΐνον, coming down, always descending in a perpetual stream of love. Observe also the plural number, lights. God is not the author of any evil, but

He is the author of all good.

The ministry of good is directly and indirectly from God; but evil comes only per accidens, indirectly and mediately, for the correction of man, who is chastened by suffering. Didymus.

God is the Father of all lights; the light of the natural world, the sun, the moon, and stars, shining in the heavens; the light of Reason and Conscience; the light of His Law; the light of Prophecy, shining in a dark place; the light of the Gospel, shining throughout the world; the light of Apostles, Confessors, Martyrs, Bishops, and Priests, preaching that Gospel to all nations; the light of the Holy Ghost, shining in our hearts; the light of the heavenly city: God is the Father of them all. He is the Everlasting Father of the Everlasting Son, Who is the "Light or the World." John ix. 5.

Father is something more than Author or Giver. All Lights are His offspring.

δώρημα τέλειον ἄνωθέν ἐστι, καταβαίνον ἀπὸ τοῦ Πατρὸς τῶν φώτων, παρ' ιμπ John 1. 13. οὐκ ἔνι παραλλαγὴ ἢ τροπῆς ἀποσκίασμα.  $^{18 \text{ m}}$  Βουληθεὶς ἀπεκύησεν ἡμᾶς  $^{10\text{ c}}$ ,  $^{1.5\text{ c}}$ ,  $^{1.6\text{c}}$ ,  $^{1.5\text{ c}}$  λόγω ἀληθείας, εἰς τὸ εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἀπαρχήν τινα τῶν αὐτοῦ κτισμάτων.  $^{10\text{ c}}$   $^{10\text{ c$ λόγω άληθείας, εἰς τὸ εἶναι ἡμᾶς ἀπαρχήν τινα τῶν αὐτοῦ κτισμάτων.

To cite the words of two learned English Bishops: "As the Sun, who is the father of lights in the natural world, whereunto St. James alludes, giveth light to all, and nowhere causeth darkness, so God communicateth goodness to every thing He produceth, so that He cannot produce any thing at all but what is good. Let no man therefore say when he hath done evil, that it is God's doing. God is not the cause of any evil, either in sin or punishment; but He is the cause of all the good that there may be in a sinful action, or that may arise from the infliction of evil by way of punishment. We are unthankful if we impute any good but to Him, and we are unjust if we impute to Him any thing but good." Bp. Sanderson (iii. 150).

Though of man it be truly said by Job, "he never continueth the lights of Heaven have in one stay" (Job xiv. 2); though the lights of Heaven have their parallaxes, yea, "the Angels of Heaven, He found not sted-fastness in them" (Job iv. 18); yet, for God, He is subject to none of them. He is Ego sum Qui sum (Ex. iii. 14); that is, saith Malachi, Ego Deus, et non mutor (Mal. iii. 6). We are not what we were awhile since, what we shall be awhile after, scarce what we are; for every moment makes us vary. With God it is nothing so. "He is that He is; He is and changeth not." He changes not His tenor; He says not, Before Abraham was, I was; but, "Before Abraham was, I am." (John viii, 58.)

Yet are there "varyings and changes," it cannot be denied.

We see them daily. True, but the point is per quem, on whom to lay them? Not on God. Seems there any recess? It is we forsake Him, not He us. (Jer. ii. 17.) It is the ship that moves, though they that be in it think the land goes from them, not they from it. Seems there any variation, as that of the night? It is umbra terræ makes it, the light makes it not. Is there any thing resembling a shadow? A vapour rises from us, and makes the cloud, which is as a penthouse between, and takes Him from our That vapour is our lust, there is the apud quem. Is any tempted? It is his own lust doth it; that entices him to sin; that brings us to the shadow of death. It is not God. No more than He can be tempted, no more can He tempt any. If we find any change, the apud is with us, not Him: we change, He is unchanged. "Man walketh in a vain shadow." (Ps. xxxix. 6.) Ilis ways are the truth. He cannot deny Himself.

Every evil, the more perfectly evil it is, the more it is from below; it either rises from the steam of our nature corrupted; or yet lower, ascends as a gross smoke, from the bottomless pit, from the prince of darkness, as full of varying and turning into all shapes and shadows, as God is far from both, Who is uniform and constant in all His courses. . . . The "lights" may vary, He is invariable; they may change, He is unchangeable, constant always, and like Himself.

Now our lessons from these are-

1. Are they (the gifts) given? Then, quid gloriaris? let us have no boasting. Are they given, why forget the Giver? Let Him be had in memory, He is worthy so to be had.

2. Are the "giving" as well as the "gift," and the "good" as the "perfect," of gift, both? Then acknowledge it in both; take the one as a pledge, make the one as a step to the other.

3. Are they from somewhere else, not from ourselves? Learn then to say, and to say with feeling, Non nobis, Domine, quia non à nobis. (Ps. cxv. 1.)

4. Are they from on high? Look not down to the ground, then, as swine to the acorns they find lying there, and never once up to the tree they come from. Look up; the very frame of our body gives that way. It is nature's check to us, to have our head bear upward, and our heart grovel below.

5. Do they descend? Ascribe them then to purpose, not to time or chance. No table to fortune, saith the Prophet. Isa.

6. Are they from the "Father of lights?" (Jer. x. 12,) then never go to the children, à signis cœli nolite timere: "neither fear nor hope for any thing from any light of them at all."

7. Are His "gifts without repentance?" (Rom. ii. 29.)
Varies He not? Whom He loves, doth "He love to the end?" (John xiii. 1.) Let our service be so too, not wavering. O that we changed from Him no more than He from us! Not from the light of grace to the shadow of sin, as we do full often.

But above all, that which is ex tota substantia, that if we find any want of any giving or gift, good or perfect, this text gives us light, whither to look, to whom to repair for them; to the "Father of Lights." And even so let us do. Ad Patrem luminum cum primo lumine: "Let the light, every day, so soon as we see it, put us in mind to get us to the Father of Lights."

Ascendat oratio, descendet miseratio, 'let our prayer go up to Him that His grace may come down to us,' so to lighten us in our ways and works, that we may in the end come to dwell with Him, in the light which is φως ἀνέσπερον, 'light whereof there is no even-tide,' the sun whereof never sets, nor knows tropic—the only thing we miss, and wish for in our lights here, primum et ante omnia. Bp. Andrewes (Sermons, iii. p. 374).

Cp. Bp. Bull, Harm. Apostol. Diss. ii. ch. xv., who supposes that St. James here refers to the Pharisaic notion of the influence of the changes of the heavenly bodies upon human actions.

God is always in the meridian. Wetstein.

18. βουληθείς] by the act of His own will He brought us forth; not by any necessity or caprice, but by the deliberate act of His divine Will—a proof of His freedom, power, and love. See above on Eph. i. 11. Titus iii. 5.

Here is an Apostolic protest against two errors prevalent among the Jews,

(1) that men are what they are either by necessity, as the Pharisées held, or else,

(2) as the Sadducees taught, by the unaided action of their own will, independently of Divine grace. See Maimonides in his Preface to Pirke Aboth, and Josephus, Antiq. xiii. 5.9; xviii. 1.3. Bp. Bull, Harm. Apost. Diss. ii. ch. xv. Thus they disparaged the dignity of the Divine Will.

— ἀπεκύησεν ἡμᾶs] He brought us forth. A remarkable word, made more striking by its use in v. 15, and by the contrast there. It is properly used, as there, of maternal conception and produc-ception is in the concupiscence of our appetite, which is impregnated by the consent of our Will, and so brings forth sin, and sin (ἀποκυεί) gives birth to death, it is God and God alone Who acts in our new birth.

With reverence be it said, in the work of our Regeneration, He is both our Father and Mother; and this statement well follows the declaration of the Apostle that every good giving and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of Lights. He is a Father, the Father of lights, and He is like a Mother also, and gives birth to us by the word of truth. "Deus nobis Ipse Patris et Matris loco est." Bengel.

Compare the use of the maternal word ἀδίνω, parturio, used by St. Paul in one of his tenderest expressions of affectionate yearning for his spiritual children. Gal. iv. 19.

By this word ἀπεκύησεν, He brought us forth, St. James declares God's maternal love for our souls. "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee." (Isa. xlix. 15.) "When my father and my mother forsake me, the Lord taketh me up." Ps. xxvii. 12.

— λόγφ ἀληθείαs] by the word of truth. So St. Peter declares

(1 Pet. i. 23), that we have been born again, not of corruptible seed, but incorruptible, by the Word of the Living God.

Some ancient Expositors interpret the Word here as signifying the Eternal Word, Who for our sakes became Incarnate, and by being Incarnate gave "to those who receive Him, power to become sons of God," who are born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, but of God (John i. 13), and through whom we cry, "Abba, Father" (Rom. viii. 15., Gal. iii. 26), and become "partakers of the Divine nature." (2 Pet. i. 14.)

This is the sense assigned to this passage by S. Athanasius (contra Arianos iii. § 61, p. 483), who thus speaks, "Whatsoever the Father determines to create, He makes and creates by Ilim (the WORD), as the Apostle (St. James) says, By His will He brought us forth by the Word. Therefore the Will of the Father, which concerns those who are born again, or which concerns those things that are made by any other way, is in the Word, in whom He makes and regenerates what He thinks fit." So S. Bernard, Serm. ii. ad Fratres, in Ps. xxiv. 6, and Serm. xvi. in Cantica, and Œcumenius and Theophylact here.

The sense of the word Adyos, signifying a Divine person, was already familiar to the readers of St. James, from their paraphrases of the Old Testament, and from the writings of such authors as Philo (see above on John i. 1); and accordingly it is found in those portions of the New Testament which are addressed, as this Epistle is, to Jewish Christians. See above on Bp. Pearson says (p. 219), "this use of the term Word was familiar to the Jews, and this was the reason that St. John de-

VOL. II.—PART IV.

n Prov. 17. 27. Eccl. 5. 1, 2. 19 η Πστε, ἀδελφοί μου ἀγαπητοὶ, ἔστω πᾶς ἄνθρωπος ταχὺς εἰς τὸ ἀκοῦσαι, livered to them so great a mystery in so few words," as he has done at the beginning of his Gospel; and the same remark is applicable to the language of St. James. See also Bp. Bull, Defensio Fidei Nicænæ, book i. chap. i. § 17—19, and his Harmon. Apost. Diss. ii. ch. xv., where he declares the meaning of St. James to be that our Christian graces proceed from "the good pleasure of God through Christ, and from the regeneration which the Holy Spirit works in us through the Gospel." And cp. Westcott, Introd. to the Gospels, pp. 136—141.

This sense, as will be seen, gives force to the Apostle's words, who appears to use the term  $\lambda\delta\gamma\sigma$  in a twofold sense, and to pass by a natural transition from the incarnate Word to the spoken Word: from Christ Incarnate to Christ preached; as does St. Paul, Heb. iv. 12, where see note; and on Eph. v. 26, and Titus i. 3. And St. Paul unites the two senses of  $\Lambda\delta\gamma$  when he says that in preaching the Word of God again to the Galatians he is in travail with them, till Christ be formed in them. (Gal. iv. 19.)

Our Lord Himself seems to make a transition of this kind, when some were blessing His holy Mother, who had conceived in her womb Him Who is the Eternal Word. "Blessed rather are they who hear the Word of God and keep it" (Matt. xii. 50. Luke xi. 27), a speech to which St. James seems to allude. (See v. 25.)

"Adoro Scripturæ plenitudinem," I adore the fulness of Scripture, said an ancient Father (Tertullian c. Hermog. c. 22); and it seems to be inconsistent with sound and enlightened Criticism to restrain that fulness, by limiting the terms employed by the Holy Ghost, to one sense exclusively, instead of conceding to them that freedom and richness of meaning which is their peculiar characteristic. See above, note on Rom. xii. 19.

We may rather suppose, that as our Lord said many things to His disciples in His teaching which could not be understood by them at the time when they were spoken, but afterwards became clear (see above, the Review, &c. at the end of John vi. p. 302); so the Holy Ghost, writing by St. James and other Apostles, used expressions of a prophetical kind, which were not altogether perspicuous to those who first read their Epistles, but afterward were more fully explained. They, whom St. James addressed, being born again by adoption, and created anew in Christ Jesus, the Eternal Word (Eph. ii. 10), might well be said to be designed by God to be a first-fruit of His creatures, for they were new creatures in Christ (Gal. vi. 15. 2 Cor. v. 17), Who is the first-beyotten of every creature (Col. i. 15), the beginning of the creation of God (Rev. iii. 14), by whom all things were created (Col. i. 16). By virtue of His Incarnation, and of their Incorporation and Filiation in Him, who is the First-born among many brethren (Rom. viii. 29), they were made the first-fruits of Creation, being advanced to a high pre-eminence and primacy, beyond that which was given to Adam before the Fall (Gen. i. 28), and even above the Angels themselves; cp. Heb. i. 5—13; ii. 5. 7—16.

This secondary and higher sense of the word LOFOZ is illustrated by the theological statements of early Christian writers on this subject. With St. James they affirmed, that God is the Father of all, the  $\pi\eta\gamma\dot{\eta}$  or Fountain of all. The Logos or Word is  $\ell\nu\delta id\theta\epsilon\tau os$  and  $\sigma\nu\nu\alpha\delta\delta is$ , coeternally existing with Him, and eternally coming forth by His Will, as  $\pi\rhoo\phi\rho\rhoi\kappa\delta s$ , or produced from Him, and as  $\pi\rhoo\pi\eta\delta\delta \nu$   $\kappa\alpha\tau$   $\ell\nu\epsilon\rho\gamma\epsilon\iota\nu$  and  $\kappa\alpha\tau\dot{\alpha}$   $\sigma\nu\gamma\kappa\alpha\tau\dot{\alpha}-\beta\alpha\sigma\nu$ , and sent forth in His  $\pi\rhoo\epsilon\dot{\lambda}\nu\sigma s$  or going forth, to create the World, and to become Incarnate, and so being  $\pi\rho\omega\tau\delta\tau\kappa s$  or first-born of all things.

Thus Irenæus says (ii. 25. 3), "Thou, O man, art not uncreated, nor wert thou always coexistent with God, like His own Word, but thou art gradually learning from the Word the dispensations of God who made thee." See also Clemens Alexandrin. Protrepticon, p. 68, "The Word who at first gave us life has manifested Himself as our Instructor, and has taught us to live well; that, as God, He might give us eternal life."

Tertullian, in a passage which illustrates the word ἀπεκύησεν, says, "Christus primogenitus et unigenitus Dei propriè de vulvâ cordis Ipsius" (c. Praxean. c. 7), and so S. Athanasius (orat. c. Arianos, v. § 24) speaks of the Logos as coming forth from the Father, from His heart, and begotten of His womb. Novatian (de Trin. 31) says, "There is one God, without any origin, from whom the Word, the Son, was born. He, born of the Father, dwells ever in the Father." And Theophilus of Antioch says (§ 10), "God, having His Own Word indwelling in His own bowels  $(\sigma \pi \lambda \acute{a} \gamma \chi \nu o \iota s)$ , begat Him, having breathed Him forth before all things, and through Him He hath made all things; and

He is called the Beginning, because He is the Principle and Lord of all things which were created through Him." See also § 22, and Bp. Bull, Defensio Fidei Nicænæ, book ii. ch. vi., and book iii. ch. v., and ch. vii., on the language of the Fathers, describing the Word as "insitum et inclusum visceribus Dei;" he well observes (book iii. ch. ii.), that the Son of God, born from Eternity, is said by the Fathers to have certain other births in time. He was born into the world when He came forth to create the world. He was born again in a wonderful manner, when He descended into the womb of the Virgin, and united Himself to His creature. He is daily born in the hearts of those who embrace Him by faith and love.

S. Hippolytus, in his recently recovered treatise (Philos. p. 334), thus speaks,—The one Supreme God generates the Word in His own mind. The Word was in the Father, bearing the Will of the Father Who begat Him; and when the Father commanded that the World should be created, the Word was executing what was pleasing to the Father. The Word alone is of God, of God Himself; wherefore He is God. The Word of God regulates all things, the First-born of the Father. Christ is God over all, Who commanded us to wash away sin from man; regenerating the old man, and having called man His image from the beginning; and if thou hearkenest to His holy commandment, and imitatest in goodness Him who is good, thou wilt be like Him, being honoured by Him, for God has a longing for thee, having divinized thee also for His glory.

divinized thee also for His glory.

In the present Editor's S. Hippolytus, pp. 278-302, some other ancient authorities on this subject are collected.

The Eternal Generation of the Divine Logos or WORD, and His subsequent Incarnation in time, and our filial adoption in Him before the foundation of the world, were acts of the Divine Volition, and were effected with the co-operation and instrumentality of the Divine Logos Himself, and it may well be supposed that the Holy Spirit, in writing this Epistle, had these transcendental mysteries of Christian Theology in His mind when He said by St. James, that "by His Will He brought us forth by the Word of Truth, that we might be a kind of first-fruit of His creatures."

This higher sense of  $\lambda\delta\gamma\sigma s$  includes also the lower one, God brought us forth by the Word of Truth, preached to the World. See further below on v. 21, and on 1 Pet. i. 23—25.

-εis τὸ εἶναι ἡμᾶs ἀπαρχήν] that we should be a kind of first-fruit ("quasdam quasi primitias") of His creatures. The whole Creation partakes in the blessings of Redemption, and waits with hope for a more glorious state thereby; see on Rom. viii. 19–22, which is the best exposition of this passage. See also below, 2 Pet. iii. 13. But man, redeemed by Christ, who has taken human nature, and has restored to us the free use of all the creatures (see on 1 Cor. iii. 22, 23; vi. 12), and has united our nature to God, and raised it from the grave, and carried it to God's right hand, is the first-fruits of the glorious harvest. Man in Christ is the wave sheaf of the harvest. See 1 Cor. xv. 20–23.

Some Expositors limit ἀπαρχη to the earliest Christian converts; but this seems too narrow a view.

- αὐτοῦ] A, C have ἐαυτοῦ; and so N from a correction.

19. ὥστε] wherefore, my beloved brethren, let every man be swift to hear. Since we are born again by the Word of God revealed to us, and dwelling in us, let us be swift to hear it.

Instead of  $\varpi\sigma\tau\epsilon$  B, C have  $"\sigma\tau\epsilon$ , ye know, or know ye, and A has  $"\sigma\tau\epsilon$   $\delta \dot{\epsilon}$ , for  $"\epsilon\sigma\tau\omega$ . B, C have  $"\epsilon\sigma\tau\omega$   $\delta \dot{\epsilon}$ . A has  $"\sigma\tau\omega$  (ex emend.  $"\sigma\tau\epsilon$ )  $"\delta \dot{\epsilon}$ .  $"\lambda$ .  $"\lambda$ .  $"\epsilon\sigma\tau\omega$   $"\delta \dot{\epsilon}$ . This variety is very worthy of notice.  $"\sigma\tau\epsilon$ , ye know, may seem to be preferable in one respect, on internal grounds, because St. James is dealing with persons who boasted much of their "knowledge (see on i. 3; iv. 4. 17); and he is endeavouring to convince them that "knowledge without practice is vain. "If ye "know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." (John xiii. 17. See below, "v. 22.)

'Iστε is received by Lachmann and Alford, and was adopted by Tischendorf in his earlier editions, but in his last edition he has ωστε, and this reading is sanctioned by G, H, and by the great body of the cursive MSS., and by the Syriac, Ethiopic, and Arabic Versions, and by Theophyl., Ecumen., and the Calena, and there seems to be a strong objection to τστε introduced at the beginning of the sentence, without any adjunct specifying what is the thing known. The only other instance where this word occurs thus placed in N. T. is Heb. xii. 17, where it is followed by στε, and in Eph. v. 5 it is preceded by τοῦτο γάρ. On the whole, therefore, it seems better to retain the received reading. On this use of ωστε, wherefore, see I Pet. iv. 19, and Winer, § 41, p. 269.

βραδύς είς τὸ λαλησαι, βραδύς είς όργην. 20 ο όργη γαρ ανδρός δικαιοσύνην ο Eccl. 7.9. Θεοῦ οὐ κατεργάζεται.

21 P Διὸ ἀποθέμενοι πᾶσαν ρυπαρίαν καὶ περισσείαν κακίας ἐν πραύτητι P Col. 3. 8. δέξασθε τὸν ἔμφυτον λόγον τὸν δυνάμενον σῶσαι τὰς ψυχὰς ὑμῶν.

ξασθέ τον εμφυτον κογον τον ουναμένον σωσ αι τως φυχως υμων.  $^{22 \text{ q}}$  Γίνεσθε δὲ ποιηταὶ λόγου, καὶ μὴ ἀκροαταὶ μόνον, παραλογιζόμενοι ἑαυ-  $^{\text{Rom. 1, 16.}}$   $^{\text{Rom. 1, 16.}}$   $^{\text{Q}}$   $^{\text{Matt. 7, 21.}}$   $^{\text{Like 11. 28.}}$   $^{\text{Like 11. 28.}}$   $^{\text{Like 11. 28.}}$   $^{\text{Som. 23 r}}$   $^{\text{O}}$ Οτι εἴ τις ἀκροατὴς λόγου ἐστὶ καὶ οὐ ποιητὴς, οὖτος ἔοικεν ἀνδρὶ  $^{\text{Rom. 2. 13.}}$   $^{\text{Lohn 3. 7.}}$   $^{\text{Lohn 3. 7.}}$   $^{\text{O}}$ κατανοοθντι τὸ πρόσωπον τῆς γενέσεως αὐτοθ ἐν ἐσόπτρω. 24 κατενόησε γὰρ <sup>1 Julia</sup> 6. 46. έαυτὸν καὶ ἀπελήλυθε, καὶ εὐθέως ἐπελάθετο ὁποῖος ἦν.

20. ὀργή γάρ] for the wrath of man worketh not the righteourness of God, produceth not that fruit of righteourness (Heb. xii. 11) which cometh forth from God, and is pleasing in His sight.

21. διδ ἀποθέμενοι] wherefore, having put away all filthiness, and superabundance of malice, which are like rank weeds in a foul soil, which cumber the ground, and render it unfit to receive the seed sown, and must therefore be first purged away, or, like wild branches of unpruned trees, which must be cut away before the graft is inserted, receive ye with meekness τον έμφυτον λόγον.

The meaning of this expression (τον ξμφυτον λόγον) has been the subject of much controversy.

*Εμφντοs is properly innate, τὸ ἐν φύσει (Hesych.). Xenophon asks (Mem. iii. 7. 5), "Are not modesty and fear ἔμφντα in men?" and κακία is described as ἔμφντοs in evil men, in Wisdom xii. 10, and ἔμφντοs was a term used in the ancient schools of Discourse to the second of the second second of the second Philosophy to describe whatever was, or became a part of the natural constitution of man; see Wetstein, p. 663; and St. Paul uses the word σύμφυτος to signify connate, i.e. with Christ. See above on Rom. vi. 5.

This is the sense given to ξμφυτον here in the Syriac Version, and so the word seems to be used by St. Barnabas (Epist. 9), where he says, οίδεν ό την ξμφυτον δωρεάν της διδαχης αὐτοῦ θέμενος εν ήμιν, and in cap. 1, "naturalem gratiam accepistis," and so Ignat. ad Ephes. 1, δ κέκτησθε φύσει δικαία, κατά πίστιν

καὶ ἀγάπην ἐν Ἰησοῦ χριστῷ

We are here exhorted by St. James to put away all filthiness and malice, because they will choke the growth of the heavenly seed of the Word in our hearts; and we are admonished to receive with meekness the innate Word,-that Word which has been born in our nature. In the highest sense, a sense which may reasonably be supposed to have been in the mind of the Apostle, that Word is Christ. Let us receive Him with meekness, because to all who receive Him, He giveth power to become sons of God (John i. 12), and St. Paul's exhortation is, "as ye have received Christ, so walk ye in Him" (Col. ii. 16), "be ye holy, as He is holy:" see 2 Cor. vi. 18; vii. 1; cp. 1 Pet. i. 15, 16. 1 John iii. 3. Here, with reverence be it said, is the solution of the

